HALL, James, LL.D., American scientist, was born at Hingham, Massachusetts, Sept. 12, 1811. He studied at the Rensselaer School (now the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute) from 1831 till 1836, when he was appointed Assistant Geologist on the New York Geological Survey. The following year (1837) he was appointed State Geologist in charge of the Fourth District of the State of which his final report, in a quarto volume, was issued in 1843. He then (1843) was placed in charge of the Palæontology of the State; and he published, between 1847 and 1858, 7 vols. (bound in 11) illustrating the fossils of the New York series of geological formations. He was State Geologist of Iowa, 1855-57, and of Wisconsin, 1858, of both which he published geological reports. In 1865 appeared a monograph by him on the Grapholites of Canada. Besides these publications he has issued reports on the fossils collected by several of the United States exploring expeditions, and of the Mexican Boundary Survey, and has contributed largely to scientific periodicals and to the Transactions of learned Societies. In 1848 he was elected by the Geological Society of London one of its fifty foreign members; in 1858 that society bestowed upon him the Wollaston medal; in 1882 the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazare was conferred upon him by the King of Italy; in 1884 he was awarded the Walker quinquennial grand prize of $1,000 from the Boston Society of Natural History; and in 1890 received the first award of the Hayden Memorial Medal from the Academy of Natural Science of Philadelphia. He was one of the founders of the Association of American Geologists, out of which grew the American Association for the Advancement of Science; was one of the Charter Members of the National Academy of Sciences; and one of the Incorporators of the International Congress of Geologists; and in 1889 was elected the first President of the Geological Society of America. He is also a "Correspondant de l'Institut de France," and a member of a number of other foreign as well as American learned societies. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Hamilton College in 1863, by the McGill University of Montreal in 1884, and by Harvard University in 1886. Since 1866 he has been Geologist of New York, and Director of the State Museum of Natural History at Albany, New York.

HALL, John, D.D., was born in the county of Armagh, Ireland, July 31, 1829. He was educated at Belfast College, which he entered at the age of thirteen; and after completing his studies, received his licence to preach in 1849, going as a missionary to the West of Ireland. He became pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Armagh in 1852, and in 1853 pastor of St. Mary's Abbey, in Dublin. The Presbyterian Church of Ireland sent him as a delegate to the Presbyterian Churches of the United States in 1867; and shortly after his return to Ireland he was called to the Fifth Avenue Church in New York, over which he was installed in Nov., 1867. In addition to his pastoral duties he has, since 1881, filled the (unsalaried) position of Chancellor of the University of the City of New York. He has published "Family Prayers for Four Weeks," 1868; "Papers for Home Reading," 1871; "Questions of the Day," 1873; "God's Word through Preaching," 1875; "Foundation Stones for Young Builders," 1879; and, in conjunction with G. H. Stuart, "American Evangelists," 1875; besides a number of discourses and sermons.

HALL, The Rev. Newman, LL.B., is son of the late Mr. John Vine Hall, the author of the well-known tract, "The Sinner's Friend," and brother of Captain J. V. Hall, who commanded the Great Eastern steamship on her first voyage across the Atlantic. Born at Maidstone, May 22, 1816, he was educated at Totteridge and at Highbury College, and graduated B.A. at the London University. In 1855 he took the degree of LL.B., and won the law scholarship. He was appointed minister of the Albion Congregational Church, Hull, in 1842 and remained at that post till 1854, when he succeeded the Rev. James Sherman as minister of Surrey Chapel, known as Rowland Hill's Chapel, in the Blackfriars Road, London. When the civil war in the United States broke out, he advocated the Northern cause in the interests of Union and Freedom. He afterwards made two extensive tours in the United States for the purpose of allaying the bitter feeling towards Great Britain, and of promoting international good-will. "Lincoln Tower," 220 feet high adjoining "Christ Church" in Westminster Bridge Road, was built in commemoration of Abraham Lincoln, from funds subscribed by Americans and English. The church itself, erected chiefly by his congregation when the lease of the old chapel in the Blackfriars Road expired, is one of the chief ecclesiastical modern structures in London, in thirteenth century Gothic; it is seated for 2,000 persons. The total cost, including freehold site, was £63,000, mostly obtained by Mr. Newman Hall's efforts; in token of which the congregation have erected in the church an alabaster pulpit of great beauty. Mr. Newman Hall still keeps up the habit of open air preaching, which he began in 1836, and may often be seen addressing a crowd outside his church after the close of the service inside. He has written numerous devotional treatises, one of which, entitled, "Come to Jesus," has reached a circulation of nearly three millions, in upwards of twenty languages. He has written also "It is I;" "Follow Jesus;" "Antidote to Fear;" "Short Memoir of Rev. Rowland Hill;" "Homeward Bound;" "The Land of the Forum and the Vatican, or Thoughts and Sketches during an Easter Pilgrimage to Rome" (1854, new edit. 1859); a small volume of devotional poetry, entitled, "Pilgrim Songs in Cloud and Sunshine," 1871; also "Mountain Musings;" a tractate on "Prayer: its Reasonableness and Efficacy," 1875; and several small works on teetotalism, of which he has been an earnest advocate during forty years. He has also compiled from Scripture a volume of devotion, entitled, "Prayer and Praise in Bible Words," and has edited an autobiography of his father, entitled "Conflict and Victory." A recent work is an 8vo volume on the Lord's Prayer; the last is "Gethsemane, or Leaves of Healing from the Garden of Grief."

HALLÉ, Sir Charles, pianist, a native of Germany, at an early age established himself in Paris, and acquired a great reputation for his elegant and elevated method of the interpreting the classical compositions of the best masters. His future indeed seemed secure, for his services as a Professor were eagerly sought, when the revolution of Feb. 1848 proved calamitous to him, as it did to many other musicians in the French capital. Mr. Hallé repaired to England, and made his first appearance at a concert in Covent Garden Theatre with Beethoven's E flat concerto. He also played at the matinées of Mr. John Ella, the director of the Musical Union. He soon afterwards established himself at Manchester as Director of the Musical Institution there, and has materially contributed towards improving the musical taste of the inhabitants, as well as promoting in that centre of commercial activity a knowledge of the best orchestral works of the great masters. Sir C. Hallé is, however, as much a resident in London as in Manchester. He instituted in 1857 an annual series of twenty orchestral and choral concerts, which have taken place uninterruptedly since then, and have become one of the most important series in Europe. He has published a few compositions of a very high order. Mr. Hallé was knighted in 1888, and in July of that year he married Madame Norman-Néruda, the celebrated violinist. His son, Mr. C. E. Hallé, is a well-known painter, and one of the assistant-directors of the Grosvenor Gallery; and Miss Hallé is a rising sculptor.

HALLÉ, Lady, née Wilhelmine Néruda, violinist, was born March 21, 1840, at Brünn, in Moravia, where her father was organist of the Cathedral. She was a pupil of Jansa, and made her first appearance at Vienna in 1846. She came to London in 1849 to play, at the Philharmonic, a concerto of De Bériot's. After this she returned to the Continent, and passed several years in travelling, chiefly in Russia. In 1864 she visited Paris, and played at the Pasdeloup concerts, the Conservatoire, and elsewhere. In the same year she married Ludwig Norman, a Swedish musician. On May 17, 1869, Madame Norman-Néruda again played at the Philharmonic in London, and in the winter took the first violin at the series of Monday Popular Concerts. From that time she has been in England for each winter and spring, playing at the Popular Concerts, the Philharmonic, Crystal Palace, and especially at the recitals of Sir Charles Hallé, to whom she was married in 1888.

HALLETT, Holt Samuel, M. Inst. C.E., F.R.G.S., is a son of the late Mr. Thomas Perham Luxmoore Hallett, Fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, an eminent member of the Chancery Bar, and representative of an ancient west-country family. Mr. Holt Hallett was born on July 16, 1841, and educated at the Charter House and at Kensington Grammar School, where he was a private pupil of the Rev. George Frost. He qualified for his profession under the late Mr. William Baker, the Engineer-in-Chief of the London and North-Western Railway. Having gained great experience, and carried out, as engineer, extensive works in Lancashire and Cheshire, in 1868, he was offered the appointment of Resident Engineer on the Garston Docks on the Mersey, then about to be constructed, but accepted in preference an appointment under the Government of India. During the eleven years that Mr. Hallett was in Government service he had charge of various large divisions in British Burmah, one of which, the Tenasserim Division, included the whole portion of the British frontier neighbouring Siam and the Shan States. For some time during his service in this Division he had as one of his assistants Mr. Archibald Colquhoun. The acquaintance and friendship of these gentlemen gave rise to the vast project, now before the public, for the connection of India and China by railway, and to the valuable explorations and surveys carried out by these intrepid travellers in China, Siam, and the Shan States, to prove the practicability of their scheme. They succeeded in tracing out the route for the railway; and one of the sections of their line, that between Toungoo and Mandalay, has been completed by the Government of India; and another section, that between Sagain and Mogoung, is now in hand. The construction of the whole system advocated by them, 1,790 miles in length, is now generally allowed by the Governments concerned and the mercantile community to be merely a matter of time. The Siamese Government is having the portions of the line lying in its territory surveyed by Sir Andrew Clarke's syndicate, and the survey is approaching completion. The thanks of the Home and Eastern Chambers of Commerce have been accorded to Mr. Holt Hallett and his colleague. Mr. Hallett's work "A Thousand Miles on an Elephant in the Shan States," gives an account of his travels through Indo-China in search of the best route for the railway. In 1887 he received the silver medal of the Society of Arts for his paper on "New Markets and the Extension of Railways in India and Burmah."

HALLIDAY, Sir Frederick James, K.C.B., son of Thomas Halliday, Esq., of Ewell, Surrey, was born in 1806, and having been educated at St. Paul's School and at Haileybury College, entered the civil service of the East India Company in 1825. He held several civil, political, and legislative posts; and in Dec. 1853, was appointed one of the Supreme Council of India. In 1854 he was made, by Lord Dalhousie, Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, which post he held through the trying period of the Indian Mutiny, when he was reported by Lord Canning to have been "the right hand of the Government." For the energy, resolution, and administrative ability which he displayed in that office he received the thanks of the Houses of Parliament, and was created in 1860 a K.C.B. (Civil division). In 1868 he was elected a member of the Council of India, and retired at the close of 1886.

HALSBURY (The Right Hon. Lord), Hardinge Stanley Giffard, P.C., Lord High Chancellor of England, born in London, Sept. 3, 1825, is the third son of the late Stanley Lees Giffard, Esq., LL.D., barrister-at-law. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1852, and M.A. in 1855. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1850, and joined the North Wales and Chester Circuit. He also had a very large junior practice at the Central Criminal Court and the Middlesex Sessions, and he was for several years a junior prosecuting Counsel to the Treasury. He became Queen's Counsel in 1865, and a Benchet of the Inner Temple. In 1873 he was appointed Chairman of the Carmarthen-shire Quarter Sessions. In Mr. Disraeli's administration in 1875 he was made Solicitor-General. He twice contested Cardiff in the Conservative interest, but did not succeed in getting a seat until 1877, when he was returned for Launceston, and sat in the House of Commons for that borough until his elevation to the peerage in 1885, when he was created Baron Halsbury, and appointed Lord High Chancellor. He was one of the leading counsel in the Tichborne case, and before his elevation he was engaged in most of the important cases of his time. He is constable of Launceston Castle, and in 1881 was treasurer of his Inn. His attainment to high judicial office is a remarkable exception to the axiom of the English Bar, that no criminal practitioner ever reaches the Woolsack.

HALSWELLE, Keeley, R.I., A.R.S.A., was born at Richmond, Surrey, April 23, 1832. He very early showed talent and liking for art, but his desire to adopt art as his profession met with no encouragement from his family. Eventually however, after being sketcher for the Illustrated London News, he went to Edinburgh, and there found a friend in Mr. William Nelson, the publisher, who encouraged him by giving him illustration work, also offering to send the young artist to Spain or Italy to study painting. In 1857 he exhibited his first picture in the Royal Scottish Academy, and in 1866 was elected an Associate of that body. In 1869 he went to Italy, and in the following year his picture "Roba di Roma" made its mark at Burlington House, afterwards gaining the £50 prize at Manchester. This was followed by, in 1870, "Roman Street Life;" in 1871, "Contadini in St. Peter's, Rome;" in 1872, "The Elevation of the Host;" in 1873, "Il Madonnajo;" in 1874, "A Roman Fruit Girl" and "Under the Lion of St. Mark;" in 1875, "Lo Sposalizio bringing Home the Bride;" in 1877, "Non Angli sed Angeli;" in 1878, "The Play Scene in Hamlet;" in 1879, "Waiting for the Blessing." Up to that date his reputation had been made by works coming within the sphere of the figure and historical painter, but in recent years, and to a large class of the public, his name is associated with the landscapes which are yearly exhibited at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery. In 1884 a series of his views of Thames Scenery was exhibited in London, entitled "Six Years in a House-boat." Subsequently among others the following works have been produced:—"Gathering Clouds," and "Flood on the Thames," 1879; "Tug and Timber Barge," 1880; "The Silvery Thames," and "Fenland," 1881; "Pangbourne Reach," and "Three Counties," 1882; "Royal Windsor," and "Willows Whiten Aspens' Quiver," 1883; "A Glean of the Setting Sun," 1884; "Welcome Shade," 1885; "The Heart of the Coolins," 1886; "October Woodlands," and "Loch Awe," 1887; "The Rainbow," 1888; "Macbeth," 1889; and "Highlands and Islands," 1890.

HAMERTON, Philip Gilbert, was born at Laneside, near Shaw, Lancashire, Sept. 10, 1834, his father being a solicitor in Shaw, and cadet of an ancient Yorkshire family, the Hamertons of Hellifield Peel and Hollins. He was educated at Burnley and Doncaster Grammar Schools, and afterwards prepared by private tutors for Oxford, but a taste for the fine arts led him to study landscape painting. He began to exercise his pen very early in life by contributing to the Historic Times a series of articles entitled "Rome in 1849," and in 1851 he published a work on Heraldry. In 1855 appeared a volume of verses, "The Isles of Loch Awe, and other Poems," with sixteen illustrations by the author. In the same year Mr. Hamerton went to Paris to study painting and French literature. In 1857 he settled at Loch Awe, but returned to France in 1861, living first at Sens and afterwards near Autun. His residence at Sens was chiefly productive of pictures, but on the establishment of The Fine Arts Quarterly Review he became a frequent contributor to its literature; he also contributed to the Fortnightly when under the editorship of Mr. Lewes. In 1866 he became art-critic to the Saturday Review, but resigned this post in 1868, remaining, however, connected with the Review as an occasional contributor. In 1868 he published "Etching and Etchers," a critical and practical treatise on the art of etching, and the masters who have excelled in it, with plates. In 1868 appeared an essay on French art, entitled "Contemporary French Painters," followed in the next year by another of the same kind, "Painting in France after the decline of Classicism." In 1869 Mr. Hamerton wrote his first novel, "Wenderholme." During the year 1869 he planned a new art periodical, the Portfolio. One of the most widely known of this author's works, "The Intellectual Life," appeared in 1873. In 1876 was published "Round my House," an account of the author's personal observations of rural life and character in France. In 1878 Mr. Hamerton published anonymously "Marmorne," a novel, which was successful in England, France, and the United States, and appeared in the Tauchnitz reprints. "Modern Frenchmen" (1878) contains various studies of remarkable Frenchmen. In 1882 appeared "The Graphic Arts, a treatise on the varieties of Drawing, Painting, and Engraving in comparison with each other and with Nature." In 1884 appeared a volume of Essays by Mr. Hamerton under the title "Human Intercourse," and in 1885 a costly and important work on "Landscape," richly illustrated. A collected edition of Mr. Hamerton's works in ten volumes was published at Boston in 1882. He is a membre protecteur of the Belgian Etching Club, and an honorary member of the Society of Painter-Etchers. In 1882 the French Government conferred upon him the University decoration of an Officier de l'Académie. In the year 1886 Mr. Hamerton made a boat voyage on the whole navigable length of the river Saône, which he described in a monograph on that river, richly illustrated by Mr. Joseph Pennell and the author. This work appeared in 1887, and in the same year was published a treatise on "Imagination in Landscape Painting," reprinted from the Portfolio. A reprint of other contributions to that periodical was issued in 1888, under the title "Portfolio Papers" and in 1889 Mr. Hamerton published a work entitled "French and English: a Comparison," which was founded upon a series of articles contributed to the Atlantic Monthly, "French and English" by him has been included in the Tauchnitz edition, where it occupies two volumes. Mr. Hamerton has also written in French, a biography of Turner, published in the series "Les Artistes Célèbres," and has contributed a series of articles to the French Journal de la Marine, on the construction of double boats.

HAMILTON, Gail. See DODGE, MARY ABIGAIL.

HAMILTON, The Right Hon. Lord George Francis, M.P., P.C., is the third son of the Duke of Abercorn, by Lady Louisa, second daughter of John, sixth Duke of Bedford. He was born at Brighton in Dec., 1845, and received his education at Harrow. In 1864 he was appointed an ensign in the Rifle Brigade, and in 1868 was transferred to the Coldstream Guards. At the general election of Dec., 1868, he contested the county of Middlesex in the Conservative interest, and was returned at the head of the poll. This decisive Conservative victory occasioned great surprise in political circles, as Middlesex had previously been regarded as one of the most impregnable strongholds of the Liberal party. At the general election of Feb., 1874, Lord George Hamilton again came in at the head of the poll. On the formation of Mr. Disraeli's administration in Feb. 1874, his lordship was nominated to the post of Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for India; and he was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, April 4, 1878, in succession to Viscount Sandon. On the latter occasion he was sworn of the Privy Council. He went out of office with his party in April, 1880. On the defeat of the Gladstone Government he was made First Lord of the Admiralty from June, 1885, to Feb., 1886, under Lord Salisbury's first administration, and filled the same post in the second Salisbury Cabinet, 1886. His lordship married, in 1871, Lady Maud Caroline, youngest daughter of the third Earl of Harewood.

HAMILTON, Sir Robert George Crookshank, K.C.B., born in 1836, is a son of the late Rev. Z. Macaulay Hamilton, Minister of Bressay, Shetland. He was educated at the University of Aberdeen, and in 1855 entered the Civil Service as a temporary clerk in the War Office. In that year he went to the Crimea in the Commissariat Department. On his return, in 1857, he was employed in the Office of Works, and subsequently in the Education Department. From 1869 to 1872 he served as Accountant to the Board of Trade. In 1872 he became Assistant Secretary, and in 1874 Secretary to the Civil Service Inquiry Commission. In May, 1882, Lord Northbrook appointed him Under-Secretary to the Admiralty; but he had scarcely entered upon that office before he was called to take the place of the murdered Mr. Burke as Under-Secretary for Ireland, which position he retained until Nov., 1886, when he was appointed Governor of Tasmania. He was succeeded in Dublin by Sir Redvers Buller. In 1884 he was made K.C.B. It is understood that Sir Robert Hamilton's advice had much to do with the adoption of a Home Rule policy by Mr. Gladstone and Earl Spencer.

HAMLEY, Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Bruce, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., fourth son of Admiral William Hamley, K.L., by his wife Barbara, daughter of Mr. Charles Ogilvy of Lerwick, was born at Bodmin in Cornwall, April 27, 1824. He was educated at the grammar school kept by the late William Hicks (a remarkable humorist), and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the army as second lieutenant in the Royal Artillery in 1843. He obtained a captaincy in 1850; received the Brevets of Major and Lieutenant-Colonel for distinguished service in 1854 and 1855; was promoted to Colonel in 1873; to Major-General in 1879; and to Lieutenant-General in 1882. He served in the Crimean campaign in 1854-5, including the affairs of Bulganac and McKenzie's Farm; the battle of the Alma, where his horse was shot; Balaklava, and Inkerman, where his horse was killed; the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and repulse of the sortie on Oct. 26, 1854, for both which, and for Inkerman, he was mentioned in despatches. From 1870 to 1877 he was Commandant of the Staff College. He was employed as Her Majesty's Commissioner for the delimitation of the Balkan frontier (1879), for the delimitation of the Russo-Turkish frontier in Armenia (1880), for the evacuation of Epirus and Thessaly by the Turkish forces, and for the occupation of the same by the Greek army (1881)—all these measures being in fulfilment of the Treaty of Berlin. In the Egyptian war of 1882 he commanded the second division, with which he stormed the centre of the enemy's lines at Tel-el-Kebir. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in 1867; a Knight Commander of the order of SS. Michael and George in Jan. 1880; Grand Officer of the Medjidieh in 1881; Grand Officer of the Osmanieh, 1882; and a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath in Nov., 1882. He was elected Conservative member for Birkenhead, Nov. 25, 1885, and again after the dissolution of 1886. His literary works are: "Ensign Faunce," a novel published in Fraser's Magazine, 1848-9; "Lady Lee's Widowhood," a novel published in Blackwood, 1853, and afterwards re-published in two vols., with illustrations by the author, 1854, and also in several single volume editions; "Campaign of Sebastopol, written in the Camp," 1854-5; "The Operations of War," 4to, now in its 5th edition; "Our Poor Relations: a Philozoic Essay," 1870; "Voltaire," in the series of "Foreign Classics," 1877; "Thomas Carlyle," an essay republished from Blackwood, 1881; also many essays in Blackwood, including "Wellington's Career" (republished separately in 1862), and "Shakespeare's Funeral," republished with other papers in 1889, when a volume of his speeches and writings also was published under the title of "National Defence."

HAMLIN, Hannibal, American Statesman, was born at Paris, Maine, Aug. 27, 1809. He prepared for College, but the death of his father compelled him to take charge of his farm. At the age of twenty-one he became a printer. He then studied law, was admitted to the Bar in 1833, and practised until 1848. From 1836 till 1840 he was a member of the Maine Legislature, serving as Speaker in 1837, 1839, and 1840. He was a member of Congress from 1843 to 1847; a State representative again in 1847; and U.S. Senator from 1848 to 1857. He was Governor of Maine from Jan. 7 to Feb. 20, 1857, resigning the position on his re-election to the Senate. He was elected Vice-President of the U.S. on the ticket with Mr. Lincoln in 1860, and on the expiration of his term in 1865 was made Collector of Customs for the port of Boston. This position he retained until he was again chosen to the Senate in 1869, where he remained until 1881. He was subsequently for a few years U.S. Minister to Spain, but at present (1891) holds no office.

HAMMOND, William Alexander, M.D., born at Annapolis, Maryland, Aug. 28, 1828, graduated M.D. in the University of New York in 1848, and in June, 1849, entered the medical service of the United States army as assistant-surgeon, in which he remained till 1860, having attained the Staff rank of Captain. In 1860 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the University of Maryland. At the commencement of the civil war he resigned his professorship, and entered the army almost at the bottom of the list of assistant-surgeons. But on the reorganization of the Medical Bureau in April, 1862, he was, at the earnest solicitation of the Sanitary Commission, appointed Surgeon-General of the army, with the rank of Brigadier-General. He retained this position until 1864, when he was dismissed from the service on the ground of irregularities in the award of contracts. This sentence was reversed by the President and Congress in 1878, when he was restored to his full rank and placed on the retired list. On his dismissal from the army in 1864 he was appointed Professor in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York, and Physician-in-Chief to the New York State Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System; and subsequently was connected with the medical department of the University of New York. In 1882 he became Professor of Mental and Nervous Diseases in the New York Post Graduate Medical School. He was also the editor of The Journal of Psychological Medicine, and has published "Military Hygiene," 1863; "Physiological Memoirs," 1863; "Venereal Diseases," 1864; "Wakefulness," 1865; "Insanity in its Medico-Legal Relations," 1866; "Sleep, and its Nervous Derangements," 1869; "The Physics and Physiology of Spiritualism," 1870; "Medico-Legal Study of the Case of Daniel McFarland," 1870; "A Treatise on Diseases of the Nervous System," 1871; "Insanity in its Relations to Crime," 1873; "Spinal Irritation," 1877; "Over Mental Work, and Emotional Disturbances," and "Cerebral Hyperæmia," 1878; "Fasting Girls," 1879; "Certain Forms of Nervous Derangement," 1881; "Insanity in its Medical Relations," 1883; and "Sexual Impotence in the Male," 1886. He has also published the following novels, "Lal," and "Doctor Grattan," 1884; "Mr. Oldmixon," and "A Strong-Minded Woman," 1885; and "On the Susquehanna," 1886. In 1889 he removed to Washington, where he now resides.

HAMPDEN, Viscount, The Right Hon. Sir Henry Bouverie William Brand, G.C.B., M.P., P.C., late Speaker of the House of Commons, is the second son of the twenty-first Baron Dacre (by the second daughter of the late Hon. and Very Rev. Maurice Crosbie, Dean of Limerick), and brother and heir presumptive to the present Baron; and he was born in Dec. 1814. For some time he was private secretary to

Sir George Grey. In July, 1852, he obtained a seat in the House of Commons as one of the members for Lewes, which borough he continued to represent till Dec. 1868, and from then till 1884 he sat for the county of Cambridge. In Feb. 1858, Mr. Brand was appointed Keeper of the Privy Seal to the Prince of Wales, but he held the office for only a few weeks. He held the office of Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury from June, 1859, to July, 1866. In 1859 Mr. Brand succeeded Sir W. Hayter, as senior "whip" of the Liberal party, and he discharged the duties of that important and laborious office with unflagging energy and zeal for a period of nine years. When Mr. Denison, afterwards Viscount Ossington, vacated the Speaker's chair, Mr. Brand was nominated by the Government to succeed him, and he was elected Speaker of the House of Commons without opposition in Feb. 1872. At first some hon. members entertained misgivings as to whether a gentleman who had been so peculiarly identified for many years with the interests of one political party in the State would preside with due impartiality over the discussions of the House of Commons; but all such doubts were soon set at rest by the conduct of the right hon. gentleman, who discharged the duties of his high office to the satisfaction alike of Liberals and of Conservatives. The most conclusive proof of this is, that when a new Parliament was elected, and the Conservatives were placed in power, Mr. Brand was again elected Speaker without opposition in March, 1874. He was elected Speaker for the third time April 29, 1880, and on him fell the chief burden of dealing with the "obstructionists," who during the next two Sessions did their best to render Parliamentary Government impossible. At the close of the Session of 1881 the Queen conferred on him the dignity of the Civil Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath. Sir Henry Brand's name for some years came frequently before the public in connection with a scheme for the amelioration of the condition of the agricultural labourers on his estate at Glynde, in Sussex. He is a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Sussex. On his retirement from the Chair of the House of Commons in 1884 he was created Viscount Hampden, and in 1886 he was made a Privy Councillor. He married, in 1838, Eliza, daughter of General Robert Ellice.

HAMPTON, Wade, was born in Charleston, South Carolina, March 28, 1818. His grandfather, who died in 1835, was probably the wealthiest planter in the United States. The grandson graduated at the University of South Carolina, and subsequently became a member of the State Legislature. On the outbreak of the civil war he entered the Confederate service as a private, and subsequently raised a legion of six companies of infantry, four of cavalry, and one of artillery; was made a Brigadier-General, and later on Major-General; served during the Peninsular campaign of 1862, and was wounded at Gettysburg, July 2, 1863. In 1864 he was made Lieutenant-General, and commanded all the cavalry in Virginia. Early in 1865 he was sent to South Carolina, and commanded the rearguard of the Confederate army, which was falling back before General Sherman. Large quantities of cotton had been stored at Columbia, the capital of the state, which, upon the approach of the Union forces, was piled up in an open square, ready to be burnt. Fire was set to this, which resulted in a conflagration by which a great part of the city was destroyed. A sharp discussion arose between Generals Hampton and Sherman, each charging the other with the wilful destruction of Columbia. The fact is, the Federal troops set fire to the dwellings in Columbia, (as the citizens have proved), and burned the city. In 1876 Gen. Hampton was elected Governor of South Carolina, and again in 1878. Since 1879 he has represented South Carolina in the U.S. Senate, his present (second) term expiring in 1891.

HANBURY, Sir James Arthur, K.C.B., son of the late Mr. Samuel Hanbury, was born in 1832, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Medicine in 1853. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England in 1859. Immediately after graduating at Dublin, he entered the medical department of the Army. He became surgeon in 1863, surgeon-major in 1873, brigadier-surgeon in 1879, and deputy-surgeon-general in 1881. He served with distinction in China, India, and America; was principal medical officer of a division during the Afghan campaigns of 1878-9 and 1879-80; and served as principal medical officer under Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick Roberts on the occasion of his celebrated march from Cabul to Candahar. For these services he was created a Companion of the Bath, and received the war Medal and bronze Star. In Aug. 1882, he was specially selected to accompany Sir Garnet Wolseley as principal medical officer of the Egyptian Expedition, with the local rank of surgeon-general. At the close of the campaign he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, and Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland (honoris causa), in 1883.

HANNEN, The Right Hon. Sir James, P.C., eldest son of the late Mr. James Hannen, of Kingswood, Surrey, formerly a merchant in the city of London, was born in 1821, and received his education at St. Paul's School, whence he removed to the University of Heidelberg. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1848, and chose the Home Circuit, on which he obtained a very large practice, mainly in commercial business. He was continually employed in very complicated and important cases; and in the great Shrewsbury case in the House of Lords he was one of the counsel retained by the successful claimant. Mr. Hannen was for some time counsel to the Treasury. In Aug., 1868, he was nominated a puisne Judge of the Queen's Bench, in succession to the late Mr. Justice Shee, and had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him. He was appointed Judge of the Court of Probate and Divorce in succession to Lord Penzance, in Nov., 1872, when he was sworn a member of the Privy Council. Sir James Hannen was President of the Parnell Inquiry Commission.

HANSLICK, Dr. Eduard, musical critic, born at Prague, Sept. 11, 1825, is the son of a well-known bibliographer. He studied law and philosophy in Prague and in Vienna, where he took the degree of Doctor. In 1856 he was appointed tutor of æsthetics and musical history; in 1861, Professor extraordinary; and in 1870, regular Professor. He was juror for the musical department of the Exhibition of Paris, 1867; Vienna, 1873; and Paris, 1878, and used every effort to further the interests of the musical instrument makers of Austria. In 1876 he was appointed a member of the Imperial Council, having some time before received the Order of the Iron Crown. During the years 1859-63 he gave public lectures in Vienna, and occasionally in Prague and at Cologne, on the history of music. He has been musical critic successively to the Wiener Zeitung, the Presse, and the Neue Freie Presse. His resistance to the Liszt-Wagner movement is well-known. Dr. Hanslick has published "Vom musikalisch-Schönen," 1854; "Geschichte des Concertwesens in Wien," 1869; "Aus dem Concertsaal," 1870; "Die moderne Oper," 1875; "Aus dem Opernleben der Gegenwart," 1884.

HANSON, Sir Reginald, Bart., LL.D., who was born in 1840, is the son of the late Mr. Samuel Hanson, and head of the firm of Messrs. Samuel Hanson, Son, and Barter, wholesale grocers, in Botolph-lane, City. His family have been connected with the Ward of Billingsgate for 144 years, and he himself was born in the same house in Botolph-lane as his grandfather and father were. He was educated at Rugby, during Dean Goulburn's and Bishop Temple's head masterships, and proceeded thence to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the usual degrees of B.A. and M.A. In 1887 the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University. After a visit to Australia he entered his father's business, and with twenty-five of his clerks joined the London Rifle Brigade at the beginning of the Volunteer movement. In 1873 he was elected a member of the Common Council for Billingsgate Ward, and he was successively the Chairman of the Library and of the Local Government and Taxation Committees. In 1880, on the retirement of Mr. Alderman Sidney, he was elected Alderman of the Ward, and in 1881-2 he served the office of Sheriff in conjunction with Sir W. A. Ogg in the Mayoralty of Sir J. Whittaker Ellis, M.P. He was knighted with his colleague, on the occasion of the visit of the Queen to Epping Forest. Subsequently he was a member of the London School Board, for three years; and in 1889 was elected a member of the London County Council. He is a Past Master of the Shipwrights' Company; Master of the Merchant Tailors' Company; a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries; and was sometime chairman of the council of the London Chamber of Commerce. He is the honorary colonel of the 4th Battalion Royal Fusiliers (City of London Militia), and is also a Commander of the Crown of Oak of the Netherlands. He is in politics a Conservative. In Sept., 1886, Sir Reginald was elected Lord Mayor of London for the civic year 1886-7, the Jubilee year, and was created a Baronet on the occasion of the Queen's visit to the Mansion House in May, 1887. The last old Rugby scholar who was Lord Mayor was Sir W. Plomer, who filled the office in 1781. Sir Reginald married, in 1866, a daughter of the late Mr. C. B. Bingley, of Stanhope-park, Middlesex.

HARCOURT, The Right Hon. Sir William George Granville Venables Vernon, M.P., P.C., second son of the Rev. William Vernon Harcourt, and grandson of a former Archbishop of York, born Oct. 14, 1827, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a scholar, and graduated in high honours in 1851. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1854, and went the Home circuit. He unsuccessfully contested the Kirkcaldy burghs in 1858. Mr. Harcourt was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1866; and was returned to the House of Commons for the city of Oxford in the Liberal interest in 1868. He was elected Professor of International Law in the University of Cambridge, March 2, 1869; and he was a member of the Royal Commission for amending the Neutrality Laws; and of the Royal Commission for amending the Naturalization Laws. He was appointed Solicitor-General in Nov., 1873, on which occasion he was knighted, and he held that office until the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's administration in the following February. When Mr. Gladstone returned to power in May, 1880, Sir W. Harcourt was nominated Secretary of State for the Home Department. On his going down to Oxford for re-election on that occasion he was defeated, polling only 2681 votes against 2735 recorded in favour of his Conservative antagonist, Mr. A. W. Hall. At this juncture Mr. Plimsoll, M.P. for Derby, very generously accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, whereupon Sir W. Harcourt was elected one of the representatives of that borough in his stead. Sir W. Harcourt was presented with the freedom of the city of Glasgow, Oct. 25, 1881. He went out of office with his party in June, 1885; but on the return of the Liberals to power in Jan., 1886, he was made Chancellor of the Exchequer. He was re-elected for Derby at both the General Elections (1885 and 1886). He is one of the cleverest Parliamentary debaters, and is spoken of as the probable future leader of his party. He was one of the original contributors to the Saturday Review, and has written various political pamphlets and letters on international law in the Times, published under the pseudonym of "Historicus." The latter were reprinted in a volume, with considerable additions (1863). Sir William Harcourt married, first, in 1858, Thérèse, daughter of Lady Theresa Lew's—aunt to the Earl of Clarendon, and widow of the late Sir George Cornwall Lewis, Bart.—by her first husband, T. Lister, Esq.; and secondly, in 1876, Mrs. Ives, daughter of the late John Lothrop Motley, the historian, and sometime United States Minister in London.

HARDING, Sir Robert Palmer, late Chief Official Receiver in the Bankruptcy Department of the Board of Trade, was born in 1821, and, after practising as a solicitor for some years, was appointed in 1864, a Commissioner to inquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act; and, when the new Act was passed in 1883, he undertook the reorganization of this department in conformity with it. He was knighted in Jan., 1890; and resigned his post as Chief Official Receiver, three months later.

HARDINGE, General the Hon. Sir Arthur Edward, K.C.B., C.I.E., second son of the late Viscount Hardinge, G.C.B., was born in 1828. Joining the army in 1844, he soon afterwards proceeded to India to join the personal staff of the Governor-General, and there took part in the important actions in the Punjab, on the Sutlej, 1845-6, being present at the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah—where his horse was shot under him—and the decisive victory of Sohraon, for which he received the Medal and two Clasps. Returning to England, and appointed to the Coldstream Guards, of which he is now the colonel, he seized an early opportunity of qualifying himself for Staff employment by going through the senior department at Sandhurst, where he took high honours. On the breaking out of the war in 1854, Captain Hardinge was appointed Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General in the First Division of the Army in the East, and he took part in all the scenes of the war, including the occupation of Bulgaria; the expedition to the Crimea; the battle of the Alma—where he was mentioned in despatches for remarkable coolness and judgment—the battle of Balaklava, where he rode in the cavalry charge; the battle of Inkerman—again mentioned in despatches—and the whole siege of Sebastopol; latterly he was employed at headquarters as Assistant-Quartermaster-General, and remained with the Army until the close of the war. He was made Brevet-Major after Alma; and at the peace was made C.B.; Knight of the Legion of Honour; second class Medjidieh; and received a Medal, four Clasps, and Turkish Medal. In 1857, he was appointed Assistant-Quartermaster-General to the Dublin Division, and served on the Staff in Ireland, qualifying there for full colonelcy in 1858. In 1859 he was selected by the Prince Consort to join the Royal household as Equerry, which post he held until his Royal Highness's death in 1861, when the Queen, to retain his services, made him Equerry to Her Majesty. In command first of a battalion and subsequently of the regiment of Coldstream Guards, he proved himself so efficient a

Commanding Officer that, on his further promotion to Major-General, in 1868, his services in India in command of a division were willingly accepted. He commanded first the Allahabad and then the Meerut Division for five years, but suffered the mortification of having to return to England on the expiry of his command just at the outbreak of the war with Afghanistan, but not without having accompanied unofficially and in a private capacity the force into the Khyber. During his service in India, General Hardinge proved himself an active commander; and the interest with which he worked up the questions of infantry attack, and the attention he gave to musketry—on which subjects he gave lectures at the United Service Institute on his return—have found excellent fruits in the proficiency which has been shown in a marked manner by the regiments then under his command. He was made Lieut.-General, in Oct., 1877; and General, in April, 1883. In Feb., 1881, he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Bombay, and is now (1890) Governor and Commander-in-Chief at Gibraltar.

HARDINGE (Viscount), Charles Stewart Hardinge (eldest son of the late Viscount Hardinge, G.C.B., who was Governor-General of India, and Commander-in-Chief at the Horse Guards), born Sept. 12, 1822, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1844 in classical honours. He sat in the House of Commons as member for the borough of Downpatrick, from 1851 till Sept. 24, 1856, when he succeeded to his father's title; and he held the post of Under-Secretary of State for the War Department under Lord Derby's second administration in 1858-9. He acted as private secretary to his father in India, having been present at the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon, served for five years as Major in the Kent Artillery, and is Lieut.-Col. of the 1st Kent Administrative Battalion Volunteers. He published in 1847 some elaborate "Views in India," in imperial folio. Lord Hardinge is A.D.C. to the Queen; Chairman of the National Portrait Gallery; Trustee of the National Gallery; and F.S.A. Also a Deputy-Lieutenant and J.P. for Kent.

HARDY, Lady Mary Duffus, widow of the late Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, D.C.L., Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records, is the author of several novels, amongst the most successful of which are "Paul Wynter's Sacrifice" and "Daisy Nichol." After her husband's death, which occurred in 1878, she carried out a long-cherished desire to visit the United States; and made the tour of the West and South, spending some months on the Pacific Coast, and has embodied her experiences in a volume entitled "Through Cities and Prairie Lands," and a later book which followed her second visit to America, entitled "Down South," containing a description of her impressions of the Southern States.

HARDY, Iza Duffus, only daughter of the above and of the late Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, was educated chiefly at home, and began writing stories at a very early age. Sketches and tales of hers have appeared in Tinsley's Magazine, London Society, Belgravia, and the Gentleman's Magazine. Amongst the many novels she has published are "A New Othello," "Glencairn," "Only a Love Story," "A Broken Faith," "Love, Honour, and Obedience," "Hearts or Diamonds?" "The Love that He Passed By," and "Love in Idleness;" the last three being stories of American life. She accompanied her mother to America, and has produced two volumes of Transatlantic reminiscences, "Between Two Oceans," and "Oranges and Alligators," the latter being an account of life amongst the orange-groves of South Florida.

HARDY, Thomas, novelist, was born June 2, 1840, at a village in Dorsetshire, and educated in the same county. He was destined for the architectural profession, and in his 17th year was articled as pupil to an ecclesiastical architect practising in the county town. He devoted the greater part of his time, however, during the ensuing four years, to classical and theological literature, which he continued to read with two friends of like tastes. On taking up his residence in London, Mr. Hardy allied himself with the modern school of Gothic artists, and acquired additional experience in design under Sir Arthur Blomfield, A.R.A., F.S.A., son of the late Bishop Blomfield—meanwhile entering as a student of modern languages at King's College. His first literary performance was an essay on "Coloured Brick and Terra-cotta Architecture," which received the prize and medal of the Institute of British Architects in 1863; he also was awarded in the same year Sir W. Tite's prize for architectural design. He then returned to literature, confining his attention to poetry, and writing much unpublished verse; but at last tried his hand on a work of fiction called "Desperate Remedies," which was published in 1871, and was equally praised and condemned. In 1872 he published the rural tale entitled "Under the Greenwood Tree," and in 1873 "A Pair of Blue Eyes," both which were well received. These were followed, in the Cornhill Magazine for 1874, by his best-known novel, "Far from the Madding Crowd," dramatized by the author in 1879, and acted in a modified form at the Globe Theatre in 1882. He has written also "The Hand of Ethelberta, a Comedy in Chapters," 1876; "The Return of the Native," 1878; "The Trumpet-Major," 1880; "A Laodicean," 1881; "Two on a Tower," 1882; "The Mayor of Casterbridge," 1886; "The Woodlanders," 1886-7; and "Wessex Tales," 1888. Many of these novels have been published simultaneously in England, America, Australia, and India, and some have been translated into Continental languages. The majority have a picturesque country district, vaguely spoken of as "Wessex," as their common scene. Mr. Hardy married, in 1874, a daughter of J. Attersoll Gifford, Esq., and niece of the late Archdeacon of London.

HARE, Augustus John Cuthbert, the youngest and now the only surviving son of Francis George Hare, was born at the Villa Strozzi, in Rome, March 13, 1834, and was adopted, as an infant, by the widow of his uncle, Augustus William Hare. He was educated at Harrow, and at University College, Oxford. He has published "Epitaphs for Country Churchyards," 1850; "Murray's Handbook for Berks, Bucks and Oxfordshire," 1860; "A Winter at Mentone," 1861; "Murray's Handbook for Durham and Northumberland," 1863; "Walks in Rome," 1870; "Wanderings in Spain," 1872; "Memorials of a Quiet Life," 1872; "Days near Rome," 1874; "Cities of Northern and Central Italy," 1875; "Walks in London," 1877; "Life and Letters of Baroness Bunsen," 1879; and "Cities of Southern Italy and Sicily," 1882; "Sketches of Holland and Scandinavia," 1885; "Studies in Russia," 1885; "Paris," and "Days near Paris," 1887; "North-Eastern France," "South-Eastern France," and "South-Western France," 1890. Mr. Hare resided formerly at his family home of Hurstmonceaux, but now lives at Holmhurst, near Hastings.

HARLEY, George, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Haddington, East Lothian, in 1829, entered the University of Edinburgh when 17 years of age, and graduating there as Doctor of Medicine in 1850, then studied scientific medicine for five years in the Universities of Paris, Würzburg, Berlin, Vienna, and Heidelberg. On returning to London in 1855, he was immediately appointed Lecturer on Practical Physiology and Histology in University College, London. In 1859 he was appointed Professor of Medical Jurisprudence, and in 1861 Physician to University College Hospital. Dr. George Harley is Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences of Bavaria, of the Academy of Medicine of Madrid, and of several continental scientific and medical societies; he was in 1853 President of the Parisian Medical Society; and in 1861 he received the Triennial prize (fifty guineas) of the Royal College of Surgeons for an Essay on the Suprarenal Bodies. The published writings of Dr. George Harley are numerous. Twenty-five scientific papers bearing his name are in the catalogue of the Royal Society, which goes up only to 1873, and since then he has published several others on germ diseases, &c. His chief medical works are on Histology, Healthy and Morbid; on Diabetes; Albuminuria; Jaundice; Kidney Derangements; and Liver Diseases, the latter being a large work of 1,200 pages, with 38 illustrations. Dr. George Harley has invented various contrivances for facilitating medical, physiological, chemical, and microscopical research; and has also powerfully advocated a reform of our spelling. In 1877 he published a book entitled "The Simplification of English Spelling," and in 1878 printed a letter addressed to the late Lord Beaconsfield, entitled "A Conservative Scheme for National Spelling Reform." In 1886 he published a work on some Indian Diseases, entitled "Inflammations of the Liver, and their sequelæ Atrophy, Cirrhosis, Ascites, Hæmorrhages and Abscesses;" and, in 1890, one on "The Extrusion of Gallstones by Digital Manipulation."

HARLEY, Rev. Robert, hon. M.A. Oxford, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., a mathematician, was born at Liverpool, on January 23, 1828. He is the third son of the late Rev. Robert Harley, by Mary, his wife a niece of General Stevenson of Ayr. His father, a native of Dunfermline, began life in Scotland as a merchant, with property bequeathed to him by his uncle, Sir William Mitchell, Vice-Admiral of the Blue, but afterwards removed to England, where he entered the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodist Association. The son at first showed no particular aptitude for mathematics. It was not until he had passed his fourteenth year that he succeeded in mastering the multiplication table. He then, however, suddenly developed a taste for mathematics. His progress in the study was such that before he was sixteen he was appointed mathematical master in a good school at Seacombe, near Liverpool, and within twelve months he returned to be head-assistant in the school at Blackburn where he had received the chief part of his education. He then became a regular contributor to various mathematical journals. In 1846 he answered a question relating to the general quintic equation which had been proposed in the Lady's and Gentleman's Diary by Mr. (now Sir) James Cockle, M.A., F.R.S., late Chief Justice of Queensland. Through this answer he was brought into correspondence with the proposer, and the friendship that originated led to joint labours which have not been without their influence on the subsequent course of algebraic investigation in this country. Mr. Harley received his theological training in Airedale College, Bradford, and in 1854 was ordained Pastor of the Congregational Church at Brighouse in the West Riding of Yorkshire. This position he held for fourteen years, during the last four of which he also occupied the Chairs of Mathematics and Logic in the College where he had been trained for the ministry. In 1868 he was elected Pastor of an important Congregational Church at Leicester. Here he devoted much of his time to public work. He became President of the Literary and Philosophical Society at a critical period in its history. He was chosen by the Town Council a member of the Free Library Committee, and he assisted in the first selection of books. The same body also made him a member of the Town Museum Committee, and for some time he was an Honorary Curator. He helped in the establishment of the School of Art, and took part in various movements for the social and intellectual improvement of the people, delivering during the winter season numerous lectures on astronomical and other scientific subjects. He was elected a member of the first School Board of Leicester, and turned his thoughts and energies to the determination of statistical and other questions connected with the public elementary education of the town. He was also a member of the Executive Committee of the National Education League, until that body, soon after the establishment of School Boards, having accomplished its main objects, was dissolved. In 1872 he was appointed Vice-Master of Mill Hill School, and Minister of the Chapel. Three years later he built a large boarding-house in connection with the school, which was full almost from the first. He also erected, for the use of the village, an iron hall for lectures, &c., which was opened by his friend, the Earl Stanhope. In 1882 he became Principal of Huddersfield College; and in 1886 he undertook charge of the leading Congregational Church at Oxford, which he recently resigned in order to devote himself to scientific research. Mr. Harley is one of the very few Nonconformist Ministers who have been admitted to the Royal Society. He was elected a fellow when only thirty-five; he is also a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society; a Member of the London Mathematical Society (on the Council of which he sat for some years); a Corresponding Member of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester; an Honorary Member of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Leicester; and an Honorary and Corresponding Member of the Philosophical Society of Queensland. At the meetings of the British Association at Norwich and at Edinburgh he acted as Secretary of Section A; and at the meetings at Bradford and at Bath he was appointed a Vice-President of the same Section. In November, 1886, the University of Oxford conferred upon him the degree of M.A., honoris causa. He is the author of numerous papers, chiefly on questions in pure Mathematics or Symbolic Logic, published in the transactions of learned bodies and in journals devoted to mathematics or philosophy, inter alia, "On the Method of Symmetric Products," "On Circular Functions," "The Theory of Quintics," "The Theory of the Transcendental Solution of Algebraic Equations," "Differential Resolvents," "George Boole, F.R.S., a Biography and an Exposition," "Boole's Laws of Thought," "The Stanhope Demonstrator; an instrument for performing Logical Operations," "Sir James Cockle's Criticoids," "The Explicit Form of the Complete Cubic Differential Resolvents," and "The Umbral Notation."

HARPER, The Right Rev. Henry John Chitty, D.D., Bishop of Christchurch, New Zealand, was born at Gosport, Hampshire, in 1807, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford (B.A. 1826, M.A. 1840), where he obtained the Michel Fellowship. After having been private tutor to the sons of Sir Charles Coote, he officiated for many years as "conductor" or chaplain to Eton College, by which society he was presented in 1840 to the vicarage of Stratfield Mortimer, Berkshire, whence he was appointed, in 1856, first Bishop of Christchurch. The diocese was reconstituted in 1869, and made metropolitan over the sees of Auckland, Wellington, Waiapu, Nelson, Dunedin, and Melanesia.

HARRIS, Augustus, dramatist, and theatrical manager, was born in 1852. He has been lessee of Covent Garden Theatre since 1879, where he has produced several successful pantomimes. He has also written, in collaboration severally with Messrs. Meritt, Pettitt, and Hamilton "The World;" "Youth;" "Human Nature;" "A Run of Luck;" "Pleasure;" "The Armada;" "The Royal Oak;" and "A Million of Money." Mr. Harris is on the Strand Division of the London County Council, and was elected one of the Sheriffs of London for 1891.

HARRIS, Lord George Robert Canning Harris, fourth Baron, was born at St. Ann's, Trinidad, Feb. 3, 1851, and educated at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1874. He is J.P. and D.L. for Kent, and Deputy-Chairman of the East Kent Quarter Sessions. In Lord Salisbury's Government of 1885 he was Under-Secretary for India, and in 1886 he held the post of Under-Secretary for War. He is a celebrated cricketer; has long been captain of the Kent County Eleven; and has taken an eleven to Australia. He is now (1890) Governor of Bombay.

HARRIS, Joel Chandler, American writer, was born at Eatonton, Ga., Dec. 8, 1848. His early education was limited to a brief attendance at a local school, and, at the age of 12, he was apprenticed to a printer. His fondness for books enabled him to overcome the deficiencies of his schooling, and he soon rose from the printer's case to an editorial desk. He was employed on various papers in Macon, New Orleans, Forsyth, and Savannah until 1876, when he went to Atlanta (Ga.), and secured an engagement on the Constitution, of which he is now (1890) the principal editor. It was his negro dialect stories, contributed to the Constitution, that first drew public attention to him, and that have won for him his literary reputation. In addition to his editorial labours, he has been a frequent writer for American magazines, and has also published "Uncle Remus, his Songs and his Sayings," 1880; "Nights with Uncle Remus," 1883; "Mingo and Other Sketches," 1884; "Free Joe," 1887; and "Daddy Jake the Runaway," 1889. A "Life of Henry W. Grady," his predecessor as editor of the Constitution, and a popular Southern speaker, is announced by him for publication in the immediate future.

HARRISON, The Hon. Benjamin, LL.D., twenty-third President of the United States, grandson of the ninth President, was born at North Bend, Ohio, Aug. 20, 1833. He graduated from Miami University (Oxford, Ohio), in 1852, studied law and began his practice in Indianapolis, Ind. (1854), where he has since resided. The first official position held by him was that of clerk in the Federal Court at Indianapolis, to which he was appointed shortly after his removal to that city. In 1860 he was elected, by the Republican party, reporter of the Indiana Supreme Court, but resigned the office in 1862 to enter the Union Army in the Civil War. He assisted in raising the 70th Indiana Regiment, of which he was made Colonel when it went to the field. During the war his regiment was chiefly engaged in the West, guarding railways and in guerilla warfare. In Jan., 1864, Col. Harrison was placed in command of a brigade, and made the campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta with Gen. Hooker's corps. His first engagement of importance was that of Resaca, May 14, 1864. Subsequently he took part in the capture of Cassville, the actions at New Hope Church and at Golgotha Church, and in the battles of Kennesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek. "For ability and manifest energy and gallantry in command of the brigade," the brevet of brigadier-general of volunteers was subsequently conferred upon him, to date from Jan. 23, 1865. When mustered out (June, 1865) at the close of the war, he returned to Indianapolis and resumed the duties of the office of reporter, to which he had been re-elected in 1864. At the expiration of his term (1868) he declined another renomination, and took up again the practice of his profession. Though actively interested in the presidential canvasses of 1868 and 1872, he did not hold any official position, nor was he a candidate for any office, until in 1876 he accepted the Republican nomination for governor of his State, but that year was unfavourable to his party, and he was not elected. In 1879, President Hayes appointed him a member of the Mississippi River Commission, and in the following year he was made chairman of the Indiana Delegation to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Garfield for the Presidency. He was a prominent speaker in the campaign of Mr. Garfield, and on the election of the latter was offered a portfolio in the cabinet, but he declined it. On March 4, 1881, he took his seat in the United States Senate, to which the legislature of Indiana had previously elected him for a full term of six years. While a member of that body he spoke frequently, and was known as an advocate of protective duties on imports, of a reform in the civil service, and of a restoration of the American Navy. He was again a delegate of his party to the National Convention in 1884, and his name was there mentioned in connection with the Presidency, as indeed it had been at the preceding Convention. At the next Convention (1888) he was among the leading candidates from the start, and on the eighth ballot was tendered the nomination, which he accepted on a platform of a maintenance of the protective tariff. This became the controlling issue in the ensuing contest between Mr. Cleveland (renominated by the Democratic party) and himself, and the result was a Republican victory and the election of Mr. Harrison, who was accordingly inaugurated President, on March 4, 1889, for a term of four years. In the following June, the College of New Jersey and Miami University both conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. He is a Republican; but at the Election in Nov., 1890, a majority of Democrats were returned; his power therefore is curtailed. Still it is thought probable that, in 1891, an International Copyright Bill will be passed.

HARRISON, Frederic, M.A., was born in London, Oct. 18, 1831, being the eldest son of Frederic Harrison, Esq., of London, by Jane, only daughter of the late Alexander Brice, Esq., of Belfast. He was educated at King's College School, London; was elected Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, 1848; and took the degree of B.A. 1853 (when he was in the 1st class in Classics). After residing for some time as Fellow and Tutor of his College at Oxford, he was called to the Bar in 1858. He has since practised as a Conveyancer, and in the Courts of Equity. Mr. Harrison was a member of the Royal Commission upon Trades Unions, 1867-69; Secretary to the Royal Commission for the Digest of the Law, 1869-70; and in 1877 was appointed by the Council of Legal Education, Professor of Jurisprudence and International Law. He has given much attention to the questions and institutions relating to working-men. He was one of the founders of the Positivist School in 1870, and also of Newton Hall in 1881. He is the author of some articles in the Westminster Review between 1860 and 1863, of numerous essays in the Fortnightly Review from 1865, and in the Nineteenth Century and Contemporary Review from 1875. He has published "The Meaning of History," 1862; "Order and Progress," 1875; an English translation of "Social Statics, or the Abstract Theory of Human Order," being vol. ii. of Comte's "Positive Polity," 1875; "The Choice of Books, and other Literary Pieces," 1886; "Oliver Cromwell," 1888; and numerous minor works. Mr. Harrison is a follower of Auguste Comte, whose philosophical, social, and religious doctrines he has presented in various writings and lectures. At the dissolution of 1886, Mr. Harrison (who had formerly declined to stand for Leicester) allowed himself to be brought forward as a Home Rule candidate for London University, in opposition to Sir John Lubbock. He polled, however, only 516 votes against his opponent's 1314. In 1889 he was elected an Alderman by the London County Council.

HARRISON, Right Rev. William T., D.D., Bishop of Glasgow and Galloway, is the son of the Rev. T. T. Harrison, M.A., Rector of Thorpe Morieux, Suffolk, and was educated at Marlborough College and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was curate at the parish church, Great Yarmouth, 1861-68; rector of Thorpe Morieux, 1868-75; vicar of Christ Church, Luton, 1875-83; vicar of St. James's, Bury St. Edmunds, 1883-88; and rural dean of Luton; and subsequently rural dean of Thingoe. He is an Hon. Canon of Ely; and married, in 1870, Elizabeth B., daughter of Col. John Colvin, C.B., Leintwardine, Herefordshire.

HARROWBY (Earl of), The Right Hon. Dudley Francis Stuart Ryder, is the eldest son of the late Earl of Harrowby, K.G., by Lady Frances Stuart, fourth daughter of the late Marquis of Bute. He was born at Brighton, Jan. 16, 1831, and received his education at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1852. After leaving the University he accompanied the present Earl of Carnarvon on a journey to the East, visiting the sites of Nineveh and Babylon, and exploring the country between Mesopotamia, the Black Sea, and Persia. He served as Captain in the 2nd Staffordshire Militia when that regiment was called out for garrison duty at the time of the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. In 1856 he was elected M.P. for Lichfield, which city he represented as Viscount Sandon till 1859; and for some time he was Private Secretary to Mr. Labouchere at the Colonial Office, 1856-8. He unsuccessfully contested Stafford in 1860. Viscount Sandon was first elected for Liverpool in January,

1868, and was three times elected for the borough. At the general election in Feb., 1874, his lordship was returned for that borough at the head of the poll, no fewer than 20,206 votes having been recorded in his favour—the largest number given to any candidate in the United Kingdom. He came into Parliament as a supporter of Lord Palmerston, but gave up his connection with that party and his seat in the House of Commons on account of Lord John Russell becoming a member of Lord Palmerston's Government, and has been ever since a steady supporter of the Conservative party. At one time he took an active part in the private business of the House of Commons, and served on several select committees, including those on the Euphrates Valley, Hudson's Bay, and the Diplomatic and Consular Services; and he was also member of the secret committee appointed to inquire into the Westmeath Ribbon outrages. His name was associated with the Parochial Councils Bill, which he brought forward in two sessions, with the object of giving to the laity a larger share in the management of Church affairs. His lordship took a leading part, conjointly with Mr. W. H. Smith, in founding the "Bishop of London's Fund," and took an active share in all the details of its management for about nine years. To the first London School Board he was returned for Westminster (1873), and he presided over the statistical committee appointed by that body to investigate the educational wants of the Metropolis. In Feb., 1874, he was appointed Vice-President of the Council of Education, and for four years he represented that Department in the House of Commons. He brought in the Education Act of 1876 and various Revised Codes. In 1877, when the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland became vacant, and a second time in 1878, the Earl of Beaconsfield offered it, with a seat in the Cabinet, to Viscount Sandon, who, however, for family reasons refused it on both occasions; but shortly afterwards his lordship accepted the post of President of the Board of Trade, with a seat in the Cabinet, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Adderley, who was raised to the House of Peers, April, 1878. Viscount Sandon went out of office with his colleagues in April, 1880. He succeeded to the title of Earl of Harrowby on the death of his father (Nov. 19, 1882). He was appointed Lord Privy Seal in the Marquis of Salisbury's Government in 1885, and went out of office with his colleagues in Feb., 1886. He was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on Education in 1886, and served on it for the nearly three years of its existence. He became President of the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1886. In 1888 he was elected as one of the representatives of the Diocese of Lichfield in the first House of Laymen. He was elected a member of the first County Council for Staffordshire in 1888, and has been its Chairman from the commencement. He has given special attention to colonial matters, and to questions affecting the Empire generally, speaking frequently on these subjects in both the House of Commons and House of Lords, and also to subjects affecting the religious, social, and material progress of the working-classes. He married, in 1861, Lady Mary Frances Cecil, eldest daughter of the second Marquis of Exeter.

HART, Ernest, born in 1836, was educated at the City of London School, where he became Captain and Lambert Jones Scholar at a very early age. Subsequently he entered the school of medicine attached to St. George's Hospital, where he attained the position of first prizeman in every class. He then obtained the post of Ophthalmic Surgeon and Lecturer on Ophthalmology at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School, practising for some years as a surgeon, and he was the author of a method of treatment of aneurism. For several years Mr. Hart was co-editor of the Lancet, and in 1866 was selected as editor of the British Medical Journal by the council of the British Medical Association. For several years Mr. Hart has devoted himself to public work in connection with questions of social and sanitary progress. He is editor of the Sanitary Record and the London Medical Record, Chairman of the National Health Society, Chairman of the Smoke Abatement Committee, and Chairman of the Parliamentary Bills Committee of the British Medical Association. As Honorary Secretary of the Workhouse Infirmaries Association in 1866-7, he rendered great public services in exposing, in concert with others, the defective arrangements for the sick poor in workhouses; and in an article on the "Hospitals of the State," published in the Fortnightly Review of that year, Mr. Hart laid down a series of propositions for the creation of asylums for the sick, which were subsequently embodied in the Metropolitan Asylums Act (1867). He has also established Societies for the Protection of Infant Life, the Abatement of Smoke, and the establishment of cheap concerts for the poor. The concerts at the Victoria Theatre are the outcome of the last of these. As Chairman of the Parliamentary Bills Committee of the British Medical Association, Mr. Hart has taken part in promoting the better organization of the Medical departments of the army and navy, and in shaping the Public Health Acts. Among sanitary investigations, Mr. Hart has especially investigated the various epidemics which have been due to the pollution of milk, has established the necessity of safeguarding the milk supply of towns, and has devised a series of regulations to this end, which are widely adopted in London, Glasgow, Clifton, &c. After investigating the condition of the peasants of Galway, Donegal, and Mayo, he published in the Fortnightly Review proposals for favouring the creation of a peasant proprietary, and reclaiming waste lands, which were adopted by the Government, and are published in the "Migration Clauses" of the Tramways Act (Ireland). Mrs. Hart has established the Donegal Industrial Fund, which has largely developed the home industries of the cottagers, and in 1886 employed upwards of 1,000 persons.

HART, James McDougal, landscape painter, was born at Kilmarnock, Scotland, in 1828. When a child he went with his family to America and lived at Albany, New York. In 1851 he went to Düsseldorf and studied painting for about a year. He returned to Albany in 1852, and in 1856 removed to New York city, where he has since resided. He was made an Academician in 1859. His pictures are admired for their harmony of colour and quiet peacefulness of tone. The best known among them are:—"Moonrise in the Adirondacks," "Peaceful Homes," "Coming out of the Shade," "On the March," "Among Friends," "Threatening Weather," "Indian Summer," and "A Misty Morning." Two of his pictures—"In the Autumn Woods" and "The Rain is Over," painted in 1881 and 1887 respectively—were exhibited at the Paris Exposition of 1889, for which he was awarded a bronze medal.

HART, William, American landscape painter, elder brother of James M. Hart [q.v.], was born at Paisley, Scotland, March 31, 1823. He went with his family to Albany, New York, in 1831, and like his brother was a coach painter. Evincing a talent and taste for art, he took up landscape painting, and made his first public exhibition at the Academy of Design in New York in 1848. The generosity of a friend enabled him to re-visit his native land in 1850, and he spent three years abroad in art-study. He has been a frequent exhibitor at the Academy of Design, and was made an Academician in 1858. For several years he was President of the Brooklyn Academy of Design, and was one of the founders of the Water-colour Society, of which for three years (1870-73) he was President. His pictures are remarkable for their luminous brilliancy of colouring. The more notable among them are:—"The Last Gleam," "The Golden Hour," "Opening in the Elands," "Up the Glen in the White Mountains," "Sunset in Dusk Harbour," "New Brunswick," "Cattle in the Woods," "Keene Valley," "Landscape with Jersey Cattle," "The Ford," "Morning in the Clouds," "A Brook Study," and "After a Shower." Since 1853 his studio has been in New York city.

HARTE, Francis Bret, was born at Albany, New York, Aug. 25, 1839. He went to California in 1854, and was successively a miner, school teacher, express messenger, printer, and finally editor of a newspaper. In 1864, he was appointed Secretary of the United States Branch Mint at San Francisco, holding the office until 1870. He contributed many poems and sketches to periodicals, and in 1868, upon the establishment of the Overland Monthly, he became its editor, and contributed to it several notable tales and sketches. In 1869 appeared in it his humorous poem, "The Heathen Chinese," which suddenly made him famous. In 1871 he went to the Eastern States, and took up his residence first in New York, and subsequently in Boston. He was appointed United States Consul at Creffield in 1878, from which he was transferred to Glasgow in March, 1880, where he remained until July, 1885. Since then he has resided in London. His works, most of which originally appeared in periodicals, include "Condensed Novels," 1867; "Poems," and "Luck of Roaring Camp, and other Sketches," 1870; "East and West Poems," and "Poetical Works," illustrated, 1871; "Mrs. Skaggs's Husbands," 1872; "Echoes of the Foot Hills," 1874; "Tales of the Argonauts," 1875; "Gabriel Conroy," and "Two Men of Sandy Bar," 1876; "Thankful Blossom," 1877; "Story of a Mine," and "Drift from Two Shores," 1878; "The Twins of Table Mountain and other stories," 1879; "Flip and Found at Blazing Star," 1882; "In the Carquinez Woods," 1883; "On the Frontier," 1884; "By Shore and Sedge," and "Maruja," 1885; "Snow-bound at Eagles," and "The Queen of the Pirate Isle," 1886; "A Millionaire of Rough and Ready and Devil's Ford," and "The Crusade of the Excelsior," 1887; "A Phyllis of the Sierras and Drift from Redwood Camp," and "The Argonauts of North Liberty," 1888; "Cressy," and "The Heritage of Dedlow Marsh," 1889; "A Waif of the Plains;" and "A Ward of the Golden Gate," 1890.

HARTING, James Edmund, F.L.S., F.Z.S., eldest son of the late James Vincent Harting, of Harting, in the county of Sussex, was born in London, April 29, 1841. He was educated at Downside College, near Bath, and at the University of London, where he matriculated in 1859, and the following year passed the first examination for the degree of B.A. He followed the profession of a solicitor until 1878, when he retired from practice. Being from youth devoted to the study of zoology, and more especially ornithology, he began in 1866 to publish the results of his observations; and since that date he has written several works, of which the titles and dates are given below, as well as numerous papers in the "Proceedings" and "Transactions," of scientific societies, and in journals devoted to natural history. In Jan., 1871, he began to edit the natural history columns of the Field, which he has continued to do ever since; and in Jan., 1877, he was appointed editor of the Zoologist, in which capacity he still acts. Elected a Fellow of the Zoological Society in 1864, and a Fellow of the Linnean Society in 1868, he has served on the council of the latter, and on various committees of the former society and of the British Association for many years. He took an active part in procuring the passing of the Sea Birds Preservation Act, 1869, and drafted the Bill for the Protection of Wild Fowl, which was passed in 1872; and in 1873 he was examined before a Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to take evidence on this subject with a view to further legislation. Elected an honorary member of several county Natural History Societies, he was in 1882 awarded a first-class silver medal of the Société d'Acclimatation de France "for scientific publications." The titles of his works are:—"The Birds of Middlesex: a Contribution towards the Natural History of the County," 1866; "The Ornithology of Shakespeare critically examined, explained, and illustrated," 1871; "A Handbook of British Birds," 1872; "Our Summer Migrants," and a new edition of "White's Natural History of Selborne," 1875; another edition, with additional "Letters of White," and

"Rambles in Search of Shells," 1876; "Ostriches and Ostrich Farming," 1879; "Rodd's Birds of Cornwall," edited with an Introduction, Appendix, and Memoir of the Author," "British Animals extinct within Historic Times," and "Glimpses of Bird Life," 1880; and "Essays on Sport and Natural History," 1882.

HARTINGTON (Marquis of), The Right Hon. Spencer Compton Cavendish, M.P., P.C., eldest surviving son of William, 7th Duke of Devonshire, by Lady Blanche Georgina Howard, daughter of George, 6th Earl of Carlisle, was born July 23, 1833, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1854, and was made LL.D. in 1862. He was attached to Earl Granville's special mission to Russia in 1856. In March, 1857, he was returned to the House of Commons in the Liberal interest as one of the members for North Lancashire. At the opening of the new Parliament in 1859, he moved a vote of no confidence in Lord Derby's Government, and it was carried by 323 votes against 310. In March, 1863, he was appointed a Lord of the Admiralty, and in April in the same year Under-Secretary for War. On the reconstruction of Lord Russell's second Administration, in Feb., 1866, the Marquis of Hartington became Secretary for War, and retired with his colleagues in July of that year. At the general election of Dec., 1868, he lost his seat for North Lancashire, but was immediately afterwards returned for the Radnor boroughs, having first received the office of Postmaster-General in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet. He held that office till Jan., 1871, when he succeeded Mr. Chichester Fortescue as Chief Secretary for Ireland. His lordship went out of office with his party in Feb., 1874. When Mr. Gladstone, shortly before the assembling of Parliament in 1875, announced his intention of abandoning the post of leader of the Liberal party, a meeting of the members of the Opposition was held at the Reform Club (Feb. 3), under the presidency of Mr. John Bright. On the motion of Mr. Villiers, seconded by Mr. Samuel Morley, a resolution was unanimously passed to the effect that the Marquis of Hartington should be requested to undertake the leadership of the Liberal party in the House of Commons. His lordship accepted this responsible position, and became the acknowledged leader of the Opposition in the Lower House. He received the freedom of the city of Glasgow, Nov. 5, 1877; and was installed as Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh, Jan. 31, 1879.

At the general election of April, 1880, he was elected M.P. for North East Lancashire. On the resignation of the Conservative Government, the Marquis of Hartington was sent for by the Queen to form an Administration; but this task, having been declined by him and Earl Granville, eventually devolved on the former leader of the Liberal party, Mr. Gladstone, who constructed a Cabinet, in which the Marquis of Hartington occupied a seat, as Secretary of State for India, from May, 1880, till Dec. 16, 1882, when he was transferred to the War Office in succession to Mr. Childers, who had become Chancellor of the Exchequer. He resigned with the Government in June, 1885, and was elected for the Rossendale division of Lancashire, Dec., 1885. In 1886, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Cabinet, Lord Hartington declined to join it: but, on the contrary, took up the position of leader of the Unionist Liberals. He moved the first resolution at the great Opera House meeting; and also, in the House of Commons, the rejection of the Bill at the debate on the second reading. His election for the Rossendale division in 1886 was looked upon with immense interest. He was returned by 5,399 votes against 3,949. When the new Government was formed, he declined to become a member of it, preferring to give Lord Salisbury an "outside support." After the secession of Lord Randolph Churchill, Lord Salisbury again endeavoured to induce Lord Hartington to join the Cabinet, but in vain.

HARTLEY, Sir Charles Augustus, K.C.M.G., was born at Heworth, co. Durham, 1825, being the son of W. A. Hartley, Esq., iron merchant of Darlington, by Lillias, daughter of A. Tod, Esq., J.P., of Borrowstowness, N.B. In 1845 after a practical course of instruction in mining and railway engineering at Bishop Auckland and Leeds, he was appointed one of Messrs. Stevenson, Brassey, and Mackenzie's District engineers on the Scottish Central Railway, and held that post till 1848, when he was nominated Resident Engineer at Sutton Harbour, Plymouth, under Mr. J. Locke, M.P. In June, 1855, on the completion of the Sutton Harbour Works, he accepted a commission as Captain in the Turkish Contingent Engineers, and served at Kertch with that force until the end of the Crimean war, for which he received the Turkish war medal. In Dec., 1856, he was elected Engineer-in-Chief to the European Commission of the Danube, on the recommendation of Major (now Lieut.-General Sir John) Stokes, K.C.B., and General Sir John Burgoyne, Bart. In March, 1861, he inspected the early works of the Suez Canal, and reported favourably on that scheme to the English Government. In Sept., 1862, he received the honour of knighthood. In 1867 he was awarded the Emperor of Russia's "Grand Competition Prize" of 8,000 silver roubles, for which there were twenty competitors, for his plans for enlarging the harbour of Odessa. In 1872, when the depth at Sulina had been increased, by natural scour only, to 20½ feet, and many important river improvements had been effected, he ceased to reside at Sulina, and became Consulting Engineer to the Danube Commission, a post which he still retains. During his residence abroad he was also employed by the Austrian Government, to report on various schemes for improving the port of Trieste; by the Turkish Government, to report on dock accommodation at Constantinople; by the Russian Government, to survey and report on the mouths of the Don; by the British Government, to report on an international question of engineering, connected with the Scheldt; by the Indian Government, to report on the Hooghly; by the Khedive, to report on the "Barrage" across the Nile; and by the Roumanian Government, to prepare surveys and drawings for a harbour on the coast of Bessarabia. In Jan., 1874, he was the first engineer to recommend the improvement of the South Pass and Mouth of the Mississippi in preference to either of the other Mouths. In Aug., 1875, he visited the South Pass as a member of Mr. J. B. Ead's Advisory Board, and remained in constant communication with that distinguished engineer till the summer of 1879, when Mr. Ead's well-planned operations to deepen the South Pass and Mouth, by means of parallel jetties, as at Sulina, were crowned with complete success. In 1875-77 he acted as Consulting Engineer to the Cattlewater Commissioners for the Cattlewater Breakwater at Plymouth. In May, 1879, he was appointed a member of the Panama Congress, but abstained from voting in favour of M. de Lesseps' Panama-Colon project, as he considered that the engineering data collected up to that time were insufficient to determine satisfactorily the best route for a ship canal across the isthmus. In 1881 he prepared detailed surveys, plans, and estimates for the enlargement of the harbour of Kustendjie, in Roumania, and, in 1889, for the construction of a commercial harbour at Bourgas, in Bulgaria. In 1884 he was created a Knight Commander of SS.

Michael and George. In 1884-85, on the recommendation of H.M.'s Government, he acted as one of the English members of the International Technical Commission appointed by the Suez Canal Company to report on the best means of improving the Suez Canal. He is the author of papers on "The Delta of the Danube," on "Public Works in the United States and Canada," and on "Inland Navigations in Europe." He has been decorated with the Orders of the Medjidieh and the Star of Roumania, and has received the Stephenson prize, the Telford medal, the Watt medal, the Telford premium, and the Manby premium, from the Institution of Civil Engineers.

HARTMANN, Alfred, a Swiss author, was born Jan. 1, 1814, in the castle of Thunstetten near Langenthal, in the Canton of Berne, and attended from 1827 to 1831 the schools of Solothurn. After the latter date he studied law in the universities of Munich, Heidelberg, and Berlin. During a prolonged visit to Paris, however, he lost all taste for jurisprudence, and devoted himself to literary pursuits. On returning to his native country he permanently fixed his residence at Solothurn, where he formed a close friendship with the well-known painter Disteli, and where (from 1845) he published a comic periodical called Post-heiri. But Hartmann became best known through his Helvetic romance, "Meister Putsch und seine Gesellen," 1858; and, in the department of biography, by his sketch of his friend "Martin Disteli," 1861; "H. J. Von Staal," 1861; "Galerie berühmter Schweizer," 2 vols., 1863-71; and "Hory, Kanzler-Denkwürdigkeiten," 1876. Among his other works may be mentioned "Kiltabendsgeschichten," 1853-55; "Erzählungen aus der Schweiz," 1863; "Junker und Bürger," 1865; "Schweizernovellen," 1877; "Neue Schweizernovellen," and "Fortunat," 1879.

HARTMANN, Eduard von, philosopher, was born in Berlin, in 1842. He entered the Prussian army in 1858; but lameness obliged him to leave the service in 1865, and he took to literature as a profession. His first work, "Philosophie des Unbewussten"—The Philosophy of the Unconscious—at once raised him to fame. It was published in 1869, and in thirteen years passed through nine editions. An English translation, in three volumes, is published in Trübner's "English and Foreign Philosophical Library." This has been followed by "Phänomenologie des sittlichen Bewusstseins," 1878; "Das religiöse Bewusstsein der Menschheit im Stufengange seiner Entwicklung," 1881; besides numerous less important works.

HASTINGS, Thomas Samuel, D.D., was born at Utica, N.Y., Aug. 28, 1827. He graduated at Hamilton College (Clinton, N.Y.) in 1848, and at the Union Theological Seminary (N.Y. City) in 1851. He was pastor of Presbyterian churches in Mendham, N.J., in 1852-56, and in New York City in 1856-82. He then became Professor of Sacred Rhetoric in the Union Theological Seminary, of which, in 1888, he was made the President, succeeding the late Dr. R. D. Hitchcock, who died in 1887. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1865. In conjunction with his father he edited "Church Melodies," published in 1857.

HATTON, Joseph, born at Andover in 1839, is the eldest son of the late Francis Hatton, founder of the Derbyshire Times, one of the first of the penny newspapers, and for which his son began to write at an early age. He first came to London in 1868 to edit and reconstruct the Gentleman's Magazine, which he conducted for some years with a staff consisting of Tom Taylor, Shirley Brooks, Mark Lemon, "The Druid," Luke Limner, William Jerdan, Blanchard Jerrold, and other well-known writers. For seven or eight years he was the special correspondent in Europe of the New York Times; he now fills a similar position for the Sydney Morning Herald, and has intimate relations with more than one great American journal. He has written for Harper's and other leading magazines; has been a contributor of special serial articles to the Illustrated London News and the Graphic; has edited the Sunday Times, and founded one or two successful journals. He has frequently crossed the Atlantic; once on a mission from the Standard (London), during which time he exploited the Irish Question, and described for that journal by cable the assassination of President Garfield. He collaborated with Mr. Harvey in the latest and most complete History of Newfoundland, and his name is well known in the eastern seas as the author of the pioneer volume on British North Borneo; since which time, through the sad death of his accomplished son in those regions, he has given to the world the story and work of that young life which is perpetuated in Borneo by the naming of a mountain near the scene of his death

"Mount Hatton." Mr. Hatton is perhaps better known as a novelist than as a journalist. His principal stories are "Clytie," "Cruel London," "Christopher Kenrick," "Three Recruits," "The Queen of Bohemia," "The Old House at Sandwich," and "By Order of the Czar." The first-mentioned book enjoys an almost phenomenal popularity in many countries, and the latter has been prohibited by the Russian censor on account of its exposure of the treatment of the Jews in the Czar's dominions. Among his miscellaneous works are: "Journalistic London," "Toole's Reminiscences," "Irving's Impressions of America," "To-day in America," "The New Ceylon," "Captured by Cannibals," "Old Lamps and New," "The Abbey Murder," "John Needham's Double," &c. He is also the author of several successful plays.

HATZFELDT, Count von, was born in 1831. His mother was the Countess Sophie von Hatzfeldt, the patroness and companion of Ferdinand Lassalle, the Jew philosopher and Social Democrat. In 1862 Count Hatzfeldt went to Paris with Prince Bismarck as one of his secretaries, and when the Foreign Office was mobilised on the outbreak of the Franco-German War he was one of the select workers who formed the Chancellor's diplomatic suite. In 1874 he was appointed Imperial Minister at Madrid. Soon after the signature of the Treaty of Berlin he was sent to Constantinople in succession to Prince Reuss, with the special object of preserving the ascendancy which Germany had acquired in the Councils of the Porte. After a three years' residence at Stamboul he was recalled to Berlin to succeed Herr von Bülow as Foreign Secretary, and in Nov., 1885, he succeeded Count Münster as German Ambassador in London.

HAUR, Dr. Franz Ritter von, was born in Vienna, Jan. 30, 1822. His education was obtained partly in Vienna, and partly at Chemnitz. In 1846 he was appointed to assist Haidinger at the Imperial Museum; in 1867 he became Director of the K. K. Geologischen Reichsanstalt; and, in 1885, Intendant des K. K. Naturhistorischen Hof-Museums. Besides numerous papers on geology, in the periodical publications of the Austrian Geological Survey Office, and of the Vienna Academy, Dr. Haur has written several large works on Geology, and is responsible for the Geological Map of the Austro-Hungarian Empire published between 1867 and 1873.

HAUSSMANN, Baron Georges Eugène, administrator and senator, born at Paris, March 27, 1809, was educated at the Conservatoire de Musique, studied with a notary, and became an advocate. After the revolution of 1830 he was successively Sous-Préfet of Nerac, Saint Girons, and Blaye, and under the Presidency of Louis Napoleon, was Prefect of Var, the Yonne, and Gironde. The President, appreciating his administrative talents, appointed him Préfet of the Seine, in succession to M. Berger, June 23, 1853. Under his active direction and enterprising spirit, works were executed in Paris of such a nature as to render it almost a new city. Amongst these may be mentioned the improvement of the Bois de Boulogne, the prolongation of the Rue de Rivoli, the construction of the Boulevard de Sebastopol, and of more than twenty boulevards in the old parts of Paris, various public gardens, squares, barracks, the Halles Centrales, the new Prefectures of Police, more than a dozen bridges, the rebuilding of various mairies, in addition to numerous hospitals, asylums (especially the Hôtel Dieu), and many other public works. After several loans had been contracted for the purpose of carrying out these improvements the municipality of Paris, acting under the powers conferred upon them by special laws, raised a further sum of 250,000,000 francs in 1865, and 260,000,000 francs more in 1869. Meanwhile the financial administration of M. Haussmann had given rise to the most animated discussions in the Corps Législatif and in the columns of the press, it being alleged that the Prefect had raised, by means of bonds, hundreds of millions of francs over and above the large amount he was legally authorised to expend in the construction of public works. Eventually M. Haussmann requested the Emperor to place the budget of the city under the control of the Corps Législatif, and accordingly the examination of his accounts became the principal business of the session of 1869, the result being that authority was given for a new loan of 260,000,000 francs, which was eagerly subscribed by the public. On the formation of a parliamentary cabinet by M. Émile Ollivier, he was asked to tender his resignation of the office of Prefect of the Seine, and on his refusal to do so he was "relieved of his duties" by an imperial decree, dated Jan. 5, 1870. M. Haussmann was promoted to the rank of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, June 17, 1856, and Grand Cross, Sept. 8, 1862. In Aug., 1857, he was created a Senator, and, in 1867, elected a Member of the Academy of Fine Arts. He was likewise a Member of the Imperial Council of Public Instruction. After the fall of the Empire, Baron Haussmann prudently quitted France for a time. On his return he was appointed (Sept. 3, 1871) Director of the Crédit Mobilier, and in this capacity he did much to restore the influence and improve the situation of that financial institution. At the election of Oct., 1877, he was returned to the Chamber of Deputies by the arrondissement of Ajaccio in Corsica, his candidature having received the official approbation of the Government. He polled 8,066 votes against 4,421 given for his opponent, Prince Napoleon. In the Chamber he occasionally took part in the discussion of financial projects and questions relating to public works, and had several times, in reference to this latter class of subjects, to defend his administration. In June, 1879, the municipal council of Paris, after a debate on the names of streets, included the Boulevard Haussmann among the public thoroughfares which were to have their names changed; but on the recommendation of the new Prefect of the Seine (M. F. Herold) the name of his predecessor was retained.

HAVELOCK, Sir Arthur Elibank, K.C.M.G., Governor of Ceylon, was born in 1844. He was President of Nevis, in 1877; Chief Civil Commissioner of the Seychelles, in 1879; Governor of the West African Settlements, in 1881; Governor of Trinidad, in 1884; Governor of Natal, in 1885; and Governor of Ceylon, in 1890.

Haweis, The Rev. Hugh Reginald, M.A., was born at Egham, Surrey, April 3, 1838, being the son of the Rev. J. O. W. Haweis, M.A., rector of Slaughan, Sussex, and Mary Davis Haweis. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge. (B.A. 1859; M.A. 1864.) He was first appointed curate of St. Peter's, Bethnal Green; next, in 1863, curate of St. James-the-Less, Westminster; and, in 1866, incumbent of St. James's, Marylebone. He took great interest in the Italian Revolution under Garibaldi, and was present at the siege of Capua, where he had several narrow escapes. He afterwards published in the Argosy an account of those events and a memoir of Garibaldi; and subsequently wrote, at his request, other memoirs of his life for Cassell's Magazine. He has lectured at the Royal Institution, on violins and church-bells. He is the author of "Music and Morals," "Thoughts for the Times," "Speech in Season,"

"Current Coin," "Arrows in the Air," "Pet, or, Pastimes and Penalties," a book for children; "Ashes to Ashes," a cremation prelude; "American Humorists," "Homeland," a hymn; "Unsectarian Family Prayers," and "Christ and Christianity."

HAWKINS, Frederick, son of the late William Hamilton Hawkins, of the Times, was born in 1849, and from an early age has been connected with literature and journalism. His first work was a biography in two volumes of Edmund Kean, brought out in 1869. He assisted in establishing The Theatre, one of the few periodicals exclusively devoted to the literature and art of the stage. Begun in 1877 as a weekly newspaper, it appeared in the following year as a monthly review and magazine, and at the end of 1879 was sold by its original proprietors to Mr. Clement Scott. Mr. Hawkins, had edited it from the outset. His "Annals of the French Stage from its origin to the death of Racine," came out towards the close of 1884. It was generally held to meet a want long felt in English literature; the Athenæum expressing a "doubt whether any single French work supplied so animated, and in the main accurate, a picture of the establishment of the stage and the progress of dramatic literature in France." In 1888 Mr. Hawkins produced a continuation of the history to the Revolution period inclusive, under the title of "The French Stage in the Eighteenth Century." Mr. Hawkins acted as dramatic critic for the Times during the last illness of Mr. Oxenford, and has for some time been a member of the editorial staff of that journal.

HAWKINS, The Hon. Sir Henry, Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division), son of John Hawkins, Esq., of Hitchin, Herts, by Susannah, daughter of Theed Pearse, Esq., of Bedford, was born at Hitchin in 1816, and educated at Bedford School. Adopting the law as his profession he entered the Middle Temple, and was a very diligent special pleader before his call to the Bar, in 1843. After a year or two he rapidly acquired a very large practice as a junior. He attached himself to the Home circuit, and after he obtained his silk gown, in 1858, he was for many years one of its leaders. He also became a Bencher of the Middle Temple. As a junior, Mr. Hawkins was one of the Counsel (with Serjeant Byles) for Sir John Dean Paul, in 1855; and (with Mr. Edwin James) for Simon Bernard, who was tried as accessory to the conspiracy against the life of the Emperor Napoleon, in 1858. After he became a Queen's Counsel he was engaged in nearly every important case that came before the Superior Courts. He was associated with the late Lord Chief Justice Bovill in the great Roupell cases against the claims advanced upon the evidence of Mr. Roupell. In the famous convent case, "Saurin v. Star," tried in 1869, Mr. Hawkins led for the defence; and he was leading Counsel for Mr. W. H. Smith, whose seat for Westminster he successfully defended before Mr. Baron Martin. He was associated with the present Lord Coleridge in the first Tichborne trial, when he particularly distinguished himself by his exhaustive cross-examination of Mr. Baigent. In the prosecution of the Claimant for perjury, Mr. Hawkins led for the Crown, and the skill he displayed in this trial—one of the most protracted and the most remarkable in the annals of jurisprudence—greatly increased his reputation as an advocate. In the Probate Court Mr. Hawkins led the case in support of the will of the late Lord St. Leonards, which he established both before the Judge Ordinary and the Court of Appeal. The Gladstone and the Von Reable cases were among his victories in the Divorce Court. Mr. Hawkins was Counsel in numerous election petitions; was engaged for many years in every important compensation case; acted for the Crown in the purchase of lands for the National Defences, and for the Royal Commissioners in the purchase of the site for the new Law Courts; and was Standing Counsel for, and held the general retainer of, the Jockey Club, of which he is now a member. He was appointed a Judge of the High Court of Justice (Queen's Bench Division) Nov. 3, 1876, and transferred to the Exchequer division, when he received the honour of knighthood. He married Miss Jane Louisa Reynolds, daughter of the late Henry Francis Reynolds, Esq., of Hulme, Lancashire.

HAWKSHAW, Sir John, F.R.S., F.G.S., son of the late Mr. Henry Hawkshaw, of Leeds, by Sarah, daughter of Mr. Carrington, of Hamptsthaite, Yorkshire, was born at Leeds in 1811, and received his education in the grammar school of that town. He was, on leaving school, placed as a pupil with Mr. Charles Fowler, who was at that time chiefly engaged in the construction of turnpike roads in the West Riding of Yorkshire; and subsequently he became an assistant to the celebrated engineer, Mr. Alexander Nimmo, who was constructing for the Government several important works in Ireland. In 1831 Mr. Nimmo died, and, at the early age of twenty, Mr. Hawkshaw was engaged to undertake the management of the Bolivar Copper Mines in South America. He returned to England in 1834. He then became engineer to the Manchester and Bolton Canal and Railway. Afterwards he was engineer to the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (nearly the whole of which he constructed) and to several railways in the North and in other parts of England. Mr. Hawkshaw was nominated one of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, when that body was formed by the Crown; and in 1860 he was appointed Royal Commissioner to decide between rival schemes for the water supply to the city of Dublin. On the failure of the great sluice of St. Germain's, in Norfolk, in 1862, he was requested by the Commissioners of the Middle Level to take measures to stop the inundations and to remedy the evil caused by that disaster, which he did successfully, and there for the first time he substituted large syphons for the fallen sluice. In the following year, on a vacancy occurring in the representation of Andover, he became a candidate for that borough, but was unsuccessful, and he has never since endeavoured to enter Parliament. He was President of the Institution of Civil Engineers in 1862-63. In 1870 he proposed the famous scheme for a submarine tunnel between Calais and Dover, the borings for which have been begun but not continued. In 1873 he received the honour of knighthood. He was President of the British Association at the Bristol Meeting in 1875. The following are some of Sir John Hawkshaw's great engineering works:—the Riga and Dunaberg and the Dunaberg and Witepsk Railways in Russia; the Penarth Harbour and Dock in Cardiff Roads, the Londonderry Bridge in Ireland; the Charing Cross and Cannon Street line, with the two massive Bridges over the Thames; the East London Railway; the Government Railways in Mauritius; the Albert Dock at Hull; the South Dock of the East and West India Dock Company; the foundation of the new forts at Spithead; the Severn Tunnel; and the Great Ship Canal from Amsterdam to the North Sea. Sir John has written pamphlets on mining and engineering subjects; papers read before the Geological Societies of London and Manchester; and "Reminiscences of South America; from Two-and-a-half Years' Residence in Venezuela," 1838.

HAWLEY, Hon. Joseph Boswell,

American journalist and statesman, was born at Stewartsville, North Carolina, Oct. 31, 1826. A.B. (Hamilton College), 1847. His parents were originally from Connecticut, and when he was eleven years of age they returned to that State, where he studied law and began to practise in Hartford (1850), but abandoned law in 1857 for journalism, connecting himself with the Evening Press, a newly established Republican paper. When the Civil war broke out he was the first citizen of his State to volunteer, and was appointed Lieutenant and afterwards Captain in the 1st Conn. Infantry, serving with his company at the Battle of Bull Run. In Sept., 1861, he was made Lieut.-Colonel of the 7th Conn. Infantry, commanding the regiment after the promotion of Col. Terry. He received his commission as Brigadier-General in 1864, and was placed in command of the 2nd Brigade of Gen. Terry's Division of the 10th Corps, becoming afterwards the Chief of Staff of Gen. Terry in Virginia; and was brevetted Major-General in Sept., 1865. He was mustered out in Jan., 1866, and in April of that year was elected Governor of Connecticut. He served one term, to 1867, and then resumed journalism. He was a Presidential Elector and President of the Republican National Convention at Chicago in 1868; and has been a Delegate to those held in 1872, 1876 and 1880; was Member of Congress in 1873-77, and in 1879-81; President of the Centennial Commission in 1876; and since 1881 has been U.S. Senator from Connecticut, his present term expiring in 1893. He is the owner and editor of the Hartford Courant, with which the Press was consolidated in 1867.

HAWTHORNE, Julian, son of the eminent novelist, Nathaniel Hawthorne, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, June 22, 1846. He was prepared for college at Concord, Massachusetts, and entered Harvard in 1863, where he remained until 1867, but he took no degree. He then entered the Scientific School to study civil engineering, but left it to go to Germany, in Oct., 1868. He spent two years at a "Real-schule" in Dresden, still studying engineering. In the summer of 1870 he visited the United States, intending to resume his studies at Dresden in the autumn, but the Franco-German war interfered with his plans, and he joined the staff of hydrographic engineers in the New York Dock Department under Gen. McClellan, to which he remained attached until the summer of 1872. During 1871 he contributed a number of short stories and pieces to the American magazines, and they met with so much success that he determined to give up engineering for literature. He sailed for Europe in 1872, and after a short stay in England proceeded to Dresden, where he remained two years, during which time he published in England and America his first two novels, "Bressant," 1873, and "Idolatry," 1874. In Sept., 1874, he left Dresden and settled at Twickenham, where, in 1875, he published in the Contemporary Review, and afterwards in book-form in England and America, "Saxon Studies." His novel of "Garth" was issued in 1877. From 1875 until Oct., 1881, he remained in or near London, writing and publishing "The Laughing Mill," a collection of short stories previously contributed to English magazines; "Archibald Malmaison," a novelette; "Ellice Quentin," another collection of short pieces; "Prince Saroni's Wife," also a collection of tales; and "Yellow-Cap," fairy stories, none of which have appeared in America. His novel, "Sebastian Strome," was published both in England and in America in 1880; and two other novels appeared afterwards serially, "Fortune's Fool" and "Dust." In the autumn of 1881 Mr. Hawthorne went to the south of Ireland, where he lived for three months near Cork; and in March, 1882, went to the United States, and is now residing at Sag Harbor, L.I. While in England he wrote considerably for the periodicals, and for two years was connected with the staff of the Spectator. Since 1882 have appeared "Nathaniel Hawthorne and his Wife, a Biography," and several novels and short stories. He was literary editor of the New York World in 1885. In the summer of 1889 he visited Europe in connection with a delegation of fifty American working men, sent to examine the condition in Europe of the industries which they represented at home.

HAY, George, R.S.A., was born in Leith Walk, Edinburgh, and educated at the High Schools of Leith and Edinburgh. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1869; an Academician in 1876; and was unanimously elected to the Secretaryship of the Academy, Nov. 9, 1881, in the place of the late William Brodie, F.S.A. At an early age he showed indications of his future skill as an artist. He studied modelling in the School of Art, and drawing and painting from the antique in the Board of Trustee's Gallery of Casts. At the age of 17 he was induced to enter the architectural profession; but after some years he abandoned it for the more congenial one of the artist. Among his pictures are:—"A Barber's Shop in the time of Elizabeth," 1863; "A Street Incident in the Sixteenth Century," 1864; "The Jacobite in Hiding," 1865; "Shopping in the Sixteenth Century," 1867; "Devotional Art," 1867; "Richie Moniplies in Fleet Street," 1868; "Teatattle," 1871; "A Visit to the Spaewife," 1872; "Caleb Balderston's Ruse," 1874, engraved; "The Haunted Room," 1875; "The Warrant," 1875; "In Days of Yore," 1877; "The Spinners," 1879; and "Secret Aid in '45," exhibited in 1881.

HAY, The Right Hon. Sir John Charles Dalrymple, Bart., K.C.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., Admiral, Vice-President of the Institution of Naval Architects, eldest son of the late Sir James Dalrymple Hay, Bart., of Park Place, Wigtownshire, by his first wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Heron Maxwell, of Springkell, Dumfriesshire, was born Feb. 11, 1821, and educated at Rugby. Entering the Navy in 1834, he served in 1835 and 1836 on the Cape of Good Hope station, where he was landed with the seamen and marines for the defence of Fort Elizabeth in the first Kaffir war, and was present at the capture of five slavers in the river Bonny, on the West Coast of Africa. He then served in the Channel Squadron on the North Coast of Spain, on the South American and Pacific station; and in 1840-41 in the operations on the Syrian coast. He was at the capture of Beyrout and of Acre, and was specially gazetted for gallantry in the boat attack on Tortosa. He then served in the East Indies and China; and was flag-lieutenant with Admiral Sir Thomas Cochrane in the operations in Borneo in 1845-46. He commanded the Wolverine and Columbine in China, and was senior officer in the operations against the pirate fleet of Chinapoo, which he destroyed with the squadron under his orders in Bins Bay, on Sept. 26, 27, 28, 1849; and with the same squadron he destroyed the Fleet of Shap'ng'tzai in the Tonquin River on Oct. 20 and 21, 1849. He received the thanks of the Admiralty and his promotion for these services; and it was acknowledged by the merchants in China by thanks and a service of plate. He commanded H.M.S. Hannibal in the Black and Mediterranean Seas during the Russian war of 1854-56, and took part in the capture of Kertch and Kinburn, and in the bombardment and fall of Sebastopol. He commanded the Indus in North America and the West Indies from 1857 till 1859; was one of the Greenwich Hospital Commission in 1860-61; and

Chairman of the Iron Plate Committee from 1861 till 1864. He succeeded his father as third baronet, March 19, 1861; was elected in 1862 for Wakefield in the Conservative interest; lost his seat at the general election in July, 1865; was defeated at Tiverton the same year, and elected in May, 1866, for Stamford, which constituency he represented till the general election of April, 1880, when he was an unsuccessful candidate; but in July of that year he was returned for the Wigtown burghs. He was made a rear-admiral, and was placed on the retired list of that rank in April, 1870. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from June, 1866, to Dec., 1868, has received three war Medals and the Medjidieh 4th class. He is the author of "The Flag List and its Prospects;" "Our Naval Defences;" "The Reward of Loyalty," being suggestions in reference to our American Colonies, 1862; a "Memorandum on his compulsory retirement from the British Navy," 1870; "Remarks on the Loss of the Captain," 1871; "Ashanti and the Gold Coast, and what we know of it; a Sketch," 1874; and "Suppression of Piracy in the China Sea," 1889. Sir John married, in 1847, the Hon. Eliza Napier, third daughter of William John, eighth Lord Napier.

HAY, John, journalist, author, and diplomatist, was born at Salem, Indiana, Oct. 8, 1838, and graduated at Brown University, 1858. He was admitted to the Bar in Springfield, Illinois, in 1861, but almost immediately went to Washington as Assistant Secretary to President Lincoln, and subsequently was his Adjutant and Aide-de-Camp. During the Civil war he served for a time under Generals Hunter and Gillmore, attaining the rank of Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General. From 1865 to 1867 he was Secretary of Legation in Paris, and from that time to 1868 was Chargé d'Affaires at Vienna. He was appointed Secretary of Legation in Madrid in 1869, where he remained until 1870, when he returned to the United States, and became one of the editors of the New York Tribune. This position he resigned in 1876, upon his removal to Cleveland, Ohio; but he has continued occasionally to contribute to its columns to the present time. During the absence of the editor, Mr. Whitelaw Reid, in Europe, from April to Nov., 1881, Colonel Hay returned to New York to take entire editorial charge of the Tribune. From 1879 to 1881 he was Assistant Secretary of State. While on the Tribune he obtained considerable celebrity by his dialect poems of "Jim Bludsoe;" "Little Breeches," &c.; which were afterwards published in book-form under the title of "Pike County Ballads," 1871. In the same year he also issued "Castilian Days," a series of sketches of Spanish life and character. He represented the United States at the International Sanitary Congress held in Washington in 1881, and was chosen President of that body; he has been engaged since then (in collaboration with John G. Nicolay) in writing a Life of Abraham Lincoln, which was published as a serial in The Century, from 1886 to 1890, and was printed in 1890, with extensive additions, in 10 vols., Svo, by The Century Co. In the same year he published his collected "Poems."

HAYES, The Hon. Rutherford Birchard, LL.D., nineteenth President of the United States, was born at Delaware, Ohio, Oct. 4, 1822, and graduated at Kenyon College, 1842. He was admitted to the Bar at Marietta, Ohio, in 1845, and entered upon the practice of law first at Fremont, Ohio, and subsequently at Cincinnati. The Civil War having broken out, he was in June, 1861, made Major of a regiment of Ohio volunteers. His regiment was ordered to service in Western Virginia, and was subsequently joined to the army of the Potomac under General McClellan, and took part in the operations pertaining to the Confederate invasion of Maryland, in Sept., 1862. In Nov., 1862, he was made Colonel of his regiment, which was subsequently on duty in Virginia, West Virginia, and elsewhere. "For gallant and meritorious service in the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek," he was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General of Volunteers; and brevetted Major-General for "gallant and distinguished services during the campaign of 1864." In the course of his army service he was four times wounded and had four horses shot under him. At the close of the war, in June, 1865, he resigned his commission. He had previously been elected a Representative in Congress from Ohio, and took his seat in Dec., 1865. He was re-elected for the following term, but resigned in 1867, having been elected Governor of Ohio, to which office he was re-elected in 1869, and again in 1875. His repeated success in Ohio induced the Republican National Convention in 1876 to nominate him for the presidency. When the election had taken place, it seemed certain that, of the 369 electoral votes, 184 would be cast for Mr. Tilden, the Democratic candidate, being one less than a majority; 172 were equally sure for Mr. Hayes; but there were thirteen electors, in respect to whose election there were grave questions in dispute. If only one of these votes should be counted for Mr. Tilden he would have a majority, and would consequently become President. In order to secure the election of Hayes, all of these thirteen votes must be counted for him. As the Republicans had a majority in the Senate, and the Democrats in the House, it was certain that the two branches of Congress would not agree in the counting of the disputed votes. In this emergency, a bill was passed creating a special Electoral Commission, to consist of five Senators, five Representatives, and five Judges of the Supreme Court. This commission, by a majority of one, decided that the disputed votes should all be counted for Mr. Hayes, giving him a majority of one vote, and he was declared duly elected. Mr. Hayes's administration was a conservative one, and was noted for its exceptional purity. By the withdrawal of all national troops from the Southern States he restored to them in its entirety the right of local self-government. He endeavoured to prevent the remonetization of silver at more than its intrinsic value, but his veto was overridden by the constitutional two-thirds majority in Congress. He firmly maintained, against a large majority of both branches of Congress, the resumption of specie payments. Both the Senate and the House vigorously opposed his efforts at a reform of the civil service, so that the bill prohibiting political assessment on office-holders was the only law on the subject of which he secured the passage. He was able, however, to set an example in favour of the reform by checking removals except for cause, and by instituting in the Interior Department in Washington, and in the Post Office and Custom House at New York, competitive examinations for appointment. The House of Representatives, which was Democratic throughout his term, attempted to secure his assent to the repeal of certain measures by attaching them to appropriation bills; but he was firm in his refusal to sign them, and the House was finally obliged to give way, public sentiment showing itself largely on the side of the President. On March 4, 1881, he was succeeded in the Presidency by Mr. Garfield, and has since resided at his home at Fremont, Ohio. Since his retirement from political life he has been actively engaged in educational, philanthropic, and other work of general interest. He is President of the National Prison Reform Association, and of the Slater Education Fund for the Negroes; is a member of the Peabody Education Fund for the South; and is Commander-in-Chief of the Military Order of the Loyal League of the United States. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Kenyon College, Harvard University, Yale College, and John Hopkins' University.

HAYMAN, The Rev. Henry, D.D., was born in 1823, and entered Merchant Taylors' School in 1832, whence, after gaining the chief prizes in Greek verse and Latin prose, he proceeded as scholar to St. John's College, Oxford, in 1841. He became a Fellow of his college in 1844, and in the following year was placed in the second class both in classics and in mathematics. He then came to London, and was successively curate at St. Luke's, Old Street, and at St. James's, Piccadilly, when the late Bishop of London, Dr. Jackson, was rector, and, in 1853-55 one of the assistant-masters at the Charterhouse. In 1854 he was appointed assistant preacher at the Temple Church, and in the following year head master of St. Olave's Grammar School, Southwark. Subsequently he became head master of Cheltenham Grammar School, and in 1868 of St. Andrew's College, Bradfield. When Dr. Temple was promoted to the See of Exeter, Dr. Hayman was elected his successor as head master of Rugby School, Nov. 20, 1869, a post which he retained until 1874, when Mr. Disraeli appointed Dr. Hayman to the Crown rectory of Aldingham, Lancashire, where he has since resided. Dr. Hayman's published works consist of occasional essays contributed to the Saturday Review; also to the Christian Remembrancer, and more lately to the Church Quarterly, Edinburgh, Dublin, National, Fortnightly, British Quarterly, Contemporary, and other Reviews, the Cornhill, St. James's, Temple Bar, and Clergyman's magazines, the Churchman, Antiquary, Bibliotheca Sacra (U. S. of America), and other serials; also of a volume of selections from the above, entitled "Why We Suffer, and other Essays," 1889. He is a member of the Cambridge Philological Society, being, save one who is resident in Cambridge and virtually affiliated there, the only Oxford man who has at present that honour; and has contributed several papers to its Journal and Transactions. He is the author of "Exercises in Greek and Latin Verse Composition;" numerous articles in the "Dictionary of the Bible," edited by Dr. W. Smith, and has since published in three volumes an edition of Homer's Odyssey; and "Rugby School Sermons," with an introductory Essay "On the indwelling of the Holy Spirit," 1875. In 1884 he became Hon. Canon of Carlisle, and in 1885 was one of the first elected Proctors for the new archdeaconry of Furness, a post which he has since resigned.

HAYTER, Sir Arthur Divett, Bart., is the only son of the late Right Hon. Sir William Goodenough Hayter, Q.C., and was born in 1835. He was educated at Eton, and at Balliol and Brasenose Colleges, Oxford; he graduated in classical honours in 1857. In 1856 he obtained a commission in the Grenadier Guards, retiring in 1866 with the rank of captain. Sir Arthur Hayter was M.P. for Wells from 1865 till 1868, when he unsuccessfully contested East Somerset. In 1873 he was elected as member for Bath, in the Liberal interest. He succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father in 1878. In 1880 he was appointed a Lord of the Treasury, and in May, 1882, he succeeded Mr. Campbell-Bannerman as Financial Secretary at the War Office. In 1885, and again in 1886, he stood for Bath, but was both times defeated. Sir Arthur Hayter married, in 1866, Henrietta, daughter of the late Mr. Adrian John Hope.

HAYTER, Harrison, Civil Engineer, a Vice-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Honorary Fellow and Associate of King's College, London, and F.G.S., was born, near Falmouth, on April 10, 1825, and is the son of the late Henry Hayter, Esq., of Eden Vale, Wiltshire, and nephew of the late Right Hon. Sir William Goodenough Hayter, Bart. After receiving a classical and mathematical education, he entered (in 1840) the Applied Science Department of King's College, London, and went through the prescribed three years' curriculum with distinction. Upon leaving King's College he commenced his professional training on the Stockton and Darlington Railway (now a part of the North Eastern System), and was afterwards engaged in the construction of the Great Northern Railway. In 1857 he joined Sir John Hawkshaw, past President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, as his Chief Assistant; and, in 1870, he became his partner; a long professional association which was severed only by the retirement of Sir John Hawkshaw from business, at the end of 1888. During the time he was with Sir John Hawkshaw, he was engaged in the construction of the following works. Railways:—Lancashire and Yorkshire; Charing Cross and Cannon Street Lines; the East London Railway; the completion of the Inner Circle of the Metropolitan and District Lines; and the Severn Tunnel Railway, in England. The Madras; the Eastern Bengal; and the West of India; Portuguese Railways in India; and the Jamaica; and Mauritius Railways in the Colonies; the Riga and Düna; and Düna and Witepsk Railways in Russia; and the Madrid and Portugal Direct Railway in Spain. Harbours:—Holyhead; Alderney; Ymuiden (Holland); and Mormugao (India). Docks:—The South Dock of the West India Docks; and Docks at Hull, Penarth, Maryport, Fleetwood, and Dover. Bridges:—The Charing Cross and Cannon Street Bridges; and a Bridge nearly a mile long over the river Nerbudda, in India; the Londonderry Bridge; a Bridge over the Tees at Stockton-on-Tees; and the Clifton Suspension Bridge. Other works:—The Amsterdam Ship Canal; the Foundations of the Spithead Forts; the Middle Level, the River Witham, and the Thames Valley Drainages; and the Drainage of Brighton. The principal work he is now carrying out in conjunction with his present partner, Mr. J. C. Hawkshaw, is the large system of Docks at Buenos Ayres, with a dredged channel fourteen miles long; the works occupying a river frontage of three miles, involving an expenditure of about £5,000,000; this being the largest dock system that has ever been carried out at one time. Besides the above works he has acted as arbitrator in many cases; has had to report on, and prepare designs for, many undertakings; and is a frequent witness before Parliamentary and other tribunals. He is the author of an account of Holyhead Harbour, of the Charing Cross Bridge, and of the Amsterdam Ship Canal, presented to the Institution of Civil Engineers, and published in their Minutes of Proceedings.

HAYTER, Henry Heylyn, C.M.G., was born in Oct., 1821, at Eden Vale, Wiltshire, and educated at a private school and at the Charterhouse. He emigrated to Victoria in 1852, and in 1857 joined the department of the Registrar-General, where he was for many years at the head of the statistical branch. Whilst in that position he brought the official statistics of Victoria to a high state of perfection. In 1870 he was selected to fill the office of secretary to a Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the public service of Victoria. Mr. Hayter's labours on the Commission did not prevent him from attending to his ordinary official duties, which were much added to by the census of 1871. These labours together with domestic losses, affected his health, and in 1872 he obtained leave of absence for a short period, which he spent in New Zealand, where, at the request of the Government of that colony, he investigated the working of the Registrar-General's department. In May, 1874, the statistical branch, over which Mr. Hayter had so long presided, was erected into a separate department, he being placed at its head under the title of Government Statist. In 1875 he was deputed by his Government to represent Victoria at a conference of the Australasian Colonies, held in Tasmania, for the purpose of establishing a uniform system of official statistics. In 1889 Mr. Hayter represented his Government at, and was unanimously chosen president of, an intercolonial conference, held in Tasmania, whose object was to arrange for the collection and compilation of the census of 1891, upon a uniform principle throughout Australasia. Soon after Mr. Hayter assumed the office of Government Statist, he originated the work by which he is best known, the "Victorian Year Book," which he has carried on for sixteen years, and still edits. He is also author of "Notes of a Tour in New Zealand;" "Notes on the Colony of Victoria, Historical, Geographical, Meteorological, and Statistical;" "School History" and "School Geography" of Victoria; a "Nosological Index," which is used in the statistical departments of all the Australasian colonies, a volume of poems, many papers read before scientific societies in different parts of the world, and a large number of statistical reports and other official documents. In 1887 he edited, at the request of the Victorian Government, and wrote the greater part of, a "Précis of Information on the Colony of Victoria, and of its Capabilities for Defence," for the use of the Intelligence Branch of the Imperial War Office. He is an Honorary Member of the Statistical Societies of London, Manchester, and Paris; of the Statistical and Social Inquiry Society of Ireland; of the Statistical Associations of Boston (United States) and Tôkiô (Japan); of the Royal Societies of South Australia and Tasmania; of the Society of Arts, London; of the Commercio-Geographical Society of Berlin; and of the Geographical Society of Bremen. He is also a Fellow and the Honorary Corresponding Secretary for Victoria of the Royal Colonial Institute; and the representative member for Victoria of the International Statistical Institute. He was created a C.M.G. May 24, 1882; an Officer of the French Order of Public Instruction on July 14 of the same year ; and a Chevalier of the Order of the Crown of Italy on June 8, 1884.

HAYWARD, Charles Forster, F.S.A., architect, born at Colchester in Jan., 1831, received his education at University College, London, and professionally studied in the offices of Mr. Lewis Cubitt, Mr. P. C. Hardwick, and the late Professor Cockerell. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1861, Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1867, and appointed District Surveyor by the Metropolitan Board of Works in 1871. Mr. Hayward was elected Honorary Secretary of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862, and held the appointment for many years. He was also Honorary Secretary to the Institute's Architectural Committee for the Exhibition in Paris in 1867. Mr. Hayward has erected many buildings in London and the provinces—including the Duke of Cornwall Hotel at Plymouth, the Sanatorium, the Science Schools, and other buildings for Harrow, Schoolhouses for Charterhouse, Mill Hill, &c.; and he is also known as an occasional contributor to professional journals.

HAYWOOD, William, Lieut.-Colonel, M.I.C.E., F.R.I.B.A., was born in Surrey in 1821, and was educated professionally in the office of Mr. George Aitcheson, Resident Architect and Surveyor to the St. Katharine's Dock Company. In 1846 he became the Engineer and Surveyor to the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London, which post he now holds. In that capacity his official duties are very varied, the Commissioners combining the functions of a Highway, Sewerage and Improvement Board, a Local Board of Health and Burial Board, and in fact controlling all the physical conditions of the City which affect the health and comfort of the inhabitants and the vast traffic within the Municipal area. In 1851, in conjunction with Mr. Frank Forster (then Engineer to the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers), he designed the main drainage and sewerage interception scheme for the northern side of the Thames; and in 1854, with Sir Joseph Bazalgette, enlarged that scheme, which has subsequently been carried out by the Metropolitan Board of Works. He constructed the City Cemetery at Ilford, the various wharves and dépôts of the Commission, the Artizans' and Labourers' Dwellings within the City, and various other works. He has constructed more than half of the sewerage of the City; and to him is mainly due the introduction of asphalté carriageway pavements into England; and from his plans more than one-third of all the public ways in the City have been widened and improved. The Holborn Viaduct and approaches were carried out from his design for the Corporation of the City of London. The Viaduct was opened by Her Majesty Queen Victoria in Nov., 1869. He joined the London Rifle Brigade in 1859, ultimately became its Lieut.-Colonel Commandant, and retired from his command in 1882. He is a Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers; a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and of other Scientific Societies; a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour; Knight of the Ernestine House Order; Officer of the Order of Leopold of Belgium, and Commander of the Portuguese Royal Military Order of Christ.

HAZLITT, William, only son of the essayist, born in Wiltshire, Sept. 26, 1811, was called to the Bar in 1844, and appointed Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, London, in 1854. His first literary productions were, for the most part, translations and compilations; but in 1851 a pamphlet by him on the Registration of Assurances attracted some attention. Mr. Hazlitt edited Johnson's "Lives of the Poets," compiled a Classical Gazetteer, and, in conjunction with Mr. Roche, produced a useful Manual of Maritime Warfare, and editions of the Bankruptcy Acts of 1861 and 1869, and, in conjunction with Mr. Ringwood, an edition of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

HAZLITT, William Carew, born Aug. 22, 1834, the eldest son of Mr. William Hazlitt, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, entered the Inner Temple as a student in 1859, and was called to the Bar in Nov., 1861. Mr. Hazlitt is the author of "The History of the Venetian Republic: her Rise, her Greatness, and her Civilization," 4 vols., 1860. The first draft of this work appeared in a smaller form in 1857. Mr. Hazlitt has also written a novel, "Sophy Laurie," 3 vols., 1865. Among the works edited by him are the poems of Henry Constable, 1859; Richard Lovelace, 1864; and Robert Herrick, 1869, 2 vols.; "Old English Jest-Books," 3 vols., 1864; "Remains of the Early Popular Poetry of England," 4 vols., 1864-6; "The Works of Charles Lamb" (anonymous), 4 vols., 1866-71; "Memoirs of William Hazlitt," 1778-1830, 2 vols., 1867; "Bibliography of Old English Literature," 1867; "English Proverbs and Proverbial Phrases, with Notes," 1869; "Popular Antiquities of Great Britain" (based on Brand and Ellis). 3 vols., 1870; an entirely new edition of Warton's "History of English Poetry," 4 vols., 1871, in which last work he had the co-operation of several eminent antiquaries; an edition of Blount's "Tenures of Land and Customs of Manors," 1874; and "Mary and Charles Lamb: Poems, Letters, and Remains; now first collected, with Reminiscences and Notes," 1874; "The Poems and other Remains of Sir John Suckling," 1874; "Dodsley's Old Plays," 15 vols., 1874-6; "Fairy Tales, Legends, and Romances, illustrating Shakespere and other Early English Writers," "Shakespere's Library," 6 vols., and the "Works of Thomas Randolph," 1875; "Fugitive Tracks (written in verse) which illustrate the Condition of Religious and Political Feeling in England, and the State of Society there, during two centuries, 1493-1700," 2 vols., 1875; "Bibliographical Collections and Notes," 2 series, 1876-82; "Ritson's Ancient Songs and Ballads," 1877; "Poetical Recreations," "The Baron's Daughter, a Ballad," and "Essays of Montaigne," 3 vols., 1877; "Essays and Criticisms on the Fine Arts, by Thomas Griffiths Wainwright," and "Catalogue of the Huth Library," 5 vols., 1880.

HEAD, Barclay Vincent, D.C.L., Ph.D., was born at Ipswich in 1844, and educated at Queen Elizabeth's School in that town. He entered the British Museum in 1864, as Assistant in the Department of Coins and Medals. In 1868 he accepted the Hon. Secretaryship of the Numismatic Society of London, and the joint-editorship (with Dr. John Evans) of the Numismatic Chronicle. In 1871, on the resignation of Mr. W. S. W. Vaux, lately the Keeper of Coins, he was appointed Assistant-Keeper of the Coin Department in the British Museum, and shortly after this was chosen a Corresponding Member of the Imperial German Archæological Institute. Mr. Head has made a special study of the origin and development of the art of coinage among the ancient Greeks, and he was the first to methodize the science of Greek Numismatics by introducing a strict chronological system of classification throughout the various series of Greek coins in the National Collection, in place of the now obsolete system of arrangement according to metals. His first work on this subject, "History of the Coinage of Syracuse," 1874, was couronné by the French Institute, an honour which was on three subsequent occasions again conferred upon him for his "Coinage of Lydia and Persia," 1877; his "History of the Coinage of Boeotia," 1881; and his "Guide to the Principal Gold and Silver Coins of the Ancients," 1881. Mr. Head's most important work, entitled "Historia Numorum," published in 1887, is a complete illustrated historical manual of the whole science of Greek Numismatics, which will probably long remain the standard textbook on the subject. The publication of this work gained for the author the honorary degrees of D.C.L. (Durham), and Ph.D. (Heidelberg). Among Mr. Head's other works may be mentioned his volumes of the Catalogue of Greek Coins in the British Museum, comprising the "Coinage of Macedon," 1875; of "Central Greece," 1884; of "Attica, Megaris, and Aegina," 1888; and of "Corinth and the Corinthian Colonies," 1889; his "Ancient Systems of Weight," 1879; his "Young Collector's Handbook of Greek and Roman Coins," 1883; and his numerous contributions to the pages of the Numismatic Chronicle.

HEALY, Timothy Michael, M.P. for North Longford, born May 17, 1855, at Bantry, co. Cork, was educated at the Christian Brothers' School, Fermoy. In Oct., 1880, he was arrested for a speech at Bantry and indicted under the White-boy Acts; and the following month was elected unopposed for Wexford Borough; and in Dec. was tried and acquitted. During the passing of the Land Act in 1881, he carried several important amendments to that measure, the "Healy Clause" enacting that no rent shall be allowed to the landlord on the tenant's improvements. In Nov., 1881, he attended, with Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., the Land League Convention of America, at Chicago, which voted £50,000 to assist the Irish movement. He returned to London in March, 1882, having spoken for the League in all the principal American cities. In Jan., 1883, he was cited before the Queen's Bench, Dublin, for a public speech, and having refused to give bail to be of good behaviour, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment, but released at the end of four months. In June, 1883, he resigned his seat for Wexford, and was elected for North Monaghan. In Nov., 1884, he was called to the Irish Bar. Mr. Healy published in 1881 some works on the Land Act, and afterwards two pamphlets "Loyalty plus Murder," an exposure of Orange methods, and "A Word for Ireland," being a history of the Irish Land Question. In Nov., 1885, he was re-elected for North Monaghan and also for South Derry, and sat for the latter after the rejection of the Home Rule Bill. He was defeated in South Derry in July, 1886, but in Feb., 1887, was re-elected, for North Longford. He was one of the "accused persons" charged before the Special Commission, 1888-90. He married in 1882, Emma Kate, daughter of T. D. Sullivan, M.P.

HEATH, Christopher, F.R.C.S., was born in London, in 1835, and educated at King's College, London. He was appointed Assistant-Surgeon and Lecturer on Anatomy at the Westminster Hospital in 1862; Assistant-Surgeon and Teacher of Operative Surgery at University College Hospital in 1866; Holme Professor of Clinical Surgery, and Surgeon to University College Hospital in 1875; Fellow of King's College; and Member of Council of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1881, and of the Court of Examiners in 1883; and Consulting Surgeon to the Dental Hospital. He was Examiner in Anatomy at the Royal College of Surgeons in 1875-80; and Examiner for Surgical Degrees at the Universities of Cambridge, Durham, and London, and at the Royal College of Physicians, and President of the Clinical Society of London, 1889-91. He is the author of "A Course of Operative Surgery," illustrated, 2nd edit., 1884; "Manual of Minor Surgery," 9th edit., 1889; "Practical Anatomy," 7th edit., 1888; "Injuries and Diseases of the Jaws" (Jacksonian Prize Essay), 3rd edit., 1884; "Student's Guide to Surgical Diagnosis," 2nd edit., 1883; editor of "A Dictionary of Practical Surgery," by various British Hospital Surgeons, 1886, and various contributions to the transactions of learned societies.

HEATH, Francis George, was born at Totnes, Devonshire, Jan. 15, 1843, and educated at Taunton. When very young he began to write the "Autobiographies of Animals." In 1862 he entered the Civil Service, securing the eighth place in a competition of sixty candidates for twenty appointments. For many years he has taken an active part in promoting and supporting movements for the preservation and extension of open spaces, chiefly in the metropolis. It was mainly owing to his efforts that the enlargement of Victoria Park was effected in 1872. He also laboured assiduously, from 1872 to 1878, in furtherance of the movement for the preservation of Epping Forest, and the unique bit of woodland known as Burnham Beeches, which was, in 1879, rescued by the Corporation of London upon his suggestion. In 1880 he succeeded in defeating the attempt made jointly by the Corporation and the Great Eastern Railway Company to disfigure Epping Forest by the construction of the Chingford and High Beech Railway. When, in 1872, the "strike" of agricultural labourers took place in Warwickshire, Mr. Heath undertook a tour of inquiry amongst the peasant population of the West of England; the result being the production of his first book, "The 'Romance' of Peasant Life," which rapidly passed into a second edition, and was followed, in 1874, by "The English Peasantry." In 1875, Mr. Heath, with the object of promoting the importation of some of the "green life" of the country into the drearier parts of dismal town centres, published "The Fern Paradise: a plea for the Culture of Ferns." A larger volume, "The Fern World," appeared in August, 1877, and reached a fourth edition before the end of that year. This was followed in 1878 by an illustrated edition of "The Fern Paradise," and by "Our Woodland Trees." In 1879 Mr. Heath published a little book called "Burnham Beeches," and a new edition of Gilpin's "Forest Scenery." In 1880 he produced a volume under the title of "Sylvan Spring." In the same year appeared "Peasant Life in the West of England," "My Garden Wild" was produced in 1881, and was followed by "Where to Find Ferns," and "Autumnal Leaves." Mr. Heath accepted the editorship of the Journal of Forestry in June, 1882, but relinquished it in Oct., 1884, on the change of proprietorship of the journal. In 1885 he published "The Fern Portfolio," a volume containing life-sized coloured plates with brief letterpress descriptions of all the British Ferns. In the same year he issued a collection of miscellaneous writings on sylvan subjects under the title of "Tree Gossip," and a more elaborate work called "Sylvan Winter." In February, 1886, Mr. Heath founded a monthly magazine on novel and original lines under the title of "Illustrations," a periodical which he still conducts. In 1890, he was returned at the head of the poll in a contest for an honorary Directorship of the Customs Fund, and commenced an active movement for the Establishment in this country of a "Letter Express."

HEATON, John Henniker, M.P., direct descendant of the Heatons of Heaton, co. Lancaster, is the eldest son of Lieut.-Colonel Heaton, R.E. He was born at Rochester, on May 18, 1848, and educated at Kent House Grammar School and at King's College, London. At the age of sixteen he emigrated to Australia, where he took to pastoral pursuits with varying fortune, and also became connected with the press, and acquired an interest in the most successful newspapers in New South Wales. He has always been most prominent in all public and philanthropic works in the Australasian colonies; he represented the Government of New South Wales, at the Amsterdam Exhibition, in 1883; was appointed by the Government of Tasmania to represent that colony at the Berlin International Telegraphic Conference, in 1885, and succeeded in getting a very large reduction made in the cost of cable messages to Australia; he was elected M.P. for Canterbury, England, at the general election in Nov., 1885; and was re-elected unopposed in the following year. He was appointed Commissioner for the Government of New South Wales to the Indian and Colonial Exhibition in London in 1886. Mr. Heaton is the author of the standard work of reference on Australia, called "The Australian Dictionary of Dates and Men of the Time;" of a work on "The Manners, Customs, Traditions, and Annihilation of the Aborigines of Australia;" also of "A Short Account of a Canonization at Rome, from an Unsectarian Point of View." In Parliament, he is a strong advocate, and first introduced a proposal for a Universal International Penny Postage System, and Cheap Imperial Telegraphs. Owing to his indefatigable exertions, the postage to India and to the principal colonies was, on Jan. 1, 1891, reduced to half the former rates.

HÉBERT, Antoine Auguste Ernest, artist, born in 1817, went to Paris in 1835, and studied in the studio of David d'Angers. In 1839 he exhibited at the Louvre his "Tasso in Prison," which was bought by the Government for the Musée of Grenoble. Aided by the advice and kindness of M. Paul Delaroche, he competed, in 1839, at the École des Beaux-Arts, and shortly after gained the great Prize of Rome; the subject of his picture was "The Cup found in the Sack of Benjamin." He remained in Italy eight years, and sent various paintings and sketches to Paris. After his return, M. Hébert exhibited, amongst other works, "Rêverie Orientale;" and gained a high reputation as a colourist, and for the originality of his designs. After another journey to Italy, and a visit to Dresden, M. Hébert produced a portrait of "David d'Angers," in 1867; "La Pastorella," and "La Lavandara," in 1869; "Le Matin et le Soir de la Vie," and "La Muse populaire Italienne," in 1870; "La Madonna Addolorata," and "La Tricoteuse," in 1873; "La Muse des Bois," in 1877; and "La Sultane," in 1879. He was director of the Academy of France at Rome, from Dec., 1866, to 1873, and in 1874 he was elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts. M. Hébert obtained a first-class Medal in 1851, another in 1855, the decoration of the Legion of Honour in July, 1853, the rank of Officer of that order in Aug., 1867, and the rank of Commander in 1874.

HEFELE, Karl Joseph von, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Rottenberg, a distinguished German ecclesiastical historian, born March 15, 1809, at Unterkochen, in Würtemberg, district of Aalen, received a public school education at Ellwangen and Ehingen; and then applied himself for five years at the University of Tübingen to philosophical and theological studies, and graduated there in 1834. In 1836 he settled as a private tutor, and in 1840 received a professorship in the Catholic theological faculty at Tübingen, where he represented the departments of Church history, Christian archaeology and patrology. In 1838 he became Doctor of Divinity, and afterwards Knight of the Order of the Würtemberg Crown. From 1842 to 1845 he was a member of the Würtemberg Chamber of Deputies. He was consecrated Bishop of Rottenberg in 1869, and shortly afterwards proceeded to Rome to take part in the proceedings of the Vatican Council. It was reported that he was an "inopportunist;" but however that may have been, he has given in his entire adhesion to the definition of the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope. In Oct., 1874, he declined the archbishopric of Freiburg offered to him by the Baden Government, on the ground that he could not take the oath which was demanded from the bishops in Prussia and Baden, and could not promise obedience to the newly promulgated ecclesiastical laws. His most important work of research is the "History of Councils" (published in parts at Tübingen, 1855-69), based on the most profound study of original materials. It has been translated into English by the Rev. Wm. R. Clark, M.A., vicar of Taunton, under the title of "A History of the Christian Councils, from the Original Documents, to the Close of the Council of Nicæa, A.D. 325," 8vo, Edinburgh, 1871. Among Bishop Hefeles other works are especially to be noticed: "The Introduction of Christianity into South-Western Germany," Tübingen, 1837; "Cardinal Ximenes and the Ecclesiastical Condition of Spain in the 15th Century," 2nd edit., Tübingen, 1851; and "Contributions to Church History, Archæology, and Liturgy," in two parts, Tübingen, 1864-65. He has also published a Selection of the Homilies of St. Chrysostom, in a German translation, "Chrysostomus - Postille," 3rd edit., Tübingen, 1857, and an edition of the works of the Apostolic Fathers, 4th edit., Tübingen, 1855. An English translation, by the Rev. Canon Dalton, of his "Life of Cardinal Ximenes" appeared in London in 1860.

HEFNER-ALTENECK, Jacob Heinrich von, a German writer on art, was born at Aschaffenburg, May 20, 1811; went through a complete course of artistic education, and then devoted himself to the diligent study of the history of art, particularly during the mediæval period. In 1853 he became Conservator of the Royal Vereinigten Sammlungen at Munich; Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Sciences (1855); Honourable Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Arts; and in 1863 he was appointed Conservator of the royal collection of prints and drawings. In 1868 he was nominated Conservator-General of the artistic monuments of Bavaria, and Director of the Bavarian National Museum. Among his publications may be mentioned:—"Trachten des christlichen Mittelalters nach gleichzeitigen Kunstdenkmälern," 1840-54; "Kunstwerke und Geräthschaften des Mittelalters und der Renaissance," 1848-55; "Hans Burgkmair's Turnierbuch. HELLMUTH, The Right Rev. Isaac, D.D., D.C.L., was born in Poland, and is of Jewish extraction. Having been converted to Christianity and ordained in the Anglican Church, he settled in Canada about 1856. By his energy Huron College was established for the education of the future clergy of the diocese. A few months afterwards the London Collegiate School, since named Hellmuth College, was erected. Meanwhile Dr. Hellmuth had been appointed successively Archdeacon and Dean of Huron. Finding that the boys' college (Hellmuth College) was a perfect success, he proceeded to establish a similar college for ladies, which was opened in 1869. On Aug. 24, 1870, he was consecrated Coadjutor-Bishop of Huron, with the title of Bishop of Norfolk, in the Cathedral of St. Paul, London, Canada West. In 1871, on the death of Bishop Cronyn, Dr. Hellmuth succeeded him in the See of Huron. He resigned that See and came to England in 1833, on being appointed Assistant Bishop in the diocese of Ripon.

HELMHOLTZ, Professor Hermann Ludwig Ferdinand, a distinguished German physiologist and natural philosopher, is the son of a Professor in the gymnasium of Potsdam, in which town he was born, Aug. 31, 1821. After studying medicine in the military institute at Berlin, and being attached for a time to the Staff of one of the public hospitals there, he returned to his native town as an army surgeon. In 1848 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy in the Academy of Fine Arts at Berlin; in 1855 Professor of Physiology at Königsberg, whence he removed, in 1858, to Heidelberg, where he also filled the chair of physiology. He was afterwards appointed Professor of Physiology at Berlin. The works of Prof. Helmholtz, which are well known throughout Europe, have reference principally to the physiological conditions of the impressions on the senses. Among those most deserving of notice are:—"On the Preservation of Forces," 1847; "Manual of Physiological Optics," 1856; and "Theory of the Impressions of Sound," 1862. His "Popular Lectures on Scientific Subjects," translated into English by Dr. E. Atkinson, were published in London in 1873, 2nd series, 1881; and his work on "Sensations of Tone, as a Physiological Basis for the Theory of Music," translated from the third German edition by the late Mr. Alexander J. Ellis, appeared in 1875. Professor Helmholtz has also contributed to scientific journals accounts of many of his experiments in acoustics, optics, and electricity. More than 120 scientific papers of his have been read before the Royal Society; and on Dec. 1, 1873, the Copley medal of the Royal Society of London was awarded to him in recognition of his eminent services to science; and in 1883 the German Emperor issued a decree by which he was raised to "the status of nobility."

HELY-HUTCHINSON, The Hon. Sir Walter Francis, K.C.M.G., Governor of the Windward Islands, second son of Richard John, fourth Earl of Donoughmore and Thomasine Jocelyn, his wife, daughter of Walter Steele, of Mognalty, was born in Dublin, Aug. 22, 1849, and educated at Cheane School, Surrey, Harvard, and Cambridge; B.A. Cambridge; Barrister of the Inner Temple 1877. He was Private Secretary to Sir Hercules Robinson, Governor of New South Wales; for Fiji, 1874; for New South Wales, 1875; and was Colonial Secretary of Barbadoes, 1877; Chief Secretary to the Government of Malta, 1883; Lieut.-Governor of Malta, 1884; and Governor of the Windward Islands, 1889; C.M.G., 1883; K.C.M.G., 1888.

HEMSLEY, William Botting, F.R.S., botanist, was born Dec. 29, 1843, at East Hoathley, in the county of Sussex. His father was a gardener and had a large family, and, in consequence of very straitened circumstances during the hard times of the war with Russia, the son was removed from school at the early age of ten years to earn something towards the general support of the family. In 1857 the father undertook the management of a nursery garden at Heathfield, in the same county; and it was there that William, removed from all old associates, first imbibed a taste for botany, and spent most of his little leisure time in studying the wild plants of the neighbourhood. In 1859 the father obtained a more advantageous post at Hassock's Gate. Shortly after, an accident that befel one of William's younger brothers was the means of bringing William under the notice of Mrs. Eardley Hall, a daughter of Mr. William Borrer, a well-known botanist. Through her influence with Sir William Hooker, young Hemsley entered the Kew Herbarium on probation in 1860; and in 1863 he received a regular appointment. In 1867 he broke down in health and was compelled to resign; but after many vicissitudes he returned to Kew again in 1874. Through the assistance of the authorities at Kew, Hemsley soon obtained congenial employment, and he has been actively engaged in botanical work ever since. He is the author of numerous contributions to botanical science, including translations and summaries from various languages; but his principal works are the botany of the "Challenger Expedition," dealing with Insular Floras, the Botany of Salvin, and Godman's magnificent "Biologia Centrali-Americana;" the Botany of Afghanistan, in conjunction with Dr. Aitchison; and the "Index Floræ Sinensis," which is still in progress. In 1875 Mr. Hemsley was elected an Associate of the Linnean Society of London, and in the same year he was appointed Lindley Librarian to the Royal Horticultural Society. In 1876 he was appointed Lecturer on Botany at St. Mary's Hospital, a post he soon resigned. In 1883 he was appointed Assistant for India in the Kew Herbarium, and in 1890 he was promoted to the post of Principal Assistant. His latest work, in conjunction with Colonel Collett, on the Flora of the Shan Hills, Upper Burmah, was published in the Journal of the Linnean Society. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in 1889.

HENDERSON, Lieut.-Col. Sir Edmund Yeamans Walcott, K.C.B., son of Rear-Admiral George Henderson, was born about 1820. Having passed through the ordinary course at Woolwich, he entered the army in 1838, became Lieut.-Col. Royal Engineers in 1862, was for many years Controller of the Convict Department in Western Australia; and was appointed in 1863 to the offices of Surveyor-General of Prisons and Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons. He was created a Companion of the Bath Dec. 7, 1868, and appointed on Feb. 12, 1869, Chief Commissioner of Police of the metropolis, in the room of Sir Richard Mayne, deceased. In March, 1878, he was created a K.C.B. Sir Edmund Henderson resigned the post of Chief Commissioner of Police in the early part of 1886, and was succeeded by Sir Charles Warren.

HENEAGE, The Right Hon. Edward, M.P., eldest son of the late George Fieschi Heneage, Esq., of an ancient Lincolnshire family, was born in London, March 29, 1840, and educated at Eton. He accepted a commission in the 1st Life Guards in 1857, but left after six years' service, on succeeding to the family estates. In 1865 Mr. Heneage was returned as a Liberal for Lincoln; he unsuccessfully contested Great Grimsby in 1874, but gained the seat in 1880, and was again returned in 1885 and 1886. He has always been conspicuous among Liberal members for his great interest in agricultural and sea-fishery questions; and it was probably for this reason that, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1885, he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, with the Vice-Presidency and charge of agricultural interests, a post which he resigned in April, 1886, on account of disagreement with Mr. Gladstone's Irish Bill. Mr. Heneage is High Steward of the Borough of Grimsby, and a Board of Trade Commissioner of the Humber Conservancy. He married, in 1864, Lady Eleanor Cecilia, daughter of the late Lord Listowel.

HENNER, Jean Jacques, a French painter, born at Bernwiller, Alsace, March 5, 1829, was a pupil of Drölling and Picot, and in 1848 entered the École des Beaux-Arts. At the end of two years, ill-health compelled him to return home; but he was re-admitted in 1858, and gained a prize for his "Adam et Eve retrouvant le corps d'Abel." After this he went to Rome, studied under Hipp, and painted four pictures for the Musée de Colmar, one of which, "Jeune baigneur endormi," was exhibited at the Salon of 1863, together with a fine portrait of Victor Schnetz. "La Chaste Suzanne," 1865, was purchased by the Government, and is now in the Luxembourg. "Alsacienne," 1870, one of his best-known pictures, was presented, in 1872, to M. Gambetta by a committee of Alsatian ladies. His later works are: "Madeleine dans le Désert," and "Le bon Samaritain," 1874; "Le Christ Mort," 1878; "Eglogue" and "Jésus au Tombeau," 1879; "Saint Jérôme," 1881; and "Herodiade," 1887. M. Henner has obtained numerous medals at the Salon; was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1873; and was made an Officer in 1878.

HENNESSY, Professor Henry G., F.R.S., M.R.I.A., was born on March 19, 1826, in Cork, where he received an excellent school training in mathematics and languages; but the disabilities regarding higher education for those who were not members of the lately disestablished Church of Ireland prevented him from entering the University. He had thus to pursue the study of the higher parts of mathematics unaided, and at such intervals as his professional work as an assistant engineer permitted. In 1851 his "Researches on Terrestrial Physics" appeared in the Transactions of the Royal Society, and in this memoir, as well as others communicated to the Institute of France and to the Royal Irish Academy during subsequent years, he has investigated several questions regarding the figure and structure of the earth and planets. From the first he held to the view of the fluid origin of these bodies, and he has always maintained that all the facts regarding the earth which come under our notice are best explained by the existence of fluid matter at a high temperature enclosed within its crust. He has also written papers on Climatology, which have appeared in various publications, including those of the bodies above mentioned. He claims to have proved laws of temperature distribution in islands, and to have deduced consequences of general application from the physical properties of water. In 1855, on the invitation of Cardinal Newman, he became Professor of Physics in the Roman Catholic University of Ireland; and in 1874 he was appointed by the Duke of Richmond to the Professorship of Applied Mathematics in the Royal College of Science. In this office he occupied himself with inquiries in Hydraulics and Mechanism, some of which have appeared in the publications of the Royal Society. He has taken an active part in the question of uniformity of weights and measures, and proposed the polar decimal system afterwards advocated by Sir John Herschel. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, a Member of the Royal Irish Academy, and Honorary Member of other bodies.

HENNESSY, Sir John Pope, K.C.M.G., M.P., Knight of Malta, is the son of Mr. John Hennessy, of Ballyhennessy, co. Kerry, by Eliabeth, daughter of Mr. Henry Casey, of Cork. He was born in Cork in 1834, educated at Queen's College, Cork, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1861. He entered the House of Commons as member for the King's County in 1859. He received the thanks of the Roman Catholic Committee of England for the Prison Ministers Act, and an address of thanks from the miners of Great Britain for some amendments he secured in the Mines Regulation Bill. Mr. Hennessy drew the attention of the House of Commons to the decline of the population of Ireland, and urged the Government to keep the people at home by amending the Irish land laws and reclaiming the waste lands. He opposed the Government system of education in Ireland, on the ground that the so-called National system was anti-National. He voted for Church-rates, and in favour of the Church of England in England, but supported concurrent endowment in Ireland, by which the Irish ecclesiastical property founded before the Reformation would be restored to the Roman Catholic Church, and some ancient abbeys in Ireland revived. He was appointed Governor of Labuan, in 1867; of the West African settlements, in 1872; of the Bahamas, in 1873; of the Windward Islands, in 1875; of Hongkong, in 1877; and of the colony of Mauritius, in Dec., 1882. On more than one occasion 'his conduct as Governor has provoked remonstrances, the last instance being his disagreement with Mr. Clifford Lloyd, which led to questions in Parliament, and the despatch of Sir Hercules Robinson to Mauritius to investigate the quarrel. This resulted in Sir John Pope Hennessy's return to London, when he laid the matter before the Secretary of State, and was restored to his office for the remainder of his term. Subsequently he was congratulated in a public despatch by the Secretary of State on his successful administration of Mauritius; and, on his retirement, was awarded the full pension payable to a Colonial Governor. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George, in April, 1880. He contributed papers to the "Proceedings" of the Royal Society and to the Reports of the British Association; also to the Philosophical Magazine, the Contemporary Review, the Nineteenth Century, and Subjects of the Day; and he published, in 1883, a volume on "Raleigh in Ireland, with his Letters on Irish Affairs, and some contemporary Documents." He has been Hon. Secretary to the Mathematical Section of the British Association; and Chairman of the Repression of Crime Section of the Social Science Congress. Sir John Pope Hennessy, immediately after the exposure of Mr. Parnell's adultery, in Dec., 1890, contested the North Kilkenny election, and beat the Parnellite candidate by 1,147 votes—an excess of almost two to one. Sir John Pope Hennessy married Catharine, daughter of Sir H. Low.

HENRICI, Olaus, Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S., was born March 9, 1840, at Meldorf, in Holstein, and received his early education in the gymnasium of his native town. In 1856 he left Meldorf in order to study for some years in the workshops of a mechanical engineer. In 1859 he proceeded to the Polytechnic School in Karlsruhe, where he remained until 1862, where he entered the University of Heidelberg. Here, in 1863, he graduated with special honours as Ph.D. Dr. Henrici next proceeded to Berlin in order there to prosecute his mathematical studies. In 1865 he became tutor in the University of Kiel, but left soon afterwards for London. In 1869 Dr. Henrici was appointed Professor of Pure Mathematics in the University College, London; and, in 1884, Professor of Mechanics and Mathematics in the Central Institution of the City Guilds of the London Institute. In 1868 he was elected a Member, and in 1883 President of the London Mathematical Society. The learned Professor is the author of the following papers: "Bemerkung zu 'Hesse' Zerlegung der Bedingung für die Gleichheit der Hauptaxen eines auf einer Oberfläche zweiter Ordnung liegenden Kegelschnittes" (in Crelle's Journal, vol. lxiv., 1864); "Transformation von Differential-ausdrücken erster Ordnung zweiten Grades mit Hülfe der verallgemeinerten elliptischen Co-ordinaten" (Crelle's Journal, vol. lxx., 1865); "On certain Formulæ concerning the Theory of Discriminants; with Applications to Discriminants of Discr., and to the Theory of Polar Curves" (in the "Proceedings" of the London Mathem. Society, vol. ii., read in Nov., 1868); and "On Series of Curves, especially on the Singularities of their Envelopes: with Applications to Polar Curves," also in the "Proceedings" of the London Mathematical Society, vol. ii.

HENRY of Battenberg (Prince), son of Prince Alexander of Hesse and of the Rhine, was born on Oct. 5, 1858, and on July 23, 1885, married H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice, born April 14, 1857, and has two sons and a daughter. His Royal Highness (a title conferred upon him on his marriage), is Governor of the Isle of Wight, and of Carisbrook Castle.

HENTY, George Alfred, was born at Trumpington, Cambridgeshire, Dec. 8, 1832, and educated at Westminster School and at Caius College, Cambridge. He left Cambridge to go out to the Crimea in the Purveyor's Department. Returning invalided, he was promoted to the rank of Purveyor to the Forces, and was sent out to Italy to organize the hospitals of the Italian legion. At the end of the war he returned home, and had charge first of the Belfast, and afterwards of the Portsmouth, districts. He resigned his commission, and for several years was occupied in mining operations in Wales, Italy, &c. Then he went upon the staff of the Standard newspaper. As a special correspondent of that journal he witnessed the Italo-Austrian war; was with Garibaldi in his campaigns in the Tyrol; at the opening of the Suez Canal; with the Abyssinian Expedition to Magdala, and the Ashantee Expedition to Coomassie. He also went through the Franco-German war, and the Communal Siege of Paris, and was likewise out in the Carlist Insurrection. He went to Russia for the Standard at the time of the Khiva Expedition, and on his return visited the mining regions of the United States, in California, Nevada, Utah, and on Lake Superior. He accompanied the Prince of Wales in his tour through India, and was with the Turkish army in the Turko-Persian war. Mr. Henty is the author of "A Search for a Secret," "All But Lost," "The March to Magdala," "The March to Coomassie," "Out on the Pampas," "The Young Franc-Tireurs," "The Young Colonist," and a number of other books for boys, chiefly of an historical character. He is editor of the boy's paper, the Union Jack.

HEREFORD, Bishop of. See ATLAY, THE RT. REV. JAMES.

HERKOMER, Hubert, R.A., was born in 1849, at Waal, in Bavaria. His father, Lorenzo Herkomer, who is a skilful wood-carver, emigrated with his family, in 1851, to the United States, but in 1857 sought to improve his fortunes in England, and settled in Southampton. As a boy, Hubert was hindered much in his education by ill health and poverty; but at thirteen he entered the Art School at Southampton, and won a bronze medal there. In 1865 he went to Munich with his father (who had been commissioned to carve copies of figures by Peter Vischer), and while there the young artist was aided in his studies by Professor Echter. In 1866 he entered the schools at South Kensington, but after five months was obliged to return to Southampton, where he was instrumental in establishing a drawing-school for the study of the living model; and at Christmas in that year he and the young artists associated with him held an exhibition of their works, in which he sold his first picture. In 1867 he went again to South Kensington for a few months, and in the following year he established himself in the village of Hythe, and there painted two pictures, which he exhibited at the Dudley gallery (1868). He then came to London, and occupied himself successfully with water-colour painting and designing for the wood engravers. In 1871 Mr. Herkomer was invited to join the Institute of Painters in Water Colours; and to the gallery of this Society, and subsequently to the Grosvenor and the Academy Exhibitions, he has contributed many drawings, chiefly of Bavarian subjects, and latterly some with figures or portraits about the scale of Nature. The oil picture, "After the Toil of the Day," in the Academy Exhibition of 1873, extended his reputation and prepared the way for "The Last Muster," 1875, the memorable picture of Chelsea pensioners, which, after appearing in the Lecture Room at Burlington House in 1875, figured at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, and was there awarded one of the two grand Medals of honour carried off by the English school. Subsequently the artist turned his attention to etching and other branches of practice. His later pictures, exhibited at the Royal Academy, are:—"At Death's Door," 1876, a picture of peasants of the Bavarian Alps in prayer, awaiting the arrival of the priest who is to administer the last sacraments of the Church to a member of the family; "Der Bittgang," peasants praying for a successful harvest, 1877; "Eventide: a Scene in the Westminster Union," "A Welshwoman," and "Souvenir de Rembrandt," 1878; "Relating his Adventure," 1879; "God's Shrine," "Grandfather's Pet," "Two Sides of a Question," and "Wind-swept," 1880; "Missing," a scene at the Portsmouth dock-yard gates after the loss of the Atalanta, 1881; "Homeward," 1882; and "Natural Enemies," 1883. In 1888 he painted a portrait of Mrs. Gladstone, which was presented to her on the occasion of her golden wedding. In 1889 he exhibited "The Chapel of the Charterhouse;" and it was purchased out of the funds of the charity bequest. Mr. Herkomer was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, June 19, 1879; and in the same year he was elected an honorary member of the Imperial Academy of Vienna. In Sept., 1881, he received from the Illochstiftung of Frankfurt-on-Main a diploma of membership and mastership of the Institute; and in 1886, at the Berlin Exhibition, one of the "Great gold medals" for art. He has founded a school of art at Bushey, Herts. He was created an officer of the Legion of Honour for his services in connection with the Paris Exhibition in 1889. The honour of Royal Academician was conferred on him in 1890.

HERMITE, Professor Charles, was born at Dieuze (Lorraine), and studied first at Nancy, and then at Paris. He is a distinguished mathematician, Professor of Higher Algebra at the Sorbonne, and Honorary Professor at the École Polytechnique. His publications are chiefly in the scientific and mathematical journals of France and other countries; and deal with the theory of numbers, the theory of algebraical forms, elliptic functions, &c.

Prof. Hermite is Foreign Member of the Royal Society, and of the Mathematical Society of London; of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; the Royal Irish Academy; and of the Academies of Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Munich, Naples, and Stockholm. He is also Member of the Royal Academy, and of the Pontifical Academy of the Nuovi Lincei at Rome, and is Commander of the Legion of Honour, and Knight or Commander of other orders.

HERSCHELL, The Right Hon. Farrer, P.C., created Baron in 1866, when he became Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, during Mr. Gladstone's administration. He is the son of the Rev. R. H. Herschell, and was born in 1837; educated at University College, London, and at Bonn (B.A. London University, 1867); was called to the Bar in 1860, and became Q.C. and Bencher of Lincoln's Inn in 1872. He represented Durham in the Liberal interest from 1874 to 1885; was knighted and made Solicitor-General in Mr. Gladstone's ministry in 1880, and in 1886 was raised to the peerage and became Lord High Chancellor. He took part in the Round Table Conference on Home Rule, the first meeting of which was held in his house. On the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the Metropolitan Board of Works. Lord Herschell was unanimously elected President. In 1888, during his absence in India, he was elected Alderman on the County Council, but declined to fill the office.

HERTSLET, Sir Edward, C.B., son of the late Lewis Hertslet, Esq., who for fifty-seven years was sub-librarian and afterwards librarian and keeper of the papers of the Foreign Office, was born in Westminster, Feb. 3, 1824, and educated at private schools. He entered the Foreign Office March 23, 1840, and was promoted to be sub-librarian April 1, 1855; and librarian and keeper of the papers Nov. 19, 1857; was elected F.R.G.S., Jan. 11, 1858. He is the author of "Hertslet's Commercial Treaties," a work in 16 vols., which was begun by his father in 1820; the "British and Foreign State Papers," a work in 69 vols., also begun by his father in 1825, and compiled for the use of Her Majesty's Government; "The Map of Europe by Treaty," a work in 3 vols., showing the various political and territorial changes which took place in Europe between 1814 and 1875, with numerous maps; "Analyses of Treaties and Tariffs regulating the Trade between Great Britain and various Foreign Powers," in 6 vols.; and the "Foreign Office List," forming a complete diplomatic and consular handbook, which has been published annually since 1852. He was made a Companion of the Bath Feb. 21, 1874, and was attached to the special embassy of the late Earl of Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury to the Congress of Berlin in June and July, 1878, with a Royal commission as acting secretary of Embassy in Her Majesty's diplomatic service; and was knighted by Her Majesty July 30, 1878, in recognition of his services in Berlin.

HERVÉ, Aimé Marie Edouard, a French journalist, born May 28, 1835, at Saint-Denis, in the island of Réunion, is the son of a Professor of mathematics in the college of that town, where he began his studies, which he terminated in a particularly brilliant manner in Paris at the Collège Napoléon. In 1854 he entered the Normal School, being the first on the list for promotion in the department of literature; but he sent in his resignation shortly afterwards in order that he might devote his undivided attention to journalism. He was connected first of all with the Revue de l'Instruction Publique, and the Revue Contemporaine, to which he contributed (1860) the political summary; and he then became editor of the Courrier de Dimanche (1863), of the Temps (1864), and of the Epoque (1865). The hostility of the Government having rendered it almost impossible to continue his connection with a French newspaper, he transferred his services to the Journal de Genève, of which he became one of the principal correspondents. After the publication of the Imperial letter of Jan. 19, 1867, inaugurating a new system for the press, M. Hervé established in conjunction with M. Jean Jacques Weiss, the Journal de Paris (1867), which became noted for its persistent attacks on the Imperial régime. At the general election of May, 1869, M. Hervé came forward, in the circumscription of Arras, as the candidate of the Liberal opposition, under the patronage of M. Thiers, but he was defeated at the poll by the official candidate, M. Sens. M. Weiss having retired from the strife of political journalism, on being nominated general secretary of the Ministry of Fine Arts, M. Hervé remained sole editor of the Journal de Paris, and on Feb. 5, 1873, he started the Soleil, a large political halfpenny newspaper, which at the outset was merely an offshoot of the Journal de Paris, and conducted by the same literary staff. After the visit of the Comte de Paris to Frohsdorff which preceded the attempt to re-establish the ancient monarchy, M. Hervé proclaimed loudly "the reconciliation of the House of France," and engaged, with reference to this subject, in an animated controversy with M. Edmond About, the editor of the Dix-Neuvième Siècle. This dispute ended in a duel, in which M. About was slightly wounded. After the proclamation of the Septennate, M. Hervé supported the policy of the Broglie, Cussy, and Buffet Cabinets. On April 28, 1876, M. Hervé announced to the readers of the Journal de Paris the discontinuance of that journal, after nine years of a stormy existence; and since then he has remained editor of the Soleil. He has published in book form, under the title of "Une Page d'Histoire Contemporaine," 1869, a series of articles on the elections in England, and the leading statesmen of this country.

HERVEY, The Hon. and Right Rev. Lord Arthur Charles, D.D., Bishop of Bath and Wells, fourth son of Frederick William, fifth Earl and first Marquis of Bristol, and uncle to the present Marquis, was born Aug. 20, 1808, and educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A. in 1830, being placed sixth in the first class in classics. Having held a country curacy for a year, he was, in 1832, appointed rector of Ickworth, Suffolk, a living in the gift of his father, to which was added, in 1833, the adjacent living of Horningsheath, in the same patronage. In 1862 he was promoted to the Archdeaconry of Sudbury; and in Nov. 1869 he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, to the bishopric of Bath and Wells, vacant by the resignation of Lord Auckland. He was consecrated on Dec. 21, in Westminster Abbey, Dr. Temple being consecrated at the same time to the See of Exeter. His lordship is visitor of Wadham College, Oxford. In addition to various single sermons and "charges" he has published:—"A Few Hints on Infant Baptism," 1838; "National Education in the Principles of the Church connected with the National Prosperity," 1838; "Thanksgiving Sermons for Indian Victories," 1846; "Sermons for the Sundays and Principal Holidays throughout the Year," 2 vols., 1850; "Missionary Sermons," preached in Ely Cathedral, 1851; "The Genealogies of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, as contained in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, reconciled with each other, and with the Genealogy of the House of David, from Adam to the close of the Canon of the Old Testament, and shown to be in Harmony with the True Chronology of the Times," 1853;

"A Suggestion for Supplying the Literary, Scientific, and Mechanics' Institutes of Great Britain and Ireland with Lecturers from the Universities," 1855; "The Inspiration of Holy Scripture," five sermons preached before the University of Cambridge, 1856; "A Letter to the Rev. C. Wordsworth, D.D., on the Declaration of the Clergy on Marriage and Divorce," 1857; and "Increase of the Episcopate: A Letter to the Lord Bishop of Ely," 1866; three Lectures to working men on the Division of Labour, Property, and Wages, 1883, 1884, 1885. He has been a contributor to Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," to the "Speaker's Commentary," and to the "Pulpit Commentary;" and was one of the Revisers of the authorized version of the Old Testament. At one time he was well known as an opponent of the extreme High Church party, and his correspondence with Archdeacon Denison on the subject of symbolic observances in the celebration of the Holy Communion was published in 1871-72. He married, in 1839, Patience, daughter of Mr. John Singleton.

HESSEY, The Ven. James Augustus, D.D., eldest son of the late Mr. J. A. Hessey, born in London in 1814, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and went to St. John's College, Oxford, of which he was for some years a resident fellow and lecturer. He graduated B.A. in 1836, taking a first-class in Literis Humanioribus; was appointed Public Examiner in 1842, and Select Preacher in his University in 1849. From 1845 to 1870 he was Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School, and from 1850 to 1879 Preacher of Gray's Inn. In 1860 he preached the Bampton Lectures at Oxford, the subject being "Sunday, its Origin, History, and Present Obligation considered," of which four editions have been published. He has also written "Schemata Rhetorica," "A Scripture Argument against permitting Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister," "Biographies of the Kings of Judah," several small pamphlets and sermons, and some articles in Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible." In 1860 Dr. Hessey was appointed by Dr. Tait, Bishop of London, to the Prebendal stall of Oxgate, in St. Paul's Cathedral, which he resigned in 1875; in 1865 was elected by the University of Oxford to the office of Grinfield Lecturer on the Septuagint; and, on the expiration of the two years' tenure, was elected in 1867 for two years more. At Christmas, 1870, Dr. Hessey resigned the Head-Mastership of Merchant Taylors' School, having a few weeks previously been appointed by Dr. Jackson, Bishop of London, one of his lordship's examining chaplains. He retains this office under the present Bishop, Dr. Temple. In Nov., 1870, he was nominated to preach the Boyle Lecture for 1871 and the two following years, his subject being "The Moral Treatment of Unbelief." His lectures have been published by the S.P.C.K. under the title of "Moral Difficulties connected with the Bible," of which many thousand copies have been sold in England and America. From 1872 to 1874 he was classical Examiner for the Indian Civil Service. Dr. Hessey was appointed Archdeacon of Middlesex in June, 1875, and has published seven annual "Charges to his Clergy and Churchwardens." He is a Governor of St. Paul's and Highgate Schools, and in 1878 and 1879 was Select Preacher in the University of Cambridge. In the year 1884 he received the degree of D.D. honoris causâ from the University of the South, U.S. Dr. Hessey is one of the three permanent chairmen of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and is an active member of nearly all the Church Societies. He has also, both by his writings and by his personal efforts, taken a great part in resisting proposals for altering the laws of marriage, and in establishing a Diocesan Conference for London, &c.

HEURTLEY, The Rev. Charles Abel, D.D., born about 1806, was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow; was presented by his college to the rectory of Fenny Compton, Warwickshire, in 1840; discharged the office of Bampton Lecturer in 1845; and was appointed to an Honorary Canonry in Worcester Cathedral in 1848. In 1853 he was elected to the Margaret Professorship of Divinity, to which is attached a Canonry in Christ Church Cathedral; and in 1864 he was chosen a member of the Hebdomadal Council. Dr. Heurtley, who has been three times appointed one of the select preachers of the University of Oxford, is the author of several volumes of sermons, University and Parochial, including his Bampton Lectures "On Justification," and of "Harmonia Symbolica, a Collection of Creeds belonging to the Ancient Western Church," 1858; together with pamphlets on the Eucharist, on Prayer addressed to Christ, and on the Age of the Athanasian Creed. He is the editor also of a volume "De Fide et Symbolo," containing ancient documents and treatises illustrative of the Creed. Of the treatises he has published a translation.

HEWETT, Sir Prescott Gardner, Bart., F.R.S., received his professional education at St. George's Hospital and in Paris, on the completion of which he passed his examination, and became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England July 15, 1836. He was made an honorary Fellow of the College when the new charter was granted to that Institution in Dec., 1843. In 1867 the Fellows of the College elected him a member of the Council. He had previously been appointed a Professor of Human Anatomy and Surgery. In 1876 he succeeded Sir James Paget as President of the College, and in July, 1883, he was created a Baronet. He is one of Her Majesty's Serjeant-Surgeons, and also Surgeon-in-Ordinary to the Prince of Wales. He is the author of some valuable papers in the Transactions of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and of the Pathological and Clinical Societies, and of the two latter he has filled the President's chair. He is also a member of many learned and scientific societies at home and abroad.

HEYSE, Paul Johann Ludwig, a German poet and novelist, was born March 15, 1830, in Berlin, where his father was a distinguished University Professor and philologist. He was educated in the Frederick-William Gymnasium of his native city, and in the Universities of Berlin and Bonn, where he applied himself to the study of philology. In 1852 he repaired to Italy, to examine the manuscripts in the public libraries of Rome, Florence and Venice. In May, 1854, he was summoned to Munich by King Maximilian, and he there married the daughter of the eminent writer on art, Franz Kugler. He has written some tragedies which have been performed in various towns of Germany, viz.: "Francesca di Rimini," 1850; "Meleager," 1854; "The Men of the Palatinate in Ireland (Die Pfälzer in Irland)," 1855; "Elizabeth Charlotte," 1860; "The Counts Von der Esche," and some others, which, though never presented on the stage, have been eagerly read by a wide circle of readers. He has also produced narrative and epic poems. "The Brothers," 1852; "Thecla," a poem in nine cantos, 1858; and a number of collections of metrical tales and novels ("Gesammelte Novellen in Versen," 1863). Besides these, he has published various works on philology and æsthetics. His later productions are "Troubadour-Novellen," 1882; "Don Juan's End," a tragedy, "Buch der Freundschaft," and "Siechentrost," 1883; and "Gesammelte Werke," in 21 vols., 1872-85.

HEYWOOD, James, F.R.S., M.A. Cambridge, fifth son of the late Mr. Nathaniel Heywood, banker, of Manchester, born May 28, 1810, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was a senior optime in 1833, but did not graduate B.A. till 1857, when enforced subscription to a declaration of the Church of England membership was abolished by the Cambridge University Reform Act, which he had done much to promote. He was called to the Bar in 1838, but did not practise; was one of the members for North Lancashire in 1847, and moved the address of the House of Commons to the Queen, in reply to her Majesty's speech. In April, 1850, he moved for an address to the Queen for a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the English and Irish Universities; and on the withdrawal of this motion, the prime minister (Lord J. Russell) intimated his intention of recommending her Majesty to issue a Commission of general inquiry into the seats of learning. On the order of the day (June 24, 1854) for the consideration of the Oxford University Bill as amended, Mr. Heywood moved and carried, by 252 votes against 161, the abolition of religious tests at matriculation, but was beaten the same evening in an attempt to abolish religious tests on taking all secular degrees, though eventually (June 29) he carried a clause by 233 against 78, in favour of their abolition for a bachelor's degree in arts, law, medicine, and music. A clause in the Cambridge University Reform Bill doing away with tests on taking degrees in arts, law, medicine, and music, was carried by 118 to 41 (June 20, 1856), as well as a clause opening college scholarships for undergraduates. Mr. Heywood published in 1853, "The History of University Subscription Tests;" and in 1855, translations of "The Early Cambridge Statutes," "Academical Reform and University Representation;" also "Cambridge University Transactions during the Puritan Controversies," Prof. Huber's "English Universities," Prof. von Bohlen's "Illustrations of the first part of Genesis," and Prof. Heer's "Primæval World of Switzerland." After the removal of religious tests from degrees in Arts, Law, Medicine, and Music, at Cambridge, Mr. Heywood took his degree in that University, and voted in the Academical Senate. Mr. Heywood married Annie Escher, and had a daughter Anne Sophia. For twenty years he has resided in Kensington, and he presented to that parish his free library (to which the Vestry added a reference free library), and a free library for Brompton.

HIBBERT, The Right Hon. John Tomlinson, M.P., eldest son of Elijah Hibbert, of Oldham, by Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. A. Hilton, was born at Oldham in 1824, and educated at Shrewsbury school and at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1847; M.A. 1851). He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1849. Mr. Hibbert, who is a Liberal in politics, unsuccessfully contested Cambridge in March, 1857, Oldham in 1859, and Blackburn in Sept., 1875. He succeeded in his candidature for Oldham in May, 1862, and he continued to represent that borough till the general election of Jan., 1874, when he was an unsuccessful candidate; but on the death of Mr. Cobbett in 1877 he regained his seat, and he was again returned at the general election of April, 1880. Mr. Hibbert was Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board from 1872 to Feb., 1874, and on the formation of the Gladstone ministry in May, 1880, he was re-appointed to his former office, which he held till June, 1883, when he was nominated Under-Secretary at the Home Office, in succession to the Earl of Rosebery. In 1885 he was again returned for Oldham, and was appointed Secretary to the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1886. At the general election of 1886 he stood as a Gladstonian Liberal, and was defeated by a large majority. He is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county palatine of Lancaster.

HICKS, Henry, M.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., son of the late Thomas Hicks, Esq., surgeon, of St. David's, Pembrokehire, was born in 1837, and was educated at the Collegiate and Chapter School in that city and at Guy's Hospital, London. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons and a Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries in 1862, and M.D. of the University of St. Andrews in 1878; and practised medicine at St. David's from 1862 to 1871. During that time he commenced his geological researches amongst the older rocks of that neighbourhood. His first paper was communicated to the Liverpool Geological Society in 1863. In the following years, in conjunction with the late Mr. Salter (Palæontologist to the Geological Survey) he contributed several papers to the British Association, Geological Society, &c. In 1871 he removed to the neighbourhood of London, and since that time has carried on researches in North Wales and Scotland, the results being communicated in numerous papers to the Geological Society, British Association, London Geologists' Association, &c. Of late his investigations have been mainly confined to the oldest (Pre-Cambrian) rocks of Great Britain, and he has shown that they are exposed in many areas in which their presence had been hitherto unsuspected. Dr. Hicks has also described many new fossils discovered by him in the Cambrian, Ordovician, and Silurian rocks, and has written several papers on the classification of those rocks. He has also published results of explorations carried on by him in ossiferous caverns in North and South Wales. A new geological map of North Wales was prepared by him for the International Geological Congress which met in London in 1888. Dr. Hicks was awarded the Bigsby Gold Medal of the Geological Society in 1883; is Hon. Secretary, and has been for some time on the Council of that society. He was President of the London Geologists' Association in 1883-1885; and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1885. He is corresponding member of the Academy of Natural Science, Philadelphia, and hon. member of the Liverpool Geological Society, Chester Society of Natural Science, &c.

HICKS, William Mitchinson, F.R.S., was born at Launceston, Sept. 23, 1850, and entered at St. John's College, Cambridge, Oct. 1869. He took the degree of B.A., after Mathematical Tripos, 1873; and was elected Fellow of St. John's College, 1876. The fellowship was extended for five years in 1882. In 1885 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He became Principal of Firth College, Sheffield, and Professor of Mathematics and Physics in 1883; and is the author of the following papers, published in the Transactions of the Royal Society: "On the Motion of two Spheres in a Fluid," 1879; "On Toroidal Functions," 1881; "Steady Motion and Small Vibrations of a Hollow Vortex," 1883; and "Researches in the Theory of Vortex Rings," 1885. At the British Association Meetings, 1881-82, Mr. Hicks read a "Report on Recent Progress in Hydrodynamics." He has contributed also several papers to various other journals, and is the author of "Elementary Dynamics of Particles and Solids," 1889.

eldest son of the late Sir Michael Hicks Hicks-Beach, of Williamstrip Park, Gloucestershire, the eighth baronet, by his wife Harriet Vittoria, daughter of John Stratton, Esq., of Farthinghoe Lodge, Northamptonshire, was born in Portugal Street, London, in 1837. From Eton he was sent to Christ Church, Oxford (B.A., 1858; M.A., 1861; Hon. D.C.L., 1878). In July, 1864, he was elected M.P. for East Gloucestershire, and was elected for West Bristol, Nov., 1885, in the Conservative interest. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor Law Board from Feb. till Dec., 1868, with the exception of a few weeks, during which he was Under-Secretary for the Home Department; and he served as a member of the Royal Commission on Friendly Societies. When the Conservatives again came into office in Feb., 1874, Sir M. Hicks-Beach was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland. On taking that office he was sworn on the Privy Council, and in 1877 he was admitted to a seat in the Cabinet. In Feb., 1878, he was nominated Secretary of State for the Colonies, in the place of Lord Carnarvon, who had resigned in consequence of a difference with his colleagues on the Eastern Question. Sir M. Hicks-Beach went out of office with his party in April, 1880, and on the accession of Lord Salisbury to power was appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer, with the lead of the House of Commons, June, 1885. This he held till Mr. Gladstone's return to power. On the dissolution in 1886 he was returned again for West Bristol, and accepted the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland, vacated by Mr. John Morley. He resigned this office from ill-health, March, 1887, and in Feb., 1888, was appointed President of the Board of Trade. Sir Michael is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Gloucestershire, and was for fourteen years captain in the Royal North Gloucestershire Militia.

HIGGINSON, Thomas Wentworth, was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, Dec. 22, 1823. He graduated at Harvard College in 1841, studied divinity, and was a minister of the Theodore Parker School until 1858, when, having entered actively into literature and also into political affairs, notably in the anti-slavery conflict in Kansas, he abandoned the pulpit. In 1862 he became captain in a Massachusetts regiment of volunteers, and afterwards colonel of a coloured regiment in South Carolina, this being the first regiment of freed slaves in the United States service. He was severely wounded in Aug., 1863, and left the service in the following year. From the close of the war to 1878, he resided at Newport, Rhode Island, but since 1878 has lived at Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is an earnest advocate of woman suffrage, and in 1880 and in 1881 was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature. From 1881 to 1884 he was a member of the State Board of Education. He has published "Outdoor Papers," 1863; "Malbone, an Oldport Romance," 1869, and "Oldport Days," 1873, both depicting life at the watering-place of Newport; "Army Life in a Black Regiment," which was translated into French, 1870; "Harvard Memorial Biographies," 1866; "Atlantic Essays," 1871; "Brief Biographies of European Statesmen," 1875; a "Young Folks' History of the United States," 1875, which has been translated into French, Italian and German; "Young Folks' Book of American Explorers," 1877; "Short Studies of American Authors," 1879; "Common Sense about Women," 1881; "Margaret Fuller Ossoli," 1884; "A Larger History of the United States," 1885; "The Monarch of Dreams," 1886; "Hints on Writing and Speech-making," 1887; "Women and Men," 1888; "Travellers and Outlaws," and "The Afternoon Landscape," poems, 1889. He also translated the "complete works" of Epictetus, 1865. In addition to these he is a frequent contributor to the magazines and papers, particularly to the Atlantic Monthly, The Nation, and Harper's Bazar.

HILES, Henry, Mus. Doc., born at Shrewsbury, Dec. 31, 1826, was educated privately in his native town. Dr. Hiles has held several organ appointments in London and Manchester, and was appointed Lecturer on Harmony and Musical Composition at the Owens College, Manchester, in 1880, which appointment, together with a like office in the Victoria University, he still holds. He is the conductor of several important musical societies in and near Manchester. He graduated Mus. B. at Oxford in 1862 and Mus. Doc. in 1867. Dr. Hiles gained the prizes for the best organ composition offered by the College of Organists in 1864, 1865, and 1868; also the prize for the best anthem, in 1865; and was by the Council specially elected as a Fellow of the College. In 1868 Dr. Hiles's Anthem for six voices was returned as "incomparably superior to all the other works submitted." In 1878 the prize offered by the Manchester Gentleman's Glee Club for the best serious glee was awarded to Dr. Hiles for his four-voiced glee "Hushed in Death," which, with two others of his works, was returned at the head of all the compositions sent in. Dr. Hiles is well known as the author of several standard theoretical works—especially "The Grammar of Music; a Treatise on Harmony, Counterpoint, and Form;" "Part-writing, or Modern Counterpoint;" an exhaustive treatise on all styles of pattern writing, invertible or otherwise; and as the composer of a large quantity of church music; also as the author of an Oratorio "The Patriarchs," several cantatas (such as "Fayre Pastorel," "The Crusaders," &c.), of "War in the Household," and other operatic works, and of many songs and organ pieces of classical form. In 1882 Dr. Hiles took a leading part in the establishment of "The National Society of Professional Musicians," an association of musical artists and teachers, which rapidly developed throughout the kingdom its organization of earnest followers of the art.

HILL, Hon. David Bennett, American statesman, was born at Havana, New York, Aug. 29, 1843. He received an academic education, studied law and was admitted to the Bar at Elmira (New York) in 1864. In the same year he was appointed City Attorney. Since 1868 he has been a delegate to many Democratic State Conventions, serving as President of those held in 1877 and 1881. He was also a delegate to the National Conventions of the same party in 1876 and 1884. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1870 and again in 1871; was chosen Mayor of Elmira in 1882; and in Jan., 1883, became Lieut.-Governor of the State. On the resignation of Governor Cleveland in 1884 after his election to the Presidency, Mr. Hill became Governor of New York, a position which by subsequent elections he has continued to hold since. His present term will expire Jan. 1, 1892.

HILL, Frank Harrison, born at Boston, in Lincolnshire, Feb. 6, 1830, was educated at Manchester New College, graduated B.A. in the London University in 1851, and was afterwards called to the Bar by the Society of Lincoln's Inn. In 1860 he acted as one of the secretaries of the Trades Union Committee of the Social Science Association, to the printed volumes of whose reports he furnished, among other contributions, a paper on Trade Combinations in Sheffield. In the same year he went to Ireland as editor of the Northern Whig. This post he held until the beginning of the year 1866, when he became one of the assistant-editors and political writers of the Daily News, of which journal he was, from 1870 to 1886, editor-in-chief. He is the author of "Political Portraits," 1873, consisting of sketches of living English statesmen, which appeared originally in the Daily News, a Life of Manning in the "English Worthies" series; and of Grey in the "Statesmen" series; a series of papers in the Fortnightly Review, entitled "The Political Adventures of Lord Beaconsfield," since collected and published as a volume in the United States; and an essay on Ireland, published in the volume of "Questions for a Reformed Parliament," 1867. Mr. Hill is the author also of a great number of articles on literary and political subjects, in the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary, Universal, Fortnightly, and Saturday Reviews, the World, and other periodicals.

HILL, Miss Joanna M. Margaret, was born at Hampstead. She is the youngest daughter of the late Mr. Mathew Davenport Hill, Recorder of Birmingham and M.P. for Hull, and niece of Sir Rowland Hill, of penny-postage fame. For the greater portion of a century the Hill family have been associated with schemes for the diffusion of knowledge and for the benefit of humanity. To them we owe postal reform, the encouragement of cheap literature, amelioration of the criminal law, amended prison discipline, the abolition of capital punishment for minor offences, wiser methods of school discipline, and many important improvements in the treatment of young and neglected children. As social reformers, the Hills have done much for their country, and at the present time one of Miss Hill's sisters is a distinguished member of the London School Board, and another is a Poor Law Guardian. From earliest childhood the influences surrounding Miss Joanna Hill were calculated to fit her for a life of intelligent devotion to her fellow-creatures. She was the god-daughter of the well-known writer Joanna Baillie, and a pupil of Mary Carpenter, whose cultured mind left its mark on the character of her pupil. At an early age Miss Hill became the friend and collaborateur of her father in his labours for the amelioration of the condition of criminal and neglected children, and this at a period when most young girls seek only the pleasures of society. Miss Hill became deeply impressed with the necessity and happiness of working for those less favoured than herself. In 1860, she and her elder sisters wrote "Our Exemplars," being an account of the lives of persons of all classes who had benefited mankind to a remarkable degree. It was published with a preface by the late Lord Brougham. Circumstances brought to Miss Hill's notice, in 1859, the friendless condition of girls in workhouse schools. She became a member of the Workhouse Visiting Association, and for many years was a constant visitor in the workhouse wards of Bristol, where her father then resided. After her father's acceptance of the Recordship of Birmingham, Miss Hill, with the consent of the guardians of the poor of that town, revived a system of visiting young workhouse girls in service, which had fallen into disuse owing to the failing health of its originator, Mrs Charles Talbot. During the sixteen years she was so employed she became well acquainted with the many trials, temptations, and difficulties of these "poor children of the State." Frequently had she to follow them into the gaol, whither they had drifted chiefly, she considered, from the fact that the atmosphere of the training institutions through which they had passed had not fitted them to resist the temptations which they met when cast on their own resources. This sad knowledge caused Miss Hill to take up what has indeed proved to be the noble work of a noble life. While studying the condition of pauper children, Miss Hill heard of a system then being tried in some parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland to restore the pauper child to the privileges of family life under the careful supervision of efficient ladies. To this most beneficent scheme Miss Hill has devoted her best energies, and, as hon. secretary to the King's Norton Boarding-out Committee, she has accomplished a good work, which will bear fruit, not only in the present generation, but in generations yet to come. Ladies interested in this work should read Miss Hill's evidence before the Select Committee for the Infant Life Protection Bill. This will be found in a Blue Book published in Aug., 1890; also a paper in the appendix of the same by Miss Hill, which contains most valuable information concerning her plan for the inspection of pauper children by lady visitors. Shortness of space prevents a more detailed account of Miss Hill's interesting work; but it can truthfully be said of her, as of others of her family, that her works will live in the improved lives of others long after she has passed away.

HILL, Miss Octavia, Social Reformer, her work being principally among the poor, whom she seeks to benefit morally and physically. The record of her work is given in "Homes of the London Poor," and from it we learn that in 1864, partly at the suggestion and under the guidance of Mr. Ruskin, who advanced the necessary funds for the beginning of the scheme, Miss Octavia Hill purchased three cottages in one of the poorest courts in Marylebone, and became her own rent-collector and manager, and, without any commercial loss, succeeded by kindness and conciliation in effecting the gradual reformation of the tenants. By degrees the whole of the court became hers; and the Countess of Ducie and others entrusted their property in Marylebone and Drury Lane to her management, with the same excellent results.

HILL, Staveley, D.C.L., Q.C., M.P., was born at Dunstall Hall, Staffordshire, in 1825, and was educated at Birmingham Grammar School, in the House of Dr. Lee, the future first Bishop of Manchester, and in company with Kendal, Westcott, Evans, Lightfoot, Benson, and other celebrities. From there he went to Exeter College, Oxford, and in due course, having taken his degree, was elected to a Staffordshire Fellowship at St. John's. He subsequently took his D.C.L. degree, and was appointed one of the Examiners in Law and Modern History, in which capacity he participated in the award of a "first class" to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach. He was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in 1852, and joined the Oxford Circuit, being elected the same night as Mr. Henry Matthews, Mr. Ward Hunt, and Sir Henry James; and he soon obtained a large practice, eventually becoming leader of the circuit. His practice was very varied, ranging from criminal business, probate and divorce, to Parliamentary; and in addition to all this he found time to devote himself energetically to the Volunteer movement. He was, in fact, one of the first to join the Victoria Rifles in 1859. It was not till 1865 that he was tempted to take any part in politics, and by that time his Parliamentary practice had become exceedingly lucrative. The death of his wife in 1868, and the increasing calls of his profession had, however, decided Mr. Staveley Hill to give up all thought of politics when the offer made by Mr. Disraeli led him to reconsider his decision. He sat for Coventry from 1868 to 1874, for West Staffordshire from 1874 to 1885, and for the Kingswinford Division since that date. Perhaps the most interesting part of Mr. Staveley Hill's career is his connection with Canada. He first went out there in 1881 to ascertain, on behalf of his constituents, what sort of place it was for emigration; and speedily becoming alive to the advantages of the New World, he not only established a large cattle ranch in the Far West, but returned there himself in successive autumns, and eventually published his delightful book, "From Home to Home," which sets out in most vivid fashion the wild but charming life among the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains. This book, which is dedicated, by permission, to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, is certainly a valuable one. It is illustrated by beautiful sketches by the present Mrs. Staveley Hill, whom he married in 1876, and who has regularly accompanied him in his Canadian tours. Mr. Staveley Hill is a staunch advocate of a duty on foreign manufactured goods, and has for many years worked in the cause of Imperial federation, having seen enough of our Empire to realize how entirely self-supporting it could become.

HILLS, The Right Rev. George, D.D., Lord Bishop of British Columbia, eldest son of the late Rear-Admiral George Hills, was born at Eyethorn, Kent, in 1816. He was ordained deacon in 1840, and priest in the same year. He received his academical education in the University of Durham, where he graduated B.A. in 1835, M.A. in 1838, and D.D. in 1858. He was appointed lecturer of Leeds parish church in 1841; incumbent of St. Mary's, Leeds, in 1846; vicar of Great Yarmouth in 1848; and honorary canon of Norwich Cathedral in 1850. He was also elected, in Convocation, proctor for Norwich; and was consecrated the first Bishop of British Columbia in 1859. He married in 1865 Mary Philadelphia Louisa, daughter of the late Admiral Sir Richard King, Bart., K.C.B.

HIND, John Russell, LL.D., F.R.S., astronomer, is the son of a lace-manufacturer, who was one of the first introducers of the Jacquard loom in Nottingham. He was born there May 12, 1823. From the age of six his mind was intent on the study of astronomy. In 1839-40 he contributed a number of astronomical notes to the Nottingham Journal and Dearden's Miscellany. As an assistant to a civil engineer, he was sent, in 1840, to London, but he sought an appointment more in accordance with his tastes. By the proposition of Professor Wheatstone to Mr. Airy, the Astronomer-Royal, he received a post as assistant in the Magnetical and Meteorological Department of the Royal Observatory. For a period of three months, in 1843, Mr. Hind was engaged in the Government expedition sent to ascertain the longitude of Valentia, in Ireland. He received the appointment of observer in the private observatory of Mr. G. Bishop, of Regent's Park, in June, 1844. In that year he was admitted a Fellow of the Astronomical Society. He published his first work, "Solar System," in 1846. In 1847 he accepted the Foreign Secretaryship of the Royal Astronomical Society. During the following year he was elected a corresponding member of the Société Philomatique of Paris. For his discovery of a planet in February, 1847, he received a gold medal from the King of Denmark. He published his "Expected Return of the Great Comet of 1264 and 1556," in 1848. On Sept. 13, 1850, he discovered "Victoria." In May of the same year he was chosen a corresponding member of the National Institute of France, to succeed the late Professor Schumacher. "Irene" he discovered May 19, 1851; "Melpomene," June 24, 1852; "Fortuna," Aug. 22, 1852; "Calliope," Nov. 16, 1852; and "Thalia," Dec. 15, 1852. His "Astronomical Vocabulary" appeared in 1852. During the same year he was awarded the gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society; was granted a pension of £200 per annum; published his "Replies to Questions on the Comet of 1566," and received for the third time the Lalande Medal, from the Academy of Sciences, Paris, and a prize of about 300 francs, for the discovery of four new planets in the short period of a year. His "Illustrated London Astronomy" appeared in 1853. In the same year he discovered, on Nov. 8, "Euterpe;" and "Urania" on July 22 of the following year. The "Elements of Algebra" was published in 1855, and his "Descriptive Treatise on Comets" in 1857. He has contributed his observations to the Transactions of the Royal Astronomical Society, the publications of the Paris Academy, the Astronomische Nachrichten, Comptes Rendus, Nature, the Athenæum, and other periodicals. He was President of the Royal Astronomical Society in the year 1880, and has long been the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac Office.

HINGESTON - RANDOLPH, The Rev. Francis Charles, M.A., born March 31, 1833, was educated at the Truro Grammar School, and at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A., 1855; M.A., 1858). Having held a curacy in Oxford (Holywell), he was appointed in 1859 to the Perpetual Curacy of Hampton Gay, near Oxford, and in 1860 to the Rectory of Ringmore, Devon. He was appointed Domestic Chaplain to the Baroness le Despenser (Dowager Viscountess Falmouth), 1859; Rural Dean, 1879; and Prebendary of Exeter, 1885. He is the author of "Specimens of Ancient Cornish Crosses, Fonts, &c.," 1850; "Four Years of a Country Friendly Society," 1870; has edited "The Poems of Francis Hingeston," 1857; "The Chronicle of England, by John Capgrave" (under the direction of the Master of the Rolls); "Johannis Capgravii, Liber de Illustribus Henricis" (in the same series); "The Book of the Illustrious Henries" (translated from the Latin of Capgrave), 1858; and "A Collection of Royal and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV.," (for the Master of the Rolls), 1860; "The Register of Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter," 1886; "The Registers of Walter Bronescombe and Peter Quivil, Bishops of Exeter," 1889.

HIRST, Thomas Archer, Ph.D., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., was born April 22, 1830, at Heckmondwike, in Yorkshire. About 1835 his father retired from business, and removed from Heckmondwike to Fieldhead, near Wakefield, his object being to educate his three sons at the West Riding Proprietary School. It was not until 1840, however, that his youngest son, Thomas Archer, commenced his studies there. It was at Halifax that he first made the acquaintance of John Tyndall, the constant friend to whose guidance and example he considers himself mainly indebted for any success that may have since attended him. Tyndall left Halifax in 1847, and accepted a Mastership in Queenwood College, Hampshire, from which place he proceeded shortly afterwards to the University of Marburg, in Hesse Cassel. In the summer of 1849 Hirst visited his friend at Marburg, whence he was suddenly recalled, in consequence of the death of his mother. This short visit, however, proved to be a critical one for him. He decided to return to Marburg, and there to enter upon a course of study in Mathematics, Physics and Chemistry. In pursuance of this object he not only attended the lectures on the above subjects, given by Professors Stegmann, Knoblauch and Bunsen, respectively, but as his previous taste for Mathematics gradually revived and became predominant, he took private lessons from the first of these distinguished teachers. At the end of 1852 he passed his examination in the above three subjects, and after presenting a Dissertation "On Conjugate Diameters of the Ellipsoid," which was approved by the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, he obtained his degree of Doctor of Philosophy. From Marburg he went for a short time to Göttingen, where he made the acquaintance of Gauss, and worked in the laboratory, practically, on Magnetism, under the superintendence of Weber. At the University of Berlin, to which he next proceeded, he attended, during the session of 1852-53, the lectures of Dirichlet, Steiner, and Joachimsthal. The lectures of Steiner, and above all the personal intercourse which he enjoyed with that great Geometer, gave a strong impulse to his own studies and ultimately, indeed, determined their character. From Berlin he was called to England, to fill the vacancy at Queenwood College, Hampshire, which had been created by Tyndall's acceptance of the Professorship of Natural Philosophy in the Royal Institution of London. Dr. Hirst held this appointment for three years; its duties absorbed his time so much that his only contribution to science during the period was a short paper "On the Existence of a Magnetic Medium," which was published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society of 1854. At the close of 1854 he married Anna, youngest daughter of Samuel Martin, Esq., of Loughorne, Co. Down, Ireland, and sister of the late John Martin, M.P., the well known patriot of the Young Ireland party. In consequence of his wife's delicate health, he spent the winter of 1856-57 in the south of France, where he wrote the two papers, "On Equally Attracting Bodies," which were published in the Philosophical Magazine of 1857-58. On their journey homewards in 1857, his wife died, in Paris. Thereupon he was induced by his friend Tyndall to accompany him to Switzerland, where six weeks were spent on the Mer de Glace, studying glacial phenomena, and finally, the ascent of Mont Blanc was made, which is described in the "Glaciers of the Alps." In Paris, during the session of 1857-58, Dr. Hirst attended the lectures of Chasles, Liouville, Lamé and Bertrand; translated, for the Philosophical Magazine, the important memoir "On the Percussion of Bodies," by Poinso; and contributed to the Journal des Mathématiques an original paper "Sur le Potentiel d'une couche infiniment mince comprise entre deux paraboloides elliptiques." The winter of 1858-59 was spent in Rome, where he published in the Annali di Matematica, then edited by Tortolini, his memoir "Sur la courbure d'une série de surfaces et de lignes," of which an abstract subsequently appeared in the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics. On quitting Rome in the spring of 1859, Naples and Sicily were visited. Shortly after this he returned to England and finally settled in London. Early in 1860

he unexpectedly found employment there in University College School, and on the death of Mr. Cook, its Head Mathematical Master, he became that gentleman's successor. It was during his five years' tenure of this appointment, and under the friendly auspices of Professor Key, the Principal of the school, that he made his first experiments on teaching Geometry to classes of beginners without employing "Euclid's Elements." The results determined all his subsequent action in promotion of a freer and more thought-awakening culture of Elementary Geometry. In 1871 he took part in founding the Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching, of which, during the first seven years of its activity, he was annually elected President, and was subsequently made an Honorary Member. His first original work, after returning from Italy, was a paper "On Ripples and their Relation to the Velocity of Currents." It was partly experimental, but chiefly mathematical, and appeared in the Philosophical Magazine for 1861. During the latter year he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the course of the following one he communicated to that body a memoir, "On the Volumes of Pedal Surfaces," which was subsequently published in its Transactions. In the interval between its publication and that of his first purely geometrical paper, "On the Quadric Inversion of Plane Curves," which appeared in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1865, and was shortly afterwards translated by Cremona in the Annali di Matematica, his time was mainly, but not altogether profitably, occupied in revising the original, and writing the new Mathematical Articles of Brande's "Dictionary of Arts and Sciences." Dr. Hirst was one of the original members of the London Mathematical Society, which was founded in 1864, under the Presidentship of Professor De Morgan, by students of University College, and has since acquired national importance and a European reputation. He was a member of its council, continuously, from 1864 to 1883; was Treasurer for several years, and its President from 1872 to 1874. His valedictory address on resigning the chair to his successor, was on "Correlation in Space," a subject on which he has worked much, but on which, until 1890, he had published but one short note. The whole appeared in the Proceedings of the Mathematical Society, as did also his papers "On the Degenerate Forms of Conics," 1869; "On the Correlation of two Planes," 1875 and 1877; and on "The Complexes Generated by two Correlative Planes," 1879,

The paper of 1877 was originally communicated to, and published by, the Accademia dei Lincei at Rome, the one of 1879 is an abstract of the more extensive paper which forms part of the Collectanea Mathematica, dedicated to the memory of Chelini, which appeared, in Italy, in 1881 under the joint editorship of Cremona and Beltrami. In 1865 Dr. Hirst was appointed Professor of Mathematical Physics in University College, London, which chair he held until 1867, when he succeeded De Morgan as Professor of Mathematics in that college. In 1870 he accepted the newly created appointment of Assistant Registrar in the University of London, in consequence of which he resigned not only his Professorship, but shortly afterwards his General Secretaryship of the British Association, an office he had filled since the meeting at Nottingham in 1866. Early in 1873, when the Royal Naval College was founded at Greenwich, Mr. Goschen, then first Lord of the Admiralty, offered Dr. Hirst the post of Director of Studies. This offer was accepted, and the post was retained for ten years. Under the Presidentship of Admiral Sir Cooper Key, F.R.S., he organised the several courses of study pursued at that college, and shortly afterwards, on the retirement of Dr. Woolley from the Directorship of Naval Education, his own functions were extended so as to embrace the superintendence of the education of students of Marine Engineering and Naval Architecture in the dockyard schools, as well as of the examination of Naval Cadets on board H.M.S. Britannia at Dartmouth, and of those of Junior Naval Officers afloat. Since his health obliged him to retire from his position at Greenwich, he has passed several winters abroad. He has, however, published, since then, the following papers; all which, with one exception, appeared in the Proceedings of the Mathematical Society of London; viz.: "On Cremonian Congruences," 1883; "On Congruences of the Third Order and Class," 1885; "Sur la Congruence Rocella" (Circolo Matematico di Palermo, 1886); and "On the Cremonian Congruences which are contained in a Linear Complex," 1887. Dr. Hirst has been, three times, a member of the Council of the Royal Society, and twice one of its Vice-Presidents. In 1883 one of the Royal Medals was awarded to him. He is a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, a member of the Physical Society, and an ex-officio Member of the Council of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. He is, moreover, an Honorary Member of the Naturforschende

Gesellschaft of Marburg, of that of Halle, of the Société Philomatique, Paris, and of the Philosophical Society, Cambridge. He served for some years on the Council of University College, London; and in 1882 was made a Fellow of the University of London.

"HISTORICUS," THE nom de plume OF SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (q.v.).

HOAR, Hon. Ebenezer Rockwood, LL.D., was born at Concord, Massachusetts, Feb. 21, 1816. He graduated at Harvard in 1835 (in which college he was afterwards for ten years a Fellow and President of the Board of Overseers), studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1839, and practised in Middlesex, U.S.A., and the neighbouring counties. In 1846 he was a Member of the Massachusetts State Senate; and in 1849 was appointed a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, but resigned in 1855, and returned to the practice of his profession, in Boston. In 1859 he was appointed a Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, and held that office for ten years; when he resigned to become U.S. Attorney-General. He was offered the position of Chief Justice of Massachusetts, but declined it. In 1870 he was nominated by the President as one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, but his nomination was not confirmed. He was a member of the High Commission which negotiated the Treaty of Washington in 1871; and in 1872 was a presidential elector and was chosen a Representative in Congress. He resides at Concord, Mass., and at present holds no political office.

HOAR, Hon. George Frisbie, LL.D., brother of the Hon. Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar, was born at Concord, Massachusetts, Aug. 29, 1826. A.B. (Harvard), 1846. He was admitted to the Bar in 1849, and began practice at Worcester, where he still resides. He was a member of the State House of Representatives in 1852, and of the State Senate in 1857. He was City Solicitor in 1860, and in 1868 was elected a Member of Congress, and was re-elected three times, declining the nomination for a fifth term. From 1874 to 1880 he was an Overseer of Harvard; was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876, 1880, 1884, and 1888, presiding over that of 1880. He was elected a United States Senator from Massachusetts in 1877, and re-elected in 1883 and 1889, his present term expiring in 1895. When a Member of the lower branch of Congress he was one of its managers in the Belknap impeachment trial in 1876, and served on the Electoral Commission which decided the disputed presidential question in the same year. He was a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution in 1880, and has been President (and is now Vice-President) of the American Antiquarian Society; a trustee of the Peabody Museum of Archæology; and a member of many learned societies. The degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon him by William and Mary, Amherst, Williams, Yale, and Harvard Colleges.

HOBHOUSE, Baron, The Right Hon. Sir Arthur, K.C.S.I., P.C., fourth son of the late Right Hon. Henry Hobhouse, of Hadspen House, Somersetshire, by Harriet, sixth daughter of John Turton, Esq., of Sugnall Hall, Staffordshire, was born at Hadspen, Nov. 10, 1819. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained a first-class in classics in 1841. In 1845 he became a member of the Chancery Bar, and practised as a conveyancer and equity draftsman, and subsequently as a Queen's Counsel, in the Rolls Court. He was appointed one of her Majesty's Counsel in 1865; but in the following year he quitted the Bar in consequence of ill-health, and was appointed a Charity Commissioner, and in 1869 an Endowed Schools Commissioner. In 1872 he was nominated Law Member of the Governor-General's Council in India, and on his retirement in 1877 was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Star of India. In 1878 he was appointed arbitrator under the Epping Forest Act; and in 1881 he was made a Privy Councillor and a member of the Judicial Committee. In 1885 he was created Baron Hobhouse, of Hadspen, in the county of Somerset. Lord Hobhouse has taken a keen interest in many social topics, especially in those connected with women's property, with endowments, and with settlements and transfer of land. He has delivered many addresses on these subjects, some of which were collected and printed under the title of "The Dead Hand," 1880. He stood for Westminster in the Liberal interest at the general election of 1880, but was unsuccessful.

HODGSON, Brian Houghton, F.R.S., D.C.L., Corr. Member of French Institute, Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and late Minister at the Court of Nepal, was born at the Lower Beech, near Macclesfield, Feb. 1, 1800. He is the eldest son of Brian Hodgson, banker, of Macclesfield, by Katherine, daughter of William Houghton, of Manchester, and Newton Park,

Lancashire, and was educated at the Grammar School of Macclesfield; the school of Dr. Delafosse, at Richmond; and at Haileybury College. He entered the Indian Civil Service in 1818, and became Assistant to the Commissioner at Kumaon in 1819, and Secretary to the Embassy in Nepal in 1820, until 1829, when he was in charge for two years; and in 1833 he was appointed Resident, which office he held until December, 1843, when he retired from the Service. He devoted himself to the study of the religion, languages, literature, ethnology and zoology of Nepal and Tibet, and published a series of articles (more than 170) on these subjects, in the Journal and Researches of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and other periodicals, between 1824 and 1857. Not long after his arrival in Nepal, a country then almost unknown in Europe, he announced the discovery (1824) of the original Sanscrit Buddhist Scriptures. The existence of these books was before his time perfectly unknown, and the discovery laid the foundation of our knowledge of the history of Buddhism. The celebrated oriental scholar, Eugène Burnouf, was the first to translate one of these works, the Saddharmapundarika, and dedicated it to Mr. Hodgson as "founder of the true study of Buddhism." Mr. Hodgson's article on Buddhism was published in 1828 in the Asiatic Researches. "This article," says Burnouf in his introduction to the History of Buddhism, "contained an account of the different philosophical schools of Buddhism, which has never since been surpassed or even equalled." Copies of these works, several hundred in number, Mr. Hodgson distributed throughout Europe at his own expense, with the exception of those sent to France, many of which were purchased by the Société Asiatique. 144 works were presented by him to the Asiatic Society of Bengal in the years 1835-36, in 85 bundles; 85 to the Royal Asiatic Society; 30 to the India Office Library; 7 to the Bodleyan; 174 to the Société Asiatique and to M. Burnouf (now in the National Library of France). In 1835 the Grand Lama of Llassa having heard of Mr. Hodgson's researches into his religion, Buddhism, and his desire to obtain its sacred books, entered into a friendly correspondence with him, and presented him with two complete copies of the Tibetan Cyclopædia, the Kahgyur and Stanggyur. Each set contains 334 volumes, and comprises the whole circle of the sacred and profane literature of the Tibetans. They were printed in 1731 with wooden blocks on Tibetan paper. One set he presented to the Library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, the second to the East India Co., the latter is now in the India Office Library. They are unique in Europe; the Russian Government it is said, not long since, paid £2,000 for half the series, and was unable to obtain the whole. The sets of Buddhist books, both Sanscrit and Tibetan, which were presented to the India Office Library have only recently begun to engage the attention of oriental scholars in England; and their importance for the comprehensive study of the phase of Buddhism of which they treat, is likely to be appreciated more and more every year. In 1845, after an absence of a year and a half in England, he returned to India to continue his researches, and settled at Darjeeling, where he remained (with an interval of a year in England) until 1858, when he finally returned to England, having spent altogether 37 years in India. Mr. Hodgson's letters on National Education for the people of India, were published in 1837, in which he strongly advocated the use of the Vernaculars. His other works are "Literature and Religion of the Buddhists of the North," in 1841; "Aborigines of India," in 1847; and "Selections from the Records," No. XXVII., in 1857. Some of these were reprinted in 1874 as "Essays on the Languages, Literature and Religion of Nepal and Tibet;" and in 1880 as "Miscellaneous Essays relating to Indian Subjects," in two vols. of Trübner's Oriental Series. He made vast Zoological collections which he presented to the various Museums of Europe, giving more than 10,000 specimens to the British Museum (of which separate catalogues have been published), and also published more than 123 papers on Zoological subjects alone. He was elected Corr. Member of Zoological Society of London in 1832, and received their silver Medal in 1859; was made Corr. Member of Royal Asiatic Society, London, 1832; in 1837 he received a gold Medal from the Société Asiatique, Paris; and was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1838. In 1844, Corr. Member of Institute of France in the Department of Natural Science, and, 1850, in the Department of Belles Lettres; 1834, Corr. Member of the Academy of Science, Turin; 1845, Hon. Member of the Natural History Society of Manchester, and of Frankfurt; 1846, Hon. Fellow of the Ethnological Society, London; 1854, Hon. Member of the Asiatic Society, Bengal; 1858, Hon. Member of the American Oriental Society, New York; 1862, Hon. Member of the German Oriental Society;

1877, Fellow of the Royal Society; 1876 and 1877, Vice-President of the Royal Asiatic Society, London; and in 1889, D.C.L. of Oxford.

HODGSON, John Evan, R.A., was born in London, March 1, 1831, and spent some of his early years in Russia, where his father established himself as a merchant in 1835. After receiving his education at Rugby he entered his father's counting-house; but in 1853 he came back to England, abandoned commercial pursuits, and became a student in the Royal Academy. His first picture was exhibited in 1856, since which time he has been a regular exhibitor. He began with domestic and contemporaneous subjects, but painted historical pictures from 1861 till 1869, when his visit to Northern Africa set him upon subjects of Moorish life, to which he has since chiefly confined himself. He was elected a Royal Academician, Dec. 18, 1879. His principal pictures are:—"Arrest of a Poacher," 1857; "Canvassing for a Vote," 1858; "The Patriot Wife" (the wife of a political prisoner bribing his Austrian gaoler to give her access to him), 1859; "A Rehearsal of Music in a Farmhouse," 1860; "Sir Thomas More's Daughter in Holbein's Studio," 1861; "Return of Sir Francis Drake from Cadiz," 1862; "First Sight of the Armada," 1863; "Queen Elizabeth at Purfleet," 1864; "Taking Home the Bride," 1865; "Jewess accused of Witchcraft," 1866; "Even Song" (interior of Tong Church, Shropshire), 1867; "Chinese Ladies and European Curiosities," and "Roman Trireme at Sea," 1868; "Arab Storyteller," 1869; "Arab Prisoners," "The Basha's Black Guards," and "Arab Shepherds," 1870; "The Outpost," and "An Arab Patriarch," 1871; "Army Reorganisation in Morocco," "The Snake Charmer," and "A Fair Customer," 1872; "Jack Ashore," and "A Tunisian Bird-seller," 1873; "A Needy Knife Grinder," "Returning the Salute," and "Odd Fish," 1874; "A Barber's Shop in Tunis," "The Talisman," "A Cock-fight," and "The Turn of the Tide," 1875; "The Temple of Diana at Zaghuan," "Better have a New Pair," and "Following the Plough," 1876; "Commercial Activity in the East," "Pampered Menials," and "Relatives in Bond," 1877; "An Eastern Question," "Loot," and "The Pacha," 1878; "Say what shall be my song to-day," "I'll serenade no more," "Gehâzi, the servant of Elisha," and "The French Naturalist in Algiers," 1879; "Homeward Bound," 1880; "Bound for the Black Sea, 1854;" and "A Shipwrecked Sailor waiting for a Sail" (his diploma work, deposited on his election as an Academician), 1881; "A Day far spent," "Ilka Lassie has her Laddie," "Painter and Critic," "Hob-bema's Country," and "In the Low Countries," 1882; "Ragassel-ma: the Water-dance," 1883; and "Robert Burns at the Plough," 1887.

HOEY, Mrs. Frances Sarah, wife of John Cashel Hoey, Esq., C.M.G., of Dromalane, Newry, daughter of the late Charles Bolton Johnston, Esq., was born at Bushy Park, Rathfarnham, co. Dublin, Feb. 15, 1830. She married, in 1846, the late Adam Murray Stewart, Esq., of Cronleigh, co. Dublin, and secondly, in 1858, her present husband. Mrs. Cashel Hoey has written for several literary journals since 1860, and is the author of the following novels:—"A House of Cards," "Falsely True," "A Golden Sorrow," "Out of Court," "Griffith's Double," "All or Nothing," "The Blossoming of an Aloe," "No Sign," "The Question of Cain," 1882; "The Lover's Creed," 1884; and "A Stern Chase," 1886. Mrs. Cashel Hoey is a contributor to Chambers' Journal, Temple Bar, All the Year Round, Belgravia, London Society, and other periodicals, and is the translator of several works from the French and Italian languages. Among the former are "The Memoirs of Madame de Rémusat," "The King's Secret," "1794: a Tale of the Terror," "The Last Days of the Consulate," "Frederick the Great and Maria Theresa," and "The Surprising Exploits of Dr. Quies."

HOGG, Jabez, M.R.C.S., England, 1850, Fellow of the Royal Microscopical Society; First President of the Medical Microscopical Society, London; Honorary Fellow of the Academy of Science, Philadelphia, the Belgian and Canadian Microscopical Societies, the Medico-Legal Society, the Society of Medical Jurisprudence, New York, &c.; Consulting Surgeon to the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital, the Hospital for Women and Children, the Royal Masonic Institution, &c.; formerly and for 25 years Surgeon to the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital; Ophthalmic Surgeon to the N.W. London Hospital and the Hospital for Women and Children; and Vice-President of the Medical Society, London; is the youngest of the ten children born to John and Martha Hogg (née Mason). Jabez was born on Good Friday, April 4, 1817. At this time his father filled a responsible post in Chatham Dockyard, and had completed a term of service of nearly sixty years, when he retired. Jabez

Hogg received his early education at Mr. Giles' school, where he found Charles Dickens installed as one of the elder boys. The school on the death of Giles passed into other hands, and Hogg was then transferred to the Rochester Grammar School, which he left at the age of 15 and soon afterwards was apprenticed to a Medical practitioner, and for the next five years was incessantly engaged in the drudgery of the open shop or surgery. On the expiration of his term, he made his way to London to walk the hospitals, but instead of doing so, he engaged in scientific pursuits, and ultimately took to literary work. He wrote for a magazine, and was induced to prepare for publication "A Manual of Photography," 1843; This brought him into close contact with the late Mr. Herbert Ingram, the founder and proprietor of the Illustrated London News. He had a great idea that Photographic Art could be made available for the purposes of the newspaper, but after many trials, this proved a failure, although it has of late years become a great factor in newspaper as well as in book work. Mr. Ingram's success in combining pictures with letterpress news of the day, led him to undertake the preparation and publication of a number of Illustrated Education Works. The first of the series, "The Illustrated London Spelling Book," proved to be an enormous success, and was quickly followed by others, many of which were issued under the supervision of Mr. Hogg, or were the sole productions of his pen. "The Elements of Natural and Experimental Philosophy," 1853; "The History, Construction, and Applications of the Microscope," which has now passed through ten large editions, and remains to this day the text book of the Microscope. "The Illustrated London Almanack" Mr. Hogg has edited year after year from its first inception, forty-five years ago, to the present publication. Mr. Hogg was for a time on the Staff of The Examiner, and his letters to the Times newspaper on the water-question and the negotiation for the purchase of the Water Companies will be long remembered. Mr. Jabez Hogg studied medicine at the Charing Cross Hospital, and in 1850 he obtained the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons. Soon afterwards he became attached to the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital, to which, in 1855, he was appointed assistant surgeon. He subsequently became full surgeon, and remained for upwards of a quarter of a century one of its medical officers. He was also Ophthalmic Surgeon to the North Western Hospital, and other public Institutions. During this period he wrote and published several useful works on Eye Diseases, "The Ophthalmoscope in the Exploration of the Interior of the Eye," 1858; "A Manual of Ophthalmoscopic Surgery," 1863; "A Parasitic or Germ Theory of Disease," 1873; "The Impairment of Vision from Spinal Shock," 1878; "The Cure of Cataract," 1878, &c. He has been a constant and voluminous contributor to the Medical Journals and to various scientific publications; the Transactions of the Linnean, Microscopical and other societies; and his writings bear largely on subjects of vital importance on hygiene and public health. Mr. Hogg is well known in Freemasonry, in which Society he still takes a keen and active interest. Many years ago the Earl of Zetland conferred upon him the dignity of a Grand Officer of Grand Lodge.

HOGG, Quintin, is the youngest son of the late Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., Chairman of the old East India Company, and also brother of the late Lord Magheramorne. He was born in Feb., 1845, and was educated at Eton, his name first appearing in the school lists at the election of 1859. On leaving Eton, where, during his school-days, Mr. Hogg did much good work amongst his fellow-scholars, he at once took an active and personal interest in homeless boys. Soon after entering into business, his love for "his boys" (as from the very beginning he used to call them) grew so much that he took humble apartments in York Place, Strand, which he shared with six or eight of the lads that he had picked up, more or less destitute. This special work soon grew, until eventually he took a large warehouse in the neighbourhood of Drury Lane, which he fitted up as dormitories, and a home for about fifty working boys. All his leisure was devoted to the welfare of the lads, and he practically lived amongst them, sleeping in a special corner of the boys' dormitory. Being a great lover of physical exercise and sport, he also fitted up, in connection with the home, a gymnasium and a limited-sized playground. This initiated the movement which is now being continued by the Committee of the Homes for Working Boys, whose beneficent work has active agencies and branches in all parts of London. In time, evening classes were started in connection with the home by Mr. Hogg, assisted by his old school friends, Mr. (now Lord) Kinaird, and the Honourable T. H. W. Pelham. A Sunday School also was started, and soon there was a large number of boys in regular attendance, in addition to those who were residents of the Institution. Mr. Hogg's religious teaching was of the most practical character, he being stimulated in every effort he put forward with the idea of serving God; and all his works were founded upon Christian principles. No one realised in those days more than did Mr. Hogg that in order to enhance the spiritual well-being of the lads, equal care was necessary for their temporal welfare. Athletics and games were therefore encouraged, walking parties and excursions were organised, and, during the summer, Mr. Hogg would have all the boys with him for a week's holiday at his country residence. Large numbers of boys he apprenticed to various trades, himself paying the necessary premiums. The success of his work stimulated him to fresh effort, and in 1873 he started, in Endell Street, under the title of "The Youths' Christian Institute," an Association for those of his lads who were above sixteen years of age. At first the Institute consisted of only one room, which was let for other purposes during the day. The number of applications, however, so increased that soon the whole house was requisitioned. When success was assured, an application was made to affiliate the work with the Young Men's Christian Association, the proposition being to make this work the mechanics' branch. The authorities for the time being did not, however, receive the application with favour; a decision which in after days has been considered somewhat of a misfortune. Consequently the work went on, and has continued under Mr. Hogg's personal guidance. The work of the Institute was of so acceptable and attractive a character to youths and young men generally, that the membership gradually rose to 1,000, and when the premises of the old Polytechnic in Regent Street, came into the market in 1882, Mr. Quintin Hogg purchased them and adapted them for the work of his Institute. From that time, the membership numbers went up by leaps and bounds; and now, 1891, after the lapse of nine years, so remarkable has been the vitality and growth of the place, that last session the members and students exceeded the almost incredible figure of 12,000 all told. The work of the Polytechnic is of a three-fold character—viz., social, educational, and religious, but attendance at any of the religious meetings or classes is perfectly optional. Upon the purchase of the lease, and the adaptation and enlargement of premises, and their maintenance for the last nine years, during which period over 100,000 members and students have been enrolled, Mr. Hogg has expended over £100,000, and it is with considerable satisfaction that the friends of the Institution are viewing the proposals of the Charity Commissioners to grant such an endowment as will ensure the permanency of the Institution. For years, from early evening until closing time at night, he has been on the spot, making the acquaintance of members, and in many ways giving the Polytechnic boys the benefit of his experience and advice—being to them, to use the oft-quoted, though none the less true, adage, both “friend, philosopher, and guide.” We regret to say that this devotion to work has already told most seriously upon Mr. Hogg’s health, which for the last five or six years has given his friends great anxiety. Being an acute sufferer from an internal complaint, for which even the best physicians in the land have failed to provide a remedy, Mr. Hogg is compelled to winter abroad, the climate which suits him best being that of the West Indies, where, in connection with his immense sugar plantations, he can, to a degree, combine with the change of climate a certain amount of work. The periods, however, that he is in England are constantly devoted to his work at the Polytechnic. All this work is, however, but one aspect of what has been a very active business life. On leaving Eton, Mr. Hogg entered the old-established West Indian house of Bosanquet, Curtis, & Co., as a junior, and is now the head of the firm, its present title being Hogg, Curtis, Campbell & Co. That he has been eminently successful in business goes without saying; but with all his keen zest for commercial life, we do not err in stating that the warmest side of his heart has ever been towards schemes for the benefit of the young mechanics and artisans of London. Business claims have necessitated more foreign travel than falls to the lot of most men, and there is not a quarter of the globe in which Mr. Hogg has not, uniting business with the object nearest his heart, been able to study the social questions of the day. At one time he was much pressed to enter Parliament, and was in 1886 invited by the electors of Westminster to stand as their candidate. Indifferent health, however, and a feeling that public life would interfere with his work at the Polytechnic, caused him to decline the invitation. A few years later, however, upon the constitution of the London County Council, he was spontaneously elected Alderman. In 1871 he married the daughter of Mr. William Graham, the late M.P. for Glasgow, which lady entered with heart and soul into the work which her husband had made his chief pleasure, and took a motherly interest in the boys; conducting classes, meetings, &c., which interest she has kept up to the present day; one of the chief items in connection with the Polytechnic work being a Bible Class which Mrs. Hogg conducts on Thursday evenings, in addition to the classes which she superintends at the Young Women’s Branch of the Polytechnic.

HOHENLOHE-SCHILLINGSFURST, Clodwig Carl Victor, Prince of, born at Rothenburg, March 31, 1819, is the second son of Francis Joseph, Prince of Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst (of the line of Waldenburg). On the death of his father in 1841, Clodwig had just begun his judicial and historical studies in the University of Göttingen. A year later, after having passed his examination with distinction, he took a subordinate position in the public service as Auscultator in the Office of Justice at Ehrenbreitstein. He next became Referendary of the Government at Potsdam. While working thus diligently at his post in Prussia, the Landgrave of Hessen-Rheinfels-Rothenburg died, and the princely family of Hohenlohe succeeded to a rich inheritance, including the lordships of Ratibor and Corvey. The event, however, did not alter Clodwig’s position. His elder brother took the domains of Ratibor and Corvey, to which the King of Prussia, William IV., added the title of Duke. In 1845, on the death of his brother, Philip Ernest, Clodwig succeeded, with the consent of his elder brother, to the old family seat of Schillingsfurst, and, forsaking the Prussian service, took up his permanent residence in Bavaria. Thus at twenty-seven years of age he became an hereditary member of the Bavarian parliament. The ministry, meanwhile, in Frankfort, sent him as Ambassador to Athens, Florence, and Rome. In 1849 he returned to Frankfort. Having married the Princess of Sayn-Witgenstein, by whom he has a numerous family, he retired for some ten years into private life, paying frequent visits to England, France, and Italy. In 1860 the prince again entered upon parliamentary life, and favoured throughout an alliance with Prussia. Towards the end of 1866 the youthful king requested Hohenlohe to prepare and lay before him a programme of the principles which were to serve eventually as a ministerial policy. Prince Hohenlohe fulfilled his commission to the satisfaction of the king, and on Jan. 1, 1867, succeeded Pfordten as Bavarian Minister. The whole of Germany at last adopted the Hohenlohe programme. In 1868 and 1869, Prince Hohenlohe was elected Vice-President of the Customs Parliament of the German Federation. In his capacity as Foreign Minister of Bavaria, he issued his famous circular of April 9, 1869, directing the attention of the European cabinets to the serious consequences likely to arise from the decrees of the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican. Hoping to get the Pope to withdraw his political opposition, and viewing mere religious innovations with extreme indifference, the Prussian Government slighted the warnings of the Bavarian minister, and refused to take action against the contemplated decrees. In consequence of this desertion by the principal exponent of the Unity party, Prince Hohenlohe could not hold out against the attacks of the combined Particularists, Catholics, and Austriacanti in the Bavarian Parliament, and had to resign (March 7, 1870). He then resumed his seat in the Munich House of Peers; and in a few months, on France threatening war, made himself conspicuous by insisting upon the participation of Bavaria in the great national feud. Upon the successful termination of the war in 1871, he was elected member of the first German Parliament, and, in recognition of his patriotism, immediately became Vice-President thereof. In May, 1874, after the deplorable exit of Count Harry Arnim, Prince Hohenlohe was chosen German Ambassador in Paris. He was one of the German plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. In August of that year he was re-elected to the Reichstag on the second ballot, at Forchheim, Kulmbach, Bavaria, polling 9,800 votes, while his Catholic competitor had 8,600. After the death of Marshal Manteuffel, Prince Hohenlohe was appointed Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, a position which he still holds.

HOHENZOLLERN, Hereditary Prince of, H.R.H., Leopold-Etienne-Charles-Antoine-Gustave-Edouard-Thassilo, Prince of Hohenzollern, Burgrave of Nuremberg, Count of Sigmaringen and Veringen, Count of Berg and Seigneur of Haigerloch, &c., is the eldest son of the late Prince Charles Anthoine of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, and was born Sept. 22, 1835, and studied in the Universities of Bonn and Berlin. His Royal Highness succeeded his father on June 2, 1885; is an hereditary member of the Chamber of Seigneurs of Prussia; general of Prussian infantry in the suite of the first regiment of foot guards; chief of the "Prince Charles Antoine de Hohenzollern" regiment of fusiliers; and Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle, &c., and is well known in connection with his candidature for the throne of Spain, which ultimately gave rise to the Franco-German war. On Sept. 12, 1861, the Prince married, at Lisbon, the Princess Antonia of Portugal, Duchesse de Saxe, born Feb. 17, 1845, by whom he has three sons. He is said to be an excellent Spanish scholar.

HOLDEN, The Rev. Hubert Ashton, M.A., LL.D., member of an old Staffordshire family, was born in 1822, educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, under the late Bishops of Peterborough (Dr. Jeune) and Manchester (Dr. J. Prince Lee), and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1847. After having obtained in his first year of residence the First Bell University Scholarship, he graduated B.A. in 1845 as junior optime and senior classic. He discharged the duties of Assistant-Tutor and Classical Lecturer of his college from 1848 until 1853, when he was appointed the first Vice-Principal of Cheltenham College. From 1858 to 1883 he was Head Master of Ipswich School. In 1890 he was appointed by the Crown to a Fellowship of the University of London, in which he had been Classical Examiner for two periods, 1869—1874, and 1886—1890. Dr Holden has edited "Aristophanes," with notes (vol. i., 3rd edit., 1868; vol. ii., part only published, 1869); Collections of English Poetry and Prose, for translation into Greek and Latin, in four parts, entitled "Foliorum Silvula" (part I. edit. 11, 1888; part II., edit. 4, 1890, and part III., edit. 3, 1864); and "Foliorum Centuriæ" (edit. 10, 1888); select translations of the same, entitled "Folia Silvulæ" (vol. i. 1865, vol. ii. 1870); Cicero "De Officiis" (edit. 6, 1886); "Speech for Cn. Plancius" (edit. 2, 1883); Plutarch's "Lives of the Gracchi," 1885; "Life of Sulla," 1886; "Life of Nicias," 1887; "Life of Timoleon," 1889; Xenophon's "Cyropædia," in 3 vols. 1887—1890; and the "Octavius" of Minucius Felix, 1853, for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press; also Plutarch's "Life of Themistokles" (edit. 2, 1884), with introduction and commentary; Xenophon's "Hiero" (edit. 3, 1888); and "Economicus" (edit. 4, 1889); Cicero "Speech for P. Sestius" (edit. 3, 1889), for Macmillan's Classical Series.

HOLE, The Very Rev. Samuel Reynolds, D.D., Dean of Rochester, was born on

Dec. 5, 1819, is the son of Samuel Hole Esq., of Cauntton Manor, Notts, and was educated at the Grammar School, Newark-on-Trent, and at Brasenose College, Oxford. He was ordained Deacon, 1844; Priest, 1845; and became Curate of Cauntton, 1844; Vicar, 1850; Rural Dean of Southwell, 1865; Prebendary of Lincoln, 1875; Proctor in Convocation, 1875; Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1885; Select Preacher to the University of Oxford, 1885-6; and Dean of Rochester, 1887. Dean Hole is the author of "A Little Tour in Ireland," illustrated by John Leech, 1858; "A Book about Roses," 1859, this has run through many editions, and has been translated into several languages; "Six of Spades," 1860; "Nice and her Neighbours," 1881; "Hints to Preachers," 1881; and of numerous pamphlets, sermons, and speeches.

HOLE, William, R.S.A., only child of Richard Hole, M.D., of Salisbury, and Anne, his wife, the daughter of Dr. Fergusson, Governor of Sierra Leone, was born in Salisbury on Nov. 7, 1846. On the death of his father from cholera in 1849, his mother returned to her family then residing in Edinburgh, and her son was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University. In 1874 he was apprenticed to a firm of Civil Engineers. After four years he took a trip to Italy and developed latent artistic instincts in the congenial studio atmosphere of Rome. On his return he could find no employment as an engineer, and definitely abandoned that profession for art. He was trained, in a sort of way, at the Edinburgh School of Art, and then learned his business under Cameron and Chalmers at the school of the Royal Scottish Academy. He was elected associate of that body in 1878 and full Academician in 1889. He is also a member of the Royal Scottish Water-Colour Society, and of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. Mr. Hole's claim to distinction is perhaps chiefly due to his power as an etcher, in which art he certainly has taken a foremost place. His principal pictures are: "The End of the 45," 1879; "The Evening of Culloden," 1880; "Prince Charlie's Parliament," 1881; "The Fill of the Boats," 1883; "If Thou hadst known," 1884; "News of Flodden," 1886; "Gethsemane," 1887; and many portraits. His principal original etchings are: "Quasi Cursores," portraits of the professors of the Edinburgh University in its Tercentenary Year, 1884; and "The Canterbury Pilgrims," 1888 (36 inch plate). His other etchings are "Mill on the Yare," after Crome, 1888; "He is Coming," after Mattys Mario, 1889; "The Lawyers," after J. F. Millet, 1890; "Six plates after Thomson of Duddingstone," 1889; and many others. A large plate after Constable's "Leaping Horse," was published in the autumn of 1890. In 1876 Mr. Hole married Elizabeth, daughter of Lewis Lindsay, Esq., W.S.

He was ordained at Cuddesdon in 1872, and was afterwards Theological Tutor at Christ Church. He was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1882, Proctor in 1882-83, and Censor of Christ Church in 1883. In 1882 he was appointed Canon of Truro and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop, and in 1884 was made Canon of St. Paul's. He has published several volumes of sermons, "Logic and Life," 1882; "Good Friday at St. Paul's," "Creed and Character," 1886; "Christ or Ecclesiastes," 1887; "On Behalf of Belief," 1888; an article on "Justin Martyr," in the Dictionary of Christian Biography; and an Essay in "Lux Mundi."

After entering Oxford as a member of Balliol College, he obtained a Demyship at Magdalen; a First Class in the Final Classical School; a Fellowship at Exeter College; and a Chancellor's Prize. He was called to the Bar in 1863, and practised on the Home Circuit. In 1874 he was elected Vinerian Reader of English Law at Oxford, but resigned that office on being elected, a few months later, Chichele Professor of International Law. He has frequently been law examiner at Oxford, as also (1870-75) in the University of London, and (1878-80) to the Inns of Court. He is a member of the Institut de Droit International; a knight of the Order of the Crown of Italy; D.C.L. of Oxford; Fellow of All Souls' College; Assessor of the Chancellor's Court; Hon. Prof. in the University of Perugia; Hon. LL.D. of the Universities of Bologna and Glasgow; and Hon. Member of the University of St. Petersburg. Among his published works are "An Essay on Composition Deeds," 1864; "Essays on the Form of the Law," 1870; "The Institutes of Justinian as a recension of the Institutes of Gaius," 1873, 2nd edit. 1881; "Select Titles from the Digest" (with Mr. C. L. Shadwell), 1874-81; "Alberici Gentilis de Jure Belli," 1877; "The European Concert in the Eastern Question," 1885; "A Manual of Naval Prize Law," issued by authority of the Lords of the Admiralty, 1888; but he is probably best known by his "Elements of Jurisprudence," which, first published in 1880, is already in its fourth edition, and has become a text book in most English and American Universities and law schools.

HOLLINGSHEAD, John, son of Mr. Henry R. Hollingshead, of the Irish Chamber; born in London, Sept. 9, 1827, was educated at Homerton, and entered business early; but preferring journalism, became connected with several leading daily and weekly newspapers, as well as magazines. He joined the staff of Household Words in 1857; was a constant contributor to that periodical and to All the Year Round, the Cornhill Magazine, Good Words, and Once a Week. From 1859 to 1864 he published several volumes of essays and stories, chiefly on life in London. He has written one or two original dramatic pieces, and was for ten years the dramatic critic of the Daily News, London Review, &c., and is a member of the Dramatic Authors' Society. Mr. Hollingshead opened the Gaiety Theatre, in the Strand, in Dec., 1868, and he has only lately ceased to be its lessee and manager. He has had three metropolitan theatres under his direction at one time, with the most powerful combination of actors in London. He has also been the director of the principal theatre in Manchester. In 1879 he induced the whole Comédie Française to visit London and play for six weeks at the Gaiety. A collection of his writings was published under the title of "Miscellanies: Stories and Essays," 3 vols., 1874; two other small collections in 1882 and 1883, called respectively "Plain English" and "Footlights;" and in 1877 he made a successful adaptation of MM. Meilhac and Halévy's "La Cigale," under the title of "The Grasshopper." Mr. Hollingshead is a director of several large variety theatre companies in London, the provinces and abroad, and is the managing director of "Niagara in London," the popular panorama which Mr. Hollingshead organised for some American friends.

HOLMES, Oliver Wendell, M.D., Hon. LL.D. Cambridge, was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, Aug. 29, 1809. He graduated at Harvard College in 1829, and began the study of law, which he abandoned for that of medicine. Having attended the hospitals of Paris and other European cities, he began practice in Boston in 1836; in 1838 was elected Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in Dartmouth College; and in 1847 was appointed to a similar professorship in the Medical School of Harvard University, from which he retired in 1882. As early as 1831 his contributions in verse appeared in various periodicals, and his reputation as a poet was established by the delivery of a metrical essay, entitled "Poetry," which was followed by others in rapid succession. As a writer of songs, lyrics, and poems for festive occasions, he occupies the first place. He was for many years a popular lecturer. In 1857 he began, in the Atlantic Monthly, a series of articles under the title of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," which were followed, in 1860, by "The Professor at the Breakfast Table," in 1872 by "The Poet at the Breakfast Table," and in 1885 by "The New Portfolio." In addition he has published "Astræa," 1850; "Currents and Counter-Currents in Medical Science," 1861; "Elsie Venner, a Romance of Destiny," 1861; "Borderlands in some Provinces of Medical Science," 1862; "Songs in Many Keys," 1864; "Soundings from the Atlantic," 1864; "Humorous Poems," 1865; "The Guardian Angel," 1868; "Mechanism in Thought and Morals," 1870; "Songs of Many Seasons," 1874; "John L. Motley, a Memoir," 1878; "The Iron Gate and other Poems," 1880; "Medical Essays," 1883; "Pages from an Old Volume of Life," 1883; "Ralph Waldo Emerson," 1884; "A Mortal Antipathy," 1885; "Our Hundred Days in Europe," 1887; "Before the Curfew," 1888; and numerous poems recited at various réunions and dinners. In 1886 he visited England, where he was received with great cordiality. Editions of his collected poems have appeared from time to time, the first in 1836, the last in 1889. He has contributed largely to current medical literature, as well as to the literary journals and reviews. A series of genial papers from his pen, entitled "Over the Teacups," appeared in the Atlantic Monthly during 1890.

HOOK, James Clarke, R.A., was born in London, Nov. 21, 1819. His father, Mr. James Hook, was the Judge Arbitrator in the Mixed Commission Courts, Sierra

Leone, and his mother was the second daughter of Dr. Adam Clarke, the biblical commentator. The future artist was entered as a student of the Royal Academy in 1836, and his progress from the outset was marked and encouraging. He took the first Medals in the life and painting schools in 1842. He obtained the gold Medal for historical painting in 1845, the subject being "The Finding of the Body of Harold." Up to this time Mr. Hook had chiefly confined himself to subjects from English history, and occasional portraits. In 1846 he obtained the travelling pension of the Royal Academy for three years, and in the same year married the third daughter of Mr. James Burton, solicitor, and went to Italy. After eighteen months' absence he gave up half his pension, and returned to England. He now began painting subjects from Italian and French history and poetry, and occasionally from Scripture. Of this class may be mentioned the following, all exhibited at the Royal Academy: "Pamphilus relating his Story," a subject from Boccaccio, 1844; "The Song of Olden Time," 1845; "The Controversy between the Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham," 1846; "Bassanio commenting on the Caskets," a scene in the Merchant of Venice, 1847; "The Emperor Otho IV. and the Maid Gualdrada," 1848; "The Chevalier Bayard wounded at Brescia," also, "Othello's First Suspicion," and "Bianca Capello," 1849; "Escape of Francesco Novello di Carrara and the Lady Taddea," and "A Dream of Venice," 1850. Mr. Hook was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1850, and attained the full honours of the Academy in 1860. He exhibited "The Rescue of the Brides of Venice," and "The Defeat of Shylock," 1851; "The Story of Torello," from Boccaccio, and "Othello's Description of Desdemona," 1852; "The Chevalier Bayard knighted the Son of the Duke of Bourbon," and "Isabella of Castille and the Idle Nuns," 1853; "Incidents in the Persecution of the Protestants in Paris," 1854; and "Gratitude of the Mother of Moses for the Safety of her Child," 1855. About this period Mr. Hook returned to his first inclination, and devoted himself chiefly to pastoral and modern subjects. Of examples in his later style we may instance the following: "The Birthplace of the Streamlet," "The Market Morning," and "The Shepherd's Boy," 1855; "The Fisherman's Good-Night," 1856; "A Signal on the Horizon," and "The Ship-Boy's Letter," 1857; "A Pastoral," with a quaint inscription from Spenser, and "The Coast-Boy Gathering Eggs," 1858. Of late years Mr. Hook has devoted himself to marine subjects. "Luff, Boy!" "A Cornish Gift," and "The Skipper Ashore," 1859; "Leaving Cornwall for the Whitby Fishing," 1861; "The Trawlers," 1862; "Fish from the Doggerbank," 1870; "Salmon Trappers, Norway," "Norwegian Haymakers," "Market Girls on a Fjord," 1871; "As Jolly as a Sand-Boy," 1872; "Hearts of Oak," and "The Samphire Gatherer," 1875; "Crabbers," 1876; "A Gull Catcher," "The Coral Fisher, Amalfi," 1878; "Little to Earn and Many to Keep," "Mushroom Gatherers," and "Tanning Nets: Witches and Cauldrons from the Macbeth Country," 1879; "King Baby: the White Sands of Iona," "Home with the Tide," "Sea-Pools," and "Mussel-Gardens," 1880; "Diamond Merchants, Cornwall," and "Past Work," 1881; "Caller Herrin," and "Devon Harvest Cart: the Last Handful Home," 1882; "Catching a Mermaid," "Love Lightens Toil," "The Wily Angler," "Carting for 'Farmer Pengelly,'" 1883; "The Broken Oar," 1886; "The Sea-weed Raker," 1889; "Last Night's Disaster," and "A Jib for the New Smack," 1890.

HOOKER, Sir Joseph Dalton, M.D., K.C.S.I., C.B., P.P.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., D.C.L. (Oxon), LL.D. (Cantab., Dublin, Edin., and Glas.), is the second and only surviving son of the late Sir William Jackson Hooker, Regius Professor of Botany in Glasgow University, and subsequently Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, by Maria, eldest daughter of Mr. Dawson Turner, F.R.S., banker, of Great Yarmouth, Norfolk. He was born at Halesworth, Suffolk, June 30, 1817, and was educated at the High School and University of Glasgow, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1839. At the age of twenty-one he accompanied, officially as assistant-surgeon, but in reality as naturalist, the famous expedition of Sir James Clark Ross, fitted out by the Government for the purpose of investigating the phenomena of terrestrial magnetism in the South Circumpolar seas. The result of his researches during this voyage was a series of superb volumes on the botany of the Southern regions, embracing the flora of the Auckland Islands, New Zealand, and Tasmania. By a comparison of the new plants discovered by him with those of other parts of the world, he succeeded in advancing our knowledge of the laws which govern the distribution of plants over the surface of the earth. He returned to this country after an absence of four years. In 1846 he accepted the appointment of botanist

to the Geological Survey of Great Britain under Sir H. de la Bèlle, and he contributed a valuable paper to the second volume of the "Records" of that institution on the vegetation of the Carboniferous period as compared with that of the present day; and another on the structure of coal-fossils. In 1847 Dr. Hooker undertook a journey to India for the purpose of investigating the plants of tropical countries, and the flora of a hitherto unexplored region of the Himalayas. In the course of his travels in these remote districts he was for some time kept prisoner by the Rajah of Sikkim. He returned in 1851, and published two very interesting volumes of "Himalayan Journals," and a number of scientific works on the botany of India. In 1850, while in India, he published some beautiful sketches of rhododendrons from the Sikkim Himalaya, several of which have since been introduced into England. These expeditions, though partly at his own expense, were conducted under the authority of Government, which supplied some of the funds. He was appointed, in 1855, Assistant-Director of Kew Gardens; and, on his father's death, in 1865, succeeded to the Directorship, which he resigned in 1885. He was some time Examiner in Natural Science, of candidates for medical appointments in the Royal Army and in the late East India Company's service, and Examiner in Botany to the London University and Apothecaries' Company. In the autumn of 1860 he, the late Admiral Washington, and D. Hanbury, F.L.S., made a tour in Syria, during which he paid special attention to the oaks of that country. Dr. Hooker presided over the meeting of the British Association, held at Norwich in 1868. The main subject of his address, which gave rise to much controversy, was the consideration of the views put forward from time to time by Mr. Darwin on the doctrine of the continuous evolution of life, and in connection with this, on what is termed "natural selection," together with his theory of the "origin of species." To Darwin's notions, expressed in their fullest extent, Dr. Hooker gave his entire adhesion. He was appointed a Companion of the Bath (Civil Division) in 1869. In April, 1871, Dr. Hooker left England for Morocco, in company with Mr. John Ball, F.R.S., and Mr. G. Maw, F.L.S., his purpose being to collect the plants of that comparatively unexplored country. On the 16th of May he and his companions made the ascent of the Great Atlas, the summit of which mountain had never before been trodden by a European; and at the close of June he returned to Kew, bringing a large collection of plants. In 1873 Dr. Hooker was elected President of the Royal Society, and resigned in 1878, when the late Mr. W. Spottiswoode was chosen as his successor. In 1877 he was created Knight Commander of the Star of India, for his services to the Government of India. In that year he paid a visit of three months' duration to the United States, where he was most cordially received by the leading scientific men. On his return he presented to Kew a large collection of seeds and museum specimens, and herbarium of about a thousand species, together with notes on the distribution of the North American trees in particular. In 1854 he was awarded a Royal Medal; and, in 1887, the Copley Medal by the Royal Society. In 1884, the Founders' Medal of the Royal Geographical Society was awarded to him "for his eminent services in scientific geography;" and in 1883 the Society of Arts presented to him their Albert Medal for the services he has rendered to the arts, manufactures, and commerce by promoting an accurate knowledge of the floras and economic vegetable products of the several colonies and dependencies of the Empire. Sir Joseph is a member of various learned societies, and a corresponding member of the Institute of France. His works are:—"Botany of the Antarctic Voyage," 6 vols., 4to, 1847-1860; "Rhododendrons of the Sikkim-Himalaya," 1849-51; "Himalayan Journals," 2 vols., 8vo, 1854; "Genera Plantarum," 1862, et seq.; "The Student's Flora of the British Islands," 1870; "The Flora of British India," 1874; "Journal of a Tour in Morocco and the Great Atlas," 1878.

HOPETOUN, The Earl of, John Adrian Louis Hope, Governor of the Colony of Victoria, in succession to Sir Henry Loch, was born at Hopetoun House, N.B., Sept. 25, 1860, and is the son of the 6th Earl, and Etheldred Anne, daughter of C. T. S. Birch-Reynardson, Esq., and was educated at Eton College. He passed at Sandhurst in 1879, but did not enter the army. He was appointed Lieutenant, Lanarkshire Yeomanry 1880; is a Deputy-Lieut. for Linlithgow, Lanark, and Dumfries; and Justice of the Peace for Linlithgow. Earl Hopetoun was Junior Whip in the House of Lords from 1883 to 1886; was a Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1885-89; and was Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland 1887-88-89. He is Hon. Colonel of the Forth Submarine Mining Volunteer Corps; and was made Governor of the Colony of Victoria in 1889, and in the same year was made G.C.M.G. He married, in 1886, the Hon. Hersey Alice Eveleigh-de-Moleyns, daughter of the fourth Baron Ventry.

HOPKINS, Edward J., Mus. Doc., born in Westminster, June 30, 1818, was admitted at the age of eight, as a chorister in the Chapel Royal, St. James's, where he remained till his voice broke in 1833. He then became a pupil of Thomas Forbes Walmisley, organist of the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. About a twelvemonth afterwards, Sept. 17, 1834, Mr. Hopkins played for and obtained his first appointment, that of organist to Mitcham Church, Surrey, at the early age of sixteen. This post he exchanged for that of organist to St. Peter's, Islington, in 1838. The same year he obtained the Gresham gold medal for his anthem, "Out of the Deep:" and in the year 1840, he obtained a similar prize for his anthem, "God is gone up," the umpires being Dr. Crotch, Mr. W. Horsley, and Sir John Goss. In 1841 he accepted the position of organist to St. Luke's Church, Berwick-street, where he remained until 1843. During that time he executed a task calling for much diligence and patience, viz.:—that of "scoring" two sets of old madrigals from the separate and unbarred part books for the Musical Antiquarian Society,—Thomas Weelkes's first set of madrigals, 1597, and John Bennet's first set of madrigals, 1599; the former of which was published in the early part of 1843, and the other a few years later. About that time he began to publish a series of arrangements for the organ, the first three numbers of which were devised for the GG organ, to the use of which he had been trained; but the remainder of the series were laid out for the CC organ, to which, in conjunction with Dr. Gauntlett and Henry Smart, Mr. Hopkins became an early adherent. On May 7, 1843, Mr. Hopkins played his first probationary service at the Temple Church, and in the following October he was formally appointed "Organist to the Honourable Societies of the Temple," by the Treasurers and Benchers of those two ancient Inns. In 1849, the octave and a half of F pedals were removed from the Temple organ, and a proper set, of the range of two octaves and a half (from CCC to F), were laid down in their stead. For the opening of the organ with this important improvement, the service known as "Hopkins in F" was written, and was soon followed by the second service in A major. Previous to this, however, he had resumed publication of the series of organ arrangements for the CC organ, introducing the Continental oblong form for the printing; and he had also issued his "Four Preludial Pieces." In Sept., 1850, Mr. Hopkins delivered a course of four lectures at the Collegiate Institution, Liverpool, on "The Construction and Capabilities of the Organ, illustrated with Diagrams, etc.," which, on receiving the request that they should be printed, were developed into the book since entitled "The Organ: its History and Construction," by Dr. Rimbault and E. J. Hopkins. In 1880 Dr. Hopkins's history of the Organ appeared in Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music," and in 1883, at the request of the Treasurers of the two hon. societies, Dr. Hopkins undertook the rather heavy task of preparing a new book of the words of the anthems, and a pointed psalter with chants, for the express use of the Temple Church. Dr. Hopkins has composed a number of anthems, services, and voluntaries, and has received many honourable distinctions in recognition of his services to music.

HOPKINSON, John, F.R.S., D.Sc., was born at Manchester, in 1849, and is the eldest son of Mr. Alderman Hopkinson. His mother is a daughter of the late Mr. John Dewhurst, of Skipton. The rudiments of his education were obtained under Mr. C. Willmore, at Lindow Grove School, and subsequently at Queenwood College. In his sixteenth year he went to Owens College, where he remained for two and a half years, and then went to Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1871 he was senior wrangler and first Smith's prizeman. While at Cambridge he graduated at London University, where he took the D.Sc. degree. In 1872 he joined Messrs. Chance & Co., near Birmingham, as their engineer, and resided in Birmingham about six years, and then removed to London. He has introduced many improvements into lighthouse apparatus, notably the group flashing apparatus, and has been uniformly successful in all his designs, which now probably exceed in number, as far as special forms are concerned, those of any other engineer. Upon his removal to London, besides his special work, he commenced general practice as an engineer, and has since then devoted very careful attention to electrical engineering. His work in connection with dynamos has been very important. In his paper before the Mechanical Engineers in 1879 he first introduced the methods of graphically depicting certain phenomena by means of characteristic curves. The use of these curves has become as common and as useful in dynamo work as indicator curves are in engine work. Dr. Hopkinson's purely scientific work relates principally to electrostatics and magnetism, on which subjects he has presented several papers to the Royal Society. Papers by Dr. Hopkinson have been read also before the Institution of Civil Engineers, and the Institution of Electrical Engineers. Dr. Hopkinson was elected a member of the Royal Society in 1878; and, during 1890, one of the Society's Medals was awarded to him; and, in the same year, he was elected President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers.

HOPPS, John Page, was born in London, Nov. 6, 1834, and was educated in London and at the Baptist College, Leicester. He entered the Baptist ministry at Hugglescote and Ibstock, Leicestershire in 1855; and became assistant to The Rev. George Dawson at the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham, in 1858. He then accepted an invitation from a Unitarian Church at Sheffield; and afterwards was Unitarian minister at Dukinfield and Glasgow. At Glasgow he was elected a member of the first School Board, being the only representative there of the principle of secular education only in public schools. In 1876 he became minister of the Great Meeting, Leicester, where he now resides. For thirty years, in addition to the ordinary gatherings of his congregation, he has held meetings of working people on Sunday afternoons in public halls, at Birmingham, Sheffield, Manchester, Glasgow, and Leicester, for worship and "the uplifting of the life." During part of this time in Leicester he closed his chapel on winter evenings, and gathered together immense audiences of working people in the Floral Hall. He was proprietor and editor of the Truthseeker for twenty-five years, from 1863 to 1887, and is the author of a great number of works on theological and religious subjects, including a "Revised Old Testament" for young people, a "Life of Jesus," for the young, and several volumes of non-controversial sermons, also of various hymns and poems. He is the writer of the most widely circulated statement of the Unitarian Faith, of which four hundred thousand copies have been issued. The following are some of Mr. Hopps's sermons:—"Fear of Evil Mastered by Faith in God," "Self-possession through Endurance," "The Goodness of God in a World of Struggle," "Love for God a Power Working with us for Good." Mr. Hopps has always been a social reformer, and an advocate of co-operation, and a politician. In 1885 he contested South Paddington against Lord Randolph Churchill, and in 1889 was invited to be the Liberal candidate for St. Georges-in-the-East. He has written a series of papers on the Irish question, which have had a combined circulation of over a quarter of a million. He has been a frequent contributor to the Pall Mall Gazette, the Daily News, the Star, and the Echo. He is the editor of The Coming Day, the first number of which was published Jan. 1, 1891.

HOPWOOD, Charles Henry, Q.C., son of J. S. S. Hopwood, of Chancery Lane, solicitor, was born in July, 1829, and educated at a private school and afterwards at King's College, London. He became Barrister, of the Middle Temple, in 1853, practised on the Northern Circuit and in London, and was made Queen's Counsel in 1874. He was elected M.P. for Stockport, 1874, and was returned again in 1880, but rejected in 1885. He was elected Benchor of the Middle Temple, 1876, and Reader, 1885; was appointed Recorder of Liverpool, Feb., 1886; attained considerable practice, and was joint author of "Election Cases," Hopwood & Philbrick, and Hopwood & Coltman. He advocated the cause of Trades Unions, defending at the Bar their members against prosecution and insisting upon protection to their funds against the prejudice of the time. In the House of Commons he assisted in amending the laws as to Employers and Workmen, and pressed forward Reforms in the Summary Jurisdiction of Justices to reduce the frequency and length of imprisonments. He advocated the creation of a Court of Appeal in Indictable cases. He worked for the Repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts as to Women, as well as of the Vaccination laws. Always advanced in political opinions, he supported every extension of the Suffrage. He is earnest for a merciful administration of the criminal law, which he believes to be harsh and inconsiderate, producing conviction of the innocent, and despair, not reform, of the guilty.

HORE, Edward Coope, F.R.G.S., was born in Islington on July 23, 1848. His parents were of two old Cornish families. He was educated chiefly in a private school at Cambridge, and was apponticed, at the age of sixteen, to the owner of a London ship, and visited nearly every part of the world, serving on more than twenty different vessels, from the small coasting schooner to the first-class mail steamer, and passed through all the grades of apprentice, able seaman, boat-swain, third, second, and chief officer, and master. In March, 1877, Captain Hore was appointed to the London Missionary Society's pioneer expedition in Central Africa. He lived on the shores of Lake Tanganyika for about ten years, first at Ujiji, then at Niunkorlo (South end) and subsequently on Kavala Island. He surveyed the 1,000 mile coast line of Lake Tanganyika in a little log canoe, and discovered the Lukuga to be the true outlet of the lake. In 1884 Captain Hore returned to England to report upon his work. In 1882 he took the sections of a steel life-boat, on trucks, from Saadani to Ujiji, a distance of 836 miles, in less than 100 days. In 1888 he finished the building of the steam yacht the "The Good News," on Lake Tanganyika. Captain Hore received a gold chronometer from the Government of the French Republic for attention and assistance to the late Abbé Debaize; and, in 1890, received the Outhbert Peek grant from the Royal Geographical Society. Captain Hore is the author of "A Boat Journey Across Africa," and "A Ray of Light in the Dark Continent."

HORE, Annie Boyle, wife of the above Edward Coode Hore, was born in Bloomsbury, London, April 8, 1853. She was educated at Queen's College, and gained the Monteaigle Scholarship in 1867. In 1882 Mrs. Hore commenced her travels in Central Africa; the first journey she started from Saadani and reached Mambria, 200 miles inland, trying the experiment of wheels. In 1884 Mrs. Hore started from Quillimane to try to reach Tanganyika by the Nyassa route, but after a five days' journey up the Kwa-kwa river in a little open boat, she was obliged to turn back from Marandeni, on account of war between the Portuguese and the natives. A month later Mrs. Hore joined her husband at Delagoa Bay, and together they took the old road to Ujiji, via Saadani, Mpwapwa, Ugogo, and Uyamwezi. Mrs. Hore was the first white woman to reach the shores of Lake Tanganyika, and she spent nearly four years on Kavala Island, teaching the children the first rudiments of Christianity and civilisation. Mrs. Hore is the authoress of "To Lake Tanganyika in a Bath Chair," and "The Story of Little Jack the Boy Missionary."

HORNBY, Vice-Admiral Sir Geoffrey Thomas Phipps, K.C.B., is the son, by a sister of the late Field Marshal Sir John Burgoyne, of the late Admiral Sir Phipps Hornby, who served with great distinction in the French wars at the beginning of this century, who was a lieutenant on board the Victory when she carried Lord Nelson's flag, and who received a Gold Medal when in command of the Volage in Sir W. Hoste's action off Lissa. The present Admiral, born in 1825, entered the service on board the Princess Charlotte in 1837, and was present as a midshipman at the bombardment of Acre by Sir Robert Stopford and Sir Charles Napier. He afterwards served under Admiral Percy at the Cape of Good Hope, under his father, Sir Phipps Hornby, in the Pacific and on various other stations. He commanded the first flying squadron as captain, with the rank of commodore, taking the squadron round the world. He has besides had great experience in manœuvring fleets. He was Flag Captain to Sir Sidney Dacres, when that officer commanded the Channel Fleet, and, subsequently, as Rear-Admiral, he himself held that post, succeeding Admiral Wellesley. He attained flag-rank in 1869, and became Vice-Admiral in 1875. He was appointed Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's naval forces in the Mediterranean, and he held that responsible position during the trying times in 1878, when war was apprehended between this country and Russia, and when our fleet was ordered to the Dardanelles. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, Aug. 12, 1878. Subsequently he was appointed to succeed Admiral Sir Charles Shadwell as President of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, for a term of three years, to date from March 1, 1881. He served under Mr. Ward Hunt as a Lord of the Admiralty in Lord Beaconsfield's Administration, as his father had served in that of the late Lord Derby. He married, in 1853, Emily Frances, daughter of the late Rev. John Coles, of Ditcham Park, Hants. He is a magistrate for Sussex, in which county he owns the residential property of Little Green, near Petersfield.

HORNBY, The Rev. James John, D.C.L., third son of the late Admiral Sir Phipps Hornby, G.C.B., of Little Green, Sussex, was born at Winwick, in 1826, and educated at Eton under the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where, in 1849, he took a first-class in classics. In 1849 he became a Fellow of Brasenose College, and, in 1854, Tutor and Principal of Bishop Cosin's Hall in the University of Durham. Returning to Oxford, in 1864, he became Classical Lecturer at Brasenose; and, in 1866, was Senior Proctor of the University. At the close of the latter year he was elected Second Master of Winchester School, which post he retained till his appointment as Head Master of Eton, in Jan., 1868. Dr. Hornby was appointed one of Her Majesty's honorary chaplains in Feb., 1882, and made D.C.L. of Durham University the same year. He was appointed to the Provostship of Eton, July, 1884.

HORSLEY, John Callcott, R.A., son of the late William Horsley, the well-known musician, and grand-nephew of the late Sir Augustus Callcott, the eminent painter, was born in London, Jan. 29, 1817. His first exhibited picture, painted while he was a youth—"Rent-day at Haddon Hall in the Sixteenth Century"—was spoken of in high terms by Wilkie. "The Chess Players," "The Rival Musicians," "Waiting for an Answer," were first seen in the British Institution; and he exhibited, for the first time at the Academy, the "Pride of the Village" (now in the Vernon Gallery). This was followed by "The Contrast: Youth and Age," in 1840; "Leaving the Ball," another "Contrast," gay pleasure seekers on the one hand, the homeless outcast on the other, and "The Pedlar," both in 1841; "Winning Gloves," in 1842; and "The Father's Grave," in 1843. In the latter year Mr. Horsley's cartoon of "St. Augustine Preaching," gained at Westminster Hall one of the three prizes in the second rank, of £200; and in the trial of skill of 1844 he obtained, by his two small frescoes, a place among the six painters commissioned to execute further samples for the Palace at Westminster. That of 1845, for "Religion," was approved, and the subject executed at large in the House of Lords. In 1847 his colossal oil painting, "Henry V., believing the King dead, assumes the Crown," secured a premium of the third class. Another fresco, which he has been employed to execute, "Satan surprised at the Ear of Eve," is to be seen in a portion of the New Palace, called Poet's Hall. Amongst his later works are "Malvolio's Sun practising to his own Shadow;" "Hospitality;" "The Madrigal—Keep your Time;" "The Pet of the Common;" "L'Allegro and Il Penseroso" (painted for the late Prince Consort); "Lady Jane Grey and Roger Ascham;" "A Scene from Don Quixote;" "Flower Girls—

In 1882 Mr. Horsley was elected Treasurer of the Royal Academy. He has been very active in bringing together the magnificent collections of "Old Masters" displayed every winter since 1870 at Burlington House.

HORT, The Rev. Fenton John Anthony, D.D., born in Dublin, April 23, 1823, was educated at the Rev. J. Buckland's, Laleham, and at Rugby School, and graduated, in 1850, at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was a Junior Optime in the Mathematical Tripos, and was bracketed third classic. He took honours in the Moral Sciences Tripos, obtaining a first class, and also being awarded the Moral Philosophy Prize, then given by the late Dr. Whewell, the Professor of Moral Philosophy. Mr. Hort won the second place in the First Class of the Natural Sciences Tripos, being distinguished in Physiology and Botany. In 1852 he was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College, which he held until 1857. In that year he was presented to the college living of St. Ippolyts, with Great Wymondley, Hertfordshire, a preferment which he held until 1872, when he returned to Cambridge on being elected a Fellow of Emmanuel College. Since 1872 he has been a constant resident in the University, and has delivered lectures on Theology. He was examining chaplain to the Bishop of Ely (Dr. Harold Browne) from 1871 to 1873, and upon the translation of Bishop Browne to the see of Winchester, Dr. Hort was retained as one of the examining chaplains to that prelate. In 1871 he was elected Hulsean lecturer, and, in 1875, was appointed Lady Margaret's Preacher. On Dec. 18, 1878, he was elected to the Hulsean Professorship of Divinity, vacant by the promotion of the Rev. J. J. S. Perowne to the Deanery of Peterborough. Dr. Hort has contributed numerous articles to Smith and Wace's "Dictionary of Christian Biography," and the "Journal of Philology;" and published, in 1876, "Two Dissertations"—(1) "On Monogenes Theos in Scripture and Tradition," (2) "On the Constantinopolitan and other Eastern Creeds of the Fourth Century." Conjointly with Dr. Westcott he edited a critically revised Greek Text of the New Testament, with an Introduction and critical Appendix in an accompanying volume (1881). He was a member of the company for the Revision of the New Testament. Dr. Hort has several times examined for the Natural Sciences, Moral Sciences, and Theological Triposes. He is a member of the Board of Theological Studies, and a member of the Council of the Senate of the University of Cambridge, and has been a member of the Board of Historical Studies.

HORTON, The Rev. Robert Forman, M.A., an eminent preacher, was born in London, Sept. 18, 1855, and is the son of the Rev. T. G. Horton, at that time minister of Tonbridge Chapel. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, New College, Oxford, of which he was a Fellow, and was Resident in Oxford as Lecturer until the year 1884; but was excluded from a professorship there by reason of his Nonconformist views. He has been Minister of Lyndhurst Road Church, Hampstead, since 1884; and has published the following works: "History of the Romans," and "Inspiration and the Bible."

HOSMER, Harriet, born at Watertown, Massachusetts, Oct. 9, 1830, was educated at Lenox, Massachusetts, and early displayed a taste for art. She received a few lessons in modelling in Boston, and then entered a medical college in St. Louis to study anatomy and dissection. Her first work in marble was a reduced copy of Canova's bust of Napoleon, which was soon followed by an ideal work, "Hesper, or the Evening Star." In 1852 she went to Rome, and became a pupil of Gibson. After two years of study and modelling from the antique, she produced the busts of "Daphne" and "Medusa." Her first full-length figure in marble was Enone, completed in 1855, and this was followed in the same year by "Puck," of which many copies have been made. Next came a companion piece "Will-o'-the-Wisp." Her reclining statue of "Beatrice Cenci," was completed and exhibited in 1857. A colossal statue of "Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, in chains," was her next important work, followed by the "Sleeping" and the "Waking Faun," and a design of a memorial monument to Abraham Lincoln. Besides her skill in sculpture, Miss Hosmer has exhibited talents for designing and constructing machinery and devising new processes, especially in connection with her own art, such as a method of converting ordinary Italian limestone into marble. She has resided for many years in Rome, making occasional visits to the United States.

HOW, The Right Rev. William Walsham, D.D., Bishop of Wakefield, son of William Wybergh How, Esq., of Shrewsbury, was born in that town, Dec. 13, 1823. From Shrewsbury School he proceeded to Wadham College, Oxford (B.A. 1847). He was successively curate of St. George's Kidderminster, 1846; and of Holy Cross, Shrewsbury, 1848; and was collated to the rectory of Whittington, Shropshire, in the diocese of St. Asaph, in 1851. In 1853 he was appointed rural dean of Oswestry, and diocesan inspector of schools; in 1860 he obtained an honorary canonry in St. Asaph's Cathedral; and in 1869 was elected Proctor in Convocation for the diocese. He was one of the Select Preachers at Oxford in 1868-69; and in 1878 he was appointed examining chaplain to the Bishop of Lichfield. In 1879 he obtained the rectory of St. Andrew Undershaft with St. Mary Axe, in the City of London, and became a Prebendary in St. Paul's Cathedral; in July the same year the Queen appointed him Suffragan Bishop of Bedford; and, in Feb., 1888, he was translated to the Bishopric of Wakefield. He is the author of various works of a theological and practical character, including "Plain Words," four series; "Practical Sermons," "Lent Lectures on Psalm li," "Daily Family Prayer for Churchmen," "Pastor in Parochia," "Plain Words to Children," "The Parish Priest," "Cambridge Pastoral Lectures," "Words of Good Cheer," and "Poems;" also a "Commentary on the Four Gospels," and "Holy Communion."

HOWARD, His Eminence Edward, Cardinal Priest of the Roman Church, was born at Nottingham, Feb. 13, 1829, being the only son of the late Edward Gyles Howard, Esq., who was the son of Edward Charles Howard, youngest brother of Bernard Edward, fifteenth Duke of Norfolk. In his youth he served Her Majesty Queen Victoria as an officer in the 2nd Life Guards, but when 26 years old he became a priest in Rome, and attached himself entirely to the service of Pius IX. For about a year he was employed in India in the matter of the Goa schism; and the rest of his ecclesiastical career was spent in Italy. His graceful and dignified bearing was familiar to frequenters at St. Peter's, in which Basilica Archbishop Howard holds the office of archpriest's vicar. He was consecrated Archbishop of Neo Cæsaria, in partibus infidelium, in 1872, when he was made Coadjutor Bishop of Frascati, an office which he held for only a few weeks. He was created a Cardinal Priest by Pope Pius IX., March 12, 1877, the titular church assigned to him being that of SS. John and Paul, on the Celian Hill. His Eminence took possession, as Protector, of the English College in Rome, March 24, 1878. In Dec., 1881, he was nominated Archpriest of the Basilica of St. Peter's, and in that capacity he also became Prefect of the Congregation, which has the care of the edifice itself. Cardinal Howard's attainments as a linguist are remarkable. He speaks Arabic, Armenian, and Russian fluently; but his work is practically ended, for he is, we regret to state, suffering from an affection of the brain.

HOWARD, Sir Henry Francis, G.C.B., second son of the late Henry Howard, Esq., of Corby Castle, Cumberland, was born in 1809, educated at Stonyhurst and the University of Edinburgh. He was attached to the mission at Munich in 1828; was several times Chargé d'Affaires; was appointed paid Attaché at Berlin in 1832; Secretary of Legation at the Hague in 1845; was transferred to Berlin in 1846; and was Chargé d'Affaires several times during the succeeding years. He was appointed Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister-Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Brazil in 1853; was transferred to Lisbon, in 1855; and to Hanover in 1859, when he was appointed Minister-Plenipotentiary to Brunswick and to Oldenburg; and was made a K.C.B. in 1863. Whilst in Berlin, in 1850-52, the task of negotiating the famous treaty of 1852 mainly devolved upon him. He was appointed Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister-Plenipotentiary to the King of Bavaria, Jan. 19, 1866; and was created a G.C.B. in 1872.

HOWARD, General Oliver Otis, LL.D., was born at Leeds, Maine, Nov. 8, 1830. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1850; and in 1854 at the Military Academy at West Point, where, in 1857, he was made instructor, and later Assistant-Professor of Mathematics. Upon the breaking out of the civil war he was made Colonel of a regiment of volunteers; commanded a brigade at the battle of Bull Run; and was made (Sept. 3, 1861) Brigadier-General of volunteers. He lost his right arm at the battle of Fair Oaks, June 1, 1862. He was made Major-General of volunteers, Nov. 29, 1862; and had the command of a division, at Burnside's defeat at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862. Soon after, he was placed in command of the 11th army corps, which was attacked at evening by the Confederate General Jackson, and put to flight, at Chancellorsville, July 1, 1863. He received the thanks of Congress for taking the position of success at Gettysburg. In the following autumn he was sent with his corps to the West; took part in the campaign which followed down to the capture of Atlanta, and commanded the right wing of the army during Sherman's "march to the sea." He was, in Dec., 1864, promoted to Brigadier-General, and in the following March to Brevet-Major-General in the regular army. In May, 1865, he was placed at the head of the Freedman's Bureau, his duties lasting until 1874; and he served also from 1869 to 1873 as President of Howard's University. In 1872 he was sent as special commissioner to the Indians in New Mexico and Arizona; and from 1874 to 1881 he commanded the Department of Columbia on the Indian frontier. In 1881 he took charge for two years of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point; and was subsequently transferred to the command of the Department of the Platte. In 1886 he received his full rank of Major-General, and is now (1891) in charge of the Division of the Atlantic. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Waterton College (Maine) in 1865.

HOWELLS, William Dean, was born at Martinsville, Ohio, March 1, 1837. In 1840 he removed to Hamilton, Ohio, with his father, who was a printer and journalist. He learned the printer's trade of his father, and was afterwards editorially connected with the Cincinnati Gazette, and the Ohio State Journal. From 1861 to 1865 he was United States Consul at Venice. Returning to America, he engaged in literary labour, and in 1871 became editor of the Atlantic Monthly, a position which he retained until 1880, when he relinquished it to devote himself exclusively to writing. Besides his papers in that magazine and other periodicals, he has published "Poems of Two Friends," himself and J. J. Piatt, 1860; "Life of Abraham Lincoln," 1860; "Venetian Life," 1866; "Italian Journeys," 1867; "No Love Lost," 1868; "Suburban Sketches," 1870; "Their Wedding Journey," 1872; "A Chance Acquaintance," and "Poems," 1873; "A Foregone Conclusion," 1874; "Counterfeit Presentment," a Comedy, and "A Day's Pleasure," 1876; "The Parlour Car," "Out of the Question," and "Life of Rutherford B. His latest work "The Shadow of a Dream," 1890. Under the title of "Choice Biography," he edited, in 1877-78, a series of eight small volumes. For several years he has conducted a regular department, The Editor's Study, in Harper's Magazine. All his works have been largely circulated in England, where, of late years, he has become almost as well known as in his own country.

HOWLAND, The Hon. Sir William Pearce, C.B., K.C.M.G., was born at Pawlings, Duchess Co., N.Y., May 29, 1811, but removed to Canada in 1830. He at once engaged in business at Toronto, and in time became one of the largest mill-proprietors in the Dominion. He was returned for West York in 1857, and sat in the Legislature of Canada until 1868, when he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. In 1862 he became a Member of the Executive Council of Canada; from 1862 to 1863 he served as Minister of Finance; 1863-4 as Receiver-General; and 1864-6 as Postmaster-General. Galt as Finance Minister, and on the Formation of the first Dominion Government, in the following year, he accepted the portfolio of Minister of Inland Revenue, and was sworn a member of the Privy Council. That position he resigned in 1868 on accepting the Lieutenant-Governorship, held by him till 1873. He was created a C.B. in 1867 and a K.C.M.G. in 1879.

HOWORTH, Henry Hoyle, M.P., Corr. Member of the Royal Academy of Lisbon and of the Geographical Society and Anthropological Society of Italy, F.S.A., M.R.A.S., &c., is the son of the late Henry Howorth, of Lisbon, merchant, and was born in Lisbon, July 1st, 1842, educated at Rossall School, and called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, June 11, 1867. He has devoted himself chiefly to literature and politics, and is the author of a large work on the "History of the Mongols," of which several volumes are published, and which is still in progress; a "History of Chinghiz Khan and his Ancestors," based upon an entirely new chronicle of the race found in the Peking Library, this work has been published in a series of over 30 chapters in the Indian Antiquary; of a considerable geological work entitled "The Mammoth and the Flood," discussing the problems arising out of the destruction of so-called palaeolithic man and his contemporaries and involving an attack upon the current theories of Uniformity, and has edited a work on the "History of the Vicars of Rochdale," for the Chetham Society. In addition he has written more than seventy scientific memoirs, chiefly on geological, ethnographical and historical subjects. Among these are several series of papers on the Westerly Drifting of Nomades, on the Early Ethnography of Germany, on the Spread of the Slavs, in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute; a similar series on the Northern Frontiers of China, in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society; and a series on the Early Expeditions of the Scandinavians, in the Journal of the Royal Historical Society. He has also contributed memoirs to the International Congress of Orientalists, to the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society, the Archæologia, the Geological Magazine, the Journal of the Numismatic Society, the Quarterly, Edinburgh, and other reviews; and has contributed numerous letters to the Times, Spectator, &c., on political and social subjects, &c. He is a Magistrate for Lancashire; and for more than twenty years he has been actively interested in Lancashire politics, and is a Vice-President of the Manchester Conservative Association. He is a Trustee of Owens College, a Feoffee of Chetham's College and Library, and a Trustee of Henshaw's Blue-Coat School and Asylum. Mr. Howorth was elected as Conservative Member for South Salford at the general election of 1886, and is a member of the Carlton and Atheneum Clubs.

HÜBNER, Baron Joseph Alexander, diplomatist, was born in Vienna, Nov. 26, 1811. After completing his studies in Vienna he travelled for some time in Italy, and on his return in 1833 received from the late Prince Metternich a post in the State Chancellerie. In 1837 he accompanied Count Apponyi's embassy to Paris, but in 1838 was recalled by his patron, Prince Metternich. In 1840 he was made Secretary to the Austrian Embassy sent to the late Queen Maria da Gloria of Portugal, the relations between Austria and Portugal having been for a long time suspended. He was appointed Chargé d'Affaires at Leipzig in 1844, and was shortly afterwards Consul-General of Austria. During the troubles of 1848, Baron Hübner was intrusted with the conduct of the Archduke Regnier's correspondence as the Viceroy of Lombardy; and when the populace got the upper hand, he was detained at Milan as a hostage, but was soon exchanged. He joined the Emperor of Austria at Olmütz, was sent in 1849 on a special mission to Paris, and shortly afterwards became Austrian Ambassador in that capital. In 1856 he signed the treaty of Paris, having, during the Crimean War, been instrumental, it is supposed, in preventing his sovereign from taking part with Russia, and in ensuring his neutrality. It was to Baron Hübner that the Emperor of the French made the memorable declaration, Jan. 1, 1859, that his Government was dissatisfied with that of Austria. Baron Hübner was recalled from Paris in 1859, and after being employed in several delicate diplomatic missions, especially at Naples and Rome, he was recalled from the latter city in Aug., 1859, in order to enter, as Minister of Police, the new Cabinet which had just been formed in Vienna. The latter post, however, he held only a few months, and he then lived in retirement for several years. In Jan., 1866, he was again placed at the head of the Austrian Embassy in Rome, and in Oct., 1867, he was entrusted with the conduct of the negotiations with Rome in reference to the repudiation of the Concordat. He was soon afterwards recalled. Baron Hübner is Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. A translation, by Mrs. E. H. Jerminham from the original French, of Baron Hübner's admirable "Life and Times of Sixtus the Fifth," appeared in London, in 2 vols., 1872. His latest book, "Through the British Empire," appeared in French in 1885, and has been translated. It is full of praise of the English rule in India, and of the British Colonies.

HUDLESTON, Wilfrid H., M.A., F.R.S., is the son of John Simpson, of Knaresborough, M.D., who in April, 1867, assumed by royal license the surname of Hudleston, in right of his wife, Elizabeth, heiress of line of the Hudlestons of co. Cumberland. He was born at York, June 2, 1828, and educated at York and at Up-pingham, and afterwards at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1850. During the period between 1855 and 1860 he travelled in Lapland, Algeria, Greece, Turkey, and other countries, as an ornithologist, and contributed articles to the earlier numbers of the Ibis. Of late years he has paid much attention to the study of geology, and has written numerous papers, reviews and addresses, which have appeared in the Proceedings of the Geologists' Association, the Geological Magazine, the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Mineralogical Magazine, the issues of the Palæontographical Society, and in other publications. He is a Past President of the Geologists' Association, of the Mineralogical Society, of the Malton Field Naturalists' Society, and of the Yorkshire Naturalists' Union. He was elected President (1889-90) of the Devonshire Association for the Advancement of Science, Literature and Art, and in 1890 retired from the secretaryship of the Geological Society of London.

HUDSON, Charles Thomas, M.A., LL.D. (Cantab), F.R.S., son of John Corrie Hudson, Esq., of Guildford, was born at Brompton, London, in 1828, and was educated at the Grange, Sunderland. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1848, and was 15th Wrangler in 1852. He was President of the Royal Microscopical Society in 1888, 1889, and 1890, and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1889. He is joint author with Mr. P. H. Gosse, F.R.S., of Hudson and Gosse's "Rotifera," and is the discoverer of Pedalion mirum, and of numerous new genera and species of Rotifera, described in papers published in the Journal of the Royal Microscopical Society, Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science, and the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, from 1869 to the present year. Dr. Hudson is specially distinguished for his knowledge of the Rotifera, concerning which he is the chief living authority. Professor E. Ray Lankester says: "The genus Pedalion, discovered and described by Dr. Hudson, is one of the most remarkable and important contributions

HUGGINS, William, F.R.S., Hon. F.R.S.E., D.C.L. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Cantab., Edin., and Dublin), Ph.D. (Leyden), was born in London, Feb. 7, 1824, and received his early education at the City of London School. He afterwards continued his studies in mathematics, classics, and modern languages with the assistance of private masters. Much of his time was given to experiments in natural philosophy, and he collected apparatus by the use of which he gained considerable practical knowledge of the elements of chemistry, electricity, magnetism, and other branches of physical science. In 1852 he was elected a member of the Microscopical Society, and for some years he applied himself with much assiduity, with the aid of the microscope, to the study of animal and vegetable physiology. In 1855 Mr. Huggins erected an observatory at his residence at Upper Tulse Hill, and occupied himself for some time with observation of double stars, and with careful drawings of the planets Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn. From the first establishment of his observatory it was his desire not to continue in the beaten track of astronomical observation, but, if possible, to bring to bear upon the science of astronomy the practical knowledge which he had obtained of general physics. For his important discoveries and researches by means of the spectroscopic applied to the heavenly bodies, Mr. Huggins received, in Nov., 1866, one of the Royal Medals placed at the disposal of the Royal Society, of which he had previously, on June 1, 1865, been elected a Fellow. In 1867 the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society was awarded to Mr. Huggins and Dr. Miller for their conjoint researches. Dr. Huggins has since continued his prismatic researches by a re-examination of the nebulae with a more powerful spectroscopic, by which his former results have been confirmed. He has also examined the spectra of four comets, and has found that the greater part of the light of these objects is different from solar light. Dr. Huggins has made observations of the spectra of the solar prominences, and devised the method by which the forms of these objects may be seen. From 1875 Dr. Huggins has been engaged in obtaining photographs of the ultra-violet portions (invisible to eye observation) of the spectra of the stars. This difficult research has led to important results, and has opened quite a new field of work to the astronomer; it furnishes one of the chief data which we

at present have as to the probable relative ages of the stars, and of the sun. Dr. Huggins has extended this method of research to the planets, to comets, to the Great Nebula in Orion and to other nebulae; new results of importance being obtained. For these newer researches, and for that on the motion of stars in the line of sight, Dr. Huggins has a second time received a medal from the Royal Society, the Rumford Medal being conferred upon him in 1880; also a Prix Valtz (1883) from the Institute of France; and the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society for the second time (1885). The research on the motions of the stars in the line of sight was, indeed, a new departure of the utmost importance in astronomical physics. It has since been followed up at Greenwich, and at Potsdam and Harvard, by means of photography. Besides revealing to us the orbits of many stars, and otherwise undetectable companion stars, the study of line of sight motions must certainly widely increase our knowledge of the general laws and arrangements of the stellar universe. Dr. Huggins delivered the Rede Lecture at the University of Cambridge in 1869, when he gave an account of his researches in astronomy by means of the spectroscopic. In May, 1870, he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge, and at the Commemoration at Oxford the same year, the degree of D.C.L. On the occasion of the meeting of the British Association at Edinburgh, in 1871, he was created honorary LL.D. of that University. A large duplex telescope, by Messrs. Grubb, of Dublin, consisting of an achromatic of fifteen inches, and of a reflector of eighteen inches, constructed at the expense of the Royal Society, was placed, in 1871, in Dr. Huggins's hands, and fixed in the observatory erected by him at Upper Tulse Hill. In July, 1872, he was elected a Foreign Member of the ancient University, Dei Lincei, in Rome. In the October of the same year the Academy of Sciences of Paris awarded the Lalande Prize for Astronomy to Dr. Huggins, as an acknowledgment of his researches in the physical constitution of the stars, planets, comets, and nebulae. The Emperor of Brazil, who has twice paid long visits to Dr. Huggins's observatory, honoured him with the distinction of Commander of the Order of the Rose in March, 1873. About the same time he was elected a Foreign Member of the Royal Society of Denmark, and also of the Philosophical Society of Lund. In Jan. 1874, he received the honour of being elected a Corresponding Member of the Academy of Science of Paris. At the tercentenary commemoration of the University of Leyden, in 1875, Dr. Huggins received the honorary degree of Doctor of Physics and Mathematics. In 1877 he was elected a Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Göttingen, and a member of the Royal Society of Bohemia. In 1886 he received the degree of LL.D. honoris causâ from the University of Trinity College, Dublin; and in 1888 the Prix Janssen from the Institute of France; he is also an honorary Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and of various other learned Societies at home and abroad. Dr. Huggins was President of the Royal Astronomical Society from 1876 to 1878, and he is President Elect of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, for 1891.

HUGHES, Professor David Edward, F.R.S., was born in London in 1831; his parents, however, emigrated to the United States. He was, in 1850 (on account of his great musical talents), appointed Professor of Music at the College of Bardstown in Kentucky. His equal talents for physical sciences and mechanics later on procured him the appointment to the chair of Natural Philosophy at the same College. His first great invention was that of the printing telegraph which bears his name. In 1854, Professor Hughes went to Louisville to superintend the making of his first instrument, but the patent for it was not taken out in the United States until 1855. In that year the invention became a practical success, and no sooner was this the case, than Professor Hughes received a telegram from the editors of the American Associated Press summoning him to New York. The American Telegraph Company was then in possession of the Morse instrument, and levied rates for transmission which were felt to be excessive. The Hughes type-printer was therefore taken up in opposition to the Morse. A company was formed, and the lines of several small companies were leased. In 1857 these smaller companies united to form one large corporation—the present Western Union Telegraph Company. In that year Professor Hughes came to England in order to effect its introduction here, but the English authorities metaphorically threw cold water on his invention, and he could not, at that time, persuade the telegraph companies here even to try it; so, after three years' fruitless efforts, he went to France, where the French Imperial Government at once put the instrument in practical use as an experiment between Lyons and Paris. At the end of that trial a provisional contract was made with Professor Hughes for the right to the use of the instrument for all the French lines; stipulating that the experimental trials should be continued and extended between Marseilles, Lyons, Paris, and Bordeaux for twelve months, during which a Committee of the highest scientific experts should watch and report upon the results obtained. The report of this Committee being highly favourable, the French Government, in 1861, adopted the Hughes Instrument for all their important lines. The Emperor Napoleon III. took great interest in the invention, and often sent for Professor Hughes in order to consult him privately upon several of his majesty's own electrical inventions. Professor Hughes was nominated, in 1862, Chevalier de la Legion d'Honneur, and made a member of the Telegraph Commission de Perfectionnements. In the latter capacity he undertook, in conjunction with Professor Guillemin, at the request of the Government, a series of experiments upon the comparative value of the Lightning protectors then in use. These experiments were made at the laboratory of the École de St. Cyr, and formed the subject of memoirs published in the Comptes Rendus of the Academy of Science. At the end of the year 1862, the Italian Government invited Professor Hughes to visit Italy, and instruct their officers in the use of his instrument. This was done, and the instrument was tried probationally for six months, between Florence, Genoa, and Turin, at the end of which time the Hughes system was adopted for all their important lines. In 1863, the United Kingdom Telegraph Company of England adopted the Hughes instrument for their lines. In 1864, Professor Hughes was invited by the Russian Government to visit St. Petersburg, where he remained nine months, during which he had the honour of being a guest of the Emperor in the Summer Palace of Czarskivizelo, where he was requested to explain his invention, and also to give a lecture on electricity to the Czar and his court. His instrument was adopted for all long Russian telegraph lines, and he was made a Knight of the Order of St. Anne. Between 1864 and 1876, Professor Hughes was called successively to Germany, Austria, Turkey, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, and Spain, where his telegraph system met with the same thorough adoption. In 1878, Professor Hughes announced through a paper to the Royal Society his discovery of the microphone.

This instrument not only transmits speech, but magnifies the smallest sound, so that it is easy to render audible the faintest sound, such as the walk of a fly! The microphone is now universally employed as the transmitter to the telephone. In 1879, he presented to the Royal Society his invention of the Induction Balance, now well known to the scientific world. In 1880, Professor Hughes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and he has since read numerous papers upon electricity and magnetism before that Society, for which, together with his discovery of the Microphone and invention of the Induction Balance, the Royal Society, in 1885, bestowed upon him their Royal Gold Medal. The Post Office in England now (1891) makes use of the Hughes system for all its Continental messages, and it is in active service in all the large cities of the Continent. In 1881, Professor Hughes represented Great Britain as one of the Commissioners at the Paris Electrical Exhibition; and in 1886 he was elected President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. He has received numerous Orders of knighthood, Medals and Diplomas from the different countries which have appreciated his works. Professor Hughes is Commander of the Legion d'Honneur (France); Charles III. (Spain); Iron Crown (Austria); Medjidieh (Turkey); and Knight of St. Anne (Russia); St. Maurice and St. Lazarus (Italy); St. Michael's (Bavaria); and he received the special Gold Grand Prix, (one of ten only) Paris Exhibition, 1867; as well as the Grand Diplome d'Honneur, Paris Electrical Exhibition, 1881; besides numerous other Medals and titles of less importance.

HUGHES, Col. Edwin, M.P., was born at Droitwich, Worcestershire, May 27, 1832, and educated at the Grammar School, Birmingham. In 1862 he was commissioned second lieutenant in the Plumstead Artillery Volunteers, and became a prize-winner at many county and Wimbledon competitions. In 1865, Mr. Hughes was appointed chief county Conservative agent, and was successful in gaining enough on one Revision to win six seats, which have ever since been kept by the Conservatives. In 1874 he was transferred to the City of London Conservative Association, and increased the Conservative majority by thousands, so that in 1880 they polled two to one, and in 1885 four to one. After twenty-five years' exertions he procured the return in 1880 of two Conservative members for Greenwich. He took an active part in the agitation against the School Board in 1885, and on the triumph of the "economical" party he was elected to the post previously held by the Hon. Lyulph Stanley. In 1885 he was elected first member for Woolwich by a large Conservative majority, after a somewhat unifying squabble had taken place between himself and Baron H. de Worms, as to the representation of Greenwich; and again in 1886 he was returned by a still larger majority. In 1887, retiring from the Volunteers, he became Honorary Colonel of the Artillery Brigade he had raised and commanded for 28 years. In 1889 he was elected Member of the London County Council. He is an authority on Metropolitan Local Government.

HUGHES, Rev. Hugh Price, M.A., London, a celebrated Wesleyan preacher, was born in 1847, at Carmarthen, South Wales, and is the son of John Hughes Esq., surgeon, coroner, senior magistrate, chairman of School Board, etc., in Carmarthen. He was educated privately, and afterwards attended lectures at University College, London, and at the Theological College of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, at Richmond, Surrey, where Dr. Moulton was his tutor. His first appointment was to Dover in 1869. He remained there, and at every other place to which he was appointed, for the three years permitted by the itinerancy law of his Church. His successive appointments were, Dover, Brighton, Stoke Newington, London; Mostyn Road, London; Oxford, and Brixton Hill. At the conclusion of his three years at Brixton Hill, he was appointed to his present position as superintendent of the West London Mission, which conducts services in St. James's Hall, Prince's Hall, War-dour Hall, and Cleveland Hall, and has a centre of social philanthropy in Lincoln House, 60, Greek Street, Soho Square; a residence for young men at Wiclif House, Fitzroy Square; and a Sisterhood in Katherine House, Montague Street, Russell Square. He published, in 1889, "Social Christianity," now in its third edition; "The Atheist Shoemaker," and "The Philanthropy of God," in 1890. He is editor of the Methodist Times, the most influential Methodist newspaper; is an active total-abstainer, and Vice-President of The United Kingdom Alliance. He took a prominent part in the Social Purity Movement; is a permanent member of the Methodist Conference; and a leader of "The Forward Movement," which aims at the promotion of Social, as well as Individual Salvation, and believes that the example of Jesus Christ must be followed in business, pleasure, and politics as well as in prayer meetings and sacraments.

HUGHES, Thomas, Q.C., second son of Mr. John Hughes, of Donnington Priory, near Newbury, Berks, by Margaret Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Thomas Wilkin-son, was born on Oct. 20, 1823, at Uffington, in Berkshire, of which parish his grandfather was vicar. His father afterwards removed to Donnington Priory. In 1830 he was sent to a school at Twyford, near Winchester, and at the end of the year 1833 he was removed to Rugby, where he studied under Dr. Arnold. Thence he proceeded to Oriel College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1845. Previous to that time he had turned his attention to political problems, and when he left Oxford he was an advanced Liberal. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Jan. 1848. He was one of the members for Lambeth from 1865 to 1868, when he was returned for the borough of Frome, which he continued to represent till Jan. 1874. At the general election of Feb. of that year, he was nominated as a candidate for Marylebone; but he retired on the day before the poll was taken, when 294 votes were recorded in his favour. Mr. Hughes was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1869, and in the following year he made a tour in the United States. In July, 1882, he was appointed Judge of the County Court Circuit, No. 9, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Yates. He is the author of "Tom Brown's School Days, by an Old Boy," 1857, which has passed through several editions, and a French version of which "imité de l'Anglais avec l'autorisation de l'auteur, par J. Levoisin," appeared in Paris in 1875; "The Scouring of the White Horse," 1858, though dated 1859; "Tom Brown at Oxford," 3 vols., and "Religio Laici," 1861, being the first of a series of "Tracts for Priests and People," and afterwards reprinted as "A Layman's Faith," 1868; "The Cause of Freedom: which is its Champion in America, the North or the South?" 1863; "Alfred the Great," in the "Sunday Library for Household Reading," 1869; "Memoir of a Brother" [Geo. C. Hughes], (2nd edit., 1873); a Prefatory Memoir to Charles Kingsley's "Alton Locke," 1876; "The Old Church: what shall we do with It?" a volume directed against the movement for the disestablishment of the Church of England, 1878; and "A Memoir of Daniel Macmillan," 1882. He also contributed a preface to "Whitmore's Poems," and edited J. R. Lowell's "Biglow Papers," 1859; the Comte de Paris' work on "The Trade Unions of England," 1869; F. D. Maurice's treatise on "The Friendship of Books," 1874; and "Gone to Texas: Letters from Our Boys," 1885; "Life of Bishop Fraser," 1887; "Livingstone," 1889. Mr. Hughes married, in 1847, Anne Frances, eldest daughter of the Rev. James Ford, Prebendary of Exeter.

HULL, Professor Edward, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland, and Professor of Geology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, was born at Antrim, in Ireland, on May 21, 1829; his father, the late Rev. J. D. Hull, Vicar of Wickhambrook, in Suffolk, being then the curate of the parish. Professor Hull was educated at Edgworthstown school, and graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1850, obtaining in the same year the Diploma of Civil Engineering in the school attached to Dublin University. It was while attending the lectures of Professor Oldham, that he acquired his first knowledge of geology, and developed a taste for that branch of science which determined his future course of life. On the recommendation of his instructor and friend, he was appointed, in 1850, to the staff of the Geological Survey of Great Britain, under the general direction Sir H. T. de la Bèche, Professor (now Sir Andrew C.) Ramsay, being Local Director; and he served the first years of his official life in company with the late Professor Jukes (whom he afterwards succeeded) and Dr. Selwyn, the Director of the Geological Survey of Canada. During the period of about twenty years in which Mr. Hull was engaged on the survey of Great Britain, he geologically mapped a large portion of the central counties of England, including the coal-fields of Lancashire, Cheshire, and Leicestershire. In 1867, he was appointed District-Surveyor to the Survey of Scotland; and, in 1869, Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland (in succession to Professor J. B. Jukes), and Professor of Geology to the Royal College of Science, Dublin. Under his directorate the northern half of Ireland has been geologically surveyed, and a large portion of the southern half revised and brought into harmony with the British formations. Mr. Hull was elected Fellow of the Geological Society of London in 1855, and of the Royal Society in 1867. During the inquiries made by the Royal Commission, under the Presidency of the Duke of Argyll, Prof. Hull gave much information regarding the resources of the British and Irish coal-fields, which are recorded in the Report of the Commission issued in 1871. The Report on the Irish coal-fields was drawn up by himself. In 1873, Professor Hull was elected President of the Royal Geological Society of Ireland, and, in 1874, he was appointed Examiner in Geology to the University of London in conjunction with Professor T. R. Jones, F.R.S., which appointment he held for three years. At the meeting of the British Association in Belfast, in 1874, he was President of the Geological Section (C), and read an address on the Volcanic phenomena of the North of Ireland. In 1879, he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow on the occasion of the installation of the late Duke of Buccleuch as Chancellor. One of the most important events in Professor Hull's life was his visit to Arabia Petræa and Palestine towards the close of 1883. On the recommendation of Colonel Sir Charles Wilson, R.E., he was nominated by the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Society to take the command of an expedition organised for making a geological and topographical survey of the Arabah Valley and adjoining territories between the Sinaitic Peninsula on the south, and Southern Palestine on the north. In that expedition he was accompanied by Colonel Kitchener, R.E., Mr. H. C. Hart, his son, Dr. E. G. Hull, and several assistants; and in November of the above-named year (1883), the party, with an escort of twenty-nine camels and their drivers, left Suez, and traversed the Sinaitic Peninsula, the Arabah Valley from Akabah to the Dead Sea, visiting Mount Hor and Petræa, and thence across Southern Palestine to Gaza by Beersheba, the period occupied being about three months. By this expedition the surveys of Sinai and Palestine were connected, and the geological phenomena mapped and described. Collections of plants and animals were made by Mr. Hart, and meteorological observations were carried out daily by Mr. Reginald Laurence. The narrative of the expedition was drawn up and published by the Palestine Exploration Committee, under the title of "Mount Seir, Sinai, and Southern Palestine;" and the geological details are contained in the memoir, "On the Physical Geography and Geology of Arabia Petræa, &c.," 1886. At the annual meeting of the Geological Society of London, in 1890, the Murchison Medal was presented to Professor Hull by the President, in consideration of his contributions to geological literature, and of his investigations regarding the physical structure of the British Isles and other countries, including the Holy Land. Professor Hull is the author of several works and scientific memoirs, of which the following are the more important: "The Coal-fields of Great Britain: their history, structure, and resources," 1865, 4th edit., 1881; "A Treatise on the Building and Ornamental Stones of Great Britain and Foreign Countries," 1872; "Contributions to the Physical History of the British Isles," 1882; "Sketch of Geological History," 1887; "A Text-Book of Physiography or Physical Geography," 1888; "The Physical Geology and Geography of Ireland," 1878; "Mount Seir, Sinai and Southern Palestine," 1885; "Memoir on the Physical Geology and Geography of Arabia Petræa, Palestine and adjoining Districts," 1886; also several memoirs of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, and papers in the Transactions of learned and scientific societies. Professor Hull is an Honorary Member of the Geological Societies of Belgium, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Manchester; and of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, and of the Academy of Science, Philadelphia. On the completion of the Geological Survey of Ireland in 1890, Professor Hull retired from the Public Service.

HUMBERT I., Rénier-Charles-Emmanuel-Jean-Marie-Ferdinand-Eugène, King of Italy, the eldest son of the late King Victor Emmanuel II., and of Adélaïde, Archduchess of Austria, was born at Turin, March 14, 1844. At an early age he obtained an insight into political and military life under the guidance of his father, whom he attended during the war of Italian Independence, although he was then too young to take an active part in the struggle. The youthful heir to the throne was more closely connected with the movement for the unification of Italy, which followed the events of 1859. In particular he took part in the work of reorganizing the ancient Kingdom of the Two Sicilies; and in July, 1862, he visited Naples and Palermo, where he shared the popularity of Garibaldi. When the war between Prussia and Austria was imminent, Prince Humbert was despatched to Paris to ascertain the sentiments of the French Government in reference to the alliance between Italy and Prussia. On the outbreak of hostilities he hastened to take the field; obtained the command of a division of General Cialdini's army with the title of Lieutenant-General; and was present at the disastrous battle of Custoza (June 23, 1866), where, it is said, he performed prodigies of valour. On April 22, 1868, he married, at Turin, his cousin, the Princess Marguerite Marie Thérèse Jeanne of Savoy, daughter of the late Duke Ferdinand of Genoa, brother of King Victor Emmanuel. A son was born at Naples, Nov. 11, 1869, who received the names of Victor Emmanuel Ferdinand Mary Januarius, and the title of Prince of Naples. After the occupation of Rome by the Italian troops in 1870, Prince Humbert and the Princess Marguerite took up their residence in the Eternal City. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Jan. 9, 1878. As he was entering Naples, Nov. 17, 1878, a man named Giovanni Passanante approached the royal carriage and attempted with a poniard to assassinate his Majesty. The King escaped with a slight scratch, but Signor Cairoli, the Prime Minister, who was with him, was wounded rather badly in the thigh. Passanante was condemned to death, but the punishment was commuted by the King to penal servitude for life. King Humbert received the Order of the Garter by the hands of the Duke of Abercorn at the Quirinal, March 2, 1878. He is Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle; and of the Austrian Order of the Golden Fleece, &c.

HUMPHREY, The Rev. William, S.J., son of John Humphrey, Esq., J.P., of Pitmedden, Aberdeenshire, was born at Aberdeen, July 31, 1839. He was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and is a member of the General Council of the University of Aberdeen. He studied law at the University of Edinburgh; was ordained a clergyman of the Church of England by Dr. Forbes, Bishop of Brechin, and held the living of St. Mary Magdalene, Dundee. He became a Roman Catholic in March, 1868, and went to Rome, where he made his theological studies at the Collegio Romano. He was ordained priest by Cardinal Manning in 1871, and served on the mission in London till 1874, when he entered the Society of Jesus. Father Humphrey is the author of "The Divine Teacher," 5th edit.; "Mary Magnifying God," 5th edit.; "The Written Word;" "Other Gospels;" "Mr. FitzJames Stephen and Cardinal Bellarmine;" "The Religious State;" "The Bible and Belief;" "Christian Marriage;" "The One Mediator;" and several sermons, and has contributed to the "Catholic Academia" and the Month.

HUMPHREY, Professor Sir George Murray, M.D., F.R.S., born July, 1820, at

Sudbury, in Suffolk, is the son of a barrister-at-law. He was apprenticed to Mr. J. G. Crosse, a surgeon of Norwich, in 1836; studied at the Hospital of that city, and subsequently at St. Bartholomew's. In 1856 he took his degree of M.D., at Cambridge. He became Professor of Anatomy in 1866, a member of the Council of the College of Surgeons in 1868, of the Court of Examiners, 1877; represented the University of Cambridge as Member of the General Medical Council, from 1869 to 1889; and was Professor of Surgery at Cambridge, in 1883. He is a Senior Surgeon to Addenbrooke's Hospital, a Fellow of King's College and Honorary Fellow of Downing College, Corresponding Member of the Imperial Surgical Society, Paris, Foreign Associate of the Anthropological Society of Paris, Honorary Fellow of the Medical Society of London, Honorary Member of the Medical Society of Edinburgh, vice-President of the British Medical Association, First President of the Anatomical Society of the United Kingdom. Professor Humphry is the author of "A Treatise on the Human Skeleton," 1858; "On Myology," 1872; "Old Age and Changes Incidental to it," 1889; "The Hunterian Oration," 1879; and various articles in the Journal of Anatomy, Medico-Chirurgical Transactions, &c. The honour of knighthood was conferred on Professor Humphry in Jan., 1891.

HUNGARY and BOHEMIA, King of. See FRANCIS JOSEPH I., EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA AND KING OF HUNGARY AND BOHEMIA.

HUNT, Alfred William, M.A., R.W.S., was born at Liverpool, in 1830, and educated at the Collegiate School in that town. In 1848 he gained a scholarship at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 1851, he won the "Newdigate," and in 1852, took his degree with a second-class in classics. In the following year he became a Fellow of his College. He first exhibited in the Royal Academy, in 1854, "Styhead Pass, Cumberland." In 1856, he made a first success in the Academy, with his picture "Llyn Idwal," which was much praised by Mr. Ruskin; and the same year he became a member of the Hogarth Club, which was then just founded, and was the centre of pre-Raphaelite force. Mr. Hunt's next year's pictures were also much admired by Mr. Ruskin, but they were unfortunately hung, and Mr. Ruskin's comments on their hanging were of a kind that did not advance the artist's fortunes for the future. He continued, however, at intervals, to exhibit in the Royal Academy until 1862, when he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water Colours, of which he was made a full member two years later, and for about seven years worked only through that medium. In 1870 he again sent a picture to the Academy, and has since then exhibited both oil and water-colours. Mr. Hunt's best known pictures since that time are "Loch Maree;" "Goring Lock;" "Dunstanborough Castle;" "A Mountain joyous with Leaves and Streams;" "Summer Days for Me;" "Whitby: Morning and Evening;" "Leafy June;" "The Wreck of the Globe;" "Whitby Churchyard;" and "Sonning." Mr. Hunt's water-colours are so numerous, that it is difficult to make a selection from them. Perhaps the most important are the "Durham;" "The Rainbow;" "Ullswater;" "Llandecwyn;" "Loch Corinsk;" and "A Land of Smouldering Fire." A large number of fine specimens of his art were grouped together at one of the Winter Exhibitions of the Grosvenor Gallery a few years ago; and a large collection of his works in water-colours and oil was shown at the Fine Art Society's Rooms in 1884. Mr. Hunt is generally considered to be one of the most distinguished followers of Turner, and the chief upholder of the system of landscape art which endeavours to unite truth of light and poetical feeling with fidelity to nature. In 1882, Mr. Hunt was elected Honorary Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

HUNT, Thomas Sterry, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Norwich, Connecticut, Sept. 5, 1826. In 1845 he became assistant to Prof. Silliman in his chemical laboratory at Yale College, and in 1847 was appointed chemist and mineralogist to the Geological Survey of Canada, being also Professor of Chemistry in the Laval University, Quebec. In 1872 he took the chair of Geology in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, but since 1887 has resided in New York City. His early studies were directed especially to theoretical chemistry and were expounded in a series of papers in the American Journal of Science, beginning in 1848. He has made thorough researches into the chemical and mineral composition of rocks, and into the chemistry of mineral waters, and has fully discussed the phenomena of volcanoes, and more especially the history of the ancient crystalline stratified rocks of both America and Europe. His contributions to American and European scientific societies and journals are very numerous; and a collection of many of them, entitled "Chemical and Geological Essays," was published in 1874 and 1878. He furnished many important articles in his specialties to Appleton's "American Cyclopædia" (1874-76); and is a member of the leading learned societies of both continents, besides being eminent as a mining engineer and metallurgist. His work, entitled "Mineral Physiology and Physiography," 1886, is a detailed exposition of his views on the natural sciences. In 1888 appeared the second edition of his "New Basis for Chemistry," of which a French translation was issued in Paris in 1889. A treatise on "Systematic Mineralogy," applying this new dynamic philosophy of chemistry, is now (1890) in the press. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1859; and the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge in 1881. In 1882 he received from the King of Italy the decoration of Officer of the Order of SS. Mauritius and Lazarus; and he has also been made an Officer of the French Order of the Legion of Honour. He aided in the organization of the Royal Society of Canada in 1882, of which in 1884-85 he was President.

HUNT, William Holman, painter, one of the most prominent of the three working members of the Pre-Raphaelite movement, was born in London in 1827, and exhibited his first picture at the Academy in 1846. The earlier works were adopted from poetry and fiction, such as "Dr. Rochedcliffe performing Divine Service in the Cottage of Joceline Joliffe at Woodstock," in 1847; "The Flight of Madeline and Porphyro," from Keats's "St. Agnes," in 1848; and "Rienzi vowing to obtain Justice for the death of his young Brother," in 1849. He began that series of religious and mystical subjects, whereby he has since made himself best known, with "A Converted British Family sheltering a Christian Missionary from the Persecution of the Druids," in 1850; followed by the symbolical "Hireling Shepherd," in 1852. His picture in 1851 was in a different class of sentiment—"Valentine receiving Sylvia from Proteus;" that of 1853, "Claudio and Isabella," and "Our English Coasts," a study of the Downs at Hastings. Three of these pictures were awarded £50 and £60 prizes at Liverpool and Birmingham. The occult meaning of his "Light of the World," and of the "Awakening Conscience," of 1854, was explained by Mr. Ruskin in some letters to the Times. "The Scapegoat," of which the scene was painted upon the margin of the salt-encrusted shallows of the Dead Sea, was exhibited in 1856. The "Finding of the Saviour in the Temple," was exhibited in 1860; and "Isabella and the Pot of Basil," in 1866. His more recent pictures are "London Bridge on the Night of the Marriage of the Prince of Wales;" "The After-Glow;" and "The Festival of St. Swithun." The last-mentioned was in the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1868. The largest of his works, which exclusively occupied his time during a residence of four years in Palestine, was finished in 1873. It is styled "The Shadow of Death," and represents a prevision of the Crucifixion. "Plains of Esdraelon," an oriental landscape with shepherd and sheep, taken at Nazareth, was exhibited in 1877. "The Ship," an illustration of lines from "In Memoriam," represents the deck of a ship by night; exhibited in 1878. "Portrait of Sir Richard Owen, C.B.," exhibited in 1880, &c. "The Triumph of the Innocents" was exhibited in Bond Street in 1885. This work was retarded in its completion by a defect in the linen on which the picture was first undertaken, the picture exhibited being repeated on a fresh canvas from the original design. It represents a company of the Spirits of the Children of Bethlehem accompanying the Holy Family on their flight into Egypt. "The Child Jesus in the Temple," which is intended for Clifton College Chapel, was exhibited in 1890. In the year 1880 he delivered a lecture at the Society of Arts upon the need of greater knowledge and care on the part of artists in the preparation of the materials, upon the perfection of which they have to rely for the permanence of their works. This, at the time, awakened much attention to the matter, and still encourages research for better methods of obtaining superior preparations. A nearly complete collection of Mr. Holman Hunt's works was exhibited at the Fine Art Society's rooms in 1886. He has written, in the Contemporary Review, two articles of reminiscences of the Pre-Raphaelite movement. More recently he has, in the columns of the Times, led the attack upon the Royal Academy, in which, of course, he no longer exhibits.

HUNTER, Colin, A.R.A., was born in Glasgow, July 16, 1841, and is the son of John Hunter, Bookseller and Postmaster, of Helensburgh. He was educated in that town, and began painting at twenty years of age, after four years' clerkship.

His education as a painter was derived from nature. His principal pictures are "Trawlers Waiting for Darkness," exhibited in the Royal Academy, 1873; "Salmon Stake Nets" (R.A.), 1874, now in the Sydney Government collection; "Give Way" (R.A.), 1875; "Digging Bait" (R.A.), 1876; "Their Only Harvest" (R.A.), 1878, now the property of the Chantry Bequest Trustees; "Silver of the Sea" (R.A.), 1879; "Mussel Gatherers," and "In the Gloaming" (R.A.), 1880; "The Island Harvest" (Fine Art Society's Rooms) 1881; "Waiting for the Homeward Bound" (R.A.), 1882, now in the Adelaide collection; "A Pebbled Shore" and "Lobster Fishers" (R.A.), 1883; "Herring Market at Sea" (R.A.), 1884, now in Manchester Corporation collection; "The Rapids of Niagara" (R.A.), 1885; "The Woman's Part" (R.A.), 1886; "Their Share of the Toil" (R.A.), 1887; "Fishers of the North Sea" (R.A.), 1888; "Baiters" (R.A.), 1889; "The Hills of Morven" (R.A.), 1890. Mr. Hunter was elected an associate of the Royal Academy in Jan. 1884, and is also a Member of the Royal Scottish Water Colour Society.

HUNTER, Sir William Guyer, K.C.M.G., M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Hunter, of Catterick, Yorkshire, was born in 1831, and educated at King's College, London, at Aberdeen University, and at various hospitals. He entered the Indian Medical Service, Bombay Presidency, in 1850, and served through the Burmese War and the Indian Mutiny. In 1876 he was appointed Principal of the Grant Medical College; and in 1879 Vice-Chancellor of the University of Bombay. He retired in 1880, and in 1883 went out to Egypt to serve on the Cholera Commission. For his services on this occasion he was made a K.C.M.G. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Conservative member for Central Hackney, and was again returned for the same constituency in 1896.

HUNTER, Sir William Wilson, K.C.S.I., C.I.E. (M.A. Oxford, Hon. LL.D., Cambridge and Glasgow), son of the late A. Galloway Hunter, Esq., of Denholm, was born July 15, 1840, and educated at the University of Glasgow, at Paris, and Bonn. He headed the list of Indian civilians appointed in 1862; and after distinguishing himself in Calcutta by proficiency in Sanskrit and the modern vernaculars of India, passed through the appointments of a junior civil servant in the Bengal districts. On the outbreak of the Orissa Famine of 1866, he was appointed Inspector of public instruction in the province of Orissa and the south-western division of Bengal. At the end of the dearth he received the thanks of the Government, but was invalided to England. While on sick leave Sir William Hunter wrote "The Annals of Rural Bengal," which in the next ten years passed through five editions; and a "Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia." On his return to Bengal, he received the gazetted acknowledgments of the Governor-General and the Secretary of State; together with a present of Rs. 20,000 of public money, also notified in the Government Gazette, for his services. In 1869 he was attached on special duty to the Secretariat of the Government of Bengal; in 1870 to that of the Supreme Government of India, acting for a time as Under-Secretary; in 1871 he was appointed Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India. As the head of this Department he organised, and carried out from beginning to end, the Statistical Survey of India. The first census of India was taken in 1872. In 1876 he issued the "Statistical Account of Bengal" in twenty volumes, and an exact survey was executed under his direction of the resources and population of each district in India—an area "equal to all Europe less Russia." Sir William Hunter again received the gazetted thanks of the Government. His labours had done much to throw light on the causes and management of famines, and to bring them within control. In 1878 he was appointed among the first members of the new Order of the Indian Empire. By 1880 he had completed the Statistical Survey of India, and its records had been made available to the public in 128 printed volumes. In 1881 he issued a condensation of this vast work, alphabetically arranged in the "Imperial Gazetteer of India," in nine volumes. In the same year he was appointed a Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, and in 1882 he was made President of the Education Commission in India. As a Member of the Indian Legislative Council, Sir William Hunter took an active part in the important series of measures, especially those affecting the Land Law and Tenancy Rights of the cultivators, which issued from the Indian Legislature between 1881 and 1887. As President of the Indian Education Commission he was largely instrumental in consolidating Public Instruction in India on its present basis. The results of these labours have been briefly but accurately described, as the development of the Department of Public Instruction in India into a truly national system of education for that country. For these services he again received the gazetted thanks of the Government, and was appointed a Companion of the Star of India. In 1884 Sir William Hunter was deputed to England, by the Governor-General in Council, to give evidence before the Parliamentary Committee upon the economic aspects of Indian railway development. In 1886, in addition to his duty in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, Lord Dufferin placed him upon the Finance Commission, which was then constituted to conduct a searching enquiry into Indian expenditure, and with a view to revise the financial relations of the Provincial Governments to the Supreme Government of India. Among the honorary offices discharged by Sir William Hunter during the course of his Indian career, was that of the Vice-Chancellorship of the University of Calcutta. In 1887 he was appointed a Knight Commander of the Star of India, and having completed his twenty-five years of service, he retired from that country. On his return to England he completed the expanded edition of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" in fourteen volumes. Since then he has been a consistent and powerful advocate of moderate reform in India. As an examiner in the Honours' School of Oriental studies, he for some years took an active part in the university life of Oxford. Under his impulse the University Press undertook the series of short histories and biographies now well known as "The Rulers of India." Of this series Sir William Hunter was the editor, and several of its volumes are from his hand. Sir William Hunter has received honorary degrees from the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge and Glasgow; and is an honorary member of many learned societies in Europe and Asia. His best known books are the "Annals of Rural Bengal;" "Orissa, or an Indian Province under Native and British Rule;" "The Indian Mussulmans;" "A System of Famine Warnings;" "A Life of Lord Mayo," 2 vols.; "The Life and Work of the Marquess of Dalhousie;" "A Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia;" "The Imperial Gazetteer of India," 14 vols.; "The Indian Empire, its History, People, and Products," which condenses into one volume for popular use the main results of the Statistical Survey of India. Sir William Hunter married the daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Murray, LL.D., J.P., the author of "The Literary History of Galloway."

HUNTINGTON, Daniel, LL.D., American artist, was born at New York, Oct. 14, 1816. He was prepared for college by Rev. Horace Bushnell at New Haven, and entered Hamilton College in 1832; and in 1835-36 was a pupil of S. F. B. Morse in the art department of the New York University. In 1836 he exhibited "The Topper Asleep," a "Bar-room Politician," and several landscapes. In 1839 he studied in Florence and Rome, where he painted "The Sacred Lesson" and "Christian Prisoners;" and, on his return to America, painted "Mercy's Dream," and "Christiana and her Children." In 1844 he again went to Rome, where he painted the "Roman Penitents," "Italy," "The Communion of the Sick," and several landscapes. In 1851 he visited England, where he painted the portraits of several distinguished personages, among them Sir Charles Eastlake (then President of the Royal Academy) and the Earl of Carlisle, now in the collection of the Historical Society. Among his later works, besides numerous portraits, are, "Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham in the Tower," "Henry VIII. and Queen Catherine Parr," "Queen Mary signing the Death-Warrant of Lady Jane Grey," "The Good Samaritan," "The Sketcher," "Ichabod Crane and Katrina van Tassel," "The Counterfeit Note," another "Mercy's Dream," "The Republican Court," a number of Shaksperian subjects, "Chocurna Peak," "Philosophy and Christian Art," "Sowing the Word," and "Titian and Charles V." In 1882 he visited Spain and painted "The Goldsmith's Daughter," "The Doubtful Letter," as well as portraits. Since his return he has painted "A Burgomaster of New Amsterdam," and many portraits of distinguished people. He was one of the founders of the Century Club, of which he is now, 1890, President, and he is a Vice-President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He has been President of the National Academy of Design, New York, from 1862 to the present time, with the exception of a few years.

HUNTINGTON, Right Rev. Frederic Daniel, D.D., S.T.D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Central New York, was born at Hadley, Massachusetts, May 28, 1819. He graduated at Amherst College in 1839, studied divinity at Cambridge, and in 1842 became pastor of a Unitarian Church in Boston. In 1855 he was elected preacher to Cambridge University, and Professor of Christian Morals in Harvard College. He had, about that time, withdrawn himself from the Unitarian body, and he went to the University occupying an independent position. In 1859 he took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church and was chosen rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston; in 1861 he was one of the founders of the Church Monthly; and in 1869 was elected Bishop of Central New York. Besides a series of Lowell lectures on "Human Society as Illustrating the Wisdom, Power, and Goodness of God," he has published many volumes of sermons and books of devotion, together with "Hymns of the Ages" (3 vols., 1860-64).

HUTCHINSON, Professor Jonathan, F.R.S., LL.D., was born in July, 1828, at Selby, Yorkshire, and educated there. He was admitted a Fellow of the College of Surgeons in 1862; he was appointed President of the Hunterian Society in 1869 and 1870; President of the Pathological Society in 1879 and 1880; of the Ophthalmological in 1883; of the Neurological in 1887; and was Professor of Surgery and Pathology in the Royal College of Surgeons from 1877 to 1883. He was elected President of the College in 1889. Professor Hutchinson was a member of the Royal Commission appointed in 1881 to inquire into the condition of the London hospitals for small-pox and fever cases, and into the means of preventing the spread of infection. He was appointed a member of Royal Commission on Vaccination. The degree of LL.D. (Hon.) was conferred upon him by Glasgow University in 1887, and by that of Cambridge in 1890.

HUTCHINSON, Joseph Turner, Chief Justice of the Gold Coast Colony, was born at Braystones, Cumberland, on March 28, 1850. His father was one of the old Cumberland "Statesmen," whose forefathers had lived on the same small estate for upwards of three centuries. He was educated at St. Bees Grammar School; elected to a foundation scholarship at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1870; took his degree there in 1873 in the first class of the Classical Tripos, and proceeded to M.A. in 1876. After leaving Cambridge he became Sixth Form Master at Dulwich College, where he, in conjunction with Arthur Gray, edited for the Pitt Press the Hercules Furens of Euripides; afterwards was Sixth Form Master at the City of London School from 1876 to 1879; and in 1879 was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple. He practised for eight years as an Equity draftsman and conveyancer. In April, 1883, he was appointed Queen's Advocate of the Gold Coast Colony; and in Jan., 1890, on the retirement of Mr. Macleod, was appointed Chief Justice.

HUTCHISON, John, R.S.A., sculptor, was born at Lauriston, Edinburgh, June 1, 1832. At the age of thirteen he was apprenticed to a wood-carver in the High Street, Edinburgh, and in the evenings, during his apprenticeship, studied drawing and modelling in the Trustees' Academy and the School of Arts. In 1852 he was employed to execute the wood-carvings and other decorations in relief for the Picture Gallery then in course of erection at Hospitalfield, Arbroath, by Patrick Allan Fraser, H.R.S.A. Returning to Edinburgh, he studied in the Antique and Life School of the Trustees' Academy, then under the able direction of Robert Scott Lauder, R.S.A. He first exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy, in 1856. In 1859 he exhibited there a colossal bust of "Harald Hardrada, the Norse Sea King," which was purchased by the Hon. Mrs. Norton for Lord Dufferin; it is now at Clandeboys, Ireland. In 1860 he visited Rome and studied with the late Alfred Gatley, an able and enthusiastic sculptor. Returning to Edinburgh with several works in marble executed at Rome, he exhibited in the 1862 exhibition a bust in marble of a Roman matron. Again visiting Italy in 1863, he executed several works in marble, "Pasquicia," a Roman Girl, now in the National Gallery, Edinburgh; and a life-size statue in marble of a "Roman Dancing Girl Resting." While in Italy Mr. Hutchison enjoyed the friendship of the Italian sculptors, Tenerani and Dupre, and Hiram Powers, the American. In 1862 he exhibited for the first time in the Royal Academy a marble bust of John Philip, R.A.—a commission from Mr. Philip—and has contributed to Royal Academy Exhibitions for many years; in 1889 he exhibited a study in bronze "Il Condottiere." He has executed colossal bronze statues of James Carmichael, engineer (inventor of the fan-blast), erected in Dundee; Adam Black, M.P., publisher, for Edinburgh; Dr. Grigor, M.D., for Nairn. For Lochmahen a colossal statue of King Robert Bruce in freestone; a statue in bronze-gilt of a Greek Torch Racer for the summit of the dome of the University of Edinburgh; four statues—life-size—for the Scott Monument, Edinburgh, viz.—Baron Bradwardine, Hal-o'-the Wynd, The Glee Maiden, and Flora McIvor. For the relic-room of the Scott Monument, eight historical portrait heads Alto-Relievo in bronze. Amongst many other monuments which Mr. Hutchison has designed and executed may be mentioned a marble monument in Leyland Church, Lancashire, a recumbent figure of a lady (Mrs. Farington) resting on an altar-tomb; and a monument in memory of G. Paul Chalmers, R.S.A., in the Dean Cemetery, Edinburgh. He has also executed and exhibited in the Royal Academy and Royal Scottish Academy various busts of distinguished characters; likewise studies in marble and bronze of Hamlet, Dante, Don Quixote, Bonny Kilmeny, Genevieve; and Marietta, a Roman Girl, now in the National Gallery, Edinburgh. By command of the Queen, Mr. Hutchison has executed busts of the late Principal Tulloch and Dr. Norman Macleod for Balmoral, and has also designed and executed the marble monument in memory of the Royal Stewarts, buried in Paisley Abbey. In 1888 Her Majesty honoured Mr. Hutchison with sittings for her bust at Windsor Castle. The bust of the Queen, and that of the late Prince Consort were executed for the Victoria Art Galleries, Dundee. Mr. Hutchison was elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1862; Academician in 1867; Librarian in 1877; and Treasurer in 1886.

HUXLEY, Thomas Henry, LL.D., Ph.D., D.C.L., M.D., F.C.S. Eng., F.R.S., was born on May 4, 1825, at Ealing, Middlesex, and was for some years educated at the school in his native place, where his father was one of the masters. This preparatory course was followed by industrious private study, including German scientific literature, and medical instruction received from a brother-in-law, who was a physician. Afterwards he attended lectures at the Medical School of the Charing Cross Hospital. In 1845 he passed the first examination for the degree of M.B. at the University of London, and took honours in physiology. Having passed the requisite examination, he was, in 1846, appointed assistant-surgeon to H.M.S. Victory, for service at Haslar Hospital. His next appointment was as assistant-surgeon to H.M.S. Rattlesnake, and he spent the greater part of the time from 1847 to 1850 off the eastern and northern coasts of Australia. Some of the results of the studies in natural history for which this cruise afforded facilities, appeared in various memoirs communicated to the Linnean and Royal Societies, and in a work entitled "Oceanic Hydrozoa, a Description of the Calyophoridae and Physophoridae observed during the voyage of H.M.S. Rattlesnake" (1859). Mr. Huxley returned to England in 1850, and in the following year he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1852, one of the two Royal Medals annually given by the Society was awarded to him. In 1854 he was appointed Professor of Natural History, including Palæontology, at the Royal School of Mines in Jermyn-street, and, in the same year, Fullerian Professor of Physiology to the Royal Institution, and Examiner in Physiology and Comparative Anatomy to the University of London. In 1856 he accompanied his friend Dr. Tyndall in his first visit to the glaciers of the Alps. In 1858 he was appointed Croonian Lecturer to the Royal Society, when he chose for his subject the "Theory of the Vertebrate Skull." In 1859 his large work on "The Ocean Hydrozoa; a Description of the Calyphoridae and Physophoridae," observed during his voyage, with illustrative plates, was published by the Royal Society. When, in 1860, it became Professor Huxley's duty to give one of the courses of lectures to the working men in Jermyn-street, he selected for his subject "The Relation of Man to the Lower Animals." The questions arising out of this topic became the subject of warm controversy at the meeting of the British Association in that and subsequent years. A summary of the whole discussion was given in the work entitled "Evidence as to Man's Place in Nature," 1863, and excited great popular interest both in this country and abroad. Mr. Darwin's views on the origin of species were the subject of Professor Huxley's lectures to the working men in 1862, which have been published under the title of lectures "On our Knowledge of the Causes of the Phenomena of Organic Nature." He also delivered lectures on the "Elements of Comparative Anatomy," and on the "Classification of Animals and the Vertebrate Skull." In 1862, in consequence of the absence of the President, it devolved upon Mr. Huxley, who was then one of the secretaries of the Geological Society, to deliver the annual address to the Geological Society, and, as President of Section D at the meeting of the British Association at Cambridge, he gave an address on the "Condition and Prospects of Biological Science." He was elected Professor of Comparative Anatomy to the Royal College of Surgeons in 1863, and held that office for seven years. He became President of the Geological and the Ethnological Societies in 1869 and 1870, and presided over the meeting of the British Association held at Liverpool in 1870. Professor Huxley's name came prominently before the general public in connection with the London School Board, to which he was elected in 1870. He took a very active part in the deliberations of that body, having rendered himself particularly conspicuous by his opposition to denominational teaching, and by his fierce denunciation in 1871 of the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church. Professor Huxley was compelled by ill health to retire from the Board in Jan. 1872. He was elected Lord Rector of Aberdeen University for three years Dec. 14, 1872, and installed Feb. 27, 1874. In 1873 he was elected Secretary of the Royal Society. During Professor Wyville Thompson's absence with the Challenger expedition, Professor Huxley acted as his substitute as Professor of Natural History at the University of Edinburgh in the summer sessions of 1875 and 1876. In the latter year he received the Wollaston medal of the Geological Society. He has received the honorary degree of Ph.D. from the University of Breslau, M.D. from the University of Würzburg, LL.D. from the Universities of Edinburgh, Dublin (1878), and Cambridge (1879), D.C.L. from the University of Oxford (1885), and he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1884. He is a foreign and corresponding member of the Academies of Brussels, Berlin, Göttingen, Haarlem, Lisbon, Lyncei (Rome), Munich, St. Petersburg, Philadelphia, Stockholm; of the Belgium Academy of Medicine, of the Royal Irish Academy, the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and the Cambridge Philosophical Society. He is a Knight of the Pole Star of Sweden, a purely scientific distinction; and was, for some years, a Fellow of Eton College, and a member of the governing body of that school. He is a Trustee of the British Museum, and a Member of the Senate of the University of London. Mr. Huxley has served on many Government and Royal commissions, relating to Fisheries and to Science, Contagious Diseases, Vivisection, the Scottish Universities, and other matters. In 1881 he was appointed Inspector of Salmon Fisheries, at first in conjunction with Mr. Spencer Walpole, but afterwards alone. In 1885 he was compelled by ill health to resign this and all his other public offices, but he retained his connection with the Normal School of Science and Royal School of Mines, as Dean and honorary Professor of Biology, at the request of the Lord President. In June, 1879, the French Academy of Sciences elected Professor Huxley a corresponding member in the section of anatomy and zoology, in the place of the late Karl E. von Baer. On July 5, 1883, he was chosen President of the Royal Society in place of the late Mr. Spottiswoode; and in the same year he was elected by the council of the United States National Academy as one of their foreign members. He delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, June 12, 1883, the subject being "The Origin of the Existing Forms of Animal Life—Construction or Evolution." In 1885 Professor Huxley resigned his official duties, including the Inspectorship of Fisheries and the Presidency of the Royal Society. Professor Huxley is well known as a writer on natural science, being the author of numerous papers published in the Transactions and Journals of the Royal, the Linnean, the Geological, and the Zoological Societies, and in the Memoirs of the Geological Survey of Great Britain. I.

IBBETSON, The Right Hon. Sir Henry John Selwin, Bart., M.P., only son of the late Sir John Thomas Ibbetson-Selwin, the sixth baronet, by Isabella, daughter of the late General John Leveson-Gower, was born Sept. 26, 1826, and received his academical education at Cambridge, in St. John's College. He twice contested Ipswich in the Conservative interest, before being returned for South Essex in July, 1865; and after the county was further divided by the second Reform Act, he was elected in 1868 for the western division of it, which under the new name Epping Division, he still represents in the House of Commons. He brought in, and passed, the Bills dealing with the Licences for the sale of Beer and Wine in 1869 and 1870. Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department on Mr. Disraeli taking office in the spring of 1874. He was chairman of the departmental commission appointed in 1877 to inquire into the detective branch of the metropolitan police. In April 1878, he was appointed Secretary to the Treasury, and he held that office until the resignation of the Conservative Government in April 1880. He assumed the name of Ibbetson (which his father had formerly borne) in addition to that of Selwin in 1867.

IBSEN, Henrik, an eminent Norwegian poet and dramatist, was born at Skien, March 20, 1828. He is of German descent on his mother's side, and speaks German with fluency; but he has never written anything in that language. He at first studied medicine, but soon abandoned that profession for literature. Under the pseudonym of Brynjolf Bjarme he published in 1850 "Catilina," a drama in three acts. In the same year he entered the University, where, in conjunction with others, he founded a literary journal, in the columns of which appeared his first satire, "Nora et Dukkehjem." Through the influence of Ole Bull, the violinist, he became director of the theatre at Bergen, and in 1857 went to Christiania, where several of his plays were produced with complete success. For some time he lived in Rome, and in 1866 obtained from the Storting a pension. His best known works are "Fru Inger til Oesteraad," 1857; "Haer Maendene paa Helgeland," 1858; "Brandt," 1866; "Peer Gynt," 1867; "De Unges Forbund," 1869; "Keiser og Galelaeer," 1875; and a volume of poems, "Lyriske Digte," 1871. "The Pillars of Society," 1877, contains, perhaps, the best embodiment of his social philosophy. Other works of his are "Ghosts," 1881; "A Social Enemy," 1882; "The Wild Duck," 1884; "Rosmersholm," 1886; "Hedda Gabler," 1890. Ibsen has one child, a son named Sigurd, a young man of good parts, who holds the position of Secretary to the Swedish Legation in Vienna. Mrs. Ibsen is the step-daughter of the Norwegian poetess, Magdalena Thoreson, and daughter of the Provost Thoreson in Bergen. Magdalena Thoreson is still living, and one of her plays, Inden Dore (Indoors), was given recently in the Dagmar Theatre at Copenhagen.

IGNATIEFF, Nicholas Pavlovitch, a Russian general and diplomatist, was born in 1832. He is the son of Count Paul Ignatieff, a captain of infantry, who, at the time of the military insurrection that occurred at St. Petersburg in consequence of the somewhat forcible accession of the Grand-Duke Nicholas to the throne of Russia in 1825, was the first to pass over, with his company, to the side of the New Czar—a defection which it was his duty to make in this manner in opposing the defection of the rebels, and which ensured the triumph of the former, and gained for Captain Ignatieff and his family the powerful protection of Nicholas I. The subject of this notice had at the very outset of his career the Emperor Alexander II. for his god-father. He was educated at home and in the Corps des Pages, and, according to custom, quitted that select establishment for young aristocrats to enter the Guard; and in the Military Academy, after three years' study, he was appointed as staff-officer. At the beginning of the Crimean war he was ordered to be at the staff of General Berg. He occupied at Riga the post of Quarter-Master-General of the Baltic-corps. He then passed from the military to the diplomatic service, finding his point of transition in the military attaché-ship to the Embassy at London. His chief performance in this capacity was a report on England's military position in India, which so pleased the Emperor that he summoned Captain Ignatieff to Warsaw for a personal interview. In 1858 Ignatieff, now a colonel and aide-de-camp to the Emperor, was sent on a special mission to Khiva and Bokhara. He was afterwards made a major-general in the Imperial suite, and sent as plenipotentiary to Peking, 1860, where he concluded a treaty by which the province of Ussuri was ceded by China to Russia. On his return to Russia he was made Director of the Asiatic Department in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In 1864 he was appointed Minister at Constantinople, where his legation was afterwards, 1867, raised to the rank of an embassy. Apart from his rank as ambassador, he was a lieutenant-general, and general aide-de-camp to the Emperor. The object which General

Ignatieff steadily pursued at Constantinople was to secure for Russia a powerful influence over Turkey. He completely reassured the late Sultan Abdul Aziz as to the intentions of the Government of St. Petersburg, while on the other hand he gained the good-will of the Christian subjects of the Porte by his courteous behaviour and his simulated anxiety to protect them. In the negotiations between the various European Powers prior and subsequent to the war between Russia and Turkey, General Ignatieff took a very prominent part. He was recalled from the embassy at Constantinople May 2, 1878, when Prince Labanoff was sent there in his place. Afterwards he was appointed Minister of the Interior, from which post he was dismissed in June, 1882. He remained, however, a member of the Council of the Empire. He is a bitter enemy of the Nihilists.

IGNATIUS, Father. See LYNE, THE REV. JOSEPH LEXCESTER.

ILBERT, Courtenay Peregrine, C.S.I., C.I.E., was born June 12, 1841, at Kingsbridge, Devon, and is the eldest son of the Rev. Peregrine A. Ilbert, Rector of Thurlestone, Devon. He was educated at Marlborough, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained an open scholarship, and also the Hertford, Ireland, and Craven University Scholarships. He was placed in the first class in Classical Moderations 1862, and in the Classical Final Examination 1864, and was elected to a Balliol Fellowship. After taking his degree he read for the Bar, and was elected to the Eldon Law Scholarship in 1867. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1869, and practised as a parliamentary and equity draftsman and conveyancer. For many years he did work in connection with the Parliamentary Counsel's office, and had a considerable share in the drafting of important Government measures. He was Counsel to the Education Department from 1879 to 1882; Legal Member of the Council of the Viceroy of India from 1882 to 1886; and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta in 1885. During Lord Dufferin's absence in Burmah in 1886 he was President of the Viceroy's Council with the powers of the Governor-General. As Legal Member of Lord Ripon's Government in India, Mr. Ilbert's name was associated with a measure for the Amendment of Criminal Procedure, in pursuance of the Viceroy's policy, which became the subject of vehement contention, and was popularly known as the Ilbert Bill. He was also responsible for an important measure, for revising the relations between landlord and tenant amongst an agricultural population of 60 millions, known as the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which, as finally amended after long and careful discussion, is now part of the law of India. This was only one of a series of similar measures, affecting the tenure of land in almost every part of India, for which Mr. Ilbert was responsible, as legal member of Council, first under the Marquis of Ripon, and afterwards under the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. On returning from India in 1886 Mr. Ilbert was appointed to the permanent office of Assistant Parliamentary Counsel to the Treasury, which he still holds. In 1874 he married Jessie, daughter of the Rev. C. Bradley, and niece of the present Dean of Westminster.

educated at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth, and entered the Navy as a first-class volunteer on board Her Majesty's ship Etna in 1834. Having seen some active service in several ships on the South American and West Indian stations, and in 1840 taken part in the operations on the coast of Syria, where he formed one of the storming party at the capture of Sidon, and assisted at the bombardment of Acre, he was invested with the rank of Lieutenant on the occasion of Her Majesty visiting Scotland in the Royal George yacht in 1842; and afterwards he acted as Flag-Lieutenant to his father on the South American coast. There he commanded H.M.S. Comus at the battle of the Parana, where the combined fleets of England and France effected the destruction of four heavy batteries belonging to General Rosas at Punta Obligado. He was consequently confirmed in the rank of Commander by commission, dated Nov., 1845. He became Captain in Oct., 1853; attained flag rank in 1869; and was promoted to Vice-Admiral in 1875. He was second in command on the Mediterranean station, and superintendent of Malta dockyard from 1872 to 1877; and Commander-in-Chief on the North American station from 1878 to 1879. He commanded three Arctic expeditions, and was knighted in 1877 for his Arctic services. Having been called to the Scotch Bar in 1835, he rose rapidly in his profession, was appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland in Lord Derby's first administration in 1852, and a few months afterwards was made Lord-Advocate, a post which he resumed in Lord Derby's second administration in 1858, in which year he was raised to the bench as Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland. He represented Stamford from Feb. to July, 1858, and was for many years Dean of Faculty. In 1859 he was sworn a member of the Privy Council, and was made Lord Justice General and President of the Court of Session in Feb., 1867. He was installed as Chancellor of the University of Edinburgh, April 12, 1869, and in the same year he received from the University of Glasgow the degree of LL.D.

INGRAM, John H., was born in London, Nov. 16, 1849. In 1863 he published a small volume of verse, subsequently suppressed. This was followed, in 1868, by "Flora Symbolica," a work on the folk-lore of flowers, which has passed through numerous editions. In 1873 he began a series of articles in English and American periodicals, calling attention to misrepresentations about the life and character of Edgar Allan Poe; and in Oct., 1874, embodied some of the results of his investigations in a short "Memoir of Poe," prefixed to a four-volume edition of the poet's works, which was followed, in 1880, by an exhaustive two-volume biography of Edgar Allan Poe; new one-volume editions of which work have since been published. In 1879, under the name of "Don Felix de Salamanca," he published a jeu d'esprit, entitled, "The Philosophy of Handwriting," wherein the characters of several celebrated contemporaries were assumed to be portrayed by their caligraphy. In 1881 he published a volume of "Fairy Tales," translated from the Spanish of "Fernan Caballero," and in 1882 a collection of historical sketches, styled "Claimants to Royalty." In the winter of 1883 he published a volume of historical ghost stories, entitled "The Haunted Homes of Great Britain," and in 1884 a second series of similar narratives. In the same year appeared his life of "Oliver Madox Brown," the young poet-painter, who died in 1874, a new edition of whose works Mr. Ingram is preparing for publication. In 1884, Mr. Ingram edited an illustrated édition de luxe of Edgar Poe's "Tales and Poems," in 4 vols., and a selection from Poe's works, in 2 vols., for the Tauchnitz collection. In 1885 he published a monograph on Poe's "Raven," and in 1889 a variorum edition of Poe's "Poetical Works," and has in the press a volume of biographical and critical essays. He is editing a series of original biographical manuals, entitled "The Eminent Women series," and has written for it a "Life of Elizabeth Barrett Browning," in 1888. It is the only complete memoir of Mrs. Browning yet published. He is a contributor to many of the leading reviews of Europe and America, and has occasionally lectured on behalf of educational institutions. He holds an appointment in the Civil Service.

INGRAM, John Kells, LL.D., born in the County of Donegal, Ireland, in 1823, was educated at Newry School and Trinity College, Dublin. He was elected scholar of his College in 1840, and Fellow in 1846, Professor of Oratory and English Literature in 1852, Regius Professor of Greek in 1866, and Librarian in 1879. He was President of the Statistical Society of the British Association in 1878, and in that capacity delivered an address on "the Present Position and Prospects of Political Economy," which attracted much attention at home and abroad, and was translated into German by the well-known Economist, Dr. H. Von Scheel. He also gave an address to the Trades Union Congress in 1880 on "Work and the Workman," of which a French translation appeared in the following year. He is author of the article "Political Economy," in the Encyclopædia Britannica (9th edit.), which has since been reprinted in a separate volume (1888), and of which a German translation was published (1890). He also contributed to the same Encyclopædia the article "Slavery," and many biographical notices, amongst which may be mentioned those of Quesnay, Turgot, Petty, Adam Smith, Ricardo, Arthur Young, and Cliffe Leslie. INNESS, George, landscape painter, was born at Newburg, New York, May

1, 1825. At the age of sixteen he went to New York to study engraving, but ill health compelled him to relinquish that art, and to return to his parents' home, then at Newark, New Jersey. There he spent the next four years painting and sketching, when he again went to New York, and after spending a month studying under Gignoux, began his career as a landscape painter. He has visited Europe three times, once remaining here five years. His residence is at Montclair, New Jersey, although he lived for a time near Boston, and at Eagleswood, New Jersey. Among his principal pictures are: "Peace and Plenty," "The Sign of Promise," "A Vision of Faith," "Loitering," "Sunset," "The Valley of the Shadow of Death," "The River of Life," "An Autumn Morning," "Close of a Stormy Day," "Pine Groves of Barbarini Villa," "A Passing Storm," "Summer Afternoon," "Coming Storm," "The Light Triumphant," "Twilight," "The Apocalyptic Vision of the New Jerusalem."

IRVING, Henry, the name assumed by John Henry Brodribb the actor, who was born Feb. 6, 1838, at Keinton, near Glastonbury, and educated at Dr. Pinches' school, in George Yard, Lombard Street, London. He made his first public appearance at the Sunderland Theatre, Sept. 29, 1856, and after a series of engagements at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester, and Liverpool, extending over nine years, he was engaged on July 30, 1866, to play, with Miss Kate Terry, at Manchester, by Mr. Dion Boucicault, in an original play of his, entitled "Hunted Down." This led to a London engagement, when he came out at the St. James's Theatre as Doricourt in the "Belle's Stratagem." He subsequently played at Drury Lane, the Haymarket, and the Gaiety theatres. In May, 1870, he transferred his services to the Vaudeville Theatre, playing Digby Grant in Mr. Albery's comedy of the "Two Roses," which character he sustained for 300 consecutive nights. His representation of "Hamlet" at the Lyceum Theatre (Oct. 31, 1874) produced a great sensation among the playgoing public, and opinion was at first much divided as to the merits of the performance, but it is now generally admitted that by his rendering of this and of other Shakespearean parts, Mr. Irving has placed himself at the head of English tragedians. "Hamlet" was played for 200 nights, the longest run of the play on record. He appeared in "Macbeth" Sept. 18, 1875; in "Othello" in 1876; and next as Philip in Tennyson's drama of "Queen Mary." Afterwards Mr. Irving played his Shakespearean parts in the provinces, in Scotland and in Ireland. When in Dublin, he played "Hamlet" by the request of the University, he having been presented with an address in the Dining Hall of Trinity College. In Jan., 1877, he added to his Shakespearean repertory by playing "Richard III." at the Lyceum. The withdrawal of Mrs. Bateman from the Lyceum gave Mr. Irving supreme control over the theatre, of which he had long been the mainstay. It opened under his management on Dec. 30, 1878, when he again played "Hamlet" for 100 nights. The most remarkable incidents of Mr. Irving's management have been the production of "Othello" (in which he alternated the parts of the Moor and Iago with Mr. Edwin Booth), "The Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado about Nothing," "The Cup," "Twelfth Night," and "Faust," all which have been played in conjunction with Miss Ellen Terry. A public banquet was given to Mr. Irving at St. James's Hall, on July 4, 1883, shortly before his departure with the Lyceum company for a theatrical tour in the United States. A second visit to America was made in 1884, and before its close Mr. Irving delivered an address to the students of Harvard University on the art of acting. He also delivered an address by the invitation of the Vice-Chancellor (Mr. Jowett) at Oxford, on June 26, 1886. On May 5, 1887, Mr. Irving was elected a Life Trustee of Shakespeare's Birthplace. On June 1 he produced Byron's "Werner" at the Lyceum Theatre for the benefit of Dr. Westland Marston, with the fine result of giving over £800 to the distressed dramatist. On October 17 he visited Stratford-on-Avon for the purpose of making the dedicatory speech at the presentation of a public fountain by Mr. G. W. Childs, of Philadelphia, and the next day left Liverpool for a third tour in America, lasting until March 24, 1888. During his stay in the States he was given on March 15, a reception by the American Goethe Society, and on March 19, by special desire of the War Department, he took his company to the Military Academy at Westpoint, where, with Miss Ellen Terry, he gave "The Merchant of Venice" in Elizabethan dress and without scenery of any kind. On March 12 the great blizzard occurred which paralyzed New York for a week, and on that evening the Star, where Mr. Irving was performing, was the only theatre open. After a short season at the Lyceum he took Faust on tour, and at Bolton laid the foundation-stone of a new theatre. On Nov. 28 he was entertained at a public banquet in Birmingham. On Dec. 29 he produced "Macbeth" at the Lyceum, with Miss Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth, and ran it until the following summer, nearly 200 nights, which is the longest run of the play on record. In April of the year 1889 he visited Germany, where "Julius Cæsar" and the "Merchant of Venice" were presented for him at the Berliner Theatre by Herr Barnay; and on his return home he played, with Miss Ellen Terry, at Sandringham before Her Majesty the Queen. On Sept. 28 he revived at the Lyceum Watt Phillip's play "The Dead Heart." The play ran the whole season, ending in the summer of 1890, after which, with Miss Ellen Terry, he made a short provincial tour, giving recitals of "Macbeth" with the accompaniment of Sir Arthur Sullivan's music. On Sept. 20, 1890, he produced "Ravenswood," by Herman Merivale, founded on Sir Walter Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor."

ISAACS, Sir Henry Aaron, is the son of the late Mr. Michael Isaacs, a London merchant, by Sara, daughter of Aron Enrique Mendoza, with whose progenitors Lord Beaconsfield was connected. He was born in London in 1830, and is the head of the firm of Messrs. Michael Isaacs and Sons, merchants of London, Hull, Cardiff, Valencia, and other places. He entered the Corporation of London as a member of the Common Council for Aldgate Ward in 1862, and was annually re-elected until April, 1883, when he succeeded the late Alderman Sir Thomas White as Alderman of Portsoken Ward. Meanwhile he had served as Chairman of all the principal Corporation Committees and taken especial interest in the development of the Markets of the City of London. He served the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex in the Queen's Jubilee Year, 1887, and was knighted on her Majesty's visit to the city. He is one of the Lieutenants of the City of London; a Governor of the Royal Hospitals; and a past master of the Loriners' Company. In 1889-90 he was Lord Mayor of the City of London, and in that period was appointed Past Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons and Master of the Drury Lane Lodge, his installation taking place in the Mansion House by special dispensation of the Most Worshipful Grand Master. He married, in 1849, Eleanor, daughter of the late A. M. Rowland of the 9th Regiment.

ISABELLA II. (Maria Isabella Louisa), ex-Queen of Spain, was born at Madrid, Oct. 30, 1830. Her father, Ferdinand VII., had been induced, by the influence of his wife, to issue the Pragmatic Decree, revoking the Salic law; and at his death, Sept. 29, 1833, his eldest daughter, then a child, was proclaimed Queen, under the regency of her mother, Maria-Christina. This event proved the signal for civil warfare, as the claims of the late king's brother were warmly supported by certain classes of the people. The war of succession lasted seven years, and the country was desolated by the struggle between the contending Carlist and Christina parties, until the Cortes confirmed the claims of Isabella by pronouncing sentence of exile on Don Carlos and his adherents. In 1840, the Queen-regnant, finding it impossible to carry on the government without making concessions to public feeling, for which she was indisposed, retired to France, resigning her power into the hands of Espartero, whom she had been previously compelled to summon to the head of affairs. For the following three years, whilst that constitutional leader was able in great measure to direct her education and training, the young Queen was subjected to purer and better influences than she had before experienced. She was declared by a decree of the Cortes to have attained her majority, Oct. 15, 1843, and took her place among the reigning sovereigns of Europe. Maria-Christina returned to Madrid in 1845, and her restoration to influence was marked by the marriage of Isabella II. to her cousin, Don Francisco d'Assisi, the elder son of her maternal uncle, Don Francisco de Paula, which took place Oct. 10, 1846. Sacrificed to the intrigues of a party whose interests were based on this uncongenial union, Isabella II. never knew the beneficial influence of domestic happiness; estrangements and reconciliations having succeeded each other alternately in her married life. It deserves special mention, however, that during her reign Spain rose to take rank among the great powers of Europe, while the internal progress of the country advanced with rapid strides. On Sept. 16, 1868, a great revolution broke out in Spain, starting with the fleet off Cadiz, and gradually spreading over the whole peninsula. The speedy result was the formation of a Republican Provisional Government under Prim, Serrano, and others, at Madrid, and the flight of Queen Isabella to France. On Nov. 6 her Majesty took up her residence in Paris, where she remained during her exile, with the exception of an interval spent at Geneva during the Franco-Prussian War. On June 25, 1870, she renounced her claims to the Spanish throne in favour of her eldest son, the Prince of the Asturias. After eight years of exile she returned to Spain, and was received at Santander by her son, the late King Alfonso XII. (July 29, 1876). Queen Isabella has had five children:—1. Infanta Marie-Isabel-Françoise-d'Assise-Christine-de-Paule-Dominga, born Dec. 20, 1851. 2. Alfonso XII., late King of Spain. 3. Infanta Maria del Pilar, born June 4, 1861. 4. Infanta Maria della Paz, born June 23, 1862; and 5. Infanta Maria Eulalie, born Feb. 12, 1864.

ISMAIL PACHA, ex-Viceroy or Khedive of Egypt, son of Ibrahim Pasha, and grandson of the celebrated Mehemet Ali, was born at Cairo in 1830, and succeeded his brother Said Pasha, Jan. 18, 1863. He was educated in Paris, and on his return to Egypt, in 1849, he opposed the policy of Abbas Pasha, the Viceroy, who, as it was supposed for political purposes, made, in 1853, a criminal charge against him, which was not, however, proceeded with. In 1855 he visited France on a confidential mission, and proceeded thence to Rome, where he conveyed some magnificent Oriental presents for the Pope's acceptance. The Viceroy's policy in Egypt was said to be in accordance with that of his predecessor, namely, the development of the resources of his country; but he had much trouble in his transactions with M. de Lesseps in relation to the Suez Canal. These difficulties were, however, arranged in July, 1864, by the arbitration of the Emperor Napoleon, whose decision was accepted by the Viceroy. From this period the Viceroy took a warm interest in the undertaking, and in 1869, when the works were approaching completion, he visited most of the capitals of Europe, including London, in order to invite the Sovereigns to be present at the opening of the canal. The Viceroy gave serious offence to the Sultan by the airs of sovereignty which he assumed during this journey, and by the language of independence which he employed in his invitations; but the year in which the quarrel arose saw its amicable termination. The Khedive gave way upon the matters of form, which were those upon which the Porte laid the most stress, and a new firman, maintaining, confirming, and defining the privileges of the Pacha, was read to him with all due formality. Moreover, on June 8, 1873, a firman was granted by the Sultan to the Khedive of Egypt, sanctioning the full autonomy of that country, and enacting the law of primogeniture in favour of Ismail Pacha's family. The attempt to Europeanize the country entailed a vast expenditure, and Egypt acquired a national debt of more than £80,000,000. In 1875 the Khedive procured a temporary respite from his difficulties by the sale of his shares in the Suez Canal to the British Government for the sum of £4,000,000; and then, being at last aware of the critical state of his finances, and of the incompetence of Orientals to mend it, his Highness requested the British Government to provide him with some experienced financier to effect a thorough reform. In Dec., 1875, Mr. Stephen Cave, M.P., accompanied by Colonel Stokes, R.E., was sent out, and after some months' examination, wrote an elaborate report on the Egyptian finances. Afterwards, however, Egyptian credit fell still lower, till in 1876 the Khedive suspended payment for a time. In that year Mr. Goschen, M.P., and M. Joubert, were sent out as the representatives of the English and French bondholders to attempt an adjustment of the financial affairs of Egypt. The result was a scheme which was accepted by the Khedive. Mr. Rivers Wilson, having been more recently charged with a similar mission, induced the Khedive to give up his family estates to his creditors, and Mr. Wilson himself accepted the post of Egyptian Minister of Finance (Aug. 1878). The report of the Commission of Inquiry was presented to the Khedive Aug. 20, 1878. It proposed a number of specific financial and administrative reforms, all which tended to limit the authority of the Khedive, and it plainly called upon him to surrender all his property, estimated by him, exclusive of the sugar estates previously surrendered to the Daira Debt, at about £450,000 per annum. The Khedive was to receive, in exchange for this surrender to the State, an acceptance of all his liabilities by the Public Treasury, and a Civil List for himself and family. A new ministry was formed by Nubar Pacha at the close of the year, and Mr. Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières were admitted into it as representing the interests of the Western Powers. This ministry was, however, overthrown in Feb., 1879, by an émeute which the Khedive was suspected of fostering. A strong movement of intervention was originated in France by powerful financial bodies interested in the Egyptian Debt, and a joint representation of the French and English Govern ments resulted in the apparent submission of Ismail Pacha, and the formation of a new Cabinet under Prince Tewfik, the Khedive's heir, in which the European ministers were to have a commanding voice. This arrangement lasted for a few weeks. In April the Khedive, declaring that the ministerial measures were unjust to the bondholders and damaging to the public credit, dismissed his advisers. After some delay, due to the difficulty of inducing the powers to agree as to the course to be pursued, and after Ismail Pasha had turned a deaf ear to a suggestion of abdication urged upon him by the European Consuls-General, the Sultan, prompted by France and England, issued a firman deposing Ismail, and nominating Tewfik Khedive. Ismail accordingly abdicated in favour of his son on June 26, and on July 1 he left Egypt. Having been unable to obtain from the Porte permission to land at Constantinople, he took up his residence at Naples; but he has frequently changed his place of abode since then. In March, 1886, he brought against the Egyptian Government a claim for £5,000,000, alleged to be the value of the private property of which he was deprived at his abdication. Sir W. T. Marriott, who acted as counsel for Ismail, succeeded in securing for his client the greater portion of his claim.

ISRAELS, Josef, a Dutch painter, was born at Groningen in 1824. He studied in Amsterdam, under Kruseman, and next in Paris, under Picot; and received Gold Medals of honour in Paris, Brussels, and Rotterdam. He also had conferred upon him the Belgian Order of Leopold, and was nominated a member of the French Legion of Honour. His principal paintings are, "The Tranquil House;" "The Shipwrecked" and "The Cradle;" "Interior of the Orphan's Home at Katwyk;" "The True Support;" "The Mother;" and "The Children of the Sea" (in the Queen of Holland's collection). In 1873 he exhibited at the French Gallery in Pall Mall, "Minding the Flock," and since that time has continually added to that long list of pictures in which he has recorded the sadder aspects of humble life, whether in its affections, its bereavements, or its labours. Mr. Israels has resided in the Hague for many years. His brother, Mr. Lehman Israels, born at Groningen in 1833, went at an early age to the United States, where he acquired a considerable reputation as a journalist. He was for several years foreign editor of the New York World, ISTRIA, The Princess Dora, d', the literary pseudonym of the Princess Helen Ghika, one of the daughters of Michael Ghika, and niece of Prince Gregory IV., who was the first to spread among the people of Wallachia the liberal institutions of civilisation. She was born at Bucharest in 1829, and was married in 1849 to the Russian Prince Koltzoff-Massalsky. Disliking the absolutist system of Government in Russia, she quitted that country in 1855. She spent five years in Belgium and Switzerland, carefully studying the customs and laws, and, having made a tour through Greece, she went to Italy in 1861. At this period Garibaldi addressed to her a letter, requesting her to exert her influence over the Roumanians, to induce them to rise in rebellion against Austria. The Princess, who resides in Florence, is said to be thoroughly acquainted with the Italian, German, French, Roumanian, Greek, Latin, Russian, and Albanian languages, has written much on the essential and vital questions affecting the political and social future of the Greeks, the Albanians, and the Slavs of Northern Europe. She is an enthusiastic advocate of "Women's Rights," and an indefatigable champion of oppressed nationalities. Since 1850 she has been a contributor to the Revue des Deux Mondes; and she has written many articles in the French, Belgian, Greek, German, Italian, English and American journals. Among her works are: "La Vie Monastique dans l'Eglise Orientale," Brussels, 1855; 2nd edit., Paris and Geneva, 1858; "La Suisse Allemande et l'Ascension du Mönch," 4 vols., Paris and Geneva, 1856, translated into English and German; "Les Femmes en Orient," 2 vols., Zurich, 1858; "Excursions en Roumélie et en Morée," 2 vols., Zurich, 1863; "Des Femmes, par une Femme," 2 vols., Paris and Brussels, 1865; "La Nazionalità Albanese secondo i canti popolare," Cosenza, 1867; "Discours sur Marco Polo," Trieste, 1869; "Venise en 1867," Leipzig, 1870; "Gli Albanesi in Rumania," a history of the Princesses Ghika in the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, published in the Rivista Europea, 1871-73; "Eleonora de Hallingen," and "Ghizlaine," two novels, 1871; "La Poésie des Ottomans," 2nd edit., Paris, 1877; and "The Condition of Women among the Southern Slavs," 1878. A detailed list of her works is given in the "Bibliografia della Principessa Dora d'Istria," 6th edit., Florence, 1873.

ITALY, King of. See HUMBERT IV.

J.

JACKSON, Rev. John Edward, M.A., F.S.A., Rector of Leigh Delamere, near Chippenham, Wilts, and Hon. Canon of Bristol, was born at Doncaster, co. York, Nov. 12, 1805, and is the second surviving son of James Jackson, Esq., a banker and magistrate, and Henrietta P. Bower. He was educated first at the Rev. Dr. P. Inchbald's, Carr House, near Doncaster, 1814-1820; then at Charterhouse School, under Dr. Russell, to Christmas, 1823; at B. N. Coll., Oxford, 1824. In the 2nd class of Lit. Human.; and B.A., 1827; M.A., 1830; was ordained by Bishop Law at Wells, 1834, and appointed to the curacy of Farleigh-Hungerford, near Bath, where he remained till 1845, being then presented by the late Joseph Neeld, Esq., M.P. for Chippenham, to the rectory of Leigh Delamere, and in the following year, by the same patron, to the vicarage of Norton, near Malmesbury. He was Rural Dean of Malmesbury for thirteen years, and was appointed by Bishop Monk to an Honorary Canonry in Bristol Cathedral in 1855. In 1853 he published "A History of the ruined Church of St. Mary Magdalene, discovered A.D. 1846, within the old Town Hall of Doncaster, illustrated by John P. Seddon, architect," folio; and, in 1855, "A History and Description of St. George's Church, Doncaster, destroyed by fire, Feb. 28, 1853, with several plates and woodcuts;" also, in 1853, "A Guide to Farleigh-Hungerford," enlarged in a 3rd edition in 1879, with numerous plates of Arms, &c., relating to the Hungerford family. In 1843, before settling in Wiltshire, he had assisted the late Mr. John Britton in an attempt to establish a "Topographical Society" in that county, towards which he wrote "The History of the Parish of Grittleton;" but for want of further literary support, the plan failed. Ten years afterwards, viz., in 1853, another, called the Wiltshire "Archæological and Natural History Society," was founded, and has been more successful, having up to the present time completed its 24th volume. Of this society he was one of the secretaries, as well as editor of the magazine for several years, and has contributed to it a great number of papers connected with the history and topography of the county. He is also the author of a few sermons preached on public occasions, as visitations, &c.; one of them in Bristol Cathedral, in 1846, at the Festival of the Clergy and Sons of the Clergy, with an appendix containing an account of the charity, a list of the stewards, preachers, &c. In 1862, in order to bring out more usefully a fragmentary essay towards Wiltshire county history that had been begun by John Aubrey, at a time when few persons gave any attention to literature of that kind, he published a quarto volume of that antiquary's collections, particularly including, not the least valuable part of them, the heraldry copied by Aubrey from the windows of churches and old houses as existing more than 200 years ago, of which nearly the whole has since utterly disappeared. This volume, greatly enlarged by notes and additions down to the present day, was printed at the expense of the Wiltshire Archæological Society, bearing the title of "Wiltshire Collections, Aubrey and Jackson." Also, in 1882, he edited, from the Original MS. at Longleat, as the Marquis of Bath's contribution to the Roxburgh Club, an early "Inquisition of the Manors of Glastonbury Abbey in A.D. 1189, known as 'Liber Henrici de Soliaco Abbatis Glaston vocatus A.'"

JACKSON, William Lawies, M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. William Jackson, of Leeds, was born at Otley in 1840, and was educated privately. He is a Director of the Great Northern Railway Company; and represented Leeds from April, 1880, until the dissolution in 1885, after having unsuccessfully contested the borough in 1876. In 1885 and 1886 he was returned for the Northern division of Leeds. In Lord Salisbury's first administration he received the important appointment of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, in succession to Sir Henry Holland, and in the ministry of 1886 again holds the same post. He is regarded as one of the strongest of the subordinate members of the administration.

JACKSON, The Right Rev. William Walrond, D.D., Bishop of Antigua, born in Barbadoes, about 1810, received his education at Codrington College, Barbadoes, of which he was a Licentiate in Theology. He was formerly Chaplain to the Forces in Barbadoes, and was consecrated Bishop of Antigua in 1860. His episcopal jurisdiction includes the islands of Antigua, Nevis, St. Christopher, Montserrat, the Virgin Islands, and Dominica; and the gross income of the See is £2,000, paid out of the Consolidated Fund. Bishop Jackson's son, the Rev. William Walrond Jackson, is Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and Censor of Unattached Students in the University.

JAGO, James, A.B., Cantab.; M.D., Oxon.; F.R.S., was born on Dec. 18, 1815, at Kigilliack (once a seat of the Bishops of Exeter), near Falmouth. John Jago, who died at Truthan, in the parish of St. Erme, Cornwall, on Oct. 6, 1852, was a Commissioner of Sequestration under the Commonwealth, and he had, in 1646, petitioned the House of Lords with respect to land "on which his ancestors lived for 300 years." (Calendar of MSS., House of Lords). Of him James is a descendant and heir. He removed to Falmouth when in his eighth year; and was educated at the Falmouth Classical and Mathematical School, and received also some private tuition. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, as a pensioner, in 1835, B.A. in 1839 (wrangler). Of Wadham College, Oxford, B.A. and M.B. in 1843; M.D. in 1859; he having taken to medicine as a profession subsequent to his graduation in Cambridge, and studied in Dublin, London, and Paris. In 1870 he was admitted a Fellow of the Royal Society. Dr. Jago was made Physician to the Truro Dispensary in 1852, and, in the same year, Physician to the Royal Cornwall Infirmary; in 1876 Consulting Physician to the former; and, in 1885, (on his retiring from practice) Consulting Physician to the latter. He was President of the Royal Institution of Cornwall from November, 1873, to November, 1875. Among his literary contributions may be mentioned: "Points in the Physiology and Diseases of the Eye," 1845. This paper develops entoptical methods of exploring the eye by means of divergent beams of light; which methods preceded all like solutions of this problem. "The Opening of the Eustachian Tube, limited to the act of Deglutition, now first rightly explained," 1853; "Ocular Spectres and Structures as Mutual Exponents," 1856; "Eustachian Tube: why opened in Deglutition," 1856; "Entoptics," 1859; "Entoptics, with its Uses in Physiology and Medicine," 1864 (Concerning this work, Dr. Jago says, in his Preface to it, that he has "exerted himself to make this little work as near as may be, a treatise on Entoptics, which, while giving his own views, does not fail to make the reader acquainted with the views of other writers. . . . It ventures, too, upon untrodden ground in its investigations; and suggests explanations of phenomena which have remained unaccounted for; many of its physiological conclusions being peculiar; so that, in the main, it is an original essay"); "The Functions of the Tympanum," 1867 and 1870; "Entacoustics" 1868; "Eustachian Tube, when and how is it opened," 1869; "Pains in the Abdominal and Thoracic Walls," 1861; "Two Cases of Supposed Moveable Kidneys," 1858; "Ophthalmoscopic Muscæ Volitantes in a very Myopic Eye," 1861; "Moveable Kidneys and Hour-glass Stomach from Cicatrix," 1872; also various other papers in periodicals and proceedings of societies. On his attaining the seventieth anniversary of his birthday, Dr. Jago retired from the practice of his profession.

JAMES, The Right Hon. Sir Henry, Q.C., M.P., son of Philip Turner James, Esq., of Hereford, by Frances Gertrude, third daughter of John Bodenham, Esq., of Presteign, Radnorshire, was born at Hereford, Oct. 30, 1828, and received his education at Cheltenham College. He was called to the Bar in the Middle Temple in 1852, and went the Oxford Circuit. He had already distinguished himself in the legal profession, having been Lecturer's Prizeman at the Inner Temple in 1850, and again in 1851. Mr. James was nominated to the ancient order of "postman" of the Court of Exchequer in 1867; was made a Queen's Counsel in June, 1869; and became a Bencher of his Inn in 1870. In March, 1869, he obtained a seat in the House of Commons as one of the members for Taunton, unseating, on a scrutiny, his opponent, Mr. Serjeant Cox, (who had been returned at the general election of the previous December,) and continued to represent that borough in the Liberal interest until 1885, when he was returned for Bury (S. E. Lancashire). During the session of 1872 he took a prominent part in the debates on the Judicature Bill. In Sept., 1873, Mr. Gladstone appointed him Solicitor-General in succession to Sir George Jessel, and in November of that year he became Attorney-General, and received the honour of knighthood. He went out of office with the Liberal party in Feb., 1874. He was again appointed Attorney-General on the return of the Liberals to power under Mr. Gladstone in May, 1880. In Mr. Gladstone's administration of 1886, Sir Henry James (who had been offered the Lord Chancellorship) declined to take office, on the ground of disagreement with the Prime Minister's Home Rule policy. He was returned unopposed for Bury, as a Unionist Liberal, at the general election of 1886. He was one of the counsel for the Times in the action of O'Donnel v. Walter, and also in the Parnell Commission, and delivered an able address, forming a retrospect of the history of Ireland from his point of view.

JAMES, Henry, American novelist and essayist, was born at New York City, April 15, 1843. He is the son of the late Rev. Henry James, a forcible writer on religious and philosophical topics (born 1811, died Dec. 18, 1882). In his eleventh year his family went abroad, and after some stay in England made a long sojourn in France and Switzerland. On their return to America in 1860 they first resided in Newport, Rhode Island, removing to Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1866. Mr. James attended the Harvard Law School for a year or two while his family were at Newport, but a few years after their removal to Cambridge, 1869, he went abroad, where he has since remained, with the exception of occasional brief visits home. He now lives in London, though he spends considerable time in Italy. He has been a contributor to most of the American magazines, but his celebrity rests mainly upon his novels, which usually deal with the American as found abroad. His published books are: "Watch and Ward," 1871; "A Passionate Pilgrim, and other Tales," 1875; "Roderick Hudson," 1875; "Transatlantic Sketches," 1875; "The American," 1877; "French Poets and Novelists," 1878; "The Europeans," 1878; "Daisy Miller," 1878; "An International Episode," 1879; "Hawthorne," (one of the "English Men of Letters" series), 1879; "A Bundle of Letters," 1879; "Confidence," 1879; "Diary of a Man of Fifty," 1880; "Washington Square," 1880; "The Portrait of a Lady," 1881; "Siege of London," 1883; "Portraits of Places," 1884; "Tales of Three Cities," 1884; "A Little Tour in France," 1884; "Author of Beltraffio," 1885; "The Bostonians," 1886; "Princess Casamassima," 1886; "Partial Portraits," 1888; "The Aspen Papers," etc., 1888; "The Reverberator," 1888; "A London Life," 1889; and "The Tragic Muse," 1890.

JAMES, Thomas Lemuel, born at Utica, New York, March 29, 1831, was a pupil at the Utica Academy until he was fifteen years of age. His first journalistic experience was upon The Liberty Press, an anti-slavery paper. Entering actively upon political life before he had even attained his majority, he was made associate editor, 1849, of The Madison County Journal, the organ of the Seward wing of the Whig party in New York. Upon the formation of the Republican party Mr. James entered the new organization, and during the Fremont canvass for the Presidency became sole proprietor and editor of the Journal, which he retained for ten years. During part of this time he was a collector of tolls on the Chenango Canal, which is owned by the State of New York. Upon the inauguration of President Lincoln in 1861 he was appointed Inspector of Customs, and accordingly sold his paper, and removed to New York City. In 1874 he was made Weigher, and in 1876 Deputy Collector of Customs. The efficiency he displayed in these positions induced President Grant, in 1877, to make him Postmaster at New York City, a position which he filled with such signal ability as to effect almost a revolution in the postal administration of the city. He removed the office entirely "out of politics," making merit the only test for appointments and promotions, largely increased its revenues, introduced many mechanical improvements, and in other ways added greatly to its usefulness. His success was so marked that President Garfield appointed him Postmaster-General in March, 1881, but the assassination of Mr. Garfield led him to tender his resignation to Mr. Arthur, and, in Jan., 1882, he retired from political life to accept the presidency of the Lincoln National Bank in New York City, a position which he still retains.

JANET, Paul, a French author, was born in Paris in April, 1823. He is a follower of Cousin, and has been a Professor at Bourges and Strasbourg, and at the Lycée of Louis-le-Grand, Paris. In 1864 he became Professor of the history of philosophy at the Sorbonne, and a member of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, which institution awarded prizes for his "La Farnille," 1855; and "Histoire de la Philosophie dans l'antiquité et dans les temps modernes," 1858. Among his more recent works are "Histoire de la Science Politique," 1871; "Problèmes du XIX. Siècle," 1872; "Philosophie de la Révolution Française," 1875; "Les Causes-Finales," 1876; "La Philosophie Française Contemporaine," 1879; "Les Maîtres de la Pensée Moderne," 1883. He has also contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes, Dictionnaire des Sciences Philosophiques, Le Temps, &c., and is an officer of the Legion of Honour.

JAPAN, The Mikado, or Emperor of. Ses Mutsu-Hito.

JAPP, Francis Robert, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Dundee in 1848, and educated at schools in Dundee and St. Andrews, and at the Universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, Heidelberg, and Bonn. Since 1881 he has held the post of Lecturer on Chemistry in the Normal School of Science, South Kensington. In 1885 he was elected Foreign Secretary of the Chemical Society, and in the same year received the Fellowship of the Royal Society. In 1888, the University of St. Andrews conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. His various researches, which deal exclusively with questions relating to organic chemistry, have been published chiefly in the journal of the Chemical Society. He has also published, jointly with Professor E. Frankland, F.R.S., a textbook of Inorganic Chemistry.

JAY, Hon. John, American statesman, grandson of the first Chief Justice of the United States, was born at New York City, June 23, 1817. He graduated at Columbia College in 1836, and was admitted to the Bar in 1839. He became identified with the anti-slavery movement, and assisted in the formation of the Republican party. During the Civil War he acted with the Union League Club, of which he was President in 1866, and again in 1877. From 1869 to 1875 he was American Minister to Austria; in 1877 he was Chairman of the Commission appointed to investigate the system of the N.Y. Custom House; and from 1883 to 1888 was President of the N.Y. State Civil Service Commission. Mr. Jay was active in the early history of the American Geographical and Statistical Society; was long Corresponding Secretary of the New York Historical Society, and was the first President of the Huguenot Society, organized in New York in 1855. Among his many speeches and pamphlets which have been circulated are: "America Free or America Slave," 1856; "The Church and the Rebellion," 1863; "On the Passage of the Constitutional Amendment Abolishing Slavery," 1864; "Rome in America," 1868; "The American Foreign Service," 1877; and "The Public School a Portal to the Civil Service."

JAYNE, The Right Rev. Francis John, M.A., Bishop of Chester, was born Jan. 1, 1845, and educated at Rugby School and Wadham College, Oxford, of which he was a Scholar. He took a First Class in Moderations in 1866, and a double First Class in the Final Schools, 1868, in which year he became a Fellow of Jesus College. He was ordained in 1870, and was for a year curate of St. Clement's, Oxford, afterwards becoming Tutor of Keble College, where he remained until 1879. In that year he was appointed Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, of which institution he greatly increased the efficiency. In 1886 he accepted the important vicarage of Leeds, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Gott, who became Dean of Worcester. In 1889 he was consecrated Bishop of Chester.

JEAFFRESON, John Cordy, is a member of an East Anglian family, which has been seated more than two centuries at Dullingham House, Cambridgeshire. He was born on Jan. 14, 1831, at Framlingham, Suffolk, where his father, William Jeaffreson, F.R.C.S., was an eminent surgical operator. He was educated at the Grammar Schools of Woodbridge and Botesdale, and began to study medicine. But changing his plan of life, he entered Pembroke College, Oxford, and took his degree in 1852, proceeding afterwards to Lincoln's Inn, where he was called to the Bar in 1859. His first novel, "Crewe Rise," was published in 1854, and has been followed by "Olive Blake's Good Work," 1862; "Live It Down," 1863; "Not Dead Yet," 1864; "A Woman in Spite of Herself," 1872. In connection with these works of fiction, mention may be made of their author's history of the literature of prose fiction in England, entitled "Novels and Novelists from Elizabeth to Victoria," 1858. Mr. Jeaffreson's principal contributions to the social history of England are his three well-known books on the three learned professions, "A Book about Doctors," 1860; "A Book about Lawyers," 1866; "A Book about the Clergy," 1870; also the "Annals of Oxford," 1871; "Brides and Bridals," 1872, a history of marriage in England; "A Book about the Table," 1874; and "A Young Squire of the Seventeenth Century," 1877, containing selections from the papers (A.D. 1676—A.D. 1686) of the author's ancestor. Christopher Jeaffreson, of Dullingham House, Cambridgeshire. Shortly after the death of Robert Stephenson, C.E., Mr. Jeaffreson was retained by the great engineer's representatives to write the story of his life, in conjunction with Professor Pole, C.E., who contributed the scientific appendix to the "Life of Robert Stephenson," 1864. He was a contributor in past times to Fraser's Magazine, the Dublin University Magazine, Temple Bar, and other periodical publications. Mr. Jeaffreson has also been a copious contributor to the Athenæum, and a diligent writer on the daily press of London. The annual Blue Book Reports of Her Majesty's Commission on Historical Manuscripts show that, as one of their inspectors of Records and Documents, Mr. Jeaffreson has of late years spent much time in the examination of ancient writings in different parts of the kingdom, and has done much service to literature in collecting materials for future historians. Since the beginning of 1886, Mr. Jeaffreson has edited for the Middlesex County Records Society three volumes of historical matters, taken from the Middlesex Sessions' Rolls, Files and Books from 3 Edward VI. to 18 Charles II.; and he is at work on a fourth volume of the same series of publications. Mr. Jeaffreson's latest original works are: "The Real Lord Byron: New Views of the Poet's Life," 2 vols., 1883; "The Real Shelley," 2 vols., 1885; "Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson: an Historical Biography based on Letters and other Documents in the Possession of Alfred Morrison, Esq., of Fonthill, Wiltshire," 2 vols., 1888; "The Queen of Naples and Lord Nelson," based on letters and other documents in the British Museum and the Morrison MSS., 2 vols., 1889; and "Cutting for Partners," a Novel, 1890.

JEBB, Professor Richard Claverhouse, LL.D., born at Dundee, Aug. 27, 1841, is son of Robert Jebb, Esq., formerly counsel for the Revenue in Ireland; grandson of the late Mr. Justice Jebb; and grand-nephew of Bishop Jebb; while, on the maternal side, he is great-grandson of Bishop Horsley. He was educated at St. Columba's College, co. Dublin; at Charterhouse School, London; and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated as senior classic in 1862, and was soon afterwards elected a Fellow. As a classical lecturer of his College, he took a foremost part of organising at Cambridge the system of Inter-Collegiate Classical Lectures, and was the first secretary of an association of college lecturers for that purpose. Along with Professor E. B. Cowell, he was also instrumental in founding the Cambridge Philological Society, of which he was the first secretary. In 1869 he was chosen by the Senate to be Public Orator of the University. In 1871 he was nominated by the University as a Governor of Charterhouse School; in 1872 he was elected Classical Examiner in the University of London; and was also appointed tutor of Trinity College; but resigned these posts on being called, in 1875, to fill the chair of Greek in the University of Glasgow. In 1878, he received from the King of the Hellenes the Order of the Saviour, in recognition of his services to Greek studies; and in the following year the University of Edinburgh conferred upon him the honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws. In 1884, on visiting the United States, he received the honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws from Harvard University. In 1885, the Degree of Doctor of Letters was conferred on him by the University of Cambridge; in 1888 he received the Degree of LL.D. from the University of Dublin, and that of Ph.D. from the University of Bologna. In 1889 he was elected Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge; and, in 1890, he succeeded the late Bishop Lightfoot as President of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies. He is the author of a work in 2 vols., on "The Attic Orators;" also of "Selections from the Attic Orators," with notes; "The Characters of Theophrastus," with notes and translation; "Modern Greece;" "A Primer of Greek Literature;" "A Life of Richard Bentley" (in "English Men of Letters," which is about to appear in a German translation); "Translations" into, and from, Greek and Latin; the "Electra" and "Ajax" of Sophocles, with notes; and important articles on classical literature, history, and archæology, in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and Journal of Hellenic Studies. He is now engaged on a complete edition of Sophocles, of which Part I. (Edipus Tyrannus), Part II. (Edipus Coloneus), Part III. (Antigone), and Part IV. (Philoctetes) have already been published (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1883-90). He has taken an active part in promoting the study and teaching of Modern Greek.

JEFFERSON, Joseph, actor, was born at Philadelphia, Feb. 20, 1829. His grandfather and great-grandfather were distinguished actors, and his mother, Mrs. Burke, was a celebrated vocalist. He appeared on the stage at a very early age, and gradually rose to the front place as a comedian, and his merits are recognized in both England and America. His range of characters is very wide, covering almost the entire field of comedy and farce, without degenerating into burlesque. His most famous rôle is that of Rip Van Winkle in Mr. Dion Boucicault's play of that name, founded upon the story by Washington Irving; a character which Mr. Jefferson may be said to have created, as well as to have made his own. Perhaps he is equally successful as Bob Acres in "The Rivals," Dr. Pangloss in "The Heir at Law," and Caleb Plummer in "The Cricket on the Hearth." Besides playing in every city in the United States, he has made professional visits to England, Australia, and New Zealand. His son, Joseph Jefferson, jun., is also an actor of decided ability.

JEFFERY, Henry Martyn, M.A., F.R.S., mathematician, was born at Lamorran, near Truro, in Cornwall, Jan. 5, 1826, at the rectory of his grandfather, the Rev. W. Curgenvin. Several members of his family were eminent calculators, especially his great-uncle and namesake, Rev. H. Martyn B.D. of Truro, Senior Wrangler of 1801, the celebrated orientalist and missionary. Mr. Jeffery was trained at Sedbergh School, under the Rev. J. H. Evans, the editor of "Sections of Newton's Principia," and at Cambridge by Rev. Harvey Goodwin, now Bishop of Carlisle. He graduated in Jan., 1849, as Sixth Wrangler; and in March took a second class in the Classical Tripos. His closing University distinction was the first Tyrwhitt University Scholarship for Hebrew in 1852. From 1856 to the present year, Mr. Jeffery has published in various journals a continuous series of mathematical memoirs on "Pure Analysis," and "Analytical Geometry," the value of which was formally recognized in 1880 by his admission into the Royal Society. His most important work has been the classification of class-cubics, both in Plane and Spherical Geometry; two instalments of the similar classification for class-quartics also have been published in the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics. Mr. Jeffery has been occupied in other fields of labour. In 1853 he wrote as a co-adjutor, "On Classical Composition in Greek Iambics and Latin Prose," and in 1878 contributed an essay on a set subject at the Social Congress. He was appointed by the President and Fellows of C.C.C., Oxford, Second Master of Pate's Grammar School, Cheltenham in 1852, and was promoted, in 1868, to the Head-Mastership in succession to Rev. Dr. Hayman, the eminent Homeric Scholar. Many of his pupils have attained high distinction at the Universities and in the various Competitive Examinations for admission into the public services. Since his retirement to Falmouth from office in 1882, he has continued his scientific writings, and contributed papers on literary subjects to the local Polytechnic Society and the Royal Institution of Cornwall, in both which societies he is a Vice-President.

JENKINS, Ebenezer, E. LL.D., Honorary Secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, was born in Exeter, May 10, 1820, educated in a grammar school in that city, and entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1845. He was appointed the same year to India, where he laboured many years, chiefly in Madras, first as head of the Royapettah High School, and then as Geul Superintendent of Wesleyan Missions in Southern India. He returned to England in 1861 and joined the Home Ministry. He was pastor in the Hackney, Brixton, Southport, and other circuits. In 1875 he was sent to Madras on a visit of inspection, and extended his journey to China and Japan. In 1877 he became one of the General Secretaries of the Missionary Society. In 1880 he was elected President of the Conference. In 1881 he was deputed to visit the native churches in India, Ceylon, and China, and to furnish his committee and the Conference with a report of their condition and prospects. He is the author of the Fernley Lecture for 1877, entitled "Modern Atheism, its position and promise." He published a volume of sermons preached in Madras; and also "Sermons and addresses delivered during his Presidential Year," and "Sermons preached on behalf of the London and Baptist Missionary Societies." He is also the author of "My Sources of Strength," one of the series of devotional books published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

JENKINS, Edward, born in 1838 at Bangalore, India, is a son of the Rev. Dr. Jenkins, of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Montreal, Canada. He was educated at the High School and M'Gill College, Montreal, and in the University of Pennsylvania. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1864; and practised with success up to 1872-3, when he entered upon politics; was appointed Agent-General for Canada, in Feb., 1874, resigning in Jan., 1876, on the Canadian Government deciding to reduce the office to an emigration agency; and was elected member of Parliament for Dundee in Feb., 1874, while absent in Canada. He continued to represent that borough till April, 1880. In Jan., 1881, he contested the city of Edinburgh against Mr. McLaren, the Lord Advocate, but succeeded in polling only 3,940 votes, while 11,390 were recorded in favour of his opponent. Mr. Jenkins is an advanced Liberal, chiefly on social questions; an Anti-Republican; and is in favour of Imperial unity as against the Anti-Colonial party. He is the author of "Ginx's Baby," "Lord Bantam," "The Coolie," "Little Hodge," "The Devil's Chain," "Lutchmee and Dilloo," "The Captain's Cabin," "Fatal Days," "A Paladin of Finance," "Contemporary Manners," "Jobson's Enemies," and several Political essays. Mr. Jenkins proceeded to British Guiana in 1870 on the part of the Aborigines Protection Society in order to watch the proceedings of the Royal Commission appointed to investigate and report on the condition of the Coolies. He was associated with Sir George Grey, Mr. Torrens, and others in the Emigration movement. He was a member of the Royal Commission on Copyrights; and has been an occasional contributor to Fraser, the Contemporary, and other reviews; and has edited the Overland and Homeward Mails.

JENNER, Sir William, Bart., G.C.B., M.D. London, D.C.L. Oxon., LL.D. Cant., LL.D. Edinburgh, F.R.S., Commander Order of Leopold of Belgium, Hon. Member Academy of Medicine, Belgium, born at Chatham in 1815, was educated at University College, London, and began his professional career as a general practitioner, his first public appointment being that of Surgeon-Accoucheur to the Royal Maternity Charity. He graduated M.D., London, in 1844, when he retired from general practice. In 1848 he became a member of the Royal College of Physicians, and in the same year was appointed Professor of Pathological Anatomy in University College, and Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital. He was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and appointed to deliver the Gulstonian Lectures before the College in 1852, was nominated Physician to the Hospital for Sick Children on its establishment in that year, Assistant-Physician to the London Fever Hospital in 1853, Physician to the University College Hospital in 1854, and Professor of Clinical Medicine in 1857. On the death of the lamented Dr. Baly, in 1861, Dr. Jenner was appointed to succeed him as Physician Extraordinary to the Queen, and in 1862 was gazetted Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty. In 1862 he became Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine at University College, and in 1863 Physician in Ordinary to the Prince of Wales. On his appointment as Physician to the Queen, he resigned his connection with the London Fever Hospital, and in 1862 resigned the post of Physician to the Hospital for Sick Children. In 1864 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He has written several series of papers on Fever, the Acute Specific Diseases, Diphtheria, Diseases of Children, Diseases of the Heart, Lungs, Skin, &c. Dr. Jenner was one of the physicians who attended the late Prince Consort in his last illness. He is well known, not only to the profession, but to the public at large, as having been the first to establish beyond dispute the difference in kind between typhus and typhoid fevers. He was created a baronet in 1868, made a K.C.B. Jan. 20, 1872, in recognition of services rendered during the severe illness of the Prince of Wales, and G.C.B. May 24, 1889. Sir William Jenner was elected President of the Royal College of Physicians, London in 1881, and held that office for seven years. He retired from the practice of his profession in 1889.

JENNINGS, Louis John, M.P., was born in London in 1836. Between 1863 and 1868 he acted as special correspondent of the Times in India and the United States; in the latter country, he was afterwards chiefly instrumental in exposing and overthrowing the celebrated "Tammany Ring," a powerful organisation which had defrauded the city of New York of over £4,000,000. It was a task of great difficulty, and no small risk, to bring the prime-movers in this conspiracy to justice, and for some time Mr. Jennings laboured at it, through the pages of the New York Times, of which he was editor, with scarcely any encouragement or support. After a prolonged and fierce struggle, the attack was entirely successful, and upon quitting New York in 1876 to return to his native country, Mr. Jennings received a letter signed by representatives of the best classes in New York—including General Arthur (afterwards President of the United States), the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the Governor of the State, and the leaders of the American bar—assuring him that the citizens of New York would not forget his valuable services to the community. After his return to England, he published (1877) a charming book descriptive of country walks in England, "Field Paths and Green Lanes," now in its fifth edition. This was followed, in 1880, by a similar work, which also has attained great popularity, "Rambles among the Hills." He is also the author of a work on "Republican Government in the United States," 1868; of "The Millionaire," a novel originally published, 1883, in Blackwood's Magazine, and is editor of the well-known Croker Papers, 1884. In 1885 he stood as Conservative candidate for Stockport, and was returned. He has been for some years a contributor to the Quarterly Review.

JENNINGS, Sir Patrick Alfred, LL.D., K.C.M.G., M.L.C., was born in 1831, in the town of Newry, north of Ireland, and is a direct descendant of a Flemish family, which originally came to England in the fifteenth century and afterwards settled in Ireland. Parliamentary records show that in the year 1633 an ancestor of Sir Patrick Jennings was dispossessed of his estates in Grey Abbey for refusing to conform to the religion of the Church of England. Sir Patrick received his early education at Newry School, where he learnt civil engineering and surveying. Having finally resolved to leave England for Australia, he landed in Melbourne in 1852 and went to the goldfields, settling at St. Arnaud in 1855. He was among the first to introduce into that district quartz-crushing machinery on a large scale. In 1857 he was created a magistrate of Victoria, and was chairman for some years of the local Bench. In 1867, when Sir James Martin was Premier, and Sir Henry Parkes Colonial Secretary, Sir Patrick was summoned to the Legislative Council, of which he remained a member until 1870, when he resigned his seat and was elected a member of the Legislative Assembly for the Murray district. He occupied the seat during two Parliaments, until 1873, in which year he came to Sydney. In 1874 he received the order of St. Gregory the Great from Rome. In 1879 he accepted the post of Executive Commissioner to the first Sydney International Exhibition, and for his services in that position was appointed C.M.G., and in 1880 K.C.M.G. He has acted as Commissioner from New South Wales to the Victorian Exhibition, and as representative Commissioner for New South Wales, Queensland, and Tasmania to the Great Centennial Exhibition of Philadelphia in 1876. On a visit to Europe he was presented to the late Pope, when he received the distinction of Knight Commander of Pius IX., and was also created a Commander of St. Gregory the Great. In 1880 he was returned to the Assembly to represent the Bogan. He was Vice-President of the Executive Council, without portfolio, in the Stuart Government, and was Colonial Secretary in the Dibbs Administration. In Feb., 1886 Sir Patrick Jennings formed a Government, of which he was Premier and Treasurer, and also Vice-President of the Executive Council. These positions he resigned in January, 1887. The same year he proceeded to England, in company with the late Sir Robert Wisdom, as delegate to the Colonial Conference held in London. On revisiting his native country he was admitted an honorary LL.D. of Dublin University, and subsequently visited Rome, when he received the Grand Cross of Pius IX. from Pope Leo XIII. He was for some years Vice-President of the Agricultural Society, and prominent as a leader in benevolent and social movements. He is a magistrate of Queensland, Victoria, and New South Wales, and is a landowner in the three colonies. He is also a member of the Sydney University Senate, a Fellow of St. John's College, and a trustee of the Sydney National Art Gallery.

JERMYN, The Right Rev. Hugh Wilmoughby, D.D., Bishop of Brechin, was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge (B.A., 1841, M.A., 1847, D.D., 1872). Having accepted an appointment in the West Indies, he was made Archdeacon of St. Christopher. In 1858 he became Rector of Nettlecombe, Somersetshire, and in 1871 was appointed Bishop of Colombo, being consecrated in the chapel of Lambeth Palace, Oct. 28, 1871. He resigned this See early in 1875, and came home. Soon afterwards he was elected Bishop of Brechin, and was formally installed at Dundee, Jan. 18, 1876. In Sept. 1886, he was elected Primus of the Episcopal Church of Scotland in succession to Bishop Eden.

JEROME, Klapka Jerome, was born at Walsall, May 2, 1861, and is the son of a gentleman belonging to a west of England family, a colliery proprietor. He came to London when a child, and has lived there ever since. He was educated at the Philological School, Marylebone, served a good many callings, was clerk, schoolmaster, shorthand writer, reporter, actor and journalist. In 1885 he published "On the Stage—and Off," a brief, and intended to be amusing, account of his own stage experiences; in 1886 "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," a book of essays; in the same year he produced at the Globe Theatre "Barbara," a one-act comedy. In 1888, he produced "Sunset," a one-act comedy; "Fennel," an adaptation of a poetical play from the French; "Wood Barrow Farm," a three-act comedy. In 1889 he wrote "Stageland," a skit on stage conventionalities, and "Three Men in a Boat," a humorous story which has had an immense success. In 1890 he produced a three-act farce, "New Lamps for Old," and "Ruth," a play.

JERSEY (Earl of), Victor Albert George Child Villiers (7th Earl), was born March 20, 1845, succeeded to the earldom in 1859. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, and was appointed, on the retirement of Lord Carrington in 1890, to be Governor of New South Wales. He is a J.P. for Oxfordshire, and J.P. and D.L. for Warwickshire; was formerly Cornet in the Oxfordshire Yemanry Cavalry; and a Lord in Waiting to Her Majesty, 1875-77. The Earl married, in 1872, the Hon. Margaret Elizabeth Leigh, daughter of the 2nd Baron Leigh, and has two sons and three daughters.

JERVOIS, His Excellency Lieut.-General Sir William Francis Drummond, G.C.M.G., C.B., F.R.S., eldest son of the late General Jervois, was born at Cowes, Isle of Wight, in 1821, and entered the Royal Engineers in 1839. For seven years from 1841 he was actively employed at the Cape of Good Hope. In 1842 he acted as Brigade-Major in an expedition against the Boers, and during the three following years was professionally engaged at various frontier stations, making roads, building bridges, and establishing military posts. In 1845, having been appointed Acting Adjutant to the Royal Engineers, he accompanied the Chief Engineer over the whole frontier of the Cape Colony and the settlement of Natal, and in the early part of 1846 he was Major of Brigade in the garrison of Cape Town, until the arrival of Sir H. Pottinger as Governor, and Sir G. Berkeley, as Commander-in-Chief, with whom he proceeded to the frontier against the Kaffirs. During the Kaffir war he made a military survey and map of Kaffraria, a work of great difficulty. In 1852 he was ordered to the island of Alderney, for the purpose of designing plans for the fortifications, and the superintendence of their execution; a work strongly advocated by the great Duke of Wellington. In 1854 Major Jervois was promoted to the rank of major; and in 1855 he was transferred to the London District, and was nominated by Lord Panmure a member of a Committee on Barrack Accommodation, whose labours contributed much to the improvements which have of late years been effected in the construction of barracks, as well as in the sanitary condition of our troops. In 1856 he was appointed Assistant Inspector-General of Fortifications, under Sir John Burgoyne, and on the appointment, in 1859, of a Royal Commission to report upon the defences of the country, he was selected by the Government to be Secretary. He was at the same time Secretary to the Permanent Defence Committee, under the presidency of the Duke of Cambridge. He became the Confidential Adviser of Lord Palmerston and of several Secretaries of State, on matters relating to defence, and designed the fortifications of Portsmouth, Plymouth, Pembroke, Portland, Cork, the Thames, the Medway, and other places. During his long service, nearly twenty years, in the War Office, he was also a member of the Special Committee on the Application of Iron to Ships and Fortifications. In 1861 he attained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, in 1862 was appointed Deputy Director of Fortifications, and in 1863 was nominated a Companion of the Bath, and was sent on a special mission to report on the defences of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, on which occasion he visited the fortifications at the principal ports on the seaboard of the United States. In 1864 he was sent again on a special mission to Canada to confer with the Canadian Government on the question of the defence of that province. On his return to England his report was laid before Parliament, and the Imperial Government undertook to carry out the defences of Quebec on the plan recommended by him. He was also sent on special missions to Bermuda, Halifax (N.S.), Malta and Gibraltar, and planned improvements and additions to the fortifications of those places. In 1871-2 he was ordered to India, to advise the Government of India, respecting the defences of Bombay, Aden, the Hooghly, Rangoon, &c. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George in 1874, and was appointed Governor of the Straits Settlements, April 7, 1875. He held the latter post for two years, and during that period he quelled a formidable insurrection in the Malay Peninsula. The subsequent prosperity and quiet of the Malay States resulted mainly from his action. In April, 1877, he was appointed to advise the Governments of the Australian Colonies on the defence of their chief ports. While in Australia he was selected to be Governor of South Australia. He was nominated a G.C.M.G. in 1878; and in Dec., 1882, he was appointed Governor of New Zealand, where, on his advice, the fortification of the principal ports was undertaken by the Colonial Government. Indeed, throughout his stay in Australasia till the year 1889, he continued to be the chief adviser of the Governments there on matters relating to defence. He has recently (Jan. 1891) been publicly advocating, as a means of removing the friction complained of between the Navy and Army, that Naval Stations and Coast Defences shall be handed over to the Naval Department.

JESSE, George Richard, son of the late Rev. William Jesse, Vicar of Margaretting, Essex, and Pelsall, Staffordshire, and nephew of the late Edward Jesse, of the Woods and Forests Office, author of "Gleanings in Natural History," was born at Caen, in Normandy, in 1802. He is a civil engineer, an etcher on copper, and the author of "Researches into the History of the British Dog," 2 vols., 1866. He has been engaged in the construction of railways in England, Egypt, and India. He has written on the Suez Canal, the projected Euphrates Valley Railway, and Indian Public Works. He is also a leader of the anti-vivisectionists, and has written many pamphlets on the subject of vivisection.

His volume of social papers entitled "Arcadia, for Better for Worse," which was first issued in 1887, is already in the 5th edition; and his "Coming of the Friars, and other Historical Essays," published in 1888, and treating of some important social and religious movements during the middle ages, have been widely read in England and in the American States; and three editions were absorbed within a year. Dr. Jessopp has contributed some important articles to the "Dictionary of National Biography," the most notable being the Life of Queen Elizabeth. He has likewise contributed many papers on historical and antiquarian subjects in the Proceedings of the Norfolk and Norwich Archæological Society, of which he is Literary Secretary.

JEX-BLAKE, Dr. Sophia, DEAN OF THE EDINBURGH SCHOOL OF MEDICINE FOR WOMEN.

JEX-BLAKE, The Rev. Thomas William, D.D., only son of Thomas Jex-Blake, Esq., J.P. for the county of Norfolk, and Maria Emily, daughter of Thomas Cubitt, Esq., J.P. and D.L. for the same county, was born in London, Jan. 26, 1832, and entered Rugby School, as a pupil of Mr. Cotton, in 1844. In 1851 he was elected a scholar of University College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1855, obtaining a first-class in classical honours both in Moderations and in the Final Schools. He was appointed Composition Master to the sixth form at Marlborough College in 1855 by Dr. Cotton, afterwards Bishop of Calcutta. In the same year he was elected to a Fellowship at Queen's College, but he vacated it by his marriage in 1857. He was ordained deacon in 1856, and priest in the following year. He was appointed an Assistant Master at Rugby in Jan., 1858; Principal of Cheltenham College, in June, 1868; and Head-Master of Rugby School in Feb., 1874. In 1887 he accepted the Rectory of Alvechurch, Worcestershire, and at Easter in that year resigned the Head-Mastership of Rugby. Dr. Jex-Blake published "Long Vacation in Continental Picture Galleries," in 1858; and is the author of an article on "Church Comprehension," in Macmillan's Magazine, March, 1873; of other literary articles; and of a volume of sermons, "Life by Faith," 1875.

JOACHIM, Joseph, a celebrated violinist, born at Kitsee, near Presburg, in Hungary, of Jewish parents, July 15, 1831, entered while very young the Conservatory of Music at Vienna, where he studied under Joseph Böhm. From the age of twelve years he attracted much attention at Leipzig by his rare skill on his instrument, and obtained an engagement, which he held for seven years, in the orchestra of the Gewandhaus. Meanwhile, however, he assiduously pursued his studies under the guidance of Ferdinand David, and also received lessons in the theory of music from Moritz Hauptmann. In 1850 he paid his first visit to Paris, and in the same year he was appointed Director of the Concerts at Weimar. In 1853 he became Master of the Chapel Royal at Hanover. After this he appeared in most of the capitals of Europe, and paid annual visits to London, where he gave several series of concerts. In 1869 he became a member of the Senate of the Berlin Academy, and was nominated Director of the School of Instrumental Music in the Conservatory of Music then recently established in the Prussian capital. He was created an honorary Mus. Doc. of the University of Cambridge, March 8, 1877. Herr Joachim's fame rests mainly on his extraordinary skill as an instrumentalist, but he is too great an artist not to keep his own wonderful technical ability always subordinate to the interpretation of the music he is playing. As a composer he belongs to the school of Schumann. The "Concert à la Hongroise" is one of his chief compositions for violin and orchestra. In Aug., 1882, he was appointed conductor of the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, and Musical Director of the Royal Academy of Arts. He has frequently visited England since then, and in 1886 played in most of the popular concerts at St. James's Hall.

JOHNSON, Eastman, American artist, was born at Lovell, Maine, July 29, 1824. From the age of seventeen he devoted himself seriously to art work, and in 1849 went to Düsseldorf, where he studied two years, and afterwards resided for four years at the Hague, where, besides numerous portraits, he executed "The Savoyard" and the "Card Players," his earliest elaborate pictures in oil. After visiting the principal European galleries, he established himself in Paris, but was soon after called home to Washington. In 1858 he settled at New York, where he still remains. His favourite subjects are American rural and domestic life, including the negro and other subjects, though of late he has devoted himself almost exclusively to portrait-painting. He revisited Europe in 1885. Among his best works, many of which have been reproduced in engraving and chromo-lithography, are "The Old Kentucky Home," "Mating," "The Farmer's Sunday Morning," "The Village Blacksmith," "The Pension Agent," "The Maple Sugar Camp," "Milton dictating to his Daughters," "Cousnello," "A Light unto his Feet," "Corn Husking Bee," "The Cranberry Harvest at Nantucket," and "The School of Philosophy at Nantucket."

JOHNSON, The Right Rev. Edward Ralph, Bishop of Calcutta, fifth son of William Ponsonby Johnson, of Castlesteads, Cumberland, was born at Castlesteads, Feb. 17, 1828, and educated at Rugby, and at Wadham College, Oxford

(B.A. 1850; M.A. 1860). He was ordained deacon and priest by the Bishop of Worcester—deacon, with a title to the curacy of Farnborough, in the county of Warwick—in 1851. He was appointed, in 1860, to a minor canonry in the cathedral of Chester, and to the curacy of the cathedral parish of St. Oswald. In 1866 the Dean and Chapter appointed him to the rectory of Northenden, in the county of Chester, where he succeeded the late Archdeacon Woolrough. He was selected by the Bishop of Chester, in 1871, to fill the post of Archdeacon of Chester, upon the resignation of the late Archdeacon Pollock. In Oct., 1876, he was appointed to the bishopric of Calcutta, vacant by the death of the late Dr. Robert Milman. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, Nov. 30, 1876.

JOHNSON, General Sir Edwin, Royal Artillery, K.C.B., C.I.E., fourth son of the late Sir Henry Allen Johnson, K.W., was born July 4, 1825, at Bath, and educated at Addiscombe College. He entered the service as 2nd Lieutenant, Bengal Artillery, June 10, 1842, and served in the Horse Artillery during the Sutlej campaign, 1845-46. In 1848 he was appointed Deputy Judge Advocate-General, and served on the Staff under Lord Gough in 1848-49 during the Punjab war; he was on Sir Walter Gilbert's staff in pursuit of the Sikhs and Afghans after the battle of Goojerat; and was present at the surrender of the Sikh army on March 14th, 1849. He was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief, India, March, 1855, and Assistant-Adjutant-General of Artillery, Dec., 1855. He served throughout the Indian Mutiny in 1857-58, including the siege and capture of Delhi, and the siege and capture of Lucknow. In 1862 he was appointed by Sir Hugh Rose, Commander-in-Chief in India, to officiate as Adjutant-General of the army, and in 1865 Assistant Military Secretary and extra Aide-de-Camp to H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. In July, 1873, he was appointed Quartermaster-General in India, on the recommendation of Lord Napier of Magdala, and Adjutant-General in India in the following year, returning to England as a Member of the India Council in 1874. He was appointed Member of the Viceroy's Council in India in March, 1877, resigned the post in Sept., 1880, and became Director-General of Military Education on Dec. 10, 1884. Sir Edwin Johnson has been several times mentioned in despatches for service in the field, and was wounded at the battles on the Hindun against the mutineers in 1857. Has received two Brevets, three Medals, and five Clasps, and is a K.C.B. and a Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire.

JOHNSON, Professor George, M.D., F.R.S., was born in Nov. 1818, at Goudhurst, in Kent. He was educated at the Goudhurst Grammar School and at King's College, London, where he entered as a medical student in 1839. He is a graduate of London—M.B., with the Scholarship for Physiology, in 1842; M.D. in 1844. In 1843 he was appointed the first Medical Tutor at King's College; in 1850, when he resigned that office, he was elected an honorary Fellow of the College; in 1857 he was appointed Professor of Materia Medica; and in 1863 he succeeded the late Dr. George Budd as Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Clinical Medicine, with the office of Senior Physician of King's College Hospital. Having resigned these offices in 1886, he was elected by the Council Emeritus Professor of Clinical Medicine and Consulting Physician to the Hospital. In 1862 he was elected a Fellow or Senator of the University of London, and in 1872 a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1846 he became a member of the College of Physicians; and in 1850, having been elected a Fellow, he was appointed to give the Gulstonian Lectures. In 1877 he delivered the Lumsleian Lectures; and in 1882 the Harveian Oration. He has served in succession as Examiner in Medicine for the College Licence, as a Junior Censor, as Senior Censor in 1875-76, and Vice-President in 1887. JOHNSON, The Rt. Hon. William Moore, Q.C., P.C., is the only son of the Rev.

William Johnson, M.A., formerly Chancellor of Ross and Cloyne, and rector of Glenore, county Cork, by Elizabeth Anne, daughter of the Rev. William Hamilton, F.T.C.D., and was born in 1828. He graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, taking his Bachelor's degree in 1849, and that of M.A. in 1856. He was called to the Irish Bar in Michaelmas term, 1853, was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1872, and was Law Adviser to the Crown in Ireland from 1868 till 1874. Mr. Johnson was returned as M.P. for Mallow at the general election of April, 1880; and on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's administration in the following month he was appointed Solicitor-General for Ireland, and re-elected M.P. for Mallow. He succeeded Mr. Law as Attorney-General for Ireland in Nov., 1881, and was appointed Judge of the High Court of Justice in Ireland, Queen's Bench Division, 1883. He is a Bencher of the King's Inns, Dublin (1880), and was made a Privy Councillor (Ireland), 1881.

JOHNSTON, Alexander, painter, was born in Edinburgh in 1813; his father, whom he had the misfortune to lose at a very early age, was an architect of considerable repute. At the age of fifteen his son was placed with a seal-engraver of that city, and having displayed great talent, as well as taste, for Art, he was at sixteen admitted a student in the Trustees' Academy, then under the Presidency of Sir William Allan. After three years he left Edinburgh for London, bringing with him an introduction to Wilkie, who recommended him to enter the Schools of the Royal Academy, which he did in 1836, exhibiting that same year in the Academy a portrait of the youngest son of Dr., afterwards Sir Alexander, Morison. His early pictures were mostly derived from Scottish song and story. "The Gentle Shepherd," 1840; "Sunday Morning," 1841; "The Covenanter's Marriage," 1842; and "The Covenanter's Burial," 1852. Many of his smaller-priced pieces, "The Highland Home," "The Trysting Tree," &c., have found favour with Art Unions. "Lord and Lady Russell receiving the Sacrament in Prison" painted in 1845, an example of a more ambitious style, is in the Vernon Collection; this was followed in 1846 by "The introduction of Flora MacDonald to Prince Charlie;" "Family Worship in a Scotch Cottage" was painted in 1851; "Melancthon, being surprised by a French Traveller, rocking the Cradle of his Infant," the first of a new style, produced in 1854, was followed in 1855 by "Tyndall translating the Bible." All these are engraved. "The arrest of John Brown the Lollard" was painted in 1856, and "The Pressgang" in 1858, which was published for the Art Union of Glasgow. "John Bunyan in Bedford Jail," 1861; "The Cottar's Saturday Night," 1863; "Robin Adair," 1864, and "The Child Queen and her four Maries," 1866, show the diversity of this Artist's style. "The Flight of Mary Modena," "Charlotte Corday," and "Flora Macdonald" were all painted in 1869, and exhibited in that year's Royal Academy Exhibition. The last named was bought by the Prince of Wales for presentation to the Queen. "The Elopement of Dorothy Vernon" was exhibited in 1871. "The Waif," painted in 1877, is now in the Sydney National Gallery.

JOHNSTON, Henry Hamilton, F.R.G.S., African traveller, born June 12, 1858, at Park Place, Kennington, Surrey, is the third son of John Brookes Johnston, Esq., and was educated at Stockwell Grammar School and King's College, London. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, Zoological Society, Anthropological Institute, and Royal Colonial Institute, and was appointed H.M. Vice-Consul for the Cameroons and the Oil Rivers in Oct., 1885. He was Acting-Consul for Bights of Benin and Biafra, 1887-88, and was promoted to be Consul for Portuguese East Africa, Dec., 1888. He has written a great deal in the leading journals and reviews on subjects connected with natural history, travel, and political matters, and published, in 1884, a work entitled "The River Congo;" in 1886, "The Kilimanjaro Expedition;" and in 1889, "The History of a Slave." He studied painting as a student of the Royal Academy of Arts in London, and has frequently exhibited pictures at the Royal Academy and in other galleries. In 1880 he travelled through Tunis and Algeria; in 1882-83, visited the River Congo and other parts of West Africa; and in 1884, conducted an expedition to Mount Kilimanjaro in East Africa. In 1887, he surveyed a portion of the Niger Delta, and in 1889-90, visited Lakes Nyasa and Tanganyika, for the purpose of making peace between the Arabs and the African Lakes Company.

JOHNSTON, General Joseph Eccleston, was born in Prince Edward county, Virginia, Feb., 1807. He graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1829, and served in various military capacities, chiefly in the Typographical Engineers, until the outbreak of the Civil War, at which time he was Quartermaster-General, with the rank of Brigadier-

General. He resigned his commission April 22, 1861, and entered the Confederate service as Brigadier-General, subsequently being made General. During the earlier part of the campaign of 1862 he was in command of all the Confederate forces in Virginia, and was severely wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, near Richmond, May 31. In Nov., 1862, he was assigned to the command of the military department of Tennessee, embracing the departments of Alabama and Mississippi. After the defeat of General Bragg, at Chattanooga, Nov. 25, 1863, he was given the command of all the Confederate forces in the south-west. In 1864 he was at the head of the forces which opposed Sherman in his famous "march to the sea." Compelled to fall back from point to point, the authorities at Richmond became dissatisfied, and on July 17 Johnston was ordered by President Davis to turn over his command to General Hood. Near the close of Feb., 1865, when Sherman had marched into South Carolina, Johnston, at the express urgency of General Lee, was directed to assume the command of the remnant of the army of Tennessee, and of all the forces in South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, to "drive back Sherman." The force which he could concentrate was greatly inferior to that of Sherman, and he was unable seriously to check his march. Having learnt that Lee had surrendered the army of Virginia to Grant, Johnston capitulated to Sherman at Durham's Station, North Carolina. From the close of the war he was engaged in business until March, 1885, when he was appointed Commissioner of Railroads by President Cleveland, which position he now holds. He published, in 1874, a "Narrative of Military Operations conducted by General Johnston during the Civil War between the States."

JOHNSTON, Richard Malcolm, American writer, was born in Hancock county, Georgia, March 8, 1822. He graduated at Mercer University, Georgia, in 1841, and, after teaching for a year, was admitted to the Bar. In 1857 he was offered a judgeship, but declined it, to accept the Chair of Literature in the University of Georgia, where he remained until the outbreak of the Civil War. Retiring to his country home near Sparta, Georgia, he there opened a boarding-school for boys, which in 1867 he removed to Baltimore county, Maryland, where he has since resided. He has published, in addition to contributions to periodicals, a "Life of Alexander H. Stephens," 1878; "A History of English Literature," in conjunction with W. H. Brown, 1879; "Dukeshorough Tales," 1883; "Old Mark Langston," 1884; "Two Gray Tourists," 1885; "Mr. Absalom Billingslea and other Georgia Folk," 1888; and "Ogeechee Cross-Firings," 1889.

JOHNSTON, William, M.P. (known as Mr. Johnston of Ballykilbeg), was born in Downpatrick, Feb. 22, 1829, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1852, and M.A. in 1856. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1872. He was elected M.P. for Belfast, in the Conservative interest, in 1868, was re-elected in 1874, and sat for that borough till 1878, when he was appointed Inspector of Irish Fisheries. He held that office till 1885, when he was dismissed by Lord Spencer for a speech in the General Synod of the Church of Ireland. Mr. Johnston has been since 1848 a member of the Orange Institution, and was imprisoned for two months, in 1868, for taking part in an Orange procession at Bangor, co. Down, on July 12 in the previous year. He is the author of the novels—"Nightshade," 1857; "Freshfield," and "Under which King?" 1872. In 1885 he was returned for South Belfast by a large majority, and was again elected in 1886. In the House he is a leading representative of the Orange Party.

JOHORE, Tunkoo Abubeker bin Ibrahim, K.C.S.I., the Maharajah of Johore (commonly called the Tumongong), born in 1835, is grandson of one of the Malay princes by whom the island of Singapore was first ceded to Sir Stamford Raffles, as political agent for the British Government, and succeeded to the sovereignty of the Johore territories on the death of his father in 1861. He is one of the most enlightened princes of Eastern Asia, and is a firm ally of the British Government. In 1866 he visited England, delegating the exercise of his powers during his absence to his brother, the Prince Unkoo Abdulrahman. The government long maintained a flotilla, in conjunction with our own, for the suppression of piracy in the narrow seas of their respective possessions; and some years ago the Tumongong's father was presented by the government of India with a sword, in acknowledgment of the services he had rendered in suppressing piracy. In 1885-86 he visited England again.

JOINVILLE (Prince de), Francois-Ferdinand-Philippe-Louis-Marie-d'Orléans, son of the late Louis-Philippe, king of the French, was born at Neuilly, Aug. 14,

1818. Soon after his father's accession to the throne in 1830, he began his naval studies, was sent to sea at the age of thirteen, received, like his brothers, the Dukes of Orleans, Nemours, and Aumale, a liberal education in the public colleges of France, and passed a brilliant examination at Brest. From that time he devoted himself entirely to his profession, and became a great favourite with the French navy. The ordinary hard work of the service was not sufficient to satisfy his ardent desire to distinguish himself. Being with the Mediterranean squadron in 1837, he disembarked and rode up to Constantine, in the hope of taking part in the storming of that stronghold, but arrived just too late. Not long afterwards he received the command of the corvette Créole, and joining the fleet of Admiral Baudin, was entrusted with the difficult mission of obtaining reparation from the Mexican government. The Créole took a prominent part in the bombardment of St. Juan d'Ulloa, and at Vera Cruz the Prince, at the head of the storming party, was the first to enter the gates, under a heavy fire, and was only saved from certain death by the devotion of one of his officers. In 1841 he was selected by the king to command La Belle Poule frigate, charged with the service of conveying to France the body of the Emperor Napoleon, and he married, at Rio Janeiro, May 1, 1843, Donna Francisca de Braganza, sister of Don Pedro II., Emperor of Brazil. Becoming Rear-Admiral, he took part in the sittings of the Admiralty; and the French Navy is deeply indebted to him for the manner in which he helped to solve the great question of the adaptation of steam to vessels of war, in 1845. When war broke out between France and Morocco he commanded a squadron, with which he bombarded Tangiers and took Mogador. After this decisive expedition he was raised to the rank of Vice-Admiral. Being almost always on active service, the Prince de Joinville was in Algiers with his brother the Duc d'Aumale when the revolution of Feb., 1848, overthrew the constitutional monarchy. Resolving to share the misfortunes of their family, the two brothers sought refuge in England, and joined King Louis Philippe at Claremont. The Prince distinguished himself by actively aiding in the rescue of many of the passengers and crew of the ship Ocean Monarch, when burning off Southampton, Aug. 24, 1848. Driven suddenly from a brilliant position into the narrow limits of private life, he accepted his new situation with simplicity and dignity, and remaining at heart a French sailor, endeavoured to render himself useful to the navy of his country by his pen, if not by his sword. He had already, in 1844, begun publishing in the Revue des Deux Mondes his studies on the French navy. One of his articles, published in 1865, was a comparative review of the fleets of the United States and of France, and excited much attention at the time. Happening to be in the United States about a twelvemonth after the breaking out of the civil war, he accompanied his nephews, the Comte de Paris and the Duc de Chartres, to the camp of General McClellan, with whose staff he witnessed the principal actions of the Virginian campaign of 1862, and gave an account of these events in a well-written and impartial article published in the Revue des Deux Mondes of 1863. After the downfall of the Napoleonic dynasty, he went back to France with the other Orleanist princes; the Law of Exile having been abrogated. He and the Duc d'Aumale took their seats in the National Assembly, Dec. 19, 1871.

JÓKAI, Muarus (or Mór), the most productive and genial of Hungarian novelists, was born Feb. 19, 1825, at Komorn. His father was an advocate, of good and ancient family, and a strict Calvinist, so that his son was puritanically brought up, until his twelfth year, when he was left an orphan. For two years before his father's death he had been learning German at Presburg, but he was then left to teach himself, until in 1840 he went to the High School at Pépa, and in 1842 to that of Kecskemét, at both having the Hungarian poet Alexander Petöfi as his schoolfellow. In 1844 he went to Pesth, where he was articled to an advocate, and obtained his diploma, of which, however, he never availed himself; for, in 1846, he was already editor of the then very famous Wochenblatt. In 1848 he proclaimed the "Twelve Points of Pesth," and in the same year he married Rosa Laborfalvi, the greatest of Hungarian tragedians. In 1849 he followed the Hungarian government to Debreczin, where he edited the Abendblätter, and was present at the capitulation of Villagos, Aug. 28. To escape being made prisoner, he resolved on suicide, but was hindered by the fortunate arrival of his wife from Pesth. She had converted all her jewels into gold, and the pair found their way on foot through the Russian army, reached a safe hiding-place in the wood of Bukk, and at last got safe to Pesth. Ten years followed, during which Hungarian literature became well nigh extinct. Almost alone this young man created a new one, and since political journalism was impracticable he betook himself to fiction. He has published in 160 vols. 25 romances of several vols. each, 320 novelettes, and six dramas, of which more than half a million copies have been sold amongst six millions of Magyars, besides translations into various languages. Amongst his most popular romances are: "The Good Old Assessors," "A Hungarian Nabob," and its continuation, entitled "Zoltán Kárpáthy," "Sad Times," "Oceania," "The White Rose," "The Accursed Family," "Transylvania's Golden Age," "The Turks in Hungary," "The Last Days of the Janissaries in 1820," "Poor Rich Men," "The World turned Upsidedown," "Madhouse Management," "The New Landlord" (translated into English by A. Patterson, London, 1865), "The Romance of the Next Century," "Black Diamonds," and "Die Zonen des Geistes." In 1863 Jókai established, as an organ of the Left, the Hon (Fatherland), the most widely circulated Hungarian journal.

JONES, Lieut-Col. Alfred Stowell, F.C., Assoc. M. Inst. C.E., was born at Liverpool Jan. 24, 1832, and is the youngest son of the late Archdeacon J. Jones, M.A., and his wife Hannah, daughter of the late Thomas Pares, Esq., J.P., of Hopwell Hall, Derby. He was educated at the Liverpool College. While serving as a Lieutenant in the 9th Lancers he passed his examinations by the Public Works Department, India, 1857, for employment as a Civil Engineer, and graduated at the Staff College, 1860. Lieut.-Colonel Jones was present at the battle of Budleekeseraï and at Delhi throughout the siege operations, including the assault and capture of the city, having been Deputy Assistant Quarter-Master-General to the Cavalry Brigade from Aug. 8 to Sep. 23, 1857. He served with the 9th Lancers in Greaethed's pursuing column, and was present in the actions of Bolundshuhur and Allyghur, and battle of Agra, where he was dangerously wounded, having received a musket-shot wound and twenty-two sabre cuts! He was mentioned in the despatches of Sir Hope Grant on three different occasions (Brevet of Major, Victoria Cross, Medal with Clasp). He was awarded the F.C., for the following service:—"The cavalry charged the rebels and rode through them. Lieutenant Jones, of the 9th Lancers, with his squadron, captured one of the guns, killing the drivers, and, with Lieutenant-Colonel Yule's assistance, turned the gun upon a village occupied by the rebels, who were quickly dislodged. This was a well-conceived act, gallantly executed." As has been stated, he was Deputy Assistant Quarter-Master-General at the Siege of Delhi, 1857, and held a similar Staff appointment at the Cape of Good Hope, 1861-67; Adjutant of the Staff College, 1869-70, when that appointment was abolished on his own evidence before a Royal Commission on Military Education, resulting in a saving of £400 per annum on the Army Estimates for the last 20 years, while the duties have been carried out efficiently as Lieut.-Col. Jones had proposed. In civil matters, he has been Consulting Engineer to the Borough of Wrexham for Sewage Disposal; Corporate Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, 1876; Membre de la Société Française d'hygiène, 1877; Fellow of the Sanitary Institute, 1880; and Member of the Association of Municipal Engineers, 1883. He is the author of "Will a Sewage Farm Pay?" 1874, 3rd edit. 1885, and many papers on Sewage Disposal in the Transactions of the Society of Arts, and of the Sanitary Institute, and in other professional publications. But Lieut.-Col. Jones is, perhaps, best known in connection with the Canvey Island Scheme, introduced by himself and other engineers and approved and recommended by Lord Bramwell's Royal Committee on Metropolitan Sewage Discharge, in their Final Report, 1884. This scheme has been elaborated and perfected by Lieut.-Col. Jones and his partner, Mr. J. Bailey Denton, Member Inst. C.E., and is still under consideration by the London County Council. In 1879 he was awarded one of the only two £100 prizes ever offered by the Royal Agricultural Society of England, for the best managed Sewage Farms.

JONES, Emily Elizabeth Constance, was born in 1848, at Langstone Court, Herefordshire, and is the eldest daughter of J. Jones, Esq., M.D., J.P., and his wife, Emily Edith, who was daughter of Thomas Oakeley, Esq., J.P., of Lydart House, Monmouth, and his wife, Elizabeth Pearce, co-heiress of Llanrumney Court, Monmouthshire, and was descended from the ancient Welsh families of Lewis of Llanthewy and Morgan of Llanrumney. Miss Jones was educated at Miss Robinson's, Alstone Court, Cheltenham, and at Girton College, Cambridge, and took a First Class in the Moral Sciences Tripos in 1880 (was bracketed with the Senior), and appointed Resident Lecturer in Moral Science at Girton College in 1884, and Librarian in 1889. Miss Jones was joint-translator with Miss Elizabeth Hamilton, of "Lotze's Micro-cosmus," and editor of the translation, which was published in 1885, and reached a 3rd edition in 1888. Miss Jones is also the author of "Elements of Logic as a Science of Propositions," published in 1890.

JONES, Morris Charles, F.S.A., was born in Montgomeryshire, May 9, 1819, and educated at Bruce Castle School, Tottenham. He is the author of numerous genealogical and antiquarian articles and privately printed pamphlets, and of "The Abbey of Valle Crucis: its Origin and Foundation Charter," 1866; and "The Feudal Barons of Powys," 1868. He is the founder and chief supporter of the Powysland Club, an archaeological society for Montgomeryshire, and also of the Powysland Museum and Library connected therewith. He has devoted much time to the illustration of the archaeology and history of his native country, and since 1867 has been the editor of "The Montgomeryshire Collections," issued by the Powysland Club, which contain elaborate and useful contributions to local topography and history, and afford complete and extensive materials for the history of the county of Montgomery. In 1876 his archaeological services were acknowledged by a testimonial raised by public subscriptions, which were devoted chiefly to the purchase of a fine life-size bronze group, representing a scene in Welsh history, which, at his request, was placed in the Powysland Museum.

JONES, Thomas Rupert, F.R.S., F.G.S., late Professor of Geology at the Staff College, Sandhurst, Naturalist, Geologist, Palæontologist, and Antiquary, was born Oct. 1, 1819, at No. 6, Wood Street, Cheapside, London, and is the son of John Jones, silk merchant and silkworm-throwster, of London and Taunton, (descendant of the old Powys family of North Wales) and Rhoda Jones (née Burberry) of Coventry. He was educated at Foster's, at Taunton, and the Rev. John Allen's, at Ilminster; and was apprenticed to a surgeon (Hugh Norris), at Taunton, Somerset, in 1835; at his death he finished apprenticeship with Dr. Joseph Bunney, of Newbury, Berks, in 1842. After some years of desultory medical and scientific education, he was, in 1850, appointed Assistant-Secretary to the Geological Society of London; Lecturer on Geology at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, in 1858, and Professor, in 1862, and subsequently at the Staff College. He is the author of "Monograph of the Cretaceus Entomostraca," in 1849; and of "The Tertiary Entomostraca of England," in 1856; "Monograph of the Fossil Estheriæ," 1862; article "Tunicata," in Todd's "Cyclopædia of Anatomy," 1850; and of articles in Cassell's "Natural History," "Science for All," and "Encyclopædic Dictionary." Mr. Jones was the editor of the "Arctic Manual," 1875; and the editor and joint-author of the "Reliquiæ Aquitanicæ," and of the second edition of "Dixon's Geology of Sussex," 1878. He was formerly Examiner to the London University, and to the Victoria (Manchester) University; and to the New Zealand University, also Examiner to the College of Preceptors; Assistant-Examiner to the Civil Service Commission, and to the Department of Science and Art. He is Fellow of the Royal Society, and of the Geological Society of London; Honorary Member of numerous scientific societies, British and Foreign, and is Lyell Medallist of the Geological Society, 1890.

JONES, Professor Thomas Wharton, F.R.S., physiologist, son of the late Richard Jones, Esq., of Her Majesty's Customs for Scotland, born at St. Andrew's in 1808, was educated at the University of Edinburgh, and afterwards visited the principal continental universities. He settled in London in 1838, and entered upon the practice of his profession. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, and has been Lecturer on Physiology at the Charing Cross Hospital, Fullerian Professor of Physiology in the Royal Institution of Great Britain, and Professor of Ophthalmic Medicine and Surgery in University College, London, and Ophthalmic Surgeon to the Hospital. Mr. Wharton Jones is the author of various physiological discoveries, recorded in the Philosophical Transactions and elsewhere: in particular the facts discovered by him relating to the mechanism of the extreme vessels and the course of the blood in them have greatly elucidated the phenomena of the inflammatory process—a subject in regard to which extraordinary errors are still current. He is a Foreign Member of the Medical Societies of Vienna and Copenhagen, and of the Société de Biologie of Paris. Mr. Wharton Jones edited for the Camden Society, in 1872, the Life and Death of his ancestral kinsman, Bishop Bedell, of Kilmore, who perished in the Irish Rebellion of 1641; and in 1876 published a volume controverting the Darwinian doctrine of evolution. To the Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette for Oct. 15, 1887, Mr. Wharton Jones contributed a paper entitled "Brief Notice of the beginnings of the School of Physic in the University of Dublin," and to the numbers of the same Gazette for July 20 and July 27, 1888, a paper entitled "Exposure of the unfounded character of the Story that in the Irish Rebellion of 1641, Bishop Bedell of Kilmore countenanced the Rebels of Cavan, by drawing up a Remonstrance for them."

JONES, The Right Rev. William Basil, D.D., Bishop of St. David's, the eldest son of the late William Tilsey Jones, Esq., of Gwynfryn, Cardiganshire, by Jane, daughter of the late Henry Tickell, Esq., of Leytonstone, Essex, was born in 1822. For many years he was Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of York. The Queen nominated him to the bishopric of St. David's when the See was vacated by the resignation of Dr. Thirlwall, and he was accordingly consecrated in Westminster Abbey, Aug. 24, 1874. He has written "Vestiges of Gael in Gwynedd," 1851; "The History and Antiquities of St. David's," 1856; jointly with Mr. E. A. Samuel Holworthy, rector of Croxall, Derbyshire, who died in 1881; and (2nd), in 1886, Anne Loxdale, daughter of George Henry Loxdale, Esq., of Aigburth, Liverpool, by whom he has issue.

JOWETT, The Rev. Benjamin, M.A., LL.D., late Vice-Chancellor of the University of Edinburgh, was born at Camberwell in 1817. His father, who died at Tenby in 1859, was the author of a metrical version of the Psalms of David. He was educated at St. Paul's School; was elected to a Scholarship at Balliol College, Oxford, in 1835, and to a Fellowship in 1838. He was tutor of Balliol College from 1842 to 1870, and in the discharge of that office he gained the regard of many pupils and friends. He was appointed to the Regius Professorship of Greek on the recommendation of Lord Palmerston, in 1855, having, in 1853, been member of a commission which had under its consideration the mode of admission by examination to writerships in the Indian civil service, and of which the late Lord Macaulay was chairman. Professor Jowett has written a Commentary on the Epistles of St. Paul to the Thessalonians, Galatians, and Romans, published in 1855, 2nd edit., 1858; he also contributed an essay on the Interpretation of Scripture, to "Essays and Reviews." In 1870 he was elected Master of Balliol College, and in 1871 published a translation of the "Dialogues" of Plato, in four vols., with introduction (2nd edit., in 5 vols., 1875). The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Leyden in Feb., 1875, by the University of Edinburgh at its Tercentenary in 1884, by the University of Dublin in 1886, and by the University of Cambridge in 1890. She matriculated at the Royal University in 1886, taking first honours in Latin, first place and first honours in German, first place and second honours in English, first honours in experimental physics, and later in the same year the scholarship of modern literature. She obtained first-class exhibitions in 1887-88; gained in the latter year the Henry Hutchinson Stewart scholarship (Mod. Literature), a very distinguished honour. Her B.A. was obtained in 1889, with first exhibition honours in modern literature, and the degree of M.A. was conferred on her on Oct. 29, 1890.

JUDD, Professor John W., F.R.S., geologist, was born at Portsmouth Feb. 18, 1840; but when he was only eight years of age his family removed to the neighbourhood of London. During his earlier years he was engaged in teaching, first in London, and afterwards in Lincolnshire, but his taste for science, and especially for geological studies led him, in 1863, to become a student in the Royal School of Mines. In the following year he accepted the post of Analytical Chemist in one of the great iron and steel works at Sheffield, but while there met with a railway accident that interrupted his work and studies for a considerable period. Upon his recovery, he determined to devote himself entirely to his favourite studies and commenced a Geological survey of the county of Lincolnshire, the results of his investigations being published in a number of memoirs on the Neocomian formation, which he showed to be admirably developed in that and the adjoining counties. In 1867 he was invited to join the staff of the Geological Survey and to continue his work in connection with that body. During a period of four years he was engaged in working out the relations between the Jurassic rocks of the Midland district as compared with those of the Northern and Southern areas in England, and his book on the Geology of Rutland, &c., deals with this very important question. In 1871 he was induced by his friend the late Matthew Arnold, to act with him for a time as a School Inspector, and to assist in the work of preparing the way for the operation of the Education Act of 1870 in the north-eastern suburbs of London. After a year of this work, however, he returned to his geological studies, and commenced the execution of a long-cherished project, that of unravelling the complexities of the whole of the Secondary Strata of the Scottish Highlands. Not only was he able to show what are the true relations of the great series of Triassic and Jurassic rocks in that area, but he also discovered and studied very interesting deposits of Carboniferous and Cretaceous age, the existence of which in the district had been previously overlooked. These studies led him to the investigations of the relics of the great Tertiary Volcanoes of the Western Isles of Scotland; and during several years he was engaged in travelling in various volcanic regions, and making comparisons between these and the districts in the British Isles, in which igneous action was rife during past geological times, a long series of memoirs being published as the result of these researches. In 1877 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the same year, upon the retirement of Sir Andrew Ramsay, became Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines; in 1881 he accepted the same position in the Royal College of Science. From 1877 to 1885 Professor Judd was Secretary to the Geological Society, and during the years 1886 and 1887 held the office of President of that Society. In 1891 the Geological Society awarded Professor Judd the highest honour in their gift—the Wollaston Medal.

JUNKER, Dr. Wilhelm, African traveller and naturalist, and a friend of the late General Gordon and of Stanley, to whom he gave valuable information, in Cairo in 1887, as to the position of Emin Pasha. He has given an account of his own experiences in a work which he published under the title of "Travels in Africa," and which has been translated by A. H. Keane.

K.

KALAKAUA, David, King of the Sandwich or Hawaiian Islands, was born about 1838. He belongs to one of the highest families in the islands. When King Kamehameha V. died in 1872, there were two candidates for the vacant throne. David Kalakaua and William Lunalilo; the latter was elected by a plebiscitum, which was confirmed by the Legislature. Lunalilo died within a twelvemonth, and Kalakaua again put forward his claims. A Legislature, specially convened for the purpose, elected him in Feb., 1874; but the validity of this election was contested by Queen Emma, widow of Kamehameha IV., who died in 1863. Queen Emma is the daughter of a native chief by an Englishwoman, and was adopted by Dr. Rooke, an English physician on the islands, and, before her marriage with Kamehameha, was known as Emma Rooke. The dispute threatened to result in a civil war, the adherents of Emma hoping that the British Government would refuse to acknowledge Kalakaua, who was presumed to be hostile to European influence in the islands; but in June, 1874, Queen Victoria sent a letter to Kalakaua, congratulating him upon his accession, and his right was then admitted. In the autumn of 1874 he decided to visit America and Europe, and the United States Government despatched a steam frigate to convey him to San Francisco, where he arrived Nov. 28. King Kalakaua is well educated, of exemplary habits and dignified manners, and speaks English with fluency.

KALNOKY, Count Gustav Siegmund, is descended from the Moravian branch of an old Bohemian family, and was born at Lettowitz, in Moravia, in 1832. He entered the diplomatic service in 1850; and, from 1860 to 1870, he was Councillor of Legation at the Austrian Embassy in London. In 1874 he was Minister at Copenhagen; in 1880 he was sent as Ambassador to St. Petersburg; and, in 1881, he was appointed Austro-Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, a post which he ably fills at the present time. The Star of Black Eagle in brilliants was conferred on Count Kalnoky by the late Emperor William in 1888; and, in the same year, the Order of the Annunciade was bestowed upon him by the King of Italy.

KARR, Jean Baptiste Alphonse, author, born at Paris, Nov. 24, 1808, received his first instructions from his father, and afterwards entered the Collège Bourbon, in which he became a teacher. A copy of verses which he sent to the satirical journal Figaro introduced him to literary life. Having been disappointed in love, he, in 1832, published a novel written in his youth,—“Sous les Tillands,” a mélange of irony and sentiment, of good sense and trifling, which at once made him popular. “Une Heure trop Tard” appeared in 1833; “Vendredi Soir” in 1835; “Le Chemin le plus Court” in 1836; “Einerley” and “Geneviève” in 1838; and “Voyage autour de mon Jardin” in 1845, followed by numerous other works. In 1839 he became editor-in-chief of Figaro; and the same year founded Les Guêpes, a monthly satirical journal, which had a remarkable success. After the revolution of 1848, M. Karr, disgusted with political life, retired to Nice, and has continued till lately to write occasionally in the Revue des Deux Mondes and other periodicals. His chief occupation, however, is horticulture on a large scale. The publication of a complete edition of this author's works commenced in Paris in 1860. He was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour April 25, 1845. His daughter, Mdlle. Thérèse Karr, has written “Les Soirées Germaniques offertes à la Jeunesse,” published in 1860; “Les Huit Grandes Époques de l'Histoire de France” in 1861; “Contre un Proverbe,” “Dieu et ses Dons” in 1864; and other works.

KAWASE, Viscount Masataka, Japanese Minister at the Court of St. James's, was born in 1839, and belongs to a family who in former times were vassals of the Prince of Choshii, in Japan. During the disturbed period preceding the restoration of the Mikado, Kawasé experienced many vicissitudes, but his first important appearance was in command of a force raised to defend the territory of Choshii from the army of the Shogun. The latter was completely defeated and terms of peace were arranged. Kawasé then visited Europe, and resided for some time in England, being one of the first Japanese who devoted themselves to the study of Western institutions with the view of engrafting such as appeared suitable on those of their own country. On his return to Japan he was appointed Vice-Minister of Public Works by the present Emperor, and subsequently Vice-Chamberlain of the Imperial Household. In 1874 he was sent to Italy to represent Japan. He then successively filled the position of Senator and Vice-Minister of Justice, and in 1884 was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of St. James's. He was created Viscount in 1887, and is the holder of numerous decorations.

In April, 1878, he relinquished the leadership of that Court, and confined his practice thenceforward to the House of Lords and special business. He was appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court, March 30, 1881, on the resignation of Vice-Chancellor (afterwards Sir Richard) Malins, and shortly afterwards he was knighted by the Queen at Windsor. He succeeded Sir H. Cotton as a Lord Justice of Appeal, Nov. 11, 1890. Sir E. E. Kay is a magistrate for Norfolk, in which county he owns the estate of Thorpe Abbots, near Scole. At the invitation of the Liberal party in North-East Lancashire, he contested that division in 1868, and was defeated by a majority of 131. In October, 1869, he became member for Hastings. His maiden speech in parliament was delivered on the second reading of the Elementary Education Bill in 1870. In 1871 he called the attention of the House to the subject of the London water supply. In 1874 he was re-elected member for Hastings, and brought before the House the state of the dwellings of working people in London, eliciting the promise of Mr. Secretary Cross, which resulted, in 1875, in the Passing of the Artizans' Dwellings Act. In 1878 he moved resolutions on the Government of London. At the next general election (1880) he lost his seat for Hastings, and having failed at a by-election in 1881, at Coventry, he was out of the House of Commons till he was returned by a majority of 2,359, in 1885, for the Clitheroe division of North-East Lancashire. During the time he was not in the House he served for two years on the

London School Board. He was also a member of the Royal Commission on Reformatory and Industrial Schools. At the general election of 1886, Sir U. Since that time Mr. Kebbel has been a contributor to the principal publications of the day—the Quarterly, Fortnightly, Nineteenth Century, and National Reviews, Blackwood's, the Cornhill, Fraser, and Macmillan's Magazines, and, under Mr. Delane, he was a frequent contributor to the literary columns of the Times. At an early age she gave evidence of musical talent, and after some years of careful study made her first appearance at the Academy of Music in New York in 1861. After four more years of study, she appeared as Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust," in the season of 1864-5. Her success was not less complete in "Crispino," as "Linda di Chamounix," in the "Barber of Seville," "La Sonnambula," "Lucia di Lammermoor," and other operas, within the next two years. On Nov. 2, 1867, she made a successful début in London as Marguerite in "Faust." She returned to the United States in 1868. In 1872 she again visited England, appearing at the Drury Lane Opera. His battery formed part of the Army of the Indus under Lord Keane, and with it he served in the first campaign in Afghanistan, 1838-9, including the siege and storming of Ghuznee and subsequent occupation of Cabul, for which he received the Medal. His real field of utility, however, was determined by his appointment as Assistant Political Resident in the Persian Gulf in 1842, where he was employed in various political duties for 28 years, and acquired a special and valuable experience of Turkish and Persian affairs, and mastery of the Turkish, Persian, and Arabic languages. He was made Political Resident in the Persian Gulf in 1852, and Consul

General at Bagdad and Political Agent in Turkish Arabia in 1855, after having acted in both capacities at various times during the absences of previous incumbents. KEMPE, Alfred Bray, M.A., F.R.S., is the third son of the Rev. John Edward Kempe, Rector of St. James, Piccadilly. He was born on July 6, 1849, at Kensington, was educated at St. Paul's School and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a Scholar. He graduated B.A. in 1872 as 22nd wrangler, was called to the Bar in 1873 at the Inner Temple, and joined the Western Circuit. In 1881 he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone to be the Secretary of the Royal Commission on the Ecclesiastical Courts which sat during the years 1881-3. In January, 1887, he was appointed Chancellor of the diocese of Newcastle, and in October of the same year he also became Chancellor of the diocese of Southwell. Mr. Kempe is the author of a number of papers on mathematical subjects, the value of which has been recognized by his election to the Fellowship of the Royal Society in 1881. The earlier of these papers were mainly about "linkages;" the most important being one published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1875 "on a general method of producing exact rectilinear motion by linkwork," and a little book "how to draw a straight line," published in 1877. Later papers related to some remarkable theorems as to the movement of a plane (Nature, vol. xviii. p. 149), the colouring of maps (id. vol. xxi. p. 399); the graphical representation of invariants and covariants (Pro. Lon. Math. Soc., vol. xvii. p. 108), and knots (Pro. Roy. Soc. Edinburgh, 1886). In 1886 Mr. Kempe communicated to the Royal Society an important paper on the nature of the subject matter of exact thought, entitled "A Memoir on the Theory of Mathematical Form," which was printed in the "Philosophical Transactions" for that year. He has taken an active part in the management of the London Mathematical Society, of which body he is the Treasurer.

KEMPE, The Rev. John Edward, M.A., son of A. J. Kempe, Esq., F.S.A., a distinguished antiquary, was born March 9, 1810, educated at St. Paul's School and Clare College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1833 as a senior optime, and first-class in classics; and M.A. in 1837. He was appointed Curate of Tavistock, Devon, in 1833, and elected a Fellow of his college in 1841. He became Curate of Barnet, Herts, in 1844; Incumbent of St. John's, St. Pancras, on the presentation of Bishop Blomfield, in 1846; of St. Barnabas, Kensington, in 1848; and Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly, on the presentation of Lord Aberdeen, as Premier, in 1853. In 1861 he was appointed by Bishop Tait to the Prebendal Stall of Chamberlainewood, in St. Paul's; in 1864 he became one of Her Majesty's chaplains; and in 1868 he was elected one of the Proctors in Convocation for London, being re-elected in 1874. In 1880 he retired from Convocation. He is a Rural Dean of the diocese, and is considered to have rendered great service to the Anglican Church in general, and especially to its cause in London by having established, and conducted as President for many years, monthly conferences, at which clergy and laity meet for the discussion of Church questions. Mr. Kempe has published lectures on the Book of Job, and on Elijah; occasional sermons and prefaces to lectures delivered in St. James's Church on "The Use and Abuse of the World," "Companions for the Devout Life," and "Classic Preachers of the English Church." Mr. Kempe is also the founder of the St. James's diocesan Home for Female Penitents; and he was one of Bishop Tait's principal counsellors and coadjutors in the origination and earlier working of the Bishop of London's Fund. In 1866 Mr. Kempe was offered the Bishopric of Calcutta by Lord Cranbourne (now Marquis of Salisbury), who was then Indian Minister, but declined it for family reasons.

KENDAL, Mrs. Margaret Brunton. See GRIMSTON, Mrs. WILLIAM HUNTER.

KENNAN, George, American traveller, was born at Norwalk, Ohio, Feb. 16, 1845. He received an academic education, completing his studies at the Columbus (Ohio) high-school, while working as a night telegraph operator. Having risen to be assistant chief operator at Cincinnati he was sent in Dec., 1864, by the Russo-American Telegraph Co. to superintend the location and construction of lines in Siberia, and spent three years in travelling through the North-eastern part of that country on this mission. He returned to the United States in 1868, but in 1870 again went to Russia to explore the region of the Eastern Caucasus. This visit lasted until 1871. In 1885-86 he made a third journey to the Russian Empire, this time for the especial purpose of investigating the Siberian exile system. The results of his observations on this trip, during which he travelled 15,000 miles in Northern Russia and Siberia, are now (1890) in course of publication in The Century Magazine, and are attracting wide attention on account of the extreme severity shown to be exercised against political offenders in Russia. In addition to these articles, which ultimately are to be issued in book form, Mr. Kennan has written "Tent Life in Siberia," 1870.

KENNEDY, Professor Alexander Blackie William, Vice-President of the Inst. of Mechanical Engineers, F.R.S., &c., born March 17, 1847, at Stepney, is the son of Rev. J. Kennedy, D.D., late President Congregational Union, and was educated chiefly at the City of London School, afterwards, for a year, at the School of Mines, Jermyn Street. He served as an engineering pupil for four and a half years with Messrs. J. & W. Dudgeon, Engineers and Shipbuilders, Millwall; in 1863 became leading draughtsman at Palmer's Engine Works, Jarrow; in 1871 chief draughtsman to Messrs. T. M. Tennant & Co., Ltd., Leith; in 1872 became consulting engineer in Edinburgh with

Mr. H. O. Bennett, as Bennett & Kennedy. In 1874 he was appointed Professor of Civil and Mechanical Engineering at University College, London, the title of the Chair being changed later to that of Engineering and Mechanical Technology. In 1875 he established the Engineering Laboratory at University College, which was the precursor of the similar Laboratories now to be found at nearly all the colleges in the country where Engineering is taught. In 1889, owing to the pressure of professional work, he resigned his chair, but received the honorary title of Emeritus Professor of Engineering from the Council of University College. In 1876 he translated and edited Reuleaux's "Theoretische Kinematik," under the title of "Kinematics of Machinery." In 1886 he published the "Mechanics of Machinery." Has been connected with the Research Committees of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers since their foundation, and as Reporter of the Committee on Rivetted Joints, carried out an elaborate series of experiments, which are published in the Proceedings of the Institution 1881, 1882, 1885, and 1888. As Chairman of the Committee on Marine Engine Trials has carried out also a number of extended trials at sea, the results of which have been published in the Proceedings of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, 1889 and 1890. He contributed a paper on "Engineering Laboratories" to the Institution of Civil Engineers (Proceedings, vol. 88, 1887). Among his published experiments are the following:—Tests of the Griffin Gas Engine, the Beck Gas Engine, Easton & Anderson's Pumping Station at Addington, the Popp Compressed Air System in Paris (Brit. Assoc. 1889, and Engineering, Sept. 1889); the Otto, Atkinson & Griffin Gas Engines, and the Davey Paxman Steam Engine (Society of Arts Motor Trials, 1888); the Thornycroft Boiler (Proc. I. C. E., Vol. 99); the Willans Central Valve Engine (Proc. I. C. E., Vol. 96); the Thomson Electric Welding Process, &c. Among other structural work he has designed the iron and concrete internal structure of the present Alhambra Theatre, probably the first building in which all the floors were simply flat concrete slabs, made in situ and carried by a wrought-iron skeleton, and also the Promenade Pier at Trouville, the first purely arched steel structure of the kind which has been built. He has been, since 1878, largely occupied with the practical testing of materials of construction, having now tested over 18,000 pieces of various kinds, and has lately fitted up for himself at Westminster a testing machine embodying the results of his experience in this work. He is also acting as Engineer in Chief to the Westminster Electric Supply Corporation, Ltd., a Company which has Parliamentary powers for supplying Electricity in Westminster, Pimlico, Belgravia, and Mayfair. He became a Member of the Institutions both of Civil and of Mechanical Engineers in 1879, and in 1883 was elected an Honorary Life Member of the latter. In 1885 he became a Member of Council, and in 1890 a Vice-President of the Inst. of Mechanical Engineers. He is also a Member of Council of the Society of Arts, and a Member of the Iron and Steel Inst., of the Inst. of Naval Architects, and of the Inst. of Electrical Engineers. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1887.

KENNEDY, Captain Alexander William Maxwell Clark, F.R.G.S., F.L.S., was born at Rochester, Sept. 26, 1851, being the eldest son of the late Colonel John Clark Kennedy, C.B., of Knockgray, N.B. He was educated at Eton, where at the age of sixteen he published "The Birds of Berkshire and Buckinghamshire; a Contribution to the Ornithology of the two Counties," 1868, by "an Eton Boy." He entered the Coldstream Guards as Ensign in 1870, became Lieutenant in 1872, and Lieutenant and Captain in 1874, and retired the same year. He is the author of various poems and verses, and of a work of travels "To the Arctic Regions and Back in Six Weeks," being travels in Lapland and Norway, 1878. He has contributed articles to the Ibis, Zoologist, Land and Water, The Field, and other natural history periodicals; and is a fellow of several learned societies. He is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Kirkcudbrightshire, for which county he came forward as Conservative candidate at the general election of 1874, but retired.

KENNION, The Right Rev. George Wyndham, D.D., Bishop of Adelaide, born about 1846, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1867, M.A. 1871). He was ordained deacon in 1869 by the Bishop of Tuam, and priest in the following year by the Archbishop of York. He was domestic chaplain to the Bishop of Tuam 1869-70; curate of Doncaster 1870-71; York Diocesan Inspector of Schools 1871-73; vicar of St. Paul's, Sculcoates, Kingston-on-Hull, 1873-76; and vicar of All Saints', Bradford, from 1876 until his advancement to the episcopate. On Nov. 30, 1882, he was consecrated, in Westminster Abbey, Bishop of Adelaide, in succession to Dr. Short, who had resigned the See, which comprises the whole of South Australia.

KENRICK, The Most Rev. Peter Richard, D.D., Roman Catholic Archbishop of St. Louis, Missouri, was born in Dublin, in 1806. He was educated at Maynooth, and ordained a priest in Ireland, but soon afterwards removed to Philadelphia, where his brother (the late Archbishop of Baltimore) was then coadjutor to the Bishop. Here he edited his Catholic Herald for several years, and published various works, original and translated. He was also made Vicar-General of the diocese. In 1841 Bishop Rosati, of St. Louis, requested his nomination as his coadjutor with the right of succession. He was consecrated Bishop of Drasa in partibus, and coadjutor of St. Louis, Nov. 30, 1841. In 1843, on the death of Bishop Rosati, Dr. Kenrick became Bishop of St. Louis, and in 1847 the first Archbishop of that city. He has been very successful in promoting the interests of the See, having established a large hospital, an orphanage, two convents, numerous schools and charitable institutions, and one of the most extensive and beautiful cemeteries in the United States. Besides the translations already referred to, and editions of devotional works, the Archbishop has published "The Holy House of Loretto; or, an Examination of the Historical Evidence of its Miraculous Translation;" and "Anglican Ordinations." Archbishop Kenrick was present at the Vatican Council, and was reported to have maintained the inopportuneness of defining the dogma of Papal Infallibility. He, however, acquiesced in the definition, and published it, together with the other decrees of the Council, in his diocese.

KENT, William Charles Mark (known as Kent, Charles); poet and journalist, was born in London, Nov. 3, 1823, and educated at Prior Park and Oscott Colleges. His father, William Kent, R.N., who was a midshipman on board the Leander at the battle of Algiers under Lord Exmouth, was the only son of Captain William Kent, R.N., the discoverer of Kent's Group and the Gulf of St. Vincent, who died, in 1812, off Toulon, in command of H.M.S. Union, 98 guns. His mother, Ellen, was the only daughter of Judge Baggs of Demerara. At an early age Mr. Charles Kent adopted literature as a profession. He was Editor of The Sun daily newspaper for twenty-five years, 1845-70; and of the Weekly Register for seven years, 1874-81. He is the author, among other works, of the "Vision of Cagliostro," 1847; "Aletheia, or the Doom of Mythology," 1850; "Dreamland, or Poets in their Haunts," 1862; "Footprints on the Road," 1864; his collected "Poems," 1870; a "Mythological Dictionary," 1870; "Charles Dickens as a Reader," 1872; "Corona Catholica, in fifty languages," 1880; and the "Modern Seven Wonders of the World," 1890. He has written, besides, under various assumed names, such other works as "Catholicity in the Dark Ages by an Oscotian," 1847; "The Derby Ministry, a series of Cabinet Pictures, by Mark Rochester," 1858; and "The Gladstone Government, another series of Cabinet Pictures, by a Templar," 1869. He edited, with a prefatory memoir to each, "The Centenary Editions of Charles Lamb," 1875; and "Thomas Moore," 1879. He edited also, in a similar way, "The works of Robert Burns," 1874; "Father Prout," 1881; "Leigh Hunt," 1888; and "The Knebworth Edition of the Works of Lord Lytton." In 1879 he presented to the British Museum the Last Letter of Charles Dickens, and in 1887 the First Letter of Lord Lytton, both addressed to himself, and both now permanently displayed there, under glass, in the Manuscript Department. Beyond this, he published, in 1883, "The Wit and Wisdom of Lord Lytton;" and, in 1884, "The Humour and Pathos of Charles Dickens." He has contributed largely for years to many of the leading periodicals, such as the Westminster Review, Blackwood's Magazine, Household Words, and All the Year Round; writing, besides, a great number of memoirs in the "Dictionary of National Biography," the Illustrated Review, and the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He was called to the Bar in 1859, at the Middle Temple, and was awarded in 1887 a Pension from the Crown of £100 a year on the Civil List, in recognition of his contributions to literature as poet and biographer.

KEPPEL, Admiral The Hon. Sir Henry, G.C.B., D.C.L., a younger son of the late Earl of Albemarle, born June 14, 1809, entered the navy at an early age, was made Lieutenant in 1829, and Commander in 1833. In command of the Childers, 16 guns, he served on the south coast of Spain during the civil war of 1834-5, afterwards on the west coast of Africa, was made Captain in 1837, and commanded the Dido from 1841 till 1845, during which time he was employed in the China war of 1842, and afterwards in the suppression of piracy in the Eastern Archipelago. From Nov., 1847, till July, 1851, he commanded the Meander, 44 guns, on the China and Pacific stations; in May, 1853, was appointed to the command of the St. Jean d'Acre, 101 guns; served in the Baltic and in the Black Sea, and having in July, 1855, exchanged into the Rodney, 74 guns, obtained command of the Naval Brigade before Sebastopol. After the fall of that stronghold he returned to England and was appointed to the Colossus. In Sept., 1856, he hoisted his pennant as Commodore on board the Raleigh, 52 guns, and proceeded to China, where his ship was lost by striking on an unknown rock. He commanded a division of boats at the destruction of the Chinese war fleet in the Fatshan Creek, June 1, 1857, for which service he was made a K.C.B., and on attaining flag-rank he returned to England. In 1859 he was made Groom in Waiting to the Queen, which office he relinquished in May, 1860, on being appointed to the Cape of Good Hope as naval Commander-in-Chief, from which he was transferred to the Brazilian Station. In Jan., 1867, he hoisted his flag on board the Rodney, as Vice-Admiral Commander-in-Chief on the China and Japan station. He returned to England, in Dec., 1869, on attaining the rank of full Admiral, and was made D.C.L. of Oxford in 1870. He was created a G.C.B. in 1871, and he became an Admiral of the Fleet in 1877. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and Medjidieh of the second class. Sir H. Keppel has written "Expedition to Borneo, with Rajah Brooke's Journal," published in 1847, and "Visit to the Indian Archipelago."

KÉRATRY, Emile, Comte de, was born in Paris, March 20, 1832, of an ancient Breton family, his father being Count Auguste Hilarion Kératry, who died in 1859. Having completed his studies at the Lyceums of St. Louis and of Louis-le-Grand, he entered as a volunteer the 1st regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, in 1854, went through the Crimean campaign, removed successively to the 1st regiment of Spahis and of Cuirassiers, and, in 1859, was appointed sous-lieutenant in the 5th regiment of Lancers. In 1861 he exchanged into the 3rd regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, in order that he might make the campaign in Mexico; and, in 1864, he was detached as Captain commanding the second squadron of Colonel Dupin's famous counter-guerilla. In this dangerous service he distinguished himself by his bravery and decision, and afterwards he was appointed officer of ordnance to Marshal Bazaine. The Comte de Kératry was several times mentioned in the "Order of the Day" in Africa and Mexico. In 1865 he was recommended for a lieutenant's commission, but he sent in his resignation and retired from the service. At this period he had received the Legion of Honour, and had been decorated with several foreign Orders. On his return to France he devoted himself to literary pursuits, and contributed to the Revue Contemporaine a remarkable series of articles on the Mexican expedition, in which he severely attacked the Government and the conduct of Marshal Bazaine. Soon afterwards he became editor of the Revue Moderne, in which periodical he continued his accusation. In 1869 he was returned by the electors of Brest to the Corps Législatif, when he associated himself with the new Liberal Tiers-Parti. On the establishment of the Government of the National Defence in Sept., 1870, he was made Prefect of Police; but in the following month he escaped in a balloon, from Paris, then besieged, and proceeded on a diplomatic mission to Madrid, where, soon afterwards, he was succeeded by M. Edmond Adam. He is the author of "Le Contre-Guérilla," 1867; "La Crance Jecker," 1867; "L'Élévation et la Chute de Maximilien," 1867; a work on French events entitled "Le 4 Septembre et le Gouvernement de la Défense Nationale," 1871; "Armée de Bretagne," 1870-1, published in 1874; and "Mourad V., prince, sultan, prisonnier d'état," 1878.

KERN, J. Conrad, statesman, was born in 1808, in the market town of Berlingen, near Arenenberg, in the canton of Thurgau, Switzerland. After studying at the Gymnasium of Zurich, he proceeded to the University of Basle, to study theology, which he gave up, became a law student, and finished his education in the schools of Berlin, Heidelberg, and Paris. From 1837 he performed in his canton the duties of President of the Supreme Court of Judicature, and those of President of the Council of Education. Dr. Kern, at an early period, impelled by his liberal tendencies, was engaged in reforming the cantonal institutions. In a wider field he was, from 1833, under the old compact, as under the new Federal constitution, the regularly chosen representative of his canton in the Diet or in the National Assembly. In 1838 the French Government insisted, through its ambassador, the Duke of Montebello, on the extradition of Prince Louis Napoleon, who, with his mother, Queen Hortense, had for some time resided in the canton of Thurgau. In the Diet, Dr. Kern protested against the right of any power to interfere with the hospitality of his canton, or with the liberty of a Swiss citizen; and on his return to Thurgau to render to the Town Council an account of the deliberations of the Diet, he urged his fellow-citizens not to allow themselves to be intimidated by the menaces of France. "Do what is right, happen what may," was the conclusion of his speech. Dr. Kern had the satisfaction to return to the Diet with the unanimous votes of his canton in favour of his principle. As President of the Ecole Polytechnique, of Zurich, he has done much for that valuable institution. When, in 1857, the dispute between Switzerland and the King of Prussia as to Neuchâtel threatened to cause serious troubles, Dr. Kern was deputed to maintain the interest and uphold the dignity of the republic at the conference held at Neuchâtel; and was appointed Swiss plenipotentiary at the court of France.

KERNAHAN, Coulson, F.R.G.S., author and journalist, is the son of the Rev. James Kernahan, M.A., Ph.D., F.G.S., (editor and joint author of "Suggestive and Homiletic Commentaries on the New Testament," and other important theological works) was born at Ilfracombe on Aug. 1, 1838; and educated at the Grammar School, St. Albans. He has contributed largely in prose and poetry to both English and American quarterlies, monthly magazines, and other periodicals. His poems are characterized by much feeling, and by great power and imagination, with striking mastery over poetic form; while some of his tales show a depth of gloomy thought akin to that of Poe. A very remarkable original story by him was issued anonymously in one of the monthlies, has since been printed in volume form, and has rapidly passed into the third edition; we refer to that strange work, "A Dead Man's Diary." Mr. Kernahan's critical essays on Heine, Robertson of Brighton, Emerson's poetry &c., place him high among literary critics.

KERR, Robert, architect, was born at Aberdeen, 1823, and became a pupil of John Smith, City Architect of Aberdeen. He was the first President of the Architectural Association in 1847, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1857, and was appointed.

Professor of the Arts of Construction at King's College, London, in 1861. He is the author of "The English Gentleman's House," 1864, and other works, and amongst other buildings, has designed and executed Bearwood, Berkshire, the residence of Mr. John Walter, of the Times.

KERR, Robert Malcolm, Commissioner to the City of London Court, was born in Scotland in 1821, and called to the English Bar in 1848. Mr. Commissioner Kerr is well known for his just administration of the law for the protection of the victims of unscrupulous usurers; and has edited several valuable legal works. He twice unsuccessfully contested Kilmarnock in the Liberal interest.

KERVYN DE LETTENHOVE (Baron), Joseph Marie Bruno Constantin, a Belgian statesman and historian, born at St. Michel, near Bruges, Aug. 17, 1817. From an early age he devoted himself to historical studies, and began to gather the materials for the admirable works which have gained for him so high a reputation, both in his native country and in France. He has been for many years a member of the Chamber of Representatives. When the Conservatives came into power in July, 1870, he accepted office under Baron d'Anethan as Minister of the Interior, and retained that post until the resignation of the ministry in Dec. 1871. M. Kervyn de Lettenhove is the author of a French translation of the select works of Milton ("Œuvres Choies de Milton"), published anonymously in Paris, with the original text, in 1839; "Histoire de Flandre," 6 vols., Brussels, 1847-50, 4 vols., Bruges, 1853-54; an "Étude sur les Chroniques de Froissart," which was "crowned" by the French Academy in 1856; "Les Huguenots et les Gueux," 6 vols., (a work which also was "crowned" by the French Academy); and more recently another work entitled "Marie Stuart, l'œuvre puritaine, le procès, le supplice," 2 vols. He has also edited the works of Chartellain, 6 vols., and "Lettres et Négociations de Philippe de Comines," with an historical and biographical commentary. His magnificent edition of Froissart was completed by the publication of the last volumes—twenty-fourth to twenty-fifth—in 1877. We have finally to mention a very extensive work, "Les Relations politiques des Pays Bas et de l'Angleterre sous le règne de Philippe II.," whereof ten volumes in quarto are already published. M. Kervyn de Lettenhove, who is a member of the Royal Academy of Belgium, was elected in 1863 a member of the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences in the section of general and philosophical history.

KETTLE, Sir Rupert Alfred, son of the late Mr. Thomas Kettle, a Birmingham manufacturer of French descent, was born in Birmingham, Jan. 9, 1817. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1845, and soon obtained a large practice on the Oxford Circuit. During the year 1864 there had been a strike in the building trade at Wolverhampton lasting seventeen weeks; and notwithstanding the disastrous losses on both sides another disagreement arose, upon which another strike was impending. The mayor of the town called a public meeting to endeavour to avert this threatened disturbance of trade. This led to both masters and workmen requesting Mr. Rupert Kettle to settle the differences between them, and to his ultimately establishing a legally organised system of arbitration. The essential principle of the new system was that, if the delegates of the contending parties could not agree, an independent umpire should have power to make a final and legally binding award between them. The board of arbitration worked so satisfactorily in Wolverhampton that Mr. Kettle was prevailed upon to introduce the same system into other towns, and it rapidly extended so as to include a large portion of the building trade of the kingdom. Boards of arbitration were afterwards established by Mr. Kettle in the coal trade, the potteries, the Nottingham lace trade, the hand-made paper trade, ironstone mining, and in other staple trades of the country. After ten years of this labour Mr. Kettle was so overwhelmed with engagements as trade umpire that he found it impossible to meet all the claims upon his time and still continue to discharge efficiently the duties of Judge of County Courts to which he had been appointed in 1859. Soon after Mr. Gladstone's return to office in 1880 the honour of knighthood was conferred upon Mr. Kettle "for his public services in establishing a system of arbitration between employers and employed." On Nov. 17, 1882, he was elected a Bencher of the Middle Temple. Sir Rupert Kettle is one of the senior Magistrates, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of Staffordshire, of which county he has been Assistant-Chairman of Quarter Sessions since 1866. He is also a Magistrate of the county of Merioneth, and by virtue of his office of Judge of County Courts is also on the Commission of the Peace for Worcestershire and Herefordshire. Sir Rupert Kettle married, in 1851, Miss Mary Cooke, of Merridale, Staffordshire, and has a numerous family.

KHAN, His Highness Prince Malcom. See MALCOM KHAN.

KIDD, George Hugh, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Past President of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, was born in Armagh, June 12, 1824. His father was a lineal descendant of Walter Kyd, a native of Irving, Ayrshire, who settled in the North of Ireland early in the 17th century. His mother (also of Scotch extraction) was Eliza, youngest daughter of Thomas McKinstrey, of Keady. He was educated partly at home, and partly at the school kept by the Rev. John Bleckley, at Monaghan, and that of Dr. Lyons, at Newry. His professional studies were conducted at the College of Surgeons, Trinity College; and in the Park Street and Marlborough Street Schools, Dublin, and were completed at Edinburgh University. He obtained the licence of the College of Surgeons on July 25, 1842, and on Oct. 25, 1844, was co-opted a Fellow, but was not enrolled till 1849. In 1845, he graduated M.D. in Edinburgh University and obtained one of the "Graduation" gold Medals of the year. At that time it was usual to give three Medals for the best graduation theses of the year; but on this occasion four were granted, his name being "first called." From the beginning of his professional career his course has been one of distinction and success. In 1845, he became a Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Park Street School, and subsequently lectured on Anatomy and Physiology in the Peter Street School. He has, for many years, acted as Obstetric Surgeon to the Coombe Hospital, and was Master of it from 1876 till 1883. He is Consulting Obstetric Surgeon to the House of Industry Hospitals, and Mercers Hospital, Dublin, and is an Honorary Fellow of the London and Edinburgh Obstetrical Societies, and Corresponding Member of several foreign societies. He has served the offices of President of the Obstetrical and Pathological Societies, and of the Obstetrical Section of the British Medical Association, and of the Irish Academy of Medicine, Ireland. In 1883 the University of Dublin conferred on him the degree of Magister in Arte Obstetriciâ Honoris Causâ, on which occasion the other recipients of honorary degrees were Earl Spencer, Lord Wolseley, and Professor Crawford. In 1884 he was selected to give the address on Obstetric Medicine at the meeting of the British Medical Association in Belfast. His contributions to Medical literature are numerous, the majority being on Obstetrical and Gynecological subjects. He was, for many years, Proprietor and Editor of the Dublin Quarterly Journal of Medical Science. An important event in the life of Dr. Kidd is his instrumentality in the foundation of the Institution for Idiotic and Imbecile Children. It bears the name of "The Stewart Institution for Idiotic and Imbecile Children, and Asylum for Middle-Class Lunatic Patients," in honour of Dr. Stewart, who generously supported Dr. Kidd's efforts, and eventually, by liberal gifts and testamentary endowments, became its most munificent benefactor. It was, however, due to Dr. Kidd's personal influence and labour that this excellent Institution had any existence at all. Dr. Kidd has been elected annually a Member of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, since 1872; and in 1876 he was elected President. Dr. Kidd has held, in succession, the positions of Examiner in Midwifery to the Royal College of Surgeons, the Queen's University, and Dublin University; and, before he became a Member of the General Medical Council, was appointed by them to inspect and report on the Midwifery Examinations of the Universities of Cambridge, Edinburgh, Aberdeen, and Durham. Dr. Kidd married Frances Emily, daughter of the late William Rigby, of Dublin, who died in 1884. In 1887 he was married to Ada Isabella, daughter of the Rev. J. Pantton Ham, of London.

KILMORE, Bishop of. See SHONE, THE RIGHT REV. SAMUEL.

KIMBERLEY (Earl of), The Right Hon. John Wodehouse, K.G., born Jan. 7, 1826, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1847, taking a first-class in classical honours. He succeeded his grandfather as third Baron Wodehouse, May 29, 1846, and was raised to the earldom of Kimberley, June 1, 1866. In Dec., 1852, he accepted the post of Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, which he held under Lords Aberdeen and Palmerston until 1856, when he was appointed Envoy at St. Petersburg. He returned from Russia in 1858, and resumed his post as Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Lord Palmerston's second administration, June 19, 1859, retiring Aug. 14, 1861. In 1863

he was sent on a special mission to the north of Europe, with the view of obtaining some settlement of the Schleswig-Holstein question; and in 1864 was appointed Under Secretary for India. In Oct. of the same year he succeeded the late Earl of Carlisle in the Lord-Lieutenancy of Ireland, resigning that post on the fall of Lord Russell's second administration, in July, 1866. He held the office of Lord Privy Seal in Mr. Gladstone's administration from Dec. 1868, to July, 1870, and that of Secretary of State for the Colonies from the latter date until the retirement of Mr. Gladstone in Feb., 1874. In Feb., 1878, he was nominated Chairman of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the Penal Servitude Acts. He was reappointed Secretary of State for the Colonies on Mr. Gladstone's return to power in May, 1880; and in June, 1882, he was also appointed to hold provisionally the seals of the office of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, resigned by Mr. Bright. On Dec. 16, 1882, he received from the Queen the seals of the office of Secretary of State for India, which he held till June, 1885, and to which he was reappointed on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's third Government in Feb. 1886. In 1885 he was made a Knight of the Garter. He is a member of the Senate of the University of London.

KING, The Right Rev. Edward, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln, was born about the year 1829, and was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1851, M.A. 1855). He was ordained deacon in 1854, and priest 1855, by the Bishop of Oxford, and became curate of Wheatley. In 1858 he was appointed Chaplain and Assistant Lecturer of Cuddesdon College, and from 1863-73 he was Principal of the College. In 1873 he became Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology, in which position he exercised a wide influence throughout the University. On the death of Dr. Christopher Wordsworth in 1885, Dr. King was appointed to the Bishopric of Lincoln, and was consecrated in Lincoln Cathedral. Dr. King is a High Churchman; indeed, so high that he has been cited before the Archbishop of Canterbury for non-conformity to the Rubric; the result being that he has promised to obey the Archbishop's injunctions, and abstain from certain forms which gave offence.

KINGLAKE, Robert Arthur, brother of the historian of the Crimean War, was born at Taunton, in 1813, and was educated at Ottery Saint Mary, Devonshire. For more than half a century he has devoted himself to works of charity and benevolence, directing his especial efforts to the improvement of the moral and physical condition of the labouring classes. The extension of penny and other savings banks, the promotion of the labourers' "allotment" system, and the improvement of the dwellings of the agricultural poor, are objects which have chiefly occupied his attention. He established a "Court of Reconciliation" in his native town, by means of which he has been enabled, under the influence of friendly mediation, to settle a large number of quarrels without involving the contending parties in any "costs." Mr. Kinglake was one of the principal promoters of the West of England Sanatorium established near Weston-super-Mare. In another, but equally useful direction, he has extended his untiring labours by seeking to ameliorate the condition of discharged prisoners. He was the originator in his native county, of its famous and well-known "Valhalla of Worthies," which includes the busts of Locke, Blake, Pym, Speke, Fielding, and General John Jacob, the founder of the celebrated Scinde Horse, and others. He is the author of a memoir of General Guyon, the famous English hero in the Hungarian War of Independence—a work which called forth the warm approval of Kossuth and his friends. Mr. Kinglake is also the author of a work on Land Transfer, and of various pamphlets on social subjects.

KIPLING, Rudyard, author, was born in Bombay in 1864, and is the son of John Lockwood Kipling, C.I.E., Head of the Lahore School of Art. He was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho, North Devon; returned to India in 1882, as sub-editor of the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette, and was special correspondent for that paper and for the Pioneer of Allahabad, on the frontier, at Rajputana and elsewhere. He published in India "Departmental Ditties," and "Plain Tales from the Hills," followed by six small books of military, native, and social life in India. He left India in 1889, and travelled in China, Japan, and America, and thence to England, where he has written stories which have brought him fame; his latest being "The Light that Failed."

KIRBY, The Right Rev. Tobias, Bishop of Lita, was born in the diocese of Waterford, in 1803, and went to Rome in 1829, when he determined to embrace the ecclesiastical profession, and entered himself a student at the Roman Seminary. Among his fellow students was the present Pope, Leo XIII. Monsignor Kirby was ordained a priest in 1833. His learning and piety caused his selection for the post of Vice-Rector of the Irish College in 1835, and in 1850 he succeeded Cardinal Cullen as Rector. That office he has held during eventful periods. He witnessed the revolution which drove out Pius IX. and the restoration of the same Pontiff, and again that other revolution which led to the fall of the temporal power of the Pope. As the trusted agent of the Irish and many colonial Bishops, Monsignor Kirby had frequent communications with Pius IX., who created him in 1860 a Private Chamberlain, and with Leo XIII., who soon after his accession raised him to the rank of Domestic Prelate. In May, 1881, he was appointed Bishop of Lita, in partibus infidelium.

KIRK, Sir John, M.D., G.C.M.G., F.R.S., LL.D. (Honorary), Edinburgh, was born at Barry, near Arbroath, Forfarshire, in 1832. He graduated M.D. in the University of Edinburgh in 1854, and early distinguished himself in botany and other departments of natural history. He served on the Civil Medical Staff during the Crimean War, and subsequently, for five years, Feb., 1858, to July, 1864, as Chief Officer and Naturalist to the late Dr. Livingstone's second exploring expedition, sent out by the British Government. In 1866 he was Vice-Consul and Assistant Political Agent at Zanzibar. In 1873 he was appointed Her Majesty's Consul-General, and in 1880 Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar. He accompanied the Sultan of Zanzibar in his visit to England in 1875, having previously, by his great influence with that potentate, induced him to enter into a treaty for the abolition of the slave-trade in his dominions. By his own exertions, and the aid he has afforded to other explorers, Dr. Kirk has materially assisted the progress of geographical discovery in East Africa, for which he received the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society of London; but his great achievement is the almost complete suppression of the slave-trade in the greater part of Eastern Africa. In 1875 he was appointed Consul in the Comoro Islands. In 1890 he was Her Majesty's Plenipotentiary at the Slave Trade Conference at Brussels. He was made a C.M.G. in Aug. 1879; Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar in 1880; a

K.C.M.G. in Sept. 1881, and G.C.M.G. Feb. 16, 1886.

KIRKPATRICK, Professor The Rev. Alexander Francis, B.D., is the son of the late Rev. F. Kirkpatrick, who was descended from a younger branch of the family of the Kirkpatricks of Closeburn in Scotland, and was born at Lewes in 1849. He received his education at Haileybury College, under the Rev. A. G. Butler, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a Minor Scholarship in 1867, and a Foundation Scholarship in the following year. He was elected Bell Scholar and Porson Scholar in 1868, and Craven Scholar in 1870; and graduated B.A. in 1871, as second in the first-class of the Classical Tripos. In the same year he was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College. He was placed in the first class of the Theological Examination in 1872, obtaining the Evans Prize, and being equal for the Scholefield and Hebrew Prizes, and in 1874 was elected Tyrwhitt Hebrew Scholar. He was ordained deacon in 1874, and priest in 1875, by the Bishop of Ely. He held the office of Assistant Tutor of his College from 1871 to 1882; served as Junior Proctor and Examiner for the Classical and Theological Triposes; was Whitehall Preacher, 1878-80, and Lady Margaret's Preacher, 1882; in which year he succeeded Professor Jarrett as Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge, an office to which a Canonry in Ely Cathedral is attached. He has been Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Winchester since 1878, and was Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn, 1886-90. Professor Kirkpatrick has written a commentary on the First and Second Books of Samuel in "The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges," and has contributed to the Church Quarterly Review and the Expositor.

KITCHENER, Colonel Horatio Herbert, C.B., C.M.G., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, was born in 1851; obtained his commission as Lieutenant, Jan. 4, 1871; became Captain, Jan. 4, 1883; Major, Oct. 8, 1884; Lieut.-Colonel, June 15, 1885; and Colonel, April 11, 1888. The eight years between 1874 and 1882 were spent in Civil employment. In 1874 he joined the survey of Western Palestine under Major Condor. After the attack on the party at Safed, in 1875, he returned to England; and until 1877 was engaged in laying down the Palestine Exploration Fund's map. Returning to the Holy Land in 1877, he executed the whole of the survey of Galilee. In 1878 he was sent to Cyprus to organize the courts. He was next appointed Vice-Consul at Erzeroum; subsequently he returned to Cyprus and made a survey of the entire island. In 1882, hearing that an Egyptian army was being organized by Sir Evelyn Wood, he volunteered for the service, and was appointed one of the two majors of the cavalry. He was Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quarter-Master-General in the Nile Expedition 1884-5 (mentioned in despatches, Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, Medal with Clasp, 2nd class of the Medjidieh, and Khedive's Star); was in command of a Brigade of the Egyptian Army in the operations near Suakin in Dec. 1888, and was present in the engagement at Gemaizah (mentioned in despatches). Colonel Kitchener was also in the engagement at Toski on the Soudan frontier in 1889 (mentioned in despatches, C.B.).

KITCHIN, The Very Rev. George William, D.D., F.S.A., Dean of Winchester, was born Dec. 7, 1827, at Naughton parsonage, Suffolk, being the son of the Rev. I. Kitchin, Rector of St. Stephen's, Ipswich, by his wife, a daughter of Rev. W. Bardgett, Rector of Melmerby, Cumberland. He was educated at Ipswich Grammar School, King's College, and Christ Church, Oxford, Student of Christ Church, 1846 (B.A.—double first-class—1850; M.A. 1853; D.D. 1883). He was appointed Tutor of Christ Church in 1853; Head Master of Twyford School in 1855; Censor and Tutor of Christ Church in 1861; Proctor of the University in 1863; Tutor to H.R.H. the Crown Prince of Denmark in 1863; Censor of non-collegiate students, 1868-1883; History Lecturer at Christ Church, and History Tutor at Christ Church, in 1882; and Dean of Winchester in 1883, in succession to Dean Bramston, who retired. He was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1863 and 1864; and Whitehall Preacher in 1866 and 1867. He was a member of the Hebdomadal Council of the University of Oxford, 1879-83; Governor of Ipswich and Portsmouth Endowed Schools; also Chairman of the Cheltenham Ladies' College; and was formerly Examining Chaplain to Dr. Jacobson, Bishop of Chester. His works include editions of Bacon's "Novum Organum," 2 vols., 1855; Bacon's "Advancement of Learning," and "Twyford Prayers," 1860; "Spenser's Faëry Queene," i., ii., 1867, 1869; "Catalogue of MSS. in Christ Church Library," 1867; translations of "Brachet's French Grammar," 1869; and of the same author's "French Dictionary," 1873. Dr. Kitchin is the translator of part of Ranke's "Englische Geschichte," and author of a "History of France," 3 vols. (Clarendon Press), 1873, &c.; "Life of Pope Pius II.," for the Arundel Society, 1881; and of "Winchester," 1890, for Messrs. Longman's series of Historic Towns. He has also edited "Winchester Cathedral Records, No. I," being a Consuetudinary of the Refectory of St. Swithin's Priory, 1886, and No. II., being the "Charter of Edward III. for the St. Giles' Fair, Winchester," 1886; also Vol. I. of the publications of the Hampshire Record Society, "Documents relating to the Foundation of the Chapter of Winchester, A.D. 1541-1547," 1889.

KLAPKA, General George, born at Temeswar, in Hungary, April 7, 1820, entered the army at the age of eighteen, was at first attached to the artillery, and completed his military education at Vienna. Being sent, in 1847, into a frontier regiment, he was disgusted with the profession, and resigned. He was about to travel abroad when the Revolution of 1848 broke out, and he resumed the profession of arms. Fighting against Austria, he took command of a company of Honveds, and distinguished himself in the war against the Servians. Towards the close of 1848 he was the chief of the staff of Gen. Kis, and after the defeat of Kaschau (Jan. 4, 1849), succeeded Messaros at the head of his corps d'armée. Under Kossuth he was Minister of War, and entered completely into the views of the Government of the Revolution. Quitting the Ministry, he took command of Comorn, and vainly endeavoured to reconcile Kossuth and Gorgei (q. v.). After the unfortunate capitulation of Vilagos (Aug. 13, 1849), Klapka maintained himself heroically in Comorn, and menaced Austria and Styria, until he heard of the alleged defection of Gorgei. In Sept., 1849, a convention was signed between the defenders of the place and Gen. Haynau, and Klapka went into exile, first in London, and afterwards in Switzerland and Italy. His "Memoirs," published at Leipzig in 1850, were followed by "The National War in Hungary and Transylvania," in 1851. In the unfortunate arrangements set on foot by Garibaldi for the attempt on Rome, in 1862, when he sought to excite the Hungarians to take the field, a judicious counter-proclamation from Klapka, pointing out the headlong temerity and rashness of the undertaking, kept them quietly in their homes. In 1866, however, after the defeat of Austria at Königgrätz, he formed a company of Honveds, and endeavoured to bring about a revolution in Hungary; but the attempt failed, and Klapka fled to Oderberg. In 1873 he was engaged upon the reorganization of the Turkish army, and in the war of 1877-78, his advice was freely offered to the Turkish generals.

KNAUS, Ludwig, Hon. R.A., a celebrated German genre-painter, was born at Wiesbaden, Oct. 10, 1829, and entered the Academy at Düsseldorf, where he studied under Sohn and Schadow. He then went to Paris, and, with a break of one year in Italy, lived there for eight years, perfecting himself in the technical part of his art by close study of modern French masters. His first important pictures were "The Golden Wedding," 1858, and "The Christening," 1859. In the following year he returned to Wiesbaden, but in 1861 went to Berlin, in 1866 to Düsseldorf, whence in 1874 he once more returned to Berlin, in order to fill an important post in the Academy. Besides the above-named works may be mentioned "Funeral in a Hesse Village," 1871; "His Excellency Travelling," "The Village Musician," "The Inn," 1876; "The Refractory Model," 1877; "Solomon's Wisdom," 1878; and "A Peep Behind the Scenes," 1880, the last of which created a great deal of interest in Düsseldorf.

KNIGHT, Francis Arnold, naturalist, was born on Jan. 21, 1852, at Gloucester, where his father was a schoolmaster. He was educated at Sidcot School and Flounders College, educational establishments belonging to the Society of Friends. He himself has followed the scholastic profession, and is now the head of a private school at Weston-super-Mare, in Somersetshire. Mr. Knight became, in 1887, a contributor to the Daily News; and his studies of Natural History, taken almost entirely from his own observations, appeared frequently in the leading columns of that journal. A number of his charming essays have been reprinted in the two volumes entitled "By Leafy Ways," and "Idylls of the Field," both of which were published in 1889. Many of his essays would have been worthy of the late Richard Jefferies.

KNIGHTON, William, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., born in Dublin, 1834, the son of Richard Ingham Knighton, is of the same family to which belonged Henry de Knyghton, Canon of Worcester, and Chronicler of English History, about

A.D. 1400, and Sir William Knighton, Bart., Keeper of the Privy Purse in the reign of George IV. He was educated in Glasgow, and appointed Head Master of the Normal School of Colombo, Ceylon, before he was twenty years of age. He was partner in a Coffee Plantation in the interior of the island, and wrote the "History of Ceylon," from native chronicles, and "Forest Life in Ceylon," from his own experience. He was the first Hon. Sec. of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. In 1856 he was appointed Professor of History and Logic in the Calcutta University; and, in 1860, was transferred as Assistant Commissioner to Oudh by Lord Canning. His "Private Life of an Eastern King," published before the great Indian Mutiny broke out, gave a faithful account of the career of Nussir-ood-deen, King of Oudh, and incidentally of the state of that country before its annexation. In Fraser's Magazine, when edited by Mr. Froude, Mr. Knighton published his "Village Life in Oudh," and, in 1864, he issued his "Private Life of an Eastern Queen." Mr. Knighton retired from the Oudh Commission in 1878, and has since devoted himself to literature. In 1887 he was elected a Vice-President of the Royal Society of Literature in London, and of the International Literary and Artistic Association of Paris. In 1889 he erected a bronze statue of Shakespeare on the Boulevard Haussmann, in Paris—a statue in bronze modelled by Paul Fournier. Mr. Knighton is a Master of Arts, a Doctor of Philosophy, and a Doctor of Laws of the Giessen University, in Germany. His most recent work, "Struggles for Life," was translated into French by M. Leon Delbos, under the title of "Les Luttes pour la Vie," and has been very popular both in Paris and in London.

KNOWLES, James, F.R.I.B.A., born in 1831, was educated as an architect at a private school, at University College, in his father's office, and in Italy. He is a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and has executed many architectural works, chiefly in London and its neighbourhood—amongst which may be mentioned, Aldworth, the Surrey residence of Lord Tennyson; Kensington House, with its gardens and adjuncts; the Thatched House Club, St. James's Street; the public garden and fountain in Leicester Square; Albert mansions in Victoria Street; and St. Saviour's, St. Philip's, and St. Stephen's Churches at Clapham. Mr. Knowles has also been engaged in literature from an early age, contributing many articles to journals and reviews, and in 1860 compiling (from Sir Thomas Malory) "The Story of King Arthur," which reached a sixth edition. In 1869 he originated "The Metaphysical Society," a club consisting of forty members, chiefly being eminent representatives of the most various forms of contemporary thought and belief on speculative subjects—Anglican, Roman Catholic, Nonconformist, Positivist, Agnostic, and Atheistic—and constituted for the full, free, and confidential discussion of philosophical questions. In 1870 he succeeded Dean Alford in the editorship of the Contemporary Review, which, by enlisting the aid of the members of the Metaphysical Society, he raised to a position of influence and importance. In 1877, owing to a change in the proprietorship of the Contemporary Review, a separation took place between it and Mr. Knowles, when—supported by more than one hundred writers of celebrity (mostly members of the Metaphysical Society, and contributors to the Contemporary Review)—he established The Nineteenth Century, a monthly review, in which, as his own property, the principle of the unfettered and unbiassed discussion of all topics of public interest, by authors signing their own names, might be preserved without interference. The Nineteenth Century immediately attained and still preserves a very wide circulation.

KNOX, Mrs., née Isa Craig, was born in Edinburgh, Oct. 17, 1831. At an early age she began to contribute anonymously to several periodicals, and at last her poetical contributions to the Scotsman, under the signature "Isa," attracted attention, and led to her employment in the literary department of that journal. In 1856 she published a collection of her poems. In 1857 she came to London, and her services were engaged by Mr. Hastings in organizing the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, to which she acted as secretary and literary assistant, until her marriage with her cousin, Mr. John Knox. In 1859 she won the first prize for her Ode (against 620 competitors), recited at the Burns Centenary Festival, and in 1865 published "Duchess Agnes," and other poems.

KNOX, The Most Rev. Robert Bent, D.D., LL.D., Archbishop of Armagh, and Primate of all Ireland, and Metropolitan, was born at Dungannon Park, the seat of his grandfather, the Earl of Ranfurly, on Sept. 25, 1808. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A. 1829; D.D. 1849); was Lord Bishop of Down, Connor, and Dromore, 1849-1876, since which time he has been Archbishop, as above. He has published ordination charges, sermons, addresses, lectures, &c. He married, in 1842, Catharine Dehlia, daughter of Thomas Gibbon Fitz Gibbon, Esq., of Ballyseeda, co. Limerick, and has issue living, a son and two daughters.

KNUTSFORD (Baron), The Right Hon. Sir Henry Thurstan Holland, M.P., P.C., G.C.M.G., eldest son of Sir Henry Holland, the famous physician, and President of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, was born on Aug. 3, 1825, and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his university degree in 1847. After the usual preliminaries he was called to the Bar in 1849 by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, and joined the Northern Circuit. Undertakings of a difficult and delicate nature soon devolved upon him, and he was frequently employed by the Treasury, in conjunction with Sir W. Stephenson, the late Mr. George Hamilton, then Secretary to the Treasury, and the late Mr. George Arbutnot, also attached to the same office, to revise and reorganize the establishment of various public offices, among the number being the Ecclesiastical Commission, the Poor Law Board, and the Woods and Forests Commission. In 1851, although only twenty-six years of age, he was appointed by the then Lord Chancellor to the onerous duty of drawing up the Bill which, in 1852, became law under the title of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. This task he carried out under the direction of the late Mr. Justice Willes, one of the Royal Commissioners. The Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, which followed the measure just mentioned, was the next work upon which Sir Henry Holland was engaged as draughtsman. He was next employed by Lord Chief Baron Sir Fitzroy Kelly in drafting two of the criminal measures which became law in 24th and 25th Vict. The County Court Judgeship of Northumberland was offered him by Lord Campbell when Lord Chancellor, but the appointment was declined. Sir Henry continued to practise at the Bar until the beginning of the year 1867, when Lord Carnarvon selected him to fill the office of legal adviser to the Colonial Office. In 1870 he was promoted to an assistant under-secretaryship, and remained in that office until August, 1874, when he resigned in order to stand for the borough of Midhurst; he was elected without a contest, and took his seat in the House of Commons in the following session. In 1885, after the borough of Midhurst was disfranchised, Sir H. T. Holland stood for the new Borough of Hampstead, and beat his opponent, the Marquis of Lorne, by a large majority. In June, 1885, when Lord Salisbury took office, Sir H. T. Holland accepted the post of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and held that post till the September following, when he was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, and became a Privy Councillor. He was again returned for Hampstead in 1886, and again appointed Vice-President of the Council on Education. In January 1887 he was appointed Secretary of State for the Colonies, and as Secretary of State presided over the Colonial Conference which was held that year in London. In 1888 he was raised to the Peerage and took the title of Knutsford. In 1889 he carried through the House of Lords a Bill for giving a constitutional government to Western Australia, but it was rejected in the House of Commons. Baron Knutsford is a Bencher of the Inner Temple, a Deputy-Lieutenant of Middlesex, and a magistrate for the adjoining county of Surrey. He married (1st) in 1852, Elizabeth Margaret, daughter of Mr. N. Hibbert of Watford; and (2nd) in 1858, Margaret Jean, daughter of the late Sir Charles Trevelyan.

KOCH, Professor Dr. Robert, the eminent bacteriologist, was born at Klausthal in Hanover on Dec. 11, 1843. He studied medicine at the University of Göttingen from 1862 to 1866, and having taken his degree, was appointed assistant surgeon in the General Hospital at Hamburg, and afterwards practised privately at Langenhagen in Hanover, and at Rackewitz in Posen. In 1872, when District Surgeon at Wallstein, he began his bacteriological investigations, and consequently was appointed a member of the Imperial Board of Health. About that time he discovered a method of colouring microscopical preparations, by means of which he, in 1882, isolated the tubercle bacillus, and produced tuberculosis by its inoculation in animals. In 1883 he was appointed a Privy Councillor, and given the direction of the German Cholera Commission, which visited Egypt and India. He then discovered the so-called "comma" cholera bacillus, and for his services received a gift of 100,000 marks (£5000). Two years later he went to France to make further investigations in regard to the cholera bacillus, and on his return was appointed Professor of the newly-founded Institute of Hygiene in Berlin. Since then he has devoted himself unceasingly to the study of bacteriology, with results which, if successful in their application, will give him a just claim to be styled a benefactor of humanity.

KOSSUTH, Lajos, or Louis, ex-Governor of Hungary, was born April 21, 1802, at Monok, in the county of Zemplin, where his father was a small landowner, of the noble class. Louis was educated at the Protestant College of Scharasehpatack, where he qualified himself for the profession of an advocate, obtained his diploma in 1826, and in 1830 became agent to the Countess Szapary, and as such sat in the Comital Assembly. At the age of twenty-seven he took his seat in the National Diet of Presburg, as representative of a magnate. He published reports of the proceedings of this assembly on lithographed sheets, until they were suppressed by the Government, and afterwards in M.S. circulars. The Government, which determined not to allow reports of Parliamentary debates to become current in Hungary, prosecuted him for high treason; and in 1839 he was sentenced to four years' imprisonment. After about a year and a half of confinement, he was liberated under an act of amnesty. In Jan., 1841, he became chief editor of the Hírlap, a newspaper published at Pesth. His influence with his countrymen steadily increased until, in March, 1848, he entered Vienna with a deputation to urge the claims of his country upon the Government, and returned to Presburg as Minister of Finance. Under his influence the internal reforms which he had advocated were carried out; the last remains of the oppressive feudal system were swept away, and the peasants were declared free from all seigniorial claims, the country undertaking to indemnify the landlords. The Diet was dissolved, and a new Diet summoned for July 2, by which Kossuth was created Governor of Hungary, and he held that post during the civil war of 1848-49. After the efforts of the Hungarians had been crushed, mainly by the aid of Russian armed intervention, Kossuth was compelled to retire to Turkey. He reached Schumla with Bem, Dembinski, Perczel, Guyon, and 5,000 men, and was appointed a residence in Widdin. Austria and Russia wished the refugees to be given up, in which case they would probably have been executed. Through the intervention of England and France, the demand was refused. The late Sultan behaved with great humanity and disinterestedness on the occasion. The refugees were removed to Kutahia, in Asia Minor, where they remained prisoners until Aug. 22, 1851. Kossuth left Kutahia Sept. 1, and after touching at Spezzia, called at Marseilles, but was refused permission to travel through France. Having been hospitably received at Gibraltar and at Lisbon, he reached Southampton Oct. 28, sailed for the United States Nov. 21, and made a tour, agitating in favour of Hungary. He soon returned to England, where he resided for some years, occupying himself chiefly in writing for newspapers, and delivering lectures against the house of Hapsburg. One of the occasions on which his name was brought prominently before the public was in 1860, when the Austrian Government instituted a successful process against Messrs. Day & Sons for lithographing several millions of bank-notes for circulation in Hungary, signed by Kossuth, as governor of that country. In Nov. 1861, he published in the Perseveranza, an Italian journal, a long letter, setting forth the situation of Hungary; and, urging the Italians to commence war against Austria, with the view of enabling the Hungarians to develop their strength against that Power, issued an inflammatory address to the Hungarians, June 6, 1866, and after the close of the war of that year advised the Hungarians to reject the concessions offered by Francis Joseph. He was elected deputy for Waitzen, Aug. 1, 1867, but he declined to accept the office. In April, 1875, M. Kossuth was living in an unpretending dwelling in Turin, where he had resided for thirteen years, in the strictest privacy. Latterly he has devoted much of his time to science, and he published a paper on the "Farbenveränderung der Sterne" in 1871. In Nov., 1879, he lost his rights as a Hungarian citizen, the Chamber of Deputies having adopted a Bill declaring that any native of the country who voluntarily resided abroad for an uninterrupted period of ten years should lose his civil status. The Extreme Left violently opposed the measure, accusing the Government of levelling it directly against Kossuth, but it was finally carried by 141 votes to 52. Kossuth was engaged for several years in writing his "Memoirs," the last volume of which appeared in 1882. Reports from Turin, where the aged Hungarian patriot Louis Kossuth lives, state that he is in extremely straitened circumstances. The Budapest Athenæum, the establishment where his writings are published, has offered to send him an advance payment of 3,000*fl.* in anticipation of future work; but Kossuth has declined the proffered assistance, saying that at his age he cannot feel sure of being able to complete the writing which he has begun, and that it would, therefore, not be right for him to accept the money. Fresh endeavours will, however, now be made to induce him to accept pecuniary help in his need. His residing abroad was the subject of discussion in the Hungarian parliament in 1890.

KOUROPATKIN, Major-General, of the Russian Army (sometimes spelled Koropatkin and Kuropatkin), said to have been born in 1843, and was first famous as the chief of the staff to General Skobelev. He was left for dead at the Shipka Pass. After the Russo-Turkish war, he wrote a book upon its operations. Although Skobelev's right-hand man, he held the rank of Captain only, during the Russo-Turkish war; after which, however, he obtained the command of the light troops in Turkestan. He was again with Skobelev at the attack on Geok Tepe, where he had the rank of Colonel.

KREHL, Ludolf, is Professor of Arabic at Leipzig, and Chief Librarian of the University. For the past 45 years he has been Editor of the Zeitschrift, the organ of the German Oriental Society, and has contributed many important papers to its pages. His principal work is the edition of Bukhārī's "Corpus of Mohammedan Traditions." Other works by Professor Krehl are "The Religion of the Preislamic Arabs," 1863; "Essays on the Koranic Doctrine of Predestination and Faith," 1877; "The Life of Mohammed," 1884, &c.

KREMER, Alfred von, Professor of Arabic at the Polytechnic in Vienna, was born in 1828, and studied at the University of that city. His knowledge of Arabic and Coptic procured him the appointment of First Dragoman to the Austrian Consulate in Egypt in 1852; and, in 1859, he became Consul at Cairo; and subsequently at Galatz, in 1862; and at Beyrut in 1870. In 1872 he was made a Councillor of the Empire. His published works are "Contributions to the Geography of Northern Syria," 1852; "Mid-Syria and Damascus," 1853; "Topography of Damascus," 1855; "Egypt, the Country and People," 1863; "Leading Ideas of Islam," 1868; and "The History of Eastern Civilization under the Khalifs," 1877.

KROPOTKIN, Prince Petr Alexeievitch, a Russian revolutionist, was born at Moscow, Dec. 9, 1842. At the age of fifteen he entered the Corps of Pages at St. Petersburg, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1862. Attracted by the desire of travelling, he joined a regiment of Cossacks of the Amur, and spent five years in Eastern Siberia, first as Aide-de-Camp to the Military Governor of Transbaikalia, and, after 1863, as Attaché for Cossacks' Affairs to the Governor-General of Eastern Siberia. During these five years he thrice visited the Amur and Usuri, and made extensive journeys in Siberia and Manchuria. In 1863 he crossed North Manchuria from Transbaikalia to the Amur, via Merghen; in the same year he took part in the first steamer-expedition up the Sungari to Ghirin. Accounts of these journeys, and several others, are published in the Memoirs of the Russian and the Siberian Geographical Society, from the former of which he received the Gold Medal. Promoted Captain in 1865, he returned in 1867 to St. Petersburg, and studied four years at the Mathematical Faculty of that University, and acted as Secretary to the Physical Geography Section of the Geographical Society. He then published the reports of his chief expeditions to the Olekma and Vitim Highlands, as well as a general sketch of the Orography of Eastern Siberia. In 1871 he was sent by this society to explore the glacial deposits in Finland and Sweden, the account of which is embodied in a larger work on the Glacial Period, the first volume of which was published by his brother Alexander, in the Memoirs of the Geographical Society, while he was confined in prison. In 1872 he paid a visit to Switzerland and Belgium, and became acquainted with the International Working Men's Association, and joined the most advanced anarchist section of it. He returned to Russia and became a member of the widely-spread organization of the Tchaykovtzy; was arrested in March, 1874, and confined to the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, where he continued to write on the Glacial Period. He was transferred to the prison of the Military Hospital, and escaped on July 12, 1876, and went to England. The next year he rejoined, in Switzerland, the Jura Federation of the International Working Men's Association, and in Feb., 1879, founded at Geneva the anarchist paper La Révolte, now published in Paris, under the name of La Révolte. Expelled from Switzerland in Sept., 1881, he stayed first for a few months at Thonon while his wife passed her examination of

B.Sc., and then went to reside in England, where he roused an agitation against the Russian Government both in the press (Newcastle Chronicle, Fortnightly Review, and Nineteenth Century), and by a series of lectures at Newcastle and in Scotland. In Oct., 1882, he went again to stay at Thonon, where he was arrested, Dec. 20, 1882. On Jan. 19, 1883, he was condemned by the Police Correctionnelle Court at Lyons to five years' imprisonment for participation in the International Working Men's Association. He was liberated on Jan. 15, 1886, by decree of the President of the French Republic. His anarchist papers contributed to La Révolte have been collected by his friend Elisé Reclus, and were published in Oct., 1885, in a separate volume, under the title "Paroles d'un Révolté," parts of which have had a wide circulation in the shape of pamphlets, in English, German, &c. His review-articles on prisons were published in a book form, in 1887, under the title "In Russian and French Prisons."

KRÜGER, S. J. Paul, President of the Transvaal Republic, was born at Rastenburg in 1825. In 1872 he became a member of the Executive Council of the South African Republic under President Burgers; and in 1882 he became President for the first time. In 1883 he was re-elected President for five years; and in 1888 was, for the third time, elected President.

KUENEN, Abraham, D.D., LL.D., was born at Haarlem, Sept. 16, 1828; and was educated in the local Gymnasium. In 1846 he was entered as a student of theology in the University of Leyden, and in 1851 took with great distinction the doctor's degree in that faculty. In 1853 he qualified as Professor Extraordinary of the science of theology by a learned dissertation on the importance of an exact knowledge of Hebrew antiquity for its study. In the same year the Academical Senate honoured him with the doctorate in literature, and in Oct., 1855, he became Ordinary Professor of Theology. Dr. Kuenen published, in the years 1851-54, Abu Said's Arabic version of Genesis, Exodus, and Leviticus, from the Samaritan Pentateuch. Among the most noteworthy of his numerous later works are his three volumes, which appeared in the years 1861-5, under the title "Historico-Critical Investigation into the Origin and Collection of the Old Testament Books." A French translation of the first volume, by A. Pierson, appeared at Paris in 1866, and a second was published in 1879, with a preface by M. Renan. In this country Bishop Colenso published in 1865 a translation of the earliest chapters of the same work under the title "The Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua Critically Examined by Prof. A. K., with notes by J. W. C." Among later works by Professor Kuenen which have appeared in English may be mentioned "The Religion of Israel to the Fall of the Jewish State," 1874-5; and "The Prophets and Prophecy in Israel," 1877. The translator of the latter work was the Rev. Adam Milroy, M.A., and it was furnished with an introduction by Dr. J. Muir. Many papers by Dr. Kuenen will be found in the Transactions of the Amsterdam Royal Academy of Sciences, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1865, in the "Theologisch Tydschrift," 1867-90, of which he is one of the editors, and in other periodicals. The Hibbert Lectures for the year 1882 were delivered at Oxford and in London by Dr. Kuenen, the subject being "National Religions and Universal Religions." He is publishing now a new edition, entirely rewritten, of his "Historico-Critical Investigation into the Origin and Collection of the Old Testament Books," vol. I., 1885-7; vol. II., 1889; English translation of Chap. I. on the Hexateuch by Rev. Th. H. Wickstead, M.A., 1886; German translation of Vol. I. by Prof. Th. Weber, 1887-90. He presided over the sixth Congress of Orientalists held at Leyden in Sept., 1883.

KYLLACHY, Lord, William Mackintosh, M.A., LL.D., D.L., Edinburgh and Inverness-shire, was born in Inverness on April 9, 1840, and is the eldest son of the late William Mackintosh, of Inshes House, Inverness-shire. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, and the University of Edinburgh, and passed as Advocate in 1866; was Procurator of the Church of Scotland, 1880; Sheriff of Ross, Cromarty, and Sutherland, 1881; Dean of Faculty, 1886; and was appointed Judge of the Court of Session, 1889.

LABOUCHERE, Henry, M.P., eldest son of the late John Labouchere, of Broome Park, Surrey, and nephew of the late Lord Taunton, was born in 1831, and educated at Eton. He entered the diplomatic service in 1854, and was successively Attaché at Washington, Munich, Stockholm, Frankfort, St. Petersburg, and Dresden; he was appointed Third Secretary in 1862, Second Secretary at Constantinople in 1863, and retired in 1864. In 1865 he entered Parliament as Liberal member for Windsor; but in April, 1866, he was unseated on petition, and from 1867 to 1868 sat for Middlesex. In February, 1874, he unsuccessfully contested Nottingham, but in 1880 was returned at the head of the poll for Northampton, and has since, with Mr. Bradlaugh, sat for that borough. Mr. Labouchere was returned at the last general election as a strong Gladstone Liberal, and is one of his most energetic supporters. He is proprietor and editor of Truth, and part proprietor of the Daily News.

LAING, Samuel, son of Mr. Samuel Laing, of Rapdale, county Orkney, and nephew of Mr. Malcolm Laing, author of a "History of Scotland," was born at Edinburgh in 1810, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. degree in 1832, being second wrangler and second Smith's prizeman. He was elected a Fellow of St. John's, resided in the university as a mathematical tutor, and entered at Lincoln's Inn, where he was called to the Bar in 1840, and soon after became private secretary to the late Mr. Labouchere, then President of the Board of Trade. Upon the formation of the Railway Department he was appointed secretary, and thenceforth distinguished himself in Railway legislation under successive presidencies of the Board of Trade. In 1844 he proved the results of his experience in "A Report on British and Foreign Railways," gave much valuable evidence before a committee of the Commons upon Railways, and to his suggestions the humbler classes are mainly indebted for the convenience of parliamentary trains at a minimum rate of payment of one penny per mile. In 1845 Mr. Laing was nominated a member of the Railway Commission, presided over by Lord Dalhousie, and drew up the chief reports on the railway schemes of that period. Had his recommendations been followed, much of the commercial crisis of 1845 would, as has since been proved, have been averted. The reports of the commission having been rejected by Parliament, the commission was dissolved, and Mr. Laing, who resigned his post at the Board of Trade, returned to practice at the Bar. In 1848 he accepted the post of Chairman and Managing Director of the Brighton Railway Company, and under his administration the passenger traffic of the line was in five years nearly doubled. In 1852 he became Chairman of the Crystal Palace Company, from which he retired in 1855, as well as from the chairmanship of the Brighton Railway Company. In July, 1852, Mr. Laing was returned in the Liberal interest for the Wick district, which he represented till 1857, and having been re-elected in April, 1859, resigned in Oct. 1860, on proceeding to India as Finance Minister, and was once more elected in July, 1865. He was an unsuccessful candidate for Wick in Nov. 1868, but in Jan. 1873, he again obtained a seat in the House of Commons as member for Orkney and Shetland. Mr. Laing, who was Financial Secretary to the Treasury from June, 1859, till Oct. 1860, again accepted the chairmanship of the Brighton Railway in 1867; and still holds the appointment. Of late years he has written books, and his "Modern Science and Modern Thought," 1886, has been read with interest.

LAKE, The Very Rev. William Charles, D.D., Dean of Durham, son of Capt. Lake, Scotch Fusilier Guards, born in Jan. 1817, was educated at Rugby under Dr. Arnold, whence he was elected, in 1834, to a scholarship at Balliol College, Oxford, and took first-class honours in classics. He obtained the prize for the Latin Essay, became Fellow and Tutor of his College, Proctor and University Preacher and Public Examiner in classics and in modern history. Lord Panmure named him member of a commission to inquire into the state of military education in France, Prussia, Austria, and Sardinia, and conjointly with Col. Yoland, R.E., he submitted, in 1856, a report on the subject to both Houses of Parliament. He was again appointed, in 1858, member of the Royal Commission under the presidency of the late Duke of Newcastle, to report on the state of popular education in England; in 1858 was presented by his college to the living of Huntspill, Somerset; was appointed by the Bishop of London preacher at the Chapel Royal of Whitehall, and was made Prebendary of Wells. In 1868 he was again member of the Royal Commission on Military Education, and on Aug. 9, 1869, was appointed to the Deanery of Durham by Mr. Gladstone. He was member of the Ecclesiastical Courts Commission in 1881; and on June 2 of that year he married Miss Katharine Gladstone, niece of the Premier.

LAMAR, The Hon. Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus, was born in Putnam county, Georgia, Sept. 17, 1825. He graduated at Emory College, 1845, studied law, and was admitted to the Georgia Bar, 1847.

He moved to Mississippi in 1849, was elected a representative in Congress in 1856, and re-elected in 1858. When the State of Mississippi passed the ordinance of secession, in 1861, he resigned his seat, and became a colonel in the Confederate army, but was soon sent (1863) on a mission to Russia. After the close of the Civil War he was made Professor of Political Economy and Social Science in the University of Mississippi, 1866, and in the following year was transferred to the Professorship of Law. His civil disabilities having been removed, he was, in 1872, elected to Congress from Mississippi, and was re-elected in 1874. In 1876 he was elected U.S. Senator from Mississippi, and re-elected in 1882. He resigned his seat in 1885 to accept the position of Secretary of the Interior in President Cleveland's Cabinet. In 1888 he relinquished that position to accept a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States.

LAMB, Horace, M.A., F.R.S., was born on Nov. 27, 1849, at Stockport, and educated at Stockport Grammar School, Owens College, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was second wrangler and second Smith's prizeman in 1872; Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity in 1872; Professor of Mathematics in the University of Adelaide (South Australia) in 1875; and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884; and Professor of Mathematics in Owens College, Victoria University, Manchester, 1885. LAMBER, Juliette. See ADAM, MME. EDMOND.

LAMBERT, The Right Hon. Sir John, K.C.B., P.C., son of the late Mr. Daniel Lambert, of Milford Hall, Salisbury, and his second wife, Mary Muriel, daughter of Mr. C. Jinks, of Oundle, was born at Bridzor, Tisbury, Wilts, in 1815. He was educated at St. Gregory's College, Downside, near Bath, and afterwards, having entered the profession of the law, practised as a solicitor at Salisbury. In consequence of his exertions during the visitation of cholera and of his successful efforts to improve the sanitary condition of that city, he was elected Mayor in 1854. In 1857 he accepted from Mr. Bouverie an Inspectorship of Poor Laws, and in 1863, at the request of Mr. Villiers, then President of the Poor Law Board, he came to London to assist in devising measures to meet the distress in the cotton manufacturing districts. The Public Works Manufacturing Districts Act, which effectually allayed the alarming discontent among the operatives, was framed by him, and he afterwards superintended the administration of the measure. In 1865 and 1866 he prepared for the Cabinet of Earl Russell the voluminous statistics for the Reform Bill; and in 1867 he drew up the scheme for the Metropolitan Poor Act, introduced by Mr. Gathorne Hardy, now Lord Cranbrook, and on its passing was appointed by him Receiver of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund. In the same year he was consulted by Mr. Disraeli on various provisions of the Representation of the People Act, and assisted him throughout the progress of the Bill. He was attached to the Boundary Commission appointed under the Act, and subsequently selected as a member of the Royal Sanitary Commission. In 1869 he prepared the scheme of the Metropolis Valuation Act, which provided a uniform basis of assessment for both imperial and local taxation in the Metropolis, and established a uniform system of rating throughout the whole Metropolitan area. In 1869 and 1870 he went to Ireland at the request of Mr. Gladstone to obtain information on special points connected with the Irish Church and Land Bills; and when the Local Government Board was formed in 1871 he was appointed its permanent secretary, having previously, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, received the distinction of C.B. He was created a K.C.B. in 1879. He retired from his secretaryship in 1882, and in the following year he prepared for Mr. Gladstone proposals for the extension of the Franchise to the householders in counties, which formed the basis of the Franchise Act of 1884. In conjunction with Sir Charles Dilke he afterwards framed the elaborate scheme for the Redistribution of Seats Act, and was selected by the Government as Chairman for the three Boundary Commissions for England, Scotland, and Ireland. In consideration of his services in connection with these measures, "added to a list of services, remarkable for their number and value," he was by command of Her Majesty sworn in as a member of the Privy Council in May, 1885. Sir J. Lambert has published several lectures on various subjects, and contributed many articles to periodical literature. He is also the author of numerous works on the church music of the middle ages, in recognition of which he was elected a member of the Musical Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome, and presented with a gold medal by Pius IX. in 1851. Sir John Lambert married in 1838 Ellen Read, the youngest daughter of the late Mr. Shorto, of Salisbury.

LANCASTER, Albert Benoit Marie, was born at Mons, Belgium, on May 24, 1849, and is Meteorological Inspector and Librarian of the Royal Observatory, Brussels; Director of the journal Ciel et Terre; and Associate of the Liverpool Astronomical Society. M. Lancaster has written many articles on meteorology, earthquakes, and astronomy, in various Belgian scientific publications, and many separate works, e.g.—"Instructions pour les Stations météorologiques belges" (two editions); "Discussion des Orages en Belgique"; "La Pluie en Belgique"; "Quatre Mois au Texas, de la Nouvelle Orléans à la Havane," also, jointly with the late M. Houzeau, the "Traité élémentaire de Météorologie" (2 editions); "Catalogue des ouvrages d'Astronomie et de Météorologie qui se trouvent dans les principales bibliothèques de la Belgique," and the colossal "Bibliographie générale de l'Astronomie," now happily nearly completed.

LANE-POOLE, Stanley, born in London, Dec. 18, 1854, eldest son of E. S. Poole, of the Science and Art Department, was educated at home under the direction of his great-uncle, E. W. Lane, the Orientalist, and proceeded to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, whence he took his B.A. degree in 1878. As early as 1870 his studies had been turned towards numismatics by his uncle, the Keeper of Coins in the British Museum, and in 1872 he published his first treatise on Arabic Coins in the Chronicle of the Numismatic Society. In 1874 he was appointed by the Trustees of the British Museum to write the official "Catalogue of the Oriental Coins" in the national collection; the work appeared in 8 volumes, 1875-83, and was couronné by the French Institute. Two volumes of a subsequent "Catalogue of Indian Coins" were published in 1885, and two volumes of "Additions to the Oriental Collection" in 1890. On the death of Mr. Lane, in 1876, the duty of completing his great Arabic Lexicon devolved on his grand-nephew, who brought out the sixth and seventh and most of the eighth volume between 1877 and 1889, and published a "Life of E. W. Lane" in the former year. In 1883 he was sent to Egypt by the Science and Art Department, for which he wrote a handbook of the "Art of the Saracens." With a view to collecting materials for a Corpus of Mohammedan numismatics, he visited Russia in 1886, and examined the coin cabinets of Stockholm, St. Petersburg, and Constantinople. In 1888 he published in 2 vols. the "Life of Stratford Canning, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe," from the ambassador's private and official papers; of which a popular edition appeared in 1890; and in the latter year he edited the despatches of Sir G. F. Bowen, the colonial governor, and contributed to the English Historical Review a memoir of Sir Richard Church, the Generalissimo of the Greeks in the War of Independence. His chief works, besides those already mentioned, are "Essays in Oriental Numismatics" (2 series), 1872-77; "Coins of the Urtuki Turkomans" (Numismata Orientalia, part 2, 1875); new edition of Lane's "Selections from the Koran," 1879; "Egypt," 1881; "Speeches and Table-talk of the Prophet Mohammed" (Golden Treasury Series); and "Le Koran, sa Poésie et ses Lois" (Bibliothèque Elzévirienne), 1882; "Arabian Society in the Middle Ages," "Studies in a Mosque," "Picturesque Egypt" (edited by Sir C. Wilson), and "Social Life in Egypt," 1883; "Prose Writings of Jonathan Swift," 1884; "Swift's Letters and Journals," "Life of Gen. F. R. Chesney," and "Coins and Medals: their place in History and Art," 1885; "The Art of the Saracens," and three volumes of the "Story of the Nations," viz., "The Moors in Spain," 1886; "Turkey," 1888; and "The Barbary Corsairs," 1890. He is also a contributor to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Chambers' Encyclopædia," the "Dictionary of National Biography," and to the Edinburgh Review and other periodicals, and is a member of the Russian Archæological and other learned societies, and an honorary member of the Egyptian Commission for the preservation of the monuments of Arab art.

Mr. Lang writes for the Daily News, and is a frequent contributor to periodical literature. He is one of the most versatile, most voluminous, and most pleasing writers of the day.

LANGE, Fräulein Helene, was born at Oldenburg in 1848. She stands in the foremost ranks of those who represent the new ideas of women's education in Germany. After the death of her father, when she was sixteen, a wish began to make itself felt in her to lead a useful life, to test her strength and capabilities, to create for herself a world with which she could feel in sympathy, and this at last induced her to take up the life of a teacher, a choice which proved a happy one in every way. In 1870 she settled permanently at Berlin, and, after duly qualifying for the profession, she was called to the head of a training college for teachers, which, under her distinguished leadership, very soon established her reputation. Her position brought her into contact with colleagues of all shades of opinions, and she felt that something must be done to stop the mischief of a system which leaves girls' education in the hands of men. She consulted, and earnestly deliberated with, women whom she knew to be thoroughly of one mind with herself, and in 1887 a petition was laid before the Prussian House of Deputies, signed by Fräulein Lange and others, praying for a reform of the obnoxious system, and for institutions where women might qualify for appointments as Oberlehrerinnen. The petition was accompanied by a pamphlet, written by Fräulein Lange, in which she thoroughly exposed the hollowness and mischievous tendency of girls' education as then carried on, and at the same time warmly vindicated the right of women to educate their own sex. The plain truth had never been told so plainly before, and it was enough to set public opinion on fire even outside the profession. Two potent adversaries had to be overcome, viz., "the powers that be," and that subtle and tenacious thing called prejudice; and neither proved accessible to the clear, cogent reasoning with which

Frl. Lange had sought to convince. Although the petition was unsuccessful, the Government, in curious contrast to their previous uncompromising attitude, soon after sanctioned the opening of classes for history, German, and literature for women students at the Victoria Lyceum, which was to be equivalent to university study, and by which the capacities of women for serious study were to be tested. A further step towards a realisation of Frl. Lange's plans was the opening of an institution where women might receive instruction in those branches of science which are the indispensable basis for any profession. These classes, called Real-kurse (comprising mathematics, chemistry, natural sciences, national economy, and languages), were opened in Oct. 1889, in the presence of the Empress Frederick, on which occasion Frl. Lange delivered a brilliant address on the necessity of training women's faculties, which is greater in our day than it has ever been before. The advancement of women's education and culture is Frl. Lange's one aim and object, to which she makes every other interest subservient. She is identified with every movement tending to strengthen the capacities of women and to widen their spheres of influence and usefulness. The small band of those who are working for a near solution of the Woman's Question is increasing rapidly, and their eyes are fixed with hope and confidence on Frl. Lange, who has shewn ability and courage to take the initiative where it is necessary.

LANGEVIN, The Hon. Sir Hector Louis, K.C.M.G., C.B., LL.D., born in Quebec, Aug. 25, 1826, was educated at the Seminary in his native city, studied law at Montreal, and was called to the Bar in 1850. He was created Q.C. March 30, 1864. He was for some time chief editor of the Mélanges Religieux, Montreal; was afterwards one of the editors of Le Courrier du Canada, Quebec, and wrote "Droit Administratif des Paroisses, or Parochial Laws and Customs of Lower Canada," 1862. Mr. Langevin, elected Mayor of Quebec in Dec., 1857, was re-elected in 1858 and 1859, has filled the chair of the Institut Canadien, and has been President of the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Quebec. He was elected, Jan. 2, 1858, member of the Provincial Parliament, by the county of Dorchester, and has always supported the Conservative party. In March, 1864, Mr. Langevin became Solicitor-General for Lower Canada, with a seat in the Cabinet in Sir E. P. Tache's administration, and exchanged the former post for the Postmaster-Generalship in Nov., 1866. He was one of the Canadian delegates to the conference at Prince Edward Island, on the question of the Confederation of the British North American Provinces in the summer of 1866, and afterwards to the Quebec Conference, and repaired to London with other commissioners towards the end of that year, in order to complete the arrangements. On the re-organisation of the Dominion Cabinet in 1867, Mr. Langevin was transferred to the position of Secretary of State of Canada, Superintendent - General of Indian Affairs, and Registrar-General; and in Nov., 1869, exchanged that office for that of Minister of Public Works, which he retained until the fall of the Macdonald Government in 1873. At the general elections of 1878 he was returned for Three Rivers (which he still represents), and was sworn in as Postmaster-General in the Liberal - Conservative Government of that year. This portfolio he resigned, in May, 1879, for that of the Ministry of Public Works. He was made a C.B. after the arrangements for the organisation of the Dominion Government, and, in 1881, had the order of K.C.M.G. conferred upon him. He is also a Knight Commander of the Roman Order of St. Gregory the Great, and LL.D. of Laval University.

He was a member of the Birmingham Free Libraries Committee, 1864-74; teacher of English Literature in the Birmingham and Midland Institute, 1868-74; a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society from its foundation; was elected member of the Birmingham School Board in 1874, and re-elected in 1876, 1879, 1882, 1885, and 1888. 1874-7; "Staffordshire and Warwickshire, Past and Present," 2 vols., 1874; "Birmingham: a Handbook," 1879; "The Praise of Books," 1880; "Child-Life as learned from Children," 1884; "On Sea and Shore," 1887; "Heroes and Martyrs, and other Poems," 1890. He has contributed to the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" read a number of papers at the meetings of the Birmingham Archæological Society, published in its Transactions; and is the author of several pamphlets on current topics. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Greenville and Tusculum College in 1869.

LANGLEY, John Newport, M.A., F.R.S., was born at Newbury, on Nov. 10, 1852. He is the second son of John Langley, by his wife, Mary Groom, eldest daughter of Richard Groom, formerly Assistant-Secretary in the Tax Department, Somerset House. Mr. Langley's earlier education was carried on partly at home and partly at the Exeter Grammar School. In Oct., 1871, he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge; was elected a Foundation Scholar in May, 1874; and obtained a First Class in the Natural Science Tripos in December of the same year. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College in Oct., 1877, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in June, 1883. In 1881, he was appointed a Lecturer in Natural Sciences in Trinity College, and a Lecturer in Histology in the University. On the lapsing of his fellowship in 1885 he was re-elected. Mr. Langley's observations have been chiefly directed to determining the fundamental changes which take place in glands during secretion and the nature of these changes. His principal papers on this subject are: "On the Salivary Glands" (Proc. Roy. Soc., and Jour. Physiol., 1879; Proc. Roy. Soc., 1886; Jour. Physiol., 1889); "On Gastric Glands" (Trans. Roy. Soc., 1882 and 1885), together with a series of six papers on the Physiology of the Salivary Secretion (Jour. Physiol., 1878, 1885, 1888 to 1890). He has written also in connection with this subject, "On the Destruction of Ferments in the Alimentary Canal" (Jour. Physiol., 1882); with Miss Eves "On the Amyolytic Action of Saliva" (Jour. Physiol., 1883); with Mr. Edkins, "On Pepsinogen and Pepsin" (Jour. Physiol., 1886); with Mr. Fletcher, "On the Secretion of Salts in Saliva" (Trans. Roy. Soc., 1888), Mr. Langley has also made investigation with regard to the physiological action of poisons, and the central nervous system. On the former subject may be mentioned: Pilocarpin (Jour. Anat. and Physiol., 1876); The Antagonism of Poisons (Jour. Physiol., 1880); Pituri and Nicotin (Jour. Physiol., 1890), in conjunction with Mr. Dickinson; on the latter subject, "The Structure of the Dog's Brain" (Jour. Physiol., 1883); "Secondary Degeneration" (Jour. Physiol., 1884), made in conjunction with Mr. Sherrington; and (Jour. Physiol., 1890), made in conjunction with Mr. Grünbaum. He has much interested himself in Hypnotism; and has recently, with the aid of Mr. Dickinson, made observations by a new method upon the connections of nerve-cells in peripheral ganglia (Proc. Roy. Soc., 1889 and 1890; Jour. Physiol., 1890). Mr. Langley is the joint author with Professor Foster of a "Practical Physiology and Histology," now in its sixth edition.

LANGTRY, Lillie, actress, is the daughter of the Rev. W. C. Le Breton, Dean of Jersey, and was born in 1852. In 1874 she was married to Mr. Langtry, a native of Belfast, and about 1881, after having been for some years known in London society, determined to go on the stage. Mrs. Langtry made her first public performance on Dec. 15, 1881, at the Haymarket Theatre, in "She Stoops to Conquer." In January of the following year Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft engaged Mrs. Langtry to play at the Haymarket Theatre, and she appeared in the character of Blanche Haye in Robertson's play of "Ours." She appeared as Rosalind in "As You Like It," at the Imperial Theatre, on Sept. 23, 1882, and subsequently went to America. Mrs. Langtry has twice leased the Prince's Theatre (now the Prince of Wales' Theatre). At the end of the summer season of 1885 she went once more to America.

LANKESTER, Professor Edwin Ray, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., eldest son of Edwin Lankester, M.D., F.R.S., coroner for Middlesex, was born May 15, 1847, at 22, Old Burlington-street, London, and educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was appointed Fellow and Lecturer of Exeter College, Oxford, in 1872, and Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in University College, London, in 1874. He is an honorary LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews (1885), Examiner in the Universities of Cambridge, London, and New Zealand, and one of the Honorary Fellows of Exeter

College, Oxford, his colleagues being the Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Froude, Mr. Burne Jones, Mr. William Morris, and the Regius Professor of Divinity. In 1878 the professorship in London held by Mr. Lankester was selected by Mr. Jodrell for endowment, with the interest of £7,000, and subsequently large laboratories and a museum adapted both to class teaching and to the pursuit of original investigations in the field of natural history were placed at his disposal by the Council of the College. Professor Lankester was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875. He has published more than a hundred scientific memoirs (dating from 1865), mostly on comparative anatomy and palæontology, the chief of which are "A Monograph of the Fossil Fishes of the Old Red Sandstone of Britain, Part I," 1870; "Comparative Longevity," 1871; "Contributions to the Developmental History of the Mollusca" (Philos. Trans. Royal Society), 1875; "Degeneration, a chapter in Darwinism," 1880; "Limulus an Arachnid," 1881; "Rhabdopleura and Amphioxus," 1889; and the English editions of Haeckel's "History of Creation," and of Gegenbaur's "Comparative Anatomy." Besides these he has published numerous shorter memoirs, and has constantly contributed reviews and articles to the pages of the Athenæum, the Academy, and Nature, and is the author of the articles Hydrozoa, Mollusca, Polyzoa, Protozoa, Vertebrata and Zoology in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Since 1869, when he joined his father, the late Dr. Edwin Lankester, in that work, he has been chief editor of the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science. During the years 1870-74, he was one of the sectional secretaries of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and organised the annual museum which has become a feature of the meetings of that body. In 1883 he was President of the Biological Section of the Association when it met at Southport. In the Autumn of 1876 Professor Lankester prosecuted the spirit-medium Slade, and procured his conviction by Mr. Flowers at Bow Street, as "a common rogue and vagabond." He has also taken a prominent part in the defence of scientific experiment on live animals, and in the discussion of University Reform. In April, 1882, the Regius chair of Natural History in the University of Edinburgh was, on the death of Sir Wyville Thomson, offered by the Home Secretary to Professor Lankester, and accepted by him. This had been the most coveted post to which a naturalist could aspire on account both of its pecuniary value and of its educational importance. It was, however, intimated by the Government, at the moment of making the appointment, that the division of the chair and the alteration of the curriculum in such a way as greatly to reduce the professor's income from students' fees, were in contemplation. Finding that he would be unable in these circumstances to develop the museum and laboratories of the University in a satisfactory manner, on account of the general uncertainty as to the contemplated changes, Professor Lankester resigned the Regius Professorship a fortnight after his appointment, and was immediately re-elected to the Jodrell Professorship in London. In November of the same year he was elected by the Royal Society to be a member of the Council of that body, and for a second term of service in Nov. 1888. In 1884 Professor Lankester founded the Marine Biological Association, of which he is President. The Association has erected at Plymouth, on a site granted by the War Office, a large laboratory and aquarium for the study of marine fishes and shell-fish. The Association has obtained support from the Fishmongers' and other City Companies, and from the Government, so that it has been able to spend £12,000 on the laboratory, and has an income of £1,000 a year to maintain it. In 1885 the Council of the Royal Society awarded to Professor Lankester one of the Royal Medals in recognition of his discoveries in the field of Zoology and Palæontology. In 1890 Professor Lankester was appointed to the Linacre Professorship of Human and Comparative Anatomy at Oxford.

LANMAN, Charles, was born in Monroe, Michigan, June 14, 1819. He received an academical education at Plainfield, Connecticut, and became successively a clerk in a mercantile house in New York, a journalist, traveller, private secretary to Daniel Webster, and librarian of the House of Representatives. From 1871 to 1882 he was the American Secretary of the Japanese legation at Washington, and since then has devoted himself to landscape painting, and writing a large number of books, of which the most important was his "Dictionary of Congress," of which a number of editions were issued until it was superseded, in 1876, by "Biographical Annals of the Civil Government of the United States." Several of his books have been republished in Great Britain.

LANSDSELL, The Rev. Henry, D.D., is known as author, editor, traveller, and divine. He was born at Tenterden, Kent, received his early education from his father, and subsequently studied at St. John's College of Divinity, Highbury, whence he was ordained in 1867 to the Curacy of Greenwich. In 1869 he was appointed Metropolitan Association Secretary to the Society for Irish Church Missions, and during the following ten years, preached and spoke on its behalf in 12 Countries, 40 Counties, 300 Churches, &c. In 1873 he planned, and, as Honorary Secretary, was the principal worker in founding, the Church Homiletical Society, which had for its object the improvement in preaching and pastoral work of the younger clergy and candidates for Holy Orders, and which brought within its membership or influence about one fifth of the English Clergy. In connection with the foregoing society he originated, and for twelve years was editor of, the Clergyman's Magazine, of which about 300,000 copies were circulated among the English and American clergy throughout the world. He edited also about the same time a volume of "Homiletical and Pastoral Lectures," and "Three Lectures on Preaching, delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral." Dr. Lansdell is, however, better known as traveller and author than as editor. In 1869 he visited the West of Ireland; 1870, Normandy and Belgium; 1871, Holland and the Rhine; 1873, Berlin, Vienna, and Switzerland; thus far for purposes chiefly of recreation. It then occurred to him to make his holidays a means of philanthropic and religious usefulness, partly by the visitation of hospitals and prisons, in which he had recently become interested, and partly by the distribution therein, and elsewhere, of religious literature. Accordingly he visited, in 1874, prisons in Scandinavia, Finland, Russia, and Poland; in 1876, Norway, Sweden, and both shores of the Gulf of Bothnia; in 1877, during the Russo-Turkish War, Austria-Hungary, Roumania, and Sclavonia, and, in 1878, St. Petersburg, and Archangel. The foregoing were tours, each of a few weeks only, after which he was asked whether he could not do something for Siberia. This led, in 1879, to his traversing the Eastern Hemisphere in a tolerably straight line from Calais to the Pacific, crossing America, and in seven months finishing the circuit of the world. Another journey of five months took him, in 1882, through Russian Central Asia, including Kuldja, Bokhara, and Khiva; and this was followed by a tour of three months, in 1885, through eight of the kingdoms of Europe. Among the results of these journeys may be mentioned in gross the distribution in public institutions, and elsewhere, of about 150,000 publications, in twenty languages and in particular the providing at least one copy of some portion of Holy Scripture for each room of every hospital and prison throughout Siberia, Russian Central Asia, Finland, and, less completely, the Caucasus and certain parts of European Russia. Accounts of these travels have appeared in about 100 articles, reports, papers, &c., in periodical literature, the Times, and other newspapers; also in two vols., published 1882, entitled "Through Siberia" (now as one volume in its fifth edition), and translated into German, Swedish, and Danish; also, in 1885, "Russian Central Asia," in two vols., translated likewise into German, and abridged into one vol., published in 1887, and entitled "Through Central Asia; with an Appendix on the Russo-Afghan Frontier." As a parochial clergyman, in addition to his curacy at Greenwich, Dr. Lansdell served as Assistant Minister of St. Germans, Blackheath, in 1880-2; and in 1885-6 was in sole charge of St. Peter's, Eltham; after leaving which he was asked whether he would "come out and lead the way," by a Pioneer Mission through Mongolia towards Tibet. This led to the last and greatest of his honorary missionary journeys, namely of 950 days, through five of the kingdoms of Europe, four of Africa, and every kingdom of Asia, in the course of which he distributed Scriptures in eleven languages through five new countries, and also came in contact with about four hundred missionaries, residing at one hundred and seventy mission stations, in one hundred and ten localities, and working under fifty societies. He also collected some few thousands of specimens of the fauna of Russian and Chinese Turkistan. Dr. Lansdell was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society in 1876, and in 1880 became a member of the General Committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, before the annual meeting of which, at Swansea, he read a paper. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Archbishop of Canterbury, confirmed by Her Majesty's letters patent. He is, by invitation of the Council, member of the Victoria Institute, member of the Royal Asiatic, and sundry other societies.

LANSDOWNE (Marquis of), The Right Hon. Henry Charles Keith Fitz-Maurice, G.C.M.G., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., Viceroy

and Governor-General of India, eldest son of the fourth Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G., by his second wife, the Hon. Emily Jane, eldest daughter of the Comte de Flahault and the Baroness Keith and Nairne, was born in Jan., 1845. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford (M.A. 1884; Hon. D.C.L. 1888; Hon. LL.D. McGill University, Canada, 1884), and was formerly a Captain in the Wilts Yeomanry Cavalry. He succeeded his father in the Marquisate and other titles in 1866. Lord Lansdowne was a Lord of the Treasury from 1863 to 1872, and Under-Secretary for War from the latter date till 1874. He was appointed Under-Secretary for India when Mr. Gladstone took office again in 1880, but retired two months afterwards (July 8), owing to a disagreement with the Government on the subject of the Compensation for Disturbance (Ireland) Bill. In May, 1883, the Queen approved the appointment of Lord Lansdowne as Governor-General of Canada, in succession to the Marquis of Lorne, who retired in Oct. of that year, on the completion of the period for which he was appointed. Lord Lansdowne was created G.C.M.G. a few months later. At the expiration of his term of office as Governor-General of Canada (the chief events of which were the suppression of Riel's rebellion in the north-west, the execution of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the satisfactory settlement of the long-standing controversy concerning the North American Fisheries), Lord Lansdowne was appointed by Her Majesty Viceroy and Governor-General of India. His excellency took his seat at Calcutta on Dec. 10, 1888. His lordship is a magistrate for Wiltshire, and also for the county of Kerry. He married, in 1869, Lady Maud Evelyn Hamilton, C.I., youngest daughter of the first Duke of Abercorn.

LATHAM, Peter Wallwork, M.A., M.B., F.R.C.P., the eldest son of Mr. John Latham, a physician practising in Wigan, Lancashire, was born Oct. 21, 1832. He was educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge; and took the B.A. degree in 1858 as 19th Wrangler; and in 1859 was placed first, with distinction in five subjects, in the Natural Sciences Tripos. In 1860 he was elected into a Medical Fellowship at Downing College. He studied medicine at Cambridge, Glasgow, and at St. Bartholomew's, London; graduated as M.A. and M.B. in 1861, and as M.D. in 1864. In 1866 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London, where he has held the offices of Councillor 1886-7, and Censor 1887-8-9; and in 1886 delivered the Croonian Lectures; and in 1888 the Harveian Oration. In 1868 he was appointed Deputy for the Downing Professor of Medicine in the University of Cambridge, and succeeded Dr. Fisher in the Professorship in 1874. He has twice been an Examiner for the Natural Sciences Tripos, and on several occasions for Medical Degrees at Cambridge. He is Senior Physician to Addenbrooke's Hospital, and has published several works and papers relating to medicine: "On Nervous or Sick Headache," 1873; "On the Formation of Uric Acid in Animals," 1884; "On some Points in the Pathology of Rheumatism, Gout and Diabetes," Croonian Lectures, 1886; and articles in "Quain's Dictionary of Medicine," &c.

LAURIER, The Hon. Wilfrid, Canadian statesman, was born at St. Lin, Quebec, Nov. 20, 1841. He was educated at L'Assomption College, graduated in law at McGill University in 1864, and was admitted to the Bar in 1865. From 1871 to 1874 he was in the Quebec Assembly. He then entered the Dominion Parliament, and in 1877 was appointed Minister of Inland Revenue in the Mackenzie Government, a position which he held until the resignation of the ministry in 1878. Since that year he has held no office, though he has continued to sit in Parliament. M. Laurier at one time edited Le Defricheur. He is an earnest advocate of temperance, and was a delegate to the prohibitory convention held at Montreal in 1875. On the retirement of Mr. Blake from the Liberal leadership in 1887, M. Laurier, who had already been recognized as the head of the French-Canadian wing of that party, was unanimously chosen to succeed him.

LAVELEYE, Émile Louis Victor de, a Belgian writer, chiefly on topics connected with political economy, is a cousin of the well-known civil engineer, Auguste François Lamoral de Laveleye, who died in 1865. Born at Bruges, April 5, 1822, he studied first in the Athenæum of that city, next in the Collège Stanislas, in Paris, and finally went through the course of law at Ghent. In 1848 he devoted himself exclusively to politics and the study of economical questions, and in 1864 was appointed to the chair of Political Economy in the University of Liège. M. Laveleye is a warm partisan of the Liberals, whose policy he has supported in numberless articles, published in Belgian and French journals.

He is a corresponding member of the Royal Academy of Belgium, and in 1869 he was elected a corresponding member of the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences. In Aug., 1882, the University of Würzburg, upon the occasion of the celebration of its tercentenary, conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor in Political Economy. M. de Laveleye is a constant contributor to the Revue des Deux Mondes, and has published a great number of separate works, of which the chief are: "Mémoire sur la Langue et la Littérature Provençales," 1814; "Histoire des Rois Francs," 1847; "L'Enseignement Obligatoire," 1859; "La Question d'Or," 1860; a translation of the "Nibelungen," 1861, second edition 1866; "Questions Contemporaines," 1863; "Études et Essais," 1869; "La Prusse et l'Autriche depuis Sadowa," 1870; "L'Instruction du Peuple," 1872; "Essai sur les Formes du Gouvernement dans les Sociétés Modernes," 1872; "Le Parti Clérical en Belgique," 1873; "Des Causes actuelles de la Guerre en Europe et de l'Arbitrage Internationale," 1873; "De la Propriété et de ses Formes Primitives," 1874; "Protestantism and Catholicism in their bearing upon the Liberty and Prosperity of Nations," 1875; "L'Afrique Centrale et la Conférence Géographique," 1877; "Lettres d'Italie," 1880; "Éléments d'Economie publique," a text-book of political economy, 1882; "Nouvelles Lettres d'Italie" (2 series), 1884; and "La Péninsule des Balkans," 2 vols., 1886.

LAWES, Sir John Bennet, Bart., F.R.S., LL.D., son of the late Mr. John Bennet Lawes, of Rothamsted, Hertfordshire, by Marianne, daughter of Mr. John Sherman of Drayton, Oxfordshire, and widow of the Rev. D. G. Knox, was born at Rothamsted Dec. 28, 1814, and succeeded to his estate there in 1822. He was educated at Eton and at Brasenose College, Oxford. On leaving the University he spent some time in London, for the purpose of studying in a practical manner the science of chemistry. In Oct., 1834, he started regular experiments in agricultural chemistry on taking possession of his property and home at Rothamsted, and from that date up to the present time he has unceasingly been applying his scientific knowledge to the solution of questions affecting practical agriculture. Among his earliest experiments, the effect of bones as a manure on land occupied his attention for some time. Mr. Lawes afterwards established large works in the neighbourhood of London for the manufacture of superphosphate of lime, by which name the manure is known which has produced quite a revolution in the science of agriculture. In 1843 Mr. Lawes engaged the assistance of Dr. Gilbert, the present director of Rothamsted farm, and undertook with him a systematic series of agricultural investigations in the field, the feeding-shed, and the laboratory. Mr. Lawes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1854, and in 1867 the Royal Medal was awarded to him conjointly with Dr. Gilbert, by the council of the society. He also received a Gold Medal from the Imperial Agricultural Society of Russia. In June, 1881, the Emperor of Germany by Imperial decree awarded the Gold Medal of Merit for agriculture to Mr. Lawes and Dr. Gilbert jointly. The results of the Rothamsted investigations are to be found in the "Journals of the Royal Agricultural Society of England," the "Reports of the British Association for the Advancement of Science," the "Journal of the Chemical Society of London," the "Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society of London," the "Journal of the Society of Arts," the "Journal of the Horticultural Society of London," the Edinburgh Veterinary Review, the "Reports of the Royal Dublin Society," the Philosophical Magazine, the Agricultural Gazette, the Chemical News, and in official reports and scattered pamphlets and newspaper letters. In 1870 he published his views on the valuation of unexhausted manures; and in 1873 wrote an interesting pamphlet on the same subject with reference to the Irish Land Act of 1870. He was created a baronet in May, 1882.

LAWRANCE, The Hon. Sir John Compton, M.P., one of the Justices of the High Court, is the only son of Mr. T. M. Lawrance, late of Dunsby Hall, Lincolnshire, and was born in 1832, was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, was created a Queen's Counsel in 1887, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn in 1879. He has been for some years past the leader of the Midland Circuit. He has held the appointment of Recorder of Derby since 1879; represented South Lincolnshire in the Conservative interest from 1880 until 1885; and, since the latter year, has sat for the Stamford Division of the county, his return on the last election being unopposed. He was made one of the Justices of the High Court in Feb., 1890.

LAWSON, Sir Wilfrid, Bart., M.P., son of the late Sir Wilfrid Lawson, of Aspatria, Cumberland, was born Sept. 4, 1829, and succeeded to the title and estates on his father's death, in 1867. From an early age he has been an enthusiastic advocate of the temperance movement, and is now the leader of the United Kingdom Alliance, and is its spokesman in Parliament. At the general election of 1859 he stood, in conjunction with his uncle, the late Sir James Graham, as a candidate for the representation of Carlisle, and succeeded by a narrow majority over his opponent, Mr. Hodgson. In March, 1864, he first moved for leave to introduce the measure now so well known as the Permissive Bill, the main principle of which is the giving to two-thirds of the inhabitants of any parish or township an absolute veto upon all licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors granted within their districts. It was supported by forty members. In 1865 he was displaced at the general election by his former opponent, Mr. Hodgson; but, at the general election of 1868, on appealing to the enlarged constituency as a supporter of Mr. Gladstone, he was returned at the head of the poll. Sir Wilfrid Lawson succeeded, on June 18, 1880, in carrying his "Local Option" resolution by a majority of 26. In 1885 he stood for the new Cocker mouth division of Cumberland, but was defeated by a Conservative majority of 10. In 1886, as a Gladstonian Liberal, he gained the seat by a large majority. Sir Wilfrid is an advanced Radical, and is in favour of the Disestablishment of the Church, and of the abolition of the House of Lords and of Standing Armies.

LAYARD, The Right Hon. Sir Austen Henry, G.C.B., P.C., son of Henry P. J. Layard, Esq., and grandson of the late Dr. Layard, Dean of Bristol, was born in Paris, March 5, 1817. After studying law for a time, he, in 1839, set out with a friend on a course of travel, visited various points in northern Europe, and proceeded through Albania and Roumelia to Constantinople, where, at one period, he acted as correspondent to a London newspaper, and afterwards travelled through various parts of Asia, and learned the Arabic and Persian languages, and spent nearly two years among the wild tribes of the Bakhtiywsi. In his wanderings he made it a special point to explore those spots believed to have been the sites of ancient cities, and when at Mosul, near the mound of Nimroud, he was impelled with an irresistible desire to examine carefully the spot to which history and tradition point as the "birthplace of the wisdom of the West." On hearing that M. Botta, a Frenchman, had been carrying out excavations at the cost of his Government, and had found a great number of curious marbles, Mr. Layard longed for the opportunity of making similar discoveries. Returning to Constantinople, he laid his views before Sir Stratford Canning, who, in 1845, generously offered to share the cost of excavations at Nimroud, and in the autumn Mr. Layard set off for Mosul, and began his labours on a spot previously undisturbed. Here he ultimately succeeded in exhuming some of the numerous wonderful specimens of Assyrian art which enrich the British Museum. The Government, however, for a time failed to appreciate the value of Mr. Layard's researches. He was appointed Attaché to the Embassy at Constantinople, April 5, 1849, and Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Lord Russell's first administration for a few weeks in 1852. The late Lord Derby, on his accession to power in Feb. of that year, offered to retain him in that office until the return of Lord Stanley to England, and then to give him a diplomatic appointment. This offer Mr. Layard, after taking the advice of Lord John Russell, declined. In the Coalition Cabinet under Lord Aberdeen, he was offered various posts, which, as they were of a nature to remove him from the field of Eastern politics, he declined. In 1853 he was presented with the freedom of the City of London, in consideration of his discoveries amongst the ruins of Nineveh, and went to Constantinople with Lord Stratford de Redcliffe as a friend; but, disagreeing with him on the Russian question, returned in the course of the year to England. In the House of Commons he became the advocate of a more decided course of action on the Eastern question, and delivered several energetic and impressive speeches on that important subject. In 1854 he again proceeded to the East, was a spectator of the important events then taking place in the Crimea, witnessed the battle of the Alma from the maintop of the Agamemnon, and remained in the Crimea till after the battle of Inkermann, making himself acquainted with the condition of the British army engaged in the siege of Sebastopol. He was one of the most urgent among the members of the House of Commons in demanding the committee of inquiry into its state; and he took a leading part in the investigation, to which he contributed his evidence. On the formation of Lord Palmerston's first administration, in 1855, he was again offered a post; but as it was unconnected with the foreign policy of the country, he declined it, became one of the leaders of the Administrative Reform Association, and brought before the House of Commons, in June, 1855, a motion embodying their views, which was rejected by a large majority. He spent some time in India during the rebellion of 1857-8, endeavouring to ascertain its cause. He was returned as one of the members in the Liberal interest for Aylesbury in July, 1852; was defeated at the general election in March, 1857; was an unsuccessful candidate at York in April, 1859, and was returned one of the members for Southwark in Dec., 1860. In 1848-9 he published "Nineveh and its Remains;" and, in 1853, a second part of the work. His "Monuments of Nineveh" appeared in 1849-53, and an abridged edition of "Nineveh and its Remains" in 1851. Mr. Layard, who had been elected Lord Rector of Aberdeen University in 1855 and re-elected in 1856, became Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Lord Palmerston's second administration, in July, 1861, and retired on the fall of Lord Russell's second administration, in July, 1866. He was appointed a trustee of the National Gallery in Feb., 1866. He was Chief Commissioner of Works in Mr. Gladstone's administration from Dec., 1868, at which time he was added to the Privy Council, until Nov., 1869, when he retired from Parliament on being appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Madrid. In April, 1877, he was sent as Ambassador to Constantinople in succession to Sir Henry Elliot. On the re-establishment of ordinary diplomatic relations with the Sublime Porte, Mr. Layard was chosen by Lord Beaconsfield to be our Ambassador. He arrived at Constantinople April 24, 1877. He negotiated the treaty for the surrender of Cyprus to England. The Order of the Grand Cross of the Bath was conferred on him in June, 1878, just before the assembling of the Congress of the Great Powers at Berlin. In April, 1880, when Mr. Gladstone returned to power, Sir H. Layard received leave of absence from his post at Constantinople, and his place was soon afterwards taken by Mr. Goschen, the latter going out as special Ambassador. Sir H. Layard was elected a foreign member of the "Institut de France" in 1890, and honorary foreign secretary to the Royal Academy. He published his "Early Adventures," and an edition of Kugler's "History of Italian Painting," in 1887.

LEADER, Benjamin Williams, A.R.A., son of the late Mr. E. Leader Williams,

C.E., was born at Worcester, March 12, 1831. He received his earliest instruction in art at the School of Design in his native city. In 1854 he was admitted a student in the Royal Academy, and in the same year exhibited his first picture, "Cottage Children Blowing Bubbles," which was bought for £50 by an American gentleman. Two years later Mr. Leader visited Scotland, having till then seen no hills higher than the Malverns. Since then he has become a popular delineator of mountain scenery, Wales and Switzerland being his favourite sketching-grounds. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, Jan. 16, 1883, and has exhibited pictures in the Royal Academy since 1856. His most important pictures since then are "A Moated Grange," 1863; "The Streams through the Birch Wood," 1871; "Mountain Solitude," 1873; "Wild Waters," 1875; "Barges passing a Lock on the Thames," "An English Hayfield," and "A November Evening after Rain," 1876; "The Valley of Clear Springs," and "Lucerne," 1877; "View of the Wetterhorn," 1878; "The Last Gleam," 1879; "A Gleam in the Storm," 1880; "February fill Dyke," 1881; "In the Evening there shall be Light," 1882; "Parting Day," "Green Pastures and Still Waters," and "An Autumn Evening," 1883. In 1886 he exhibited three pictures, one of them, "With Verdure Clad," being the largest he has yet painted. "An April Day," 1887; "Sands of Aberdovey," and "A Summer's Day," 1888; "Sabrina's Stream," "Cambria's Coast," and "The Dawn of an Autumn Day," 1889; "The Sandy Margin of the Sea," and "The Silent Evening Hour," 1890. Several of his pictures have been very successfully etched by Chauvel and Brunet-Debaines. He received the Gold Medal at the Paris Exhibition, 1889, and was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

In 1873 he was appointed suk-

Librarian at the Luxembourg, and in the same year he offered himself as a candidate at the Academy for the Chair of the Abbé Gratey. In 1877 he again presented himself in opposition to MM. After some studies at Vienna he proceeded to Rome, where he joined the "Academia Ecclesiastica," founded by Pius IX., to impart a special training to young ecclesiastics distinguished by their acquirements. His Holiness named Ledochowski Domestic Prelate and Protonotary Apostolic, and also sent him on a diplomatic mission to Madrid and as Auditor of the Nunciature to Lisbon, Rio de Janeiro, and Santiago de Chili. He was nominated Archbishop of Thebes, in partibus infidelium, on his appointment, Sept. 30, 1861, to the Nunciature of Brussels, where he remained four years. In Jan., 1866, he was translated to the archbishopric of Gnesen and Posen, and as the occupant of that See he possesses the title of Primate of Poland. LEGGE (Professor), James, LL.D., D.D., was born at Huntly, Aberdeenshire, in 1815, and educated at Huntly, and the grammar schools of Aberdeen and Old Aberdeen. He entered King's College and University in 1831; graduated M.A. in 1835; studied subsequently at Highbury Theological College, London, and received from the University of Aberdeen the degree of LL.D. in 1870; and the same degree again at the Tercentenary of the University of Edinburgh in 1884. He was appointed a missionary to the Chinese in connection with the London Missionary Society, in 1839, and arrived at Malacca in that capacity in December of the same year. In 1840 he took charge of the Anglo-Chinese College, founded there by the Rev. Dr. R. Morrison in 1825. In 1842 he received the degree of D.D. from the University of New York. In 1843 he removed to Hong Kong, where he continued till 1873 in the discharge of missionary duties. In 1875 several gentlemen connected with the China trade formed themselves into a committee to promote the establishment of a Chair of the Chinese Language and Literature at Oxford, to be occupied in the first place by Dr. Legge. The University liberally responded to the proposal, and the Chair was constituted in March, 1876. Corpus Christi College was forward in aiding the foundation, and Dr. Legge is now a Fellow and M.A. of it. In certain philological discussions which arose in China in 1847 about the proper rendering in Chinese of the words "God" and "Spirit," Dr. Legge took a prominent part, his principal publication being a volume, in 1852, under the title of "The Notions of the Chinese concerning God and Spirits." His chief claim to literary distinction, however, rests on his edition of the Chinese Classics with the Chinese Text, a translation in English, with notes critical and exegetical, and copious prolegomena. He conceived the idea of this work in 1841. His plan was to embrace what are called "the four Shu," and "the five King." The Shu were published in two volumes in 1861. Three of the King have since been published in two volumes each, in 1865, 1871, and 1872, and with these volumes there were incorporated translations of various other important ancient Chinese works. Smaller editions of the Shu have been published without the Chinese part, and also a version of the second King, or Book of Ancient Chinese Poetry, rendered by the author in English verse, in 1875. For these works the Julien prize, on occasion of its first award, was given to Dr. Legge by the Académie des Belles Lettres et Inscriptions of the Institute of France in 1875. He attended the Congress of Orientalists held at Florence in 1878; and is one of the workers on the series of "The Sacred Books of the East," edited by Professor F. Max Müller; and a translation of the fourth King was published in it in 1882. The remaining King has also been translated, and forms the 27th and 28th volumes of the series. Four lectures on the Religions of China, Confucianism, and Taoism, described and compared with Christianity, were published in 1880, after being delivered in the English Presbyterian College, London.

LEGOUVÉ, Ernest Wilfrid, a French dramatist, the son of Gabriel Legouvé, author of "Mérite des Femmes," was born in Paris, Feb. 14, 1807. At an early age he wrote novels, plays, and poems, and his lectures on L'Histoire Morale des Femmes were published in 1848. In 1849, in conjunction with Scribe, he produced "Adrienne Lecouvreur," which gained great popularity through the personation of the heroine by Rachel. She, however, paid a fine of 5,000 francs rather than perform in his "Médée," a play which in Montanelli's Italian version was in 1856 very successful with Ristori. In 1856 he succeeded Ancelot as a member of the Academy. Among his works are "Beatrice," 1861; "La Croix d'Honneur et les Comédiens," 1863; "Miss Suzanne," 1867; "Messieurs les Enfants," 1868; "Bataille de Dames," 1873; "Études et Souvenirs de Théâtre," 1880; "Le Mérite des Femmes," 1882; "La Lecture en Action," 1883; "Une Éducation de Jeune Fille," 1884.

LEGROS, Alphonse, a French artist and etcher, born of poor parents at Dijon in 1837. While following his vocation as house painter, he spent his spare time in a Parisian School of Art studying drawing and etching; and in 1857 he sent to the Salon a portrait of his father which attracted some notice. In 1859 he sent an "Angelus;" in 1861, an "Ex-Voto;" in 1863, "A Mass for the Dead." After this he came to England; and, in 1876, was appointed Professor in the Slade School, in University College. Among his other works worthy of notice may be mentioned "Death and the Woodman," a very beautiful etching, exhibiting much feeling in its conception, and great delicacy in its execution. In 1877 was published "A Catalogue Raisonné of Legros' work in etching," containing 165 pieces.

LEHMANN, Rudolf, artist, was born Aug. 19, 1819, at Ottensen, near Hamburg, and educated at Hamburg. His art education he received in Paris, Munich, and Rome. He obtained three Gold Medals at three Paris Exhibitions, and was created a Knight of the Order of the Falcon by the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar. His portrait, painted by himself at the request of the Director of Public Galleries in Florence, is placed in the Galleria degli Uffizi of that city, in the room set apart for portraits of distinguished artists painted by themselves. M. Lehmann's chief pictures are—"Sixtus V. blessing the Pontine Marshes," bought by the French Government for the Museum at Lille; a "Madonna," and a "St. Sebastian," ordered by the French Government for two churches in France; "Grazielle," from Lamartine's "Confidences"; "Early Dawn in the Pontine Marshes"; numerous pictures of modern life and costume in Italy; numerous portraits of distinguished persons in England, amongst whom are Lord Houghton, Mr. Browning, Mr. James Payn, Sir Wm. Ferguson, the Duke and Duchess of Leinster, &c.; and a collection of pencil sketches, portraits of distinguished contemporaries, with their autographs, 100 in number.

LEICESTER, Bishop of. See THICKNESSE, THE RIGHT REV. FRANCIS HENRY.

LEIDY (Professor), Joseph, M.D., LL.D., was born at Philadelphia, Sept. 9, 1823, graduated M.D. in the University of Pennsylvania in 1844, and devoted himself to scientific pursuits. From 1846 to 1852 he gave private courses of lectures on anatomy and physiology. In 1846 he was made Chairman of the Curators of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia; in 1853 Professor of Anatomy in the University of Pennsylvania; and in 1871 Professor of Natural History in Swarthmore College, all which positions he still holds. He is also President of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. In 1884 the University of Pennsylvania established a department of biology, of which he was made the Director. During the civil war he served as a contract surgeon in Satterlee Hospital, Philadelphia. He has furnished numerous contributions to scientific periodicals. Among his more important works are—"The Extinct Mammalian Fauna of Dakota and Nebraska," with 30 plates, 1870; "Contributions to the Extinct Vertebrate Fauna of the Western Territories," with 37 plates, 1873; "Fresh-water Rhizopods of North America," with 48 plates, 1879; and "An Elementary Treatise on Human Anatomy," 1889.

LEIGHTON, Sir Frederick, Bart., P.R.A., LL.D., D.C.L., was born at Scarborough, Dec. 3, 1830, and from childhood evinced a strong passion for painting. This his parents encouraged, and gave him every opportunity for gratifying it. They opposed, however, for some years, his desire to study art with a view of making it a profession. His first systematic instructions in drawing were received in Rome in the winter of 1842-43 from a painter named Filippo Meli. In 1843-44 he entered, as a student, the Royal Academy of Berlin. Then followed a comparative withdrawal from art for a year, during which the embryo painter was receiving his general education at a school at Frankfort-on-Maine. The winter of 1845-46 was spent in Florence; and here it was that the father at last yielded to the son's desire to embrace painting as a profession. Some of the young student's drawings were submitted to the celebrated American sculptor, Hiram Powers, and the father promised that his decision should depend on the results of his interview with the sculptor. The estimate formed by Powers of the drawings being highly favourable, the youthful Leighton was permitted from that day forward to devote the whole of his time to painting. During part of the time, from 1846 to 1848, he studied in the Academy of Frankfort-on-Maine. The winter of 1848-49 he passed in Brussels, painting his first finished picture, which represented the story of Cimabue finding Giotto drawing in the fields. The succeeding year or so he spent in Paris, copying in the Louvre, and attending the life school. Thence he returned to Frankfort, where he became, and continued till the early part of 1853, a pupil of E. Steinle of Vienna (one of the followers of Overbeck), Professor of Historical Painting at the academy of that city. During this period several pictures were painted by Mr. Leighton, amongst others a large one of "The Death of Brunellesco." More or less of three winter seasons were next passed in Rome in diligent study and in painting a large picture of "Cimabue," representing the procession (consisting of the picture of Cimabue, his scholars, and principal Florentine contemporaries) which is said to have accompanied Cimabue's picture of the Madonna, with great honour and rejoicing, through the streets of Florence, to the church of Santa Maria Novella. The exhibition of this work by Mr. Leighton at the Royal Academy in 1855 was a great surprise to the London public, coming as it did from an artist unknown in England. It was at once purchased by the Queen, and it was re-exhibited at the Manchester Art-Treasures and the International Exhibitions. During four years after this early and great success, the artist resided in Paris, studying, however, under no master, though aided by the counsel of Ary Scheffer, Robert Fleury, and other French painters. Subsequently he resided in London, and in 1856 he contributed to the Academy Exhibition a picture entitled "The Triumph of Music," the subject being Orpheus, by the power of his art, redeeming his wife from Hades. The following is a list of Sir F. Leighton's later contributions to the Academy:—"The Fisherman and the Siren," and "Romeo and Juliet, act iv., scene v.," 1858; "Pavonia," "Sunny Hours," and "La Nanna," 1859; and "Capri—Sunrise," 1860; "Paolo and Francesca," "A Dream," "Lieder ohne

Wörter," and "Capri—Paganos," 1861; "Odalisque," "The Star of Bethlehem," "Sisters," "Michael Angelo nursing his Dying Servant," "Duett," and "Sea Echoes," 1862; "Jezebel and Ahab," "A Girl with a Basket of Fruit," "A Girl Feeding Peacocks," and "An Italian Cross-bowman," 1863; "Dante in Exile," "Orpheus and Eurydice," and "Golden Hours," 1864; "David," "Mother and Child," "Widow's Prayer," "Helen of Troy," and "In St. Mark's," 1865; "Painter's Honeymoon," and "Syracusan Bride," 1866; "Pastoral," "Spanish Dancing Girl—Cadiz," "Knucklebone Player," "Roman Mother," and "Venus Unrobing," 1867; "Jonathan's Token to David," "Ariadne abandoned by Theseus," "Acme and Septimius," and "Actæ," 1868; "St. Jerome," "Dædalus and Icarus," "Electra at the Tomb of Agamemnon," and "Helios and Rhodes," 1869; "A Nile Woman," 1870; "Hercules wrestling with Death for the Body of Alcestitis," "Greek Girls picking up Pebbles by the Sea," and "Cleoboulus instructing his Daughter Cleoboulina," 1871; "After Vespers," "Summer Moon," and "A Condottiere," 1872; "Weaving the Wreath," "The Industrial Arts of Peace," 1873; "Moorish Garden: a Dream of Granada," "Old Damascus," "Antique Juggling Girl," and "Clytemnestra from the Battlements of Argos watching for the Beacon Fires which are to announce the Return of Agamemnon," 1874; "Portion of the Interior of the Grand Mosque of Damascus," "Little Fatima," "Venetian Girl," and "Eastern Slinger scaring Birds in the Harvest Time," 1875; "Portrait of Captain Burton," "The Daphnephoria," "Teresina," and "Paolo," 1876; "Music Lesson," and "Study," 1877; "Nausicaa," "Serafina," and "Winding the Skein," 1878; "Biondina," "Caterina," "Elijah in the Wilderness," "Amarilla," and "Neruccia," 1879; "Sister's Kiss," "Iostephane," "The Light of the Harrem," "Psamathe," and "Crenaia," 1880; "Elisha raising the Son of the Shunamite," "Portrait of the Painter," painted by invitation for the collection of portraits of artists painted by themselves, in the Uffizi Gallery, Florence; "Idyll," "Whispers," "Viola," and "Bianca," 1881; "Day - dreams," "Wedded," "Phryne at Eleusis," "Antigone," and "Melittion," 1882; "The Dance," a decorative frieze for a drawing-room in a private house, "Vestal," "Kittens," and "Memories," 1883; "Letty," and "Cymon and Iphigenia," 1884; "Serenely wandering in a Trance of Sober Thought," "Phœbe," "Music" (a deconative frieze). In 1886 he exhibited a bronze statue "The Sluggard," and a design for a ceiling; "Hero watching for Leander," 1887; "Greek Girls playing at Ball," 1889; "Solitude," "The Tragic Poetess," and "The Bath of Psyche," 1890. In the Portfolio for 1870 is a photograph of the group of "The Five Foolish Virgins," reproduced from the reredos of St. Michael's Church, Lyndhurst, situate on the borders of the New Forest. In painting this wall-picture Sir F. Leighton made use of a new medium tried by Mr. Gambier Parry at Highnam, near Gloucester, and in the nave-vault of Ely Cathedral. Sir F. Leighton has executed many drawings for the wood-engravers, among which may be named the illustrations to George Eliot's Florentine tale of "Romola." Mr. Leighton was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1864, and an Academician in 1869. He was chosen President of the Royal Academy in succession to the late Sir Francis Grant, Nov. 13, 1878, and a few days later received the honour of knighthood. In the same year he was nominated an Officer of the Legion of Honour. In that year he completed a large fresco at the South Kensington Museum, "The Industrial Arts applied to War." In 1879 he was created an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge, an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford, and an honorary LL.D. of Edinburgh at the tercentenary celebration. In 1886 he was created a Baronet. Sir F. Leighton was for many years Colonel of the Artists' Corps of Volunteers; he resigned that command in July, 1883; and accepted, in Aug. of the same year, the presidency of an English Commission which was formed for the International Exhibition of the Graphic Arts in Vienna. Sir F. Leighton is a member of several foreign artistic societies, and at the Paris Exhibition of 1878 was nominated President of the International Jury of Painting. In 1888 Sir Frederick was elected a member of the Society of Painters in Water Colours.

LEIGHTON, John, F.S.A., artist, descended from the Leightons of Ulysses-haven, Forfarshire, was born in London, Sept. 15, 1822, became a pupil of Mr. Howard, R.A., and was one of the pioneers of industrial and technical art education, aiding by example the formation of the Department of Science and Art. His first published work, a series of outlines, came out in 1844, but he had previously contributed to cartoon exhibitions. In 1848-50 he published several serio-comic brochures, satires on certain art principles, under the name of "Luke Limner." In 1851 he published a series of twenty-four outlines, entitled "Money," and at the same time a book on design, which was greatly enlarged in 1881, and was the first ever issued in all styles. He has lectured on "Libraries and Books," "Oriental Art," and "Binocular Perspective," and has also travelled in Russia, Caucasia, and Georgia, for the purpose of studying the Byzantine art of the Greek Church. He has illustrated "Moral Emblems," "Lyra Germanica," "The Life of Man Symbolised," and "Madre Natura." In 1871 he edited, with illustrations, "Paris under the Commune." Mr. Leighton served on the Commissions of the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, also in Paris, 1855, and 1867, and Philadelphia, 1867, and was a Juror in Paris in 1878. In June, 1885, he assisted at Victor Hugo's funeral in Paris.

LEITNER, Gottlieb William, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., D.O.L., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, born at Pesth, capital of Hungary, Oct. 14, 1840, is a naturalised British subject, and has several relatives living in England. He was educated at Constantinople, Brussels, Malta, and King's College, London; was appointed First-class Interpreter to the British Commissariat during the Russian War, in 1855, with the rank of full Colonel; was lecturer in Arabic, Turkish, and Modern Greek at King's College, London, in 1859; and Professor of Arabic with Muhammadan Law at the same Institution, in 1861, when he founded the Oriental section. The degrees of M.A. and Ph.D. were conferred upon him by the University of Freiburg, in 1862. He has founded over eighty institutions, including the Punjab University College, a number of schools of various grades, literary societies and free public libraries in India and elsewhere; and has started six journals in English, Arabic, Urdu, &c. Dr. Leitner discovered the languages and races of Dardistan in 1866; and he has since incorporated in his researches, other languages between Kabul, Kashmir, and Badakhshan. He was the only British exhibitor at the Vienna Universal Exhibition of 1873, who, in competition with the Ministries of Education of all civilised countries, received a Grand Diploma of Honour that was awarded for "promotion of education." He brought over the first Yarkandi and the first Siah Posh Kafir to Europe, as well as the largest Central Asian collection of curiosities and antiquities. He excavated Græco-Buddhistic sculptures in 1870, and established a link between Greece at the time of Alexander the Great and Buddhist art and religion. Dr. Leitner originated and defended the title "Kaiser-i-Hind" in connection with Her Majesty's assumption of the Imperial dignity in India, long before its adoption by the Indian Government. Dr. Leitner also caused considerable excavations to be made by his retainers in Swat, which yielded numerous Græco-Buddhistic sculptures, and proved that Greek art had once influenced that now inhospitable region. In the course of his literary activity, Dr. Leitner has brought together one of the largest collections of curiosities in the possession of a private individual; and it is unique in many respects. Besides its ethnographical and numismatic interest, it chiefly illustrates the influence of Greek art when in contact with barbaric sculpture, whether Egyptian, Indian, Assyrian, or Persian. It is now deposited at the Oriental University Institute at Woking. Dr. Leitner was made a Knight of the Iron Crown by the Emperor of Austria in 1870; a Knight of the Crown of Prussia; and a G.C. of the Order of Francis Joseph of Austria. He was created a Doctor of Laws by the University of Heidelberg honoris causa, for his knowledge of International and Oriental Laws, a distinction very rarely conferred by that University, which is the highest legal University in Europe, and is the consulting body of the German Government in matters of Law. Dr. Leitner was for many years Principal of the Lahore Government College (in which the Delhi College was incorporated); Principal of the Oriental College, Lahore; and Registrar of the Punjab University. He was also the President of an important body which he founded in 1864, namely, the Punjab Association, or Anjuman-i-Punjab, an institution for social, political, and educational reforms. He is the President, Honorary Member, or Councillor, of several Corporations in Germany, France, England, Austria, and other countries. Count Liancourt dedicated his "Laws of Language" to him. Dr. Leitner, who is probably the greatest living linguist, in fact, a second Mezzofanti, speaks, reads, and writes 25 languages. He represented India at the Congress of Orientalists held at Florence in Sept., 1878. His published works comprise:—"Theory and Practice of Education;" "Philosophical Grammar of Arabic;" the same translated into Urdu and Arabic; "The Sinin-ul-Islam" (History and Literature of Muhammadanism in the relations to Universal History); "The Races of Turkey, with principal reference to Muhammadan Education;" "Comparative Vocabulary and Grammar of the Dardu Languages; with Dialogues in the same;" "Results of a Tour in Dardistan, Kashmir, Little Thibet, Ladak, Zanshar, &c.," Lond., 1868, et seq.; "History of Dardistan, Songs, Legends, &c.;" "Græco-Buddhistic Discoveries;" "A National University for the Punjab;" "Adventures of a Siah Posh Kafir;" and "A Vocabulary of Technical Terms used in Elementary Vernacular School Books, Hindustani-English," 1879. Among other works published by Dr. Leitner are: "Report to the Government on the History of Indigenous Education in the Punjab before annexation and in 1882," large 4to volume; "Self-Government in India;" "Fragments of Trade Dialects, including that connected with the manufacture of Shawls;" "Dialects of Criminal and Wandering Tribes;" "The Changars, Samés and Més;" "The Kalasha Kafirs;" and numerous other publications. Dr. Leitner acquired the Royal Dramatic College building at Woking near London in 1884, and adapted it to the foundation of an Oriental University and Nobility Institute in England for the training of Orientals in any of the learned professions, and for the linguistic preparation of Europeans proceeding to various parts of the East. He has recently published the first Part of an extensive Report on the Language and People of Hunza for the Foreign Department of the Government of India. Dr. Leitner is now engaged, as representative of the Founders and of 400 Orientalists in 30 countries, in organizing the ninth International Congress of Orientalists, to be held in London in Sept., 1891, on the basis of the original principles laid down in Paris in 1873.

LE JEUNE, The Hon. Henry, A.R.A., of Flemish extraction, was born in 1819. In early life he was sent to study at the British Museum, and in 1841 obtained the Gold Medal of the Royal Academy, for a picture of "Samson bursting his Bonds." He was Head Master of the Government School of Design from 1845 to 1848, when he became Curator of the Painting School at the Royal Academy; from which post he retired in 1864. He has been a frequent exhibitor since 1841, was chosen an A.R.A. in 1863, and retired in 1886.

LELAND, Charles Godfrey, American writer, was born at Philadelphia, Aug.

15, 1824. He graduated at Princeton College in 1846, and subsequently studied at the Universities of Heidelberg and Munich, and in Paris. He was admitted to the Bar in 1851, but soon relinquished law for literature, and contributed largely to periodicals. For several years he resided at New York, and edited the Illustrated News, but returned to Philadelphia in 1855, and for three years was connected with the Evening Bulletin. In the early part of the Civil War he established at Boston the Continental Magazine. On the conclusion of the war he travelled through a portion of the Southern States, in connection with coal and petroleum fields in which he was interested. Later he became editor of the Philadelphia Press. In 1869 he went abroad, and remained, chiefly in London, until 1880. On his return to America he introduced, and for a number of years supervised, a system of industrial-art education in the public schools of Philadelphia. His works, many of which are of a humorous or burlesque character, include, "The Poetry and Mystery of Dreams," and "Meister Karl's Sketch Book," 1855; "Pictures of Travel," a translation of Heine's "Reisebilder," 1856; "Sunshine in Thought," 1862; "Legends of Birds," 1864; "Hans Breitmänn's Ballads," 1867-70; "The Music Lessons of Confucius, and other Poems," 1870; "Gaudeamus," a translation of the humorous poems of Scheffel, 1871; "Egyptian Sketch Book" and "The English Gipsies and their Language," 1873; "Fu-Sang, or the Discovery of America by Chinese Buddhist Priests in the Fifth Century," and "English Gipsy Songs," 1875; "Johnnykin and the Goblins," and "Pidgin-English Sing-Song," 1876; "Abraham Lincoln," 1879; "The Minor Arts," 1880; "The Gipsies," 1882; and "The Algonquin Legends of New England," 1884. He also edited a series of "Art Work Manuals," published in 1885. His latest work is "Gipsy Sorcery and Fortune-Telling."

LELLA, Vittorio, was born at Biella, in N. Italy, in August, 1859, and is distinguished as a mountaineer, geographer, and photographer. Between 1881 and 1890, he received many Medals and Diplomas for photography in London, Turin, Vienna and Florence; and, in the last year, he received the Murchison award in recognition of his recent journey in the Caucasus, and his series of panoramic photographs of the chain. He has written many memoirs, the last being "Nel Cáucaso Centrale; Escursioni colla camera oscura," and he is well known as having obtained the largest, and probably the best, views of the Alps; also as having organized, in 1884, the first winter excursion to the Matterhorn and Monte Rosa.

LEMAIRE, Mme. Jeanne Madeline, née Coll, French artist, was born in 1850, at St. Rossoline, near Cannes, brought up by her aunt, Mme. Herbelin, she from her earliest years imbibed a love of art from that eminent miniaturist. There was never any doubt as to what the pursuit of her life would be. As soon as the little girl could move about, a pencil was her greatest joy, so that even at the age of five or six the childish mind dictated attempts in imitative art. It is unfortunately, but too seldom that the first efforts of those who afterwards become eminent in their profession are preserved, and we are not aware that any of Mme. Lemaire's juvenile artistic productions are in existence. Those, however, having charge of the child were, luckily, most careful not to neglect any evidence of unusual talent, so that at the age of nine the child was placed with a Mme. Cavá to learn drawing, this being followed by four years' instruction at M. Chaplin's school. In 1865, and when but fifteen years of age, the artist exhibited her first picture at the Salon—a portrait in oils of her grandmother—the talent in which was so fully recognised by the judges, that it was only the extreme youth of the artist that prevented a prize being adjudged for the work. Then followed a succession of pictures at the Salon—most of them being in oils—"A Columbine," an exceedingly clever work that was greatly admired, and one that at once foreshadowed the artist's future fame; "Diana Vernon," and another fancy figure in "Corinne," showed a sense of beauty of form and colour that fairly took the public by surprise. Rapidly developing into a facile and productive painter, the artist's works became as numerous as they were diversified in manner. Season after season her works were to be seen at the exhibitions of the Société d'Aquarellistes Français, of which she was a member, her subjects embracing flowers, genre and portraits. Mme. Lemaire also engaged somewhat extensively in book illustration, producing a series of forty water-colour drawings for the work "The Abbé Constantin," by Ludovic Halévy, and a large number for the novel, "Flirt," by Paul Hervieu. This year (1890) the artist has two oil paintings—"Ophelia," and "Sommell,"—at the exhibition of the Société Nationale des Beaux Arts, in the Champ de Mars. In addition to all this, Mme. Lemaire has entered the field as a pastelist, in which branch of art, as all are aware, the artists of her country are specially successful. She is a member of the Société des Pastellistes Français, and recently delighted the metropolis with a series of her drawings on view at the Goupil Gallery. She is one of the most gifted lady artists of France.

LEMOINNE, John Émile, publicist, born in London, of French parents, Oct. 17, 1815, began his studies in England, and finished them in France. In 1840 the director of the Journal des Débats intrusted him with the supervision of the English correspondence of that journal, a position which, after fifty years, he still holds. He has contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes numerous articles, for the most part relating to political history, England, and biography. Several of these articles were published in a separate form, under the title of "Études Critiques et Biographiques," in 1862. He was elected a member of the French Academy in succession to Jules Janin, May 13, 1875, and his reception was on March 2, 1876. His keen and often hostile criticism of English policy is always read with interest by the more serious portion of Frenchmen, and is not disregarded in England; and it may be said that it is chiefly by his exertions as a journalist that he obtained admission to the French Academy; but he is the author of a number of able articles in the Revue des Deux Mondes, which have deservedly obtained a European reputation. M. Lemoinne has written no continuous book. "More than once," he said to his fellow Academicians, on the occasion of his reception, "when the ambition of sitting among you was suggested to me, I was told, 'Write a book.' My book, I have been writing it every day for thirty years, and I thank you for having discovered it." On Feb. 6, 1880, he was definitively chosen by the Left Centre for the Life Senatorship vacant by the death of M. de Lavergne; and in April of the same year he was appointed French Minister in Brussels, but he never took up the appointment.

LENBACH, Franz, a distinguished German portrait-painter, was born at Schrobenhausen in Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1836. He at first followed the trade of his father, a master mason, but on his father's death in 1856, he entered the Munich Academy to study painting, and afterwards was a pupil of Gräfe and Piloty.

He first confined himself to genre-painting, and his "Peasant Family in a Storm," excited much interest. In 1858 he went with Piloty to Rome, and there painted a picture of the Forum, which by its realism and colour created a great sensation in Munich. He then turned to portrait-painting, taking the old masters, especially Rembrandt, as his models. In 1860 he received an appointment at the School of Art at Weimar, but left it soon in order to pursue further studies in Rome. In 1867 he exhibited a masterly portrait of the artist, Von Hagn, and after further travels in Italy and Spain, he returned to Munich, and soon became renowned for his portraits. Commissions came to him from all parts, and for two years he worked in Vienna, but in 1874 settled again in Munich, where he has since resided. Amongst his most celebrated pictures are portraits of Paul Heyse, Franz Lachner, Moltke, Bismarck, Dr. Döllinger, Wagner, Liszt, and the late King of Bavaria.

LEO THE THIRTEENTH, The Pope, is the son of Count Ludovico Pecci, by his wife Anna Prosperi. He was born at Carpineto, in the diocese of Anagni, in the State of the Church, March 2, 1810, and was baptised by the names of Vincenzo and Gioacchino. His mother always called him by his first name, which was also used by himself up to the termination of his studies, when he began to use the second name, Gioacchino. In 1818 his father sent him, along with his elder brother Giuseppe, to the Jesuit College of Viterbo. There he was taught grammar and humanities under Father Leonardo Giribaldi, a man of great learning, until the year 1824, when, on his mother's death, he was sent to Rome to the care of an uncle, and took up his residence in an apartment of the palace of the Marchese Muti. In Nov., 1824, he entered the schools of the Collegio Romano, then restored to the Jesuits, and had for his teachers Fathers Ferdinando Minini and Giuseppe Bonvicini, both distinguished for eloquence and virtue of no common order. Three years later he began to study mathematics. He had for instructors Father Giovanbattista Pianciani, nephew of Leo XII., and Father Andrea Carafa, a mathematician of renown. Young Pecci signalised himself by his assiduity and talent, and in 1828 got the first premium in Physico-Chemistry, and the first accessit in mathematics. Then he passed to the course of philosophy, and in the four years of that curriculum he attended the lectures of Fathers Giovanni Perrone, Francesco

Manera, Michele Zecchinelli, Cornelius Van Everbroeck, and Francesco Xaverio Patrizi, brother of the late Cardinal Patrizi. While studying philosophy Pecci was entrusted, despite his youth, to give repetitions in philosophy to the pupils of the German College. In his third year of philosophy he sustained a public disputation, and obtained the first premium (1830). The following year, being then but 21 years old, he obtained the laurea in philosophy. Even in Viterbo young Pecci was noticed for his ability and for his perfect propriety of conduct. In Rome he seemed entirely devoted to study, and took no part in entertainments, conversazioni, amusements, or plays. At the age of 12 or 13 he wrote Latin, prose or verse, with facility; and it may be mentioned that since he became Pope a volume of his verses, chiefly Latin, has been printed at Udine. Having entered the College of Noble Ecclesiastics, the Abbate Pecci frequented the schools of the Roman University to learn canon and civil law. Pecci and the Duke Sisto Riario Sforza (afterwards Cardinal Archbishop of Naples) were the two brilliant youths who eclipsed all the rest of their companions in study. Cardinal Antonio Sala took much interest in Pecci, and assisted him with advice and instruction. Becoming a doctor in laws, he was made by Pope Gregory XVI. a domestic prelate and Referendary of the Segnatura, March 16, 1837. Cardinal Carlo Odescalchi, famous for his humility in renouncing the purple to enter the Society of Jesus, gave Pecci holy orders in the chapel of St. Stanislas Kostka, in S. Andrea al Quirinale, and on Dec. 23, 1837, conferred the priesthood upon him in the chapel of the Vicariate. Gregory XVI. bestowed upon him the title of Prothonotary Apostolic, and appointed him Apostolic Delegate at Benevento, Perugia, and Spoleto in succession. In these important posts he ruled with firmness and prudence, and while at Benevento he, by his energy, put a stop to the brigandage which had before infested that district. In 1843 he was again promoted by Pope Gregory XVI., being sent as Nuncio to Belgium, and on Jan. 17 in that year he was created Archbishop of Damietta, in partibus infidelium, to qualify him for his office of Nuncio. He remained in Brussels for three years, and was then nominated Bishop of Perugia on Jan. 19, 1846, about four months previous to the death of Gregory XVI. He was created and proclaimed a Cardinal by Pius IX. in the Consistory of Dec. 19, 1853. He was a member of several of the Congregations of Cardinals—among them those of the Council, of Rites, and of Bishops and Regulars. In Sept., 1877, he was selected by Pope Pius IX. to fill the important office of Cardinal Camerlengo of the Roman Church, which post had become vacant by the death of Cardinal de Angelis. In that capacity, after the death of the late Pope (Feb. 7, 1878), he acted as Head of the Church in temporal matters, made the arrangements for the last solemn obsequies of the Pontiff, received the Catholic ambassadors, and superintended the preparations for the Conclave. Sixty-two Cardinals attended the Conclave, which was closed in the Vatican on Monday, Feb. 18, 1878, and the Cardinal Camerlengo was made Pope by the acclamation of all. The news was officially proclaimed to the outside world at a quarter past one o'clock from the gallery of St. Peter's, when it was announced that his Holiness had assumed the name of Leo XIII. On March 3, he was crowned in the Sistine Chapel, all the ancient ceremonies being observed, save the benediction Urbi et Orbi, from the loggia of St. Peter's. At the end of 1887 the Pope celebrated his Jubilee, commemorative of his having been fifty years in the Priesthood, on which occasion he received congratulations from all parts of the world. The Queen of England sent the Duke of Norfolk as her Special Envoy with valuable gifts and an address of congratulation.

LEOPOLD II. (Leopold-Louis-Philippe-Marie-Victor), King of the Belgians, son of the late King Leopold I., upon whose death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1835, he succeeded to the throne as Leopold II., was born in Brussels, April 9, 1835, and married, August 22, 1853, the Archduchess Marie of Austria, by whom he has had three children—two daughters and one son, the Duke of Brabant, who died in Jan. 1869, at the age of ten. In 1855, in company with the Duchess of Brabant, he made a lengthened tour through Europe, Egypt, and Asia Minor. As Duke of Brabant, he took a prominent part in several important discussions in the Senate, especially in that relating to the establishment of a maritime service between Antwerp and the Levant. His Majesty has visited this country very frequently. His "silver wedding" was celebrated with great rejoicing in Aug. 1878. His Majesty takes a great interest in the development of the Congo Free State. Having no son living, and daughters being excluded from the succession by the Belgian constitution, the elder son of his brother, the Comte de Flanders, was heir presumptive to the throne; and he, unfortunately, died Jan. 23, 1891, aged 22. Now, Prince Albert, a youth of 16, the only brother of the late Prince Baldwin, is heir presumptive.

LESLIE, George Dunlop, R.A., the youngest son of the late Charles Robert Leslie, R.A., was born at 12, Pineapple Place, St. John's Wood, London, July 2, 1835, and educated at the Mercers' School in the city. From his father he received, of course, a great deal of instruction in art; and the pure and tender feeling, as well as the simplicity and method, which distinguish so many works of the father, seem to be reflected in the productions of the son. Young Leslie was, however, placed by his father at Mr. F. Cary's School of Art, Bloomsbury, whence he was admitted a student in the Life School of the Royal Academy in April, 1854. The first picture he exhibited, called "Hope," appeared at the British Institution in 1857, and was purchased by Lord Houghton. In the same year two small pictures by him were hung at the Royal Academy, where he has since regularly exhibited. In the spring of 1859 his father died, leaving the young artist entirely to his own resources. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1868, and a Royal Academician June 29, 1876. The principal pictures which he has exhibited are "The Defence of Lathom House," 1865; "Clarissa," 1866, which was also exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition; "Nausicaa and her Maids," 1871; "School Revisited" (his most celebrated picture), 1875; "Cowslips" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill" (his diploma picture), 1877; "Home, Sweet Home," 1878; "Naughty Kitty" and "Alice in Wonderland," containing portraits of the artist's wife and daughter, 1879; "All that Glitters is not Gold," 1880; "Hen and Chickens," 1881; "Molly," "Sally in our Alley," "Pique," and "A Daughter of Charity," 1882; "Daughters of Eve" and "Wayside Rest," 1883; "A Girl with a Silver Bowl full of Roses," and "A Thames Boat House," 1887; and "Sun and Moon Flowers," 1889. "My aim in art," he says, "has always been to paint pictures from the sunny side of English domestic life, and as much as possible to render them cheerful companions to their possessors. The times are so imbued with turmoil and misery, hard work and utilitarianism, that innocence, joy, and beauty seem to be the most fitting subjects to render such powers as I possess useful to my fellow-creatures."

LESLIE, Henry David, musical composer, son of John Leslie, born in London, June 18, 1822, and educated at the Palace School, Enfield, began his musical studies in 1838, under the direction of Charles Lucas. He was appointed Hon. Sec. of the Amateur Musical Society of London on its formation in 1847, and from 1855 until its dissolution in 1861 was its conductor. In 1856 he founded the choral society known by his name, and is Principal of the College of Music, an institution founded in 1864. He has composed "Te Deum" and "Jubilate in D," published in 1841; "Orchestral Symphony in F," in 1847; Festival Anthem, "Let God Arise," for soprano and tenor solo, double chorus and orchestra, in 1849; dramatic overture, "The Templar," in 1852; oratorio, "Immanuel," in 1853; operetta, "Romance, or Bold Dick Turpin," and oratorio, "Judith," in 1857; cantata, "Holyrood," in 1860; wedding cantata, "The Daughter of the Isles," in 1861; besides various compositions for stringed instruments, and some sixty or seventy single songs, duets, anthems, and pianoforte pieces. Mr. Leslie in 1864 composed a romantic opera in three acts.

LESSAR, Paul, was born in 1851, and comes of a Montenegrin family. He was educated at the École des Ingénieurs in St. Petersburg, and on account of his ability he was selected to accompany General Skobeleff into Asia to survey for railways. In 1880 he joined General Komaroff as an expert in surveying and exploring the Turcoman country between the Caspian and Afghanistan. He established himself at Askabad, and in Nov., 1881, he penetrated beyond Sarakhs, across the Afghan frontier, to within a few miles of Herat. In the course of two years he rode a distance of nearly 6,000 miles, exploring the whole of the ground of the Russo-Persian and Russo-Afghan frontier. He became Diplomatic Attaché to the Governor of the Transcaspian, and to him was committed the real direction of the matter of the Afghan frontier. In 1885 he was sent on a special mission to London as geographical expert to assist the Russian Ambassador in the negotiations which accompanied the despatch of the Afghan Boundary Commission.

LESSEPS, Vicomte Ferdinand de, G.C.S.I., diplomatist and engineer, born at Versailles, Nov. 19, 1805, was appointed, in 1828, Attaché to the French consulate in Lisbon, and after holding various consular offices in Europe and the East, was made Consul at Barcelona in 1842, during the bombardment of which town he zealously devoted himself to protect French life and property, besides affording an asylum to Spaniards and others on board French ships. His fame rests chiefly on his scheme to pierce the Isthmus of Suez by means of a canal, and in successfully carrying it out he showed much zeal and indefatigable energy. It was in 1854, when in Egypt on a visit to Mehemet Said, that he opened the project to Said Pacha, who, seeing the advantage that might be expected to accrue from its execution, invited him to draw up a memorial on the subject. This was done with full details, under the title of "Percement de l'Isthme de Suez exposé, et Documents officiels." M. de Lesseps received a firm sanctioning the enterprise in 1854, and a letter of concession was granted by the Viceroy of Egypt, Jan., 1856. Eminent English engineers (and among them the late G. Stephenson) questioned its practicability, which, however, has since been clearly demonstrated. The works were begun soon after the company was constituted, in 1859; large sums were subsequently expended, and the late Pacha of Egypt was induced to take a large number of shares in the undertaking, besides permitting M. de Lesseps to employ native labourers. This ingenious scheme was at first favoured by a portion of the commercial body in this country; but a belief soon gained ground that the project was virtually a political one, and in this point of view it received no encouragement from the British Government. On the death of the late Pacha of Egypt in 1863, the question of the sanction of the Ottoman Porte was more actively discussed, and the right of the Sultan to grant it formally insisted upon. The result was the withdrawal of the permission to the company to hold any portion of Egyptian territory—the supposed covert design of the project; and after much dispute between M. de Lesseps and the Egyptian Government, the claim for compensation to the company he represented was left to the arbitration of the Emperor of the French, who imposed certain conditions on both parties, and allowed the works to be continued. A canal, with sufficient water to admit of the passage of steamboats, was opened Aug. 15, 1865. By degrees, owing to the employment of gigantic dredges and a novel system of machines for raising and carrying away the sand, the bed of the canal was enlarged, so that small ships and schooners were enabled to pass through in March, 1867. At last the waters of the Mediterranean mingled with those of the Red Sea in the Bitter Lakes, Aug. 15, 1869, an event which was commemorated by grand fêtes at Suez: and on Nov. 17, the canal was formally opened at Port Said amid a series of festivities participated in by the Empress of the French, the Emperor of Austria, the Crown Prince of Prussia, Prince William of Orange, the English and Russian Ambassadors at Constantinople, and a large number of English and Continental merchants and journalists. A grand processional fleet, composed of forty vessels, then set out from Port Said in the direction of Ismailia. A few days after the inauguration, M. de Lesseps married Mdle. Antard de Bragard, a very young Creole of English extraction. In Feb., 1870, the Paris Société de Géographie awarded the Empress's new prize of 10,000 francs to M. de Lesseps, who gave the money as a contribution to the Society's projected expedition to Equatorial Africa. He was appointed to the rank of Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour, Nov. 19, 1869; received the cordon of the Italian Order of St. Maurice in Dec., 1869; and was nominated by Queen Victoria an Honorary Knight Grand Commander of the Order of the Star of India, Aug. 19, 1870. The honorary freedom of the City of London was publicly presented to him, July 30, 1870. In July, 1873, the Paris Academy of Sciences chose M. de Lesseps a free member in the place of M. de Verneuil deceased. In 1875 he published "Lettres, journal et documents pour servir à l'histoire du Canal de Suez." For this work the French Academy awarded to him the Marcellin Guérin prize of 5,000 francs, May, 1876. On June 21, 1881, he was elected President of the French Geographical Society in the place of Admiral de la Roncière-le-Noury. During the Egyptian expedition of 1882, M. de Lesseps violently opposed the policy pursued by Great Britain, and regarded Arabi Pacha as a noble patriot. In the following year M. de Lesseps entered into a preliminary agreement with Her Majesty's Government for the cutting of a second Suez Canal; but as the arrangement did not receive the sanction of the House of Commons, the negotiations were abandoned. The broad ribbon of the Persian Order of the Lion and the Sun was presented to M. de Lesseps, July 25, 1883. He was long engaged in the great work of cutting a canal through the Isthmus of Panama; but after an expenditure of over 600,000,000 francs, he was not successful in raising the additional capital necessary for the completion of the work; and the affair went into liquidation.

LETHBRIDGE, Sir Roper, K.C.I.E., M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. E. Lethbridge, was born in 1840, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated in double honours (classical and mathematical). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1880. In 1868 he was appointed Professor in the Bengal Educational Department. He was subsequently elected a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and acted as an Examiner of that University (and also of the University of Lahore), at various times from 1868 to 1876, in Political Economy, History, English Language and Literature, Mathematics, and Mental and Moral Philosophy. In 1877 he was appointed Secretary to the Simla Educational Commission, and placed on special duty to write the articles on the Feudatory States for the Imperial Gazetteer of India. In the following year he was transferred to the Indian Political Department as Political Agent and Press Commissioner under Lord Lytton's Viceroyalty. He was for many years Editor of the only Indian quarterly, the Calcutta Review; and is the author of a "History of India," also a "History of Bengal," and many other works. In 1885 he was elected Conservative member for North Kensington, and was again returned in 1886. He was created a Companion of the Indian Empire in 1877, a Knight Bachelor in 1885, and a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire in 1890.

LEWIS, Professor Bunnell, is descended from Philip Henry, the celebrated Non-conformist, father of Matthew Henry the Commentator, and from a Huguenot family which seems to have migrated into England at the time of the Reformation. He was born in London in 1824; educated at the Islington Proprietary School, under the late Dr. Jackson, afterwards Bishop of London, and at University College, London; he also read privately with the late Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy. He took the degree of B.A. at the University of London, in 1843, with the University Scholarship in Classics; and was elected a Fellow of University College in 1847. He graduated M.A., Branch I. (Classics), in 1849, with the Gold Medal, then awarded for the first time; and was appointed Professor of Latin in Queen's College, Cork, in 1849. At the foundation of the Queen's University in Ireland he took an active part in its administration, and held the office of Examiner in Latin for four years. He was elected F.S.A. in 1865; and Foreign Corresponding Associate of the National Society of Antiquaries of France in 1883. He is a Member of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, the Royal Historical and Archæo-logical Association of Ireland, and the Huguenot Society of London. At the request of the Council of University College, London, he delivered courses of lectures on Classical Archæology in 1873, 1874, in connexion with the Slade School of Art. Professor Lewis has visited, for purposes of archæological research, Ravenna, Brittany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the south-west of France, Tarragona, Palermo, Constantinople, Autun, Reims, Switzerland, Langres and Besançon, the Middle Rhine and the Upper Danube. The results of these investigations have appeared in the Journal of the Archæological Institute, 1875-1889. Many facts have been mentioned with which the English public was not previously acquainted, and ancient monuments have been specially considered as illustrating the Greek and Latin authors. With the view of making classical instruction more realistic and interesting, Professor Lewis has collected objects of art and antiquity for the museum of his College; and has laboured in various ways to introduce the study of antiquities as an integral part of University education. He has contributed to the second revised edition of Dr. William Smith's Latin Dictionary. A great part of his paper on Autun was translated into French and published by the Société Éduenne, of which M. Bulliot, the explorer of Mont Beuvray, is the President.

LEWIS, George, a celebrated solicitor, was born in 1833. He made his first mark in conducting the prosecution of the directors of Overend & Gurney's bank. He was engaged also in the prosecution of Madame Rachel, and of Slade, the medium; and recently in the preparation of the case for Mr. Parnell and the Irish party against the Times. He has by far the largest practice, in criminal cases, of any solicitor in London.

LEWIS, The Right Rev. John Travers, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Ontario, born in 1825, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as senior moderator in ethics and logic, and was Gold Medallist. He was ordained in 1848 and held the curacy of Newtown Butler, went to Canada in 1849, and was appointed by the bishop of Toronto to the pastoral charge of the parish of Hawkesbury, which he exchanged in 1854 for the rectory of Brookville. He was consecrated first Bishop of Ontario, in Upper Canada, March 25, 1862.

LEWIS, The Right Rev. Richard, D.D., Bishop of Llandaff, born in 1821, was educated at Worcester College, Oxford (B.A., 1843; M.A., 1846). He was instituted to the rectory of Lampeter-Velfry, Narberth, Pembrokeshire, in 1851, and was appointed Archdeacon of St. David's in 1875. In 1883 he was appointed Bishop of Llandaff in succession to Dr. Ollivant, and was consecrated to that See by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), in St. Paul's Cathedral, on April 25 of that year.

LEWIS, Thomas Hayter, F.S.A., was born in London, July 9, 1818, and articulated pupil to Joseph Parkinson, architect, of Sackville Street, Piccadilly. In 1837 he was admitted as a student of the Royal Academy, and in 1839 obtained the Silver Medal for Architectural Drawing. He subsequently entered the office of Sir W. Tite. In 1841-42 he travelled through France, Germany, Italy, Sicily and Greece, his principal sketches being published in the Dictionary of the Architectural Publication Society. He then entered into partnership with Mr. Finden, brother of the well-known engraver. In 1854 he designed the Alhambra as a scientific institution — the Panopticon. In 1860 he succeeded Sir M. D. Wyatt as Honorary Secretary to the Royal Institute of Architects. In 1864 he was Examiner, in conjunction with Sir G. G. Scott and A. Ashpitel, in the Voluntary Examination at the Royal Institute. In 1865 he was elected Professor of Architecture at University College, and afterwards designed the extensive additions to the College buildings, and in 1871 was appointed Dean of the Faculty of Arts. In subsequent years he travelled in Germany, Italy, Greece, Algeria, Egypt, Palestine, &c., papers by him relating to the architecture and antiquities of those countries being published in the Transactions of various societies. He designed and carried out numerous works, public and private, both in London and in the provinces, but in 1869, owing to a severe illness, he retired, to a considerable extent, from general practice; and in 1881, for the same reason, resigned the professorship, being then elected Emeritus Professor by the College. He is the author (in addition to various detached essays) of the articles on "Ancient and Modern Architecture" in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica (the medical portion being by Mr. G. E. Street, R.A.), also of the "Annual Review of Architecture" in the Companion to the Almanac for 1885, 1886 and 1887, and, with Colonel Sir C. W. Wilson, he annotated Mr. Aubrey Stewart's translation of Procopius' work on "Justinian's Buildings."

In 1888 he wrote and published, after two visits to the Holy Land, "The Holy Places of Jerusalem."

LEWIS, William James, M.A., born near Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Jan. 16, 1847, was elected a scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, in Oct. 1865, and obtained a first class in the University examinations in mathematics and natural science. He was elected a Fellow of Oriel College in April, 1869. For some time he was assistant-master at Cheltenham College. He was a member of the total eclipse expeditions (English) of 1870 and 1871, and his observations on the polarization of the corona have been published in the volume of "Solar Eclipses" issued under the auspices of the Royal Astronomical Society. In 1874 he began to study mineralogy, and for that purpose went to Cambridge, where he received the valuable assistance of Professor William Hallows Miller. He held an appointment in the Mineral Department of the British Museum from 1875 to 1877, in which latter year he resigned, owing to ill-health. He has contributed several papers on Crystallography to the Philosophical Magazine. In Feb., 1881, he was elected Professor of Mineralogy at Cambridge, in succession to the late Dr. William Hallows Miller. In 1884 he organized, and has since conducted as Honorary Secretary, the Cambridge University Scholastic Agency.

LEYDE, Otto Theodor, R.S.A., R.S.W., was born in 1835, at Wehlau, East Prussia (where his father, Ernest Leyde, was rector), and studied at the Royal Academy of the Fine Arts at Königsberg under Professor Rosenfelder, and continued his studies in Edinburgh, in 1858, where he settled. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1870, and a full member in 1880. He was one of the original members of the Royal Scottish Society of Painters in Water-colours, also of the Liverpool Water-colour Society, and the Painter-Etchers Society, London. His works are principally portraits and domestic genre.

He has written "A History of Rome," published in 1855, which has gone through many editions, and he is joint author of "Liddell and Scott's Greek Lexicon," which first appeared in 1843, and of which the seventh edition, greatly augmented, was published in 1883.

LI HUNG CHANG, General, the Prime Minister of China, was born in the An-Huei province, Feb. 16, 1823. In 1860 he co-operated with General (then Colonel) Gordon in suppressing the Taeping rebellion, being then Governor of the Thiang-Sin province. The other Thiang province being added to his rule, he was created Viceroy of the United Countries, May, 1865. The following year he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary, and in 1867 Viceroy of Hong-Kuang, and a Grand Chancellor in 1868. After the Tien-Tsin massacre in 1870, he was despoiled of his titles, and otherwise punished on the charge of not assisting the General in command, but in 1872 the then Emperor restored him to favour and the office of Grand Chancellor. He was the mediator for fixing the indemnity for the murder of Mr. Margary, who was killed, in 1876, while endeavouring to explore South-Western China. Now, Li Hung Chang is the Viceroy of the Metropolitan provinces of Pe-Chih-Li, and as such is the actual ruler or chief administrator of the Chinese Empire. He is a man of liberal views, permits coal-mining and coast-steamer traffic to be carried on by English companies, and is thought to be favourable even to railways.

LINCOLN, Bishop of. See KING, THE RIGHT REV. EDWARD.

LINCOLN, The Hon. Robert Todd, United States Minister at the Court of Saint James, is the son of the sixteenth President of the United States, and was born at Springfield, Illinois, Aug. 1, 1843. He was prepared for college at Phillips Academy (Exeter, N.H.), and graduated at Harvard in 1864. After a short stay at the Harvard Law School he was commissioned a Captain in the Union Army, and served through the final campaign of the Civil War. He then resumed the study of law, was admitted to the Bar, and began the practice of his profession at Chicago. All offers to enter public life were steadily refused by him until President Garfield, in 1881, tendered him the portfolio of Secretary of War in the cabinet, and this he accepted. On the assassination of Mr. Garfield, Mr. Lincoln was the only cabinet officer requested by President Arthur to retain his seat, which he did until the accession to the presidency of Mr. Cleveland in 1885. In the latter year he returned to Chicago, where he remained until sent by President Harrison, in 1889, as the American Minister to England.

LINDLEY, The Right Hon. Sir Nathaniel, P.C., one of the Lords Justices of Appeal, is the eldest son of the late Dr. John Lindley, F.R.S. (Professor of Botany at University College, London, and author of numerous well-known botanical works), by Sarah, daughter of Mr. George Anthony Freestone, of St. Margaret's, Suffolk. He was born at Acton Green, Middlesex, in 1828, and educated at University College, London. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, in Michaelmas term, 1850, and practised in the Chancery Courts. In 1872 he obtained a silk gown. He was appointed a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in May, 1875, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. He became one of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Nov. 1881, and a member of the Privy Council in the following month. He is the author of an "Introduction to the Study of Jurisprudence," and of a "Treatise on the Law of Partnership and Companies."

LINDSAY, Sir Coutts, of Balcarres, born in 1824, late Lieut.-Colonel Grenadier Guards; Lieut.-Colonel commanding the Fife Rifle Volunteers; and late Major commanding the first regiment of the Italian Legion, has, since his retirement from active military life, devoted himself to artistic pursuits. During his residence in Rome he became an intimate friend of the late Mr. Gibson, and embracing art as a serious study enjoyed the advantage of the instruction of Ary Scheffer. Sir Coutts Lindsay, whom professional artists decline to consider as an amateur, has exhibited many pictures at the Royal Academy, notably the "Good Shepherd," and a portrait of Lord Somers. His most important work is, perhaps, to be found in Dorchester House, the central hall of which is decorated entirely from his designs, and mainly by his own hand. Strongly imbued with the Early Italian idea of painting, for decorative purposes, upon a golden ground, he has left in Mr. Holford's mansion a substantial record of his skill. He is a trustee of the National Gallery, and was on the English Commission, and a member of the Fine Arts Committee, of the Paris Exhibition. He is the owner of the Grosvenor Gallery. In building this receptacle of art he was not actuated by any spirit of opposition to the Royal Academy, but rather by the idea of affording an increased area to artists for the exhibition of their works.

LINDSAY, David, F.R.G.S., Australian explorer, was born at Goolwa, on the Lower Murray, South Australia, June

20, 1856, and is the younger son of John Scott Lindsay, master mariner of Dundee, Scotland. He was educated at the Goolwa Public School, and at the Rev. John Hotham's Private School at Port Elliot; was appointed Cadet in the South Australian Survey Department in June, 1873; Surveyor in March, 1874; Junior Surveyor for the Northern Territory in 1878; resigned his post in the Government service, in June, 1882; was appointed, by the South Australian Government, as Leader of the Arnheims Land Exploring Expedition in 1883, during which journey much new country was discovered and mapped down, much hardship endured through shortness of rations, they having, for the last three weeks, to subsist on horseflesh dried in the sun. The expedition lost sixteen horses through accidents and starvation, and four horses were speared by natives at one camp. Mr. Lindsay carried out a private exploration at his own risk and expense right across Australia from South to North, occupying twelve months, from Nov. 1885 to Dec. 1886 (during which time only three showers of rain fell). He surveyed and marked on the ground 550 miles of Run boundary lines, connecting the Queensland border-line with the Adelaide and Port Darwin telegraph line; and discovered the "Rubies" in MacDonnell Ranges, Central Australia. The journals of these two explorations have been published in the South Australian parliamentary papers, and by the Royal Geographical Society of England. Mr. Lindsay is a Member of the Council of the South Australian Institute of Surveyors, Member of the Board of Examiners for Licensed Surveyors, Honorary Member of the South Australian branch, and Honorary Corresponding Member of the Victorian branch of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia, and Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of London.

LINGEN (Lord), Ralph Robert Wheeler, K.C.B., D.C.L., Baron Lingen, of Lingen, in the county of Hereford, only son of Mr. Thomas Lingen, and of Ann, daughter of Mr. Robert Wheeler, of Birmingham, born in that town on Feb. 19, 1819, was educated at Bridgnorth Grammar School, whence he was elected, in 1837, to a scholarship at Trinity College, Oxford. He obtained the Ireland Scholarship in 1838, the Hertford Scholarship in 1839, graduated B.A. as a first-class in classics in 1840, was afterwards elected to a Fellowship at Balliol College, and obtained the Chancellor's prize for a Latin Essay in 1843, and the Eldon Law

Scholarship in 1846. He was created an honorary D.C.L. in 1881. He studied in the chambers of the late Mr. Peter Brodie and the late Mr. Heathfield, and was called to the Bar in 1847, but shortly afterwards entered the Educational Department of the Privy Council, and in 1849 succeeded Sir J. P. Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., as Secretary. In Jan. 1870 he was appointed to succeed the Right Hon. G. A. Hamilton as Permanent Secretary of the Treasury. He was nominated C.B. in 1869, and K.C.B. in 1879. He was created a Peer, July 3, 1885, and elected an Alderman of the first London County Council in 1889. He married, in 1852, Emma, second daughter of Mr. Robert Hutton, of Putney Park, Surrey, formerly M.P. for the city of Dublin.

LINTON, Mrs. Elizabeth, better known as Mrs. Lynn Lynton, youngest daughter of the late Rev. J. Lynn, vicar of Crowthwaite, Cumberland, was born at Keswick in 1822. Her first work of fiction, entitled "Azeth, the Egyptian," appeared in 1846; "Amynone: a Romance of the Days of Pericles," in 1848; and "Realities," a story of modern life, in 1851; since which time this authoress has been connected with the press. Her "Witch Stories" appeared in 1861; "The Lake Country," illustrated by her husband, in 1864; "Grasp your Nettle," 1865; "Lizzie Lorton of Greyrigg," and "Sowing the Wind," 1866; "The True History of Joshua Davidson, Christian and Communist," 1872; "Patricia Kemball," 1874; "The Mad Willoughbys, and other Tales," 1876; "The Atonement of Leam Dundas," and "The World Well Lost," 1877; "The Rebel of the Family," 1880; "My Love," 1881; "Ione," 1883; "The Autobiography of Christopher Kirkland," a mixture of truth and fiction, like Goethe's "Dichtung und Wahrheit," 1885; "Paston Carew, Millionaire and Miser," and "Stabbed in the Dark," 1886; "Through the Long Night," 1888. Mrs. Linton, long credited with the authorship of the "Girl of the Period" in the Saturday Review (and most of the papers that have appeared in that journal on the woman question), at last acknowledged the authorship; and of several other essays of the same kind, published in two volumes by Messrs. Bentley, 1883. "Ourselves," a book of essays on the same subject, by Mrs. Linton, appeared in 1867. In 1858 she was married to Mr. William James Linton, the engraver and author.

LINTON, Sir James Drumgole, President of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, was born in London, Dec. 26, 1840. He soon showed talent for drawing, and was sent to the Newman Street School of Art, then conducted by Leigh, a pupil of Etty. He continued his studies there till the age of twenty-one, and then began to exhibit water colours at the Dudley Gallery and the Institute of Water-Colour Painters; of the latter he was, in 1867, elected a member, and his pictures soon became a special feature of the exhibitions. At the same time he became a member of the staff of artists on the Graphic. Among his pictures exhibited at the Institute may be mentioned "Maunday Thursday," "1793," "Love the Conqueror," "Off Guard," "The Cardinal Minister," "The Earl of Leicester," and "Priscilla." Mr. Linton worked hard to obtain for the art of water-colour painting a recognised position. In 1863 he, together with other artists, opened the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, a development of the New Society which had been formed in 1832 by painters dissatisfied with the manner in which their art was treated by the Royal Academy. The exhibition was for many years confined to the works of members, but in 1883, having moved to large new quarters in Piccadilly, it was thrown open to all comers, and Mr. Linton was elected President. The Queen granted the title "Royal," and in 1885 conferred on the President the honour of knighthood. Sir James has also produced a number of pictures in oil; in 1878 he exhibited a small picture "Biron," at the Academy, and in 1879 five oil paintings at the Grosvenor Gallery. In the same year he received a commission for a series of pictures representing the conflict between Islam and Christianity in the sixteenth century. In 1885 he exhibited at the Academy "The Marriage of H.R.H. the Duke of Albany," painted by command of the Queen. Sir J. Linton is also President of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours, which holds its exhibitions in the winter at the rooms of the Water-Colour Institute.

LINTON, William James, engraver and writer, was born in London in 1812. He was apprenticed to Mr. G. W. Bonner in 1828, became the partner in 1842 of the late Mr. Orrin Smith, and was engaged with him on the first works of importance published in the Illustrated London News. As an engraver on wood he ranks in the first class. In his younger days, as a zealous chartist, he became intimately associated with the chief political refugees; in 1844 he was concerned with Mazzini in calling the attention of the House of Commons to the fact that the exiles' letters had been opened by Sir James Graham; and in 1848 was deputed to carry to the French Provisional Government the first congratulatory address of English workmen. In 1851 he was one of the founders of the Leader newspaper; in 1855 he became the manager and editor of Pen and Pencil; and was for several years a regular poetical contributor to the Nation, during the editorship of Mr. Duffy. In 1867 he went to America, and after remaining for a while in New York, finally settled in New Haven, Conn. He is a Member of the American Society of Painters in Water Colours, and an Associate of the National Academy of Design. He has contributed to the Westminster Review, Examiner and Spectator, and has published: "A History of Wood Engraving," 1846-47; a series of "The Works of Deceased British Artists," 1860; "Claribel, and other Poems," 1865; "The Flower and the Star," 1878; "Practical Hints on Wood Engraving," 1879; "A Manual of Wood Engraving," 1884; and several volumes of "The English Republic." In 1882 he edited "Rare Poems of the 16th and 17th Centuries;" in 1883, in conjunction with R. H. Stoddard, 5 vols. of "English Verse;" and in 1889 2 vols. of "Poems and Translations."

LIPPINCOTT, Sara Jane (Clarke), known by her pseudonym of "Grace Greenwood," was born at Pompey, New York, Sept. 28, 1823. She was educated at Rochester, New York. Lippincott, of Philadelphia. In 1854 she established the Little Pilgrim, a paper for children, which for some years had a wide circulation. She has appeared on the stage as a dramatic reader and as a lecturer. Besides frequent contributions to periodicals she has published "Greenwood Leaves," 1850-52; "History of my Pets," 1850; "Poems," and "Recollections of my Childhood," 1851; "Haps and Mishaps of a Tour in Europe," 1854; "Merrie England," 1855; "Forest Tragedy, and other Tales," 1856; "Stories and Legends of Ireland," and "History for Children," 1858; "Stories from Famous Ballads," 1859; "Bonnie Scotland," 1860; "Stories of Many Lands," 1866; "Stories of France and Italy," and "Records of Five Years," 1867; "New

He received the degree of LL.D. at Glasgow University in 1879; D.C.L. at Oxford in 1880; LL.D. at Cambridge in 1880; and in 1883 was made a Baronet on Mr. Gladstone's recommendation. In 1877 he published a volume of poems entitled "Pet Moments," which was dedicated, by permission, to Lord Tennyson, and was well received. In 1880 he edited the works of the Lancashire Poet John Critchley Prince, and also wrote his biography, which appeared together in three large uniform volumes. In 1889 was published his original work entitled "Heredity: a study; with special reference to Disease;" and he has also contributed many important papers to the medical journals. Dr. Douglas Lithgow is also a Fellow, and Member of the Council, of the Royal Society of Literature, a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, of the Royal Geological Society of Ireland, of the Obstetrical Society of London, and an Honorary Fellow of the Society of Literature and Science; Member, and Member of Council, of the British Archæological Society; Member, and Member of Council, of the Irish Medical Schools and Graduates' Association, the General Council of the University of St. Andrews, the British Medical Association, the Medical Society of London, the British and Foreign Association (Hon.), &c. About that time he began telescopic observations of the sun, and in 1866 proposed a method for observing the red flames without an eclipse, which method he and M. Janssen independently applied in 1868. To commemorate this discovery a Medal was struck by the French Government in 1872. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1869, and independently, and in conjunction with Dr. Frankland, announced many important solar and physical discoveries to the Society in that and the following years. The Warrington Park property having in the meantime changed hands, it then became necessary for Mr. Lopes either to oppose the new owner or to seek for another seat. Choosing the latter alternative, he determined to stand for Frome, near which borough he had a residence and property. After a severe contest he was returned by 642 votes, against 557 recorded in favour of Mr. Willans, the Liberal candidate. He continued to represent Frome until his elevation to the judicial bench. Mr. Lopes was a frequent speaker in the House of Commons, and he succeeded in carrying through that House a Jury Bill containing more than a hundred sections, but there was not sufficient time to get it passed by the House of Peers. On Nov. 3, 1876, Mr. Lopes accepted the vacant judgeship in the Court of Common Pleas, in succession to the late Mr. Justice Archibald, and very shortly afterwards he received the honour of knighthood. In Nov., 1876, on the death of his maternal uncle, Sir Henry Lopes became the owner of Heywood, near Westbury, Wiltshire, a place which had been for many years in his mother's family, and where he now resides. On Dec. 1, 1885, he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal, and subsequently sworn of the Privy Council. In 1854 he married Cordelia Lucy, daughter of Erving

Clarke, Esq., of Efford Manor, near Plymouth, and thus became connected with the old Cornish families of Molesworth and Trelawny. Sir Henry was Treasurer of the Inner Temple for the year 1890; and is a Member of the Council of Legal Education.

LORNE, Sir John George Edward Henry Douglas Sutherland Campbell, G.C.M.G., called by courtesy the Marquis of, is the eldest son of the Duke of Argyll, and was born at Stafford House, London, in 1845. He was elected M.P. for Argyllshire, in the Liberal interest, in Feb., 1868, and in Dec. of the same year he became private secretary to his father at the India Office. He married the Princess Louise, fourth daughter of Queen Victoria, on March 21, 1871. The marriage ceremony was performed in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, by the Bishop of London, assisted by the Bishops of Winchester, Oxford, and Worcester. He was created a knight of the Thistle in 1872. A trifling work, by the Marquis of Lorne, entitled "A Trip to the Tropics, and Home through America," was published in 1867. It was followed by "Guido and Lita: a Tale of the Riviera," a poem, 1875; and "The Psalms literally rendered in Verse," 1877. In July, 1878, he accepted the post of Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, in succession to Lord Dufferin. He was soon afterwards created a Knight Grand Cross of the order of SS. Michael and George. Accompanied by the Princess Louise, he proceeded to Canada (Nov. 1878), where he had an enthusiastic reception. His term of office (during which he had travelled very extensively throughout the Dominion) expired in 1883, when he was succeeded by the Marquis of Lansdowne. He has since written on Imperial Federation and on many public topics. At the General Election in 1885, Lord Lorne contested Hampstead as a Liberal, against Sir Henry Holland, but was defeated by a large majority.

LOSSING, Benson John, LL.D., born at Beekman, New York, Feb. 12, 1813. After working some years at watch-making, he became, in 1835, joint owner and editor of the Poughkeepsie Telegraph. He soon added to this a semi-monthly literary journal called the Poughkeepsie Casket, and studied wood engraving and drawing, to be able to illustrate it. Later on he settled in New York as a wood-engraver, and for two years (1838-40) edited the Family Magazine, the first fully illustrated periodical in America. In 1841 his "Outline History of the Fine Arts" was published. In 1847 he wrote "Seventeen Hundred and Seventy-six," and in 1848, "Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence." His "Pictorial Field Book of the Revolution" followed in 1851, and a large number of other popular historical and biographical works by him have since appeared. Besides these, he has contributed to Harper's Magazine and other periodicals, a number of papers, and is a very industrious collector of documents relating to American history. He is the author of a fully illustrated "History of the Civil War;" a "Cyclopædia of United States History;" and is now (1890) engaged on a three-volume work entitled "A History of the City of New York, Political, Social, Commercial, and Industrial." He has also in preparation, a "Cyclopædia of Universal History." In 1873 he received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Michigan.

LOW, The Hon. Seth, LL.D., was born at Brooklyn, New York, Jan. 18, 1850. He graduated at Columbia College (New York City) in 1870, and immediately entered the mercantile house of his father, in which in 1875 he became a partner. In 1881 he was nominated as an independent (reform) candidate for the mayoralty of his native city and was elected. He served for two terms (1882-1885), and during his administration accomplished much in purifying municipal politics. On leaving that office he again became engaged in active business until his election in 1889 as the successor of the late Dr. F. A. P. Barnard to the Presidency of Columbia College, of which he was already a trustee. Mr. Low has been for a number of years a member of the New York Chamber of Commerce; is President of the Archæological Institute of America; a Vice-President of the New York Academy of Sciences; was the founder and first President of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities; and one of the organizers and the first President of the Young Men's Republican Club of Brooklyn. LOWE, The Rev. Edward Clarke, D.D., born at Everton, near Liverpool, Dec. 15, 1823, youngest son of S. Lowe, Esq., solicitor, formerly of Whitechurch, Salop, and subsequently of Liverpool, was educated at Liverpool at a private school, and afterwards at Oxford, where he entered under Rev. W. Jacobson (who became Bishop of Chester), at Magdalene Hall in 1842, whence he was elected to the Bible Clerkship at Lincoln College in June, 1844, where he was a pupil of the late Mark Pattison. He graduated B.A. in 1846, in the third class, and the following year became Second Master of the King's School, Ottery St. Mary, and was ordained deacon by Bishop Philpotts in September of the same year, and priest in September of the year following. In 1849 he joined, at Shoreham, the Rev. N. Woodard, who had just begun his effort to found, by public boarding schools, a system of Church of England education for the middle classes. In Jan., 1850, he opened, as Head Master at Hurstpierpoint, the first middle school of the system, and remained in that office till the end of 1872, when he was appointed Provost of the Midland district of St. Nicholas' College, an office which he still retains, being head of the Society of SS. Mary and John of Lichfield, in union with St. Nicholas' College, and directing the large schools at Denstone and Ellesmere for boys, and two for girls at Abbots Bromley, as well as a boys' day-school at Dewsbury. In Sept., 1873, he was preferred to a Canonry in Ely Cathedral, upon a vacancy falling to the Crown, sede vacante; and since 1880 up to the present time has represented the Chapter as Proctor in Convocation. He has published several small educational works; among others, "Porta Latina," Erasmus College Series, "An English Primer," and an annotated edition of G. Herbert's "Church Porch."

LOWE, Edward Joseph, F.R.S., elder surviving son of the late Alfred Lowe, Esq., J.P., of Highfield, near Nottingham, was born at Highfield, Nov. 11, 1825; and in 1840 began that valuable series of daily meteorological observations which were continued to April, 1882. In 1846 he published "A Treatise on Atmospheric Phenomena." About 1848 he assisted the late Professor Baden Powell in the meteor observations for the British Association, and was the first to point out the convergence of meteors to a point in the heavens. "Prognostications of the Weather," a small work by him, appeared in 1849. In 1850 he became a member of the Royal Meteorological Society, of which he was one of the founders. In 1853 he wrote two valuable local works, entitled "The Climate of Nottinghamshire," and "The Conchology of Nottinghamshire." In the same year he likewise assisted the late Professor Edward Forbes in the compilation of his work on "British Mollusca," and issued the first parts of the well-known "Natural History of British and Exotic Ferns." His next work, on "British Grasses," appeared in 1858, and he subsequently wrote two other botanical works on "Beautiful-leaved Plants," and "New and Rare Ferns," in 1861 and 1862; and "Our Native Ferns," in 1865. His last work, entitled the "Chronology of the Seasons," is yet in progress, the first part only having been issued. In 1860 he was one of those who accompanied the Government expedition to Spain for the purpose of observing the solar eclipse, and was placed in charge of the meteorological departments in the Santander district. In 1866 he was local secretary to the British Association. In 1868 he was president of the Nottingham Literary and Philosophical Society. Besides being the author of the works enumerated, Mr. Lowe has contributed many papers on scientific subjects to various learned societies, and to the British Association; and he sends daily meteorological telegrams to the Board of Trade, and synchronous meteorological observations to the United States Government. He was the inventor of the dry powder tests for the ozone observations used in the scientific balloon ascents. He was also the discoverer of an entirely new and distinct species of British worm, the Megascolex rigida (Baird); has been the raiser of many abnormal British ferns; and has succeeded in producing hybrids between Polystichum aculeatum and P. angulare. Since 1886 he has devoted his time to discoveries in hybridization of ferns, and flowering-plants, and has just published a "Handbook on the Varieties of British Ferns." For some years past Mr. Lowe has been a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Nottinghamshire, and a Commissioner of Income Tax. In 1882 he went to reside at Shirenewton Hall, near Chepstow, which estate he purchased from Lord Kintour. He is now a Justice of the Peace, Deputy-Lieutenant, and Income Tax Commissioner for Monmouthshire. He is a Fellow of the Royal, the Royal Astronomical, the Geological, the Linnean, the Royal Meteorological, and the Royal Horticultural Societies.

LOWELL, The Hon. James Russell, LL.D., D.C.L., was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, Feb. 22, 1819. He graduated at Harvard College in 1838, and studied law, but soon abandoned law for literature. Before leaving college he published a class poem. A volume of miscellaneous poems, entitled "A Year's Life," appeared in 1841; a new collection containing a "Legend of Brittany," "Prometheus," and others, in 1844; "Conversations on some of the Old Poets," containing a series of well-studied criticisms, both in prose and verse, giving indications of Mr. Lowell's interest in the various political and philanthropic questions of the day, and of his attachment to those principles of which he has since been the champion, in 1845; a third collection of poems, and "The Vision of Sir Launfal," founded on a legend of the search for the San Graal, in 1848; "A Fable for Critics," in which he satirically passes in review the literati of the United States; and his most remarkable work, "The Biglow Papers," a collection of humorous poems on political subjects, written by "Hosea Biglow" in the Yankee dialect, in 1848. " Fireside Travels," including graphic papers on Cambridge in old times, and the second series of the "Biglow Papers," appeared in 1864. In 1869 he published "Under the Willows, and other Poems;" and near the close of the same year, "The Cathedral," an epic poem; in 1870, a collected volume of essays, entitled "Among my Books;" and in 1871, "My Study Windows." "Three Memorial Poems" appeared in 1876; and in 1881, a new edition of his complete works in 5 vols. was issued. In 1855 he succeeded Longfellow as Professor of Modern Languages and Belles-Lettres in Harvard College. The degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon him in 1873, by the English University of Oxford, and that of LL.D. by Cambridge in 1874. The latter degree he has received also from St. Andrews, Edinburgh, Harvard, and Bologna. From 1857 to 1862 he was editor of the Atlantic Monthly, and he had previously been connected editorially or otherwise with The Pioneer, a magazine of high character, the Anti-Slavery Standard, Putnam's Monthly; and from 1864 to 1866 was editor of the North American Review. He has also been a lecturer before the Lowell Institute, in Boston, on the British poets. Towards the close of 1874 he was offered the post of Minister to Russia, which he declined; but in 1877 accepted that of Minister to Spain; from which he was transferred in Jan., 1880, to that of Minister to Great Britain. On the change of administration in 1885 he resigned this position and returned to the United States. The speeches which he delivered in this country were republished in 1887 under the title of "Democracy and other Addresses." A new edition of his works in 10 vols. has just been published. Though a life-long Republican, Mr. Lowell supported the candidacy of Mr. Cleveland for re-election to the Presidency in 1888. During the Slavery agitation, prior to the Civil War, he was a prominent advocate for its abolition, and has been equally outspoken in more recent years in urging the reform of the Civil Service.

LOWELL, Percival, son of Augustus Lowell and Katharine Bigelow (Lawrence) Lowell, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, United States of America,

March 13, 1855; and took his degree at Harvard University in 1876. He has travelled considerably, especially in the Far East. While in Japan, in 1883, he was appointed Foreign Secretary and Counsellor to the Korean Special Mission to the United States, the first to go from Korea to a Western Power. He returned to Korea with the mission the same year, and spent the winter of 1883-4 in Seoul, its capital. He published, in 1885, "Choson, a Sketch of Korea;" in 1888, "The Soul of the Far East," and poems in Scribner's Magazine, and lectured before the Q.B.K. Society at Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is a Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Japan.

LOWTHER, The Right Hon. James, M.P., younger son of Sir Charles Hugh Lowther, Bart., by Isabella, daughter of the late Rev. Robert Morehead, D.D., Rector of Easington-cum-Liverton, Yorkshire, was born at Swillington-House, Leeds, in 1840; and educated at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., 1862; M.A., 1866). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1864. The next year he was elected M.P. for York in the Conservative interest, and continued to sit for that city until 1880. He unsuccessfully contested East Cumberland in February, 1881, and in September of the same year was elected Member for North Lincolnshire, which constituency he represented until Nov., 1885. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor Law Board from Aug. to Dec., 1868, and Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies from Feb., 1874, till Feb., 1878, when he was appointed Chief Secretary of Ireland, which office he held until the resignation of Lord Beaconsfield's Government in May, 1880. He unsuccessfully contested the East Lindsey Division of Lincolnshire, Nov., 1885, also North Cumberland at the General Election of 1886; but was returned for the Isle of Thanet Division of Kent in June, 1888. Mr. Lowther is a magistrate, deputy-lieutenant, and county alderman for the North Riding of York.

LOYSON, Charles, known as PÈRE HYACINTHE, was born at Orleans in 1827, was educated at Pau, by private professors, where his father was Rector of the University. His mother was of the noble family Burnier-Fontonel, of the Chateau de Reiquier, Savoy. In 1845 he entered Saint-Sulpice, was ordained priest after five years of theological study, taught philosophy at the great Seminary at Avignon, and theology at that of Nantes, and officiated in his ecclesiastical capacity at St. Sulpice, in Paris. He afterwards spent two years in the convent of the Carmelites at Lyons, entered that Order, and attracted much attention by his preaching at the Lycée of that city. In June, 1869, Père Hyacinthe delivered before the International League of Peace an address, in which he spoke of the Jewish religion, the Catholic religion, and the Protestant religion, as being "the three great religions of civilized peoples." This expression elicited severe censures from the Catholic press. On Sept. 20 of the same year Père Hyacinthe published his famous Manifesto, addressed to the General of the Bare-footed Carmelites at Rome, but evidently intended for the governing powers of the Church, in which he protested against the "sacrilegious perversion of the Gospel," and went on to say:—"It is my profound conviction that if France in particular, and the Latin races in general, are given up to social, moral, and religious anarchy, the principal cause is not Catholicism itself, but the manner in which Catholicism has for a long time been understood and practised." This manifesto against the alleged abuses in the Church created intense excitement, not only in France, but throughout the civilized world, and the young monk was hailed as a powerful ally by all the open opponents of the Papacy. Soon after this he left France for America, landing in New York, Oct. 18, 1869. He was warmly welcomed by the leading members of the various Protestant sects in the United States, but, though he fraternized with them to a certain extent, he constantly declared that he had no intention of quitting the Catholic Faith. On Sept. 3, 1872, he was married in London, at the Marylebone Registry Office, to Emilie Jane, daughter of Mr. Amory Butterfield, and widow of Captain Edwin Ruthven Meriman, of the United States. The late Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, and Lady Augusta Stanley, his wife, were present at the marriage. Soon after his marriage, Père Hyacinthe was called to Geneva, and after giving a series of conferences in the Salle de la Réformation, which found echo throughout Europe, he was invited by the Swiss Government to take charge of the Catholic Church in Geneva, and thus he became the founder of the Old Catholic State Church, or as it is officially styled, the Christian Catholic Church of Switzerland.

LUARD, The Rev. Henry Richards, D.D., son of the late Henry Luard, Esq., born in 1825, was educated at Cheam and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1847, M.A. in 1850, B.D. in 1875, and D.D. in 1878, and became Fellow and Assistant Tutor of his College, 1855-65, Registrar of the University in 1862, Vicar of St. Mary the Great, Cambridge, 1860-87, and Honorary Canon of Ely in 1883. He has written "The Life of Porson," in the "Cambridge Essays" for 1857; "Catalogue of the MSS. in the Cambridge University Library"—the theological portion, and the general index; "Remarks on the Cambridge University Commissioners' New Statutes for Trinity College," 1858; various articles, especially on Italian matters, in the Church Quarterly Review; and edited "Lives of Edward the Confessor," 1858; "Bartholomæi de Cotton Historia Anglicana," 1859; "Roberti Grosseteste Epistolæ," 1861; "Annales Monastici," in 1864-9; "Matthew Paris," 1872-83; and the "Flora Historiarum," formerly attributed to "Matthew of Westminster," 1890. In the Government series of Mediæval Chronicles; "Diary of Edward Rud," 1860; "Correspondence of Porson," 1867; "Graduati Cantabrigienses," 1873, 1884; "On the Relations between England and Rome during the earlier portion of the Reign of Henry III.," 1877.

LUBBOCK, The Right Hon. Sir John, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., LL.D., M.D., F.R.S., was born at 29, Eaton Place, London, April 30, 1834, being the son and heir of Sir John William Lubbock, of Mitcham Grove, Surrey, and High Elms, Down, Kent, a gentleman eminent as an astronomer and a mathematician, by his wife Harriet, daughter of Lieut.-Col. George Hotham, of York. The baronetcy was created in 1806, in favour of the great-great-uncle of the present baronet, who succeeded to it in 1865, and who resides at High Elms, Down, in Kent. From a private school he was transferred to Eton. His father, owing to the sudden illness of several of his partners, took him when but fourteen years of age, into his bank in Lombard Street, a business with which the family has been connected for several generations. He became a partner in that establishment in 1856. Among the improvements which he introduced in banking affairs were the "Country Clearing" and the publication of the Clearing-House returns. So high was his professional reputation that he was chosen Honorary Secretary to the Association of London Bankers, the first President of the Institute of Bankers, an association numbering over 2000 members, and he was nominated by the Crown to serve on the International Coinage Commission. He was also a member of the Public School Commission, the Advancement of Science Commission, the Education Commission, and the Gold and Silver Commission. It is, however, by his works on the ancient vestiges and remains of man that Sir John Lubbock has most distinguished himself. He has written "Prehistoric Times, as illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages," 1865, 5th edit., 1889; "The Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man," 1870, which also has passed through five editions, and which, like the preceding work, has been translated into all the principal languages; "The Origin and Metamorphoses of Insects," 1874; "On British Wild Flowers, considered in relation to Insects," 1875; "Monograph of the Thysanura and Collembola," two volumes of Lectures and Addresses; a work on Ants, Bees, and Wasps, which in less than a year ran through five editions; "The Pleasures of Life," this is the most popular of Sir John Lubbock's works, and has run through 22 editions; "The Senses of Animals;" "Fifty Years of Science;" "Flowers, Fruits, and Leaves;" "Representation;" "Chapters in Popular Natural History;" and over a hundred separate memoirs on zoological, physiological, and archæological subjects in the transactions of the Royal Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Linnean, Ethnological, Geological, and Entomological Societies, and the British Association. He was chosen as President of the British Association for the "Jubilee" year (1881), and presided over the meeting held at York. He is now President of the Linnean Society. He has been President of the Ethnological and Entomological Societies, and of the Anthropological Institute, Vice-President of the British Association, and of the Royal Society. Sir John Lubbock has been twice chosen to represent Maidstone in Parliament. In Feb., 1870, after he had been defeated as a Liberal candidate for West Kent by only fifty votes, he was returned for the county town, an honour which was renewed at the general election of 1874; in 1880, however, he lost his seat, but was immediately returned by the University of London, for which he now sits. In the House of Commons he has spoken principally on financial and educational subjects. He has been so fortunate as to succeed in carrying no fewer than nineteen important public measures, including the Bank Holidays Act (1871), by which four new statute holidays were added to the two previously in existence. Amongst the other measures were: the Absconding Debtors Bill, the Apothecaries' Company Medical Act Amendment Bill, the University of London Medical Act Amendment Bill, the Falsification of Accounts Bill (by which, for the first time, it became an offence to falsify accounts for the purpose of fraud), the Bankers' Books Evidence Bill, the College of Surgeons Medical Act Bill, the Factor's Acts Amendment Bill, Shop Hours Regulation Act, and the Bills of Exchange Act, which consolidates and codifies the whole law relating to bills of exchange, cheques, and promissory notes; the Public Libraries Amendment Act, the Open Spaces Act, and the Metropolis Management Act. More recently his name has been associated with the "Ancient Monuments Bill," which has received the sanction of the legislature. In 1877 he moved the "previous question" to Mr. Gladstone's famous resolutions on the Eastern Question. Sir John was a member of the Public School Commission and of the Advancement of Science Commission. In March, 1878, he was appointed a Trustee of the British Museum, in the place of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell. In the same year the University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is also a D.C.L. of Oxford, LL.D. of Cambridge and of Edinburgh, and M.D. of Würzburg. He was Vice-Chancellor of the University of London for eight years, but resigned the office on his election to represent the University in Parliament. This seat he held without a contest till 1886, but on the dissolution, Mr. Frederic Harrison was brought forward as a Home-Rule candidate, Sir J. Lubbock standing as a Unionist. The latter easily won the seat, polling 1314 votes against Mr. Harrison's 516. On the formation of County Councils he stood for the City on a requisition signed by the leaders of all parties, and out of 10,000 votes recorded, received 8,900, the largest number of votes recorded for any candidate in the whole country. He was unanimously elected Vice-Chairman of the London County Council, and re-elected 1889; and in 1890 was elected Chairman, on the resignation of the Earl of Rosebery.

LUCAS, John Seymour, A.R.A., was born in London on December 21, 1849. Leaving school at the age of fifteen, he spent three months in the studio of a sculptor, and a further term of nine months with Gerard Robinson, the wood-carver, from whom he received his first notions of composition. His uncle, John Lucas, the painter, then articulated him to his son, John Templeton Lucas, who was to teach him the art of painting. During the term of his apprenticeship Mr. Lucas attended the evening classes of the St. Martin's School of Art, in connection with South Kensington; and in 1871 he became a student of the Royal Academy, exhibiting his first picture there in 1872. It was not until 1875, however, that Mr. Lucas contributed to the annual exhibition at Burlington House a work of any mark; this was entitled "By Hook or Crook." The following year he sent two pictures, "Fleeced," and "For the King and the Cause;" and in 1877, "Intercepted Despatches." "An Ambuscade, Edge Hill," appeared in 1878. The technical excellence of all this artist's work is of a high order, and is especially noticeable in "The Gordon Riots," which was exhibited in 1879. In 1877 he was elected full member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, and in 1886 was elected A.R.A. His recent works are "The Armada in Sight," 1880; "Charles before Gloucester," 1881; "The Favourite," 1882; "A Whip for Van Trompe," 1883; "After Culloden," 1884; "From the Field of Sedgmoor," 1885; "Peter the Great at Deptford," 1886; and "The Latest Scandal," 1887.

This he did in a new style, now familiar as "The Diary of Toby, M.P." In 1878 his letters to the Daily News, describing the condition of the people in South Wales owing to the strike, resulted in a public subscription, which in the course of three weeks amounted to over £10,000 in cash, in addition to many gifts in kind. With a portion of the money the rector of Merthyr was enabled to feed daily for seventeen weeks 5,000 children. In January, 1886, Mr. Lucy accepted the editorship of the Daily News, resigning the post in July, 1887, preferring his earlier work in the Press Gallery of the House of Commons.

He entered the Indian Army in 1847, and has risen to his present rank by constant and active service, principally on the North-West and other frontiers of India. In 1857 he was employed in a difficult mission to Afghanistan, at the crisis of the Indian Mutiny, and creditably discharged his arduous and perilous duties. He served in Central India in 1858, under Major-General Sir R. Napier. The Hereditary Prince Alexander is likewise an only son, born in 1852, and serves as major-general in the Austrian army. Should his sister die without issue her dower will ultimately revert to him, and he will be one of the wealthiest princes in Europe, his father possessing, in addition to a fortune of at least three millions sterling, vast estates in Austria and Germany. The marriage of Prince Alexander is now the great object of his family, in order to secure the succession to the Luxemburg throne in the direct line, thus eventually avoiding complications with Prussia.

Wright, at Ayscough Free Hall, Spalding, Lincoln, and Britannia House, Worcester; next at Trinity College, Glenalmond, Perth. He was ordained in 1860, to the curacy of St. Peter's, Plymouth; and was then Mission Curate to the late Mr. Lowder at St. George's in the East, but left him in 1862 to begin the attempt of restoring monasticism in the Church of England. He began at Claydon near Ipswich, and moved to Norwich, Jan. 30, 1863. Next he moved to the Isle of Wight, to a house of Dr. Pusey's, at Chale, then to Laleham, Chertsey, for three years, and finally he purchased land among the Black Mountains, and built Llanthony Abbey, five miles beyond old ruined Llanthony Priory. He is the author of many published sermons, poems, hymns; the "Tales of Llanthony;" "Brother Placidus;" "Leonard Morris;" and "Tales of the Monastery." He is the composer of many pieces of Sacred Music, 1860-82; also editor of "Llanthony Monastery Tracts." There is a Priory of Nuns attached to the Church, as well as an Abbey for Monks, after the example of many of the old double Monasteries of the Saxon Church. The monks claim to follow the ancient rule of St. Benedict, and use the Benedictine Breviary for Choir Office and the Sarum Missal of the ante-Reformation Church of England. They wear the old English Benedictine dress. Mr. Lyne's monastic name is "Ignatius of Jesus."

LYNN, William Thynne, B.A., F.R.A.S., eldest son of the late William Bewicke Lynn, F.R.C.S., for many years one of the surgeons of Westminster Hospital, and descended from a family long resident in the county of Durham, was born at Chelsea Aug. 9, 1835, and educated privately in the neighbourhood of Esher, Surrey. For several years he superintended the greater part of the astronomical calculations, during which he found time to devote some of his evenings to attending lectures at King's College, London, of which he was elected an associate in 1862. In that year he also graduated as B.A. in the University of London, after passing the requisite examinations in 1860 and 1861. In Feb. 1862, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, to the Monthly Notices of which he afterwards made several contributions. In the following year he published a small educational work called "The First Principles of Natural Philosophy." A long and serious illness compelled him to desist from night exposure, in consequence of which he retired from the Observatory in the month of Jan., 1860. He continued, however, to give much of his time to astronomical literature, and numerous contributions from his pen appeared in the pages of The Observatory, The Athenæum, The Companion to the British Almanac, and other periodicals; besides his editing and revising various astronomical works. In 1884 he published a concise and popular summary of the most interesting facts known respecting the heavenly bodies (especially their movements) under the title "Celestial Motions: a Handy Book of Astronomy;"

of this work a seventh edition appeared in 1891. In 1886 he was elected an Honorary Associate of the Liverpool Astronomical Society. In 1880 he had been admitted a Lay Reader in the Diocese of Rochester; in 1889 he published two small volumes, intended chiefly for Sunday-school teachers, on "Bible Chronology," and "Brief Lessons on the Parables and Miracles of Our Lord," and early in 1891 a third, entitled "Eminent Scripture Characters." The columns of Notes and Queries since 1882 contain a large number of contributions from his pen on literary, scientific, and biblical subjects.

G.C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D., poet and diplomatist, only son of the celebrated novelist, poet, dramatist, orator, and statesman, was born Nov. 18, 1831. He was educated first at Harrow, and under private tutors, and afterwards at Bonn, where he devoted himself specially to the study of modern languages. When nearly eighteen years of age he entered the diplomatic service of the Crown, being appointed Oct. 12, 1849, Attaché at Washington, where his uncle, Sir. Henry Bulwer, afterwards Lord Dalling and Bulwer, was minister. To Sir Henry he acted at the time as private secretary. On Feb. 5, 1852, he was transferred as Attaché to Florence, and on Aug. 12, 1854, was removed to the Embassy at Paris. He was thence promoted, shortly after the peace of 1856, to be paid Attaché at the Hague. Two years afterwards, on April 1, 1858, he was appointed first paid Attaché at St. Petersburg, and a little more than two months later, was gazetted first paid Attaché at Constantinople. From that Embassy he was, on Jan. 6, 1859, transferred to the one at Vienna. He was on Oct. 1, 1862, gazetted second secretary in Her Majesty's diplomatic service, being employed in that capacity at Vienna. Shortly afterwards he was promoted on Jan. 6, 1863, to be Secretary of Legation at Copenhagen. There, during two intervals, from Feb. 27 to March 18, 1863, and again from April 14 to May 24, 1864, he held the position of Chargé d'Affaires. A week before the date last mentioned (on May 18, 1864,) he was gazetted as Secretary of Legation at Athens, whence, on April 21, 1865, he was transferred to Lisbon. Upon three several occasions he there also discharged the office of Chargé d'Affaires, from May 30 to Oct. 1865, from April 29 to Nov. 18, 1866, and from Sept. 14, 1867, to March 19, 1868. In little more than a month from the last-named date, on Feb. 29, 1868, when he successfully concluded the negotiation of a Commercial Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal, he was transferred to Madrid. Six months later he was promoted to the Secretaryship of Embassy at Vienna. There he acted once more from Oct. 30 to Dec. 29, 1869, as Chargé d'Affaires, and was thence transferred on Oct. 5, 1872, as Secretary of Embassy to Paris. Three months afterwards (January 18, 1873), upon his father's death, he succeeded to the title as the second Baron Lytton. Twice during that same year, from April 13 to May 17, and again from Sept. 14 to Oct. 22, he acted at Paris as Chargé d'Affaires, and to the close of his career in the French capital as Secretary of Embassy, he was always, during the absence of the ambassador, accredited there as Minister Plenipotentiary. His lordship, having previously declined the Governorship of Madras, was appointed Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at Lisbon in the December of 1874; and, after occupying that post for a year, was suddenly informed by telegram, in the January of 1876, of his nomination by Mr. Disraeli as Viceroy of India. Hastening to London to complete his arrangements for assuming this high office, his Excellency, on the 1st of March, took his departure for Hindostan. Midway on the journey Lord Lytton met by pre-arrangement in Egypt H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, then on his way home from his tour through India. Immediately on his arrival at Calcutta, his Excellency was sworn in as Governor-General and Viceroy on the 12th April, 1876; and on the 1st Jan., 1877, surrounded by all the princes of Hindostan, presided at the gorgeous ceremonial which marked on the plains of Delhi the Proclamation of Her Majesty Queen Victoria as Empress of India. In Dec. 1877, the Queen conferred upon him the honour of the Grand Cross of the civil division of the Order of the Bath. On the 12th of December, 1879, an attempt was made to assassinate Lord Lytton, happily without any ill effect whatever. The principal event of Lord Lytton's Viceroyalty was the Afghan War. On the 28th of April, 1880, he was raised to the dignity of an earldom, being created Earl of Lytton, of Lytton, in the county of Derby, and Viscount Knebworth, of Knebworth, in the county of Herts. Lord Lytton had previously given in his resignation as Viceroy of India, the Earl of Beaconsfield placing it in the hands of Her Majesty simultaneously with his own resignation, in the April of 1880, of the Premiership. In 1887 he was appointed Ambassador in Paris. In the same year he was elected Rector of the University of Glasgow, and subsequently received from that University the honorary degree of LL.D. Lord Lytton has published (chiefly under the assumed name of Owen Meredith), a number of volumes in prose and verse, amongst which are "Clytemnestra and other Poems," 1855; "The Wanderers," 1859; "Lucile," 1860; and "The Ring of Amasis," 1863. In 1874 appeared in two vols. his "Fables in Song," and also in two vols., the "Speeches of Edward Lord Lytton, with some of his Political Writings, hitherto unpublished, and a Prefatory Memoir by his Son." In 1883, Lord Lytton published two volumes of "The Life, Letters, and Literary Remains of Edward Bulwer, Lord Lytton," and in 1885 the poem of "Glenaveril," in 6 books and 2 vols., followed in 1877 by "After Paradise: or Legends of Exile," and, in 1890, "The Ring of Amasis." The Earl of Lytton married, Oct. 4, 1864, Edith, second daughter of the Hon. Edward Villiers, and niece of the late Earl of Clarendon.

He is also Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and of the Physical, Mathematical, and Physiological Societies of London.

MCCARTHY, Justin, M.P., was born at Cork in Nov. 1830. After receiving a liberal education there, he became attached to the staff of a Liverpool paper, in 1853. He entered the Reporters' Gallery of the House of Commons in 1860, for the Morning Star, became foreign editor of that paper the following autumn, and chief editor in 1864; he resigned the latter post in 1868, and travelled through the United States for nearly three years, visiting thirty-five of the thirty-seven States. Mr. McCarthy has contributed to the London Review, the Westminster Review, the Fortnightly Review, the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary Review, to several English magazines, and to many American periodicals. He is the author of "The Waterdale Neighbours," 1867; "My Enemy's Daughter," 1869; "Lady Judith," 1871; "A Fair Saxon," 1873; "Linley Rochford," 1874; "Dear Lady Disdain," 1875; "Miss Misanthrope," 1877; "Donna Quixote," 1879; "The Comet of a Season," 1881; "Maid of Athens," 1883; "Camiola," 1885 (novels); of "Con Amore," a volume of critical essays; and "Prohibitory Legislation in the United States," an account of the working of the Liquor Laws in Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Iowa, and other States of the Union.

In collaboration with Mrs. Campbell-Praed he has written three novels, "The Right Honourable," 1886; "The Rebel Rose," 1887; and "The Ladies' Gallery," 1888. Mr. McCarthy's most important work is "A History of Our Own Times," (1878-80), being an account of what happened in these countries, from the accession of Queen Victoria to the general election of 1880. He has published the first and second volumes of a "History of the Four Georges." He has also written a short history of "The Epoch of Reform," the period between 1830 and 1850, published in 1882. Mr. McCarthy is a political writer for one of the London daily papers. He was elected to Parliament as member for the county of Longford, Ireland, in March, 1879, and was re-elected when the dissolution took place in 1880, in both instances without a contest. At the general election, 1885, he contested Derry, and was defeated by a majority of 29, but was immediately elected for Longford, by an immense majority. In 1886 he contested Derry again and was defeated by a majority of 3, while at the same time he was returned unopposed for Longford. He claimed the Derry seat and obtained it on petition, and then elected to sit for Derry. He has since lectured in America. He is a Home-Ruler, and was Vice-President of the Irish Parliamentary party in the House of Commons before the rejection of Mr. Parnell by the majority, when Mr. McCarthy was by them elected President.

MACAULAY, James, M.A., M.D., was born at Edinburgh, May 22, 1817. His early education was received at the Edinburgh Academy. In 1830 he entered the University of Edinburgh, where he took degrees in arts and in medicine, attending also the classes in theology. After graduating in 1841, Dr. Macaulay studied in Paris, and travelled in Italy and Spain. In 1851 he became joint editor of the Literary Gazette, on the retirement of William Jerdan, and retained the appointment till 1857. In the following year he became editor of the Leisure Hour, and the Sunday at Home. From the Leisure Hour office was issued a few years ago, The Boy's Own Paper, which was started in order to take the place of the pernicious weekly literature which had previously been provided; and was followed by The Girl's Own Paper. Both were started by Dr. Macaulay as editor. In addition to editing and freely contributing to his magazines he has written "Stirring Stories of Peace and War," and "True Tales of Travel and Adventure, Valour, and Virtue." Dr. Macaulay is the author of "The Truth about Ireland," containing the result of personal observations during repeated visits to the country. One of his best works is "Sea Pictures," furnishing an account of the poetry, history, and physical geography of the sea. He has also published books on Luther, Dr. Johnson, and General Gordon; and in 1887 "Victoria R.I., Her Life and Reign." Dr. Macaulay's latest work is an annotated collection of the "Speeches and Addresses of H.K.H. the Prince of Wales, during twenty-five years, 1863-1888." Dr. Macaulay has been for thirty years the editor-in-chief of the Religious Tract Society's periodicals The Leisure Hour, and Sunday at Home, perhaps the most valuable property of that Society; and their success must be very gratifying to Dr. Macaulay, who has made them what they are.

McCLINTOCK, Admiral Sir Francis Leopold, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S. &c., is a younger son of the late Henry McClintock, Esq., uncle to the first Lord Rathdonnell. He was born at Dundalk in 1819, and entered the navy in 1831. After some years of foreign service Lieutenant McClintock returned to England, about the time when great anxiety began to be felt for the safety of Sir John Franklin and his companions. He accompanied Sir James Clarke Ross as second lieutenant on board H.M.S. Enterprise, in the Arctic Expedition sent out by the Admiralty in 1848. Returning unsuccessful in November, 1849, McClintock joined a second expedition sent out early in 1850, under the command of Captain Horatio Austin, as senior lieutenant of H.M.S. Assistance, Captain (Sir) Erasmus Ommaney. It was his fortune in August, 1850, to see, at Cape Riley, the first traces of the missing expedition. In the following spring, whilst frozen up at Griffith's Island, he signalized himself by an unprecedented sledge journey of 80 days and 760 geographical miles, reaching the most westerly point which had then been attained from the east, in the Arctic regions. Upon the return of this expedition to England in October, 1851, Lieutenant McClintock was promoted to the rank of Commander. The following spring he again proceeded to the Arctic regions in command of H.M.S. Intrepid, one of five vessels composing the third searching expedition, under Sir Edward Belcher's command. In accordance with instructions from the Admiralty, the Intrepid, in company with the Resolute, Captain Kellett, wintered at Melville

Island, in order to search for the heroic Captain McClure and his companions; and most fortunately, they were discovered and rescued, after their three years' imprisonment in the ice. McClintock again distinguished himself by his sledge journey of 105 days and 1,210 geographical miles, into the hitherto unexplored region northward of Melville Island. The comparative perfection to which Arctic sledge-travelling has been carried is almost entirely due to the improvements effected by him. Abandoning four out of the five ships imbedded in the ice, and also McClure's ship, the Investigator, the personnel of this expedition, with McClure and his companions, returned to England in October, 1854, in the dépôt ship North Star, and two relief ships, freshly arrived out, under Captain Inglefield. McClintock was now advanced to the rank of Captain. In 1857 he accepted the command of Lady Franklin's own search expedition—to be fitted out at her expense. He selected, and appropriately equipped, the steam-yacht Fox, of 177 tons, and with 24 companions, sailed on July 1, 1857. He returned on September 20, 1859, having discovered, upon the north-west shore of King William's Island, a record announcing the death of Sir John Franklin and the abandonment of the Erebus and Terror. McClintock brought home intelligence of their great discoveries and the fate of their crews, and many relics of the bold expedition. He published a very interesting account of his most important and successful searching voyage. Captain McClintock was received with great distinction; Knighthood, the Freedom of the City of London, and the highest degrees of the chief Universities were conferred upon him. Her Majesty, by her order in council, sanctioned his time in the Fox to count as sea-time served in the navy, for having brought home the only authentic intelligence of the death of Franklin and the fate of his companions. During the next six years Sir Leopold commanded, in succession, H.M.S. Bulldog, Doris, and Aurora, fulfilling various important and delicate duties abroad. From 1865 to 1868 he served as Commodore of the Jamaica Station. From 1868, until promoted to Rear-Admiral in 1871, he was a naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen; from 1872 to 1877 Admiral-Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, when he was promoted to Vice-Admiral; and from 1879 to 1882 he served as Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian Stations. In 1884 he became a full Admiral and also an Elder

Brother of the Corporation of the Trinity House; and in 1887 he was selected for one of the few pensions open to Admirals, for "good and meritorious services." He is the author of "The Voyage of the Fox in the Arctic Seas," which has gone through five editions. In 1870 Sir Leopold McClintock married Annette Elizabeth, second daughter of Robert Foster Dunlop, Esq., of Monasterboice House, co. Louth, by Anna Elizabeth, sister of tenth Viscount Massereene and Ferrard, and has issue. Residence,—8, Atherstone Terrace, S.W.; club,—United Service.

MACCOLL, The Rev. Malcolm, was born March 27, 1838, at Glenfinan, a sheep farm, occupied by his father, in Inverness-shire, and was educated at Edinburgh, at Trinity College, Glenalmond, and at the University of Naples. He was appointed assistant-curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, in 1861; chaplain to the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, 1862-3; curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, 1864-7. He spent the period between 1867 and 1869 in Southern Italy; and was collated to the rectory of St. George, in the city of London, in 1871. MAC CORMAC, Sir William, was born at Belfast, Jan. 17, 1836, being the eldest son of Henry Mac Cormac, M.D., and Mary Newsam. He was educated in the Belfast Institution, in Dublin, and in Paris; he became Bachelor and Master of Arts, also Master in Surgery, and Doctor of Science honoris causa of the Queen's University, and received its gold medal. He was afterwards a member of the Senate, and Examiner in Surgery of the University. He was appointed Surgeon, and subsequently Consulting Surgeon, to the Belfast Royal Hospital. He saw service at Metz and Sedan, during the Franco-German war, 1870-1, as surgeon-in-chief of the Anglo-American ambulance, and during the Turco-Serbian war, 1876. He is one of the Senior Surgeons, and Lecturer on Surgery, at St. Thomas's Hospital, and Consulting Surgeon to the French Hospital, Italian Hospital, and Queen Charlotte's Hospital. He is a Fellow of the English and Irish Colleges of Surgeons, and lately Examiner in Surgery in the University of London. He is a member of the Council and of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and Examiner in Surgery for Her Majesty's Naval Medical Service. In 1881 he acted as honorary Secretary-General of the International Medical Congress in London, and in consideration of his services in this capacity the Queen conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. He is a Knight of the Legion of Honour, Commander of the Orders of the Medjidieh, the Dannebrog, the Crown of Italy, and the Takovo; also possessor of the orders of the Crown of Prussia, North Star of Sweden, St. Iago of Portugal, Ritter Kreuz of Bavaria, and Merit of Spain. Sir William Mac Cormac is the author of "Work under the Red Cross," and treatises on "Antiseptic Surgery," and "Surgical Operations," besides numerous surgical papers contributed to medical journals and addressed to medical societies.

M'CORMICK, The Rev. Joseph, M.A., D.D., was born in the year 1834, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1857, M.A. 1860, D.D. Dublin ad eundem, 1884.) While at Cambridge he rowed in the University Eight, and was Captain of the University Eleven. He was ordained in 1858, and was for two years curate of St. Peter's, Regent Square, London; he was then appointed Rector of Dunmore East, Waterford, Ireland, where he remained until 1864, when he became Assistant Minister of St. Stephen's, Marylebone. In 1867 he was appointed Perpetual Curate of St. Peter's, Deptford, and in 1875 he accepted the important Vicarage of Hull. He was made Rural Dean of Hull in 1875, and Canon of York in 1884.

McCORMICK, Robert, F.R.C.S., R.N., Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, and late Naturalist and Geologist of the Antarctic Expedition under the late Admiral Sir James Clark

Ross, R.N., (as attested by Sir Richard Owen, K.C.B., F.R.S.) is the only son of Robert McCormick, a naval surgeon (lost in the shipwreck of H.M.S. Defence, in 1811), and was born at Runham, Norfolk, July 22, 1800. He was a pupil of Sir Astley Cooper at Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospitals. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, Dec. 6, 1822, and an honorary Fellow in 1844. He entered the navy in 1823, on board H.M.S. Queen Charlotte, the flagship of the late Sir James Hawkins Whitshed, at Portsmouth. He served three times on the West India Station, and accompanied Sir Edward Parry in H.M.S. Hecla in his attempt to reach the North Pole. Sir Edward gave him the charge of the ornithological collection and of a lieutenant's watch on board the ship. In 1836 Mr. McCormick joined H.M.S. Terror, commissioned for the relief of the ice-bound whale-ships; and in April, 1839, H.M.S. Erebus, employed with the Terror in the Antarctic Expedition, on a voyage for magnetic observation and discovery in the South Polar Regions; and, after a perilous voyage of four years, with the onerous duties of geologist and zoologist, in addition to his medical duties as chief medical officer of the Expedition, thereby saving the country the extra expense of a special naturalist, he was, on his return, the only officer (eligible for promotion) left unpromoted. From 1845 to 1848 he was Surgeon of H.M. yacht William and Mary at Woolwich, which was considered a life appointment when he joined her, and had hitherto been so held. But he was placed on half-pay, nevertheless, at the termination of the usual three years' service. He was one of the first, in 1847, to call the attention of the Admiralty to the fate of Sir John Franklin; and his long experience in Polar service enabled him to lay before the Board promising plans of search, at the time, for the missing ships, he himself volunteering to carry them out. But it was not till after repeated applications, and plan after plan ignored, that he was at last sent out in the North Star in 1852. He was given the command of an open boat, manned by six volunteers from the North Star, which he called the Forlorn Hope, the season being too far advanced; but after a three weeks' exploration, amid tempestuous weather, he set at rest the then mooted question that there was no opening between Baring Bay and Jones's Sound. On March 13, 1853, he was benighted in a dense fog, and had to bivouac in the snowdrift, with a temperature 32° below zero Fahr. Having in vain volunteered to explore Smith Sound into the Polar Ocean, if given the command of the Mary yacht of 12 tons, lying useless at Beechey Island, his former boat's crew volunteering to accompany him, he returned to England in H.M.S. Phœnix. On Jan. 6, 1857, he laid before the Royal Geographical Society and the Admiralty his last plan of search (by King William's Land, through Bellot's Strait), for records of the lost ships. This plan was subsequently successfully carried out by Sir Leopold McClintock, and the all-important "record" found, as he had anticipated, near Cape Felix. He was awarded the Arctic Medal in 1857, and the Greenwich Hospital pension in 1876. He was compulsorily placed on the retired list in 1865, deprived of the usual step in rank, from his not having served the time for the "Inspectorship." He is author of the "Boat Voyage up the Wellington Channel," "Plans of Search in the Arctic Ocean," and "Geology of Tasmania, New Zealand, Antarctic Continent, and Isles of the South," in the Appendix to Admiral Sir James Clark Ross's "Antarctic Expedition," "Voyages of Discovery in the Arctic and Antarctic Seas," and "Round the World, with an open boat Expedition in the Forlorn Hope, in Search of Franklin," in 2 vols., royal 8vo., with maps and numerous illustrations from the author's own sketches, dedicated to the Duke of Edinburgh and the officers of the Royal Navy.

McCOSH, James, D.D., LL.D., D.Lit., was born at Carskeoch, Ayrshire, Scotland, April 1, 1811. He was educated at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, became a minister of the Church of Scotland in Arbroath, in 1835, removed to Brechin in 1839, where he took an active part in the organisation of the Free Church of Scotland in 1843, and was appointed Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in Queen's College, Belfast, in 1851. In 1868 he went to America to become President of the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, and at once assumed a prominent place among American divines and educators. This position he resigned in 1887, and in 1888 was succeeded by Dr. Patton. He retained the Chair of Philosophy, however, which he had occupied in connection with the presidency, and continued to lecture before the College until 1890, when his advanced age caused him to relinquish all active work. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Aberdeen in 1850, and by Harvard in 1868. He also received the degree of D.Lit. from Queen's University, Belfast. Besides numerous contributions to British and American reviews; he has published "The Method of the Divine Government, Physical and Moral," and, in conjunction with Dr. Dickie, "Typical Forms and Special Ends in Creation," 1856; "The Intuitions of the Mind inductively investigated," 1860; "The Supernatural in Relation to the Natural," 1862; "Examination of Mill's Philosophy," 1866; "Inaugural Address at Princeton," 1868; "Laws of Discursive Thought, being a Treatise on Formal Logic," 1869; "Christianity and Positivism," 1871; "The Scottish Philosophy," 1874; a reply to Tyndall's noted Belfast Address, 1875; "The Development Hypothesis," 1876; "The Emotions," 1880; "Criteria of Diverse Kinds of Truth as offered to Agnosticism," 1882; "Certitude, Providence and Prayer," 1883; "Development, what it can do and what it cannot do," 1883; "Energy: Efficient and Final Cause," 1883; "Agnosticism of Hume and Huxley," 1884; "Locke's Theory of Knowledge," 1884; "A Criticism of the Critical Philosophy," 1884; "The New Departure in College Education," 1885; "Herbert Spencer's Philosophy," 1885; "Psychology, the Cognitive Powers," 1886; "Religious Aspect of Evolution," 1888; "Gospel Sermons," 1888; "First and Fundamental Truths," 1889; "Tests of Various Kinds of Truth," 1889; and some occasional sermons and addresses. In 1887 he re-issued his philosophical series in three vols., under the titles of "Realistic Philosophy," 2 vols.; and "Psychology: the Motive Powers."

McCOY, Professor Frederick, C.M.G., M.A., D.Sc. (Cantab.), F.R.S., son of Dr. Simon McCoy, M.D., was born in Dublin, in 1823, and educated originally for the medical profession; attending lectures, hospital practice, &c., in Dublin and Cambridge; but while yet too young to be admitted to the profession, devoted himself entirely to the study of all the branches of Natural Science, classifying the collections of the Geological and Royal Societies of Dublin, with the object of applying recent Zoology to Palæontology as the basis of Stratigraphical Geology. He then accepted the offer of Sir Richard Griffith to make the palæontological investigations required for the Geological Map of Ireland for the Boundary Survey, publishing the results in a large quarto volume in 1844, with numerous plates of the several hundred new species, entitled "Synopsis of the Carboniferous Limestone Fossils of Ireland," and a smaller one in 1846, "Synopsis of the Silurian Fossils of Ireland." He was then invited by

Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., and Sir Henry de la Bèche to join the Imperial Geological Survey of Ireland then commenced, and after completing the maps of the districts surveyed by him in the field, he was appointed by Sir Robert Peel's government as one of the first Professors of the Queen's University in Ireland, the Chair of Geology and Mineralogy in the Northern College being assigned to him, lecturing in the Queen's College, Belfast, and Examining in Dublin. About this time he undertook, in conjunction with Professor Sedgwick, the large work on British Palæozoic Rocks and Fossils, based on the materials in the Woodwardian Collection at Cambridge, and made the critical examination of the great series of Fossils of the older formations brought together by Professor Sedgwick; the results of these labours being deemed worthy of the compliment of publication by the Syndics of the University Press of Cambridge, in a large quarto volume, with numerous plates of new discoveries in the Carboniferous, Devonian, Silurian, and Cambrian Formations, issued in 1852, as the second volume of a proposed joint work (of which the 1st volume, to have been on the Rocks, by Professor Sedgwick, was never published), entitled "British Palæozoic Rocks and Fossils, by Professor Sedgwick and Professor McCoy. He was then appointed by Sir J. Herschel, and the Astronomer Royal, Sir G. B. Airy, as the first Professor of Natural Science in the University of Melbourne, where, having taken part in the formation of the University, he lectured on Chemistry and Mineralogy, Botany, Comparative Anatomy and Zoology, and Geology and Palæontology for upwards of thirty years. He also established the National Museum of Natural History and Geology at Melbourne, of which he is Director, raising it to a distinguished position by the extent of the collections and perfection of the classification. He was Chairman of the first Royal Commission on the Gold Fields of Victoria; Member from the first of the Royal Commission on Technological Instruction; Member of the Royal Commission on Education; Member of the various Royal Commissions for International and Intercolonial Exhibitions of Victoria. He was appointed Government Palæontologist at the early stage of the Geological Survey, determining the ages of the various tracts published on the maps. For over thirty years he has prepared, and continues to publish in decades at short intervals, two works for the Government of Victoria, one entitled "Prodromus of the Zoology of Victoria," with coloured figures from the life, and another, "Prodrömus of the Palæontology of Victoria." He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in 1880, created one of the first Doctors of Science honoris causâ, by the University of Cambridge; and the Royal University of Ireland also conferred on him their highest degrees in Arts and Sciences. He was created a Knight or Chevalier of the Royal Order of the Crown of Italy by King Victor Emanuel, and has been offered similar distinctions by other foreign sovereigns in recognition of his scientific work, and in 1886 received the decoration of C.M.G. from Her Majesty. He also received the Emperor of Austria's great gold medal for Arts and Sciences; the Murchison medal from the Geological Society of London, and other similar distinctions. He was elected one of the few (only 30 subjects of the Queen being eligible) Honorary Members of the Cambridge Philosophical Society. Is honorary active Member of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow, and Honorary Fellow and Member of many other British and Foreign scientific bodies. He has published about a hundred memoirs on every branch of Zoology and Palæontology in the Annals of Natural History and other periodicals.

MAC CUNN, Professor Hamish, composer, was born at Greenock, March 22, 1868, and is the son of James Mac Cunn, formerly shipowner in Greenock. He was educated at various schools in Greenock, and by private tutors, and commenced the study of music at the early age of six years. He pursued these studies until 1883, when he gained an Educational Scholarship for composition at the then newly established Royal College of Music, London. There he studied principally under Dr. C. H. Hubert Parry until 1886, when he resigned his scholarship. His first introduction to the public was at the Crystal Palace, in 1886, when at one of the Saturday concerts Mr. Manns produced his overture entitled "The Land of the Mountain and the Flood," which gained for its composer immediate fame. His principal works are: "Chior Mhor," overture for orchestra; "Bonnie Kilmeny," cantata for soli, chorus and orchestra; concert overture, "The Land of the Mountain and the Flood;" "Lord Ullin's Daughter," ballad for chorus and orchestra; "The Ship o' the Fiend," ballad for orchestra; "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," ballad—overture for orchestra; "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," dramatic cantata for soli, chorus and orchestra,

Besides the above-mentioned, he is the author of many other songs, part-songs, &c. Mr. Mac Cunn worships, in his art, the spirit which inspired the old Bards of Scotland, and that that spirit breathes through all his music he considers to be his greatest distinction. He is a Professor of Composition at the Royal Academy of Music, London. In June, 1889, he married the only daughter of John Pettie, Esq., R.A.

After travelling in the East and on the continent for some years, he was appointed Resident Medical Officer to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat in 1886; since which time he has devoted his attention solely to the study of affections of the nose, throat and ear. In the following year he was appointed Honorary Physician to the same institution, which office he holds at the present time. During the year 1888 Dr. Macdonald devoted his attention specially to a scientific investigation of the functions of the nose; the results of his experiments being published in a volume entitled "On the Respiratory Functions of the Nose." He had previously published, 1887, a brochure entitled "The Forms of Nasal Obstruction in relation to Throat and Ear Disease." He has since added to these, "Board School Laryngitis," 1889, and "A Treatise on Diseases of the Nose and its Accessory Cavities," 1890. Besides the above he has contributed many articles and papers to the Medical Societies and Journals, and is one of the editors of and contributors to the Medical Annual.

He studied law with the late Mr. George Mackenzie, was called to the Bar, United Canada, in Hilary Term, 1836; and was appointed a Q.C. in 1846, and is a Benchet, ex-officio, of the Law Society of Ontario. He is the grand representative in Canada of the Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England, and holds the rank of a Past Grand Senior Warden of the Freemasons of Canada. He was a member of the Executive Council of Canada in 1847-48, 1854-62, 1864; and was Receiver General in 1847; Commissioner of Crown Lands 1847-48; Attorney-General 1854-62, 1864-67; and Prime Minister, 1858; Government Leader in the Assembly 1864-67; Minister of Militia Affairs 1862-65-67. He was requested to take the place of Sir E. P. Taché as Prime Minister, on the death of that gentleman in 1865, but waived his claim in favour of Sir N. E. Belleau. He has been a delegate to England and other countries on public business on many occasions, and was chairman of the London Colonial Conference 1866-67, when the act of union known as the "British North America Act," was passed by the Imperial Parliament. On July 1, 1867, when the New Constitution came into force, Sir John Macdonald was called upon to form the first Government for the new Dominion, and was sworn of the Privy Council and appointed Minister of Justice and Attorney-General of Canada, an office which he continued to fill until he and his Ministry resigned on the Pacific Railway charges, Nov. 6, 1873. On the resignation of the Reform Administration, Oct., 1878, he formed the present Government, in which he became Minister of the Interior; resigned this Portfolio and became President of the Council and Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs Oct. 17, 1883. In 1871 he was appointed one of Her Majesty's Joint High Commissioners and Plenipotentiaries, together with Earl de Grey (now Marquis of Ripon), Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir Edward Thornton, and the Right Hon. Montague Bernard, to act in connection with five commissioners named by the President of the United States, for the settlement of the Alabama claims, and of matters in dispute between Great Britain and the United States, the labours of which Joint High Commission resulted in the Treaty of Washington, signed at Washington, U.S., on May 8, 1871. He received the degree of D.C.L. (hon.) from Oxford University, 1865. Is also LL.D. of Queen's University, Kingston, and of McGill University, Montreal, and a D.C.L. of the University of Trinity College, Toronto; was created a K.C.B. (civil) July, 1867, and a G.C.B. He was nominated a member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, July, 1872, and sworn in Aug. 1879. Unanimously elected leader of the Canadian Liberal Conservative Opposition, Nov. 6, 1873, and became Premier and Minister of the Interior on Oct. 17, 1878. In his position as leader of the Opposition, Sir John, on several occasions, gave the late Government the benefit of his ability and long experience in perfecting several of their most important measures, notably the Insolvent Act and the Act constituting the Supreme Court of the Dominion. During the summer of 1880, Sir John visited England in company with Ministers of Railways and Agriculture, where they arranged the contract for the construction of the Pacific Railway, to which Parliament has given effect. He visited England again Nov., 1884, and while there was recognised as the pioneer of the idea of Imperial Unity. He attended the conference held in London, in Nov., 1884, at which the Imperial Federation league was formed, and he moved the appointment of a General Committee to conduct its affairs. Sir John married (1st), Isabella, daughter of the late Alexander Clark, Esq., of Dalnavert, Inverness-shire, Scotland (she died 1856); (2nd), 1867, Susan Agnes, daughter of the late Hon. T. J. Bernard, a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council of the Island of Jamaica.

MCDONALD, John Blake, R.S.A., a descendant of the family of McDonalds of Keppoch, was born in the parish of Boharn, Morayshire, in 1829. He received his early education at his native place, and was for a short period attached to farm life. Developing a taste for art he came to Edinburgh in 1852, where he attended the Board of Trustees' School of Art; and afterwards, for several years, studied under Robert Scott Lauder, receiving previous to 1862 from the Royal Scottish Academy several prizes, and in that year the first prize for painting from life. In the same year he was elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1862 he painted "Prince Charlie leaving Scotland, or the Last of the Stuart Race," which was exhibited at the Edinburgh Exhibition of 1886, and there greatly admired by the Queen and the Prince of Wales. Within the next few years he produced the following pictures: "A Scene from the Legend of Montrose;" "The Quest of Henry Morton;" "King James and the Witches;" and "The Massacre of Glencoe;" the latter is now in the National Gallery. He also produced numerous paintings of subjects from various of Sir Walter Scott's Works, including "The Lady of the Lake;" "The Antiquary;" "The Heart of Mid Lothian;" "Waverley" and "Rob Roy;" all which were engraved for the Royal Association for the Promotion of Fine Arts, by Lumb Stocks, R.A., Bell, Le Conte, and others. "Van Tromp's Duel" was another picture of this period. In 1876 he went to Venice for six months, where he made several sketches of Venetian scenery, which, on his return, he painted in water-colours and oil. He has made several visits at various times to other places on the Continent in connection with his art, including Paris, Jena, Brussels, and Cologne. After 1876 he turned his attention to landscape painting. His first painting of this class was "Strathrye, at the head of Loch Leven"; representing the lines

"Ben Ledi saw the cross of fire,
It flashed like lightning up Strathrye."

This was followed by "The Garry above Struan," in the Edinburgh Exhibition of this year. He had as a pupil for 8 years, W. E. Lockhart, R.S.A., whose "Jubilee Picture" is in the Edinburgh Exhibition of this year.

MACDONALD, John Denis, M.D., F.R.S., Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, R.N., youngest son of the late James Macdonald, Esq., of Cork, and Catherine his wife (daughter of the late Denis McCarthy, Esq., of Kilcoleman), was born Oct. 26, 1826, and educated under his father's supervision. In 1841 he became the apprentice and pupil of the late Dr.

Wm. L. Meredith, House-Surgeon to the South Infirmary, Cork; and commenced his professional studies in the Cork School of Medicine, but completed them in the King's College, London, where he succeeded Dr. Martin Duncan, F.R.S., as prosecutor to the late Professor R. B. Todd, F.R.S., and Sir William Bowman, Bart., then joint professors of physiology. Here he had the advantage of attending the Botanical lectures of the late Professor Edward Forbes and the Zoological course of Professor T. Rymer Jones, who may be said to have first inspired him with a taste for Natural History. He was the winner of Sir William Fergusson's prize in Surgery, the Medical Society's prize, and a Certificate in Medicine, while connected with the College. Having passed the College of Surgeons he entered the Navy as Assistant Surgeon in 1849; was appointed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth; took charge of the Medical Museum, and made numerous pathological drawings and records, preserved in the Library. Subsequently he was appointed to H.M.S. Herald, Captain Henry Mangles Denham, F.R.S., Feb. 18, 1852, for surveying and exploring service in the S.W. Pacific. Before proceeding to join the ship, he was introduced by Professor Edward Forbes to Professor Huxley, who had already so largely studied and written upon the Invertebrate Fauna of the South Seas. Dr. Macdonald profited much by the kind advice and information communicated to him by the Professor, whose discoveries he afterwards had numerous opportunities of verifying, while himself studying the topography and natural history of the different localities visited either in the ship or in the steam tender the "Torch." These included both sides of the Australian Continent, Tasmania, the Islands in Bass's Strait, the Percy Islands, New Hebrides, New Caledonia, the Isle of Pines and the Fiji Group; and microscopical drawings and determinations of all the more important soundings and products of dredge and towing net obtained in the expedition were communicated from time to time to the learned societies at home. He materially assisted Mr. John Macgillivray, the appointed naturalist, and Mr. Frederic Matthew Rayner, the surgeon, in making the large collection of objects of natural history which were sent home, and presented by the Lords of the Admiralty to the British Museum. He headed a perilous exploring expedition into the interior of Viti Levu, ascending the Rewa river to its source at the Moli vei tala, with a terrestrial horizon for nearly a month. An abstract of the report sent home by the captain was published by the Geographical Society in the volume for 1857. Soon after this, the Rev. Mr. Baker, Wesleyan Missionary, and a party of native teachers were clubbed and eaten in the Solo ira district. Much information was furnished from time to time to the Colonial Office, and on leaving the Colony a gold chronometer was presented to Dr. Macdonald by the Governor-General, Sir William Denison, R.E., F.R.S., members of the Legislative Assembly, and other gentlemen in recognition of services rendered. He was also made Corresponding Member of the Australian Museum by his valued friend the late William Sharp Macleay, Esq., the gifted author of the "Horæ Entomologicae," whose splendid library at Elizabeth Bay was frequently consulted when objects of interest presented themselves. On arriving in England in 1859, at the age of 33, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and was promoted and appointed the same year to H.M.S. Icarus, (Commander Nowell Salmon) and in the West Indies encountered almost single-handed (two Medical Officers dying in succession) one of the most formidable epidemics of yellow fever on record. Some of the particulars connected with it will be found in the article on Yellow Fever in Reynolds' System of Medicine. He was awarded the McDougall Brisbane Gold Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, was also adjudged but not awarded the Keith prize, the technical reason being that he could not be called a Scottish Naturalist, as specified in the bequest. He gained the Sir Gilbert Blane Gold Medal for the journal of H.M.S. Lord Warden flag-ship, Mediterranean Station (1871) under Admirals Sir Alexander Milne and Sir Hastings Yelverton, successive commanders in chief; and was frequently engaged as one of the medical board of examiners, and he subsequently superintended the Naval Medical Officers entering the Army Medical School, as Professor of Naval Hygiene and a member of the Senate. Dr. Macdonald was promoted to the rank of Inspector-General of Hospitals, &c. in 1880; appointed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth, in 1883; and placed on the retired list in 1886. The following are some of his published works:—"Sound and Colour," setting forth the undulatory theory as the only trustworthy basis of analogy, 1869; "Guide to the Microscopical Examination of Drinking Water," 1875; "Outlines of Naval Hygiene," 1881,

He was created C.B. 1886, and is a J.P. and D.L. for the County of the City of Edinburgh, and a member of H.M. Board of Manufactures. He became Colonel-Commandant of the Queen's Rifle Vol. Brigade (Royal Scots) 1882, and Brigadier-General of the Forth Brigade 1888; F.R.S.E. 1886 and F.R.S. 1888; Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers 1886; Member of the Council of the Royal Company of Archers (Queen's Body Guard for Scotland); Chairman of Royal Commission on Boundaries of Glasgow 1888; unsuccessfully contested Edinburgh 1874 and 1880, and Haddington Burghs 1878. He sat as M.P. for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews 1885-88. He is an eminent electrician, having received numerous Medals at International Exhibitions for inventions; is an authority on Criminal Law; and his books and lectures on Drill and Tactics have been used as a basis for the British Infantry drill. His chief works are "Macdonald on Tactics;" "Treatise on the Criminal Law;" "Our Trip to Blunderland;" "Common Sense on Parade or Drill without Stays," &c. He married in 1864, Adelaide Jeanette, daughter of Major Doran of Ely House, Wexford; she died in 1872.

MCDUGALL, The Hon. William, C.B., Q.C., and a Privy Councillor for Canada, was born at Toronto, Jan. 25, 1822. He was educated at Toronto and at Victoria College, and afterwards studied law. From 1848 till 1858 he conducted at Toronto a monthly journal on agriculture, and from 1850 edited the North American, which was merged in the Toronto Globe in 1857. He was first elected to Parliament as a Reformer in 1858; was appointed Commissioner of Crown Lands, and a member of the Executive Council in a Reform Ministry in May, 1862; and resigned office with his colleagues in March, 1864, on questions of constitutional changes; in June of the same year accepted the office of Provincial Secretary in a coalition ministry, formed to carry a measure to unite British America under one government. During the Fenian troubles in the summer of 1866, Mr. Mc Dougall was charged with the duties of Minister of Marine. In the first Dominion Government of 1867 he was made Minister of Public Works, which position he held until 1869. In 1868 he and Sir George Cartier were sent to England to confer with the Imperial Government on some questions that had arisen between the Provinces, including the acquisition of the North-West Territory and Rupert's Land, then claimed by the Hudson Bay Company, under its charter from Charles II. After five months' negotiations the delegates concluded the purchase of nearly one half the North American continent for £300,000, and one twentieth of the prairie land surveyed within twenty years. In 1869 he was commissioned Lieut.-Governor of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territories, but the half-breed rebellion at the time prevented his entering the country. Returning to Ottawa he resumed his place in Parliament, and declined to assume the Governorship after the suppression of the outbreak. In 1873 he was the Special Commissioner of the Dominion Government to confer with the Imperial authorities on the subject of the Fisheries and Emigration. Mr. McDougall sat for South Simcoe in the Ontario Legislature from May, 1875, to Sept. 1878, when he resigned to contest Halton in the Dominion Parliament, in which he was successful. He was offered the Governorship of British Columbia or the Chief Justiceship of Manitoba in 1878, both of which he declined. He has resumed the practice of his profession at Ottawa. In 1867 he was created C.B. (Civil).

MACDUFF, The Rev. Dr. J. R., second son of Alexander Macduff, of Bonhard, Perthshire, was born in 1818, and educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh. From New York and Glasgow he received the degree of D.D. In 1843 he was ordained minister of the parish of Kettins, Forfarshire, and in 1849 was presented to the parish of St. Madoes, Perthshire, where he remained until appointed to the new church of Sandyford, Glasgow. Dr. Macduff has published a very large number of religious works, which have attained an immense circulation (upwards of three millions) in this country and America: amongst them may be mentioned "Memories of Bethany," "Memories of Gennesaret," "The Prophet of Fire," "The Shepherd and his Flock," "Sunsets on the Hebrew Mountains," "Comfort ye, Comfort ye," "The Golden Gospel," "Morning and Night Watches," "The Bow in the Cloud," "Morning Family Prayers," "Gloria Patri, a book of private devotion," "In Christo, the Monogram of St. Paul," "The Bible Forget-me-not Series." Amongst his poems are "Wells of Baca," "Knocking," "Gates of Praise." He has also written a number of story books, of which "The Story of a Dewdrop," "The Story of a Shell," "The Parish of Taxwood," are the best known. After 15 years of work in Glasgow Dr. Macduff retired to Chislehurst, Kent, where he now occupies himself with writing.

MACFIE, Robert Andrew, F.R.C.I., F.R.S.E., &c., was born at Leith, Oct. 4, 1811, and is the son of John Macfie and Alison Thorburn, his wife. After the completion of his studies with credit at the High Schools of Edinburgh and Leith, and the University of Edinburgh, he entered upon his business career in 1827, and continued it until about 1863, in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Liverpool successively, as a sugar-refiner. He early mingled with mercantile pursuits, and gave attention to national, social, and religious questions of the period, including some bearing on trade, such as, in particular, those of partnership, importations, patents, copyright, and currency. He holds that there should be free importation of raw materials and cereals, but with a turn of the beam given by the tariff to the products of home manufacturing and suchlike industry; that patents and copyright of design in as far as they give power to monopoly, and subject operations to payment of royalties, are inconsistent and incompatible with fair Free Trade, in which opinion he followed and supported Mr. Cobden. He has promulgated some or all of these views in the great associations of the day, and in the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce (of which, under the late Dr. Leone Levi, he was one of the founders, and is now an honorary life-director), as well as in Parliament, in which he sat from 1868 to 1874 as representative of the Leith district of burghs. While in Parliament he also paid special attention to the questions of the Colonies, and of National Defence. Mr. Macfie likewise interested himself in favour of Imperial Federation or Unity, being the first candidate who called attention to this subject in an electioneering printed address. Soon after he entered Parliament he proposed a motion on the subject of patents, which Lord Selborne (then Sir Roundell Palmer) honoured by seconding and Lord Derby by supporting. His books on Copyright and Patents contain voluminous collections of facts and opinions thereon. He is an appointed Knight of the Order of Kalakaua. He is spending the close of an active life, not altogether in idleness, on his beautiful estate of Dreghorn, on the slope of the Pentlands, adjoining the Scottish capital. One of the movements that he has taken up or initiated there, is the project of a deep water canal between the Forth and the Clyde, which he considers would be a necessity in war, and an inestimable advantage in peace.

He has written "Cervantes," an overture for orchestra; a scherzo for the same; overture to a comedy; a string quartet, and many other pieces in MS., but the composition which made him famous was his opera "Colomba," based upon Mérimée's celebrated story. This work (of which the Libretto was written by Dr. Hueffer) was produced with very great success by the Carl Rosa Company at Drury Lane, in 1884. His second opera, "The Troubadour," was produced in the summer of 1886; and at the Leeds Festival of 1886 his cantata, "The Story of Sayid," was performed with success; and, in 1890, "Ravenswood" was equally successful at the Lyceum. He published in 1888 "The Fatal Illness of Frederick the Noble," and resigned his connection with the College of Physicians at the close of that year. In 1889 he contributed to the Contemporary Review some essays entitled "The Voice in Singing and Speaking."

MacKINLAY, Mrs. John, née Antoinette Sterling, an eminent contralto, was born in the State of New York in 1850, and was educated as a vocalist under Abella, Marchesi, Pauline Viardot, and Manuel Garcia. She made her début at one of the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts in 1873, and at once became a general favourite for ballads and Scotch songs. Her rendering of "The Better Land," and "The Lost Chord," is faultless. In 1875 she married Mr. John MacKinlay.

McLACHLAN, Robert, F.R.S., was born in London April 10, 1837, and educated principally at Ilford in Essex. His father, Hugh McLachlan, a native of Greenock, settled in London early in life, and was eminently successful as a chronometer maker. His mother, whose maiden name was Thompson, was from Northamptonshire. Robert, the youngest of five children, early showed a taste for natural history, which, as years sped on, concentrated itself upon botany, and subsequently upon entomology. A voyage to New South Wales and China, in 1855-56, led to his collecting Australian plants; and on his return to England his desire to have them named led to his acquaintance with Robert Brown, then Keeper of the Botanical Department of the British Museum. Contact with this celebrated botanist had a distinct influence on his subsequent scientific career. In 1858 he was elected a Member of the Entomological Society of London, of which he became successively Secretary, Treasurer, and President, the latter in 1885-86. He was elected, in 1862, a Fellow of the Linnean Society, and of the Royal Society in 1877, and is also a Fellow of the Zoological and of the Royal Horticultural Societies, and on the Honorary List of the New Zealand Institute, the Royal Society of Liège, the Entomological Societies of Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Sweden, Russia, &c. His attention has been directed to entomology in general, and he has, on several occasions, acted as scientific adviser to the Colonial Office. Repeated visits to the Continent have kept him in frequent intercourse with the entomologists of other countries. Amongst his general works perhaps the principal are the article "Insects," in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and "The Entomological Results of the last Arctic Expedition," published in the Journal of the Linnean Society. As a specialist he has particularly attended to the Order Neuroptera, upon which his publications are very numerous, the principal separate work, a bulky 8vo, of upwards of 600 pages, with 76 plates, "Revision and Synopsis of the Trichoptera (or Caddis-flies) of the European Fauna, with Supplement," 1874-84, the first attempt which has been made at working out exhaustively a special group of insects on characters based on certain structural peculiarities, and which has served as a departure in the case of workers of other groups. Mr. McLachlan has been a frequent contributor to most of the Natural History Journals during his time, and was for 17 consecutive years a contributor to the "Zoological Record," and has acted as an editor of the Entomologist's Monthly Magazine, since its establishment in 1864.

MACLAGAN, Professor Sir Douglas, eldest son of the late David MacLagan, M.D., F.R.S.E., Physician to the Forces, and Surgeon in Ordinary to the Queen in Scotland, was born at Ayr, N.B., in 1812, and educated at the High School of Edinburgh, and subsequently at the University of Edinburgh. He became Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, 1863, and has been President of both the Royal College of Surgeons and of Physicians (Edin.), an honour held only by his father; is V.P.R.S.E., and Deputy-Lieutenant of the City of Edinburgh. Sir D. MacLagan holds the following posts:—Professor of Medical Jurisprudence and Public Health in the University; Surgeon-General of the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen's Body-Guard for Scotland; Surgeon-Major of the Queen's Edinburgh Rifle Volunteer Brigade; Medical Adviser to H.M. Prisons Commissioners for Scotland; and Supervisor, on behalf of the Privy Council, of Pharmaceutical Examinations in Scotland. He is the author of "Nugæ Canoræ Medicæ," and of numerous papers on Medical Jurisprudence, and on Materia Medica and Therapeutics, in the medical journals. He was made Knight Bachelor in 1886.

MACLAGAN, The Right Rev. William Dalrymple, D.D., Bishop of Lichfield, is son of David MacLagan, M.D., Physician to the Forces, a distinguished medical officer who served in the Peninsular War. He was born at Edinburgh in 1826, and educated in his native city. In early life he served in the army in India, and retired with the rank of lieutenant in 1852. Then he went through the ordinary university course at St. Peter's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1856; M.A. 1860; D.D., jure dignitatis, 1878). He was ordained deacon in 1856, and priest in 1857. He served the curacies of St. Saviour, Paddington, and St. Stephen, Marylebone, till 1860, when he was appointed Secretary to the London Diocesan Church Building Society. In 1865 he was appointed Curate-in-charge of Enfield, and in 1869 Lord Chancellor Hatherley gave him the Rectory of St. Mary, Newington. When Newington was transferred to Rochester, the Bishop of London, in order to retain Mr. Maclagan in his diocese, promoted him to the vicarage of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, where he remained till 1878, when he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to the Bishopric of Lichfield, which had become vacant by the death of Dr. Selwyn. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, June 24, 1878. Dr. Maclagan has published one or two detached sermons; a Charge delivered to the Clergy and Churchwardens of his Diocese in 1880; and several other addresses to the Clergy, and Parochial Papers. In conjunction with Dr. Archibald Weir he edited "The Church and the Age: Essays on the Principles and present Position of the Anglican Church," 1870.

MACLURE, The Very Rev. Edward Craig, M.A., Dean of Manchester, is the eldest brother of Mr. J. W. Maclure, M.P., and was educated at the Manchester Grammar School, where he was the exhibitor of his year. He graduated B.A. and M.A. at Brazenose College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar and Hulseian Exhibitor. After occupying curacies at St. John's, Ladywood, Birmingham, and St. Pancras, Middlesex, he became vicar of Burnley in 1863, and held that position for fourteen years. During one half of that time he was chairman of the Burnley School Board. On the death of Dr. Molesworth, in 1877, he was appointed vicar of Rochdale by the late Bishop of Manchester. In 1878 he became Honorary Canon of Manchester, and in 1879 Rural Dean. In Rochdale, and previously at Burnley, he has carried out important works of church restoration and extension. Canon Maclure has always undertaken a very considerable share of diocesan work, being honorary secretary of the Diocesan Conference and the Diocesan Board of Education. He is also honorary secretary to the Training College at Warrington. In 1888 he was one of the honorary secretaries of the Church Congress in Manchester, and was appointed Dean of Manchester in July, 1890.

MACMAHON, Marie Edmé Patrick Maurice de, Duc de Magenta, a Marshal of France, ex-President of the French Republic, born at Sully, July 13, 1808, derives his descent from an Irish family who risked and lost all for the last of the Stuart kings. The MacMahons, carrying their national traditions, ancestral pride, and historic name to France, mingled their blood by marriage with the old nobility of their adopted country. This member of the family entered the military service of France in 1825, at the school of St. Cyr; was sent to the Algerian wars in 1830; while acting as aide-de-camp to Gen. Achard, took part in the expedition to Antwerp in 1832; attained to the rank of captain in 1833; and after holding the post of aide-de-camp to several African generals, and taking part in the assault of Constantine, was nominated Major of Foot Chasseurs in 1840, Lieut.-Col. of the Foreign Legion in 1842, Colonel of the 41st of the Line in 1845, and General of Brigade in 1848. When, in 1855, Gen. Canrobert left the Crimea, Gen. MacMahon, then in France, was selected by the Emperor to succeed him in the command of a division; and when the chiefs of the allied armies resolved on assaulting Sebastopol, Sept. 8, they assigned to Gen. MacMahon the perilous post of carrying the works of the Malukoff. For his brilliant success on this occasion he was made Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour; and in 1856 was nominated a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath. Gen. MacMahon, who took a conspicuous part in the Italian campaign of 1859, received the baton of a Marshal, and was created Duke of Magenta, in commemoration of that victory. He represented France at the coronation of William III. of Prussia, in Nov., 1861, was nominated to the command of the 3rd corps d'armée Oct. 14, 1862, and was nominated Governor-General of Algeria by decree Sept. 1, 1864. In this capacity he inaugurated a new system, the tendency of which was to create an Arab kingdom. It proved, however, a complete failure. The French and other European colonists became so dissatisfied, that in 1861 a large number of them left for

Brazil, while thousands of the natives perished from hunger. A great outcry was raised in France against the Marshal, whose policy was also severely censured by Mgr. de Lavigerie, Bishop of Algiers. On the breaking out of the war with Prussia, Marshal MacMahon was intrusted with the command of the First Army Corps, whose head-quarters were at Strasburg. On Aug. 6, 1870, the Crown Prince of Prussia attacked the united Army Corps of Generals MacMahon, Faily, and Canrobert, drawn up in a position at Woerth. MacMahon had under him 50,000 men in all, and occupied a strong defensive position on the slopes of the Vosges, but the French line was turned by the Prussians at two points, and their left and centre broken, notwithstanding a desperate charge of cavalry which was ordered by MacMahon as a last resort. MacMahon retired on the following day to Saverne, next to Toul (13th), Rheims (21st), and Reithel (22nd). On the 30th his forces were again defeated by the Prussians, being driven back from Beaumont beyond the Meuse, near Mouzon. He was chief in command at the battle of Sedan (Sept. 1), but received a severe wound in the thigh at the beginning of the engagement, whereupon the command devolved on General Wimpffen, who signed the capitulation. MacMahon was made a prisoner of war, and conveyed into Germany. Having recovered from his wound, he left Wiesbaden for France, March 13, 1871, and was nominated in the following month Commander-in-Chief of the Army at Versailles. He successfully conducted the siege of Paris against the Commune, and ably assisted M. Thiers in reorganising the Army. In Dec., 1871, he was requested by the Parisian Press Union to become a candidate to represent Paris in the National Assembly, but he refused to accept the nomination. On M. Thiers resigning the Presidency of the Republic May 24, 1873, he was elected to the vacant office by the Assembly. Of the 392 members who voted, 390 voted for Marshal MacMahon, who immediately afterwards accepted the Headship of the Executive, his consent being carried back to the Assembly, couched in a letter which was a model of manly straightforwardness and modesty. "A heavy responsibility," he wrote, "is thrust upon my patriotism, but with the aid of God, the devotion of the army, which will always be the army of the law, and the support of all honest men, we will continue together the work of liberating the territory, and restoring moral order throughout the country; we will maintain eternal peace and the principles on which society is based. That this shall be done I pledge my word as an honest man and a soldier." He at once proceeded to form a Conservative administration, his Ministers being the Duc de Broglie, Foreign Affairs and Vice-President of the Council; M. Ernoul, Justice; M. Beulé, Interior; M. Magne, Finance; General de Cissey (who remained par interim), War; Vice-Admiral Dompierre d'Hornoy, Marine and Colonies; M. Batbie, Public Instruction, Public Worship, and Fine Arts; M. Desseilligny, and M. de la Bouillerie. The Septennate was voted Nov. 19, 1873, when the National Assembly, by 378 votes against 310, entrusted him with the exercise of power for seven years. On May 16, 1877, Marshal MacMahon addressed to M. Jules Simon, the President of the Council, a letter reproaching him with incapacity. This compelled the latter to resign and a new ministry was formed. The Duc de Broglie became President of the Council, M. de Fourtou, Minister of the Interior, the Duc Decazes remained at the Foreign Office, and General Berthaut retained his post as Minister of War. The Chamber of Deputies was immediately prorogued, and the Senate, by a small majority, resolved to exercise the power conferred by the Constitution, by concurring with the President of the Republic in a dissolution. Accordingly the Marshal dissolved the Chamber of Deputies by a decree dated June 25, 1877. After a period in which the government "screw" was mercilessly applied, the elections for the new Chamber were held throughout France on Oct. 14, resulting in the return of 335 Republicans and 198 Anti-Republicans, the latter classed as 89 Bonapartists, 41 Legitimists, 38 Orleanists, and 30 "MacMahonists." The Republican majority refused to vote the supplies, and after a brief interval of hesitation the Marshal came to the conclusion that M. Gambetta's famous alternative—se soumettre ou se démettre—must be acted upon. Accordingly he yielded to the Republican majority and a new ministry was formed under the presidency of M. Dufaure, with M. Léon Say as Minister of Finance, and M. Waddington at the Foreign Office. Thus the period of uneasiness—the prolonged crisis—that began on May 16, was peacefully brought to a close on Dec. 14, 1877. The Senatorial elections at the beginning of 1879 gave the Republican party an effective working majority in the Upper Chamber. M. Dufaure's Cabinet was at once pressed to remove the most conspicuous Anti-Republicans among the generals and officials. Marshal MacMahon refused to be a party to these measures, and, seeing that resistance was idle, resigned on Jan. 30, and was succeeded by M. Grévy. As President of the Republic, Marshal MacMahon was decorated with the insignia of various foreign Orders.

MACMAHON, Major Percy Alexander, R.A., F.R.S., is the second son of the late Brigadier General P. W. MacMahon, C.B., and was born at Sliema, in the island of Malta, Sept. 26, 1854. He was educated at the Proprietary School, Cheltenham, and afterwards at Cheltenham College, where he obtained the Junior Mathematical Scholarship in Jan., 1868. He entered the Royal Military Academy as a cadet in Jan., 1871, and subsequently in Sept., 1872, entered the Royal Artillery as a Lieutenant. He was promoted Captain in Oct., 1881, and, in March, 1882, was appointed Instructor of Mathematics at the Royal Military Academy. From that date he has been engaged in research in Pure Mathematics. Numerous memoirs from his pen, chiefly connected with Higher Algebra, have been published in the American Journal of Mathematics, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, the Messenger of Mathematics, and the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society. He is an associate member of the Ordnance Committee; a Member of the Council of the London Mathematical Society, and he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in June, 1890.

MACMILLAN, The Rev. Hugh, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.S.A., Scotland, born at Aberfeldy, Perthshire, Sept. 17, 1833, was educated at Breadalbane Academy and Edinburgh University. He was appointed Free Church Minister of Kirk-michael, Perthshire, in 1859, translated in 1864 to Free St. Peter's Church, Glasgow; and in 1878 to the Free West Church, Greenock, his present charge. He received the degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews in Feb. 1871; was elected two months afterwards F.R.S.E. In April, 1879, the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh; and in 1883 he became an F.S.A. Dr. Macmillan is the author of "Bible Teachings on Nature," 1866, now in its 25th edition, translated into Danish, Swedish, German, and other continental languages; "First Forms of Vegetation," in its third thousand "Holidays on High Lands," which has run through two large editions; "The True Vine," also in its sixth edition; "The Ministry of Nature," in its seventh edition; "The Garden and the City," in its second edition; "Sunglints in the Wilderness;" "The Sabbath of the Fields," translated into Danish and Norwegian; "Our Lord's Three Raisings from the Dead;" "Two Worlds are Ours;" and "The Marriage in Cana of Galilee;" "The Olive Leaf;" "Roman Mosaics, or Studies in Rome and its Neighbourhood;" and "The Riviera;" besides numerous contributions to quarterly reviews and religious and scientific periodicals.

McMURDO, Gen. Sir William. K.C.B., of Scotch extraction, born about 1819, entered the army as ensign in the 78th Highlanders in 1837, and proceeding to India was employed on the staff. From the commencement of the brilliant operations in Scinde, conducted by the late Sir Charles Napier, the great zeal and personal intrepidity manifested by Lieut. McMurdo—most conspicuously at the battle of Meeanee, Feb. 17, 1843—attracted the attention of that illustrious commander, whose daughter he afterwards married. Sir Charles appointed him his Assistant Quartermaster-General, and on many occasions expressed in very emphatic terms the high opinion he entertained of his conduct and services. He became Major in 1848, Lieut.-Col. in 1853, and Col. in 1854. At an early period of the campaign in the Crimea, when the inadequate means of land conveyance for the service of the troops had become apparent, he was intrusted with the formation and command of the Land Transport Corps—since designated the Military Train—which new branch of our military establishment he rendered efficient, and for this service was made C.B. Not long after the volunteer movement of 1859 assumed a permanent character, Col. McMurdo was selected as the fittest officer for the important and responsible post of Inspector-General of Volunteer Forces for the term of five years; towards the expiration of which, the most active and influential promoters of the movement took immediate steps to mark their high appreciation of his zealous and valuable services in the organization of the force, by appointing a committee to raise a subscription for the purpose of presenting him on his retirement with a suitable testimonial of their respect and regard. In Feb. 1865, the honorary colonelcies of the Inns of Court Volunteers and of the Engineers and Railway Volunteer Staff Corps were accepted by him.

MACNAUGHTEN, Edward, The Right Hon. Lord, Lord of Appeal, is the son of Sir Edward Macnaughten, 2nd Baronet, and was born in 1830. He was educated at Cambridge; called to the Bar, 1857; made Q.C., 1880; and appointed a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, 1887, in succession to Lord Blackburn. He was returned to Parliament as Conservative member for Antrim in 1880, and continued to sit for that constituency until his appointment as Lord of Appeal.

MACRORIE, The Right Rev. William Kenneth, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Maritzburg, born Feb. 8, 1831, in Liverpool, is the son of David Macrorie, M.D. a well-known physician in that town, and received his education at Winchester and at Brasenose College, Oxford (B.A., 1852, M.A., 1855). He held the Rectory of Wapping in the Diocese of London from 1861 to 1866, when he was appointed Vicar of Accrington, Lancashire, which preferment he held until his consecration as Bishop of Maritzburg, or Pietermaritzburg, Jan. 25, 1869. The ceremony was performed at Capetown, the consecrating prelate being the metropolitan, Dr. Robert Gray, Bishop of Capetown, assisted by the Bishops of Grahamstown, St. Helena, and the Orange Free State. A protest signed by 129 persons having been presented against Dr. Macrorie's consecration, on the ground that Maritzburg was in the see of Natal, which already had a legal Bishop (Colenso), the Metropolitan replied that it could not be accepted as a protest, the signers having no right to protest, but that he would receive it as "the expression of views of certain individuals."

McVAIL, Professor, was born in Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Oct. 1845, and studied Medicine in Anderson's College, Glasgow. He is L.R.C.P. Edin., 1866; M.B. Glasgow, 1876; F.F.P.S. Glasg., 1878; and was formerly House Surgeon in Alnwick Infirmary, late Professor of Physiology in Anderson's College, and subsequently lecturer on the Practice of Medicine in the Western Extramural School, and Member of the General Medical Council of the United Kingdom. At the present time he is Extra Physician to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, and Professor of Clinical Medicine in St. Mungo's College, Glasgow. Dr. McVail is the author of various valuable contributions to Medical literature, principally with reference to diseases of the respiratory organs—e.g., "The Mechanism of Respiration in Normal and Abnormal Conditions" (Lancet, 1882); "The Wavy

Respiratory Sound of Phthisis" (Brit. Med. Journ. 1882); "Pathology of Pulmonary Emphysema" (Ibid. 1884), &c. But he is most widely known in connexion with what may be termed academic politics. For the past decade he has been the acknowledged and energetic leader of the reform party in the University of Glasgow; and it is very largely to him, and to the movement in which he has taken so active a part, that the recent thoroughgoing Universities (Scotland) Act is due. The main plank of the reform platform has been the destruction of the practical monopoly of teaching, of examining, and of degree granting, enjoyed by the professors in the Scottish Universities, while the principal means urged for the accomplishment of this object have been an entire re-casting of the governing body of the Universities, the fuller recognition of extra-mural teaching, the prohibition of the degree-examination of candidates by their own teachers, and the affiliation of new colleges. Dr. McVail has also been the moving spirit in the erection and incorporation of St. Mungo's College, the medical faculty of which is in intimate connexion with the Royal Infirmary of Glasgow. On the board of Directors of the College, he occupies a seat as one of the representatives chosen by the Managers of the Royal Infirmary.

MACWHIRTER, John, A.R.A., was born in 1839, at Slateford, near Edinburgh, and educated at Peebles. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1863. In the following year he came to London, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy on Jan. 22, 1879. He was elected an Honorary Member of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1882; elected member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, same year; exhibited in R.A. 1884, "The Windings of the Forth," "A Sermon by the Sea," and "Home of the Grizzly Bear;" 1885, "Track of a Hurricane," "Iona," "Loch Scavaig;" "The Three Witches," 1886. Mr. MacWhirter has painted "Loch Cornisk, Skye," 1867; "A great while ago the world began with hey ho, the wind and the rain," 1871; "Caledonia," 1875; "The Lady of the Woods," 1876; "The Three Graces," 1878; "The Valley by the Sea," 1879; "The Lord of the Glen," 1880; "Sunday in the Highlands," and "Mountain Tops," 1881; "A Highland Auction" and "Ossian's Grave," 1882; "Corrie, Isle of Arran," "Sunset Fires," "Nature's Mirror," "A Highland Harvest," 1883; and "Edinburgh from Salisbury Crag," 1887.

MADAGASCAR, Queen of. See RANAVALO, MANJAKA III.

MADDEN, Thomas More, M.D., was born in the Island of Cuba, where his father, the late Dr. R. R. Madden, F.R.C.S. Eng., then filled the office of British representative at the Havanna, in the International Commission for the Abolition of the Slave Trade, to which he was appointed by Lord Palmerston, and for which he had relinquished his practice as a London physician. Dr. Madden, senior, who died in 1886, was not only a prominent member of the anti-slavery party, but was also a prolific and well-known writer, having in the course of his long and varied life published more than forty volumes. Amongst these we may here mention his "Travels in the East," "History of the United Irishmen," "Life and Correspondence of Lady Blessington," "Biography of Savonarola," "The Infirmities of Genius," "History of Periodical Literature," etc. Dr. More Madden entered on medical studies at the age of fourteen, when he was apprenticed to the late Mr. Cusack, Surgeon-in-Ordinary to the Queen in Ireland. Shortly before the completion of pupillage, however, he was forced by symptoms of pulmonary disease to remove to a more genial climate, and the next few years he passed in the South of Spain, Italy, and France, completing his professional studies in Malaga and at the University of Montpellier. Having graduated as a physician, after he returned home in 1862 he became a Member of the London College of Surgeons, and is also a Member of the Dublin College of Physicians, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. After a further period of health travel in Southern Europe, Egypt, Africa, and Australia, he settled down in practice in Dublin. In 1868, having adopted obstetric and gynaecological practice as a specialism, Dr. More Madden was appointed Assistant Physician to the Rotunda Lying-in Hospital. On retirement from that office three years later, he was accorded the special thanks of the governors for "zealous and efficient discharge of his duties, and uniform kindness to the patients." In 1872 he received the French bronze cross, in recognition of services in connection with the organisation of the Irish Ambulance Corps employed during the Franco-Prussian War. In that year, being also Examiner in Obstetric Medicine in the Queen's University, he was appointed Physician to the newly-established Hospital for Sick Children, Dublin; and not long afterwards became Obstetric Physician and Gynaecologist to the Mater Misericordiae Hospital. In addition to these appointments Dr. More Madden is Consultant to the National Lying-in Hospital, and other institutions. In 1878 he was elected Vice-President of the Dublin Obstetrical Society; in 1885 Vice-President of the British Gynaecological Society; in 1886 President of the Obstetric Section of the Academy of Medicine; and more recently he held the office of President of the Obstetric Section of the British Medical Association. He has been also made Honorary or Corresponding Member or Fellow of many medical and scientific societies at home and abroad. Besides a vast number of contributions to medical journals, and several articles in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," and other standard books, Dr. More Madden's writings include the last edition of "The Dublin Practice of Medicine," and "Change of Climate in Midwifery," 3rd edit. 1876; "Spas of Germany, France, and Italy," 1874; "Contributinal Treatment of Chronic Uterine Disease," 1878; "Mental and Nervous Disorders Peculiar to Women," 1883; "Lectures on Gynaecology," 1889; "Child Culture—Mental, Moral, and Physical," 3rd edit. 1890; "On Uterine Tumours," 1887; "Treatment of Dysmenorrhœa and Sterility," London, 1889; "The Health Resorts of Europe and Africa," 2nd edit. 1888. The latter work has been republished in America. Dr. More Madden married the eldest daughter of the late Thos. McDonnell Caffrey, Esq., of Crosthwaite Park, Kingstown, by whom he has two sons and one daughter surviving.

MAGEE, His Grace The Most Rev. William Connor, D.D., Archbishop of York, was born at Cork in 1821, being son of the Rev. John Magee, Curate of the Cathedral Parish, Cork; and grandson of William Magee, Archbishop of Dublin (1822-31). At the age of thirteen he entered Trinity College, Dublin, and subsequently obtained a scholarship, besides other academical distinctions. In due course he took holy orders, and after holding for some time a curacy in a Dublin parish, he was obliged to relinquish it and to proceed for the benefit of his health to Malaga, where he remained two years. On his return, in 1848, he accepted the curacy of St. Saviour's, Bath, which he held about two years. In 1850, he was appointed joint incumbent, and shortly after sole incumbent, of the Octagon Chapel, Bath. When the Liberation Society was organised, Bath formed a counter-association, called the "Bath Church Defence Society," in connection with which Dr. Magee delivered an able lecture on "The Voluntary System, and the Established Church." Such was the effect of this address that similar societies sprang up throughout the country. Subsequently Dr. Magee published "Christ the Light of all Scripture," an Act Sermon preached in the chapel of Trinity College, Dublin, June, 1860; "The Gospel and the Age," preached at the ordination in Whitehall Chapel, 1860; and "The Church's Fear and the Church's Hope," preached in Wells Cathedral, 1864. At Oxford Dr. Magee on several occasions preached one of the Lent lectures, and in Aug. 1861, he delivered a powerful address to the clergy at Radley on "The Relation of the Atonement to the Divine Justice." At Cambridge, and in London too, he very frequently took part in preaching and speaking on behalf of Church societies, and published several lectures delivered at their meetings on "Scepticism," "Baxter and his Times," "The Uses of Prophecy." The Bishop of Bath and Wells conferred on Dr. Magee the honorary rank of Prebendary of Wells some time before he left Bath. In 1860 he succeeded Dean Goulburn as minister of Quebec Chapel, London, and in the following February he was appointed to the rectory of Enniskillen by the University of Dublin. In 1864 he was appointed Dean of Cork, and shortly afterwards Dean of the Chapel Royal, Dublin. He was appointed Donnellan Lecturer for 1865-66, a position in Dublin analogous to that of Bampton Lecturer at Oxford. Dr. Magee was frequently selected as one of the special preachers at St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey, and the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, as well as at Windsor, before Her Majesty. He was also selected, in 1868, to preach before the British Association at Norwich and the Church Congress at Dublin. Both these sermons were published, under the respective titles of "The Christian Theory of the Origin of the Christian Life," and "The Breaking Net." Dr. Magee was appointed Bishop of Peterborough in 1868, on the death of Dr. Jeune, being, it is said, the only Trinity College, Dublin, man ever appointed to an English See. He has from time to time taken part in the debates of the House of Lords, and his speech against the Bill for the disestablishment of the Irish Church was a remarkable specimen of impassioned eloquence. Four sermons preached by him at Norwich, in "Defence and Confirmation of the Faith," attracted much attention, and were translated into several continental languages. In 1871

he delivered and published a "Charge," in which he treats of the Athanasian Creed with great force and ability. He presided over the Church Congress at Leicester in 1880. Dr. Magee was nominated Archbishop of York on the death of Archbishop Thomson in Jan., 1891.

MAGRATH, The Rev. John Richard, D.D., son of Nicholas Magrath, Surgeon, R.N., of Manor House, Guernsey, was born in Guernsey, Jan. 29, 1839, and educated at Elizabeth College, before proceeding to Oxford, where he gained a Scholarship at Oriol College. He graduated B.A., with a first class in 1860, was Johnson's Theological Scholar (Queen's College), 1861, and took his M.A. degree, 1863. MAJOR, Richard Henry, F.S.A., and member of many home and foreign learned societies, born in London in 1818, was placed in charge of the maps and charts in the Printed Book Department of the British Museum in Jan., 1844. In Jan., 1867, the collection was raised into a Department, of which Mr. Major was appointed "Keeper." He was the Honorary Secretary, from 1849 till 1858, of the Hakluyt Society, for which he edited "Select Letters of Christopher Columbus," published in 1847; "The History of Travels into Virginia Britannia, by W. Strachey, first Secretary of the Colony," in 1849; "Notes upon Russia," which he translated from the Latin of Herberstein, in 1851-52; and wrote Introductions to "Mendoza's China," edited by Sir George Staunton, Bart., in 1853, and to "Tartar Conquerors in China," edited by the Earl of Ellesmere, in 1854. He edited "India in the Fifteenth Century," in 1857; and "Early Voyages to Terra Australis," in 1859, showing indications of discovery by the Portuguese in the first half of the sixteenth century, but with no discoverer's name. As a sequel, Mr. Major read before the Society of Antiquaries, in 1861, a letter on a MS. document, in the British Museum, by which the honour of the first authenticated discovery of Australia seemed to be transferred from Holland to Portugal, the date of the pretended discovery being 1601. In recognition of the importance of these researches, Dom Pedro V., King of Portugal, conferred on Mr. Major the Knighthood of the Tower and Sword. In 1865 he communicated to the Society of Antiquaries an elaborate memoir on a mappemonde by Leonardo da Vinci, being the earliest known map containing the name of America, now in the Royal Collection at Windsor. In 1868 he published his "Life of Prince Henry of Portugal, surnamed the Navigator, and its Results," a work pronounced "classical" in Germany, Portugal, and England. In testimony of approbation of this work, Dom Luis I., the late King of Portugal, raised Mr. Major to the rank of Officer of the Tower and Sword, and sent him, as a special compliment, the Collar of the Order in gold. His Majesty afterwards conferred on him the rank of Knight Commander of "the most ancient and noble" Order of Santiago; and in acknowledgment of the value of the same work, the Emperor of Brazil made him a Knight Officer of the Order of the Rose of Brazil. In 1873 the original MS. work of Eredia, the supposed first authenticated discoverer of Australia, was found in the Royal Burgundian Library at Brussels, when Mr. Major was the first to detect, and expose in the Archæologia, the pretended discoverer as an impostor. In 1873 Mr. Major edited for the Hakluyt Society the "Voyages of the Venetian Brothers Nicolò and Antonio Zeno to the Northern Seas in the Fourteenth Century; comprising the latest known accounts of the lost Colony of Greenland and of the Northmen in America before Columbus." Having unriddled all the puzzles in this book, which had been declared by the learned John Pinkerton, in his History of Scotland, to be "one of the most puzzling in the whole circle of literature," Mr. Major had the honour to receive from His Majesty the King of Italy, in recognition of his successful labours, the rank of Knight Commander of the Crown of Italy. Mr. Major was one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal Geographical Society, from 1881 to 1884, having previously been for sixteen years one of its Honorary Secretaries.

MALABARI, Behramji Merwanji (né Mehta), an Indian poet, philanthropist, and national reformer, was born at Baroda in 1853, and is the son of Dhanjibhai Mehta, a poor Parsi clerk, who was in the service of the Gaekwar of Baroda, and died when his son was only two years of age. The child was adopted by a maternal relative, named Merwanji Nanaabhai Malabari, who subsequently became his stepfather, and whose name the orphan boy took, in lieu of Mehta. His mother, whose name was Bhikhibai, was a remarkable woman, possessing the rare qualities of irrepressible energy combined with great gentleness of disposition. Her largeness of heart and loving sympathy for the friendless procured for her the esteem of all who had the happiness to know her. She died when her son was eleven years of age. To the ennobling influence of her character her son owes many of the traits which have made him the philanthropist that he is—one who has sacrificed his fortune and devoted his life to the amelioration of the condition of the girls and women of India; and who, in the name of God and of humanity, has undertaken a noble crusade against infant marriages and enforced widowhood among the Hindū races. Malabari began life as a poet, and of his "Niti Vinod" it has been said that some of the poems will live as long as the vernacular of Gujarat endures. He has likewise written English verse which has elicited the admiration of Lord Tennyson, Professor Max Müller, and others. His poetical works are "Niti Vinod," "Wilson Virah," "Tarod-i-Ittefaq," and "The Indian Muse in an English Garb." He has also written "Gujarat and Gujaratis," which has passed into three editions, and is esteemed for its humorous and picturesque style. Mr. Malabari is editor and proprietor of the Indian Spectator, the leading native journal of India which is known to have done most valuable service to the state and the country; and also of the Voice of India. He has written largely on important political and moral questions, and is the greatest social reformer in India, known to be in touch with high authorities and leading thinkers in this country. He visited England in 1890, and his "Appeal from the Daughters of India," with his eloquent pleadings on their behalf in the Times and other journals, created a profound impression in the highest circles. An influential committee has been formed to aid his efforts. It consists of former Secretaries of State for India, Viceroy, Governors, high legal and medical authorities, and prominent representatives of Church and State. It is to be hoped, in the interests of humanity, that their combined efforts under Mr. Malabari's guidance will result in the liberation of Indian children and women from the tyranny of custom.

MALAN, The Rev. Solomon Caesar, D.D., son of the late Rev. Caesar Malan, D.D., of Geneva, was born in 1812, and educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1837, having obtained the Boden Sanscrit, and the Pusey and Ellerton Hebrew Scholarships, together with a second-class in classics. In 1838 he went to Calcutta as Classical Professor in Bishop's College, was ordained deacon, and in 1839 became Secretary to the Asiatic Society of Bengal. Returning to England, he was admitted into Balliol College, whence he took his M.A. degree in 1843, and after being ordained priest, was appointed Vicar of Broadwindsor, Dorset, 1845-85, and Prebendary of Sarum in 1871, a dignity which he resigned in 1875. He was elected Member of the Society of Northern Antiquaries, Copenhagen, 1840; Rural Dean and Diocesan Inspector of Schools, 1846-53. He is well known as an Orientalist. Two of his principal works are "The Gospel according to St. John translated from the eleven oldest except the Latin, with footnotes to every translation, and a criticism on all the 1,340 alterations proposed by the 'five clergymen' in their Revision of that Gospel." Also "Original Notes on the Book of Proverbs, according to the authorised version. Vol. I., ch. i.—x." Dr. Malan has translated many volumes of prayers and sermons, &c., from Armenian, Arabic, and other Eastern languages, and has written a number of works on theological subjects, amongst which may be mentioned "An Outline of the Early Jewish Church," and "On Ritualism." Dr. Malan, however, is better known among lovers of art for his pencil and water-colour drawings. He has also published chants and other musical compositions.

MALCOM KHAN, His Highness Prince Nazem ud Dowleh, was born at Ispahan in 1832, and is descended from a noble family of great antiquity in Persia. His father, Yacoub Khan, was one of the ablest and most learned statesmen of Persia. After receiving a careful training at home under his father's immediate care, Malcom Khan was, at the age of twelve, sent to Paris, where he successfully applied himself to the study of mathematics and other sciences, literature, &c., and more especially to the study of the institutions of Europe as compared with those of Persia. When he returned to Persia he was at once appointed Conseiller Intime and A.D.C. to the Shah at Teheran. At the age of twenty-two Malcom Khan was sent to Europe with the special mission of elaborating and concluding treaties of friendship and commerce with the Governments of Europe and of the United States of America. On his return to Persia he ardently promoted the introduction of reforms in the Persian administration. To this end he had already written several pamphlets and books on literary, religious, and political subjects connected with Persia. As an author he introduced into the Persian language the methods and best style of European writers, and entirely transformed the diplomatic language of Persia. In 1860 the ideas of Prince Malcom Khan were found too advanced for immediate realisation; he therefore obtained leave of absence and went to take up his residence at Constantinople, where he married, in 1865, the Princess Dadian, by whom he has had four children, three daughters, and a son now being educated at Eton. In 1872 he was asked to draw up a comprehensive programme of reforms to be carried out in Persia; and was recalled to Teheran and occupied the post second to that of the Grand Vizir, in which position all the great home and foreign affairs of the State passed through his hands; and in consequence of many important reforms realised under his immediate direction, he was created Nazem ud Dowleh (Reformer of the Empire), a title which ranks among the highest in the land. One of his best successes was to decide the Shah to undertake his first journey to Europe in 1873. The Prince was accordingly sent on an extraordinary mission to all the Courts of Europe to prepare for the visit of his sovereign. After accompanying the Shah during his tour, Prince Malcom Khan, unwilling to return to Persia, remained in Europe as Persian Minister at the Courts of London, Vienna, Berlin, and other countries. During the Shah's second visit to Europe, 1878, Prince Malcom Khan was sent to the Congress of Berlin as Persian Plenipotentiary, where he succeeded in obtaining the restitution by Turkey of a disputed province, and on that occasion was raised to the rank of Highness. Prince Malcom Khan was the constant promoter of reforms: finding that the regeneration of Oriental countries could be effected only by radical religious transformations, and by a new system of public instruction, he devoted a large portion of his time and means to modify the Arabic alphabet. He recently published an edition of the celebrated "Gulistan" and other works in his new phonetic system of Arabic writing. It is generally considered that the improvement of the relations between Great Britain and Persia, and the success which attended the visit of the Shah to this country in 1889, are due mostly to Prince Malcom Khan. Upon his sovereign's return to Persia he resigned the Embassy of London, on account of personal differences with the acting Grand Vizir. In the early part of June, 1890, the Shah offered him the Persian Embassy at Rome, but his Highness declined the appointment on the plea of his health, he needing rest.

districts, and was appointed with Mr. Kennedy to confer with the Italian Commissioner in November, 1875, with respect to the renewal of the Treaty of August 6, 1863, between Great Britain and Italy. On April 29, 1878, he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Constantinople in the absence of the Ambassador. The following year he went to Egypt as Agent-Consul-General, and a Minister Plenipotentiary in the diplomatic service. He was called to the Bar, 1856, and became Recorder of Bickingham, 1855-6; Judge of the High Court at Calcutta, 1863-78; and was appointed Reader of Indian Law in the University of Oxford, 1878, which office he still holds. He is a Fellow of All Souls and of Balliol Colleges, and Justice of the Peace for the county of Oxford. He has written "The Elements of Law" (Oxford Clarendon Press).

MARKHAM, Clements Robert, C.B., F.R.S., F.S.A., son of the Rev. David F. Markham, canon of Windsor, and of Catherine, daughter of Sir W. Milner, Bart., of Nunappleton, co. York, was born July 20, 1830, at Stillingfleet, near York, was educated at Westminster School, and entered the Navy in 1844. He was appointed Naval Cadet on board H.M.S. Collingwood, bearing the flag of Sir George Seymour, on the Pacific station, Midshipman in 1846, passed for a Lieutenant in 1850, and left the Navy in 1851. He became a clerk in the Board of Control in 1855, Assistant Secretary in the India Office in 1867, and was in charge of the Geographical department of the India Office from 1867 to 1877, when he retired. From 1862 to 1864 he was Private Secretary to Mr. T. G. Baring (now Earl of Northbrook). He was Secretary to the Hakluyt Society from 1858 to 1889, and Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society from 1863 to 1888. In 1888 he received the Society's Gold Medal. Mr. Markham served in the Arctic expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, in 1850-51; explored Peru, and the forests of the Eastern Andes in 1852-54; introduced the cultivation of the chinchona plant from South America into India in 1860-61; visited Ceylon and India in 1865-66; served as geographer to the Abyssinian expedition, and was present at the storming of Magdala in 1867-68; and was created a Companion of the Bath in 1871. the Hakluyt Society and papers in the Royal Geographical Society's journal. He also wrote the reports on the Moral and National Progress of India for 1871-72 and 1872-73; and the Peruvian chapters for Winsor's "History of America." Mr. Markham was editor of the Geographical Magazine, 1872-78.

MARKS, Henry Stacy, R.A., was born in London, Sept. 13, 1829. He studied drawing at Leigh's Academy in Newman Street, and gained admission as a student to the Royal Academy in 1851. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in Jan., 1871; an Associate of the Water-Colour Society in March the same year; and a Royal Academician Dec. 19, 1878. Mr. Marks, whose forte is genre and quaint mediævalism, has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy since 1853. His principal pictures are "Toothache in the Middle Ages," 1856; "Dogberry's Charge to the Watch," 1859; "The Franciscan Sculptor," 1861; "Experimental Gunnery in the Middle Ages," 1868; "St. Francis Preaching to the Birds," 1870; "Bookworm," 1871; "Ornithologist" and "What is it?" 1873; "Capital and Labour," 1874; "Jolly Post-Boys," 1875; "The Apothecary," 1876; "The Spider and the Fly," 1877; "Convocation," 1878; "Old Friends" and "Science in Measurement," 1879; "Author and Critics," 1881; "Jack Cade and Lord Say," 1882; "The Old Clock," "The Gentle Craft," and "The Professor," 1883; "Foolish Justices," 1884; "A Good Story" and "A Treatise on Parrots," 1885; "A Delicate Question," 1886; "Dominicans in Feathers" and "The Old Tortoise," 1887; "From Sunny Seas" and "The Hermit and Pelicans," 1888; and "News in the Village," 1889. Mr. Marks has also executed several decorative works, both for private houses and public buildings. Among these may be named the proscenium friezes of the Gaiety Theatre, London, and of the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, the "Canterbury Pilgrims," and a series of 12 panels of birds for Eaton Hall, Chester, the seat of the Duke of Westminster, together with a series of four large lunettes of Storks, Flamingoes, &c., for the staircase of Mr. Stewart Hodgson's house in South Audley Street. In the autumn of 1889 Mr. Marks held an Exhibition of "Birds" at the Fine Art Society's Rooms in New Bond Street, which attracted considerable public notice.

MARLBOROUGH, Bishop of. EARLE, THE RIGHT REV. ALFRED.

MARRIOTT, The Right Hon. Sir William Thackeray, Q.C., M.P., P.C., son of the late Mr. Christopher Marriott, of Crumpsall, near Manchester, was born in 1834, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He took orders and worked for some time as a curate, but feeling conscientious scruples he gave up his clerical career, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1861. He became a Queen's Counsel in 1877, and was made a Benchet of his Inn in 1879. He first entered Parliament as Liberal member for Brighton in 1880; but in 1884, having differed from his party on the question of the clôture, he announced a change in his political opinions and accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. He was re-elected as a Conservative, and returned as such in 1885 and again in 1886. In Lord Salisbury's first administration (having been sworn of the Privy Council) he was Judge Advocate General, a post to which he was again appointed in 1886. Mr. Marriott at one time gained notoriety by his violent attacks on the Liberal party, and in particular on Mr. Chamberlain. The truth of his charges was on the point of being decided in the Law Courts, but when Mr. Chamberlain espoused the Unionist cause the quarrel was made up.

MARRYAT, Florence (Mrs. Francis Lean), sixth daughter of the late Captain Frederick Marryat, R.N., C.B., F.R.S., was born at Brighton, in Sussex, and educated at home. She began to write in 1865, when her first novel, "Love's Conflict," was published, since which time she has written 43 works, most of which have been republished in America and Germany and translated into French, German, Russian, Flemish, and Swedish. She was appointed editor of London Society in 1872, and has been a constant contributor to magazines and newspapers. She is known on the stage as an operatic singer and high-class comedy actress, and has been most successful as an entertainer and lecturer. She published, in 1886, "Tom Tiddler's Ground," and has since published "Gentleman and Courtier," and "The Crown of Shame."

MARSDEN, Alexander, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.A.S., Consulting and Senior Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, London, is the son of the late William Marsden, M.D., founder of the above Institutions. He was born Sept. 22, 1832, and educated at Wimbledon School, and King's College, London. He entered the army in 1854, and served at the General Hospital, Scutari. Early in 1855 he was appointed Surgeon to the Ambulance Corps before Sebastopol, was engaged in several actions with the enemy, and remained on active service till the end of the Crimea war, when he received the Crimean and Turkish war medals. On his return home, in 1856, he was appointed full Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, and subsequently Curator of the Museum and General Superintendent of the former institution. For fifteen years Dr. Marsden worked at these two hospitals, seeing as many as 300 patients a week at the Royal Free, and about 70 to 80 at the Cancer. During the last twelve years he has devoted himself to the latter institution only. He is the author of "A New and Successful Mode of treating Certain Forms of Cancer;" "Cancer Quacks and Cancer Curers;" "The Treatment of Cancer by Chian Turpentine and all other Methods;" "Our Present Means of Successfully Treating or Alleviating Cancer and Tumours of the Breast, Tongue, Lip, &c." He is editor of the 4th edition of the late Dr. W. Marsden's "Treatise on the Nature and Treatment of Cholera," and is the author of numerous other papers.

MARSH, Miss Catherine, is the youngest daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Marsh, Rector of Beddington, Surrey, who died in 1864. For many years she has taken the greatest interest in the improvement of the working classes, for whom she has written narratives of a religious character. Her best known works are "English Hearts and English Hands," "Memorials of Captain Hedley Vicars," the "Life of the Rev. William Marsh, D.D.," a volume of songs and hymns, entitled, "Memory's Pictures," and "Light for the Line; or, the Story of Thomas Ward, a Railway Workman;" also "Brief Memories of the late Earl Cairns." Miss Marsh resided for some time at Beckenham, Kent, to the then rector of which parish her sister is married. During the visitation of cholera in 1866, whilst watching over sufferers from that disease in the wards of the London Hospital, she founded a Convalescent Hospital at Blackrock, Brighton, which has since been established as a permanent institution; and has received nearly 11,000 patients to the present date, 592 being admitted last year.

MARSH, Professor Othniel Charles, Ph.D., LL.D., was born at Lockport, New York, Oct. 29, 1831. He graduated from Yale College in 1860, and from the Yale Scientific School in 1862, and from 1862 to 1865 studied in the Universities of Berlin, Heidelberg, and Breslau. Returning to America in 1866, he was chosen Professor of Palæontology in Yale College, a position he still retains. He devoted himself to the special investigation of the extinct vertebrate animals of the Rocky Mountain districts, and nearly every year since 1868 has organised and led a scientific expedition to those regions. In these explorations more than 1,000 new species of vertebrates have been discovered, many of which represent wholly new orders, and others not before discovered in America. Of these more than 400 have already been described by Professor Marsh in papers most of which have appeared in the American Journal of Science. These papers are nearly 200 in number. Since 1876 he has been engaged in preparing a series of Reports, to be published by Government, giving full illustrated descriptions of his Western discoveries. The first of these, on the Odontornithes, or birds with teeth (34 plates), was issued in 1880, and a second memoir, on the Dinocerata (56 plates), appeared in 1884. A third volume, on the Sauropoda (90 plates), has lately been completed, and several others are in preparation. In 1878 Professor Marsh was President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and since 1883 has been President of the National Academy of Sciences, having recently been re-elected for six years. He is a Fellow of the Geological Society, Zoological Society, and of many other scientific bodies. In 1886 he received the degree of Ph.D. from Heidelberg University, and that of LL.D. from Harvard University.

MARSHALL, Alfred, M.A., born in 1842, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, whence he obtained the title to a probationary fellowship at St. John's College, Oxford, awarded for classical attainments, but preferring mathematical studies he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge. He was second Wrangler in 1865, and was elected Fellow of his College in the same year, and lecturer on Moral Science in 1868. He held this position till 1877, when he was appointed Principal of University College, Bristol. In the same year he married Miss Paley, and in conjunction with her he published, in 1879, the "Economics of Industry." His health having broken down, he resigned his post in 1881 and went abroad. In 1883 he was appointed Lecturer on Political Economy at Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1884 he was made a Fellow of that College. In the same year he was elected to the Chair of Political Economy at his old university, vacant by Professor Fawcett's untimely death; and in the following year he was re-elected a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1889 he delivered the opening address at the Co-operative Congress at Ipswich; and was President of Section F of the British Association for 1890. The first volume of his new treatise on "The Principles of Economics," is just now issuing from the press.

MARSHALL, Arthur Milnes, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Birmingham, on June 8, 1852, and is the second son of William P. Marshall, C.E., for many years Secretary of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers. He received his early education at a private school; and in October, 1871, entered at St. John's College, Cambridge, and graduated as Senior in the Natural Science Tripos of 1874. He spent the first five months of 1875 at Dr. Dohrn's Zoological Station at Naples, then returned to Cambridge, and for the next two years assisted the late Professor Balfour in organising the classes of Comparative Morphology. In 1877 he entered at St. Bartholomew's Hospital; in July, 1879, was appointed Professor of Zoology at Owens College. He graduated B.A. (Lond.) in 1870; B.Sc. (Lond.) 1873; B.A. (Camb.) 1875; D.Sc. (Lond.) 1877; M.A. (Camb.) 1878; M.D. (Camb.) 1882; and was elected to a Fellowship at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1877; and was made F.R.S. in 1885. He has taken an active part, as Secretary, and later as Chairman, of the General Board of Studies in organising the courses of study for the Victoria University; and is the author of several papers in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science, and other journals, dealing with the early stages of development of the Nervous System in Vertebrates, with the structure and physiology of Antedon, with some points in the anatomy of the Pennatulida, etc. He is also the author of "The Frog," 1st edit., 1882, 3rd edit., 1888; and, jointly with Mr. Hurst, is the author of "Practical Zoology," 1st edit., 1886, 2nd edit., 1888.

MARSHALL, George William, LL.D., the eminent genealogist, was born at Ward End House, co. Warwick, April 19, 1830, and is the only son of George Marshall, of Ward End, by Eliza Henshaw, youngest daughter of John Comberbach. He was educated at St. Peter's College, Rulley, and under private tuition, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1853, and as LL.D. in 1873. He became a Barrister of the Middle Temple in 1865, and is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and an Honorary Member of several American Antiquarian Societies; and Rouge Croix Pursuivant of Arms in 1887. He has edited a number of genealogical works, among them: "The Visitations of Nottinghamshire," and "Le Neve's Knights," for the Harleian Society, of which he has been a member of the Council since its foundation; "A Handbook to the Ancient Courts of Probate;" and the first seven volumes of The Genealogist, which magazine was founded by him in 1875. He is probably best known as the compiler of "The Genealogist's Guide," a work which contains between sixty and seventy thousand references to pedigrees, and which has passed through two editions, the first having been issued in 1879.

MARSHALL, Herbert Menzies, youngest son of the late Mr. T. H. Marshall, Judge of the County Court, Leeds, was born at Leeds, Aug. 1, 1841, and educated at Westminster School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1864, second class in the Natural Science Tripos. In the same year he went to Paris for the purpose of studying architecture, and entered the atelier of M. Questel, architect to the Château of Versailles. On his return from Paris, 1867, he became a student of the Royal Academy, and in the following year obtained there the Travelling Studentship in Architecture. The result of travelling in Italy and of constant sketching under a bright sun was to weaken his eyesight so much that he was obliged to give up all work for two years, and especially any architectural drawing. This accident induced him to turn his attention to water-colour painting, as being less trying to the eyes, and in 1871 he exhibited his first drawing at the Dudley Gallery. In 1879 he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and became full member in 1882. Mr. Marshall has held two exhibitions, in 1886 and in 1890, at the galleries of the Fine Art Society, illustrating the scenery of London, his special aim being to show how beautiful and mysterious is the common life of the streets and on the river when seen under the atmospheric effects which are found only in London.

MARSHALL, William Calder, R.A., sculptor, born in 1813, at Edinburgh, where he was educated, and for some years practised his art, studied in London under Chantrey and Bailey, and in 1836 visited Rome. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1835, took up his residence in London permanently in 1839, and was elected an Associate of the Scottish Academy in 1842, of the Royal Academy in 1844, and R.A. in 1852. Mr. Marshall, who is one of the few who have resisted the attractions of the more lucrative branch of his art—portrait-busts—devoted his skill as a modeller of the figure to poetic sculpture. From the Art Union he has received many commissions for ideal works. "The Broken Pitcher," in 1842; "Rebecca" and other models in plaster, were selected by Art Union prize-holders; and a reduction of the "First Whisper of Love," in 1845, was chosen by the holder of the £300 prize. The "Dancing Girl Reposing," obtained the Art Union premium of £500, reduced copies in parian being distributed among the subscribers; and his "Sabrina," executed in 1847, is well known from the porcelain statuette issued by Copeland. Mr. Marshall was one of the three sculptors employed for the new Houses of Parliament, for which he executed the statues of Lord Clarendon and Lord Somers, and has been selected for important statues erected by public subscription,—that in bronze of Sir R. Peel at Manchester, and those of Jenner and Campbell. Jenner's statue, to which there were many foreign subscribers, erected in Trafalgar Square, was afterwards removed to Kensington Gardens. In 1857 Mr. Marshall obtained the first prize of £700 for a design for a national monument to the late Duke of Wellington, and he has executed part of a series of bassi-relievi in marble for the chapel in St. Paul's Cathedral, in which that monument has been placed. Mr. Marshall in 1870 executed the group of Agriculture for the Prince Consort Memorial in Hyde Park. Among other public works on which he has been engaged is a bronze statue of Crompton, the inventor of the mule spinning machine, erected in Bolton; a statue in marble of Sir George Grey, late Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, placed in Cape Town; and a statue of James, seventh Earl of Derby, for the spot on which that nobleman was executed at Bolton. Mr. Marshall was a member of the Royal Commission appointed to represent British and colonial exhibitors at the International Exhibition held at Paris in 1878, and, in recognition of his services, he was nominated a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

MARTIN, Lady, née Helen Fawcett, born in 1819, a daughter of Mrs. Fawcett, an actress of considerable repute, made her début in London, Jan. 5, 1836, at Covent Garden, in the character of Julia, in the "Hunchback." Miss Helen Faucit was the original representative of the heroines in Lord Lytton's "Lady of Lyons," "Money," "The Sea Captain," "Riche-lieu," and the "Duchesse de la Vallière;" in Mr. Robert Browning's "Strafford," the "Blot on the Scutcheon," and "Colombe's Birthday;" in Mr. Westland Marston's "Patrician's Daughter," "The Heart and the World," and "Marie de Meranie;" in Mr. Troughton's "Nina Sforza;" and in many other plays. Her rendering of the Shaksperian characters Juliet, Beatrice, Constance, Imogen, Hermione, Cordelia, Desdemona, Portia, Rosalind, and Lady Macbeth, placed her in the first rank of the interpreters of our great dramatist. Miss Helen Faucit also obtained distinguished success in her representation of "Antigone," "Iphigenia in Aulis," and in "King René's Daughter," an adaptation from the Danish, by Mr. Theodore Martin, now Sir Theodore Martin, K.C.B., to whom she was married in 1851. This lady continued to appear on the stage at rare intervals after her marriage, chiefly for public or charitable purposes only, her last appearances being as Beatrice at Stratford-on-Avon, at the opening of the Memorial Theatre there in April, 1879, and at Manchester as Rosalind in October of that year, for the benefit of the widow of Mr. Charles Calvert, formerly manager of the Princess's Theatre, Manchester. Lady Martin is the authoress of a volume "On some of the Female Characters of Shakspeare," viz., Ophelia, Portia, Desdemona, Juliet, Imogen, Rosalind, and Beatrice, which has since passed through several editions.

MARTIN, John Biddulph, M.A., F.S.S., F.Z.S.S., banker of Lombard Street, was born in 1811, and educated at Harrow, and afterwards proceeded to Exeter College, Oxford, where he took honours in Moderations (Classical Schools), and the degree of M.A. From his early youth Mr. Martin showed that capacity for statistics, and that keen insight into human nature which, combined, alone can make a thorough man of business; and, on leaving Oxford, in 1863, he entered the banking firm of his forefathers, the business of which has been carried on in Lombard Street, tradition says, from the reign of Edward the Fourth, in the latter part of the fifteenth century, and is therefore more than two hundred years older than the Bank of England. It is, in fact, the oldest bank in London, and evidently held a prominent position one hundred and seventy years ago, for it was singled out by Gay, the poet, for the following contrast, which occurs in his letter to Moon, the goldsmith, referring to the South Sea Bubble, which collapsed in 1720:

"When credit sank, and commerce gasping lay,
Thou stoodst, nor sent one bill unpaid away;
When not a guinea chinked on Martin's boards,
And Atwell's self was drained of all his boards."

And, throughout the whole of its long career of prosperity, 1483-1890, the bank has borne an unblemished character, a circumstance of which the firm is justly proud. Mr. John Biddulph Martin's work, however, is by no means confined to the counting-house, he having from his youth upwards, taken an unceasing interest in all that pertains to monetary affairs. The Institute of Bankers elected him as their Treasurer; and he has, from time to time, read papers before the members of the Institute which are printed in the Journal of that body. These include papers on "Our Gold Coinage," "Bank Notes," "Seigniorage," "Movements of Coin and its Equivalents," &c. He has long made the question of the "wear and tear" of our gold coinage a matter of special study, and among other posts of honour which Mr. Martin has occupied has been that on the Coinage Committee appointed by the Institute of Bankers. He is a member of the Council of the Association of Country Bankers, foreign secretary of the Royal Statistical Society, to whose Journal he contributed papers on "Electoral Statistics," 1874 and 1884; and a paper on "The effects of a Crisis on the Banking Interest," 1879. Mr. Martin has written also "The History of the Grasshopper," as his bank is called. He is an honorary member of the Statistical Society of Paris; treasurer of the International Statistical Institute; a member of the Council of the Society of Arts, and of the British Association; and was President of the Statistical and Economic Section of the B.A. in 1886. He is a Life Governor of St. George's Hospital, and Treasurer of the Charing Cross and the Royal Orthopaedic Hospitals, and also of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies; and has contributed to the periodical press various papers on matters of archaeological interest. He married Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull (q. v.)

MARTIN, Mrs. John Biddulph, formerly Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull, a political and social reformer, and one of the most eloquent female orators of modern times, is a daughter of the late Reuben Buckman Clafin, Esq., barrister, and was born in the State of Ohio, U.S.A. The Clafin family are descended, on the maternal side, from the old German families of the Hummels and Moyers whose ancestors were of Royal blood. On the paternal side also, they are of Royal blood, being descended from the ducal house of Hamilton; Mrs. J. Biddulph Martin's great grandfather having been a son of one of the Dukes of Hamilton who are descended from King Robert III. of Scotland, and King James I. of England. She is related likewise to the Underwoods, and to Washington's inseparable companion, the famous American legislator, Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Hamilton, whose statue adorns the Central Park, New York City. Miss Victoria Clafin was married, when quite young, to Dr. Woodhull, a physician, by whom she has two children, a son, and a daughter Miss Zula Maud Woodhull, the authoress of "The Proposal," &c. On the death of Dr. Woodhull, his widow married John Biddulph Martin, Esq., banker, of Lombard Street, who is descended from the mother of Martha Dandridge, the wife of George Washington, the First President of the United States. Thus after the lapse of a century, the families of Washington and of his dearest friend, Alexander Hamilton, are again united! Is this merely a strange coincidence; or is there in it some mysterious lesson for psychologists to study, respecting the eternity of friendship, and the affinity of souls? To Americans it will doubtless have an important significance; and will strengthen the bonds of the cordial goodwill of the whole nation towards this remarkable lady, who, while she is the descendant of kings, is also the representative of America's First President, and of his most intimate friend and counsellor. Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull and her sister Miss Tennessee Clafin (now Lady Cook, by her marriage with Sir Francis Cook, Bart., Viscount Monserrate of the Kingdom of Portugal) were early impressed with the political and civil inequality of the status of the sexes; and, searching into the "Constitution of the United States," discovered in the XIVth and XVth "Articles of Amendment" that the electoral right belongs to every American citizen without reference to sex. Mrs. Woodhull thereupon demanded that right for American women; and in 1872, in recognition of the services which she had rendered to her countrywomen, she was nominated, by a Public National Convention, for the Presidency of the United States, and was well supported. Mrs. Woodhull strove also to arouse the public mind to the importance of intelligent maternity. She dwelt most eloquently upon the terrible consequences of ignorant marriages between the diseased, the morally imbecile, and the otherwise unfit. The results of such marriages, she said, were filling our prisons, our asylums, our hospitals, and indeed, the whole social world, with criminals who never come within the jurisdiction of the law. Mrs. Woodhull's remedy was the education of woman in her duties as wife and mother. She taught that as long as ignorance was esteemed to be purity, social evils would fester, and contaminate society. In morals, also, Mrs. Woodhull has been a fearless reformer. She felt that the inequality in the status of the sexes is a cruel injustice; man, the deceiver, being welcomed in society, while the woman whom he has deceived is ostracized forever. This roused the indignation of the two sisters, and their sympathy with the fallen found utterance in the fervid eloquence of the elder, who, to crowded audiences in all the principal cities throughout the States, proclaimed that the betrayers deserved more severe punishment than the betrayed. The advocacy of such theories drew down terrible persecution on these devoted ladies; and, their health failing, they came to England for rest; and here, after a course of lectures delivered by Mrs. Woodhull in London, Liverpool, Manchester and Nottingham, the sisters married, as stated above, and retired into private life. Mrs. J. Biddulph Martin's published works are "The Garden of Eden," "The Human Body the Temple of God," "The Basis of Physical Life," "The Argument for Woman's Electoral Rights," "Constitutional Equality," "The Review of a Century," "The Origin, Tendencies, and Principles of Government," "Labour and Capital," "Finance and Commerce," "Prophecies of the Present Age," besides numerous addresses, speeches, and letters published in the daily press.

MARTIN, Sir Theodore, K.C.B., LL.D., son of the late James Martin, Esq., solicitor, of Edinburgh, was born there in 1816, and received his education at the High School, and at the University of his native city, of which he is an honorary LL.D. After practising as a solicitor in Edinburgh for several years, he came, in 1846, to London, where he established himself as a parliamentary agent. He first became known as an author by his contributions to Fraser's Magazine and Tait's Magazine, under the signature of "Bon Gaultier," and in conjunction with the late Professor Aytoun he composed the "Book of Ballads," which bears that pseudonym, and a volume of translations of the "Poems and Ballads of Goethe," 1858. He prepared a translation of the Danish poet Henrik Hertz's fine lyrical drama, "King René's Daughter," the principal character, "Iolanthe," being played by Miss Helen Faucit, who in 1851 became Sir T. Martin's wife. His translations of Øhlenschläger's dramas, "Corregio," and "Aladdin or the Wonderful Lamp," published in 1854 and 1857, have made these masterpieces of the Danish poet's genius familiar to a large circle of English readers. His metrical translation of the "Odes of Horace" appeared in 1860, and was immediately republished in the United States. It was followed, ten years later, by a critical essay on Horace's Life and Writings, in the "Ancient Classics for English Readers." In 1882 Sir T. Martin completed his Horatian labours in a translation of Horace's whole works, with a life and notes, in 2 vols. His poetical translation of Catullus (1861, 2nd edit., 1875), was followed by a privately printed volume of "Poems, Original and Translated," 1863, a translation of the "Vita Nuova" of Dante, and a translation of the first part of Goethe's "Faust." In 1886 he published a metrical version of the Second Part of "Faust." In 1867 he published a memoir of Professor Aytoun. It was while he was engaged on this biography that he was requested by the Queen to write the "Life of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," the first volume of which appeared in 1874. His metrical version of Heine's "Poems and Ballads" appeared in 1878. The fifth and concluding volume of the "Life of the Prince Consort," was published on March 15, 1880, and five days afterwards the author received from the hands of the Queen the honour of knighthood, and was invested with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Bath. On Nov. 25, 1880, he was elected Rector of the University of St. Andrews. In 1883 he published a "Life of Lord Lyndhurst," founded on papers furnished by his lordship's widow and family. His last published work is "The Song of the Bell, and other Translations from Schiller, Goethe, Uhland and others," 1889. He is a J. He was a constant contributor to the National Review, of which he was one of the founders. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., U.S.A., in 1872; that of Doctor of Theology by the University of Leyden, in 1875; and that of D.D. by the University of Edinburgh in 1884; that of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford in 1888.

MARTINEZ CAMPOS, Arsenio, a Spanish general and statesman, born in 1834, the son of a brigadier-general, left the Staff School at Madrid with the rank of lieutenant, went through the campaign in Morocco, in 1859, as a member of the staff of the commander-in-chief, O'Donnell, and was there promoted to the rank of major. In 1864 he joined the army of Cuba as colonel, and he remained six years in that island. On his return to Spain in 1870, he was sent, with the title of brigadier-general, to join the Army of the North, which was engaged in repelling the Carlist rebellion. After the abdication of King Amadeo he declined to give in his adhesion to the new order of things, and made no secret of his antipathy to the Republic. He was put on the retired list in 1873, and shortly afterwards was confined in a fortress as a conspirator. From his prison he addressed to General Zabala, Minister of War, the well-known letter in which he requested permission to go and fight, as a private, under the orders of General Concha, the Carlist forces in Navarre and the Basque provinces. This letter obtained for him his liberty, and he was sent to the Army of the North, in April, 1874, to command a division of the 3rd Corps. He took part in the engagements of Las Munecas and Galdames, which led to the siege of Bilbao being raised, and he was the first to enter the liberated city on May 1, 1874. When General Concha reorganized the Liberal army, Martinez Campos was appointed general in command of the 3rd Corps. He fought at the head of his troops, on the 25th, the 26th, and particularly on the 27th of June, the day on which the Commander-in-Chief, General Concha, was killed in the attack on Monte Moru, near Estella. General Martinez Campos, besieged at Zurugay, on the same day, by the main body of the Carlists, opened a passage through the enemy's ranks, at the head of a column which numbered barely 1,800 men, and went to rejoin, at Murillo, the head-quarters, where he was able to organize the retreat of the army on Tafalla. Returning to Madrid, he continued to conspire almost overtly in favour of Don Alfonso, whilst Marshal Serrano, chief of the executive power, was operating against the Carlists. In conjunction with General Jovellar he made the military pronunciamiento of Sagunto, which gave the throne of Spain to Alfonso XII. The new Government sent him into Catalonia, as Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of that military district. In less than a month he pacified the country, put down the Carlist bands, and took the command of the Army of the North. He brought the civil war to a close by the defeat of Don Carlos at Pena de Plata, in March, 1876. The high dignity of Captain-General of the Army, which is equivalent to that of a Marshal of France, was the recompense for his signal services. A year afterwards he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army in Cuba, which the rebels had held in check for seven years. Under his leadership the Spaniards were uniformly victorious, but neither these triumphs nor the strategical talents of the Commander-in-Chief, would have succeeded in bringing about the complete pacification of the island if the recognition of the political rights of the Cubans and new Liberal concessions had not satisfied the demands of the insurgents. On his return to Spain, General Martinez Campos accepted the portfolio of War, and the Presidency of the Council (March 7, 1879), and endeavoured to procure the fulfilment of the promises made to the Cubans; but not obtaining the support of the Cortes, he resigned, and was succeeded by Señor Cánovas del Castillo (Dec. 9, 1879). Early in 1881 the Conservative Government of Señor Cánovas del Castillo was overthrown, and a coalition between Señor Sagasta and General Martinez Campos came into power, and retained it till Oct., 1883, when it resigned in consequence of being unable to obtain from the French Government a satisfactory apology for the insult offered to King Alfonso by the Paris mob on his visit to Paris.

MARVIN, Charles, author, traveller, and journalist, and our greatest authority on Central Asia, was born in 1854. He spent his early life in Russia, and entered the English Civil Service in 1875. The untoward disclosure of the Anglo-Russian Agreement led to his retirement from the Foreign Office in 1878. His first work, "Our Public Offices," attracted considerable attention, and was followed by "The Russian Campaign against the Turcomans." A series of publications bearing upon the Russo-Asian question succeeded, of which the best known is "The Russians at the Gate of Herat." He accompanied the English mission to the Czar's coronation in 1883, and subsequently travelled in the Caucasus and the district of the Caspian sea.

MASPERO, Gaston, a French Egyptologist, was born at Paris June 24, 1846, and after a brilliant course of study at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, he entered the École Normale in 1865. He is the author of "Essai sur l'Inscription Dédicatoire au Temple d'Abydos," 1869; "Une Enquête Judiciaire à Thèbes au Temps de la XX^e Dynastie," 1872; "De Carchemis oppidi situ et Historiâ Antiquissimâ," 1873; "Histoire Ancienne des Peuples de l'Orient," 1875; "De Quelques Navigations des Égyptiens sur les Côtes de la Mer Érythrée," 1879; "Les Contes Populaires de l'Égypte Ancienne," 1881; "Les Mastaba de l'Ancien Empire," 1882; "Guide du Visiteur au Musée de Boulaq," 1883. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour Jan. 15, 1879.

He travelled through Italy and Germany, and made his début at the Opéra Comique, Paris, in 1868, with "La Grand-Tante." He has written also some entr'acts and stage music for Sardou's dramas "Theodora" and the "Crocodile." "Le Mage," a new opera of his, the words by Jean Richepin, will be shortly produced at the Grand-Opéra in Paris; and a drame lyrique, adapted from Goethe's "Werther," although composed a few years ago, has not been produced yet.

MASSEY, Gerald, was born of very poor parents at Tring, in Hertfordshire, May 29, 1828, and received a scanty education at the British and National Schools. At eight years of age he was working twelve hours a day in a silk manufactory. At the age of fifteen he went to London and found work as an errand boy, and at twenty-one he became editor of the Spirit of Freedom. The following year he was one of the secretaries of the "Christian Socialists," and a personal friend of Charles Kingsley and F. D. Maurice. In 1854 he published "The Ballad of Babe Christabel and other Poems," which entered its fifth edition at the end of the year. He then joined the staff of the Athenæum, and for ten years wrote a considerable number of its reviews. For several years he wrote on literary subjects in the Quarterly Review. As early as 1852 Mr. Massey began to take a great interest in mesmerism, spiritualism, and kindred subjects, and he has since delivered many lectures on such matters, both in London and abroad. He has lectured all through North America, Australia, and the colonies, twice from New York to San Francisco, where he is better known and more highly thought of than in England. Of late years he has written very little poetry, but has recently published his "Collected Poems," in 2 vols., under the title of "My Lyrical Life." MASSON, David, Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh, was born Dec. 2, 1822, in Aberdeen, and educated at Marischal College in that city, and at the University of Edinburgh. He began his literary career at the age of nineteen, as editor of a Scotch provincial newspaper, and repairing, in 1844, to London, where he remained about a year, contributed to Fraser's Magazine and other periodicals. He established himself in Edinburgh for two or three years, as a writer for periodical publications, besides having special engagements with the Messrs. Chambers, but returned to London in 1847, where he resided for eighteen years, and was appointed to the Chair of English Language and Literature at University College, London, on the resignation of the late Professor Clough in 1852. He retired from his post in Oct., 1865, having been appointed Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh. He contributed numerous articles to the Quarterly, National, British Quarterly, and North British Reviews, to the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and the "English Cyclopædia," and in 1859 became editor of Macmillan's Magazine, which he conducted for a good many years, and to which he has largely contributed. Both appeared in 1874. In 1873 he published a biography of the poet Drummond, entitled, "Drummond of Hawthornden: the Story of his Life and Writings;" in 1874 "The Three Devils: Luther's, Milton's, and Goethe's;" and in 1878 "De Quincey," in the "English Men of Letters" Series. His edition of "Milton," published in 1877, is justly esteemed.

He was the third Catholic Judge appointed in England since Catholic Emancipation, the two previous ones being Mr. Justice Shee and M. Justice Hayes. From 1849 till the marriage of Napoleon III. she did the honours at the palace of the President, and on the re-establishment of the Empire was comprised amongst the members of the imperial family of France, and received the title of Highness. On the formation of Lord Salisbury's second Ministry, Mr. Matthews was appointed Home Secretary; but his actions, as such, have not given general satisfaction.

He published, in 1844, his first work, a translation of "The Hitopadesa," a collection of Sanskrit fables; and then proceeded to Berlin, to examine the collection of Sanskrit MSS. there. In 1845

he went to Paris to continue his studies under Eugène Burnouf, at whose suggestion he began to collect materials for an edition of the "Rig-Veda," the Sacred Hymns of the Brahmans, and the Commentary of Sāyanāchārya. After copying and collating the MSS. in the Royal Library at Paris, he repaired to England in June, 1846, in order to collate the MSS. at the East-India House and the Bodleyan Library. When he was on the point of returning to Germany, he made the acquaintance of the late Baron Bunsen, then Prussian minister in London, who persuaded him to stay in England, and on his and the late Professor Wilson's recommendation the East-India Company engaged him to publish the first edition of the "Rig-Veda" at their expense. In 1848 he settled at Oxford, where his work was to be printed, and the first volume of 1,000 pages quarto, appeared in 1849. He was invited by the University to give some courses of lectures on Comparative Philology, as Deputy Taylorian Professor, in 1850; was made Honorary M.A. and member of Christ Church in 1851; was elected Taylorian Professor, and received the full degree of M.A. by decree of Convocation in 1854; was made a Curator of the Bodleyan Library in 1856; and elected a Fellow of All Souls College in 1858. He was in 1860 an unsuccessful candidate for the professorship of Sanskrit at Oxford, being opposed by a coalition of theological parties. From 1865 to 1867 he was Oriental Librarian at the Bodleyan Library. In 1868 the University founded a new Professorship of Comparative Philology, and the statute of foundation named him as the first Professor. In 1872 he was invited to lecture in the newly founded University of Strasburg as Professor of Sanskrit. He declined the appointment, but gave some courses of lectures there in 1872. As he refused to accept any salary, the University of Strasburg founded a triennial prize for Sanskrit scholarship in memory of his services. On the 3rd of Dec., 1873, at the invitation of Dean Stanley, he delivered in Westminster Abbey a lecture on the "Religions of the World," the only address ever delivered by a layman within the Abbey. In 1875 he resigned his professorship at Oxford, intending to return to Germany, but the University requested him to remain in Oxford, and entrusted him with the edition of a series of translations of the "Sacred Books of the East," appointing at the same time a Deputy-Professor, Mr. Sayce. Forty volumes of this series have been published, of which the first contains Max-Müller's translation of the Upanishads, 1879, and the tenth his translation of the Dhammapada from Pali, 1881. In 1878, he delivered in the Chapter House of Westminster a course of lectures on "The Origin and Growth of Religion, as illustrated by the Religions of India" (last edition, 1891). These lectures were the first of those delivered under a bequest made by the late Mr. Hibbert. On Nov. 13, 1877, Professor Max-Müller was elected a Delegate of the University Press. On Oct. 28, 1881, he was re-elected curator of the Bodleyan Library in place of the late Professor Rolleston. In 1882 he was invited by the University of Cambridge to give a course of lectures on India, specially intended for the candidates for the Indian Civil Service. He published a "Sanskrit Grammar for beginners" (2nd ed. 1870). In 1868 he delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, "On the Stratification of Languages," and in 1870 a course of lectures "On the Science of Religion," at the Royal Institution, published in 1873 under the title of "Introduction to the Science of Religion," with "Two Essays on False Analogies and the Philosophy of Mythology" (last edition 1882). In 1873 he gave another course of lectures at the Royal Institution on Darwin's Philosophy of Language, published in Fraser's Magazine. Most of his essays have been collected in "Chips from a German Workshop," 4 vols., 1868-75:—vol. i., Essays on the Science of Religion; vol. ii., Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs; vol. iii., Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities; vol. iv., Essays on the Science of Language. A selection of them was published under the title of "Selected Essays," 2 vols., 1882. In 1869 he published, as a specimen, the first volume of his translation of the Rig-Veda "Hymns to the Maruts, or the Storm-Gods." In 1873 appeared his edition of the two texts of the Rig-Veda (2nd ed. 1877), and in 1874 the sixth and concluding volume of his large edition of the Rig-Veda with Sāyana's Commentary. A new edition of this work, published at the expense of the Mahārājah of Visianagram, appeared in 1891. Since the year 1879 Professor Max-Müller has devoted himself to the teaching of several Buddhist priests who had been sent to him from Japan to learn Sanskrit. This led him to the discovery that the oldest Sanskrit MSS. existed in Japan. With the help of these Japanese MSS. he published the Sanskrit originals of several Buddhist texts, such as the Sukhāvatī-vyūha (Journ. R. Asiatic Soc., 1880), the Vajracchedikā, in the Anecdota Oxoniensia, 1881, while one of his pupils, Mr. Bunyiu Nanjio, compiled a complete Catalogue of the Buddhist Tripitaka, the Sacred Canon of the Buddhists in China and Japan, published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 1883. In 1881, in commemoration of the centenary of its first publication, he brought out a new translation of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, preceded by an historical introduction by Professor L. Noiré. In 1884 he published a volume of "Biographical Essays;" in 1887, "The Science of Thought;" in 1888, "Biographies of Words and the Home of the Aryas." In 1888 he was appointed Gifford Lecturer in Natural Religion in the University of Glasgow, and his first course of lectures was published in 1889, under the title of "Natural Religion;" the second course, "Physical Religion," in 1891. He was re-elected Gifford Lecturer in 1891. Professor Max-Müller, who has contributed numerous articles to the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, the Times, and various literary journals of England, America, Germany, and France, is one of the eight foreign members of the Institute of France, one of the Knights of the Ordre pour le Mérite, one of the ten foreign members of the Reale Accademia dei Lincei of Rome, and has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws and Philosophy at Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Bologna. In 1889 he was elected First President of the Aryan Section at the International Congress of Orientalists held in Stockholm and Christiana, and received the Northern Star (First Class) from the King of Sweden.

He studied law in his native town, at Heidelberg, and at Berlin, from 1848 till 1851, when he became an advocate (Anskultator) at Marienwerder. At a later period he was employed in the magistracy and administration; and in 1859, he quitted the public service of Prussia and joined that of Hanover. He was sent on several confidential missions by the King of Hanover, George V., and was concerned as a Councillor of State in the passing of various religious and political measures. In 1863 he accompanied the King to Frankfort on the occasion of a Congress of the reigning Princes of Germany being held in that city. In 1866 he was sent on a mission to the Elector of Hesse, and subsequently went to Vienna with the deposed King of Hanover. He went to Paris in 1867 as the representative of the interests of the deposed King. In 1870 he gave in his adhesion to the Prussian Government, and, after residing two years in Switzerland, and at Stuttgart, he settled in Berlin, where, keeping wholly aloof from politics, he began to write his personal reminiscences, in the form of novels, under the pseudonym of "Gregor Samarow." MEILHAC, Henri, a French dramatic author, born at Paris in 1832, was educated at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. From 1852 to 1855 he contributed with pen and pencil to the Journal pour Rire, and in 1855, his first dramatic efforts, "Satania" and "Garde toi, je me garde," were produced at the Palais Royal, but without much success. In 1860, in collaboration with M. Ludovic Halévy, he wrote "L'Étincelle," and "Une heure avant l'ouverture," both played at the Vaudeville, and in 1861, with M. Arthur Delavegne, "La Vertu de Célimène," produced at the Gymnase, which became very popular notwithstanding its improbable plot. In conjunction with the above-mentioned authors, M. Meilhac has produced a large number of plays, the chief amongst them being "La Belle Hélène," "Barbe Bleue," "La Grande Duchesse de Gêrolstein;" "Frou frou," 1870; "Tricouche et Cacolet," 1872; "Toto chez Tata," 1873; and "Le Mari de la Débutante," 1879. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1869.

MEISSONIER, Jean Louis Ernest, Hon. R.A., painter born at Lyons in 1811, went while young, to Paris, and for some time attended the studio of M. Léon Cogniet. He displayed remarkable ingenuity in microscopic painting, which no one in France had attempted before him, and his "Little Messenger," exhibited in 1836, attracted the attention of critics, who were astonished that so much precision could be allied to such delicacy of finish. In 1853 he exhibited four pictures, all in his minute and elaborately careful manner, all of entirely different subjects, and each one perfect in its way. Paris at once acknowledged him as a master, and since then he has frequently exhibited, and always with great success. In the Salon of 1857 he had nine subjects, all distinguished by an exquisite touch, and manifesting great care and patience. His most celebrated pictures are the "Napoleon Cycle," four small paintings from the life of the first Napoleon, of which "1814"—the Campaign of France—is certainly his masterpiece. This celebrated picture was sold in 1887 for 850,000 francs (£34,000), the highest price ever paid for a picture during the lifetime of the artist. He obtained a Medal of the third class in 1840, one of the second class in 1841, and two of the first class in 1855. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1846, was made Grand Officer in June, 1856, Commander in June, 1867, and member of the Academy of Beaux Arts in 1861. In 1884 an exhibition of his works was held in Paris, and the crowds that visited the Galerie Petit testified to the popularity of the painter.

MELBOURNE, Bishop of. See GOE, THE RIGHT REV. FIELD FLOWERS, D.D.

MELDOLA, Professor Raphael, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the Finsbury Technical College, City and Guilds of London Institute, was born July 19, 1819, in the Parish of St. Mary, Islington. His father, Samuel Meldola, was a printer, and his grandfather, the Rev. Dr. Raphael Meldola, Chief Rabbi of the Congregation of Spanish and Portuguese Jews in London (1805—1828). The family history can be traced back through eleven generations to Rabbi Isaiah Meldola, "one of the sages of Castile," who died at Mantua in 1340. Many members of the family have been distinguished divines, physicians, scholars, and writers on various subjects. An obituary notice of Dr. Raphael Meldola appears in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1828. Professor Meldola received his early education in private schools, first at Bristol, then at Kew and Bayswater; he received his scientific training at the Royal College of Chemistry, and has since applied himself chiefly to chemical subjects, although he has also contributed to the advancement of other branches of science. He was sent out by the Royal Society in 1875 in charge of the Nicobar Island branch of the Expedition for observing the total eclipse of that year. He was appointed to the professorship which he now holds in 1885, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1886. His chief contributions to science are to be found in the publications of the Chemical Society and other recognized scientific periodicals. Some of his earlier writings on biological subjects have contributed towards the establishment of the Darwinian theory, and especially his annotated translation of Weismann's "Studies in the Theory of Descent," 1881-82. He is the author of "Inorganic Chemistry," 1874; the article on Organic Chemistry in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica; articles in the last edition of Watts' "Dictionary of Chemistry," and "Thorpe's Dictionary of Chemical Technology," and "The Chemistry of Photography," 1889. Among his contributions to other branches of science is his "Report on the East Anglian Earthquake of 1884," 1885. He is a member of most of the scientific societies of London and of many foreign societies.

MELLON, Mrs. Alfred, formerly known under her maiden name, Miss Sarah Jane Woolgar, was born July 8, 1824, and made her first appearance in London at the Adelphi Theatre, in Sept., 1843, in a farce called "Antony and Cleopatra," when her merits were recognised, and she found herself high in favour with the London public. She took part in all the Adelphi triumphs from the date of her first appearance till her retirement; indeed, except for very brief engagements, she has appeared at no other London theatre. She became the wife of the late Mr. Alfred Mellon, the popular composer and conductor, for some time the leader of the orchestra at the Adelphi Theatre, who died in March, 1867.

MENABREA, Louis Frederick, Marquis de Val-Dora, an Italian general and statesman, born at Chambéry (Savoy), Sept. 4, 1809, studied with distinction at the University of Turin, and entered the corps of Engineers as lieutenant. At an early age he became favourably known by his scientific attainments, which led to his appointment as Professor of Mechanics in the Military Academy, in the School of Artillery, and in the University of Turin, and to his election, in 1839, as a member of the Academy of Sciences in that city. He attained the rank of captain in 1848. Sent by King Charles Albert on a mission into the Italian duchies, he exerted himself to procure a vote in favour of union with the subalpine kingdom. He was next elected to the Chamber of Deputies, and attached as chief officer, first to the Ministry of War, and next to that of Foreign Affairs. These functions he resigned on the accession to power of Gioberti, but he resumed them after the defeat at Novara. In the war of Italian Independence Count Menabrea, who had been advanced to the rank of major-general, and placed at the head of the engineering department of the army, executed several important works, including the investment of Peschiera, and was present at the battles of Palestro and Solferino. On the cession of his native province to France, he determined to retain his Italian nationality. Soon afterwards he was nominated a Senator by King Victor Emmanuel. He was also made lieutenant-general, and conducted the military operations at Ancona, Capua, and Gaeta. In 1861 he became Minister of Marine in the administration of Baron Ricasoli, and in 1866 he was sent to Germany, where, as plenipotentiary of Italy, he signed the Treaty of Prague. In 1867 he was entrusted by the king, whose first aide-de-camp he had been for some time previously, with the formation of a Cabinet, in which he held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, besides being President of the Council; and notwithstanding numerous financial difficulties, and the complications of the Roman question, he remained in power till Nov., 1869, when a new Cabinet was formed by Signor Lanza. Gen. Menabrea was sent as ambassador to Vienna in Nov., 1870, but was recalled in the following year. He was appointed Ambassador at the Court of St. James's in May, 1876. He was subsequently appointed Ambassador in Paris. Ennobled in 1843, he was created a Count in 1861, and Marquis de Val-Dora in 1875.

MENDES, Catulle, was born at Bordeaux, on May 20, 1843. In 1861 he established, in Paris, La Revue Fantaisiste, in which he published "Le Roman d'une Nuit," a drama in verse, but being under age he was condemned to two months' imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs. His other works include "Philomela," a volume of lyrics, 1864; "Hesperus," a poem, 1869; "La Colère d'un Franc-tireur Odelette Guerrière," 1871; "Contes Épiques," "Les Soirs Moroses," "Le Soleil de Minuit" (poésies), 1872, republished in 1876 under the title of "Poésies."

Several novels, "Les Folies Amoureuses," 1877; "Les Mères Ennemies," 1880; "La Divine Adventure," 1881, in conjunction with M. Lesclide; "Le Rose et le Noir," 1885; "Le Roi vierge," "Zo' har," "La première Maîtresse," "Méphistophila," and various pieces for the theatre. In 1866 he married Mlle. Judith Gautier.

MENZEL, Adolf Friedrich Erdmann, German historical painter, was born Dec. 8, 1815, at Breslau, but removed in 1830 with his parents to Berlin, where he studied art at the academy. On his father's death he had to support himself, and first began by selling pen-and-ink drawings. In 1836 he made his first attempt in oil painting, "The Chess Players," followed by several other pictures; but from 1839-42 he worked at the illustrations to Kugler's "History of Frederick the Great." Since then he has become celebrated as a painter of the most life-like and accurate scenes from the age of Frederick; his first important work of the period was the "Round Table of Frederick the Great," 1850, followed by the "Flute Concert at Sanssouci," 1852; "Frederick's Reception in Breslau," and "Frederick at the Battle of Hochkirch," 1856; "Blücher and Wellington at Waterloo," 1858, and many others. All these paintings are remarkable for strong realism, great power of characterisation, and for the masterly skill with which every detail is represented. Between 1861-65 Menzel was working at the "Coronation of William I.," in 1871 he completed the "King's Departure from Berlin," and from 1872-75 he worked at "Modern Cyclops," representing a scene from the great ironworks, and one of the most extraordinary and remarkable of all his paintings. His later works are the excellent illustrations to Kleist's "Broken Jug," 1877, and a clever society picture, "The Ball Supper," besides a large number of pen-and-ink drawings and water colours. He has been, since 1856, Professor at the Berlin Academy, and is a member of the academies of Vienna and Munich, and hon. member of the English Royal Water Colour Society. In 1885 a successful exhibition of his works was held in Paris. His illustrations to the works of Frederick the Great have been republished in 2 vols., 4to.

MERCIE, Marcus Jean Antoine, a French sculptor, was born at Toulouse, Oct. 30, 1845. He was a pupil of Falguière and Joffroy, and studied at the École des Beaux Arts. In 1868 he obtained the Prix de Rome, and the same year exhibited a medallion at the Salon. In 1872 he sent from Rome a plaster statue of David, and Delilah, a bust; and in 1874 "Gloria Victis," a group in bronze, attracted much attention, and was purchased by the Government. "The Genius of the Arts," intended for the grand entrance of the Louvre, was exhibited in 1877; the plaster model of the bas-relief for the tomb of Michelet in Père Lachaise, in 1879; and a statue of "Arago," in 1880. Besides these he has modelled various portrait busts. M. Mercié was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1874, and made an officer in 1879.

MEREDITH, George, novelist and poet, born in Hampshire, about 1828, and educated partly in Germany, was brought up to the law, which he quitted for literature. He has written "Poems," 1851; "The Shaving of Shagpat, an Arabian Entertainment," a burlesque prose poem, 1855; "Farina, a Legend of Cologne," 1857; "The Ordeal of Richard Feveril," a philosophical novel, bearing upon the more serious questions of moral education, 1859; "Evan Harrington," a serial tale of modern life, first printed in Once a Week, and republished in a separate form, 1861; "Modern Love: Poems and Ballads," 1862; "Emilia in England," 1864; "Rhoda Fleming," 1865; "Vittoria," 1866; "The Adventures of Harry Richmond," 1871; "The Egoist," a novel, 3 vols., 1879; "The Tragic Comedians," 2 vols., 1881, a novel founded on the life and tragic fate of Ferdinand Lassalle, the German socialist; and "Poems and Lyrics of the Joy of Earth," 1883; "Diana of the Crossways," 1885; "Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life," 1887; and "A Reading of Earth," 1888. His new novel, "One of Our Conquerors," was published in the Fortnightly Review in 1890.

MERIVALE, The Very Rev. Charles, D.D., Dean of Ely, son of the late John H. Merivale, Esq., of Barton Place, Devon, and brother of the late Mr. Herman Merivale, born in 1808, was educated at Harrow, Haileybury, and St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was successively scholar, fellow, and tutor. He took his B.A. degree in high honours in 1830, was a select Preacher before the University of Cambridge in 1838-40, one of the Preachers at Whitehall in 1839-41, Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge in 1861, and Boyle Lecturer in 1864 and 1865. He is the author of a "History of the Romans under the Empire," published in 8 vols., 8vo, in 1850—62; "Boyle Lectures," 1864, 1865; "Translation of Homer's Iliad," in English rhymed verse, 2 vols., 1869; "General History of Rome from the Foundation of the City to the Fall of Augustulus, B.C. 753-A.D. 476," 8vo, 1875; and "Lectures on Early Church History," 1879.

MERIVALE, Herman Charles, son of the late Herman Merivale, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, and afterwards for India, was born in London, Jan. 27, 1839, and educated at Harrow and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1864, and served on the Western Circuit and Exeter Sessions. He afterwards practised in the Privy Council on Indian Appeals. Under the late Lord Beaconsfield's Reform Act he served on the Boundary Commission for North Wales. From 1870 to 1880 he was editor of the Annual Register, and in 1874, owing to ill-health, was obliged to give up the legal profession. Since then he has occupied himself almost entirely with literature and politics. His chief works are the plays "All for Her," 1874; "Forget me Not," 1879; "The Cynic," 1882; "Fédora," (from Sardou), 1883; and "Our Joan," 1885; a novel, "Faucit of Balliol," 1882; "Binko's Blues," a fairy tale, 1884; "White Pilgrim, and other Poems," 1883; "Florien and other Poems," 1884; besides some other dramas and various essays, travels, verse, &c., in All the Year Round (under Charles Dickens), and in the best of the weekly papers and monthly magazines.

MERMILLOD, Gaspard, D.D., Bishop of Geneva, born at Carouge, near Geneva, in 1824, became an ecclesiastic at an early age, and in 1846 was parish priest of Geneva. There he displayed remarkable activity, was mainly instrumental in raising the Church of Notre Dame, which was opened in 1857, and obtained great influence at Rome on account of his zeal and rare eloquence. In 1864 he was consecrated Bishop of Hebron, i.p.i., and appointed Auxiliary to the Bishop of Lausanne and Geneva, as Vicar-General. In 1873, Pius IX. nominated him Vicar-Apostolic of Geneva, which was thus separated from the diocese of Lausanne. This act was considered as the creation of a new hierarchical office in the Canton without the consent of the Government. Consequently, on Feb. 17, the Bishop was exiled, and it was added, "this decree is to hold good as long as the person elected shall not declare to the Federal Council, or to the Government of Geneva, that he renounces the functions conferred upon him, contrary to the decisions of the Cantonal and Federal authorities." For ten years, Bishop Mermillod was absent from his flock, yet ever active in his zealous labours for the Catholic Faith in France, in Rome, and in other parts of Europe, being regarded as one of the most eminent prelates of the Roman Church. In 1879 Leo XIII. settled the dispute by appointing the new bishop of Freiburg-Lausanne, also bishop of Geneva, Dr. Mermillod only retaining the title of bishop. Bishop Mermillod has published numerous Sermons, Conferences, Discourses, and other works on theological topics.

MERRIMAN, John Xavier, the son of the Bishop of Graham's Town, was born in 1841, at Street, Somersetshire, and was educated at Radley. He was Commissioner of Crown Lands, Cape of Good Hope, from 1875 to 1878, and from 1881 to 1884. He is now (1890) the Treasurer of the Colony.

MERRY, The Rev. William Walter, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, son of the late Walter Merry, Esq., and grandson of William Merry, Esq., for many years Deputy-Secretary for War, was born in 1835, and educated at Cheltenham College, whence he proceeded to Oxford, as a scholar of Balliol, in 1853. Dr. Merry was placed in the first class in Classical Moderations in 1854, and in the second class in Lit. Humaniores in 1856. He gained the Chancellor's Prize for the Latin Essay in 1858; and in the next year he was elected Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College, an appointment which he held till his election in 1884 to the place of Rector of that society, in succession to the late Mark Pattison. In 1861 he was presented to the Vicarage of All Saints, in the city of Oxford, in the patronage of his college. In 1880 Dr. Merry was elected to the office of Public Orator in the University of Oxford, and was appointed one of the Select Preachers, 1878-79, 1889-90; and in 1883-84 he was nominated by the Bishop of London as one of the preachers in the Chapel Royal, Whitehall. Dr. Merry has taken a prominent part in teaching and examining in the University, having frequently filled the post of Classical Moderator. The editions of classical authors, which he has undertaken for the Clarendon Press, are well-known and widely circulated: the principal ones are "Homer, Odyssey," i.-xii., 2nd edit., 1836; the same for Schools, 40th thousand; and a series still in progress of the plays of Aristophanes.

METTERNICH (Prince De), Richard Clement Joseph Lothaire Hermann, Diplomatist, son of the famous statesman Prince Metternich, born at Vienna, Jan. 7, 1829, was educated as a diplomatist, became attached to the Austrian embassy at Paris in 1852, and was made Secretary of Legation there in Dec., 1854. In the complications which arose in 1859, before the Italian war broke out, Prince Metternich was entrusted by the Austrian Government with a special mission to Paris, and at the close of the war he became Ambassador of Austria at the French court, which position he retained till Dec., 1871. He was named Hereditary Councillor of the Austrian Empire, April 18, 1861, and Councillor in Nov., 1864.

MEXICO, ex-Empress of. See CHARLOTTE.

MEYER, Dr. Hans, African traveller, was born March 22, 1858, at Hildburghausen, studied at Leipzig, Berlin, and Strassburg, where he prepared a great work on "The Strassburg Guild of Goldsmiths, from its origin until 1681." In 1884 he entered his father's publishing business in Leipzig as partner. Previously he had travelled for two years in India, the Sunda Archipelago, Eastern Asia and America, and had especially remained some time on the Philippine Islands, to undertake some ethnological researches on the Igorrotes, the results of which he made known in the illustrated work, "Eine Weltreise," 1884. In Dec., 1886, he went to South Africa, travelled through Cape Colony, Transvaal, and Natal; and, in the summer of 1887, through the territory of the German East African Company. From Mombassa Dr. Meyer travelled through the district of Teita, as far as the Kilima Ndscharo, he being the first to ascend the same, almost to the summit of the ice-covered Kibo, 5,700 metres; then he travelled through the Savannes, to the south of the Kilima Ndscharo, as far as the Pagani River, and along this stream to the coast. Later on he travelled through the Valley of the Kingani and the District of Usaranno. In 1883, Meyer, accompanied by the African traveller, O. Baumann, undertook the new well-organised expedition to the Kilima Ndscharo, which was stopped by the insurrection that had taken place in the meantime in the district of the German East African Company, and could penetrate only a short distance into the country. Meyer himself, as well as Baumann, was taken prisoner by the Arab leader Bushiri, robbed of all his property, and could be released only by the payment of a large ransom; this having been done, he returned to Europe, and published the splendid work, "Zum Schneedom des Kilima Ndscharo," 1888, with forty photographs. This failure did not discourage Meyer, and a new expedition was organised. It was accompanied by the Austrian mountaineer, Purtscheller; and in Sept., 1889, the march was commenced at Mombassa through English East African territory. This time the goal was reached, the Kibo was scaled, the highest peak of which was named the Emperor William's Peak, and was estimated to be about 6,000 metres elevation. At the same time a large crater was discovered on the Kibo, and on its side the first glacier ever discovered in Africa. The ascent of the smaller Marvensi Peak proved to be impracticable.

MEYRICK, The Rev. Frederick, M.A., born in 1826, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was successively scholar, fellow, and tutor; graduated B.A. in honours in 1847, and afterwards held the University offices of Select Preacher and Public Examiner. He was appointed one of Her Majesty's Whitehall Preachers in 1856, Inspector of Schools in 1859, and became Rector of Blickling with Erpingham, in Norfolk, in 1868; in the same year he was appointed examining chaplain to the late Bishop Christopher Wordsworth, and non-residential canon of Lincoln in 1869. He was the chief agent in establishing the Anglo-Continental Society, for making known in foreign countries the principles of the English Church, and with that object in view has edited many dogmatic and controversial treatises in Latin, Italian, Spanish, &c. He has written "Practical Working of the Church in Spain," published in 1851; "The Moral Theology of the Church of Rome," in 1857; "The Outcast and Poor of London," in 1858; "The Wisdom of Pity," in 1859; "But isn't Kingsley right after all?" "On Dr. Newman's Rejection of Liguori's Doctrine of Equivocation," in 1864; "Baptism, Conversion, Regeneration" in 1882; "The Doctrine of the Church of England on the Holy Communion restated," 1885. He has contributed to Dr. Smith's "Dictionaries of the Bible and of Antiquities;" to the Speaker's Commentary on the Bible edited by Canon Cook (Joel, Obadiah, Ephesians), to the Pulpit Commentary (Leviticus), to Hodder and Stoughton's Theological Library ("Is Dogma a Necessity?") and has been editor for twelve years of the Foreign Church Chronicle and Review. During the year 1886-87 he was Principal of Codrington College, Barbados.

MICHAEL (Grand Duke) Nicolaievitch, brother of the late Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, and fourth son of the late Czar Nicholas I., was born Oct. 13 (25), 1832. He is a General and Grand Master of Artillery, General Aide-de-Camp to the Czar, Governor-General of the Caucasus, and head of several regiments of artillery, cavalry, and infantry. In the recent war between Russia and Turkey the Grand Duke Michael had the chief command of the army of the Caucasus. He married, in Aug., 1857, Olga-Féodorovna (formerly Cecilia Augusta), daughter of the late Leopold, Grand Duke of Baden. The eldest of his children is the Grand Duke Nicholas, who was born in 1859.

MICHEL, Louise, a French revolutionary leader, was born at Vroncourt in 1830, and first distinguished herself by her poetical and musical talents, which were recognised and encouraged by Victor Hugo. In 1860 she opened a school in the Quartier Montmartre, Paris; and in 1870 took an active part with the revolutionary Commune, and was made prisoner; and though she eloquently defended herself before the Judges, she was sentenced to transportation for life. On the amnesty to political prisoners in 1880 she returned to Paris, and, continuing to take part in Communist assemblies, she was re-imprisoned in 1883, and again in 1886.

MIDDLETON, Professor John Henry, M.A., D.C.L., born at York in 1846, was educated at first in Italy, then at Cheltenham College, and at Exeter College, Oxford. He is M.A. of Oxford, and M.A. of Cambridge, D.C.L. of Bologna; and has been Slade Professor of Fine Art in the University of Cambridge since 1886. Dr. Middleton is also Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, and Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Lecturer at the Royal Academy, London. He is the author of the following works, "Ancient Rome," 1885, 2nd edit., 1888; also 84 articles in the last edition of the

"Encyclopædia Britannica," and many articles in Archæologia, Journal of Hellenic Studies, and other artistic and antiquarian periodicals in England and in Italy.

MIDLETON, Viscount, William Brodric, eldest son of the Rev. William John Brodric, Dean of Exeter, and afterwards 7th Viscount Midleton, was born at Castle Rising, Norfolk, Jan. 6th, 1830, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his B.A.'s degree in 1851, and M.A., 1857. He was called to the Bar in 1855, and was returned as member for Mid-Surrey in 1868. He was High Steward of Kingston-on-Thames, 1874; and is J.P. and D.L. for Surrey, and J.P. for Cork. In 1876 he served on the Royal Commission to inquire into Noxious Gases, and in 1878 on the Commission of the Sale and Exchange of Livings. Lord Midleton has for many years been known as a prominent member of the Conservative party in the House of Lords.

MILAN (OBRENOVITCH) I., ex-King of Servia, grandson of Ephraim Obrenovitch, brother of Milos, and consequently second cousin of Prince Michael, who is noticed in previous editions of this work, was born Aug. 10, 1854, at Jassy, of a Moldavian mother, who had married the only son of Prince Ephraim. He was adopted by Prince Michael, who had no children by his marriage with Julia Hunyadi, and was sent by him, in 1864, to Paris to be educated at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. The youth's studies were interrupted by the events of 1868, and the assassination of Michael Obrenovitch. Hastening to Servia, he was proclaimed Prince in July of that year, the government of the country being intrusted, during his minority, to a Council of Regency, consisting of Messrs. Blaznavatz, Ristic, and Garrilovics, three able and patriotic men, who continued the liberal and reforming policy begun by Michael III. Their regency terminated with the coronation of Prince Milan IV.; but M. Ristic continued to possess the confidence of the Prince, who was only eighteen years of age when he was crowned in Belgrade cathedral, Aug. 22, 1872. On Jan. 12, 1876, Prince Milan issued a proclamation stating that "the insurrection in the Turkish provinces has found its way to the frontiers of Servia, enclosing the whole Principality by an iron band," which had compelled him "to place his people under arms." Shortly afterwards (June 22), he sent what may be called a threatening letter to the Grand Vizier, and then he formally proclaimed (June 30) that he intended to join his arms to those of Bosnia and Herzegovina in order to secure the liberation of the Slavonic Christians from the yoke of the Porte. On July 2, a joint declaration of war was sent by the Prince of Serbia and the Hospodar of Montenegro to the Turkish Government, their troops crossing the frontier at the same time. The Prince departed from Belgrade (July 24), to assume the command of the Servian troops in the field; but he soon returned to his capital (Aug. 12), and appointed the Russian general, Tchernayeff, to the command of the Servian forces. On Sept. 1, an important battle under the walls of Alexinatz resulted in the complete defeat of the Servian army. The Great Powers then interposed, but the negotiations for the suspension of hostilities were delayed by an ill-advised step which Prince Milan, at the instigation of General Tchernayeff, was induced to take. On Sept. 16, he was proclaimed King of Serbia at Deligrad, although, upon the general expression of disapproval which followed, his Highness appeared disposed to disclaim any active share in the performance. War broke out again, and the Servian army, though largely reinforced by Russian volunteers—men as well as officers—was ignominiously beaten. On Oct. 31, the Turks captured the town of Alexinatz, and on the following day Deligrad was captured, thus leaving the road to Belgrade completely open. A peace was then concluded between Turkey and Serbia on favourable terms to the latter. When, however, Russia made war upon Turkey, Prince Milan saw an opportunity of gaining complete independence, and a proclamation of the Servian Government, dated Dec. 14, 1877, made known that the Servian army was immediately to cross the Turkish frontier, which they did on the following day, under the command of Generals Lesjanin and Benitzki. After the close of the war the independence of Serbia was recognised, and its boundaries defined by the Treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878). Prince Milan married, Oct. 17, 1875, Natalie, daughter of the late Russian Colonel Keschko, by his wife Pulcheria, Princess of Stourdza. Serbia was proclaimed a kingdom under King Milan I., on March 6, 1882. On Oct. 23, in that year, as the King and Queen were entering the cathedral of Belgrade, Madame Markovitch, widow of Lieutenant-colonel Markovitch, who had been shot for a dynastic conspiracy five years previously, fired at his Majesty, missing him and wounding in the thigh a woman who was looking on. The attempted assassination took place just after the King's return from Rustchuk, whither he had gone to visit Prince Alexander of Bulgaria. Unfortunately this friendly intercourse did not, in 1885, prevent King Milan declaring war upon Prince Alexander, on the ground of the unlawful union of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. His army had some success at first, but within a fortnight was driven back, defeated and crushed, within the Servian frontier. Prince Alexander behaved like a hero; but it is not known that King Milan ever exposed himself under fire. King Milan has a son, the Crown Prince Alexander, born Oct. 14, 1876, in whose favour he abdicated on March 6, 1889, in consequence of the troubles arising out of his quarrel with his Queen Natalie.

MILLAIS, Sir John Everett, Bart., R.A., son of John William Millais, Esq., by Mary, daughter of Richard Evermy, Esq., and widow of Enoch Hodgkinson, Esq., was born at Southampton in 1829. The family of Millais has held for centuries a place among the lesser landlords in the island of Jersey, where the name doubtless existed long prior to the Norman conquest of England. At the early age of nine he began his art education in Mr. Sass's Academy, and two years later he became a student at the Royal Academy, where he gained the principal prizes for drawing. He gained his first Medal at the Society of Arts when only nine. "Pizarro seizing the Inca of Peru," his first exhibited picture, was at the Academy in 1846, followed by "Dunstan's Emissaries seizing Queen Elgiva," and a colossal cartoon at the Westminster Hall competition, "The Widow's Mite," in 1847, and the picture of "The Tribe of Benjamin seizing the Daughters of Shiloh," at the British Institution in 1848. Keats' "Isabella" was the subject of his pencil in 1849. While a student in the Academy's schools, his taste had tacitly rebelled against the routine conventions of academic teaching, and, strengthened in that feeling by such specimens of early Italian art as fell in their way, he and his friends, William Holman Hunt and Dante Gabriel Rossetti, resolved to study nature as it appeared to them, not as it appeared in "the antique." These views were afterwards adopted by Charles Collins and other younger painters, who were termed, half in jest and half in earnest, the "Pre-Raphaelite School." For a short time the artists tried to enforce their views by the pen as well as the brush, in a short-lived periodical,

The Germ, or Art and Poetry, which appeared in 1850. The principal works executed by Mr. Millais under the influence of his new convictions are a mystical picture of "Our Saviour," and "Ferdinand lured by Ariel," in 1850; "Mariana in the Moated Grange," and the "Woodman's Daughter," in 1851; and "The Huguenot" and "Ophelia," in 1855. Mr. Ruskin came, in 1851, to the support of the new school with enthusiastic approval, freely expressed in letters to the Times, in 1852, as well as in a pamphlet on Pre-Raphaelitism, and in his "Lectures on Architecture and Painting," in 1853. Mr. Millais was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1853, and became R.A. in Dec., 1863. He exhibited "The Order of Release" and "The Proscribed Royalist" in 1853; "The Rescue" in 1855; "Peace Concluded," "Autumn Leaves," and "L'Enfant du Régiment," in 1856; "A Dream of the Past—Sir Isumbrus at the Ford," in 1857; "The Heretic," in 1858; "Vale of Rest," and "Spring Flowers," in 1860; "The Black Brunswicker," in 1861; "My First Sermon," in 1863; "My Second Sermon," and "Charley is my Darling," in 1864; "Joan of Arc," and "The Romans leaving Britain," in 1865; and "Sleeping," "Waking," and "Jephthah," in 1867; "Sisters," "Rosalind and Celi," "Stella," "Pilgrims to St. Paul's," and "Souvenir of Velasquez" (his diploma work), in 1868; "The Gambler's Wife," "Vanessa," "The End of the Chapter," and "A Dream at Dawn," in 1869; "A Flood," "The Knight Errant," "The Boyhood of Raleigh," and "A Widow's Mite," in 1870; "Chill October," "Joshua fighting with Amalek," "A Sonnambulist," and "Yes or No?" in 1871; "Flowing to the River," and "Flowing to the Sea," in 1872; "Early Days," "New Laid Eggs," and "Lal'a Rookh," in 1873; "Scotch Firs," "Winter Fuel," "The Picture of Health," "The North-West Passage," "Still for a Moment," and "A Day-Dream," in 1874; "The Fringe of the Moor," "The Crown of Love," and "No!" in 1875; "Forbidden Fruit," "Over the Hills and Far Away," and "Getting Better," in 1876; "A Yeoman of the Guard," "The Sound of Many Waters," and "Yes!" in 1877; "The Princes in the Tower," "A Jersey Lily" (Mrs. Langtry), and "St. Martin's Summer," in 1878. In 1878, Mr. Millais also exhibited "A Good Resolve," in the Grosvenor Gallery; and "The Bride of Lammermoor," in King Street St. James's. He exhibited at the Royal Academy "The Tower of Strength," and a portrait of Mr. Gladstone, 1879; a portrait of himself (painted by invitation for the Collection of Portraits of Artists painted by themselves in the Uffizi Gallery, Florence), "Cuckoo," and a portrait of Mr. Bright, 1880; portrait of Principal Caird, D.D., "Cinderella," and portraits of the Earl of Beaconsfield, and of Dr. Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, 1881; a portrait of Cardinal Newman, 1882; "Une Grande Dame," "The Grey Lady," a portrait of the Marquis of Salisbury, and "Forget-me-not," 1883. A large number of these, as well as some later pictures, were brought together in the exhibition of the artist's works held at the Grosvenor Gallery in the early months of 1886; "Mercy," "Lilac," and a portrait of Lord Rosebery were his chief pictures in 1887. In 1890 he exhibited in the Royal Academy, "The Moon is up and yet it is not Night," and portraits of "The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone and his Grandson." He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1878. In 1881 he was appointed a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery, in the place of the late Dean Stanley; and in 1882, he was elected a Foreign Associate of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, in the place of the Italian sculptor Dupré. In 1885 he was made a baronet on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, the portrait of whom is considered one of Millais's finest efforts. Sir J. E. Millais married Euphemia-Chalmers, daughter of George Gray, Esq., of Bowerswell, Perth, N.B.

MILLER, "Joaquin," a Scottish American poet, whose real name is Cincinnatus Heine Miller, was born in Indiana, Nov. 10, 1842. When he was ten years old his father emigrated to Oregon, whence the boy went three years later to try his fortune in California. After a wandering life of seven years, he returned home and entered a lawyer's office at Eugene, Oregon, having been twice severely wounded in the Indian wars. The next year he was an express messenger in the gold-mining districts of Idaho, which he left to take charge of the Democratic Register, a weekly newspaper at Eugene. In 1863 he opened a law office in Canon City, Oregon. Hostile Indians invested the new city, and he led an expedition against them into their own country; but after a long and bloody campaign, he was finally beaten back, leaving his dead on the field. From 1866 to 1870, he served as county judge of Grant county, and during this time began to write his poems. He published first a collection in paper covers called "Specimens," and next a volume with the title "Joaquin et al." In 1870 he went to London, where he published in the following year, his "Songs of the Sierras," and "Pacific Poems." In 1873 appeared "Songs of the Sun Lands," and a prose volume entitled "Life among the Modocs: Unwritten History." His later works are "The Ship in the Desert," 1875; "First Families in the Sierras," 1875 (republished in 1881, under the title of "The Danites in the Sierras"); "The One Fair Woman," 1876; "Baroness of N. Y.," 1877; "Songs of Far Away Lands," 1878; "Songs of Italy," 1878; "Shadows of Shasta," 1881; "Memorie and Rime," 1884; and "Forty-Nine." He is the author of several plays, mostly dramatizations of his own works; among which "The Danites," "The Silent Man," "Mexico," "'49," and "Tally Ho!" are more or less popular. He is now (1890) writing the "Life of Christ," in verse, and "Growing Olives in California."

MILLER, The Hon. William Henry Harrison, American statesman, was born at Augusta, Oneida co., N. Y., Sept 6, 1840. He graduated at Hamilton college in 1861, and soon after went to Ohio, where he taught in a school for a year at Manmee City. He then studied law for a time in the office of the late Chief Justice Waite at Toledo, and was afterwards, for a brief period during the Civil War, in the Union Army. In 1863 he went to Peru, Ind., and taught in the public schools for two years. He was admitted to the Bar in 1865; practised for a year in Peru; and then settled in Fort Wayne, Ind. In 1874 he formed a law-partnership with Mr. (now President) Harrison at Indianapolis which continued until the election of Mr. Harrison to the Presidency. Mr. Miller was offered the Cabinet appointment of Attorney-General by his partner at the opening of the present administration, March, 1889, which he accepted and still retains.

MILES, Major-General Nelson Appleton, American soldier, was born at Westminster, Mass., Aug. 8, 1839. He received an academic education, and was engaged in business when the Civil War broke out. Entering the army as a lieutenant of volunteers, he rose to the full rank of Major-General of Volunteers during its progress, and at its close was made a Colonel in the regular army, 1866. In 1867 he was brevetted Brigadier-General and Major-General for gallantry shown on battlefields during the war. Since the close of the war he has been stationed chiefly in the West where he has been engaged in a number of conflicts with the Indians. He received the full rank of Brigadier-General in 1880, and on the death of General Crook in 1890, was made a Major-General in the regular army, now the highest grade in the American service. He is at present, July, 1890, in command of the division of the Pacific, with headquarters at San Francisco.

MILLS, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., C.B., was educated at Bonn, and served in the 98th Foot, and on the staff of H.M. army in India, China, Turkey, and the Cape. He afterwards served as commissioner for the formation of German settlements, and subsequently as High-Sheriff, Auditor, and Secretary to the Government in British Kaffraria. On the annexation of that territory to Cape Colony he represented the division of King Williamstown in the Colonial parliament. In October, 1867, he was appointed Chief Finance Clerk to the Colonial Office; in 1871, Chief Clerk; and in 1872, Under Secretary. He served on special commissions for financial and other matters, and in 1880-2 was commissioner in London for the adjustment of expenditure connected with the Kaffir war. In July, 1882, he was appointed Agent-General for the Cape of Good Hope in London, and Royal Commissioner and Executive Commissioner for the Cape Colony at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886.

MILLS, Professor Edmund James, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.C.S., son of Charles Frederick and Mary Anne Mills, and a lineal descendant of the Osmonds of Lowenandale (Uplowman, Devonshire), was born in London on Dec. 8, 1840. When he was a year old his parents removed to Cheltenham, and it was at the ancient Grammar School of that town that he received his early education, which was partly classical and partly scientific in character. It was doubtless at this school that he imbibed his strong predilection for chemistry. In 1858 he was elected to a provincial scholarship at the Royal School of Mines, London, where he studied his favourite science under Professor A. W. Hofmann (now Von Hofmann, of Berlin University). In due course (1861) he took the Technical Diploma of the School. In the same year he became assistant to the late Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., for whom he conducted various investigations in connection with organic chemistry. He was appointed in the following year to the newly-established chemical tutorship at Glasgow University, and remained there about three years, teaching and investigating. On his return to London, he held an assistantship in the Laboratory of University College, 1866. He next accepted, 1867, the superintendence of the private laboratory of the late Sir Charles Taylor, Bart., where he remained seven years, busy with preparations and original investigations. In 1875 he was appointed to the Chair of Technical Chemistry founded in connection with the then Anderson's University, Glasgow, by the late Mr. James Young, F.R.S., of Kelly; this position he still retains. He took the degree of B.Sc. (first division) Lond. in 1863, and D.Sc. in 1865. At one time he held the post of Assistant Chemical Examiner in the London University. He was elected F.C.S. in 1862; F.R.S. in 1874; and was one of the founders of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Physical Society of London. Dr. Mills is the author of a long series of original memoirs, the first of which was published in 1860. Their general drift has been towards the dynamical, rather than the material, aspect of Chemistry; and in putting to one side the atomic theory, he has deliberately adopted a position among the minority of living scientists. Of his leading memoirs may be mentioned a group upon nitro-compounds, and another relating to Statical and Dynamical Ideas in Chemistry; an investigation of Electrostriction and Chemical Repulsion, the fundamental phenomena of which he has been the discoverer; a theory of boiling-point and melting-point which has led to very simple and accurate mathematical expressions connecting these phenomena with chemical composition; and a theory, equally simple in character, of the formation and numerics of the elementary bodies. As a chemical technologist he has also published a variety of researches clearing up doubtful issues, adding new points of view, and, in general, demonstrating that Chemical technology is a science of measurement. "Destructive Distillation," a little book first published in 1877, is now in its third edition; "Fuel and its Applications" (of which Mr. F. J. Rowan is joint-author), a very exhaustive and copious work, appeared in 1889. In 1867 Dr. Mills married Amelia, daughter of the late Mr. William Burnett of London, by whom he had sole issue in 1869, Edith Mary, who died in 1884.

MILNE (Admiral of the Fleet), Sir Alexander Milne, Bart., G.C.B., and G.C.B. (Civil), F.R.S.E., is the second son of the late Admiral Sir David Milne, G.C.B. He was born in 1806, and first entered the Naval service in 1817, was actively employed as Lieutenant, Commander and Captain on the Brazil, Home and North American and West Indian stations; promoted to Commander, 1830, and Captain, 1839; was Flag Captain to his father at Devonport, 1842-5, where he commanded the Caledonia, and was employed at Tangier, the coast of Portugal, and as Flag Captain to Admiral Bowles in Ireland; was also Flag Captain to Sir Charles Ogle at Portsmouth, and to Sir Charles Napier in the Channel Squadron. In 1847 he was appointed a Junior Lord of the Admiralty, and served with successive governments until 1858, during which period he was Superintending Lord of the Great Store Victualling, and Transport Departments, and (1855) after the Crimean war was created K.C.B. (Civil), and in 1858, a G.C.B. (Civil), and was instrumental in introducing many important measures for the benefit of the service. Sir Alexander was again appointed to the Admiralty as the Senior Naval Lord in 1866-68, and at a subsequent period in 1872-76, when he retired, having served with nine First Lords of the Admiralty, and was then created a Baronet. In 1860 he was appointed to the North American and West Indian command, with the temporary rank of Vice-Admiral, and received H.R.H. the Prince of Wales at Halifax. Before the termination of his command he received the approval of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and his command was extended for a period of one year. Sir Alexander was the only Admiral on the station who had ever officially visited any ports of the United States since the war of 1812. He arrived at New York in Oct., 1863, at the time of the Civil War, and his visit, as expressed by Lord Lyons, H.M.'s Minister at Washington, to the Foreign Office, appears to have proved satisfactory. He said "Sir Alexander Milne was received with the utmost courtesy and cordiality by the President as well as the members of the government at Washington, and there is good reason to believe that his visit to the United States has produced an excellent impression. The Members of the Government seemed anxious to show that they were not unaware that to nothing more than to the excellent judgment, and to the firm but temperate and conciliatory conduct of the Admiral is owing the maintenance of harmonious relations between the two countries." On his return to England he received the commendations of the Admiralty. In 1869 Sir Alexander was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the Mediterranean station, with his flag in the Lord Warden. He was present at the opening of the Suez Canal by the Empress Eugénie in November. He visited various ports of the station, and, in Aug., 1870, assumed the command of the combined Mediterranean and Channel Squadrons at Gibraltar, for exercise on the coast of Portugal. In September he returned to England and struck his flag, receiving the approval of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty for the able manner in which he had performed his duties in the Mediterranean. He was elected an Elder Brother of the Trinity House in 1870, has been chairman of various professional committees, and President of a committee for the Defence of the Colonies and Coaling Stations. Sir Alexander is a magistrate for Berwickshire. He married, in 1850, Euphemia, daughter of the late Archibald Cochran of Ashkirk.

MINTO, Professor William, was born on Oct. 10, 1845, at Auchintoul, Alford, Aberdeenshire, and took the degree of M.A. at Aberdeen in April, 1865, with honours in classics, mathematics, and philosophy, and other academic distinctions, winning in the same year the Scottish University Ferguson Scholarship in classics. He entered Merton College, Oxford, in 1866, but left in the next year without taking a degree. He acted for some years as assistant to Professor Bain, of Aberdeen, and wrote two biographical and critical books on English literature: "English Prose Writers" (1872, 3rd edit. 1886), and "English Poets" (1874, 2nd edit. 1885). He contributed occasionally to the now extinct Examiner, of which journal he was appointed editor in 1874. He held that position for four years, and thereafter was on the leader-writing staff of the Daily News and the Pall Mall Gazette. Mr. Minto was appointed Professor of Logic in Aberdeen, 1880. He is the author of various writings besides those already mentioned: "The Crack of Doom," first published in Blackwood's Magazine, 1885; "Defoe," in Mr. John Morley's series of English Men of Letters, 1879; "The Mediation of Ralph Hardelet," an historical novel, 1888; "Was She Good or Bad?" 1889; several literary biographies in the new edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," including Chaucer, Spenser, Dryden, Pope, Sheridan, Fielding, Scott, Wordsworth, Byron, Dickens, Lytton, and John Stuart Mill; and various contributions to the Nineteenth Century, the Fortnightly Review, Macmillan's Magazine, and other periodicals.

MIOLAN-CARVALHO, Madame Marie Caroline, vocalist, born at Marseilles,

Dec. 31, 1827, was educated at a school in the neighbourhood, and shortly afterwards entered the Conservatoire of Paris, where she remained two years, under Duprez. Having carried off the first prize at the Conservatoire, she made a tour through the principal cities of France, in which she sang in concerts in company with her master, and on her return to Paris made her début at the Grand Opéra with brilliant success, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," and the second act of "La Juive." She was immediately afterwards engaged at the Opéra Comique, where she appeared in Auber's "Ambassadrice," and, later, in "Le Caïd" and "Giralda," the latter having been composed expressly for her by Adolphe Adam. She sang in "Actéon," "Les Mystères d'Udolphe," "La Cour de Célimène," "Les Noces de Jeannette," and "Le Nabab," all written for her. In 1853 Mlle. Miolan was married to M. Léon Carvalho, called Carvalho, director of the Théâtre Lyrique, of which establishment she at once became the prima donna, singing in "Fanchonnette," "Margot," "La Reine Topaze," "La Marguerite," "Les Noces de Figaro," and other new operas. On the death of Madame Bosio, in 1859, Mr. Gye was recommended by M. Meyerbeer to supply her place with Madame Miolan-Carvalho, who appeared, July 26, in the character of Dinorah, and at once became a favourite. During her second season in London, she was completely established as one of the first operatic singers of the day. She was the original Marguerite in Gounod's opera of "Faust," and appeared at the Royal Italian Opera of London in that character with great success in 1863.

MIRANDA, Countess de, née Nilsson, Christina, daughter of a labouring man, born at Wederslöf, near Wexjö, in Sweden, Aug. 3, 1843, at an early age evinced great taste for music. She became quite proficient on the violin, learned the flute, and attended fairs and other places of public resort, at which she sang, accompanying herself on the violin. While performing in this manner at a fair at Ljungby, in June, 1857, her extraordinary powers attracted the attention of Mr. F. G. Tornérhjelm, a gentleman of influence, who rescued her from her vagrant life, and placed her at school first at Halmstad, and afterwards at Stockholm, where she was instructed by M. Franz Berwald. She made her first appearance at Stockholm in 1860, went to Paris, continued her musical education under Masset and Wurtel, and came out at the Théâtre Lyrique, Oct. 27, as Violetta in the "Traviata," with such success that she was engaged for three years. She made her first appearance in London at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1867, proved the great operatic attraction at that establishment during the season, and has since performed here with constantly increasing success. More recently she paid a visit to the United States (1870), where, within less than a year, she is said to have cleared £30,000. After a Transatlantic trip of two years she reappeared at Drury Lane Theatre, May 28, 1872, in "La Traviata." She was married at Westminster Abbey, Aug. 27, 1872, to M. Auguste Rouzaud, the son of an eminent French merchant. He died at Paris Feb. 22, 1882; and in 1887 she married, in Paris, Count A. de Miranda.

MIRZA. Mehemed Ali Khan, His Excellency General Alla-us-Saltaneh, the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the Shah of Persia, has already had serious and valuable diplomatic experience. He was for about seven years Persian Consul-General in India, and then afterward in the same capacity for some time at Baghdad, whence he became Governor of Resht; for the last eight years, he has been Persian Consul-General at Tiflis (Caucasus), the Shah having, on this promotion, raised him to the highest rank in the empire—namely, "Alla-us-Saltaneh." A better choice of a minister could scarcely have been made, for his Excellency General Mirza Mehemed Ali Khan is yet young in years, but old enough in diplomacy ably to fulfil the important functions here in London which his august sovereign has confided to him. He possesses the secret of all real diplomatists—he is exceedingly affable, courteous, and patient with all his visitors; in fact, he knows the "art of listening" as well as that of talking, but speaks only to the point, few but expressive phrases. His Excellency General Mirza Mehemed Ali Khan is a real Persian, and a real Persian Mahomedan of high, even noble, family, of profound education and intellect, of perfect civilization, and of great personal merit. And being thus of pure Persian race and religion, he will be the better able and fit to serve his sovereign in England, and also become the more sympathetic here, for England now will be more sure of having the special attention of the Shah through the channel of his representative of the same race and creed than through the intermediary of those who are not of his country and creed.

MITCHELL, Donald Crant, LL.D., was born at Norwich, Connecticut, in April, 1822. He graduated at Yale College in 1841, studied law, travelled in Europe, and, in 1847, published "Fresh Gleanings, or a New Sheaf from the Old Fields of Continental Europe," under the pseudonym of "Ik Marvel." In 1848 he was again in Europe, and wrote, under his former pseudonym, "The Battle Summer," 1849. Returning to New York, he published, anonymously, "The Lorgnette," a series of satirical sketches of society, 1850. In the same year appeared "The Reveries of a Bachelor," followed in 1851 by "Dream Life." In 1853 he was appointed United States Consul at Venice. Returning to America in 1855, he purchased a farm, known as Edgewood, near New Haven, Connecticut, where he now resides. From 1869 to 1870 he was editor of Hearth and Home. In 1873 he was a United States Commissioner at the Paris Exposition. He has published "Fudge Doings," 1854; "My Farm of Edgewood," 1863; "Wet Days at Edgewood," 1864; "Seven Storeys, with Basement and Attic," 1864; "Dr. Johns," 1866; "Rural Studies," 1867 (subsequently issued under the title of "Out of Town Places"); "Pictures of Edgewood," 1869; "About Old Story-Tellers," 1878; "Bound Together," 1885; and in 1889-90 two volumes of "English Lands, Letters and Kings," a series which he proposes to extend.

MITCHELL, The Hon. Peter, Canadian statesman, was born Jan. 4, 1824, at Newcastle, New Brunswick, and was educated at the same place. He was admitted to the Bar in 1848, and in 1856 was elected a representative for his native county to serve in the Provincial Parliament. After serving for five years, he was appointed Life Member of the Legislative Council, and was a member of the Executive Government of New Brunswick from 1858 till 1863, when his government was defeated on the question of the confederation of the British American provinces. He was three times appointed delegate to Canada and England, with the view of obtaining the construction of the Intercolonial Railway from Halifax to Quebec, and the confederation of the provinces. In 1865 he formed, in connection with the Hon. R. D. Wilmot, an administration to test the province on confederation, and was appointed President of the Executive Committee. Having dissolved, they were sustained by a majority of 33 to 8, and confederation was carried. Mr. Mitchell, who was an ardent advocate of union, did much by his writings and speeches in and out of parliament to promote British connection. On the organisation of the Dominion Government in July, 1867, Mr. Mitchell was called to the cabinet as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which post he held until the resignation of the Macdonald Administration in 1873. He took an active part in the settlement of the Fisheries dispute between the Dominion of Canada and the Government of the United States in 1878, and, later, gave important aid in operations connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Since 1882 he has been representative in the Dominion Parliament for Northumberland County, New Brunswick. He bought the Montreal Herald in 1885, and is now President of the Herald Publishing Company. In 1870 he published "A Review of President Grant's Message to the United States Congress relative to the Canadian Fisheries."

MIVART, Professor St. George, Ph.D. (Rome), M.D., F.R.S., was born at 61 (then 39), Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, London, Nov. 30, 1827, and educated at Clapham Grammar School, Harrow School, King's College, London, and finally at St. Mary's College, Oscott, being prevented from going to Oxford (as intended) through having joined the Roman Catholic Church in 1844. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1851; appointed Lecturer of St. Mary's Hospital Medical School in 1862; elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1867; Vice-President of the Zoological Society in 1869 and 1882; Secretary of the Linnean Society in 1874—1880; and Vice President, 1880; Professor of Biology at University College, Kensington, in 1874; created a Ph.D. (Rome) in 1876, and M.D. (Louvain) in 1884. Mr. St. George Mivart is the author of various papers in the publications of the Royal, the Linnean, and the Zoological Societies, from 1864: e.g., "On the Zoology, Anatomy, and Classification of Apes and Lemurs, especially on the Osteology of the Limbs compared with the Limbs of Man" (Phil. Trans.); "The Myology of the Echidna, Agouti, Hyrax, Iguana, and certain Tailed-Batrachians;" "The Osteology of Birds;" "The Sciatic Plexus of Reptiles;" "The Structure of the Fins of Fishes, and the Nature and Genesis of the Limbs and Limb-Girdles of Vertebrate Animals generally;" "A Memoir of the Insectivora," published in the Cambridge Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, and translated in the Annales des Sciences Naturelles; sundry papers in the Popular Science Review, and articles in the Quarterly, Fortnightly, Dublin and Contemporary and Nineteenth Century Reviews, from 1870. He has also published the following books:—"Genesis of Species," 1871 (two editions); "Lessons in Elementary Anatomy," 1872; "Man and Apes," 1873; "Lessons from Nature," and "Contemporary Evolution," 1876; "Address to the Biological Section of the British Association," 1879; "The Cat" (an introduction to the study of back-boned animals), 1881; "Nature and Thought" (an introduction to a natural philosophy), 1883; "On Truth, a Systematic Inquiry," and "The Origin of Human Reason," 1889; and "A Monograph of the Canidae," 1890. Mr. St. George Mivart also wrote the articles "Apes," "Reptilia (Anatomy)," and "Skeleton," in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" a "Defence of Freedom and Liberty of Conscience," and "Examination of Mr. Herbert Spencer's Psychology," in the Dublin Review. He has delivered lectures at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, at the London Institution, at Leeds, Birmingham, Hull, Bradford, Bristol, Halifax, Leicester, Cardiff, Edinburgh, Dundee, and elsewhere. He is known through the "Genesis of Species" as, to a certain extent, Mr. Darwin's opponent—an opponent who, while fully asserting evolution generally, denies that it is applicable to the human intellect, as also that "natural selection" is in any instance its true cause. He represents the formation of new species as mainly due to one mode of action of that plastic innate power manifest on all hands in nature, as evidenced by the many instances referred to by him. The author brings strongly forward the independent origin of similar structures, insistence upon which is perhaps his principal contribution to physical philosophy. In his "Origin of Human Reason" he has pointed out the fundamental distinction between men and animals, distinctly defining wherein the human intellect differs from the highest psychical actions of brutes. In his work "On Truth" he has demonstrated what are the ultimate principles upon which all science must repose. To these expositions no reply has as yet been made. Dr. St. George Mivart, at the invitation of the Belgian Episcopate, has accepted the post of Professor of the Philosophy of Natural History in the University of Louvain.

MODJESKA, Helena, née Opido, actress, born at Cracow, Poland, Oct. 12, 1844, early manifested a desire for the stage, and after her marriage, at the age of seventeen, with her guardian (whose name she still bears on the play bills), a beginning was made with a company of strolling players. It was not, however, until after her husband's death in 1865, and her marriage three years later to Count Bozenta Chlapowski, a Polish patriot and journalist, that she became the theatrical star and favourite of Warsaw, a position which she held until about 1876, when she and her husband emigrated to America, and settled on a ranch in California. This did not prove so profitable as was expected, and in 1877, after only a few months' study of English, she made her appearance in an English version of "Adrienne Lecouvreur" at a theatre in San Francisco. She won the American public immediately, and her record since has been one of continued triumph. She has made a number of tours through the country, has acted several seasons in London and the British provinces, and has thrice visited Poland professionally. Madame Bozenta has appeared in about twenty-five parts in America, principally in the Shakespearian rôles of Beatrice, Imogen, Juliet and Rosalind, and also as Mary Stuart and Camille. She has also made adaptations for the Polish stage of "As You Like It" and "Twelfth Night."

MOENS, William John Charles, the son of Jacob Bernelot Moens, Esq. (d. 1856), of Upper Clapton, Middlesex, was born Aug. 12, 1833. He is a County Councillor for Hampshire, Lymington Rural Division, 1889; and Commissioner of Income and Land Taxes. He is the author of "English Travellers and Italian Brigands," 2 vols., 1866; "Through France and Belgium by River and Canal in the Steam-yacht Ytene, R.V.Y.C.," 1876; "Registers of the Dutch Church, Austin Friars, London, with History of the Strangers in England," 1881, privately printed; "The Walloons and their Church at Norwich, their History and Registers, 1565-1832," publication of the Huguenot Society of London, 1887-88, &c. Mr. Moens is a Fellow and Local Secretary for Hampshire of the Society of Antiquaries of London; Vice-President of the Huguenot Society of London; Member of the Council of the Camden Society; Member of the Council of the Harleian Society; Corresponding Honorary Member of the Commission pour l'Histoire des Églises Walloones de Hollande, &c.

MOLESWORTH, Sir Guilford Lindsey, K.C.I.E., Consulting Engineer to the Government of India for State Railways, Fellow of the University of Calcutta, Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, is the son of the Rev. John Edward Nassau Molesworth, D.D., vicar of Rochdale, and was born at Millbrook, Hants, in 1828. He was educated at King's School, Canterbury, and at the College of Civil Engineers, Putney; afterwards he served an apprenticeship to civil engineering under Mr. Dockray on the London and North Western Railway, and also in mechanical engineering under Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester. Subsequently he was employed in various railway and other engineering works in connection with ironworks in South Wales. In 1852 he was chief assistant-engineer on the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway, which he left in order to superintend the construction of buildings and machinery in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich during the Crimean War. Afterwards he practised as a Consulting Engineer in London for some years. In 1858 the Institution of Civil Engineers awarded to him the "Watt" Medal and the "Manby" premium, for a paper read before the Institution on the subject of "Conversion of Wood by Machinery." In 1859 he went out to the Ceylon Railway as Mechanical and Locomotive Engineer, and he was appointed Chief Engineer of the Ceylon Government Railway in 1862; Director-General of the railway in 1865; Director of Public Works in 1867; and Consulting Engineer to the Government of India in 1871. His "Pocket-book of Engineering Formulæ" passed through six editions in the first year, and is now a standard work in the profession. He originated and was mainly instrumental in introducing the system of Decimal Coinage adopted in Ceylon. His services in the enemy's country with the army in the field in time of war, gained for him the Afghan War Medal, as well as the Burmah War Medal and Clasp, and in 1881 he received the thanks of Her Majesty for excellent services rendered during the Afghan War. He is the author of various publications, amongst which may be named: "Proposals for the Establishment of a Decimal Coinage in Ceylon," 1868; and in India, 1871; "Reports on Public Works in Ceylon," 1869; "Light Railways in Ceylon," 1870; "Festiniog Railway," 1871; "State Railways in India," 1872; "Gauge of Railways in India," 1873; "Graphic Diagrams," 1877; "Metric Tables," 1879; "Masonry Dams," 1883; "Madras Harbour," and "Iron Manufacture in India," 1884; "Establishment of an Engineer Volunteer Corps in India," and "Imperialism for India," 1885; "Text-book of Bimetallism," "Land as Property," "Bimetallic Currency," "The Silver Question," "The 'Abt' System," and "Instinct and Reason in Ants," 1886. He was made Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire in 1879; and Knight Commander of the Order in 1888. Sir G. L. Molesworth married, in 1854, Maria Elizabeth, daughter of J. T. Bridges, Esq., of St. Nicholas Court, Thanet, and granddaughter of Sir Robert Affleck, Bart.

MOLESWORTH, Mrs. Mary Louisa, née Stewart, is of Scottish parentage, and was born, and partly educated, abroad. She has lived several years in France and Germany, and began to write very young. Her first works of any importance were four novels, published under the name of "Ennis Graham: Lover and Husband," "She was Young and He was Old," "Cicely," and "Not without Thorns." In 1875 she published her first book for children, "Tell me a Story." This has been succeeded by other similar volumes yearly. Mrs. Molesworth has also published "Summer Stories for Boys and Girls," "Four Ghost Stories," and "French Life in Letters." Mrs. Molesworth has also contributed to many of the best serials, and some of her serial stories have since appeared as volumes, e.g., "Hermie," "Hoodie," "The Boys and I," "The Palace in the Garden," "Neighbours," "Silverthorns," and "The Third Miss St. Quentin." The following novels are by Mrs. Molesworth:—"Marrying and Giving in Marriage," "That Girl in Black," and "Hathercourt Rectory." Mrs. Molesworth has contributed every month since its first appearance to The Child's Pictorial, for very little children, and some of these stories are now published as books:—"Five Minutes' Stories," and "Twelve Tiny Tales;" also "Lettice," "The Abbey by the Sea," "The Little Old Portrait," a story of the Great French Revolution, "A Charge Fulfilled," &c. Mrs. Molesworth's latest publications (1890) are—"Mother Bunch," "The Story of a Spring Morning," and "Family Troubles."

MOLTKE, Helmuth Carl Bernhard, Count Von, Chief Marshal of the German Empire, and ex-Chief of the General Staff, is descended from a well-known Mecklenburg family, and was born at Parchim, Oct. 26, 1800, in the neighbourhood of which place his father, a former officer of the Mollendorf regiment, possessed the estate of Gnewitz. Soon after Helmuth's birth his parents settled down in Holstein; and the boy, in his twelfth year, went to Copenhagen, in order to devote himself, in the barracks there, to the military profession. In 1822 he entered the Prussian service, as a Lieutenant in the 8th infantry regiment, and studied in the Military Academy. The war had nearly ruined his parents, and the young officer was thrown entirely on his own resources. After having spent some time in the School of Division of Frankfort-on-the-Oder, Moltke became a member of the General Staff. In 1835 he undertook a tour in Turkey, which brought him under the notice of the Sultan Mahmoud, who advised with the young Prussian officer on the reorganization of the Turkish army. Moltke remained several years in Turkey, and in 1839 took part in the campaign of the Turks in Syria against the Viceroy Mehemet Ali of Egypt and his adopted son Ibrahim Pasha. In 1845, having returned to Prussia, and published an account of his Turkish experiences, he became Adjutant to Prince Henry of Prussia, then resident in Rome, and after his death, in 1847, was engaged in connection with the general command on the Rhine, becoming, in 1848, a member of the Grand General Staff, and in 1849, Chief of the Staff of the 4th Army Corps, in Magdeburg. In 1858 he was advanced to the rank of Chief of the Grand General Staff of the Prussian Army, and in 1859 became a Lieutenant-General. After the conclusion of peace between Austria and Italy, Moltke spared no pains that he might fully develop the capacities of the Prussian General Staff and the Prussian Army. When the war of 1864 against Denmark broke out, Moltke sketched the plan of the campaign, and assisted in its execution, acting similarly in the case of the war of 1866. The whole plan of the Bohemian campaign was due to Lieutenant-General Moltke, who was personally present at the battle of Königgrätz, which he led, and in like manner arranged the bold advance of the Prussian columns against Olmütz and Vienna, and negotiated the armistice and the preliminaries of peace. For these services he received the Order of the Black Eagle, and a national dotation. To "Father Moltke" (Vater Moltke), as he is familiarly termed in the German army, and to his brilliant strategy, are ascribed the splendid victories of the German arms in the Franco-German war. He was practically the Commander-in-Chief. The whole plan of the campaign was due to him. In recognition of his unrivalled services, Moltke was made Marshal, Sept., 1871, again received a national dotation, and was created Count 1872. The illustrious Marshal, who is generally regarded as the first strategist of the day, received from the Czar, in Oct., 1870, the Order of St. George, the highest military decoration of Russia, and from his own Sovereign, the Grand Cross of the Order of the Iron Cross, on March 22, 1871. The Count retired from active service in Aug., 1888, and the Emperor appointed him President of the National Defence Commission, an office held by the first German Emperor when Prince of Prussia, and by the late Emperor Frederick when Crown Prince. On March 8, 1889, the veteran Marshal celebrated the seventieth anniversary of his entrance into the army; and, on Oct. 26, 1890, he celebrated his ninetieth birthday, when there was a torchlight procession of 10,000 persons. The Count's successor, as Chief of the Staff, is Count von Waldersee.

MOMMSEN, Professor Theodor, the eminent German jurist and historian, born at Garding, in Schleswig, Nov. 30, 1817, studied at the University of Kiel, and travelled from 1844 till 1847. On his return he wrote numerous articles for the Schleswig-Holstein Journal, which he conducted, and was made Professor of Law at Leipzig. Having been dismissed on account of the part he took in political affairs, he was made Titular Professor of Law at Zurich in 1852, at Breslau in 1854, and at Berlin in 1858. In 1875 he was appointed Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Leipzig. On June 15, 1882, he was tried at Berlin for having in an election speech slandered Prince Bismarck, but was acquitted. The decision was appealed against, and on April 7, 1883, the Imperial High Court of Appeal at Leipzig finally acquitted Professor MommSEN of the charge. He has written numerous learned works, has edited a magnificent work on Latin inscriptions, published by the Pussian Academy of Sciences, and a work on Roman Coins, and is best known in England by his "Earliest Inhabitants of Italy," of which a translation by Robertson appeared in London in 1858, and "History of Rome," translated by W. P. Dickson, and published in London in 1862-63. In 1878 the King of Italy conferred on him the Grand Cross of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. In 1880 Professor MommSEN's library was destroyed by fire; and a number of his English admirers had the happy idea of presenting him with a selection of classical and historical books, printed in England, to compensate him for some portion of his loss. On the occasion of his seventieth birthday, in Nov., 1887, a congratulatory address, signed by sixty-two Dons, was sent to him by members of the University of Oxford.

MONCK (Viscount), The Right Hon. Charles Stanley Monck, born at Templemore, co. Tipperary, Oct. 10, 1819, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and called to the Bar in Ireland in 1841. He was returned one of the members for Portsmouth, in the Liberal interest, in July, 1852, was re-elected in March, 1855, was defeated at the general election in March, 1857, and was an unsuccessful candidate for Dudley in April, 1861. He was a Lord of the Treasury from 1855 till 1858; was appointed a Commissioner of Charitable Donations and Bequests in Ireland in 1851, and Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Canada, and Governor-General of British America, Oct. 28, 1861. His lordship was formally reappointed, under a fresh Act of Parliament, Governor of the United Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick in June, 1867, but resigned in Nov., 1868. In 1871 he was appointed a Commissioner of National Education in Ireland. On the disestablishment of the Irish Church in 1871 he was appointed a Commissioner to carry into effect the provisions of the Act; the other Commissioners being Mr. Justice Lawson and the late Mr. G. A. Hamilton. He succeeded his father as fourth viscount in the peerage of Ireland, April 20, 1849, and was made a peer of the United Kingdom, July 12, 1866.

MONCREIFF (Lord), The Right Hon. James Moncreiff, second son of the late Sir James Wellwood Moncreiff, ninth baronet, of Tulliebole, Kinross-shire (a Lord of Sessions in Scotland, by the title of Lord Moncreiff), by Ann, daughter of Captain George Robertson, R.N., was born at Edinburgh, Nov. 29, 1811. He was educated at the High School and at the University of Edinburgh, and was admitted an advocate at the Scotch Bar in 1833. He was Solicitor-General for Scotland from Feb., 1850, till April, 1851, when, on the elevation of Lord Rutherford to the Bench, he was appointed the Lord Advocate, and continued to hold that office until the change of ministry in March, 1852. Soon after being appointed Lord Advocate, he was returned to Parliament as member for the Leith district, as a Liberal, and in favour of free trade. He retained his seat for the Leith district till April, 1859, when he was elected for Edinburgh, which city he continued to represent till 1868, when he was returned to Parliament as representative for the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen. He became Lord Advocate a second time in Dec., 1852, and occupied that position till March, 1858; a third time from June, 1859, till July, 1866; and a fourth time from Dec., 1868, till Nov., 1869, when he was appointed Lord Justice Clerk and President of the Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland. On this occasion he was sworn of the Privy Council, and took the courtesy title of Lord Moncreiff. He resigned the office of Lord Justice Clerk in Oct., 1888. It may be mentioned that in 1852 he brought in a Bill to abolish religious tests in the Scotch Universities, which was lost on the second reading. In 1853, however, he successfully introduced and carried the Bill, and among other measures of which he was the promoter may be enumerated the "Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Act," passed in 1854, and the "Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act," in 1856. Previous to his elevation to the judicial bench, Lord Moncreiff was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for the county of Edinburgh, Dean of the Faculty of Scotch Advocates, and Lieut.-Colonel of the Edinburgh Rifle Volunteers. He was elected Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh in the early part of the year 1869; was created a baronet May 17, 1871; and was raised to the peerage of the United Kingdom as Baron Moncreiff of Tulliebole, Kinross-shire, Jan. 1, 1874. In 1887 the members of the College of Justice showed their appreciation of his great services and high position by placing his lordship's portrait on one of the walls of the Parliament House in Edinburgh. A novel published in 1871, under the title of "A Visit to my Discontented Cousin," is said to have been written by Lord Moncreiff. In Aug., 1878, he was appointed one of the Royal Commissioners under "The Endowed Institutions (Scotland) Act, 1878," a post which he resigned in Oct. 1888. He succeeded in 1883 as 11th baronet, his brother, the Rev. Sir Henry Wellwood Moncreiff.

MONCRIEFF, Colonel Sir Alexander, K.C.B., F.R.S., J.P., born in 1829, is the eldest son of the late Captain Matthew Moncrieff of Culfargie, Perthshire, of the Madras Cavalry. Having been educated at the Universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen, he entered the office of Messrs. Miller and Grainger, Civil Engineers, in Edinburgh, where he served his time as a Civil Engineer. Colonel Moncrieff did not follow the profession, but obtained a commission in the Forfarshire Artillery Militia, and afterwards in the Edinburgh, or 3rd Brigade Scotch Division Royal Artillery, of which he rose to be Colonel Commandant. He travelled extensively in Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America, and received the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for topographical information given to the Colonial Office in London, at the particular request of the Governor-General of Canada. During the Crimean War Sir Alexander Moncrieff, then a lieutenant in the Forfarshire Militia, went to the seat of war, and received the permission of the Commander-in-Chief to visit the siege works, and to be present at the operations as a Militia officer, during the first and second bombardments of Sevastopol. It was then that the idea of the invention with which his name is associated occurred to his mind; but it was some years before it was matured into a practical form. It was first submitted by Captain Moncrieff to General Sir Richard Dacres, Commanding the Royal Artillery in Ireland, at Dublin in 1857, and it was some years more before the authorities were induced to give it a trial, after which Captain Moncrieff was engaged for eight years in the Royal Arsenal attached to the Department of the Director of Artillery. The Moncrieff System of Mounting Artillery, or the protected barbette system, is sometimes called the Disappearing System, because upon firing, the gun recoils into shelter, out of sight of the enemy, and the energy of the recoil is stored up so as to raise the gun into the firing position when loaded. In the first instance this was effected by means of a counterweight; and the interposition of a moving fulcrum (then for the first time employed in practical mechanics) enabled the sudden impetus of the discharge to be utilised without danger to the carriage. Another method by which the same end is accomplished, and which is applicable to sea service, and to many cases in which the direct force of gravity would be unwieldy or unsuitable for application, is Moncrieff's Hydro-pneumatic System. In this case the recoil of the gun drives down a piston, which forces water into a vessel of compressed air, and the further compression of the air stores up the energy of the recoil to raise the gun to the firing position when required. His system is now largely and increasingly used in the British Service, both by land and sea; and it is used also by foreign Governments. Sir A. Moncrieff is the author of a series of papers, extending over twenty years, illustrating, and advocating, the importance of Invisibility, Dispersion of heavy guns, and the use of parapets with their superior slope formed en glacis, which are the chief characteristics of his system, and which may be said to be the converse of the old system previously universal, in which the guns were visible, and the works in which they stood were conspicuous. Sir A. Moncrieff is a J.P. for Perthshire; a Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers; a Fellow of the Royal Society; was created a C.B. in 1880, and a K.C.B. in 1890; and is Chairman of the Board of Management of the Oxford Military College, with which institution he has been connected since its inception. He also is a member of the Athenæum and United Service Clubs; and is a Knight of the Imperial Order of the Rose of Brazil; which order was given to him by the Emperor when, in one of his journeys in search of scientific information, he was made acquainted with Sir A. Moncrieff's invention, and recognised its originality and importance.

During his absence the University of Oxford conferred on him an honorary degree of D.C.L., and he also received an honorary LL.D. degree from the University of Calcutta at the same time as the Prince of Wales. He was English Lecturer at King's College from 1857 till 1865, with duty confined to direction of the English department in the evening classes. From 1865 to 1889 he was Professor of English Language and Literature, at University College, London, and upon his retirement to Carisbrooke in 1889, he was made Emeritus Professor. He was Examiner in English Language, Literature, and History to the University of London, from 1870 to 1875, and during a second term of five years from 1878 to 1883. From 1878 to 1880 he was also Professor of English Language and Literature at Queen's College, London. In 1879 the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh. From 1882 until 1889 he was Principal of University Hall, London.

MORLEY, The Right Hon. John, LL.D., M.P., is the eldest son of the late Mr. Jonathan Morley, of Blackburn, Lancashire, where he was born in Dec., 1838. He was educated at Cheltenham College and at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1859, and M.A. in 1874; and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859. He was for some years editor of the Literary Gazette, the title of which was subsequently altered to the Parthenon. Mr. Morley was editor of the Fortnightly Review, from 1867 to Oct. 1882. He was also editor of the Pall Mall Gazette from May, 1880, till Aug., 1883, and of Macmillan's Magazine from 1883 to 1885. He unsuccessfully contested the borough of Blackburn in 1869, in the Liberal interest, and the City of Westminster in 1880; but in Feb. 1883, at a by-election, he was returned as an advanced Liberal by the borough of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, defeating his Conservative opponent, Mr. Gainsford Bruce, by a majority of 2,256 (9,443 votes against 7,187). Mr. Morley presided over the great Conference of Liberals held at Leeds in Oct., 1883. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's "Home Rule" Cabinet, Feb., 1886, Mr. Morley was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland; and throughout the debate on the Bill (for which he was in a great measure responsible), he was the Prime Minister's right-hand man. As almost the only cabinet minister who had been a consistent Home Ruler for many years, Mr. Morley was regarded with respect even by his most thorough-going opponents. He is one of the five Liberals who met in Jan. 1887, for the purpose of discovering a modus vivendi for the reunion of the Liberal party. He was returned at the head of the poll for Newcastle, July, 1886. His works are—"Edmund Burke, an Historical Study," 1867; "Critical Miscellanies," 1871, 2nd series, 1877; "Voltaire," 1872; "On Compromise," 1874; "Rousseau," 1876; "Diderot and the Encyclopedists," 2 vols., 1878; "Life of Richard Cobden," 1881; "Walpole," 1889, in the "Twelve English Statesmen Series;" and he is the editor of the "English Men of Letters" series. Mr. Morley is an honorary LL.D. of the University of Glasgow. He was elected a member of the Reform Club in 1890.

MOROCCO, Sultan of. See MOULEY EL HASSAN.

MORRIS, The Rev. Francis Orpen, B.A., eldest son of the late Rear-Admiral Henry Gage Morris, of Beverley, Yorkshire, and grandson of Lieutenant-Colonel Roger Morris, of York, was born March 25, 1810, and educated at Bromsgrove School and Worcester College, Oxford, where he graduated a second class in Classics in 1833. He holds the living of Nunburnholme, Yorkshire; was chaplain to the late Duke of Cleveland; and has written "A History of British Birds," published in 1851-57;

"A Bible Natural History," "A Book of Natural History," 1852; "A Natural History of the Nests and Eggs of British Birds," and "A Natural History of British Butterflies," 1853; "Anecdotes in Natural History," "Natural History of British Moths," 1859-71; "Records of Animal Sagacity and Character," 1861; "The County Seats of the Noblemen and Gentlemen of Great Britain and Ireland," "The Humanity Series of School Books," "Plain Sermons for Plain People" (200); "A Guide to an Arrangement of Birds," "An Essay on Scientific Nomenclature," "Difficulties of Darwinism," 1870; "Dogs and their Doings," 1871; "All the Articles of the Darwin Faith," 1877; "Letters to The Times about Birds," 1879; "The Demands of Darwinism on Credulity," and several smaller works on religious, scientific and social questions, and he has for many years been carrying on a "Plan of Campaign," against the unjustifiable cruelty of vivisection. Mr. Morris is a Justice of the Peace for the East Riding of Yorkshire.

MORRIS, The Rev. John, F.S.A., was born in India, at Ootacamund, in the Madras Presidency, July 4, 1826. While pursuing his studies at Trinity College, Cambridge, he became a Roman Catholic, and repairing to Rome entered the English College. After receiving orders he spent three years in the diocese of Northampton and was made Canon. He then returned to Rome, and for three years held the office of Vice-Rector of the English College; at the expiration of that period he entered the archdiocese of Westminster, was made Canon Penitentiary of the Metropolitan Chapter, and acted as Secretary to Cardinal Wiseman, and his successor, Cardinal Manning. He left the archdiocese in 1867 to join the Society of Jesus. He has spent a year in Malta as Rector of a College of the Society newly established there; he has been for some years Professor of Canon Law and Church History at St. Beuno's College, near St. Asaph; and for seven years he was Rector and Master of Novices at Roshampton. Father Morris has published a "Life of St. Thomas of Canterbury," "Cardinal Wiseman's Last Illness," "Condition of Catholics under James I.," "The Troubles of our Catholic Forefathers," three series; "The Letter-Books of Sir Amias Poulet, Keeper of Mary Queen of Scots," and "The Life of Father John Gerard."

MORRIS, Lewis, M.A., was born in Carmarthen, in Jan. 1833, being the eldest son of the late L. E. Williams Morris, of Carmarthen, formerly of Blannant, Breconshire, by Sophia, daughter of the late John Hughes, of Carmarthen. He was educated at Cowbridge, and Sherborne Schools and Jesus College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1855 as first-class in Classics and Chancellor's Prizeman; M.A., 1858; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Nov., 1861, when he obtained a Certificate of Honour of the First Class; practised chiefly as a conveyancing counsel until 1880; was elected an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College in 1877. In 1879 he was appointed a Knight of the Order of the Saviour (of Greece). In the same year he accepted the office of Honorary Secretary of the University College of Wales. In 1880, he was appointed on the Departmental Committee, charged by the Government to inquire into Intermediate and Higher Education in Wales, and, in the same year, was made a Justice of the Peace for Carmarthenshire, in which county, at Penbryn House, he resides. He was appointed Vice-Chairman of the Political Committee of the Reform Club, in the place of the late Mr. W. P. Adam, M.P.; and was a candidate, in December, 1881, for the Carmarthen burghs, but retired; in 1886, he was Gladstonian candidate for Pembroke and Haverfordwest, but was defeated. It is understood that Mr. Morris, who has recently resigned his Vice-Chairmanship at the Reform Club, and his candidature for the Pembroke Boroughs, has definitely renounced all connection with politics. Mr. Morris, who is also the author of numerous addresses and papers on Educational subjects and is a member of the Governing Bodies of the three Welsh colleges, is perhaps best known for his contributions to the poetical literature of the time. In 1871-74-75, appeared the 3 vols. of "Songs of Two Worlds," since collected, and in a thirteenth edition. In 1876 appeared Book II., and in 1877, Books I. and III., of "The Epic of Hades," now in a twenty-sixth edition. In December, 1878, appeared "Gwen, a Drama, in Monologue," in March, 1880, "The Ode of Life," both which are since in an eighth edition, and in Oct., 1883, "Songs Unsung," since in a sixth edition. In 1886, appeared a tragedy, "Gycia," written for the stage, but not yet represented, now in a fifth edition, and in 1887, "Songs of Britain," now in a third edition, embodying several beautiful Welsh legends, and containing also the Odes on the Queen's Jubilee, and on the Imperial Institute (the latter written by request, owing to the illness of the Laureate), for which Mr. Morris received the Jubilee Medal from the Queen. The above works are now collected, and were published under the author's name, in a popular edition of one volume in the spring of 1890; which volume has already passed into a fifth edition. Mr. Morris is understood to have completed his final and most considerable poem, to be entitled "A Vision of Saints," which, proceeding after the manner of Dante, attempts for the Christian ideal what "The Epic of Hades" did for that of the Pagan world. Mr. Morris is the great grandson of the well-known Welsh antiquary and poet, Lewis Morris, of Penbryn, in Cardiganshire.

MORRIS, The Right Hon. Lord Michael, eldest son of Martin Morris, Esq., J. P., of Spiddal, co. Galway, by Julia, daughter of Dr. Charles Blake, of Galway, was born at the latter place in November, 1827. He received his education at Erasmus Smith's College, Galway, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1847, First Senior Moderator and Gold Medallist. He was called to the Bar in Ireland in June, 1849, and made a Queen's Counsel in Feb., 1863. Mr. Morris who was High Sheriff in 1849-50, held the office of Recorder of Galway from 1857 till 1865. The representative of one of the old families known as the "Tribes of Galway," he was first elected as one of the members in Parliament of the borough of Galway, on Independent principles, in July, 1865, having polled 90 per cent. of the electors; was subsequently twice re-elected without opposition, on his appointment as Solicitor-General for Ireland (July, 1866), and as Attorney-General (Nov., 1866) in Lord Derby's Government; and retained the seat until he was raised to the Bench, as one of the Judges of the Common Pleas in Ireland, in 1867, when he was succeeded in the representation of Galway by his brother. He served as a member of the Royal Commission to inquire into Primary Education in Ireland, in 1868, 1869, and 1870; and became a Commissioner of National Education in 1868, and a member of the senate of the Royal University; was appointed Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in 1876, and in 1889 was appointed Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, in the room of the late Lord Fitzgerald. He was created a baronet in Aug., 1885, and in 1890 was raised to the peerage as a "peer for life," under the name, style, and title of Lord Morris of Spiddal, co. Galway. Lord Morris married, in 1860, Anna, daughter of the late Hon. H. G. Hughes, Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, MORRIS, Philip Richard, A.R.A., was born at Devonport, Dec. 4, 1838. The son of an engineer and ironfounder, he pursued his early artistic studies in the hours won with some difficulty from the working day. He owed his first regular training to Mr. Holman Hunt, and by the advice of that eminent artist, studied the Elgin Marbles in the British Museum. He next entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where his first success was made by gaining the silver Medal for the best drawing from the life. In the following year he achieved double honours by obtaining the silver Medal for the best painting from the nude figure, and a second similar prize for the best painting from the dressed figure. In 1858 he won the Gold Medal for the best historical picture, the subject being "The Good Samaritan," and subsequently competed successively for the Travelling Studentship. While he was yet a student in the schools of the Royal Academy his first publicly exhibited picture appeared on its walls under the title of "Peaceful Days," since which time Mr. Morris has constantly exhibited at the Royal Academy, the Grosvenor Gallery, and elsewhere. Among his best known pictures are "The Shadow of the Cross," "Prison Fare," and the large picture of a "Procession at Dieppe," 1877; and "Home: a Family Group," 1889. Mr. Morris was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, June 18, 1877.

MORRIS, The Rev. Richard, M.A., LL.D., was born Sept. 8, 1833, at Bermondsey, Southwark, and educated at St. John's College, Battersea. He was appointed lecturer on the English language and literature in King's College School (Modern Department) in April, 1869; and ordained by the Bishop of Winchester, and licensed as curate of Christ Church, Camberwell, on Trinity Sunday, 1871. He was created Doctor of Laws in 1870 by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Dr. Morris is a Member of the Council of the Philological and Early English Text Societies. He was elected President of the Philological in 1874, and in the same year received the honorary degree of M.A. from the University of Oxford. In July, 1875, he was elected head master of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys. His works are:—"The Etymology of Local Names," 1857; "Specimens of Early English," Parts I. and II., 1867, 1872, 1882; and "Historical Outlines of English Accidence," 1872; "Elementary Lessons in Historical English Grammar," 1874; "Primer of English Grammar," 1875. He is also the editor of "Liber Cure Cocorum," 1862; "Hampole's Pricke of Conscience," 1863; "Early English Alliterative Poems," and "Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight," 1864; "The Story of Genesis and Exodus," 1865; "Chaucer's Poetical Works," and "The Avenbite of Inwytt," 1866; "Selections from Chaucer's Canterbury Tales," 1867; "Old English Homilies," 1867-68; "Chaucer's Boethius," 1868; "Spenser's Works," 1869; "Legends of the Holy Rood," 1871; "An Old English Miscellany," 1872; "Old English Homilies" (second series), 1873; "Cursor Mundi," and "The Blickling Homilies," 1874-78; "Report on Pāli Literature," 1880; "Añguttara-Nikāya," Part I., 1882; "Buddhavaṃsa and Cariyā-Pitaka," 1882; "Puggala Paññatti," 1883; "Dāthavaṃsa," and "Pāli Notes and Queries," 1884; "Folk Tales of India," 1884-85.

MORRIS, William, was born at Walthamstow, near London, in 1834. He is the eldest son of a merchant, who died in 1844, leaving his widow and children well off. He was educated at Marlborough, and at Exeter College, Oxford. He studied painting, but did not succeed in that profession. In 1858 he published a small volume entitled "The Defence of Guenevere" (since re-published in 1875), and other poems. In 1863, with several partners, amongst whom were D. G. Rossetti, Ford Madox Brown, and E. Burne Jones, he started in London an establishment for the artistic designing and manufacture of various articles, especially wall paper, stained glass, woven goods, and household decorations. The manufacturing part of the business has since been moved to Merton Abbey, Surrey. At this business Mr. Morris has ever since wrought as a designer, devoting his leisure to the composition of poetry. He published "The Life and Death of Jason," a narrative poem, in 1867, and "The Earthly Paradise" (4 parts), 3 vols., 1868-70. The latter poem is made up of twenty-four legendary and romantic tales in verse, recited by a company of travellers who had sailed westward from Norway to find the earthly paradise. He published also a poem entitled "Love is Enough, or the Freeing of Pharamond; a Morality," 1873. His later publications are, "The Æneids of Virgil, done into English verse," 1876; and "The Story of Sigurd the Volsung, and the Fall of the Niblungs," a poem in 14 books, 1877. In collaboration with Mr. Eiríkr Magnússon, he has translated the following works from the Icelandic:—"The Story of Grettir the Strong," 1869; "The Story of the Volsungs and the Niblungs," 1870; and "Three Northern Love Stories," 1875. His "Hopes and Fears for Art: Five Lectures, delivered in Birmingham, London, and Nottingham, 1878-81," appeared in 1882. A translation of the Odyssey was published in 1887; "A Dream of John Bull," in 1888; "Signs of Change" (a collection of socialist lectures), in the same year. "The House of the Wolfings," in 1889; and "The Roots of the Mountains," in 1890. The last two books are romances written in mingled prose and verse. Of late years Mr. Morris has declared himself a Socialist, and has written and spoken much in support of socialist doctrines.

MORTON, The Hon. Levi Parsons, LL.D., was born at Shoreham, Vermont, May 16, 1824. He entered mercantile life at an early age and soon showed a remarkable aptitude for business. In 1850 he became a partner in a Boston firm of merchants, and in 1854, removed to New York, where he established the firm of Morton & Grinnell. He founded, in 1863, the banking houses of Morton, Bliss & Co. at New York, and Morton, Rose & Co. in London, the latter serving as fiscal agents of the U.S. Government from 1873 to 1884. Both these houses were active in the syndicates that negotiated U.S. bonds, and in the payments of the Geneva award of $15,500,000 and the Halifax fisheries award of $5,500,000. Mr. Morton was an Honorary Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1878, and in the same year was elected a Republican Member of the House of Representatives, and was re-elected in 1880. He declined a nomination for the Vice-Presidency in 1880, but accepted the mission to France when it was tendered him by President Garfield. During his occupancy of that post, 1881-85, he secured the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of American pork, and obtained a legal status for American corporations in France. In 1888 he accepted the nomination for the Vice-Presidency again offered him by the Republican party, and was duly elected in November of that year for the term expiring March 4, 1893. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Dartmouth College in 1881.

MOSELEY, Henry Nottidge, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., son of the late Rev. Henry Moseley, F.R.S., Canon of Bristol, was born at Wandsworth, Nov. 14, 1844, and educated at Harrow and Exeter College, Oxford. He subsequently studied medicine at University College, London, and in Vienna and at Leipzig. In 1871, he served as a member of the English Government Eclipse Expedition to Ceylon and Southern India, and made successful observation near Trincomali. In the autumn of 1872, he was appointed one of the naturalists to the Challenger Expedition, and served on board H.M.S. Challenger during the entire voyage round the world till May, 1876. On his return he was elected Fellow of Exeter College, and resided there several years working out some of the scientific results of the expedition and preparing for the press his book entitled "Notes by a Naturalist on the Challenger," 1879; a large portion of which is re-printed in the "Narrative" volume of the official work on the scientific results of the Challenger Expedition, of which he is joint author with his colleagues on the scientific staff. He acted two years as Assistant Registrar to the University of London, and vacated that position on his election in Nov., 1881, to the Linacre Professorship of Human and Comparative Anatomy in the University of Oxford. He became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1877, and has been for the last two years a member of the Council. In 1884 he was President of the Section of Biology at the meeting of the British Association at Montreal, when the McGill University conferred on him the degree of LL.D. During the Challenger Expedition he undertook the entire collection of plants at the various regions visited. Besides the "Notes by a Naturalist on the Challenger" he has published a small work entitled "Oregon, its Climate, Resources, People, and Productions," 1878; and contributed to the Transactions of the Royal Society, and those of other learned bodies a large number of papers on various natural history subjects. His more important memoirs are: "On the Anatomy and Histology of the Land Planarians of Ceylon," 1874; "On the Structure and Development of Peripatus Capensis," 1874; "On the Structure and Relations of the Alcyonarian Heliopora Cœrulea," 1876; "On the Inhabitants of the Admiralty Islands," 1877; "On the Structure of the Stylasteridæ," the Croonian Lecture, Royal Society, 1878; "Report on Hydroid Alcyonarian and Madreporarian Corals procured during Voyage of H.M.S. Challenger," 1881; "On the Presence of Eyes in the Shells of certain Chitonidæ," 1885. He married, in 1881, Amabel, youngest daughter of the late Mr. J. Gwyn Jeffreys, F.R.S., the well-known conchologist.

chants of Broussa, of Asia Minor. His father, Hadji Halil Agha, died young, and Ahmed Moukhtar, who was born Oct. 31, 1839, was brought up by his grandfather, who sent him, in 1851, to the preparatory military school of his native city. He manifested a remarkable aptitude for military studies, and at the expiration of five years he passed from the school first of his class. Entering the Military Academy at Constantinople, he remained four years as pupil, when, in consequence of his progress, he was, while still pursuing his studies, promoted to the grade of lieutenant. When he left, as a further reward of merit, he was made captain on the staff, and in that capacity he, in 1860, joined the head-quarters of the Serdar Ekrem Omar Pacha, in Montenegro, where, with a mere handful of troops, he dashed at an almost impregnable pass, and rendered such service that he was decorated on the spot with the Medjidieh of the 5th Class. After a time Ahmed Moukhtar returned to the Military Academy, where he was appointed to the post of Professor of Astronomy, Military Tactics, and Fortification. In this somewhat mixed capacity he remained until 1863, when he was sent as binbashi or major and chief of the staff of the division of Islaheye—a division of organisation—at Alexandretta, under the command of Dervish Pacha, now mushir at Batoum. At the end of 1864 the young soldier was appointed caimakam, or lieutenant-colonel, and tutor to Prince Yousouf Issedid, the eldest son of Sultan Abdul Aziz. In this capacity he travelled over the greater part of Europe, and received the Legion of Honour, the Red Eagle, and the Crown of Iron among other decorations, and in 1867 returned to Constantinople. At that time Prince Yousouf became colonel of the Imperial Guard, and Ahmed Moukhtar was appointed one of the commissioners for regulating the frontier of Montenegro, in which capacity he served until 1869, by his policy saving to Turkey the strategical point of Veli Malou Berdu, between Spitz and Podgoritzta, while as the ex-Professor of Fortifications he made the tête du pont of Vezir Keupri. For these services he was promoted to the Third Class of the Medjidieh, and returning to Stamboul was made a member of the Council of War. Three months later he was nominated general of brigade, under Redif Pacha, then commanding the Yemen expedition against the Arabs, 20,000 of whom were in insurrection. Soon after Moukhtar's arrival Redif fell ill, and the command fell into the hands of the young liwa, or major-general. He took the city of Yedy, and was promoted for that achievement to the grade of ferik, or general of division, and chief of all the corps in Yemen, Redif becoming governor, until he was superseded, on the ground of illness, by Essad Pacha. When Ali Pacha, the Minister of War, died, Essad Pacha became seraskier, and Moukhtar was promoted to mushir (or full general) and the governorship of Yemen, in 1871, at the age of 33. He also received the Osmanli of the First Class in brilliants. After the taking of Sana he was further decorated with the First Class of the Medjidieh. In 1873 he returned to Stamboul, where he was appointed Minister of Public Works, but he did not take up the post, as a few days afterwards he was named Governor of Crete. He was not destined, however, to occupy the post, for the command of the Shumla army corps fell vacant, and it was conferred on the young mushir. He remained at Shumla for 13½ months, during which time he constructed the existing fortifications. Next, appointed Governor and Military Commandant at Erzeroum, he served in the Armenian capital for another 13½ months, when, for yet a third period of 13½ months, he took the command of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Montenegro, where his friends claimed for him that he had gained twenty battles and lost only one. Now named Governor of Candia, he was at the end of ten days about to leave Constantinople when the Government detained him to have his advice on the questions affecting Montenegro, giving him the nominal command of the 4th or Erzeroum army corps. On March 26, 1877, while in his bureau at Stamboul, he learnt that for the first time the prospects of peace were judged hopeless by Turkish statesmen, and making an immediate application for a ship he left in a man-of-war on the 26th for Trebizonde, where he arrived on the 30th, proceeding, after three days' hard work in the organisation of land transport, &c., to Erzeroum and Kars. He had only three weeks to provide for the defence of Armenia when the war broke out, and in less than a week from his arrival in Kars that fortress was invested, and Moukhtar retired on the Soghanly Dag. His gallant conduct has become a matter of history. On the evening of Oct. 1, 1877, he received the news that the Sultan had conferred on him the title of Ghazi, one of the greatest honours that can be given to an Ottoman. The word originally means fanatic, but in its modern acceptation it is both Defender of the Faith and Conqueror. Besides this title, the First Class of the Medjidieh in diamonds, two fine Arab horses, and a sword in brilliants, marked his Ottoman Majesty's sense of Ahmed Moukhtar's services. In April, 1878, he was appointed Grand Master of Artillery, and in November of the same year, Commandant of Janina. In Sept., 1883, he was chosen to proceed to Berlin to attend the German autumn military manœuvres. He also had several interviews with Prince Bismarck with reference to the entrance of Turkey into the Austro-German alliance. His Excellency is the author of an astronomical work called "Fenni Bassite, ou la Science du Quadrant Solaire pour le Temps Turque," the hours in Turkey depending upon the moment of sunset, and consequently varying from day to day. Moukhtar-Pacha has retained his early interest in mathematics and astronomy, and recently has written an important work on the forms of calculation adopted before the invention of logarithms, on the astrolabe, and on a reform in the calendar, whereby the annual error is reduced to two seconds; so that, for 30,000 years, the equinox would always fall on the true day.

MOULEY EL HASSAN, Sultan of Morocco, was born in 1831, and, though not the eldest son, ascended the throne on the death of his father, Sidi-Muley Mohammed, Sept. 20, 1873. He claims to be the thirty-fourth in descent from Ali, the uncle and son-in-law of the Prophet Mohammed.

MOULTON, John Fletcher, M.A., F.R.S., &c., the third son of the late Rev. James Egan Moulton, was born at Madeley, in Shropshire, on Nov. 18, 1844. He received the elements of his education at the New Kingswood School, near Bath; and subsequently proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he became a pupil of the celebrated Dr. Routh. Throughout his school and college days young Moulton displayed an extraordinary faculty for mastering any subject which he attacked; so much so as hardly ever to fail of securing the first place in any examination for which he sat. His favourite subject was mathematics. During his undergraduate course at Cambridge, he was a competitor for mathematical honours at the London University, and he succeeded in carrying off in succession a mathematical scholarship at the matriculation examination, and again another mathematical scholarship at the first B.A. examination. In the next year he became University Scholar; and, in 1868, he graduated M.A., and obtained the Gold Medal for mathematics. Meanwhile he was equally carrying everything before him at Cambridge, where he won the first mathematical scholarship at St. John's College; and, subsequently, in the same year in which he took the Gold Medal at the London University, became Senior Wrangler and first Smith's Prizeman. On this occasion his score of marks was so extraordinary that his excess of marks over what would have sufficed to secure the Senior Wranglership would alone have entitled him to a high place among the wranglers. As was natural in the circumstances, Mr. Moulton, when the choice of a profession presented itself to his mind, at first inclined to adopt an academic career, and he became a Fellow, afterwards a Lecturer, of Christ's College, and subsequently a Lecturer at Jesus College. The attractions of a larger sphere, however, in the end prevailed, and in 1873 he resigned his Fellowship and came to London, receiving in the next year a call to the Bar at the Middle Temple. He took silk in 1885, and is still in leading practice at the Bar. In politics Mr. Moulton has always been an advanced thinker. He was a Radical member of the Union Debating Society at Cambridge, over which he for a time presided, and sat for a short while in the last Parliament as the Liberal representative of Clapham. He was, however, among the many Liberals dislodged at the general election of 1886, and has not yet found an opportunity of re-entering the House of Commons. He is at the present time the designated Liberal candidate for the representation of Nottingham. Notwithstanding professional and political pre-occupations, Mr. Moulton has from time to time made contributions to current scientific discussion, and in particular during the year 1879 he wrote, in collaboration with the late Dr. William Spottiswoode, at that time President of the Royal Society, two elaborate papers upon the discharge of Electricity through rarified gases, or, to speak more particularly, in vacuum tubes. The merit of these contributions was at once recognised in scientific circles, and Mr. Moulton was, in June, 1880, elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. Again, in 1881, he assisted at the Congress of Electricians, which met during that year in Paris, and on that occasion was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour. He married, in 1875, Clara, the widow of the late R. W. Thompson of Edinburgh; she died in 1889.

MOULTON, The Rev. William Fiddian, D.D., President of the Wesleyan Conference, the son of the Rev. James Egan Moulton, was born at Leek, in 1835, and was educated at Woodhouse Grove School. In 1856 he graduated M.A. at the London University, gaining the Gold Medal in Mathematics. In the Scriptural Examinations and Biblical Criticism he was Prizeman. Mr. Moulton then entered the Wesleyan Ministry; and, in 1858, was appointed Classical Tutor in the Wesleyan Theological College, Richmond. After having laboured there for sixteen years, he was appointed Head Master of the New Wesleyan School, "The Leys," at Cambridge in 1874. Previously, in 1872, he had been elected a member of the Legal Hundred at the earliest election at which the laws of the Wesleyan Connexion admitted into that select body. While at Richmond, in 1870, he published a translation of Winer's "Treatise on the Grammar of New Testament Greek;" and in the same year he was invited to join the New Testament Revision Committee, which invitation he accepted, and continued as an active member till the completion of the Revised Version in 1880. It is understood that Dr. Moulton is engaged upon the marginal references for the Revised New Testament; a new Reference Bible of that Revised Version being in preparation. He is also one of the Cambridge Committee for the revision of the translation of the Apocrypha, his original colleagues being the late Dr. Lightfoot, Dr. Westcott, and Dr. Hort. In 1878 he published a "Popular History of the English Bible," and in 1879, "Commentaries on the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the Gospel of St. John." He has also published other minor works. The value of his work was recognised by the University of Edinburgh, which conferred on him the degree of D.D. in 1874; and by the University of Cambridge, which made him an honorary M.A. in 1877. In 1874 the foundation of "The Leys" School in Cambridge took Dr. Moulton from Richmond. The success of this school is now established, there being more than 160 boys in residence, drawn from all the Evangelical Churches. In 1890 Dr. Moulton was elected President of the Wesleyan Conference.

He became manager of the Standard in 1873, and editor in 1876. It is said that the success of that important paper is mainly due to the ability and moderation of its present editor.

MULHALL, Michael G., born 1836, is third son of the late Thomas Mulhall, lawyer, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin. He was educated at the Irish College, Rome. In 1861 he founded the Buenos Ayres Standard, the first English daily paper printed in S. America, of which he is still half-owner. His handbook of the River Plate has gone through five editions, one in Spanish. During the last ten years he has been a constant contributor to the Contemporary Review and to section F. of the British Association. He was elected to the Committee of the Association in 1884, and attended the Anglo-American Scientific Congress, held that year at Philadelphia. His principal works are, "The Progress of the World," 1880; and the "Dictionary of Statistics," 1886. His wife, Mrs. Marion Mulhall, published, in 1883, a book of travels "Between the Amazon and the Andes," and received a complimentary diploma from the Royal Italian Geographical Society.

MÜLLER, George, founder of the Orphanage at Bristol, was, according to his own "Narrative" of the "Lord's Dealings" with himself, born at Kropenstaedt, near Halberstadt, Prussia, Sept. 27, 1805. In 1810, his parents removed to Heimersleben, where his father was appointed collector in the Excise. Between the ages of ten and eleven he was sent to Halberstadt, to the Cathedral Classical School, there to be prepared for the university, his father's desire being that he should become a clergyman, although he acknowledges many youthful delinquencies indicative of unfitness at that time for a sacred calling. He became a member of the University of Halle, with honourable testimonials, and thus obtained admission to preach in the Lutheran establishment. He began preaching in August, 1826, and lived for two months, in free lodgings provided for poor students of divinity. In June, 1828, the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews invited him to London on a six months' probation; but the Prussian law required from him three years' military service. He failed to obtain exemption; but an illness came on and left him in a condition unfit for military service; and in March, 1829, he reached London. He studied Hebrew and Chaldee; but he fell ill again, and by medical advice, went to Teignmouth, where he formed the acquaintance of his "beloved brother, friend, and fellow-labourer, Henry Craik." He could not conform to the disciplinary conditions of the Jews' Society, and he ceased to be one of its missionary students in Jan. 1830. Ultimately he consented to settle down at Teignmouth, as the minister at Ebenezer Chapel; he also laboured in Bristol. In 1830, he married Mary Groves; and the same year gave up pew rents and threw himself on voluntary gifts, for which a box was set up in the chapel. In Dec. 1835, after a visit to the Continent, and after much consideration, he printed a proposal for the establishment of an Orphan House for destitute children bereaved of both parents. By May, 1837, there were sixty-four children in two houses; and at the end of that year Mr. Müller wrote and published the first part of his "Narrative." He continued it in 1841, 1844, and 1856. At the end of 1838 there were 86 orphans in three houses. At the end of 1856 the orphans numbered 297; and Mr. Müller wrote, "Without any one having been personally applied to for anything by me, the sum of £84,441 6s. 3½d. has been given to me for the orphans, as the result of prayer to God." Expansion, the addition of house to house, increase in the number of orphans, have been the history of this undertaking, until, in 1875, 2,000 children were lodged, fed, and educated, without a shilling of endowment, without a committee, without organization, by funds drawn from all parts of the world. Besides all this, through the agency of the Institution named, Mr. Müller supports numerous foreign and home missionaries and schools, and provides for the circulation of vast numbers of the Scriptures and religious tracts. Mr. Müller went to Queensland on a preaching tour in 1886.

R. Gardiner, of "An Introduction to English History," 1881. He has written also various historical articles in the "Dictionary of Christian Antiquities;" and is the author of those on "The Popedom," "The Reformation," and "Universities" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." MUSURUS PACHA, Constantine, diplomatist, son of Paul Musurus, a native of Retimo, in Crete, and a descendant of an ancient patrician family, was born at Constantinople, Feb. 18, 1807. He received, at Constantinople, a very careful education, comprising the classical literature of Greece and Rome, the sciences, and several European languages. In 1832 he was appointed Secretary to the prince of Samos (Stephen Vogorides), and in 1833 accompanied the commissioners of France, England, and Russia, sent to exhort the Samians to make their submission to the Porte. The commissioners having failed, M. Musurus, in 1834, undertook the pacification of Samos, which he accomplished without using coercion; and having organized the internal administration upon a liberal constitutional basis, he governed the island for four years to the satisfaction of the people. On his return to Constantinople, in 1839, he married the Princess Anne, second daughter of Prince Vogorides, born in 1819. She was seized with an attack of disease of the heart, at the ball given to the Sultan at the India Office, London, July 19, 1867, and died the same night. In 1840 he was sent to Athens as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, a difficult mission for an Ottoman diplomatist. It was signalized by a rupture of diplomatic relations between the two courts, by the triumph of Ottoman policy, and by an attempted assassination of M. Musurus. At the end of 1848 he was recalled from Athens to represent Turkey at the Austrian Court, where his able management of the delicate matters connected with the demand for the surrender of the Hungarian refugees increased his well-earned reputation. He was rewarded for the ability displayed by him in these delicate negotiations by being appointed, in April, 1851, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in London; received the rank of Ambassador, Jan. 30, 1856, and the rank of Muchir, with the title of Pacha, on the Sultan's visit to London, in July, 1867. N.

NANSEN, Fridjof, Ph.D., was born near Christiania, on Oct. 10, 1861. He went to the University of Christiania in 1880, and decided upon studying zoology; therefore to study animal life in high latitudes, he, in March, 1882, went out in a Norwegian sealing ship to the Jan Mayen and Spitzbergen seas, and afterwards to the sea between Iceland and Greenland. He returned from this expedition in July, 1882, and later in the same year was appointed Curator in the Natural History Museum at Bergen (Norway). In 1888 he took his degree as Doctor of Philosophy, and in May of that year started on his memorable journey to Greenland, which continent he crossed, returning in May, 1889, after which he was appointed, by the government, Curator of the Museum of Comparative Anatomy at the Christiania University. He has written various papers upon Anatomical subjects; and the account of his last expedition "Across Greenland," is just published. The Norwegian Storting, or National Assembly, has voted a grant of 200,000 kroner, for a fresh expedition to the North Pole. The charge of the expedition will be intrusted to M. Fridjof Nansen, and there are several features of special interest in connection with the inception of this further effort to reach the North Pole that call for notice. Hitherto, with one possible exception, all attempts to reach the North Pole have been made in defiance of the obstacles of nature. Now, an attempt will be made to ascertain whether nature herself has not supplied a means of solving the difficulty, and whether there is not, after all, a possibility of reaching the North Pole by utilizing certain natural facilities in these frozen seas of which all early explorers were ignorant. The circumstances upon which these new hopes are based may be thus summarised. The Jeannette expedition of 1879-81 and the loss of that vessel seemed to sound the knell of all expeditions to reach the Pole by Behring Straits, but in June, 1884, exactly three years after the Jeannette sank, there were found near Julianshaab, in Greenland, several articles which had belonged to the Jeannette, and been abandoned at the time of its wreck by the crew, and which had been carried to the coast of Greenland, from the opposite side of the Polar Sea, on a piece of ice. This fact at once aroused curiosity as to how it accomplished that weird and mysterious journey across the Arctic Ocean, and as to what unknown current had borne that significant and informing message from Behring Straits to Greenland; and it is thought highly probable that there is a comparatively short and direct route across the Arctic Ocean by way of the North Pole, and that nature herself has supplied a means of communication, however uncertain, across it. M. Nansen's expedition will endeavour to realize these hopes of a direct route across the apex of the Arctic Ocean. A specially-constructed boat of 170 tons will be built, and provisions and fuel taken for five years, although it is hoped that two will suffice. The expedition will consist of ten or twelve men, and M. Nansen proposes to leave Norway in February, 1892. He married, in Sept., 1889, Mlle. Eva Sars, an eminent singer, the youngest daughter of the late M. Sars, Professor of Zoology in Christiania University.

NAPIER AND ETTRICK (Lord) The Right Hon. Francis Napier, K.T., eldest son of the 8th Baron, born Sept. 15, 1819, succeeded his father Oct. 11, 1834. He was made Attaché to the Embassy in Vienna in 1840, and held diplomatic posts in Teheran and Constantinople, to which place he returned as Secretary of Embassy in 1854, after having been Secretary of Legation at Naples and in St. Petersburg. In 1857 he was appointed British Minister in Washington, whence he was removed, Dec. 13, 1858, to the Hague; going Dec. 11, 1860, to St. Petersburg; and Sept. 15, 1864, to Berlin. He was Governor of Madras from Jan. 31, 1866, till Jan., 1872, and was then acting Viceroy of India, pro tempore, after the assassination of Lord Mayo. Having returned to England he acted as President of the Social Science Association at the meeting held at Plymouth in the autumn of 1872. He also presided over the education section of the same Association at the meeting held at Glasgow in Oct., 1874. After his return to this country Lord Napier and Ettrick took an active part towards bringing about a reform in the municipal government of the metropolis, and he became an energetic worker in the London School Board, of which he was a member. He was chairman of the Crofter Commission, and is believed to have written the celebrated Report, which caused so much indignation in the minds of the Duke of Argyll and other Highland landlords.

NAPOLEON, Prince Napoleon - Joseph-Charles - Paul - Bonaparte, cousin to the emperor Napoleon III., the second son of Jerome Bonaparte, by his second marriage with the Princess Frederika of Würtemberg, was born at Trieste, Sept. 9, 1822. His youth was passed in Vienna and at Trieste, Florence and Rome, occasionally in Switzerland, England, and Spain; and in 1845 he obtained permission to visit Paris under the name of the Comte de Montfort, but was soon afterwards compelled to leave on account of his intrigues with the extreme democrats. After the revolution of Feb., 1848, Prince Napoleon returned, and the Corsicans elected him a member of the Constituent Assembly, in which he became leader of the extreme republican party known as the Mountain. His views, however, underwent a change, and in 1849 he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary in Madrid, but was shortly recalled for having quitted his post without authority. He was made a French prince, with a seat in the Senate and Council of State, Dec. 23, 1853, and at the same time received the Grand

Cross of the Legion of Honour and the rank of General of Division. In 1854 he was appointed to a command in the expedition to the Crimea, and commanded an infantry division of reserve at the battles of Alma and Inkerman. On account of his sudden retirement from this post, ill-health being the excuse, the sobriquet of Plon-plon was given him by his countrymen. Prince Napoleon is said to have furnished information for a pamphlet reflecting on the conduct of the war, and commenting somewhat too freely on the deliberations of the council of war which decided upon the Crimean expedition. Though it was immediately suppressed by order of the French Government, it was published in Brussels, and was forthwith translated into English. In 1855 he was named President of the Imperial Commission of the Universal Exhibition, and proved himself a zealous and efficient member. In June, 1858, he was placed at the head of the new ministry for Algiers and the colonies, but speedily resigned his appointment. In the Italian campaign of 1859 he commanded the French army of reserve in the north of Italy, but was not engaged in any of the great battles. In the Senate in 1861 he made an attack upon the Orleans family, which was answered with spirit by the Duc d'Aumale. Prince Napoleon, to the disgust of a great portion of the French army, declined to accept the challenge sent him by the duke on that occasion. He was President of the French Commission to represent France in the Great Exhibition at Kensington in 1862. In 1865 Prince Napoleon was appointed President of the Commissioners for the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867, but resigned the post in consequence of a reprimand which he received from the Emperor for a speech delivered in Corsica at the inauguration of a statue of the Emperor Napoleon I., May 27, 1865. At the same time he gave up his appointments as member and Vice-President of the Privy Council. This disgrace, however, was only of temporary duration, the prince being soon admitted again into the councils of the Emperor, and intrusted with important and delicate missions. It is well known that the prince urged the Emperor to inaugurate a liberal policy, and it is understood that, after the message of 1869, announcing the Senatus-Consultum which revived ministerial responsibility and the system of parliamentary government, he recommended that the members of the cabinet should be replaced by new men, who would thoroughly carry out the new policy. Prince Napoleon has travelled much, and made many voyages in his steam yacht the Jerome Napoleon to distant parts of the world. He has often visited England, Corsica, Algeria, and Italy; and in 1861 he went to America while the civil war was raging, and formed the acquaintance of President Lincoln, of Mr. Seward, and of several of the Federal and Confederate generals. In 1868 he visited, it is believed with a political object, Southern Germany, Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, the Danubian Principalities, and Turkey in Europe. On war being declared with Prussia, in July, 1870, Prince Napoleon implored his cousin to appoint him to a military command. The Emperor, however, declined to do so, on the plea that he might render more efficient service to France by accepting a confidential mission to Italy, where he could bring his personal influence to bear on his father-in-law, King Victor Emmanuel. Accordingly he proceeded to Florence, but failed to obtain the co-operation of Italy. These latter facts are stated on the authority of a justificatory pamphlet published by Prince Napoleon in 1871, under the title of "La Vérité." After the fall of the Empire he spent some months in Brussels and in other continental cities, but ultimately he fixed his residence in England. On May 24, 1873, he obtained permission to return to France. After the death of the Emperor, Prince Napoleon claimed to be the chief representative of his family, and endeavoured, though without success, to organise a party of his own in opposition to the adherents of the Empress Eugénie and the Prince Imperial. At the general election of Feb. 20, 1876, Prince Napoleon came forward as a candidate in the arrondissement of Ajaccio, against M. Rouher, with a profession of his political faith, in which he said:—"The form of government is not in question: it exists; I accept it frankly," and which concluded thus:—"Choose between the son of Jerome, nephew of Napoleon I., and a stranger to your island." He was earnestly opposed by the leaders of the Bonapartist party and by the Prince Imperial, who addressed to M. Franceschini Pietro a letter in which he exhorted his friends to support M. Rouher. Prince Napoleon was defeated on the second ballot, but the Chamber invalidated the election of his adversary, and on May 14 the Prince was elected. He took his seat on the benches of the Left, though he did not identify himself with any particular group. On Dec. 24, 1876, he delivered a speech in which he made a violent attack on the clerical party. He was listened to in silence by the Left, while he was violently interrupted by the Bonapartists. After the act of May 16, 1877, he was one of the 363 deputies of the reunited sections of the Left who refused a vote of confidence to the De Broglie Cabinet. At the election of Oct. 14, he was defeated in the arrondissement of Ajaccio by Baron Haussmann. From that period he held aloof from party politics until the unexpected death of the Prince Imperial again brought him into prominence. He was recognised as head of the family of Bonaparte and of the Imperialist party by the majority of the adherents of the party of the "Appeal to the People," though not without the opposition of M. Amigues and M. Paul Granier de Cassagnac, who after having in his journal denounced him as a "Communard" (May 24, 1876), proposed as the head of the party, his son Victor, a "young man with an ardent heart," who, in point of fact, had been designated by the Prince Imperial, in his last will and testament, as his successor. Prince Napoleon was present at the funeral of his cousin at Chislehurst, but he returned to Paris immediately afterwards without having had an interview with the Empress. Thenceforward he maintained an attitude of absolute reserve until shortly after the promulgation of the decrees of March 29, 1880, respecting the religious congregations. In a letter published by the Ordre and the Estafette, he applauded that measure, as being a "renewal of the prescriptions, too long neglected, of the Concordat," and he treated as a "fiction" the Conservative union, and declared that he and his friends could not be supporters "of a retrograde policy, hostile to civilisation, to science, and to true liberty" (April 5, 1880). On Jan. 16, 1883, a manifesto by the Prince appeared in the Figaro, and was extensively placarded on the walls of Paris. In this document, which was an indictment against the Republic, he posed as champion of the Church, and advised the nation to have recourse to a plébiscite. A meeting of the Cabinet was immediately convened, and the Prince was arrested and imprisoned. The Chambre des Mises en Accusation unanimously decided, however, that the Prince had in reality committed no offence, and accordingly after a month's detention he was set at liberty. He was included in the Expulsion Law of 1886, and left France on its promulgation. In 1887 he wrote a defence of his uncle under the title of "Napoleon and his Detractors." He married the Princess Clotilde, daughter of Victor Emmanuel, late King of Italy, Jan. 30, 1859, by whom he has two sons, Napoleon Victor Jerome Frederick, born

July 18, 1862, and Napoleon Louis Joseph Jerome, born July 16, 1864, and one daughter, Marie Létitia Eugénie Catherine Adelaide, born Dec. 20, 1866.

NAPOLEON, Victor Jerome Frederick, son of Prince Napoleon and the Princess Clotilde, was born July 18, 1862. On the death of the Prince Imperial in 1879, when his father held the position of head of the House of Bonaparte, the claim was disputed by M. Paul de Cassagnac and several other Imperialists, who put forward the young Prince Victor as his father's rival. But this move was not encouraged by the son, though the latter, it is understood, was nominated in the Prince Imperial's will as his successor. When the Expulsion Bill of 1886 became law, the Prince and his father were exiled from France. In 1889 he issued a manifesto previous to the general election. In November of that year he received a commission as Major in the Russian Army.

NAQUET, Joseph Alfred, M.D., was born at Carpentras (Vaucluse), on Oct. 6, 1834, and educated first at Carpentras then at Montpellier, and finally in Paris, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1859. He then went into the Chemical laboratory of the School of Medicine in Paris under M. Wurtz, and wrote many papers on pure chemistry. In 1863 he became Professor of Physics at Palermo, and while there wrote his work "Principes de Chimie fondés sur les Théories modernes," which has passed through five editions in France, and been translated into English, German, and Polish. In 1867 M. Naquet entered political life, a charge against him of conspiracy against the Empire having resulted in fifteen months' imprisonment, and a subsequent flight into Spain, from which he returned in 1869; and having taken a prominent part in the events of Sept. 4, 1870, he was subsequently, at Tours, nominated by Gambetta as Secretary to the Defence Committee. He was in 1879 elected deputy for Vaucluse, and at first supported Gambetta, but eventually broke with him. He then threw all his strength into the effort for legalising divorce, in which he succeeded in 1886. As he is a strong revisionist, and thought that that end might be attained through the success of General Boulanger, he became one of his warmest supporters; that movement having failed, he is now waiting and watching.

NARES, Sir George Strong, K.C.B., F.R.S., is a son of the late Captain

William Henry Nares, R.N., of Danestown, Aberdeen, by his marriage with a daughter of Mr. E. G. Dodd, and a great grandson of Sir George Nares, formerly one of the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas. He was born in 1831, and was educated at the Royal Naval College, New Cross, where he gained the naval cadetship which is given annually to the most promising pupil by the Lords of the Admiralty. He saw some service in H.M.S. Canopus, forming part of the Channel Squadron, and afterwards in H.M.S. Havannah, on the Australian station. He was a mate on board the Resolute in the Arctic Expedition of 1852-54, when he took an active share in the winter amusements, and did his part manfully as a sledge-traveller. He acted in the theatricals, and gave a series of lectures to the men on winds and on the laws of mechanics. In the spring of 1853 he was auxiliary to Lieut. Meham, and travelled over 665 miles in 69 days. In 1854 he started in the intense cold of March, and went over 586 miles in 56 days. On the return of this Arctic Expedition he served in H.M.S. Glatton during the last year of the Crimean war; afterwards in H.M.S. Conqueror on the Mediterranean station. On the inauguration of the present system of training for naval cadets, he served as Lieutenant in charge of Cadets under the late Captain Robert Harris, in H.M. ships Illustrious and Britannia. In 1854 he was promoted to the rank of Commander, being attached also to the training-ship Boscawen. In 1866-67 we find him employed at the Antipodes in command of the Salamander in surveying the eastern and north-eastern coasts of Australia and Torres Straits. In 1869 he was sent in H.M.S. Shearwater to survey and report upon the Gulf of Suez. From 1872 down to the end of 1874 Captain Nares was in command of H.M.S. Challenger, employed in making extensive soundings on the coast of China, in the Eastern and South Pacific Oceans, and in other parts of the world. He was then ordered home, and appointed to the command of the Arctic Expedition. The two ships composing the expedition, H.M.S. Alert and H.M.S. Discovery, commanded respectively by Captains Nares and Stephenson, left England in May, 1875, with the hope of reaching the North Pole. The expedition reached the mouth of Lady Franklin Bay on Aug. 27. Here Captain Nares left the Discovery to take up her quarters for the winter, while the Alert continued her course along the western shore of Robeson Channel. This course she held until, on Sept. 1, the Alert herself attained the highest latitude, and was made fast to some grounded bergs of ice, within 100 yards of a tolerably level beach, in lat. $82^{\circ} 27'$ and long. $61^{\circ} 22'$. Lieut. Rawson, of the Discovery, with his sledge-crew of eight men, had accompanied the advance ship with the object of returning to the Discovery during the Autumn with news of the Alert's progress. This journey, however, he was never able to accomplish, the snow being too deep, and the ice too treacherous and too frequently in motion to render sledge-travelling possible for a distance of 70 to 80 miles at so late a period of the year. The Discovery therefore knew nothing of her consort's position until the ensuing spring. On Oct. 12 the sun finally disappeared, leaving the Alert in total or partial darkness for 142 days, and the Discovery for almost the same period. After the return of daylight, sledge expeditions were arranged. A party, numbering in the aggregate 53 persons, led by Commander Markham and Lieut. Parr, made a very gallant attempt to reach the Pole. They were absent 72 days from the ship, and on May 12 succeeded in planting the British flag in lat. $83^{\circ} 10' 26''$ N. From this position there was no appearance of land to the northward, but, curiously enough, the depth of water was found to be only 72 fathoms. The men suffered intensely from the extreme cold, many were attacked by scurvy, and it was with great difficulty that the sledging party made their way back to the ship. Captain Nares now resolved to return home, as, with the whole resources of the expedition he could not hope to advance more than about 50 miles beyond the positions already attained. The expedition arrived at Valentia, Oct. 27, 1876. In reward for his services Captain Nares was appointed a K.C.B. (Dec. 1). He was afterwards again placed in command of the Alert, which sailed from Portsmouth Sept. 24, 1878, for a two years' survey of the South Pacific. He is the author of "The Naval Cadet's Guide, or Seaman's Companion; containing complete Illustrations of all the Standing Riggings, the Knots in Use, &c.," 1860, afterwards published under the title of "Seamanship," 2nd edit., 1862; 3rd edit., 1865; 4th edit., 1868; "Reports on Ocean Soundings and Temperature" [in the Challenger], printed by direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, 6 parts, 1874-5; "The Official Report of the Arctic Expedition," 1876; and "Narrative of a Voyage to the Polar Sea during 1875-6 in H.M. ships Alert and Discovery," 2 vols., 1878. He married, in 1858, Mary, daughter of the late Mr. W. G. Grant, of Portsmouth.

NASR-ED-DEEN, Chah en Char (King of Kings), K.G., Shah of Persia, son of the late Mehemet Shah, by Queen Velliat, of the Kadjar tribe, and grandson of Abbaz Mirza, born April 4, 1829, was called to the throne Sept. 10, 1848. The Shah is well versed in Persian and Turkish, is acquainted with history, and has travelled in Europe. At the beginning of the war between Russia and Turkey in 1853, he declared his neutrality, but shortly before its close, entered into a treaty with Russia. In the following year, in consequence of the occupation of Herat by Persian troops, the Government of India declared war against him (Nov. 1, 1856). After a few months of hostilities, during which General Outram captured Kurrach, Bushire, and other places, a treaty of peace was signed in Paris by Lord Cowley and the Persian ambassador, in which ample satisfaction was given to England. Subsequently the Shah had wars with several neighbouring states, and was successful in an expedition against the Turcomans. Of late years he has acted in the most friendly manner towards England, and in 1866 a treaty for establishing telegraphic communication between Europe and India through Persia was signed at Teheran. The Shah's visit to Europe in 1873 is a strong argument as to the moderation and popularity of his rule, for although he was absent from his kingdom from May 12 till Sept. 6, not one breath of sedition disturbed the political calm that reigned there. In four months the Shah crossed the Caspian to Astrakhan, ascended the Volga, visited Moscow and St. Petersburg, crossed by rail to Berlin and Cologne, ascended by rail to Wiesbaden and Frankfort, Heidelberg, Carlsruhe, and Baden, turned northward to Biberich, descended the Rhine to Bonn, took the rail to Spa, went on to Brussels, crossed from Ostend to Dover, visited London, Portsmouth, Liverpool, Trentham, Manchester, Windsor, Woolwich, and Richmond; crossed to Cherbourg, visited Paris, Geneva, Turin, Milan, and Verona; crossed the Brenner to Salzburg and Vienna, returned to Italy, crossed from Brindisi to Constantinople, and from Constantinople to Poti, took rail to Tiflis and carriage to Bákú, and thence returned by steamer to Enzeli, the Persian port at which His Majesty had first embarked in May. During this journey the Shah kept a diary, which, on his return, was published in the original Persian. A verbatim English translation, by Mr. J. W. Redhouse, appeared in London in 1874. The Shah has since paid a visit to Russia, entering the capital of that country in state, May 23, 1878. The "Diary kept by His Majesty the Shah of Persia during his Journey to Europe in 1878, translated from the Persian by Albert Schindler and Baron Louis de Norman," was published in London in 1879. The Shah made a second tour of Europe in 1889. He has five sons and thirteen daughters. Not the eldest, but the second son, who was born March 5, 1853, and is named Muzaffer ed Deen Mirza, is heir presumptive.

NASSAU (Duke of), Adolphus William Charles Augustus Frederick, born July 24, 1817, assumed the sovereignty Aug. 20, 1839. A constitutional government had existed for many years before his accession to the throne, the nation being represented not in Chambers elected by popular suffrage, but by the states of the dukedom. In 1848, a new constitution, upon a more liberal basis, was proclaimed; the Duke declared his intention of governing in a constitutional manner, and for a time the experiment promised to succeed. The Duke was one of the sovereigns who joined the union of German States under the presidency of the King of Prussia, formed after the failure of the Frankfort constitution. This union was soon dissolved, and the Duke joined the Austrian party in 1850, and voted with it in the Diet. The constitution was annulled in Nov. 1851. This state was joined to Prussia by decree, Sept. 20, 1866, and the Prussians took possession Oct. 8. On the death of the King of the Netherlands he became Grand Duke of Luxemburg (q.v.). He married, in 1844, the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of the Grand Duke Michael of Russia; she died Jan. 28, 1845; and he took, as his second wife, April 23, 1851, Adelaide Marie, daughter of Prince Frederick, of Anhalt-Dessau, by whom he has two children.

NAST, Thomas, was born at Landau in Bavaria, on Sept. 27, 1840. He went to America with his parents in 1846, his father, a musician in the Bavarian Army, being kindly advised to leave Germany, as his opinions were too radical for the times. Young Thomas soon exhibited a preference for an artistic career, and at an early age, with very little instruction, began to furnish acceptable sketches for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and other periodicals. He was sent to England in 1860, to make illustrations of the celebrated international prize fight between Heenan and Sayres for the New York Illustrated News. That finished, he joined General Medici in the famous campaign in which Garibaldi freed Sicily and Naples, and created the united kingdom of Italy. While in Italy he furnished sketches for various English, French and American papers. Returning to America in Feb., 1861, just before the breaking out of the civil war, it was then that he found the material for his genius, which gave him his national reputation, as the patriotic artist of the war. Burning with the enthusiasm of the time, he gave forth from week to week those powerful emblematic pictures which roused the citizen and cheered the soldier. Mr. Lincoln placed a high value upon this series of truly national works; and many members of Congress, and many brave soldiers testified to the artist in the strongest language their sense of the value of his efforts. It was during the period of corruption, which always follows a war, that he made his best remembered hits against the Tammany Ring, and its ally, the Roman Catholic Church. He waged most brilliant and effective warfare upon Tweed and his associates. The fertility of invention displayed week after week, for months at a time, followed finally by the explosion of the Tammany Ring, earned for him the title of, "The Destroyer of Tammany." He possesses in a remarkable degree the faculty of throwing individuality into articles of apparel and personal effects. In many of his pictures he would merely indicate the personality in that way; and it would be immediately recognized. Oakey Hall's eye glasses, Horace Greeley's hat and coat, the tag attached to the tail of Greeley's coat for Gratz Brown, the dollar mark for Tweed's face; and many other symbols, as well as the Republican Elephant and Democratic Tiger, were made to express volumes. In his record, as a poignant castigat of wrongdoers, he has no equal; insensible to threats and bribes alike, he never flinches and shows no mercy. Most sincere in purpose, he has always been a champion of right, an exposor of humbug and an exponent of the sentiment of the people. He is now regarded as the father of American caricature, and it is generally conceded that to him is due the development of this branch of art there. He has also found time to illustrate a number of books, make designs for panoramas, as well as to paint one completely, his unflagging industry being only equalled by the fecundity of his imagination. In 1866 he painted over sixty caricatures, in distemper, of the notables of the day, to be used as decorations for the opera ball given in the Academy of Music, New York, which was a very novel affair at that time. In 1873 he made his first appearance as a lecturer, illustrating in the presence of the audience. He began with crayon sketches and advanced by degrees to oil paintings, possessing wonderful dexterity of execution. He has since lectured in 1885 and 1888. He has also executed a number of oil paintings, the largest of which is now in the possession of the Seventh Regiment of New York, and hangs in the Colonel's room, in their armoury. It represents the departure of the regiment for the war, April 19, 1861. His home is at Morrestown, New Jersey, and a visitor there may see two handsome silver testimonials: one, a graceful vase, bears the inscription, that some "Members of the Union League Club of New York unite in presenting to Thomas Nast this token of their admiration of his genius, and of his ardent devotion of that genius to the preservation of his country from the schemes of rebellion. 1869." The other, in the form of an army canteen, reads, "Presented to Thomas Nast by his friends in the Army and Navy of the United States, in recognition of the patriotic use he has made of his rare abilities as the artist of the people. 1879."

NATALIE, Queen of Servia, is the daughter of Pierre Ivanovitch Kechko, and was born May 2, 1859, and married at Belgrade to Milan I., ex-King of Servia, Oct. 17, 1875; and was divorced from him in Oct. 1888. Her son, Alexander I., who was born at Belgrade Aug. 14, 1876, is now king; but Servia is governed by a Regency composed of Ristitch, Belimarkovitch, and Protitch. The validity of the divorce of the Queen, as conducted by the aged Metropolitan Theodosius alone, at the request of the king, is disputed by Her Majesty; and in reply to a letter addressed by her to the Metropolitan Michael, she received a letter signed, not only by him, but also by two members of the Synod, stating that the decree of the Metropolitan Theodosius is null and void, having been granted without consultation with the Synod, and without the Queen having been heard in her own defence. Therefore there can be no doubt that the Queen's divorce was illegal. It was granted by an aged prelate who was almost in his dotage, as it has since transpired, and who has now retired into a monastery. It was contrary to the ecclesiastical law of the land, which alone has jurisdiction in Servia over divorce cases, and it has been declared invalid by the Holy Synod. Queen Natalie must therefore be regarded by all mankind, outside the small ring of Servian office-holders, as being King Milan's lawful wife.

NAVARRO, Madame Antonio, née Mary Antoinette Anderson, an American actress, was born at Sacramento, California, July 28, 1859. Her parents moved to Kentucky when she was only six months old, and her home was at Louisville in that State until she went on the stage in her seventeenth year. Her first representation was as Juliet, Nov. 27, 1875, which met with a marked success. After travelling for a few years in the South and West she made her appearance before Eastern audiences in the large seaboard cities in 1880, where she was as warmly received as she had previously been in smaller places. Her career from the first was one of unchecked prosperity, and few actors have met with more popular favour than has Miss Anderson. Her first visit to England (1879) was for pleasure only, but on her return (1884-5) she played at the Lyceum Theatre, during Mr. Irving's absence in America. It was during this second visit that the Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon was opened by Miss Anderson as Rosamond in "As You Like It," and her portrait in that character forms one of the panels in the theatre. Her principal parts have been Juliet, Bianca (in "Fazio"), Julia (in "The Hunchback"), Evadne, Meg Merrilies, Pauline (in "Lady of Lyons"), Galatea, Clarice (in "Comedy and Tragedy"), Parthenia and Rosamond. From 1885 to 1889 she had many engagements both in Great Britain and in America, but a prolonged illness during 1889 compelled a temporary retirement from the stage, and early in 1890 she announced her withdrawal from the dramatic profession; shortly afterwards she was married in London to M. Antonio Navarro de Viana, a citizen of New York.

NEMOURS, Louis Charles Philippe Raphael d'Orléans, Duc de, one of the Orleans princes, is the second son of King Louis Philippe, and was born in Paris, Oct. 25, 1814. He received his education in the Collège Henri IV., and was still a child when Charles X., in accordance with ancient custom, appointed him colonel of the first regiment of Chasseurs de Cheval, at the head of which he made his entry into Paris, Aug. 3, 1830. In Feb., 1831, he was elected King of the Belgians, but his royal father declined, on his behalf, this offer of the National Congress, as he did also at a later period a similar offer of the throne of Greece. Subsequently the Duc de Nemours served with distinction in the two Belgian campaigns, and in Algeria, being in 1837 promoted to the rank of Lieut.-General. The premature decease of his elder brother, the Duc d'Orléans (July 13, 1842), placed the Duc de Nemours in a position of great importance. Contrary to the traditions of the old monarchy, which were in favour of the mother of the heir presumptive being declared Regent, a bill was introduced, conferring the regency on the Duc de Nemours, and carried in the Chamber of Deputies by a majority of 216 votes, and afterwards in the Peers by 163 to 14 votes. Public opinion, however, did not appear to ratify this law, which the general apprehension of danger caused to be abandoned in 1848. After the revolution of February the Duc de Nemours quitted France, and joined the other members of the exiled family at Claremont; and he did not return to his native country until after the downfall of the empire in 1870. He married, April 27, 1840, Victoire-Auguste-Antoinette, Duchess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha (born Feb. 14, 1822; died Nov. 10, 1857), by whom he had issue two sons, Prince Louis Philippe Marie Ferdinand Gaston d'Orléans, comte d'Eu (q.v., p. 303); and Prince Ferdinand Philippe Marie d'Orléans, duc d'Alençon, born July 12, 1844; and two daughters, the eldest of whom, the Princess Marguerite Adelaide Marie d'Orléans, born Feb. 16, 1846, was married at Chantilly to Prince Ladislas Czartoryski, Jan. 15, 1872.

Subsequently he went back to the Olympic Theatre, not only as actor, but also as lessee and manager. NEWMAN, Professor Francis William, son of John Newman, a member of the banking firm of Ramshotton, Newman & Co., and younger brother of Cardinal Newman, born in London in 1805, was educated at a private school at Ealing, and at Worcester College, Oxford, where he obtained a double first-class in classics and mathematics in 1826. In the same year he was elected Fellow of Balliol. He gave up the idea of taking orders, and resigned his fellowship in 1830 from conscientious scruples on the subject of infant baptism. He then went to Bagdad with the object of assisting the late Mr. Antony Norris Greves in a Christian mission, but his further studies convinced him that he could not conscientiously undertake the work, and in 1833 he returned to England and became classical tutor in Bristol College. In 1840 he accepted the post of Classical Professor at Manchester, and in 1846 became Latin Professor at University College, London, which post he resigned in 1863. He has published a number of works on religious subjects, of which the best known are "The Soul; its Sorrows and its Aspirations," 1849; "Phases of Faith;" "Theism Doctrinal and Practical," 1858. Professor Newman has long since ceased to call himself a Christian, but defines his own aim as "that of saving all that is spiritual, pure and merciful in Christianity amid the wreck which Erudition has made of its Mythology." Professor Newman has also published works on political economy and history, classics, and Oriental languages. Professor Newman has never forgotten his old academical studies, Greek, Latin, and Mathematical. To these topics he has superadded Modern Arabic, which led him further into the modern Zouave, and back into the ancient Numidian, Mauritian, and Gaetulan languages. He is also an ample writer on Hebrew and Christian Theism, and on ethical politics. He has published also many fugitive pieces, in four solid octavos, under the general title of "Miscellanies." Vol. i. is chiefly Addresses, Academical and Historical; vol. ii. is Moral and Religious; vol. iii. is on Political Reforms; vol. iv. is on Political Economy. A fifth volume is to come if his life be spared. Besides these, he has put forth two small volumes of mathematical tracts, well charged with numerical tables, and an ample Treatise on Elliptic Integrals, of which a significant part appeared in the Dublin and Cambridge Magazine forty years earlier, on the Third Elliptic Integral. The following is a list of Professor Newman's principal works:—"On the Relations of Free Knowledge to Moral Sentiment," 1847; "A Reply to the 'Eclipse of Faith,'" 1853; "The Odes of Horace," 1853, 2nd edit. 1876; "Theism, Doctrinal and Practical," 1858; "Relations of Professional to Liberal Knowledge," 1859; "The Moral Influence of Law," 1860; "Homeric Translation in Theory and Practice," 1861; "Hiawatha: rendered into Latin," 1862; "The Soul: its Sorrows and its Aspirations," 1863; "A Discourse against Hero-making in Religion," 1864; "A History of the Hebrew Monarchy," 1865; "Phases of Faith," 1865; "A Handbook of Modern Arabic," 1866; "Forms of Government," 1867; "Translations of English Poetry into Latin Verse," and "The Text of the Iguvine Inscriptions," 1868; "Miscellanies," 1869, vol. ii., 1887; "Orthopy," 1869; "The Iliad of Homer," "A Dictionary of Modern Arabic," and "Europe of the Near Future," 1871; "Hebrew Theism," 1874; "Religion not History," 1877; "Morning Prayers in the Household of a Believer in God," 1878; "Reorganization of English Institutions," 1880; "What is Christianity without Christ?" 1881; "Libyan Vocabulary," 1882; "A Christian Commonwealth," and "Essays on Diet," 1883; "Christianity in its Cradle," "Comments on the Text of Æschylus," and "Rebilius Cruso," 1884; "Life after Death," 1886; "Reminiscences of Two Exiles and Two Wars," 1888. Professor Newman's most recent work is a memoir of the early years of his brother, the late Cardinal Newman. He has always taken a keen interest in politics, but adheres to no party. He is an ardent advocate of the triple abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, and flesh meats.

NEWTON, Professor Alfred, M.A., F.R.S., born at Geneva, June 11, 1829, is the fifth son of William Newton, of Elveden (formerly M.P. for Ipswich, and Lieut.-Colonel of West Suffolk Militia), by Eliza, daughter of Richard Slater Milnes, of Fryston (formerly M.P. for York). He entered Magdalene College, Cambridge, and graduated B.A. in 1852, being afterwards chosen Travelling Fellow of that College, in which capacity he visited Lapland, Iceland, the West Indies, North America, and other countries. In 1864 he accompanied Sir Edward Birkbeck to Spitsbergen, and was elected by the University of Cambridge to the Professorship of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy on its establishment in 1866. In 1877 he was re-elected Fellow of Magdalene College. Prof. Newton has published "The Zoology of Ancient Europe," 1862; "Ootheca Wolleyana," 1864; and edited "The Ibis," second series; "Zoological Record," 1871-73; and the 4th edit. of "Yarrell's British Birds." He is the author of "Zoology," published by the S.P.C.K., of numerous papers in publications of the Zoological, Linnean, Royal, and other learned societies, as also of many contributions to scientific journals, and to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 9th edit. He was President in 1888, and has been many times Vice-President of Section D. of the British Association, and is Vice-President of the Royal and Zoological Societies, and of the Marine Biological Association, and is Honorary or Corresponding Member of various foreign and colonial societies.

NEWTON, Professor Charles Thomas, C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., son of the Rev. N. D. H. Newton, Vicar of Bredwar-

dine, Herefordshire, born in 1816, was educated at Shrewsbury School and Christ Church, Oxford, of which he was a faculty student, and where he graduated B.A. in 1837, taking second-class honours, and M.A. in 1840. In May, 1840, he was appointed one of the assistants in the department of Antiquities at the British Museum, which post he held until 1852, when, being anxious to rescue from oblivion some of the ancient sculptures on the coasts of Asia Minor and in the islands of the Egean, he obtained the appointment of Vice-Consul at Mitylene. After having spent several years in exploring the Archipelago, he discovered at Budrum (the ancient Halicarnassus) the site of the Mausoleum erected by Artemisia, and carried on extensive excavations at Cnidus and at Branchidæ, between Oct., 1856, and April, 1859. The results of his discoveries consist of a fine collection of sculptures from the Mausoleum and other places, deposited in the British Museum, which is indebted to Mr. Newton for a very interesting collection of Greek inscriptions, vases, coins, and other antiquities, acquired in Asia Minor and the Archipelago, by purchase or in the course of excavation. In May, 1860, he was appointed British Consul in Rome; in 1861 Keeper of the Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum; and in 1880 Professor of Archæology at University College, London. Professor Newton was elected an honorary fellow of Worcester College, Oxford, Nov. 27, 1874. He was made an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford in 1875; a Companion of the Bath in the same year; and an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge in 1879. He is also a member of the Roman Accademia dei Lincei; a corresponding member of the French Institute; has received the honorary degree of Ph.D. from the University of Strasburg; and holds the honorary post of Antiquary to the Royal Academy. Prof. Newton has published "Notes on the Sculptures at Wilton House," printed for private circulation, 1849; "A History of Discoveries at Halicarnassus, Cnidus, and Branchidæ," 2 vols., 1862, &c.; "Travels and Discoveries in the Levant," 2 vols., 1865; a description of the Castellani Collection, 1874; "A Guide to the Blacas Collection of Antiquities;" "Synopsis of the Contents of the British Museum in the Department of Greek and Roman Antiquities;" and "Essays on Art and Archæology," 1880. He has also translated from the German "Panofka's Manners and Customs of the Greeks," 1849; and edited "The Collection of Ancient Greek Inscriptions in the British Museum." Professor Newton resigned his position as Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities at the British Museum at the end of 1885, and was succeeded by Mr. A. S. Murray. His wife, a daughter of Mr. Joseph Severn, was a celebrated artist. She died Jan. 2, 1866.

NEWTON, General John, American soldier, was born at Norfolk, Aug. 24, 1823, and graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1842. Until the outbreak of the Civil War he was principally occupied in the construction of fortifications on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. In Aug., 1861, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and given command of a brigade in the defences of Washington. He led his brigade in many engagements until 1862, when a division was given him. He was promoted to a Major-Generalship of Volunteers in 1863. At Gettysburg he succeeded to the command of a corps, which he retained until the reorganisation of the army in March, 1864, when he was transferred to the West, and led a division in the campaign which ended in the capture of Atlanta (Sept., 1864). From 1864, until mustered out of the volunteer service in 1866, he was in charge of various districts in Florida. He then returned to his engineering corps as a Lieut.-Colonel (Brevet Major-General) in the regular army, and was subsequently engaged in various important engineering duties in the neighbourhood of New York, principally in removing obstructions in the channel at Hell Gate and Flood Rock. In 1876 he became a member of the National Academy of Sciences, and in 1884 an honorary member of the American Society of Civil Engineers. In 1879 he was made a Colonel, and in 1884 a Brigadier-General and Chief of Engineers. Having reached the retiring age in 1886, he left the army, and in the following year was made Commissioner of Public Works in New York City. This position he resigned in 1888 to accept the Presidency of the Panama Railroad Co.

NICHOL, Professor John, LL.D., only son of J. P. Nichol, late Professor of Astronomy, was born at Montrose, Forfarshire, Sept. 8, 1833, and educated in the University of Glasgow (1848-55), and at Balliol College, Oxford (1855-59). He graduated B.A. at Oxford, with first-class in classics and philosophy (and honours in mathematics) in 1869, but did not proceed to the degree of M.A. until 1874, after the abolition of the tests. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of St. Andrews, Feb. 25, 1873. In 1861 he was appointed, by the Crown, Professor of English Literature in the University of Glasgow. He resigned his chair in 1889. In addition to teaching at the university, Dr. Nichol has been much engaged as a private tutor at Oxford, and in lecturing, especially to ladies' classes, in various parts of Scotland and England. He has taken some part in political and other controversies, as an advocate of the North in the American Civil War, of Secular Education, and of Broad Church theology. Dr. Nichol is the author of the following works: "Fragments of Criticism," a volume of essays, 1860; "Hannibal," a classical drama, 1872; "Tables of European Literature and History, A.D. 200-1876," published in 1876 (the 5th edition, carried down to date appeared in 1888); "Tables of Ancient Literature and History," 1877; "English Composition," a literature primer, 1879; "Questions on English Composition," 1890; "Byron" (English Men of Letters Series), 1880; "The Death of Themistocles, and other Poems," 1881; "Robert Burns, a Sketch of his Career and Genius," and "American Literature, an Historical Review," 1882; and two volumes on "Lord Bacon's Life and Philosophy," for Black's series of "Philosophical Writers," 1887-89. He has also written numerous essays for the Westminster, North British, and other reviews; articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" and several pamphlets on educational questions.

NICHOLAS I., the Hospodar of Montenegro, was born Oct. 7, 1841; was educated at Trieste and in Paris; and succeeded his uncle, who had been assassinated, Aug. 25, 1860.

NICHOLAS (Grand Duke) Nicolaievitch, third son of the Czar Nicholas I., and brother of the Czar Alexander II., was born July 27 (Aug. 8), 1831. Being destined for a military career, he received a suitable education, and entered into active service at the age of sixteen. The Grand Duke spent a few days in Sebastopol, when that fortress was besieged in 1855; he was attached for a period of two years to the general staff of the army of the Caucasus, and in that capacity he was present at several skirmishes with the Tcherkesses. Nominated a General and Inspector-General of Engineers, he commanded-in-chief all the army, having General Todleben as his assistant. He was also appointed Commander of the Royal Body Guard, and President of the chief commission for the organisation and instruction of the troops. In the war against Turkey he received the command-in-chief of the army of the Danube, which, after a council of war held some days previous at Kicheneff, invaded Roumania, April 24, 1877. The Grand Duke himself arrived at Bucharest on the 25th of May, and was received at the railway station, with great ceremony, by the reigning Prince Charles I., and the Metropolitan. In April, 1878, he resigned the command-in-chief of the Russian army before Constantinople, and was succeeded by General Todleben. At the conclusion of the great military manœuvres in Volhynia in the autumn of 1890 he suddenly lost his reason, and has since been living in seclusion on his estate in the Crimea; however, in the spring of 1891, he had in a great measure recovered. He married, Feb. 6, 1856, the Princess Alexandra, daughter of Prince Peter of Oldenburg (she was born June 2, 1838), and has two sons.

NICHOLLS, Henry Alfred Alford, M.D., F.L.S., was born in London on Sept. 27, 1851; studied medicine at St. Bartholomew's Hospital and at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated with honours as Master in Surgery, and Bachelor of Medicine in 1873. In the same year he gained the Membership of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, since which time he has resided in Dominica, W. I., as Government Medical Officer. Here Dr. Nicholls has for a number of years carried on investigations into the nature of the disease known as Yaws. His articles on this malady in the Medical Times and Gazette, and his Official Reports as the Medical Superintendent of the Dominica Yaws Hospitals, have made him the chief authority on the subject. He has established a reputation as a naturalist, and has published some treatises on tropical agriculture. In 1888 he gained the premium of £100 offered by the Government of Jamaica for the best text-book on tropical agriculture for the use of the schools and colleges of that colony. He is a Fellow of the Linnean Society, a Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London, of the New York Academy of Sciences, and of the Chamber of Agriculture of the French Colony of Guadeloupe, and he is also an Honorary Member of the Royal Agricultural Society of British Guiana.

NICHOLSON, Sir Charles, Bart., D.C.L., LL.D., born 1808, was educated in Edinburgh, where he graduated as M.D. in 1833. He became a resident in New South Wales in 1834, and was one of the original representative members for Port Phillip (now the Colony of Victoria) in the first Legislative Council established in New South Wales in 1843, of which body he became Chairman of Committees, and subsequently Speaker from 1846 to 1856. He filled the post of Vice-Provost, and subsequently that of Chancellor of the University of Sydney, and received the honour of Knighthood in 1852, and that of Baronet in 1859. He received also the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford, and that of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge. He is the author of various official papers and reports connected with Colonial, Economic, and Educational affairs, and has also written articles in the "Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature" (of which he is Vice-President), containing an account of exploration in Upper Egypt, and at Memphis, with descriptions of remains of "Disk Worshippers," now deposited in the Museum of the University of Sydney.

NICHOLSON, Professor Henry Alleyne, M.D., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.G.S., was born at Penrith, Cumberland, Sept. 11, 1844, and educated at the Universities of Göttingen and Edinburgh. NICOL, Erskine, Hon. A.R.A., was born at Leith, Scotland, in 1825, and received his art-education in the Trustees' Academy, Edinburgh, under Sir William Allan and Mr. Thomas Duncan. In 1846 he went to reside in Ireland, where he remained three or four years. It was this residence in the sister isle which decided the painter's choice of his peculiar field of representation, for most of his subsequent pictures have been Irish in subject. From Ireland he returned to Edinburgh, and after exhibiting for some time, he was ultimately elected a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1862 he settled in London, and after that date contributed regularly to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, of which body he was elected an Associate in June, 1866. His principal pictures are "Notice to Quit," 1862; "Renewal of the Lease Refused," 1863; "Among the Old Masters," and "Waiting for the Train," 1864; "A Deputation," 1865; "Both Puzzled," "Paying the Rent," and "Missed It," 1866; "A Country Booking-Office," and "Kiss an' make it up," 1867; "A China Merchant," and "Waiting at the Cross-roads," 1868; "A Disputed Boundary," 1869; "How it was she was delayed," "On the Look-Out," "The Fisher's Knot," and "The Children's Fairing," 1871; "His Bā-bees," "The Play Hour," and "Bothered," 1872; "Pro Bono Publico," "Steady, Johnnie," and "Past Work," 1873; "A Dander after the Rain," and "When there's nothing else to do," 1874; "The New Vintage," "Always Tell the Truth," and "The Sabbath Day," 1875; "A Storm at Sea," and "Looking out for a Safe Investment," 1876; "His Legal Adviser," and "Unwillingly to School," 1877; "A Colorado Beetle," "The Lonely Tenant of the Glen," "Under a Cloud," and "The Missing Boat," 1878; and "Interviewing their Member," 1879. Mr. Nicol entered on the Retired List of the Royal Academy in 1885, on account of ill-health.

NICOLINI, Signora, née Adelina Maria Clorinda Patti, a popular operatic singer, daughter of Salvatore Patti, is of Italian extraction, and was born in Madrid, April 9, 1843. After a course of professional training under her brother-in-law, Maurice Strakosch, she appeared at New York, Nov. 24, 1859, and reports of her fame reached these shores, where a much more brilliant success awaited her. She made her first appearance in London at the Italian Opera House, Covent Garden, in the part of Amina, in "La Sonnambula," May 14, 1861, and so favourable was the impression created, that she became at once the prime favourite of the day. To Amina succeeded her equally successful performance of Lucia, in Donizetti's opera, but she gave still greater reason for approbation by her representation of Violetta in the rather questionable opera of "La Traviata," to which she imparted a purity with which it had never before been invested. Her Zerlina was also much admired, while in Martha, she displayed so original a vein of arch-comedy as to give an unwonted interest to the performance. Mdle. Patti, with laudable ambition, attempted, in the summer of 1863, the difficult part of Ninetta, in "La Gazza Ladra," and her spirited rendering of the character fully sustained her high reputation, both as Norina, in "Don Pasquale," and as Adina, in "L'Elisir d'Amore." Undaunted by the success of rival celebrities who had preceded her, she, in 1864, took the part of Margherita, in Gounod's "Faust," and her performance was pronounced by some critics to be superior to that of every other representative of the character. She achieved a fresh success in the part of Juliet, in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," which proved the great attraction of the operatic season of 1867. Mdle. Patti has been equally successful on the Continent of Europe. In the early part of 1870 she visited Russia, where she met with an enthusiastic welcome, receiving from the Emperor Alexander the Order of Merit, and the appointment of First Singer at the Imperial Court. Early in 1888 Madame Patti accepted an engagement to sing in the Argentine Republic. Her tour through that State was the most successful she had ever made. The total receipts for her 24 entertainments were £70,000; of which she received more than half. In May, 1868, she was married, at the Roman Catholic Church, Clapham, to M. Louis Sébastien Henri de Roger de Cahuzac, Marquis de Caux, from whom she was afterwards divorced. In 1886 she was married, in Wales, to Signor Nicolini.

NIGHTINGALE, Florence, a lady whose name has been rendered illustrious by her philanthropic efforts to alleviate the sufferings of our wounded soldiers in the Crimean War, is younger daughter of Mr. William E. Nightingale, of Embley

Park, Hampshire, and Lea Hurst, Derbyshire, and was born at Florence in May, 1820. She enjoyed all the advantages which fall to the lot of the children of the affluent and refined; and her command of different languages and other branches of a truly "liberal education" stood her in good stead in her after career. It was not long before her philanthropic instincts, exercised among the poorer neighbours of her English home, led her to the systematic study of the ameliorative treatment of physical and moral distress. Not satisfied with studying the working of English schools, hospitals, and reformatory institutions, she examined similar institutions abroad in the same spirit, and in 1851 spent some months in an institution of Protestant Sisters of Mercy at Kaiserswerth, on the Rhine. Before long an opportunity presented itself for applying the practical lessons she there learned, for having heard that the Governesses' Sanitarium, in Harley Street, languished for the want of supervision and support, she generously devoted both her personal energies and private means to its restoration and thorough organization. This work had scarcely been accomplished, when, before Miss Nightingale had time to recover her over-taxed strength, new demands were made upon her spirit of self-sacrifice. The inefficiency and mismanagement of our military hospitals in the Crimea led to an outburst of public feeling. Various plans of help were suggested, the most popular of which was the sending forth a select band of ladies. At the request of the late Lord Herbert, then Secretary of War (whose letter crossed one from Miss Nightingale, offering to go), she undertook the organization and conduct of this body. No eulogy can do justice to the talent, energy, and devotion she constantly displayed in her self-imposed task. By instituting order where confusion had before reigned, and by affording care and consolation, she alleviated the sufferings of all, saved the lives of many, and earned the blessings of the sick and wounded, as well as the gratitude of her country. A testimonial fund amounting to fifty thousand pounds, subscribed by the public in recognition of her noble services, was at her special request devoted to the formation of an institution for the training of nurses, now carried out at St. Thomas's Hospital, in the "Nightingale Home." Her writings are intended to disseminate practical knowledge on the subject in which she is so well versed. "Notes on Hospitals," a valuable work which had a very large circulation, appeared in 1859; "Notes on Nursing," of which nearly a hundred thousand copies have been sold, was published in 1860; and "Observations on the Sanitary State of the Army in India," in 1863. It is understood that, at the request of the War Office, she drew up a very voluminous confidential report on the working of the army medical department in the Crimea, and she has a further claim on the gratitude of her countrymen for the active interest she has displayed in the Volunteer movement. Although confined to her house by constant ill-health, she has been ceaselessly at work for the welfare of our fellow-subjects in India in all matters affecting the improvement of their health, education, and social benefit. The regulations of hospitals and supply of nurses in different parts of the world, sanitary measures, and nursing arrangements for the army at home and abroad, occupy her thoughts and time. During the Civil War in America, she was frequently consulted on questions affecting the health of the army, and assistance for the wounded in the field. During the Franco-German war she was similarly appealed to by the German authorities. Her name is as well known in America as in England.

NIGRA (Count), Constantino, an Italian diplomatist, born at Castellemonete June 12, 1827, studied law at the University of Turin, and took part, as a volunteer, in the war against Austria in 1848. Being severely wounded at the battle of Rivoli, he abandoned the military career, entered the diplomatic service, and acted as secretary to Count Cavour at the Congress of Paris in 1856. He took part in the negotiations between Piedmont and France which preceded the war of 1859, at which he was present with the general staff of Napoleon III. He was secretary to the Italian plenipotentiaries at the Zurich Congress, after which he was nominated, on Cavour's recommendation, Minister Plenipotentiary, first at Sardinia, and afterwards of the kingdom of Italy, in Paris. On the war of 1870 breaking out, he was among those who made real efforts to prevent it, and then showed himself to the end, at least personally, devoted to the Emperor and Empress. He was one of the few persons who, on Sept. 4, were by the side of the menaced and fugitive sovereigns. After having represented Italy in Paris for fifteen years as Minister Plenipotentiary, he was in May, 1876, appointed to fill the same post in St. Petersburg. He was nominated Italian Ambassador in London in Nov., 1882, on which occasion King Humbert conferred upon him the title of Count, in attestation of His Majesty's recognition of the eminent services he had rendered to his country. Count Nigra has published several works on the dialects and popular poetry of Italy. In 1885 he resigned the embassy in London, and was succeeded by Count Corti.

NILSSON, Christina. See MIRANDA, COUNTESS DE.

NOBLE, The Hon. John Willock, LL.D., American statesman, was born at Lancaster, Ohio, Oct. 26, 1831. He graduated at Yale College in 1851, and adopted the profession of law. In 1855 he removed to St. Louis, and in the following year to Keokuk, Iowa, of which, in 1859-60 he was City Attorney. Entering as a private the Union army at the outbreak of the Civil War, he had gained the rank of Colonel and brevet Brigadier-General before its close, having served for a time during its progress as Judge Advocate General of the Army of the South-west and (afterwards) of the Department of the Missouri. When mustered out in 1865 he returned to Keokuk, but in 1867 moved again to St. Louis, where he has since resided. From 1867 to 1870 he was U.S. District Attorney at that city, and for his efficiency in that office he was thanked by President Grant in presence of the Cabinet 1869. On resigning that appointment he again took up his professional practice, which he was still successfully pursuing when summoned by President Harrison in March, 1889, to enter the Cabinet at Washington, as Secretary of the Interior. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Miami University in June, 1889.

NOBLE, Captain William, F.R.A.S., F.R.M.S., was born in 1829, and is the eldest son of the late William Noble, Esq., of Berwick. He was Captain of the Queen's Own Light Infantry Militia, and has long devoted great attention to astronomy, and much good work has emanated from the private observatory which he erected in the grounds of his residence. Captain Noble is now on the Council of the Royal Astronomical Society and is a County Magistrate, and discharges the duties of each with equal zeal. He is the author of many contributions to scientific periodicals. Captain Noble married, in 1851, Emily Charlotte, only child of Edward Irving, Esq., of H.M. 61st Regiment, and of Hadriana Cornelia Baroness von Lijnden.

NORDENSKIÖLD (Baron), Adolf Erik, a Swedish naturalist and explorer, was born in Helsingfors, the capital of Finland, Nov. 18, 1832. Descended from a Swedish family long eminent in scientific pursuits, he had his inherent tastes developed alike by his surroundings at his home at Frugård, which contained an extensive mineral and natural history collection, and by his journeys with his father, Nils Gustaf, who was chief of the Finland Mining Department. Thus the lad cared more for practical than for theoretical learning when he first went to the Gymnasium at Borgo, and on entering the University of Helsingfors in 1849 devoted himself almost entirely to scientific studies, spending his vacations in excursions to the rich mineral localities of Finland. He soon became eminent in this particular branch of science, and was nominated to several appointments, but he unluckily incurred the suspicion of the Russian authorities by participation in various students' meetings, and time after time lost his appointments, and was obliged to leave the country. Indeed, at last, for some years he was unable to obtain a passport to return to Finland. He therefore settled in Sweden, and in 1858 first entered on his Arctic travels by accompanying Torell to Spitzbergen. On his return to Stockholm, Nordenskiöld was nominated Director of the Mineralogical Department of the various geographical and scientific researches, and for making a preliminary reconnoitring for the measurement of an arc of the meridian. The work was not then finished, and accordingly, three years later, Nordenskiöld headed an expedition which successfully completed the reconnoitring, and mapped the southern part of Spitzbergen. The explorers, however, met with some shipwrecked walrus hunters, and were obliged to return, their provisions being inadequate to maintain so large an addition to the party. Thus disappointed, Nordenskiöld now endeavoured to organise a fresh expedition, and he eventually started in 1868 in the Government steamer Sofia, which managed to attain the high latitude of $81^{\circ} 42'$ —a latitude exceeded only by Hall's American and Parry's and Nares's British Arctic Expeditions, and never exceeded by a sailing vessel in the old hemisphere. This success convinced Nordenskiöld that he could reach a much higher latitude by wintering in Spitzbergen and utilising sledges. Accordingly, after an interval—during which he sat in the Swedish Diet, and travelled in Greenland to ascertain the respective values of dogs and reindeer as beasts of burden for sledge journeys.—Nordenskiöld sailed in 1872 to Spitzbergen in the Polhem, accompanied by two tenders. He made during this voyage the first serious attempt to penetrate on the inland ice in the interior, and discovered at Ovikak the largest known blocks of native iron, and brought home collections of fossil plants of great importance to the history of climatology during former geological epochs. The winter was unusually early, and the ice shut in the tenders, which were to have returned home, thereby straitening the provisions through extra mouths; the reindeer were lost, and the men suffered greatly from scurvy. Nevertheless Nordenskiöld and Lieutenant Palander successfully surveyed part of North-East Land, and in the following July the vessels were extricated from their winter quarters, Mus-sel Bay, on the north coast of Spitzbergen, and returned home richly laden with important scientific collections. Nordenskiöld now turned his attention to Siberian exploration, and in 1875 sailed through the Kara Sea to the Yenissei, and ascended the river in a small boat, returning home overland. It was the first time that any ship had succeeded in penetrating from the Atlantic to the great Siberian rivers. He introduced in the following year, after a flying visit to the Philadelphia Exhibition, the first merchandises by sea to Siberia, returning in the autumn with his steamer via Kara Sea and Matotschkim Sound. These experiences gave Nordenskiöld a reasonable hope of accomplishing the North-East Passage. The King of Sweden, Mr. Oscar Dickson, and Mr. Sibiriakoff at once lent their aid to the project, and in July, 1878, Professor Nordenskiöld started in the Vega. She was the first vessel to double the most northern point of the Old World, Cape Tchelyuskin; she wintered near Behring's Straits; and once more free in July, 1879, reached Japan on Sept. 2. On his arrival in Europe Nordenskiöld was enthusiastically welcomed, and laden with honours. He was created a Baron (April, 1880) and appointed a Commander of the "Nordstjerne Order" (order of North Star). In 1883 Nordenskiöld made his second voyage to the interior of Greenland, and succeeded in penetrating with a ship through the dangerous ice-barrier along the east coast of that country south of the polar circle, a feat in vain attempted during 300 years by different arctic expeditions. He is the author of numerous scientific works and pamphlets.

NORTH, The Hon. Sir Ford, Judge of the High Court of Justice, is son of Mr. John North of Liverpool, and was born there Jan. 10, 1830. He was educated at Winchester School, and at University College, Oxford, where he graduated as B.A. in 1852, taking a second-class in classics. NORTH, Colonel J. T., the "Nitrate King," is a native of Leeds, and owes his sobriquet to the fact of his having accumulated immense wealth by his speculations in nitrate mines in South America. In Jan., 1889, he presented Kirkstall Abbey and grounds to his native town, and also made handsome contributions to the funds of the Leeds Infirmary and the Yorkshire College of Science. He received the honorary freedom of the borough, Jan. 25, 1889. The Colonel is building for himself a very fine palace at Eltham, in Kent. The hall, which was given in honour of the attainment of the majority of his daughter, in 1889, was on an exceptionally magnificent scale.

NOTTINGHAM, Bishop of. See TROLLOPE, THE RIGHT REV. EDWARD.

NOVELLO, Clara. See GIGLIUCCI, COUNTESS OF.

NOVELLO, Joseph Alfred, son of Vincent Novello, organist and composer, was born in 1810. He followed his father's footsteps in devoting himself to the propagation of good music in England, and at the early age of nineteen established himself in London as a musical publisher. Some years after he devised a system of printing cheap music, and succeeded in introducing this beneficial novelty, notwithstanding the general opposition of fellow music-sellers. To his efforts is due the abolition of a vexatious printers' guild law, which had hampered the trade since 1811. A friend and admirer of Felix Mendelssohn, Mr. Alfred Novello eagerly introduced to English auditors the works of that great master, and aided him in translating "St. Paul," "Lobgesang," and other compositions. In 1849 he associated himself with the energetic men who relieved England from "taxation on knowledge," and for years was the active treasurer of their society, the object of which was the repeal of the advertisement duty (accomplished in 1853), the repeal of the newspaper stamp (accomplished in 1855), duties on paper and foreign books, and the repeal of the security system. Ever ardent in promoting the progress of art, science, and social advancement, he materially assisted the inventive genius of his friend, Mr. (now Sir H.) Bessemer, in his scientific discoveries in glass, &c., and especially that of producing the metal now known as Bessemer steel. In 1856 he retired from business and established himself in Italy, the birthplace of his paternal ancestors. At his new home he became one of four commissioners elected to preserve the interests of the English shareholders in the "Italian Irrigation Company" (Canal Cavour), involving five millions of British pounds sterling, which ultimately in a settlement which met with general satisfaction after ten years of attention and labour. His leisure hours were spent in a particular study of the natural powers of Water, to which end he was fortunate in having the friendly assistance of the late Mr. William Froude of Chelston, Torquay, who encouraged him to study the better construction of ships, for which improvement he took out several patents. The new views and proposals are detailed in an "Epistle to Naval Architects," printed by Novello and Co.

NUBAR PACHA, an Egyptian statesman, born in Smyrna in 1825, and educated in Switzerland and France. He was Secretary to Mehemet Ali, and to Ibrahim Pacha; and under Ismail was Minister of Public Works in 1864, and Minister of Foreign Affairs in 1867. He was created Pacha by the Sultan, and in 1867 obtained for Ismail from the Porte the title of Khedive. He held various offices under Ismail and his successor Tewfik, but was suddenly dismissed in 1888.

NUNEZ DE ARCE, Gaspar, was born at Valladolid, August 4, 1834. He studied at Toledo, where he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He has written "Como se empena un Marido," a comedy in one act, and in verse, 1860; "Ni tanto ni tan poco," a comedy in three acts, 1865; "Discursos leídos ante la Real Academia Española," 1876; "El Haz de Leña," a drama in five acts, 1882; "Las Mujeres del Evangelio," 1884. His lyric poems have gained him the name of "The Tennyson of Spain."

O.

OAKELEY, Professor Sir Herbert Stanley, Mus. D., D.C.L., LL.D., second son of the late Sir Herbert Oakeley, Bart., was born at Ealing, Middlesex, in July, 1830. His mother, Atholl Murray, the third Lady Oakeley, was daughter of Lord Charles Murray, youngest son of John, third Duke of Atholl. He was educated at Rugby School, and at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1853, M.A. 1855). After having graduated he went abroad to complete his studies in music, for which art, from earliest childhood, he had shown a marked predilection. At Leipzig he studied pianoforte-playing under Professors Moscheles and Plaidy, and at Bonn organ-playing under Dr. Breidenstein, Professor of Music in that University, and later under the great organist Dr. Johann Schneider of Dresden. He acted for ten years as musical critic and correspondent to a well-known London periodical, to which or to other journals he still contributes occasional notices of musical festivals at home and abroad. In 1864 he was enrolled, in Rome, as member of the Society of "Quirites." In 1865, on the death of Professor Donaldson, he was elected Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh; and in 1871 he received from the Primate the degree of Doctor of Music. In recognition of musical services for Scotland, the honour of knighthood was conferred on him at Holyrood in Aug. 1876. In 1879 his own University, Oxford, gave him the degree of Mus. Doc., honoris causa; and in 1881 that of LL.D. was presented to him by the University of Aberdeen. In the same year he was appointed Composer to Her Majesty in Scotland. In 1886 he received from Trinity College, Toronto, the degree of D.C.L.; and in the following year Mus. Doc. from the University of Dublin, and Mus. Doc. from the University of St. Andrews. He has composed for the Church, for chorus, orchestra, organ, and pianoforte, a Jubilee Album of Songs, dedicated to H.M. the Queen. To Sir Herbert Oakeley's influence may be in great measure attributed the increase in appreciation of the organ and of the orchestra which has taken place in Scotland since his appointment at Edinburgh; and also the foundation of a Students' Choral Association at each of the Scottish Universities. He is Hon. President and Conductor of the University Musical Societies of Edinburgh and St. Andrews, and a Vice-President of that at Aberdeen; Hon. President of the Choral Union, Amateur Orchestral, and "St. Andrew" Amateur Orchestral Societies, Edinburgh; Hon. President of Cheltenham Choral and Orchestral Society, Member of the Philharmonic Society, and Hon. Licentiate and Examiner in music at Trinity College, London, and Member of the "Accademia Filarmonica," Bologna.

He was nominated Governor of Heligoland, 1881; and of Newfoundland, 1888. He married, in 1853, the youngest daughter of the late Captain Eastgate, H.E.I.C.S.; she died in 1867; and he married, secondly, in 1880, the widow of Colonel J. W. Fane, late M.P., Oxon. He is a Past Officer of the Grand Lodge, and of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England.

O'BRIEN, Lucius Richard, President of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, was born at the family residence on Lake Simcoe, Ontario, Canada, in 1832, and educated at Upper Canada College, Toronto. At an early age he developed a taste for art. In 1872 he took an active part in founding the Art School of the Ontario Society of Artists, and for six years he held the Vice-Presidency of that Institution. In 1880, the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts was founded, and Mr. O'Brien was elected its President and has been a constant contributor to its exhibitions. He superintended the illustration of "Picturesque Canada," 2 vols., Toronto, 1884, for which he supplied a large number of the drawings. He is represented in the Royal Collections at Windsor and Osborne, and sends regularly to the English Water-Colour Exhibitions.

O'BRIEN, The Right Hon. Peter, LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF IRELAND.

O'BRIEN, William, M.P., son of the late Mr. James O'Brien, of Mallow, was born in 1852, and was educated at the Cloyne Diocesan College, and the Queen's College, Cork. He represented Mallow from Jan. 1883, until its extinction as a borough under the Redistribution Act, 1885, and in the Parliament of 1885 was member for South Tyrone, defeating Captain the Hon. Somerset Maxwell, Conservative, by a majority of 55. At the general election of 1886 he was defeated by Mr. T. W. Russell, Unionist Liberal, who gained the seat by a majority of 99, but he was returned for North-East Cork unopposed. Mr. O'Brien is one of the foremost members of the Parnellite party, and is the editor of United Ireland; he was a "suspect" under Mr. Forster's Coercion Act, and is a leader in the councils of the National League. He was a delegate of this body to the Chicago Convention in Aug., 1886. In Parliament he is a bitter and incisive speaker, and has once been "suspended" for a breach of the rules of the House. He has been four times imprisoned under the Coercion Act, for what he regards as protests against the curtailment of public liberty, and claims to have effected the abandonment of the prison rules in so far as they sought to confound political offenders with criminal prisoners. He is the author of "When we were Boys," written in prison. Mr. O'Brien, in company with Mr. Dillon, M.P., having been liberated on bail, pending a political trial, in Nov. 1890, forfeited the bail, and escaped to the United States, to fulfil a lecturing engagement there. He and Mr. Dillon met Mr. C. Parnell, M.P., in Paris in Jan. 1891, to consult about his retirement from the leadership of the Irish Parliamentary Party.

O'CONNOR, Thomas Power, M.P., born at Athlone, co. Roscommon, in 1848, was educated first at the College of the Immaculate Conception, Athlone, and afterwards at the Queen's College, where he graduated in the degrees of B.A. and M.A. He adopted journalism as a profession, and after three years' connection with the Dublin press, came to London in 1870. He first obtained an engagement on the Daily Telegraph, and was afterwards employed on several other London journals. He published, in 1876, the first volume of a biography of the late Lord Beaconsfield, under the title of "Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield," but afterwards, changing the method, brought out a complete Life of the then Premier, in a single volume, entitled "Lord Beaconsfield, a Biography." The work received general praise for its literary merits and research, but, as it took a very unfavourable view of the Conservative leader, its conclusions met with a widely different reception from Liberal and Conservative critics. Mr. O'Connor was elected member for the town of Galway at the General Election of 1880, and soon became one of the most active and prominent members of the party led by Mr. Parnell. He was one of the Executive of the Land League, both in England and Ireland. In Oct., 1881, he set out for the United States, and lectured on the Irish cause to large gatherings in nearly all the great cities, during a tour which extended over seven months, and raised a large sum of money. In 1883 he was elected President of the "Irish National League of Great Britain;" and has been re-elected to the position every year for several years in succession. In 1885 he stood for the Scotland division of Liverpool and defeated Mr. Woodward the Liberal candidate by a majority of 1,350. He was returned at the same time for Galway, but elected to take the seat at Liverpool. In 1886 he defeated Mr. Earle, a Unionist Liberal, by 1,480. He has edited a "Cabinet of Irish Literature," and has written a large number of tales, essays, and magazine articles. In 1885 he published what is, till now, his principal work, "The Parnell Movement." In 1887 he started the Star newspaper; but is reported to have sold it in July, 1890.

O'DONOVAN, Denis, F.R.S.L., F.R.G.S., &c., was born in co. Cork, Ireland, Aug. 23, 1836, and was educated in Ireland and France. He arrived in Queensland in 1874, and was appointed Parliamentary Librarian. Mr. O'Donovan filled the position of Professor of Modern Languages in the Collège des Hautes Etudes, afterwards in the Catholic University of Paris, and Lecturer in one of the colleges of the University of France. He was one of the editors of the Ami de la Religion, and is the author of "Memories of Rome," and some minor works. He is well known in Melbourne as a writer on literary and artistic subjects. Some of his lectures on art and architecture, delivered at the Public Library in that city, were published by the Technological Commission of Victoria. He was a warm advocate of the establishment of schools of design in that colony, giving them considerable support in the press and on the platform. His latest work is his Analytical Catalogue of the Queensland Parliamentary Library. It is the fruit of many years' labour in the colony, and of a deep study of bibliography, to which he devoted himself during his long residence in the principal countries of Europe, where he became intimately acquainted with the management of all the great libraries of the Old World. He has received from the Parliament of Queensland special and substantial grants in recognition of the thought and labour bestowed on the compilation of the Catalogue of the Parliamentary Library. Mr. O'Donovan is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, of the Royal Society of Literature, of the Incorporated Society of Authors, of the Society of Science, Letters, and Art, a Member of the Society of Arts, and of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, Corresponding Member honoris causâ of the Société de Géographie Commerciale of Paris and Havre, and honorary member of the Société d'Anthropologie of Paris.

ODLING, William, M.B., F.R.S., born Sept. 5, 1829, in Southwark; was educated at private schools; and for the medical profession at Guy's Hospital. He graduated M.B. of the University of London in 1851; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1859; and President of the Chemical Society in 1873. He was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at Guy's Hospital in 1850; Lecturer on Chemistry at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in 1863; Fullerian Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Institution in 1868; Waynflete Professor of Chemistry in the University of Oxford, June 17, 1872; and elected a Fellow of Worcester College on the following day. Dr. Odling, who is highly distinguished as a scientific chemist, is the author of a "Manual of Chemistry," 1861; "Lectures on Animal Chemistry," 1866; "Course of Practical Chemistry," 1876; and of various scientific memoirs, especially on chemical theory. The University of Leyden conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Mathematics and Physics in Feb. 1875. He was British Judge of Awards for Chemical Manufactures of the Philadelphia International Exhibition of 1876, and is one of the analysts employed to test the water supplied to London.

OGLE, Dr. William, M.A. and M.D. Oxon., F.R.C.P., London, was born in 1827 at Oxford, his father being the Regius Professor of Medicine in that University. He was educated at Rugby, and at Corpus Christi College, of which latter he afterwards became a Fellow. He graduated in classical honours, and took the degree of M.A. and M.D. at Oxford. His medical education was received at St. George's Hospital, where he became Lecturer on Physiology and Assistant Physician. After practising for a few years in London, he accepted the office of Medical Officer of Health for East Hertfordshire; and held this post until on the retirement of Dr. Farr he was appointed Superintendent of Statistics in the General Register Office, which post he still holds. Among other offices which he has held are those of Examiner in Physical Science and in Public Health in the University of Oxford. He is the author of numerous papers on physiological and medical subjects in the Transactions of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society; and on Statistical Subjects in the Journal of the Statistical Society, and in the official reports issued by the General Register Office. He is also the author of a translation, with notes and essays, of the treatise of Aristotle on the Parts of Animals, and of Kerner's "Flowers and their Unbidden Guests," and has published various articles on the "Fertilization of Flowers."

O'KELLY, James, M.P., son of Mr. John O'Kelly, of Roscommon, was born in Dublin in 1845. He was educated at Dublin.

University and at the Sorbonne, Paris, and served for some time as an officer in the French army during the Franco-German war. He left France after the fall of Paris and went to New York, where he worked for some time as a journalist for the New York Herald. As a correspondent for the same paper he went to Cuba at the time of the insurrection, but joined the rebels, was taken prisoner, and confined for some time in a dungeon, whence at last he contrived to escape. After various adventures in America, Algiers and elsewhere, he went to the Soudan for the purpose of joining the Mahdi's troops; he was lost for some months in the desert, and at last appeared on the Nile, not far from Khartoum. After writing a series of lively letters to the Daily News he returned to England, and once more represented the constituency of Roscommon in the House of Commons. At the General Election of 1885 he and Mr. Mullany were returned by an immense Parnellite majority for the new division of North Roscommon, and in 1886 he was returned unopposed. Mr. O'Kelly was a "suspect," and was imprisoned at Kilmainham in 1881-2. In the House of Commons he has been frequently "suspended."

OLDENBURG (Grand Duke of), Nicholas Frederick Peter, son of the Grand Duke Paul Frederick Augustus and the Princess Ida of Anhalt-Bernberg, born July 8, 1827, succeeded his father Feb. 27, 1853. The population of the Duchy over which he reigns is about 300,000. He promulgated a liberal constitution in Feb., 1849, modified it in 1852, and during the war between Russia, Turkey, and the Allied Powers, he adhered to the policy of Prussia. After the conquest of Schleswig-Holstein by Prussia and Austria, the Grand Duke claimed a portion of these duchies, which claim he endeavoured to support by some "Memoirs" addressed to the diplomatists of Europe. He married, Feb. 10, 1852, Elizabeth, daughter of Prince Joseph of Saxe-Altenburg, by whom he has two sons.

OLIPHANT, Mrs. Margaret, whose maiden name was Wilson, novelist and biographer, and one of the most prolific writers of the day, was born at Wallyford near Musselburgh in Midlothian, in 1828. The first of her numerous works of fiction, which abound in skilful delineations of Scotch life and character, appeared in 1849, before the author had attained her majority, under the title of "Passages in the life of Mrs. Margaret Maitland of Sunnyside." Its success was such as to incite its author to fresh efforts, and she produced a long series of works of fiction which secured for her a widespread reputation both in England and America. Amongst her novels are, "Caleb Field," 1850; "Markland," 1851; "Katie Stewart," 1852; "The Quiet Heart," 1854; "Zaidée," 1856; "The Laird of Norlaw," 1858; "Lucy Crofton," 1860; "The Chronicles of Carlingford," 1862-66; "Madonna Mary," 1867; "Squire Arden," 1871; "At His Gates," 1872; "A Rose in June," 1876; "Young Musgrave," 1877; "Within the Precincts," 1879; "The Ladies Lindores," 1883; "The Wizard's Son," 1883; "Hester," 1884; "Sir Tom," 1884; "Madam," 1885; "Oliver's Bride," 1886; "The Second Son," 1888; "Neighbours on the Green," "Lady Car: the Sequel of a Life," "A Poor Gentleman," 1889; "Mrs. Blencarrow's Troubles," and "Sons and Daughters," 1890. Mrs. Oliphant has also written works of history and biography, amongst which "S. Francis of Assisi," 1870; "The Makers of Florence," 1876; and "Literary History of England," 1882, and a biography of Laurence Oliphant, 1889, are the best known. She also edited Messrs. Blackwood's "Foreign Classics for English Readers," and herself contributed volumes on Dante and Cervantes. On the death of her son in Nov., 1890, Her Majesty sent her a kind letter of condolence.

OLIPHANT, Thomas Laurence Kington, born Aug. 16, 1831, at Henleaze, near Bristol, was educated at Cheam, Surrey, then at Eton, next at Balliol College, Oxford, and afterwards at the Inner Temple. He was served heir to his maternal grandfather's estate of Gask, in Perthshire, in 1867, having adopted his mother's family name, "Oliphant" instead of "Kington." Mr. Oliphant has published the "Life of the Emperor Frederick the Second," 1862; "Jacobite Lairds of Gask," 1870; "Sources of Standard English," 1873; "Life of the Duc de Luynes," with other essays, 1875; "Old and Middle English," 1878; "New English," 1886. He is now bringing out a second edition of "Old and Middle English."

OLLIVIER, Emile, a French statesman, born at Marseilles, July 2, 1825; became a member of the Paris bar in 1847; and in 1848 was Commissary-General of the Republic at Marseilles; was Préfet at Chaumont, and returned to the bar in 1849. Elected as Opposition candidate for the third circonscription of the Seine in 1857, he took part in several important discussions; amongst which may be mentioned those relating to the laws respecting public safety, the expedition to Italy, and the regulation of the Press. During the session of 1860 he was one of the most distinguished members of a small group of Opposition Deputies, known by the name of "The Five." In the meantime he undertook the defence of M. Vacherot, indicted for his work entitled "La Démocratie," and in consequence of the style he adopted in pleading, was suspended for three months, an appeal against this judgment failing. In 1863 he was re-elected for Paris. During the session of 1865 he was elected a member of the Council-General of the Var. In July of the same year he received the appointment of Judicial Counsel and Commissary-General of the Viceroy of Egypt in Paris, and retired from the Paris bar. M. Emile Ollivier was chosen by the Emperor as arbitrator of the difficulties which arose relative to the Isthmus of Suez, and it was upon his report that the final decision was founded. The session of 1866-67 witnessed the complete separation of M. Ollivier from his former political associates of the Left. At the general elections of 1869 he was returned by an enormous majority for the first circonscription of the Var. On Dec. 27, M. Ollivier, who had been for some time the centre of the movements for uniting the fractions of the late majority with the new Liberal Tiers Parti, received from the Emperor a letter inviting him to form a ministry which should enjoy the confidence of the Legislative body, and which could carry out the Senatus-Consultum in letter and spirit. This onerous task he undertook, and the names of the new ministers were published in the Journal Officiel on Jan. 3, 1870. M. Ollivier himself took the portfolio of Justice. Among the first-fruits of the new administration was the granting of an amnesty in favour of M. Ledru-Rollin, the convocation of the High Court of Justice at Tours to try Prince Pierre Bonaparte, the maintenance of order without shedding of blood during the popular excitement caused by the assassination of Victor Noir, the prosecution of Henry Rochefort, and the dismissal of M. Haussmann. Several administrative reforms also were introduced, and it was thought by many that an era of constitutional liberty had begun for France. These hopes were soon rudely dispelled. The declaration of war against Germany, and its disastrous results, led to the overthrow of the Ollivier Government on Aug. 9, 1870. M. Ollivier, who, it should be mentioned, had been elected a member of the French Academy in April, 1870, deemed it prudent after the fall of the empire to retire to Biella, in Piedmont, where he resided for a considerable time with his wife and child, devoting his time to literary pursuits. He returned to his house at Passy at the close of the year 1872, and his reception at the French Academy took place Feb. 25, 1874. M. Emile Ollivier has published numerous juridical works, which have appeared in the Revue de Droit Pratique, which he founded in 1856, in conjunction with MM. Mourlon, Demangeat, and Ballot. He is the author, with M. Mourlon, of "Commentaire sur les Saisies Immobilières et Ordres," 1859; and of "Commissaire de la Loi du 25 Mars, 1864, sur les Coalitions," 1864; "Une Visite à la Chapelle des Médicis: Dialogue entre Michel Ange et Raphaël," 1872; "L'Eglise et l'État au Concile du Vatican," 2 vols., 1879; "M. Thiers à l'Académie et dans l'Histoire," 1880; "Le Concordat, est-il respecté?" 1883; and other works. He is an accomplished dilettante. M. Ollivier's first wife, who died at Saint Tropez, in 1862, was a daughter of Liszt, the famous pianist and composer; he married, secondly, in Sept., 1869, Mdle. Gravier, the daughter of a merchant of Marseilles.

OLMSTED, Frederick Law, landscape gardener, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, Nov. 10, 1822. He studied at Yale College, devoting special attention to engineering and the sciences connected with agriculture. In 1848 he purchased a farm on Staten Island, and while managing it, studied landscape gardening. In 1850 he made a pedestrian tour through England and portions of the Continent, an account of which was given in his "Walks and Talks of an American Farmer in England," 1852. In 1852-53, as correspondent of the New York Times, he travelled through the South for the purpose of studying the economical effects of slavery. The results of this and of a subsequent journey were afterwards published in separate works: "A Journey in the Seaboard Slave States," 1856; "A Journey through Texas," 1857; "A Journey in the Black Country," 1860; and "The Cotton Kingdom," 1861. In the meanwhile, in 1855, he made a tour through France, Italy, and Germany, for the purpose of observing parks and rural grounds. In 1856, in connection with Calvert-Vaux, he secured the prize for the best plan of laying out the New York Central Park, and was appointed architect-in-chief of the work. He continued in charge of the Park until the outbreak of the Civil War (1861), when he was appointed Secretary and Executive Officer of the Sanitary Commission. From 1864 to 1866 he spent in California, when he was made one of the Commissioners of the National Park of the Yosemite. He returned to New York in 1866, and had charge of the laying out of the Brooklyn Prospect Park. He has since been associated in designs for parks and other public works at Washington, Chicago, San Francisco, Buffalo, Montreal and other cities. He resides at Brookline, Massachusetts.

O'MALLEY, Edward Loughlin, son of the late Peter Frederick O'Malley, Q.C., was born in 1842, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. 1864, M.A. 1868. He was called to the Bar, Middle Temple, in 1866, and went on the Norfolk and South Eastern Circuits. He was made Attorney-General for Jamaica in 1876; Attorney-General for Hongkong in 1879; and Chief Justice of the Straits Settlements in 1889.

OMMANNEY, Admiral Sir Erasmus, C.B., F.R.S., is the seventh son of the late Sir Francis Molyneux Ommanney, the well-known Navy agent, and sometime M.P. for Barnstaple, and nephew of the late Admiral Sir John A. Ommanney, K.C.B. He was born in London in 1814, and entered the Navy in 1826. As midshipman, he assisted at the landing of the British Army at Lisbon in 1827; was at the battle of Navarino on board the Albion, and in H.M. ships Revenge and Undaunted saw much service in the Mediterranean, East Indies and Coast of Africa. He was promoted to Lieutenant in 1835, and immediately volunteered to serve with Capt. James Ross in an expedition to relieve the whaling vessels beset in the ice of Baffin's Bay: this expedition was carried out in mid-winter under extreme hardships and difficulties and for his services Lieut. Ommanney received the commendation of the Admiralty. In Oct., 1840, he was promoted to Commander, and studied the principles and construction of marine engines in order to fit himself to command steam-vessels, which were then being introduced into the navy. With the Vesuvius, he was actively employed on all parts of the Mediterranean for three years, being present at the bombardment of Tangier by the French. He then returned to England, and, unable to get active employment, studied at the Portsmouth Naval College. After being promoted Captain in 1846, he was employed by the Government to help in carrying out the relief measures during the Irish Famine, and in Feb., 1850, was selected to be second in command of the Arctic Expedition, under Captain Austin, to search after the Franklin expedition, and was the first to discover traces of the missing ships. After travelling over 500 miles on the ice in sledges, Capt. Ommanney returned to the ship, and though no further traces of Franklin were found, a great deal of new land was discovered. On his return to England he was appointed Deputy Controller-General of the Coastguard, which he left on the outbreak of the war against Russia in 1854, when he was appointed to command the White Sea Expedition, which harassed the towns of Russian Lapland, and endured a service of considerable severity. In 1855 he was appointed to command a special service in the Baltic, assisted in the operations of the fleet in the Gulf of Finland, and was Senior Officer in the Gulf of Riga. In 1857 he proceeded to the West Indies, and took command of the Brunswick, and was afterwards attached to the Channel Fleet and the Mediterranean Fleet.

ONSLOW (The Earl of), William Hillier, K.C.M.G., Governor of New Zealand, was born in 1853; educated at Eton, and Exeter College, Oxford; and succeeded to the peerage in 1870. He was Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies 1887-8; and Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade from Feb. to Nov., 1888, when he became Governor of New Zealand in succession to Sir W. D. Jervois. The Earl was Lord-in-Waiting to Her Majesty in 1880 and in 1886.

OPPERT, Julius, a French orientalist, was born in Hamburg, of Jewish parents, July 9, 1825. He studied law at Heidelberg, and Sanskrit and Arabic at Bonn. He next studied the Zend and the ancient Persian, and published a treatise at Berlin on the vocal system of the latter language. As his religion prevented him from holding a professorship in a German University, he went to France in 1847, obtained the professorship of German at the Lyceums of Laval and Rheims, and was appointed on the scientific expedition sent by the government to Mesopotamia. After his return in 1854, he submitted to the Institute a new system of interpreting the inscriptions. For nearly thirty years he has devoted himself chiefly to the decyphering of cuneiform inscriptions. In 1857 he was appointed Professor of Sanskrit in the School of Languages attached to the Imperial Library. Among his works are

"Les Inscriptions des Archéménides," 1852; "Études Assyriennes; L'Expédition scientifique de France en Mésopotamie," 1854-64; "Grammaire Sanscrita," 1859; "Grande inscription du Palais de Khorsabad," 1864; "Histoire des empires de Chaldée et d'Assyrie, d'après les monuments," 1866; "L'Immortalité de l'âme chez les Chaldéens, suivie d'une traduction de la descente aux enfers de la déesse Istar Astarté," 1875; "L'ambre jaune chez les Assyriens," 1880; "Fragments Mythologiques relatifs à la Mythologie Assyrienne," 1882; "Deux textes très anciens de la Chaldée," 1883; "Chronologie de la Génèse," 1877; "Documents juridiques de la Chaldée et de l'Assyrie," 1878; "Le peuple et la langue des Medes," 1879. Many papers on the Laws of Assyria and Babylon. Etat des esclaves à Babylone, 1888, etc.

ORCHARDSON, William Quiller, R.A., D.C.L. Oxford, born in Edinburgh in 1835, entered at the age of fifteen the Trustees' Academy of his native city. The first pictures he submitted to public inspection were shown in the exhibitions of the Royal Scottish Academy. Encouraged by their reception, Mr. Orchardson came to London in 1863, and the same year exhibited at the Royal Academy for the first time. His contributions were entitled "An Old English Song," and "Portraits," the latter a life-size full-length portrait composition of three young ladies. In the following year he exhibited at the British Institution a figure of "Peggy" from Allan Ramsay's "Gentle Shepherd," and at the Royal Academy another Scottish subject, entitled "Flowers of the Forest." The following year, there appeared at the Royal Academy "Hamlet and Ophelia," and in the winter exhibition at the French gallery, Pall Mall, "The Challenge," which won a prize of £100 given by Mr. Wallace. In 1866 came "The Story of a Life" at the Academy—an aged nun relating her life experience to a group of novices; and "Christopher Sly," in Mr. Wallis's winter exhibition at the Suffolk-street galleries. In 1867 the Academy pictures were "Talbot and the Countess of Auvergne," and "Miss Pettie," and another was shown at the French gallery winter exhibition, entitled "Choosing a Weapon." In Jan., 1868, he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, only four years after he had come to London. He exhibited that year at the Academy, besides a portrait of Mrs. Birket Foster, a subject from Shakespeare—"Prince Henry, Poins, and Falstaff." In 1870 three pictures by him were exhibited at the Royal Academy, viz., "Day Dreams," "The Market-Girl from the Lido," and "Toilers of the Sea." Mr. Orchardson achieved a great success at the Paris Universal Exhibition, where his "Challenge" and "Christopher Sly" were greatly admired by French critics, and won for the painter one of the very few Medals awarded to English artists. His more recent pictures are, "A Hundred Years Ago," "On the Grand Canal, Venice," and "In St. Mark's, Venice," exhibited at the Academy, 1871; "Casus Belli" and "The Forest Pet," 1872; "The Protector," "Oscar and Brin," and "Cinderella," 1873; "Hamlet and the King," "Ophelia," "A Venetian Fruit-seller," and "Escaped," 1874; "Too Good to be True," and "Moonlight on the Lagoons," 1875; "Flotsam and Jetsam," "The Bill of Sale," and "The Old Soldier," 1876; "The Queen of the Swords," and "Jessica" (Merchant of Venice), 1877; "Conditional Neutrality," "A Social Eddy left by the Tide," and "Autumn," 1878; "Hard Hit," a scene at the gaming table, 1879; "Napoleon I., on board H.M.S. Bellerophon," 1880, purchased by the Council of the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantry bequest; "Housekeeping in the Honeymoon," 1882. These were followed by "Voltaire," 1883; "Un Mariage de Convenance," 1884; "The Salon of Mme. Recamier," 1885; "Un Mariage de Convenance—After," 1886; "The Rift within the Lute," 1887; and "The Young Duke," 1889. Mr. Orchardson was elected a Royal Academician Dec. 13, 1877; and a D.C.L. of Oxford in 1890.

ORLEANS, Duc d', Prince Louis Philippe Robert, eldest son of the Comte de Paris, was born Feb. 6, 1869. On attaining his majority, Feb. 6, 1890, he entered Paris, and proceeding to the Mairie, expressed his desire, as a Frenchman, to perform his military service; whereupon he was arrested in conformity with the Expulsion Bill of 1886, which forbids the soil of France to the direct heirs of the families which have reigned there. He was liberated after a few months' imprisonment, and conducted to the frontier.

ORMEROD, Miss Eleanor A., of Torrington House, St. Albans, was born at Sedbury Park, near Chepstow, and is the youngest daughter of Geo. Ormerod, D.C.L., F.R.S., of Sedbury Park, Gloucestershire, and of Tyldesley, Lancashire, who was well known as the "Historian of Cheshire." From her earliest childhood Miss Ormerod was excessively fond of observing plant and animal life. Her education was conducted at home under the supervision of her mother, whose chief care was that all studies undertaken should be carefully learned and thoroughly mastered, and to this judicious early training Miss Ormerod attributes the success which has attended her studies as a specialist. In early life successive illnesses occasioned periods of enforced leisure, which Miss Ormerod occupied in natural history studies out of doors, together with the correlated subjects of Botany, Horticulture, and Agricultural Chemistry. Miss Ormerod has acquired a knowledge of Latin, French, Italian, and several other languages, which greatly helped her in later work, and she began early to sketch from nature in pencil and water colours. About the year 1853 Miss Ormerod took up the study of entomology for the love of it, as distinguished from a mere collector's pastime. The real work of her life began in 1868, when the formation of the collection of Economic Entomology was set on foot by the Royal Horticultural Society and the South Kensington Department. At this time, Mr. Andrew Murray, the curator of the museum, was in constant communication with Miss Ormerod, suggesting special investigations and reports; and, in response, she contributed specimens, drawings, and models, illustrative of insect depredations, for which the "Silver Floral Medal" of the Royal Horticultural Society was awarded to her in recognition of these many services. In the year 1872 Miss Ormerod was chosen to represent British natural history modelling from life at the International Polytechnic Exhibition held in Moscow, and sent over a large collection of plaster-of-Paris models, taken by her in exact facsimile by a process of her own invention and coloured by herself. These specimens represented a large number of garden plants and hot-house fruits, from grapes and peaches down to potatoes and lettuces. She also sent groups of electrotypes from nature, representing leaves and reptiles. For these she received the Silver Medal, the Great Silver Medal, and also the Gold Medal of Honour from the University of Moscow. In 1878 Miss Ormerod was elected a Fellow of the Meteorological Society, being the first lady ever admitted to Fellowship. She arranged and edited for the Society a large mass of observations relating to coincident conditions of weather and plant life. This was published in a royal 8vo vol. under the name of the "Cobham Journals." In 1879 Miss Ormerod published "Notes of Observations on Injurious Insects." In 1881 she published her "Manual of Injurious Insects, with Methods of Prevention and Remedy for these Attacks on Food, Crops, &c." This was followed by "Reports of Observations on Injurious Insects during 1882, 1883;" "Some Observations on the (Estridæ)," and "Guide to Insect Life," being a series of ten lectures on the same class of subjects delivered by her in the Lecture Theatre at South Kensington Museum. Previous to this, in 1881, Miss Ormerod had accepted the post of Special Lecturer on Economic Entomology at the Royal Agricultural College, but after a few years she resigned this office. Miss Ormerod was unanimously elected Consulting Entomologist to the Royal Agricultural Society of England by the Council, on May 2, 1882. Since this appointment her work has increased greatly in amount and scope. Her election successively as honorary and corresponding member of the Royal Agricultural and Horticultural Society of South Australia, as one of the Patrons of the Natural History Society of East Province, Cape Colony; also as hon. member of the Entomological Society of Ontario, Canada, has placed her in connection with agricultural work in these large districts, and she is constantly receiving from colonists specimens of insects and insect injuries, as well as from farmers and others in this country. In 1882 Miss Ormerod was appointed Consulting Entomologist of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and shortly after became Special Lecturer on Economic Entomology at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester.

O'RELL, Max. See BLOUËT, PAUL.

OSCAR II., King of Sweden and Norway, is the great grandson of Napoleon's famous general Bernadot, and was born Jan. 21, 1829. Before he ascended the throne he held the rank of Lieutenant-General in the army. On the death of the King's brother, Charles XV., Sept. 18, 1872, he succeeded to the throne. In 1878 the Frankfort Academy of Sciences elected the King of Sweden a corresponding member in recognition of his poetical translation of Goethe's "Faust" into Swedish. His Majesty is also the author of "A Memoir of Charles XII." (translated into English in 1879); and of "Poems and Leaflets from my Journal," 1880, under the nom de plume of "Oscar Frederik." He married, in June, 1857, the Princess Sophia of Nassau, daughter of the late Duke Wilhelm of Nassau, who was born in July, 1836. From this union there are four sons—namely, Gustaf, Duke of Wermland, born in June, 1858, now heir-apparent to the throne; Oscar, Duke of Götland, born in Nov., 1859, and who married Miss Ebba Munck, daughter of Col. Munck; Carl, Duke of Westergötland, born in Feb. 1861; and Eugene, Duke of Nerike, born in Aug. 1865. The coronation of King Oscar and Queen Sophia took place July 18, 1873, at the Cathedral of Drontheim in Norway.

O'SHEA, William Henry, born in 1840, is the only son of the late Henry O'Shea, Esq., of Dublin. He was educated at Oscott and at Trinity College, Dublin, and in 1858 joined the 18th Hussars, but has now retired. He is a Count of the Holy Roman Empire, and a J.P. for co. Clare. He entered Parliament in 1880 as Liberal Home Rule member for Clare, and retained his seat until 1885. When it was in contemplation to release Mr. Parnell and others from Kilmainham in April, 1882, Captain O'Shea acted as the intermediary between the Government and the suspects. At the general election of 1885 he stood as a Liberal, for the Exchange Division of Liverpool, but was defeated by a narrow majority. In Feb., 1886, he stood for Galway on the same principles. He declined to vote for Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill in June, 1886, and resigned his seat. Towards the end of 1889 he instituted divorce proceedings against his wife, a daughter of the late Sir John Page Wood, and niece of the late Lord Chancellor Hatherley, on the ground of her adultery with Mr. C. S. Parnell, M.P. A decree nisi was granted the petitioner on Nov. 17, 1890; and the suit has given rise to political complications, of which it is impossible to foresee the issue.

OSMAN, Ali (called Osman Digna, or "the bearded one," from dikn, the beard), was born at Suakim about 1836. He is not of pure Arab descent; his grandfather was a Turkish slave dealer who married a woman of the Hadendowa tribe; and Osman, like his father and grandfather before him, was a dealer in slaves, and had connections in Khartoum and Berber; and, during latter years, before he appeared as the ambassador of the Mahdi, he stayed more frequently at Berber than at Suakim. There he entered into communication with the Mahdi, Mohammed Ahmed, and matured his plans for inducing the tribes round Suakim to rebel against the oppression of their Egyptian rulers. Osman Digna was not, however, the first and original leader of the rebellion. Sheik Tahher, of Suakim, who enjoyed the repute of especial holiness amongst the superstitious nomads of those parts, was the real messenger of the Mahdi, and the channel of communication in the negotiations with the rebellious tribes, while Osman Digna was more the military commander, and had to base his operations upon the spiritual authority of Sheik Tahher, a relation which existed as late as a year ago. It is well known with what skill Osman Digna filled his position, extended his influence over the rebellious tribes, and rose in the estimation of the authorities at Khartoum. The rebellion of the False Prophet on the White Nile broke out in Dec. 1881; and, on Aug. 3, 1883, Osman Digna appeared before Suakim, on which day the first encounter took place at Sinkat with Tewfik Bey, Osman being beaten and wounded, and losing three members of his family. In Sept., 1885, an Abyssinian expedition under Ras Alula, which had been sent to the relief of Kassala by King Johannes, encountered Osman Digna at Kafel, and utterly defeated him. He again threatened Suakim in 1888, whence he was repulsed by General Grenfell on Dec. 21 of that year.

OSMAN NUBAR PACHA (Ghazi), a Turkish general, was born at Tokat, in Asia Minor, in 1832. He began his education in the preparatory school in Constantinople, under the supervision of his brother, Hussein Effendi, who, at the time, was professor of Arabic at the institution. From the preparatory school Osman passed in due course into the military school, and quitting the latter in 1853 with very high certificates, at once entered the army as a lieutenant; being appointed to the general staff in Shumla shortly after the outbreak of the Crimean war. His gallantry in action, and general soldier-like qualities, led to his rapid advancement, and at the termination of the campaign he was appointed a captain in the Imperial Guard at Constantinople. Before long he was promoted to the rank of major, and, as such, took part in the fighting in Crete, from 1866 to 1869. Returning to Constantinople after the suppression of the insurrection in the island, he was promoted to the rank of colonel; and on attaining the rank of brigadier-general he was appointed to the command of a division in the 5th Army Corps. In the Turko-Servian war Osman Pacha commanded the division of the Turkish army assembled at Widdin, and for his conduct in the campaign he was promoted, by an Imperial irade, to the rank of Muschir, or Field-Marshal. When the war between Russia and Turkey broke out he still remained at Widdin, but his command was increased to sixty-eight battalions, sixteen squadrons, and 174 guns; and it was with the greater part of this force that he appeared at Plevna in July, 1877, and turned the tide of war in favour of the Turks. He defended that place with such gallantry, that in October he received from the Sultan the title of "Ghazi," or "Victorious," and the decoration of the Osmanieh in brilliants. At last Plevna surrendered (Dec. 10, 1877), after Osman had made a desperate attempt to break through the Russian lines. Ghazi Osman surrendered unconditionally the gallant army with which he had held this famous stronghold for so long, with which he upset the whole Russian plan of campaign, and with which he defeated, in three pitched battles, Russia's finest armies. The respect with which Ghazi Osman was treated by the Russians was equally honourable to his captors and to himself. The Emperor (Alexander II.) came to see him and said, "Osman Pacha, do not regret that you were obliged to surrender; for that often happens in war. You defended your country bravely; but, unfortunately, your government could not send you reinforcements in time; therefore I do not receive you as a prisoner; and, while returning your sword, consider myself happy to have fought on the field of battle so brave a General." After the conclusion of peace in March, 1878, he returned to Constantinople, and was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Imperial Guard. On June 10 he was appointed Marshal of the Palace, at the same time retaining his command of the army for the defence of Constantinople. He was next appointed Governor-General of the island of Crete. Ghazi Osman Pacha was appointed Minister of War in the administration formed in Dec. 1878, and he elaborated a plan for the radical reorganisation of the army. In a short time he acquired considerable influence over the mind of the Sultan. Being accused by two Muschirs, Fuad and Nusret, of maladministration, before the Sultan himself and the Council of Ministers, he was successful in preventing the charges from being pressed (June, 1879). To his influence, and that of the Sheikh-ul-Islam, was attributed the dismissal of the Grand-Vizier Khereddin Pacha. In July, 1880, his dismissal from the post of Minister of War was announced, but in Jan. 1881, he was again appointed to that office in the place of Hussein Huvni Pacha. After being for some time out of office, he once more, on Dec. 3, 1882, became Minister of War with the title of Seraskier. Ghazi Osman Pacha has received from the Sultan and from other European sovereigns almost innumerable decorations; while the approval of his Imperial master could hardly have been more plainly marked than by the fact that two of Osman Pacha's sons have been honoured by receiving in marriage the hands of two of the Sultan's daughters.

OSSORY & FEERNs, Bishop of. See WALSH, THE RIGHT REV. W. PAKENHAM.

OTTO, King of Bavaria, was born April 27, 1848; succeeded to the throne, June 13, 1866; but the government passed into the hands of the Regent, Prince Luitpold, on June 10, 1886.

OULESS, Walter William, R.A., was born at St. Heliers, Jersey, Sept. 21, 1848, and educated at Victoria College in that island. He came to London in 1864, and was admitted a student of the Royal Academy in the following year. While there, he took a silver Medal in the Antique School, and was an unsuccessful competitor for the Historical Gold Medal. Mr. Oules has been a constant exhibitor at Burlington House since 1869, and his first works were subject pictures, the principal being "Home Again," and "An Incident in the French Revolution." In 1872, acting on the advice of Mr. Millais, he took to portrait-painting, and has since devoted himself almost exclusively to that branch of the profession. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy Jan. 24, 1877, and a Royal Academician May 5, 1881. He obtained the Medal of the second class at the Paris International Exhibition of 1878. Among the portraits painted and exhibited by Mr. Oules may be mentioned those of Lord Selborne, Mr. Charles Darwin, F.R.S.; the late Bishop of London; Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, G.C.B., Miss Ruth Bouverie, 1877; the late Mr. Russell Gurney, M.P., Recorder of London, 1877; Lieut.-Col. Loyd Lindsay, 1878; Mr. John Bright, M.P.; Sir Thomas Gladstone; the Rev. Dr. Ridding, head-master of Winchester College; and Mr. Edmund Yates, 1879; His Eminence Cardinal Newman and Mr. Justice Manisty, 1880; Mrs. Butterworth, 1881; Gen. Sir F. Roberts, 1882; the late Bishop of Llandaff, and the Bishop of Norwich, 1883; and Mr. G. Scharf, 1886. His Eminence Cardinal Manning, 1888; Sir William Bowman, F.R.S., Lady Manisty, T. Sidney Cooper, R.A., 1889; the Bishop of St. Albans and the Bishop of Chichester, 1890. Mr. Oules was one of the two English recipients of the grand Gold Medal for Art at the Berlin International Exhibition, 1886; and was made a Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur after the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1889.

OWEN, The Rev. James, President of the Baptist Union, was born in 1838, and educated at Haverfordwest College, and Bristol College. He was for twenty years minister at Swansea; and in 1889 he was appointed Vice-President of the Baptist Union, and President in 1890.

OWEN, The Very Rev. John, M.A., Dean of St. Asaph, was born at Llanengan, Carnarvonshire, in 1834, and is the son of Mr. Griffith Owen, Ysgerber, Den. He was educated at Boltwnog Grammar School and Jesus College, Oxford, where he gained a scholarship at entrance in 1872. He obtained a Second Class Honour in Classical Moderations, 1873; and a Second Class in Mathematical Moderations, 1874; and graduated with Second Class Honour in Mathematical Finals, 1876; proceeding to the M.A. degree in 1879. He was ordained Deacon in 1879, and Priest in 1880, by the Bishop of St. David's. He was elected Professor and Lecturer in Classics and Theology at St. David's College, Lampeter, 1879-85; Head Master and Warden of Llandoverly College, 1885-89; and was appointed Dean of St. Asaph in 1889.

OWEN, Sir Richard, K.C.B., M.D., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., the celebrated comparative anatomist, is the youngest son of Richard Owen, Esq., of Fulmer Place, Bucks, and was born at Lancaster, July 20, 1804. He studied in the grammar school of his native town, where he was contemporary with the late Dr. Whewell. In 1824 he matriculated at the University of Edinburgh, where he attended the anatomical lectures of Dr. Barclay. He thence proceeded to London and entered the Medical School of St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He also attended for a considerable time the schools of medicine in Paris. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in London in 1826, and began life as a general practitioner in Serle Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, but his subsequent appointment, on Mr. Abernethy's recommendation, to the post of Assistant Curator of the Hunterian Museum, led him to devote his attention exclusively to the study of comparative anatomy. In 1834 he was appointed to the Chair of Comparative Anatomy at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and soon afterwards he married the only daughter of his colleague, Mr. William Clift, Curator of the Hunterian Museum. In 1836 he succeeded Sir Charles Bell as Professor of Anatomy and Physiology in the College of Surgeons, being appointed by the College in that year as the first Hunterian Professor. Professor Owen's connection with the College of Surgeons ceased in 1856, on his being appointed Superintendent of the Natural History Departments (Zoology, Geology, Mineralogy) in the British Museum. He has advocated the provision of adequate galleries for the exposition of these collections in his "Discourse on the Extent and Aims of a National Museum of Natural History." For some years he was Lecturer on Palæontology in the Government School of Mines, Jermyn Street, and Fullerian Professor of Physiology in the Royal Institution of Great Britain, but was compelled, on account of failing health, to resign these offices. He has been chosen, by command of Her Majesty, to deliver courses of lectures to the Royal Family at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle, and a residence in Richmond Park has been assigned to him. Among the first great works which he undertook were the "Descriptive and Illustrated Catalogue of the Specimens of Physiology and Comparative Anatomy;" the "Catalogue of the Natural History," that of the "Osteology," and that of the "Fossil Organic Remains," preserved in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons. Discerning in a fragment of fossil bone from New Zealand, submitted to him in 1839, evidence of a bird more gigantic than the ostrich, Professor Owen published an account of it; transmitted copies to New Zealand, and obtained evidence in confirmation and extension of his idea, which occupies many successive parts of the "Transactions" of the Zoological Society. In that for 1855 he propounds his theory of the extinction of species on the principle of the "contest of existence" through the operation of extraneous influences. The genera of birds thus lost by "natural rejection" are Dinornis, Aptornis, Notornis, Cnemidornis, &c. Concluding in the work "On the Nature of Limbs" his researches on the unity of plan of animal organisation, the author is led to regard species as due to secondary cause or law, continuously operating and producing them successively. Professor Owen has written, amongst other works, "Mémorial on the Pearly Nautilus," 1832; "Odontography," 1840; "Mémorial on a Gigantic Extinct Sloth," 1842; "Lectures on the Comparative Anatomy of the Invertebrate Animals," 1843; "Lectures on the Comparative Anatomy of the Vertebrate Animals," 1846; "History of British

Fossils, Mammals, and Birds," 1846; "On the Archetype and Homologies of the Vertebrate Skeleton," 1848; "On the Nature of Limbs," 1849; "On Parthenogenesis, or the Successive Production of Procreative Individuals from a single ovum," 1849; "History of British Fossil Reptiles," 1849-51; "Principles of Comparative Osteology," published in French at Paris in 1855; "On Palæontology," and "On the Megatherium," 1860; "On the Aye-Aye" (Chiromys), 1863; "On the Gorilla," 1865; "On the Dodo," and "On the Anatomy of Vertebrates," 1866; and the articles on Zoology, Comparative Anatomy, and Physiology, in "Brande's Dictionary of Science," in which the article "Species" contains the Professor's views of their nature and origin. His later researches have been on the extinct animals of our principal Colonies. In 1876 his work on "The Fossil Reptilia of South Africa," with 70 plates, was published by the trustees of the British Museum. In 1877 Professor Owen brought out, at his own cost, a work "On the Fossil Mammals of Australia, and on the Extinct Marsupials of England," 2 vols. 4to, with 132 plates and many woodcuts. He is also the author of an enlarged work "On the Extinct Wingless Birds of New Zealand." The great and rapid increase of specimens of species previously unknown, of both plants and animals, necessitated a considerably greater extent of exhibition space than the then British Museum in Bloomsbury afforded, and led to the foundation of the National Museum of Natural History at South Kensington, the erection of which was superintended by Professor Owen and, when completed to the extent required for the then number of specimens, the Professor superintended their arrangement in the halls and galleries of the part of the New Museum ready to receive and exhibit them. Subsequent increase has required the galleries now in progress of completion. Professor Owen has communicated numerous papers to the "Transactions" of the Royal, Linnean, Geological, Zoological, Cambridge Philosophical, Medico-Chirurgical, and Microscopical Societies, and has contributed some elaborate Reports, published in the Reports of the British Association. He was one of the founders, and first President, of the Microscopical Society; is a Fellow or Associate of most of the learned societies or scientific academies at home and abroad; has received the Cross of the Legion of Honour; is a Chevalier of the Order of Merit of Prussia, and one of the eight Foreign Associates of the French

Institute. He was created a Companion of the Bath, June 3, 1873, and shortly afterwards made a K.C.B.; and in Jan., 1879, he was elected a Foreign Member of the Berlin Academy of Sciences.

OXENDEN, The Right Rev. Ashton, D.D., late Primate and Metropolitan of Canada, was born at Broome Park, near Canterbury, in 1808, graduated B.A. at University College, Oxford, in 1831, and was ordained priest in 1834. From 1848 to 1869 he was rector of Pluckley-with-Pevington, in Kent. In 1864 he became an Honorary Canon of Canterbury Cathedral. In 1869, having been elected by the synod, he was consecrated to the Metropolitan See of Montreal, in virtue of which he became Primate of all Canada. He resigned his bishopric in April, 1878, feeling himself no longer equal to the fatigues of his diocese. In May, 1879, he was instituted to the vicarage of St. Stephen, near Canterbury. Dr. Oxenden has written "Decision," "Prayers for Private Use," "Sermons on the Christian Life," "God's Message to the Poor," "Baptism Simply Explained," "The Lord's Supper Simply Explained," "Fervent Prayer," "A Plain History of the Christian Church," "The Pastoral Office," "The Pathway of Safety," "Lectures on the Gospel," "The Barham Tracts," and many other works, most of which have had a large circulation.

PAGE, Thomas Nelson, LL.D., American writer, was born at Oakland, Virginia, April 23, 1853. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Washington and Lee University in 1887. Mr. Page's first publication was a rhyme entitled "Uncle Gabe's White Folks," which appeared in Scribner's Monthly (now The Century) in 1877. In 1884 was issued in the same periodical "Marse Chan," a negro dialect story of the Civil War, and this made the writer's reputation. Others in the same vein followed, and in 1887 they were collected and published together in a book under title of "In the Virginia." This was followed by "Befo' de War: Echoes in Negro Dialect," 1888; and "Two Little Confederates," 1888.

He retired from the command of the Mediterranean fleet in May, 1869.

He has published papers and small works, chiefly on subjects relating to medicine. In 1885 he was made K.C.B.

PAGET, Sir James, Bart., F.R.S., LL.D. Cantab., D.C.L. Oxon., ex-President of the Royal College of Surgeons, son of Samuel Paget, Esq., Merchant, was born at Great Yarmouth, Jan. 11, 1814, became a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1836, and an honorary Fellow in 1843. He was created a baronet in Aug., 1871. He was a Member of the Royal Commission appointed in 1881 to inquire into the condition of the London hospitals for small-pox and fever cases, and into the means of preventing the spread of infection. Sir James Paget was one of the scientific celebrities who received an honorary degree at the Jubilee (1882) in commemoration of the 300th anniversary of the founding of the University of Würzburg. He married, in 1844, Lydia, daughter of the late Rev. Henry North, Domestic Chaplain to H.R.H. the late Duke of Kent.

PAGET, Violet, who, under the name of Vernon Lee, contributes philosophical and æsthetic criticism to the principal English reviews, was born in 1857, and has lived in Italy for many years. She has devoted herself specially to the history of the arts, literature, and drama of that country. In 1880 she published "Studies of the Eighteenth Century in Italy." In 1882 appeared "Belcaro," being essays on sundry æsthetical questions; "The Prince of a Hundred Soups" (a fairy tale), 1883; "Ottolie, an Eighteenth Century Idyl;" "Euphron," a collection of essays; "The Countess of Albany," a biography; "Miss Brown," a novel, 1884; and in 1886, "Baldwin," a collection of essays and dialogues.

PAILLERON, Edouard, a French dramatist, was born in Paris in 1843. He began life as a clerk in a Notary's office, and published in 1860 a volume of satirical poetry, "Les Parasites," 1861, and a play. Among his most successful subsequent productions are: "Le Mur Mitoyen," 1862; "Le Dernier Quartier," 1863; "Le Second Mouvement," 1865; "Le Monde où l'on s'amuse," 1868; "Les faux Ménages," 1869; "Hélène," "L'Autre Motif," 1872; "Petite Pluie," 1875; "L'âge ingrat," 1878; "L'Étincelle," 1879; "L'Épave le bal," 1881; "Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie," was produced at the Comédie Française in 1882, and had an altogether unprecedented run. To this piece of contemporary satire—for it is rather than a play—M. Pailleron owes his election (1884) to the Académie Française. He has written also "La Souris" which appeared in 1887; "Amours et Haines;" "Théâtre chez Madame;" "Discours Académiques;" "Le Départ;" "Prière pour la France;" "La Poupée;" "Études sur Emile Augier," &c.

He was for five years Vice-Principal of the Training College for Schoolmasters at Kneller Hall, was afterwards appointed to a post in the educational department of the Privy Council, and for some years was private secretary to Earl Granville. He has published "Idylls and Songs," 1854; "The Golden Treasury of English Songs," 1861; "Essays on Art," 1866; and a Life of Sir Walter Scott, prefixed to the Globe edition of his poems, 1867; "Hymns," 1867; 3rd edit., enlarged, 1870; "The Five Days' Entertainments at Wentworth Grange," 1868; the text illustrative of "Gems of English Art in this country: Twenty-four Pictures from National Collections, printed in colours by Leighton Brothers," 1869; "Lyrical Poems," 1871; "The Children's Treasury," 1874; "The Visions of England," 1881 and 1889: a Series of Lyrical Poems on English History; "The Treasury of Sacred Song," 1889. He also has edited "Selection from Wordsworth;" "Shakespeare's Lyrics;" "Chrysmela: a selection from the Lyrical Poems of Robert Herrick;" "The Poetical Works of J. Keats;" "Lyrical Poems by Lord Tennyson;" "Glen Dessaray and other Poems by J. C. Shairp." Mr. Palgrave was created an honorary LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1878. On the death of Principal Shairp in 1886 Mr. Palgrave was elected Professor of Poetry at Oxford.

PALGRAVE, Reginald F. D., fourth son of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Dawson Turner, of Great Yarmouth, Banker, was born in London, June 28, 1829. He was placed, through the intervention of Sir R. H. Inglis, by Sir D. Le Marchant, Clerk of the House of Commons, in the Committee Office, 1853; upon the recommendation of Sir T. Erskine May, he was appointed by the Speaker, Mr. Evelyn Denison, Examiner of Petitions for Private Bills to both Houses of Parliament, 1866, and Second Clerk Assistant and Clerk Assistant of the House of Commons, 1868 and 1870. In 1886, on the death of Sir Thomas Erskine May, he was appointed Clerk to the House of Commons. He published (1869) "The House of Commons; Illustrations of its History and Practice," 1877; "The Chairman's Handbook," 1890; "Oliver Cromwell, the Protector, an appreciation;" and has contributed to the Quarterly Review articles on "Pym and Shaftesbury, Two Popish Plots" (vol. 147), "The Fall of the Monarchy of Charles I." (vol. 154), and "Cromwell," April, 1886. He married, in 1857, Grace, daughter of Richard Battley, of Reigate, Esq., and was created C.B., 1887.

PALGRAVE, Robert Harry Inglis, F.R.S., F.S.S., third son of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, was born in London in 1827; was educated at the Charterhouse, and entered at an early age in the banking-house of Gurneys & Co., of Yarmouth, of which his grandfather, Mr. Dawson Turner, F.R.S., and Mr. Brightwen, were partners. He married, 1859, S. Maria Brightwen, the niece of the last named. Mr. Palgrave has occupied himself largely and with much success in the study of economical, statistical, and banking questions. In 1870 he wrote a Prize Essay, printed in the Journal of the Royal Statistical Society, upon the "Local Taxation of Great Britain and Ireland." Since that date he has contributed many papers on banking and currency questions to the Transactions of the above society, and to those of the Bankers' Institute. He has also contributed to the Reports of the British Association, to the Bankers' Magazine, the Bankers' Almanac, &c., and for six years, dating from 1877, he edited, in part at first, afterwards solely, the Economist newspaper. In 1882 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1885 he was appointed one of the Royal Commissioners on the depression of Trade and Industry. Mr. Palgrave has also taken a leading part, as president, or otherwise, in the meetings of the section of Economic Science and Statistics of the British Association, and in the very important inquiries into the gold and paper currency questions, which have been undertaken, based partly on his investigations, and with the advantage of his combined practical and scientific knowledge, by the Bankers' Institute, and the Committee of the Association of English Country Bankers. In common with his brothers, Mr. R. H. Inglis Palgrave owes much to the training he received from his parents, his mother, Elizabeth, the daughter of Mr. D. Turner, mentioned above, possessing great accomplishments and much ability. Mr. Palgrave's only daughter, Elizabeth, is married to the Rev. Rowland V. Barker.

PALISA, Dr. J., was born on Dec. 6, 1848, at Troppau, in Silesia, and was educated first in his native town, and afterwards at Vienna University, where he devoted his attention to Mathematics and Physics, and was, in 1870, appointed Assistant Observer at the Vienna Observatory; thence in 1871 he went to the observatory at Geneva, and in 1872 he was appointed Director of the observatory at Pola, where he had a six-inch meridian circle by Troughton & Simms, and a six-inch refractor with which he discovered no fewer than twenty-eight minor planets. In 1880 he left the Pola Observatory, and was appointed First Assistant at the Imperial Observatory at Vienna, where, up to August 1890, he had discovered forty-five more minor planets, making the very large total of seventy-three. Dr. Palisa, in 1873, married Fräulein Florentine Wlaka, of Troppau.

PALLES, The Right Hon. Christopher, LL.D., a member of an old Roman Catholic family, which has been settled in Ireland since the fifteenth century, is the second son of Mr. Andrew Christopher Palles, of Mount Palles, co. Cavan, by Eleanor, eldest daughter of Mr. Matthew James Plunkett, of St. Margaret's, co. Dublin, and was born in 1831. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1852, and was called to the Irish Bar in the following year. He took the degree of LL.D. at Dublin in 1865, and was appointed Solicitor-General for Ireland under Mr. Gladstone's administration on the promotion of Mr. Dowse to the Attorney-Generalship for Ireland. On Mr. Dowse being elevated to the judicial bench in Nov. 1872, Dr. Palles succeeded to the latter office, which he held until the defeat of the Liberal party at the general election of 1874. Just before Mr. Gladstone's resignation, Dr. Palles was appointed Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, Feb. 16, 1874.

PALMER, Sir A. H., K.C.M.G., President of the Legislative Council of Queensland, was born at Armagh, Ireland, in 1819; emigrated to New South Wales in 1838, and subsequently became a farmer in Queensland. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly in 1866, and became Colonial Secretary in 1867; was Premier and Colonial Secretary from 1870 to 1875; and has been President from 1881 till the present time.

PALMER, The Rev. Charles Ferrers (Raymund), second son of Shirley Palmer, M.D. (well known as a medical writer), was born at Tamworth, Staffordshire, in 1819, and educated at the Free Grammar School of that town, and at the Queen's College of Medicine, Birmingham. He practised as a surgeon in his native town for some years, and in 1853, joining the Dominican order, took orders in 1859 in the Roman Catholic Church, which he had entered in 1842. Father Raymund Palmer is employed in antiquarian researches, chiefly relating to the history of his order in England, now being published in antiquarian journals. He has published "The History of the Town and Castle of Tamworth, in the Counties of Stafford and Warwick," in 1845; "Life of Beato Angelico da Fiesole, of the Order of Friar Preachers," a translation from the French of E. Cartier, with notes, in 1865; "The Dominican Tertiary's Guide," to which Fr. R. Rodolph Suffield also attached his name, 1866 (2nd edit., 1868); "The Life of Philip Thomas Howard, O.P., Cardinal of Norfolk, Grand Almoner to Catherine of Braganza, Queen-Consort of King Charles II., &c., with a Sketch of the Rise, Mission, and Influence of the Dominican Order, and of its Early History in England," in 1867; "The History and Antiquities of the Collegiate Church of Tamworth, in the County of Stafford," in 1871; "The History of the Baronial Family of Marmion," in 1875; "Obituary Notices of Dominicans from 1650," 1884; "The Catholic Registers of Woburn Lodge and Weybridge, and of Upton Court," privately printed in 1888 and 1889; and contributions to various periodicals, chiefly on antiquarian and historical subjects, several of which have been separately reprinted. His manuscript collection of documents concerning Tamworth, in 4 vols., is now in the British Museum: where also are reported the results of his researches in the archives of the Master-General of the Dominican Order, in 1881-82, at Rome, as far as England is concerned.

PALMER, Sir Charles Mark, Bart., M.P., Coal-owner and Shipbuilder, was born at South Shields in the year 1822, the son of Mr. George Palmer, a ship-owner and merchant of Newcastle, and was educated in the school of Dr. Bruce, the historian of the "Roman Wall." After preparing for a commercial career in France, he became a partner, first with his father, and shortly afterwards, in 1845, with Mr. John Bowes, M.P., Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Hutt, M.P., and Mr. Nicholas Wood (all since deceased) in coal mining and coke making, and extended their colliery operations from a small beginning up to a production of 1½ million tons per annum. In the year 1851 Mr. Palmer conceived the idea of cheapening the transit of coal to London and other ports by the employment of steam collier vessels, which have since completely superseded the old sailing brigs of the north of England. He established the shipbuilding yard at Jarrow on the Tyne, where the first screw collier, the John Bowes, was launched in 1852. He has since developed the Jarrow works into the gigantic concern, now Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company, Limited, which constructs an ocean steamer from the iron ore of its own Yorkshire mines, through all its processes into a complete ship. From these works the populous modern town of Jarrow originated. It obtained a charter of incorporation in 1875, Mr. Palmer being its first mayor. The Jarrow works have produced armour-plated and other vessels for H.M. Navy, and Mr. Palmer was the first to introduce rolled plates for men of war. Sir C. Palmer is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of the North Riding of Yorkshire, and of the county of Durham, is an Alderman and Magistrate of the borough of Jarrow, Lieut.-Colonel of the 1st Newcastle and Durham Engineer Volunteers, and is President of the Newcastle Chamber of Commerce. At the general election of 1874 he was returned M.P. in the Liberal interest for the Northern division of the county of Durham, which he continued to represent till the Reform Act of 1885, when on the redistribution of seats he was elected for the Jarrow division of the same county. After the dissolution of 1886 he was re-elected without opposition. He was created a baronet in 1886.

PALMER, The Ven. Edwin, D.D., is the fourth and youngest son of the late Rev. William Jocelyn Palmer, vicar of Mixbury, Oxfordshire, where he was born, July 18, 1824; and brother of Lord Selborne. From the Charterhouse he proceeded to the University of Oxford, was elected to a scholarship at Balliol College in 1841, and obtained the Hertford and Ireland University Scholarships and the Chancellor's Prize for Latin verse. He held a Fellowship at Balliol College from Nov. 29, 1845, till Sept. 19, 1867, acted as classical lecturer in the College for ten years, and as tutor for four. He was appointed Corpus Professor of the Latin Language and Literature in the University of Oxford, Feb. 26, 1870, in the room of the late Professor Conington. In Jan., 1878, he was appointed to the Archdeaconry of Oxford, rendered vacant by the death of the Ven. Charles Clerke; and in the same year (May 7) he was created D.D., and retired from the Corpus professorship of Latin.

PALMER, Edwin Mitford, C.M.G., born March 3, 1852, was educated at Lancing College, Sussex, and appointed to the Indian Financial Department in 1871. He proceeded to Egypt from India to take up the appointment of Director-General of Accounts in 1885; and was appointed Financial Adviser to H.H. the Khedeive in 1889. He was created C.M.G. and Grand Officer of the Medjidieh in 1887.

PALMIERI, Luigi, was born at Faicchio (Benevento), on April 30, 1807, and began his studies in the seminary of Cajarro. He afterwards went to Naples, where he studied philosophy and natural science. Subsequently he devoted himself to the instruction of young men, and had a private school of philosophy and physics, where he had more than four hundred students. He has been Professor of Physics in the Marine College at Naples, and afterwards in the University. In the year 1860 he had the direction of the Vesuvian Observatory. He has devoted much attention to electricity and magnetism, and for use in the Vesuvian Observatory has designed several new instruments, especially two, one for the study of the variations in the amount and kind of atmospheric electricity; another was an electrical seismograph, of which two duplicates have been purchased for use in Japan. Full details of the observations upon the volcanic phenomena of Vesuvius are given in the various reports upon the observatory, published by Professor Palmieri.

PARIS, Gaston, a very distinguished French philologist, the son of Paulin Paris, was born at Avenay, Marne, Aug. 9, 1839. He was educated at Rollin College, and at the Universities of Bonn and Göttingen, and studied the Romance languages with Professor Diez. On his return to France he entered the École des Chartes, pursuing at the same time the study of law, and took the degree of Doctor-ès-lettres in 1865. On May 12, 1876, he was elected a member of the Academy of Inscriptions in the place of Guigniaut. Among other interesting and curious works he has published "Étude sur le rôle de l'accent latin dans la langue française," 1862; "De pseudo-Turpino," 1865; "Histoire poétique de Charlemagne," 1866; "Le Petit Poucet et la Grande Ourse," 1879; "La Poésie du moyen âge, leçons et lectures," 1838, 2nd edit., 1889; "La Littérature française du moyen âge," XI-XIV., 1888, 2nd edit., 1890. He has given editions of several old French works: "La Vie de Saint Alexis," 1872 and 1889; "Les Miracles de notre Dame par personnages," 1877; "Deux rédactions du Roman des sept Sages de Rome," 1879; "La Vie de Saint Gilles," 1881; "Merlin," 1886; "Trois rédactions de l'Evangile de Nicodème," 1889. He has founded, together with Paul Meyer, the Revue

Critique, 1866, and the Romania, 1872. He was elected a member of the academies of Munich, Rome, Vienna, Turin, Berlin, &c.

PARIS (Comte de), Louis Philippe Albert d'Orléans, son of the late Duc d'Orléans, and grandson of the late Louis-Philippe, King of the French, born in Paris, Aug. 24, 1838, was only ten years of age when the revolution of Feb., 1848, broke out, and, accompanied by his heroic mother, the late Duchesse d'Orléans, he witnessed the stormy scene in the French Chambers which followed that event. He was educated at Claremont, in this country, by his mother, who died there, May 18, 1858. In the autumn of 1861 the young Comte de Paris and his brother, the Duc de Chartres, accompanied by their uncle, the Prince de Joinville, proceeded to the United States, and on arriving in Washington were cordially welcomed by the Federal Government, and by Gen. McClellan, who proposed that the young princes should serve on his staff. The two brothers entered the service with the rank of Captains of Volunteers, stipulating that they were to receive no pay, and that they should be free to resign their appointments whenever they might wish to do so. They served on Gen. McClellan's staff till the conclusion of the campaign in Virginia, and the consequent retreat of the army of the Potomac, in June, 1862, when they returned to Europe. At the close of the year 1871 the Comte de Paris was, after some delay, admitted a member of the National Assembly at Versailles, under M. Thiers, President of the French Republic; and on Dec. 22, 1872, the Assembly voted the restitution of the property of the Orleans family. On Aug. 5, 1873, the Comte de Paris had the celebrated interview at Frohsdorf with the Comte de Chambord, whom he acknowledged as the head of the Royal House of France. After the death of the Comte de Chambord (Aug. 24, 1883), the great majority of the Legitimists acknowledged the Comte de Paris as his successor. A remarkable article, entitled, "L'Allemagne et ses Tendances nouvelles," which appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes, in Aug. 1867, and attracted considerable attention, is said to have been written by the Comte de Paris. He is also the author of "Les Associations Ouvrières en Angleterre," Paris, 1869, an English translation of which, by N. J. Senior, M.A., was published the same year in London, under the title of "The Trades Unions of England;" and of "Histoire de la Guerre Civile en Amérique," vols. i. and ii., Paris, 1874. The concluding volumes of this work appeared in 1883. In 1886 the Government introduced and passed the Expulsion Bill, forbidding the soil of France to the direct heirs of families that had reigned in France. This was chiefly directed against the Comte de Paris, who accordingly, amid demonstrations of sorrow from a multitude of friends, left Tréport for England in July. The Comte de Paris married his cousin, the Princess Marie-Isabelle-Françoise d'Assise Antonia Louisa Fernanda, eldest daughter of the Duc de Montpensier, May 30, 1864, and has six children, two sons. Prince Louis Philippe Robert (born Feb. 6, 1869), and Prince Ferdinand François (born Sept. 9, 1884), and three daughters. The Comte and Comtesse celebrated their silver wedding at their seat near Tunbridge Wells in July, 1889.

PARK, Edwards Amasa, D.D., was born at Providence, Rhode Island, Dec. 29, 1808. He graduated at Brown University in 1826, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1831, and was pastor of a Congregational church at Braintree, Massachusetts, 1831-34, when he became Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy and of Hebrew Literature at Amherst College. In 1836 he became Professor of Sacred Rhetoric at the Andover Theological Seminary. In 1847 he exchanged this chair for that of Christian Theology, and in 1881 was retired as Emeritus Professor. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard in 1844, and by Brown University in 1846. Dr. Park has for many years been regarded as a representative of what is styled "New England Theology." He has been one of the editors of the Bibliotheca Sacra from its establishment in 1844. Besides numerous review articles, pamphlets, memoirs, and contributions to biblical and theological lexicons and cyclopædias, he has published "Selections from German Literature," 1839; "Writings of Rev. William B. Homer," 1842; "The Theology of the Intellect and of the Feelings," 1850; "The Rise of the Edvardsonian Theory of the Atonement," 1859; "Life of Leonard Woods," 1880; and "Discourses on some Theological Doctrines as related to the Religious Character," 1885; and in connection with others "The Sabbath Hymn-Book," 1858; "Hymns and Choirs," 1861.

PARKE, Thomas Heazle, Surgeon, Hon. D.C.L. Durh., L.K.Q.C.P., Hon. F.R.C.S.I., &c., one of Stanley's companions, is the son of William Parke, Esq., J.P. He was born on Nov. 27, 1857, at Clogher House, Drumona, co. Roscommon, Ireland, and educated in Dublin. He is descended from an old Kent family, a member of which went over to Ireland as a Colonel in the English army sent, about four centuries ago, for the subjugation of the O'Rourkes, chieftains of great power and extensive territorial possessions. After the conquest, the Government of the period, as a reward for victory, gave each in command grants of the O'Rourke's possessions. Colonel Parke got the manor of Newtown with the valley of Glencar, on which stood O'Rourke's castle. Surgeon Parke, the subject of this sketch, was commissioned as Surgeon in the Army Medical Staff, Feb. 5, 1881, and since then most of his time has been spent in active service abroad. He was in the Egyptian campaign in 1882, and received the Queen's Medal and the Khedive's Star; was through the cholera epidemic in 1883 in Egypt, and published a report of it. Afterwards he was in the Nile campaign for the relief of Gordon, 1884-85; was present at the battle of Abu Klea, the action of Gubat, and the attack on Matemmeh; went across the Bayuda desert in medical charge of the Naval Brigade under Lord Charles Beresford, and returned in medical charge of the Guards' Camel Corps under Lord Falmouth. He received two Clasps, "Nile" and "Abu Klea." Subsequently he crossed Africa with Stanley, 1887-8-9; received the third and fourth class Medjidieh from the Khedive, and the Brilliant Star from the Sultan of Zanzibar; the Great Gold Medal from the British Medical Association; and Medals from the Royal Geographical Societies of London and Antwerp; and was made an Honorary Fellow of the Royal Geographical Societies of Scotland and Brussels, and of the Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland. At the Lancet office in the presence of the editorial staff, a massive, chased silver salver weighing 2000z. was presented to Surgeon Parke by the editors of the Lancet. Around the central shield was engraved the following inscription: "Presented to Thomas Heazle Parke, L.K.Q.C.P., Hon. F.R.C.S.I., Army Medical Staff, &c., by the editors of the Lancet in recognition of his heroic and distinguished medical services in connection with the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition during the years 1887-90."

PARKER, Joseph, D.D., a popular Congregational preacher, born April 9, 1830, at Hexham-on-Tyne, was educated at private seminaries and University College, London. He was pastor at Banbury, 1853-58; at Manchester, 1858-69; and settled in London in 1869. He built the City Temple at a cost of £70,000. He is Chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union; Chairman of the Manchester Congregational Board; Chairman of the London Congregational Board; and Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Dr. Parker is the author of "The People's Bible" (25 vols.); "The Paraclete;" "Ecce Deus;" "Ad Clerum;" "Weden Stephen;" "Springdale Abbey;" and many other works. The Honorary Degree of D.D. was conferred on him by the University of Chicago.

PARKES, The Hon. Sir Henry, G.C.M.G., is the son of Thomas Parkes, a Warwickshire farmer, and was born at Stoneleigh, in that county, in 1815. He spent some years of his early life in South Wales, and was afterwards apprenticed to a mechanical trade in Birmingham, where he married in 1836. In 1839 he emigrated to Sydney, in Australia, and appears to have engaged in the ordinary pursuits of labour in that colony. We find him in 1848 taking an active part in the election of Mr. Robert Lowe (now Viscount Sherbrooke), as member of the local Legislature for the city of Sydney, and soon afterwards he established the Empire, a daily newspaper, which he conducted for seven years. In 1854 Mr. Parkes was elected to the Legislative Council for Sydney; and after the city was divided into separate electorates, he continued to represent the eastern division of the metropolis in parliament for several years. He accepted from the Government in 1861 the appointment of Commissioner for Emigration in England, and was in this country till the end of 1862. Soon after his return to the colony, he was re-elected to the Legislative Assembly; and in Jan., 1866, he took office as Colonial Secretary, and was the minister who passed the Public Schools Act of that year. Mr. Parkes was President of the Council of Education, created by that Act, from Jan., 1867, until Oct., 1870. In May, 1872, he was entrusted by the Governor with the formation of a ministry, and he held office as Premier from that date until Feb., 1875. Mr. Parkes received, in 1874, the Gold Medal of the Cobden Club for his services in Australia to the cause of free trade. In March, 1877, he was commissioned by the Governor of New South Wales to form an administration, and became Premier for the second time. Being defeated in the Legislative Assembly in August, he advised his Excellency, Sir Hercules Robinson, to dissolve Parliament. In Dec., 1878, Sir Henry Parkes took office as Premier for the third time. During his third tenure of office he passed a new education law, the "Public Instruction Act of 1880." In Dec., 1881, Sir Henry Parkes left New South Wales, under medical advice, on a short visit to America and Europe. On this occasion he was entertained at a banquet by the two Houses of Parliament, and also at a second banquet by the citizens of Sydney. In America he was publicly entertained in San Francisco, Boston, New York, and Washington; and in England Sir Henry Parkes received a marked welcome from all classes, and a banquet was given in his honour with the Duke of Edinburgh in the chair. Sir Henry Parkes, on his return from this visit, was everywhere welcomed with the greatest enthusiasm, no fewer than 10,000 persons meeting him at the railway station in Sydney. In Jan., 1883, the Parkes ministry was defeated and retired, having been in office a little over four years, the longest term of power of any Australian ministry. In Jan., 1887, Sir Henry Parkes formed his fourth ministry, which is still in office, he having been nearly eleven years Prime Minister of New South Wales. He is now engaged in the great work of Australian federation. In June, 1877, her Majesty conferred upon him the rank of K.C.M.G.; and in Jan., 1888, he received from her Majesty the Grand Cross of the same order. In 1882, King Humbert conferred upon him the dignity of Commander of the Crown of Italy, in recognition of his services to a large number of the Italian emigrants who went out to New Ireland, and who arrived ultimately in Sydney in a state of great distress. A volume of "Speeches on various Occasions connected with the Public Affairs of New South Wales, 1848-74, by Henry Parkes, with an Introduction by David Blair," was published at Melbourne in 1876; and a volume of his speeches on "The Federal Government of Australia" has just been issued.

PARKES, Mrs. W. B., née Amy Sedgwick, a popular actress, was born at Bristol, Oct. 27, 1835. After having passed through a training for the stage at an amateur theatre near London, she made her first public appearance in the summer of 1853, as Julia, in "The Hunchback," at the Richmond Theatre. Her performance, though not unsuccessful, did not give promise of the celebrity she afterwards attained. She returned to Bristol to accept a temporary engagement, and thence went to Cardiff, and caused so great a sensation by her Pauline in the "Lady of Lyons," that Mr. Moseley, the leader of a circuit which included the towns of Huddersfield, Halifax, and Bradford, offered her an engagement as his leading actress, which she accepted, and resigned at the end of a year. In 1855 Mr. John Knowles, the manager of the Manchester Theatre, secured her services for three seasons, and she drew crowded houses. In the summer of 1857 Mr. Buckstone engaged her for the Haymarket Theatre, where she made her appearance as Pauline, in "The Lady of Lyons," and afterwards appeared in an original part in "The Unequal Match." Miss Sedgwick has acted Lady Macbeth, Juliet, Rosalind, Ophelia, Peg Woffington, Lady Teazle, and many other characters. In 1858 she was married to W. B. Parkes, Esq., M.D., but was left a widow in 1863.

PARKINSON, Joseph Charles, born in London in 1833, obtained an appointment in Somerset House (Inland Revenue Department), in 1855, after the Civil Service Commission had been established by order in Council. He published in 1859, "Under Government," the first complete guide to the various departments of the Civil Service. This work, which ran through many editions, was followed in 1860 by a handbook of "Government Examinations." In 1864 Mr. Parkinson's abilities as a journalist were recognized by the Daily News, and for the next ten years he was one of the steadiest and most esteemed contributors to that journal, mainly on the abolition of public executions, poor-law reform, and the preservation of commons. In conjunction with the Duke of Westminster, the late Archbishop of York, the late Dr. Anstie and others, Mr. Parkinson worked by pen and speech to promote that reform in workhouse infirmaries which culminated in Mr. Gathorne Hardy's measure. In 1869 he visited Egypt as the guest of the Viceroy, and described for the Daily News the opening of the Suez Canal. He next visited India on a special mission for the telegraphic authorities, and published an account of his visit, "The Ocean Telegraph to India." Mr. Parkinson has of late years retired from journalism, and occupies himself in the direction of several well-known industrial and scientific enterprises.

PARKMAN, Francis, born in Boston, U.S., Sept. 16, 1823, is the son of the Rev. Francis Parkman, D.D., and great-grandson of Rev. Ebenezer Parkman, Minister of Westborough in the last century, and one of the most prominent men of Central Massachusetts. Francis Parkman, when a child, lived at the house of his maternal grandfather, at the edge of extensive tracts of wild land, near the town of Medford, going to school in the village and spending most of his leisure time in the woods. This probably laid the foundation of tastes which proved lasting, and perhaps he profited as much in watching birds and insects and trapping squirrels and woodchucks, as in his less congenial studies of Latin and Greek. He entered Harvard College in his 17th year, and received the degree of A.B. in 1844, followed, a few years later, by that of A.M., and more recently, by the honorary degree of LL.D., which he had before received from McGill College of Canada, and Williams College of Massachusetts. Most of his college vacations had been spent among the forests and mountains of Maine, New Hampshire, and Canada, partly from natural inclination and partly in preparation for a work which he had planned on the conflict of the English colonists of North America with the French and their Indian allies. To this task a practical knowledge of the forests and their inhabitants seemed to him indispensable. In 1846 he went to the Rocky Mountains and became domesticated among the Western Dacotah, then much less hostile to the whites than they soon afterwards became. The band in whose lodges he lived has since been exterminated in battles with the Americans. By living among them, hunting with them, etc., Mr. Parkman gained a familiarity with primitive Indian life, which could have been acquired in no other way. He soon after published in the Knickerbocker Magazine an account of this journey. It was republished in 1848 in a volume entitled "The Oregon Trail." He began the execution of his literary project by the publication of "The Conspiracy of Pontiac," in 1851. This was an account of the general uprising of the Indian tribes against the British colonies, after the conquest of Canada. Chronologically, it should have been the last, instead of the first, of his series of histories, or rather a sequel to them. The subject, however, afforded the best opportunities for the exhibition of Indian life and character, and a great mass of manuscript material, laboriously gathered during the past four or five years, was ready to his hand. "The Pioneers of France in the New World" was published in 1865; "The Jesuits in North America," in 1867; "La Salle and the Discovery of the Great West," in 1869; "The Old Régime in Canada," in 1874; "Count Frontenac and New France under Louis XIV.," in 1877; and "Montcalm and Wolfe," in 1884. Translations of these books have appeared in France and Germany. They form a connected series, in which, however, a gap remains to be filled, between "Count Frontenac" and "Montcalm and Wolfe." This missing link is now in preparation. The collection of the necessary materials involved an enormous amount of labour. The chief sources were the archives of France and England, the use of which required repeated visits to those countries. Many documents also have been obtained from the collections of societies and private persons on both sides of the Atlantic. Mr. Parkman has been, for 14 years, one of the seven members of the Corporation of Harvard University. He is Vice-President of the Massachusetts Historical Society, Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Canada, and member of most of the Historical Societies of Canada and the United States, as well as of various learned societies in England and on the Continent.

PARNELL, Charles Stewart, M.P., was born in 1846, at Avondale, co. Wicklow. He is descended from an old English family that passed over from Congleton, Cheshire, to Ireland, and many of his ancestors have played prominent parts in history. Thomas Parnell, the poet, was one of the family. Mr. Parnell's great grandfather, Sir John Parnell, held for many years the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Irish Parliament, and resigned rather than vote for the Act of Union; and Sir Henry Parnell, Sir John's son, after many years' service in the House of Commons, was raised to the peerage as Lord Congleton in 1841. Mr. Parnell, whose mother is a daughter of Admiral Charles Stewart, a celebrated American naval officer, was educated at various private schools in England, and afterwards went to Magdalen College, Cambridge. After a tour of some duration in the United States, he returned to his home in Wicklow, and was High Sheriff of the county in 1874. He made his first attempt to enter public life in the same year, contesting the county of Dublin with the late Col. Taylor on the latter's acceptance of office as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the second administration of Lord Beaconsfield. He was defeated by an overwhelming majority, but in the following year—1875—he was returned for the county of Meath, in succession to the late Mr. John

Martin. For some time he took no prominent part in the proceedings of Parliament, but during the Session of 1876 he attracted some attention by engaging in one or two prolonged and stubborn conflicts with the Government. In Feb., 1877, he made his first appearance as a legislator, introducing "The Irish Church Act Amendment Bill," the object of which was to facilitate the purchase of their holdings by the tenantry of the disestablished Irish Church; the Bill was thrown out by 150 to 110 votes. The introduction of the Prisons Bill by Sir Richard (then Mr.) Cross gave rise to the first real development of the principle of what was known to the Irish as the "active" policy, and to the English as the policy of "obstruction." The various clauses of the measure were obstinately opposed; and when attempts were made to force the bill through at a late hour, there were repeated motions for adjournment. A similar course was pursued on the Mutiny Bill, hostility being chiefly directed against the flogging clauses; and scenes of much passion and excitement frequently occurred. Mr. Courtney, Mr. E. Jenkins, and other Liberal members, were strongly opposed to the South Africa Bill, which authorised, among other things, the annexation of the Transvaal. Mr. Parnell joined in the attack upon the Government; and, on the 31st July, the House sat for 22 hours—from a quarter to four on a Tuesday till two in the afternoon of the following Wednesday. Mr. Parnell came into serious collision in the course of that Session, both with Sir Stafford Northcote, the then leader of the House of Commons, and with Mr. Butt, then leader of the Irish party. Sir Stafford Northcote moved a resolution on one occasion for Mr. Parnell's suspension, which, after varying fortunes, had finally to be abandoned, in order to give way for some New Rules against "obstruction" generally. Mr. Butt condemned the policy of Mr. Parnell, both by letters and speeches; but it soon became apparent that the action of the younger man was the more popular among the Irish people. In the beginning of 1878, Mr. Parnell, instead of Mr. Butt, was elected President of the Irish organisation in England, known as the Home Rule Confederation, and from that time forward Mr. Butt practically ceased to be the leader of the Irish party. The Sessions of 1878 and 1879 were practically a repetition of the proceedings of 1877. In 1878, a committee was appointed to discuss the best means for putting down "obstruction," and Mr. Parnell was appointed a member, and took an active part in examining the various witnesses called. The hostility of Mr. Parnell was chiefly directed in those years to the use of the lash; and finally, in 1879, he succeeded in having it abolished. At the close of the Session of 1879, Mr. Parnell entered upon a new and important epoch in his career. There had been a succession of three bad harvests in Ireland; the country was threatened with deep and wide-spread distress; and the time was ripe for starting a new movement for reform of the relations between landlord and tenant. A meeting had been held in Irishtown, co. Mayo, in the previous April, but it was not till June that Mr. Parnell formally joined the new land movement. It was on that occasion that he uttered as the keynote of the coming struggle the words, "Keep a firm grip of your homesteads." On the 21st of October following, the "Irish National Land League" was founded, and Mr. Parnell was elected the first President. The objects of the new organisation were declared to be "first, to bring about a reduction of rack-rents; secondly, to facilitate the obtaining of the ownership of the soil by the occupiers." In December of the same year, he sailed for America, in order to raise funds for the relief of the distress and for starting the new organisation; lectured in a large number of towns, before several State Legislatures, and finally before the House of Representatives at Washington. The honour of addressing the last assembly had previously been conferred upon but three persons—Lafayette, Bishop England, of Charleston, and Kossuth. Meantime, Parliament was dissolved; Mr. Parnell hurried home, took an active part in the general election, and was himself elected for three constituencies—Meath, Mayo, and Cork city; he selected the last-named constituency. At the meeting of the new Irish party after the election, he was chosen leader of the Irish party instead of Mr. Shaw, who had succeeded Mr. Butt. Immediately after the meeting of the new Parliament, Mr. Parnell called for the introduction of a measure to deal with the Irish land question; and shortly after, the Government brought in the Disturbance Bill, which, having been passed by the House of Commons, was afterwards rejected by the House of Lords. In the autumn of 1880 he took an active part in organising the Land League, which rapidly grew to be the most powerful of modern Irish movements. In November of that year, informations were laid by the Irish Attorney-General against Mr. Parnell and several other members of the Land League executive; the trial opened in Dublin on the 28th of December, and finally, after nineteen days' hearing, ended in a disagreement of the jury. In the opening of the Session of 1881, the Government brought in a Coercion Bill, and to that measure, as well as to an Arms Bill, Mr. Parnell and his colleagues offered a fierce and obstinate opposition, prolonged over seven weeks. There were many exciting and tumultuous scenes, and on the 3rd of February he and 34 of his followers were removed by the sergeant-at-arms for causing obstruction in the House of Commons. The Land Act having been passed into law, Mr. Parnell presided at a Land League Convention, at which it was resolved that the "Act should be tested" by means of certain selected cases; he was present afterwards at several large Land League demonstrations; and on the 13th October he was arrested and conveyed to Kilmainham Gaol. The Government immediately afterwards proclaimed the Land League to be an illegal association; and Mr. Parnell and his colleagues issued the "No Rent" manifesto. Mr. Parnell remained in Kilmainham Gaol till April 10, 1882, when he was released on parole in order to attend the funeral of a relative. On May 2 following, he was formally released, as well as his colleagues, Mr. John Dillon, M.P., and Mr. O'Kelly, M.P. Then followed the resignation of Mr. Forster and Lord Cowper, the murders in the Phoenix Park, and the stormy debates on the Crimes Bill. The freedom of the city had been voted to Mr. Parnell during his imprisonment by Dublin and other places, and on Jan. 3, 1882, he and Mr. Dillon attended in the City Hall, Dublin, to receive the honour. In the session of 1882 he took an active part in procuring the passing of the Arrears Act, and of the Tramways and Labourers Acts in the session of 1883. A national subscription for Mr. Parnell was started in the spring of 1883, and a sum of £35,000 is said to have been raised among the Irish at home and in America, and presented to him. The Land League was revived under the name of the National League, and Mr. Parnell took his place at its head. He inspired all the policy of the Irish parliamentary party during the sessions of 1884 and 1885; and on the dissolution, when the Irish people first voted on a general household suffrage, he nominated every Nationalist candidate, and came back to Westminster with 85 followers. It was to meet this new situation that Mr. Gladstone proposed Home Rule, in which, of course, he was supported by Mr. Parnell and the whole strength of his party.

After the defeat and the new elections, Mr. Parnell proposed a Bill to suspend evictions, and practically to reduce rent by one-half. The Bill did not pass. The "Parnell Commission" was instituted to inquire into certain allegations contained in a pamphlet entitled "Parnellism and Crime," published at the Times office, and charging Mr. Parnell and others with conspiracy and organisation having for its object the separation of Ireland from England as a nation. Letters, in fac-simile, purporting to have been written by Mr. Parnell, and proving his complicity in crime, were given in the pamphlet, and denounced by Mr. Parnell as forgeries; and such they proved to be. They were the work of a villain, named Pigott, who had sold them to the Times, and who, on the discovery of his crime, fled to Spain and there committed suicide. The Commission sat 128 days, and examined nearly 500 witnesses. It was followed by an action for libel, brought by Mr. Parnell against the Times, and resulted in its having to pay Mr. Parnell £5,000 damages. In July, 1889, he was presented with the Freedom of Edinburgh. But his triumphs came to an end in 1890, when in open court he was convicted of having committed adultery with the wife of his friend, Captain O'Shea. This roused the indignation of the majority of his followers; and they refused to acknowledge as leader a man who was so devoid of honour. The protest against him was signed by four Archbishops and eighteen Bishops of the Romish Church.

PARR, Mrs. Louisa, was born in London, but spent the years of her early life in Cornwall, that furthestmost spur of our island, where the land seems to grow fairer as it grows less. Her first venture into print was made in 1868, when a short story appeared under her name in Good Words, entitled, "How it all Happened." It was a slight story, but most gracefully told, and it at once attracted so much attention, that versions of it were published in several foreign languages, and it was reproduced in the Journal des Débats, notwithstanding the editor's general rule against the acceptance of translations. Upon her marriage, which took place in 1869, Mrs. Parr came to live in London, and the scene of her principal literary labours has been the charming house in Kensington, where she has ever since resided. "Dorothy Fox," Mrs. Parr's first three-volume novel, was published in 1870. This book gave a pleasing glimpse of Quaker life, and at once delighted the public with its well-drawn characters and bright, natural humour. In the United States it was as well received as in England, in proof of which it may be mentioned that an American publisher paid £300 for the advance sheets of her next story, "The Prescotts." A first collection of short stories was published in 1871, bearing the title of her first sketch "How it all Happened;" this was followed in 1874 by another series in two volumes called "The Gosau Smithy," which attracted some appreciative comments from the Spectator. "Adam and Eve," which came out at first as a serial, and was published in book form in 1880, marked an important advance on all previous efforts. A comparison between this work and "Dorothy Fox," its predecessor by ten years, shows at once how greatly Mrs. Parr's skill had ripened and matured in the interval. In "Adam and Eve," all trace of amateurishness had disappeared, and Mrs. Parr had become thoroughly mistress of her art. Every inch of the country round Polperro, where her story was laid, was evidently known to her. With a few touches and a very little insistence she brings before us the wild, exciting life of the Cornish smuggler at the beginning of this century, and the very breath of the briny sea seems to linger in her pages. "Robin" appeared in 1882; and "Loyalty George," her last novel, and, in the opinion of many, her masterpiece, in 1888.

PARRY, Charles Hubert Hastings, M.A., Mus. Doc. Oxford, Honorary Mus. Doc. Cambridge, Professor of Musical History and Composition at the Royal College of Music (1883), Choragus of Oxford University (1884), is the son of T. Gambier Parry, of Highnam Court, in Gloucestershire, and was born at Bourne-mouth, Feb. 27, 1848. He went to Eton in 1861, working at harmony, &c., with Sir George Elvey, organist at Windsor, and made sufficient progress to pass the examination for the musical bachelor's degree at Oxford before leaving the school. He proceeded to Oxford in 1866, and in 1870 took a second class in Law and History. At intervals he worked at music, with Sir William Sterndale Bennett first, then with Sir G. A. Macfarren, and began to contribute to Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music." In 1873 he gave up business and devoted himself entirely to music. Amongst Mr. Parry's later compositions are "Studies of Great Composers" (Routledge); "Duo," in E minor, for two pianofortes; Fantasia-Sonata for pianoforte and violin; Sonata in A for pianoforte and violoncello; Trios for pianoforte and strings; Quartet; String Quartet in G, and String Quintet in E flat; Fantasia and Fugue for organ; Pianoforte Concerto; Variations on an original theme for pianoforte; Overture, "Guillem de Cabestanh;" Four Symphonies, and a Symphonic Suite; "Scenes from Shelley's Prometheus Unbound" (Gloucester Festival, 1880); "Music to the Birds of Aristophanes" (Cambridge, 1884); Ode for chorus and orchestra, "The glories of our blood and state;" an opera, "Lancelot and Guinevere;" Ode for eight-part chorus and orchestra, "Blest Pair of Sirens;" Oratorio, "Judith" (Birmingham Festival, 1888); "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day" (Leeds Festival, 1889), &c. In 1872 he married Lady Maude Herbert, with whose family he had been intimate since boyhood.

PARSONS, Alfred William, R.I., landscape painter, son of Joshua Parsons, M.R.C.S., was born at Beckington, in Somersetshire, Dec. 2, 1847, and educated at private schools. In 1865 he became a clerk in the Savings Bank Department of the General Post Office, drawing in the evening at Heatherley's and the South Kensington Art Schools. In 1867 he left the civil service, and returned to Somersetshire and studied painting, working from nature, without masters. He was elected a member of the committee of the General Exhibition of Water-colour Drawings in 1879. On the dissolution of that Society, he, with the other members of the committee, joined the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours. His first picture exhibited in the Royal Academy was in 1871; his principal exhibited works since then have been "Fallen," Royal Academy, 1878; "The Ending of Summer," Royal Academy, 1879; "The Gathering Swallows," Grosvenor Gallery, 1880; "The Road to the Farm," Royal Academy, 1881; "The First Frost," Royal Academy, 1883; which afterwards obtained a "mention honorable" in the Paris Salon. "The Gladness of the May," Grosvenor Gallery, 1883; "After Work," Royal Academy, 1884; "Meadows by the Avon," Grosvenor Gallery, 1884; "In a Cider Country," Grosvenor Gallery, 1886 (engraved in mezzotint by F. Short), and a series of water-colour drawings illustrating the scenery of the Warwickshire Avon, which were exhibited by the Fine Art Society in the spring of 1885; "When Nature painted all Things Gay," exhibited in the Royal Academy, 1887, and purchased by the Council under the terms of the Chantrey bequest. Mr. Parsons received a Gold Medal for Water-colour, and Silver Medal for Oil painting, awarded to pictures ex-

PARTON, James, was born at Canterbury, England, Feb. 9, 1822, and was taken to America when a child. He received a classical education, and at the age of nineteen was teacher in an academy at White Plains, N.Y., and subsequently taught in Philadelphia and New York. He afterwards became a journalist and magazine writer, and has written many books, mostly of an historical character. Of these the principal are: "Life of Horace Greeley," 1855; "Humorous Poetry of the English Language," 1856; "Life and Times of Aaron Burr," 1858; "Life of Andrew Jackson," 1860; "General Butler in New Orleans," 1863 (new edit. 1882); "Life and Times of Benjamin Franklin," 1864; "Famous Americans," 1867; "The People's Book of Biography," 1868; "Smoking and Drinking," 1868; "Topics of the Time," and "Triumphs of Enterprise," 1871; "Words of Washington," 1872; "Life of Thomas Jefferson," 1874; "Caricature in all Times and Lands," 1878; "Life of Voltaire," 2 vols., 1881; "Captains of Industry," 1884; and he has edited "Some Noted Princes," 1885. In 1856 he married the well-known authoress, "Fanny Fern." He resided in New York until 1875, when he removed to Newburyport, Massachusetts, where he now lives.

PASTEUR, Louis, chemist, born at Dôle, Jura, Dec. 27, 1822, entered the University in 1840, became a supernumerary Master of Studies at the College of Besançon, was received as a pupil in the École Normale in 1843, took the degree of Doctor in 1847, and was appointed Professor of Physic at the Faculty of Sciences, Strasburg, in 1848. At the end of 1854 he was intrusted, as Dean, with the organization of the newly created Faculty of Sciences at Lille, and in 1857 returned to Paris, and undertook the "scientific direction" of the École Normale. In Dec., 1863, he was appointed Professor of Geology, Physics, and Chemistry at the École des Beaux-Arts, and was elected a member of the Institute. The Royal Society of London, in 1856, awarded M. Pasteur the Rumford Medal for his researches relative to the polarization of light, &c. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour Aug. 12, 1853, was promoted to be an officer of that Order in 1863, and a commander in 1868. In 1869 he was elected one of the fifty foreign members of the Royal Society of London. M. Pasteur has written numerous works relating to chemistry, which have been favourably received, and for which, in 1861, he obtained the Jecker prize. His contributions have appeared in the "Recueil des Savants étrangers," and the "Annales de Chimie et de Physique," and he published in 1863, in a separate form, a work entitled "Nouvel Exemple de Fermentation déterminé par des Animalcules infusoires pouvant vivre sans Oxygène libre." In 1874 the National Assembly accorded to M. Pasteur, as a reward, chiefly for his investigations on fermentation, a life annuity of 12,000 francs. He was raised to the rank of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, Oct. 24, 1878. His reception into the French Academy took place April 27, 1882, when he delivered a panegyric on M. Littré, to whose chair he had succeeded. In the same year the council of the Society of Arts awarded the Albert Medal of the society to M. Pasteur for his researches in connection with fermentation, the preservation of wines, and the propagation of zymotic diseases in silkworms and domestic animals. Of late years M. Pasteur has devoted himself to the study of inoculation for diseases other than small-pox, and has achieved some very remarkable results in the prevention of hydrophobia; patients from all parts of Europe, and even from America, travel to Paris to put themselves under his care. Large subscriptions have been raised in France to form an "Institut Pasteur," where the methods of the great discoverer may be practised and taught. On July 1, 1889, a meeting was convened at the Mansion House for the purpose of hearing statements by Sir James Paget and others, in favour of establishing a Pasteur Institute in England. The Prince of Wales contributed 100 guineas towards that object.

PATER, Walter, was born in London, Aug. 4, 1839, and educated at the King's School, Canterbury; he entered the University of Oxford, at Queen's College, in 1858; took B.A. degree (2nd class in Classics) in 1862; was elected to an open Fellowship at Brasenose, in which college he has since held various offices, and took the degree of M.A. in 1865. His first contribution to literature was an essay on the Writings of Coleridge in the Westminster Review, Jan., 1866. In 1873 he published "The Renaissance," a series of studies in art and literature, 3rd edition, 1888. In 1885 appeared "Marius the Epicurean: His Sensations and Ideas," 2nd editions, for England and America, were printed in the same year. In 1887 he published "Imaginary Portraits," and in 1889, "Appreciations; with an Essay on Style," 2nd edition, 1890.

PATEY, Madame Janet Monach, née Whytock, an eminent contralto singer, was born in London in 1842, and made her début at Birmingham, and subsequently joined Henry Leslie's choir. In 1867 she sang at the Worcester Festival; and in 1871 made a professional tour through the United States. In 1875 she was presented with a commemoration Medal by the directors of the Paris Conservatoire for her admirable rendering of "Oh, Rest in the Lord." She visited Australia in 1890; and was married to Mr. John George Patey, an opera singer of considerable eminence, in 1866.

PATMORE, Coventry Kearsley Deighton, born at Woodford, Essex, July 23, 1823, is the son of the late P. G. Patmore, author of "Literary Reminiscences." In 1846, he was appointed one of the Assistant Librarians of the British Museum, but he ceased to be connected with that institution about 1868. Mr. Patmore, who made his first appearance as an author with a volume of Poems in 1844, has written "Tamerton Church Tower, and other Poems," published in 1853; an elaborate domestic poem, "The Angel in the House," in four parts—the Betrothal, the Espousal, Faithful for Ever, and the Victories of Love, in 1854-62; and a selection entitled "The Children's Garland," in 1862; "The Unknown Eros," 1877, a memoir of Barry Cornwall; and "Amelia, &c.," 1878. He has contributed to the Edinburgh and North British Reviews, and to the Pall Mall Gazette, while it was under Mr. Greenwood's editorship.

PATON, Sir Joseph Noel, R.S.A., LL.D., born at Dunfermline, Fifeshire, in 1821, was admitted a student of the Royal Academy of London in 1843, and first became known to the public by his outline etchings illustrative of Shakspeare and Shelley. His fresco of the "Spirit of Religion" gained one of the three premiums awarded at the Westminster Hall competition of 1845, and his oil-pictures of "Christ Bearing the Cross," and "Reconciliation of Oberon and Titania"—the former of colossal size, the latter small—jointly gained a prize, in the second class, of £300, in 1847. The latter picture, prior to its exhibition in London, was bought by the Royal Scottish Academy for the Scottish National Gallery, and "The Quarrel of Oberon and Titania," painted in 1849, and purchased for £700, also for the Scottish National Gallery, by the Association for the Promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland, was exhibited in the Paris Exhibition of 1855, where it received honourable mention. Amongst his numerous pictures and sketches from the works of the poets, may be mentioned "Dante meditating the Episode of Francesca," 1852; and "The Dead Lady," 1854. His large allegory, since engraved, "The Pursuit of Pleasure," 1855; "Home," which has been engraved, and of which a replica was executed by command of Her Majesty, was at the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1856; "In Memoriam," which has been engraved, and of which a photograph was executed for the Queen, 1858; and "Dawn: Luther at Erfurt," considered by many his finest work, 1861. Mr. Noel Paton executed, in the spring of 1860, a series of six pictures illustrative of the old border ballad, "The Dowie Dens of Yarrow," painted for the Association for the Promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland. It was engraved by that body for their subscribers. In 1863 he executed illustrations of "The Ancient Mariner," for the Art Union of London; and in 1866 painted "Mors Janua Vitæ" (engraved). He was appointed the Queen's Limner for Scotland in 1865, and received the honour of knighthood April 12, 1867. In the latter year appeared "A Fairy Raid," and in 1868 "Caliban listening to the Music." Of his subsequent pictures the more important are, "Faith and Reason," 1871 (engraved); "Christ and Mary at the Sepulchre," and "Oskold and the Elle-Maids," 1873; "Satan watching the Sleep of Christ," 1874; "The Man of Sorrows," 1875; "The Spirit of Twilight," and "Christ the Great Shepherd," 1876; and "The Man with the Muck-rake," 1877. He is the author of two volumes of poems, and in 1876 received from the University of Edinburgh the honorary degree of LL.D.

PATON, Waller Hugh, R.S.A., R.S.W., F.S.A. Scot., was born July 27, 1828, at Wooster's Alley, Dunfermline, Fifeshire. For several years he assisted his father, Joseph Neil Paton, a noted antiquary, in designing for table-linen, and in 1851 adopted landscape painting as a profession, but for which he never had any regular Art training. His first work was exhibited in Glasgow in 1848. He afterwards exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy, 1851, and in the Royal Academy, 1860. He was elected an Associate of the R.S.A. in 1857, and an Academician in 1865; a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland in 1869; an Honorary Member of the Liverpool Society of Water-Colour Painters in 1872; and a Member of the Royal Scottish Society of Water-Colour Painters in 1878. In Arran, 1855, he painted entirely from nature a minutely finished picture of the "Slochda-a-Chrommain" ("The Raven's Hollow"), which at once brought him into notice; but, while it had, on the one hand, many enthusiastic admirers, it called forth, on the other, much adverse criticism, Pre-Raphaelitism being at that time in its infancy, and much condemned by the opposite and more popular School. It doubtless to a certain extent revolutionised landscape painting as hitherto exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy. From that time onwards he has worked assiduously, both in oil and in water colours, and has occasionally made illustrations for books and magazines. He settled in Edinburgh in 1859; spent some time in London the following year, studying Turner's works at Kensington, and making a number of facsimile copies of these in water colours. He went to the Continent in 1861, and, on his return, painted and exhibited several Italian and German subjects, the principal being "Rome from the Pincian Hill," and "The Bridge of Boats at Cologne." In 1868 he again went abroad, visiting Carlsbad, Hamburg, Berlin, and Dresden, returning by Antwerp. He has also from time to time explored and sketched a great part of Scotland, and many districts in England and Wales. By command of the Queen he painted, in 1862, a water-colour drawing of "Holyrood Palace and Edinburgh, from the Queen's Park." He chiefly aims at depicting the peaceful and beautiful in nature, especially sunsets.

PATTERSON, The Right Rev. James Laird, Bishop of Emmaus, born in London, Nov. 6, 1822, was educated in Germany, and at Trinity College, Oxford. From 1845 to 1849 he was curate of St. Thomas's, Oxford, but in 1850 he entered the Romish Church, and for eleven years was attached to St. Mary's, Moorfields. In 1865 he was appointed Honorary Chamberlain to the Pope, and Domestic Prelate in 1872. In 1880 he was consecrated Titular Bishop of Emmaus, as an auxiliary for Westminster, and was given the rectorship of St. Mary's, Chelsea, in 1881. Mgr. Patterson is the editor of a new edition of Mr. J. F. Maguire's "Pius the Ninth," 1878.

PATTI, Adelina Maria Clorinda. See NICOLINI, MADAME.

PATTON, Francis Landey, D.D., LL.D., was born at Warwick, Bermuda, Jan. 22,

1843. His family removed to Canada while he was a boy, and he was educated at University College, Toronto; studying theology later at Knox College, Toronto, and at the Princeton (New York) Theological Seminary, from the latter of which he graduated in 1865. From 1865-67 he was pastor of the Eighty-fourth Street Church in New York; 1867-71, of the Presbyterian Church in Nyack, New York; 1871-72, of the South Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, New York; and 1874-81, of the Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church in Chicago. He edited the Interior, a denominational Chicago paper, from 1873 to 1876, and was Professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of the Northwest, Chicago, 1871-81. While at Chicago his successful prosecution of Professor David Swing for heterodoxy brought him into general prominence as a theological writer and speaker, and procured him the appointment, in 1881, to the Stuart Professorship of the Relation of Philosophy and Science to the Christian Religion, a chair especially founded for him at the Princeton Seminary. In addition to filling the duties of that department he also lectured on ethics before the College of New Jersey (to which the Seminary is attached), and in 1885 was made a Professor of the College on that subject. On the resignation of the Presidency of the College by Dr. McCosh, Dr. Patton was chosen to succeed him, and he assumed the office in June, 1888. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Hanover College, Indiana, in 1872, and that of LL.D. by Wooster University, Ohio, in 1878, and by Harvard University, in 1889. Besides his work on the Interior, he was for a number of years associate editor of both the Presbyterian Review, and the New Princeton Review, and he has been a voluminous contributor to magazines and papers. His published works include "The Inspiration of the Scriptures," 1865; "A Summary of Christian Doctrine," 1874; and "The Doctrine of a Future Retribution."

PAUNCEFOTE, Sir Julian, C.B., G.C.M.G., third son of the late Robert Pauncefote, Esq., of Preston Court, Gloucestershire, was born at Munich, Sept. 13, 1828, and educated in Paris, Geneva, and at Marlborough College. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1852, joined the Oxford circuit, and also practised as a conveyancer. He was appointed Attorney-General of Hong-Kong in May, 1865, and acted as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in 1869, and in 1872 he received the thanks of the Executive and Legislative Councils of Hong-Kong for his services to the Colony, and, in 1874, was knighted by patent. He was appointed Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands in 1873, and Assistant Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies in 1874. In 1876 he was appointed Assistant (Legal) Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. He was created a C.B. and a K.C.M.G. in 1880, and in 1882 he succeeded the late Lord Tenterden as Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In 1885 he received the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In 1888 Sir Julian succeeded Lord Sackville as British Minister at Washington.

PAYN, James, was born at Cheltenham in 1830. He was educated at Eton, Woolwich Academy, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1854. At that date he had already published a volume of verse, called "Stories from Boccaccio," and the next year he published another book of "Poems." In 1854 he began to write for the Westminster Review, and constantly contributed to Household Words, until, in 1858, he succeeded Mr. Leitch Ritchie as editor of Chambers's Journal, for which magazine he wrote exclusively for many years. In Chambers's came out his first novel, "A Family Scapegrace," and a few years afterwards, "Lost Sir Massingberd," a story which is said to have raised the circulation of the Journal by nearly 20,000. Mr. Payn's novels became afterwards very numerous, and his popularity a growing one, till he wrote "By Proxy," in which he may be said to have taken a new departure. This novel of incident in China achieved another extraordinary success. With "High Spirits," a collection of stories of a different kind, he was hardly less fortunate. In addition to his works of fiction, Mr. James Payn frequently contributes essays of a humorous type to the Nineteenth Century and the Times. A collection of such essays, from these two periodicals, was published in London under the title of "Some Private Views." His works according to the British Museum Catalogue extend to upwards of a hundred volumes. In 1882 Mr. Payn succeeded Mr. Leslie Stephen as editor of the Cornhill Magazine. Subjoined is a list of some of Mr. Payn's books: "Lost Sir Massingberd," "A Perfect Treasure," "Bentinck's Tutor," "A County Family," "At Her Mercy," "A Woman's Vengeance," "Cecil's Tryst," "The Clyffards of Clyffe," "The Family Scapegrace," "The Foster Brothers," "Found Dead,"

"The Best of Husbands," "Walter's Word," "Halves," "Carlyon's Year," "One of the Family," "Fallen Fortunes," "What He Cost Her," "Gwendoline's Harvest," "Humorous Stories," "Like Father, Like Son," "A Marine Residence," "Married Beneath Him," "Mirk Abbey," "Not Wooded, but Won," "Two Hundred Pounds Reward," "Less Black than We're Painted," "Murphy's Master," "By Proxy," "Under One Roof," "High Spirits," "A Grape from a Thorn," "For Cash Only," "Kit: a Memory," "Thicker than Water," "The Talk of the Town," "The Luck of the Darrells," "The Heir of the Ages," "A Prince of the Blood," "The Mystery of Mirbridge," "The Burnt Million," "The Word and the Will," and, in 1886, an amusing volume entitled "Some Literary Recollections."

PEACOCK, Edward, F.S.A., of Bottesford Manor, near Brigg, Lincolnshire, born at Hemsworth, Yorkshire, Dec. 22, 1831, was educated by private tutors. He was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1857, and appointed a Justice of Peace for the Parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln, in 1869. Mr. Peacock is the author of "Ralph Skirlaugh," 3 vols., 1870; "Mabel Heron," 3 vols., 1872; "John Markenfield," 3 vols., 1874; editor of "Army List of Roundheads and Cavaliers," 1863, second edition, enlarged, 1874; "English Church Furniture at the Period of the Reformation: a list of goods destroyed in Lincolnshire Churches," 1866; "Instructions for Parish Priests, by John Myrc" (Early Eng. Text Soc.), 1868; "A List of the Roman Catholics in the County of York, in 1604," 1872; "France, the Empire and Civilisation," 1873—published without the author's name; "A Glossary of Words used in the Wapentakes of Manley and Corringham, Lincolnshire" (English Dialect Soc.), 1877; second edit., much enlarged, 2 vols., 1889; "Index to English-speaking Students who have Graduated at Leyden University" (Index Soc.), 1883; "The Monckton Papers" (Philobiblon Society), 1885; and many papers in The Archaeologia, and other antiquarian journals.

PEARS, Edwin, was born in 1835, at York. He graduated in the University of London, being first in honours, Roman Law, and Jurisprudence, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1870. He was General Secretary of the Social Science Association from 1868 to 1873, and Secretary to the International Prison Congress of 1872. In the Transactions of the former society he published "Prisons and Reformatories at Home and Abroad." Mr. Pears is now the most prominent practitioner at the English Bar in Constantinople, whence, as Correspondent of the Daily News, he sent the letters which first called the attention of Europe to the Moslem atrocities committed in Bulgaria in May, 1876. The first two of these letters, having attracted attention in Parliament, and their statements being disputed by Mr. Disraeli, were published in the first important blue-book on the Eastern Question. Mr. Pears is the first newspaper correspondent who took up the ground that the interest of England in the Ottoman Empire will be best forwarded by helping the Christian races as representing the progressive element of the empire, rather than the Turks, whom he regards as doomed, from natural causes, to disappear as a ruling race, and as being able to contribute nothing of value towards European civilization.

PEARSE, The Rev. Mark Guy, a celebrated Wesleyan minister and author, was born at Cranborne in 1842, but his early life was spent in Cornwall. In 1861 he became a student at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but subsequently entered the Wesleyan ministry, and was stationed at Leeds, Brixton, Ipswich, Bedford, High-bury, Westminster, and is now, jointly with the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, conducting the London Wesleyan Mission at St. James's Hall. As a preacher and lecturer he has few equals; and for quiet humour, deep insight into character, and loving homely sympathy with the religious poor, his incomparable little book, "Dan'l Quorn and his Religious Notions," has never been surpassed. It was published in 1874, and has passed through many editions.

PEARSON, Sir Charles John, Solicitor-General for Scotland, is the second son of Charles Pearson, C.A., of Edinburgh, by Margaret, daughter of John Dalziel, of Earlstoun, N.B., and was born in 1843. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy, St. Andrews University, and Corpus College, Oxon., and took his M.A. degree in 1868. He is a Member of the Faculty of Advocates in Edinburgh; was called to the Bar (Inner Temple) in 1870; was Sheriff of Chancery in Scotland in 1885-88; Procurator for the Church of Scotland, 1886-90; Sheriff of Renfrew and Bute, 1888; Sheriff of Perthshire in 1889; Solicitor-General for Scotland, and M.P. for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews, 1890. He received the honour of knighthood in 1887; and married, in 1873, Elizabeth, daughter of M. G. Hewat, Esq., of Norwood.

PEARSON, John Loughborough, R.A., architect, is descended from old Durham families, possessors of property in that county. His grandfather was a leading solicitor in the city of Durham; and his father a painter. At the age of fourteen he was placed in the office of Mr. Ignatius Bonomi, architect at Durham, with whom he continued for some years as a pupil and as an assistant; afterwards he came to London. In 1850 he was engaged in building, for the late Archdeacon Bentinck, Holy Trinity Church in Westminster, at the foot of Vauxhall Bridge, a work which attracted the admiration of the late Sir Charles Barry, of Augustus Welby Pugin, Sir Gilbert Scott, Mr. Salvin and other leading men. In 1860 he built the Schools of St. Peter's, Vauxhall, for Canon Gregory, of which the Prince of Wales laid the foundation stone, it being the first occasion the Prince performed this ceremony. In the following year the church was begun, a building remarkable in many ways, but principally by being groined throughout with stone and brick, the first modern instance of this treatment. Mr. Pearson is the architect of Lincoln Cathedral, an appointment he has now held for eighteen years; of the new Truro Cathedral, the Choir and Transept of which are completed; of Peterborough Cathedral, and of Westminster Abbey, since Sir Gilbert Scott's death. He has also restored the buildings on the west side of Westminster Hall. Mr. Pearson has been for many years a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and one of the Consulting Architects of the Incorporated Church Building Society, and since 1853 he has been a Fellow of the Royal Antiquarian Society. In 1874 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1880 was elected a full member. He obtained the Gold Medal at the Paris Exhibition, and was also made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. He has also received the Queen's Gold Medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects. He is the Architect for St. George's Chapel, Windsor; Bristol Cathedral; Exeter Cathedral; and for Rochester Cathedral. He has also made a design for the Cathedral at Brisbane. The new building lately added to the University Library at Cambridge also is his; and he is about adding considerably to Sidney Sussex College.

PEASE, Sir Joseph Whitwell, Bart., son of the late Joseph Pease, a well-known coal and ironstone mine owner of Darlington, by Emma, daughter of the late Joseph Gurney of Norwich, was born in 1828, and privately educated. In 1865 he was elected in the Liberal interest for South Durham, which constituency he represented until 1885, when he was elected for the Barnard Castle Division of the county. In 1886 he was re-elected without a contest. He is a J.P. for the County of Durham, and D.L. and J.P. for the North Riding of Yorkshire; Deputy-Chairman of the North-Eastern Railway, and the owner of coal and ironstone mines in Durham and Yorkshire. He was created a baronet in 1882. Sir Joseph is a member of the Society of Friends, and President of the Peace and Anti-Opium Societies. In Parliament he has rendered valuable services in all questions connected with trade and commerce, and especially with the coal and iron industries of the North of England. Though a follower of Mr. Gladstone, he spoke against the Berber-Suakim Railway scheme; and in a very short time facts gave a melancholy justification of his common-sense prophecies. In 1854 he married Mary, daughter of the late Alfred Fox, Esq., of Falmouth. His eldest son, Mr. Alfred E. Pease, is Liberal member for the city of York.

Zealand and Australia, and the South Seas, and wrote, conjointly with Dr. George Kingsley, "South Sea Bubbles," 1871, and "Roots," in 1872, besides various articles. From 1874-5, in Mr. Disraeli's Government, he was Under-Secretary of State for War, but was obliged to resign on account of ill-health. Since that time he has not taken a prominent part in politics.

PENDER, Sir John, K.C.M.G., J.P., D.L., second son of the late James Pender, of Vale of Leven, Dumbartonshire, was born in 1816. Sir John had the advantage of early education, and of good Scottish parents, who passed him on expeditiously from the school of his native place in the Vale of Leven to the High School of Glasgow, where he may be said to have had a free choice of any profession or trade to which chance might lead him and to which learning was a necessary passport. While at the High School, he was observed to occupy much time in drawing, and on an occasion of free competition, submitted a design for which he was awarded a Gold Medal. On leaving school he went into the accounting branch of a factory, and in two or three years (about the time he had attained majority) he was general manager of the business. The life of Sir John divides itself from this point into two parts—(1) as a merchant in Glasgow and Manchester, and (2) as introducer, executant, and extender of submarine and sub-oceanic telegraphy. In Manchester Sir John rose to the front rank in the export trade of that vast emporium of manufacture, and there laid the foundation of his still more conspicuous course in telegraphy; not only as regards ample personal means for a work that was to task the richest men, but also a thorough commercial knowledge of India, China, America and the colonies, combined with a lofty faith in the possibilities of British enterprise. When the immense Atlantic project was undertaken he was one of the 345 who contributed £1,000 each to let the experiment be tried. His name appears from that time in the list of directors of the Atlantic Company over seven or eight years, during which cable after cable had failed. The final crisis of Atlantic prospects came when the ship "Great Eastern" steamed out, with capacity far greater than any other ship before or since, and a cable more nearly perfect than had before been made; yet the great ship parted with this precious cargo in mid-ocean, and the Atlantic Company was financially ruined. Its appeals to the public for subscription of capital had hitherto fallen flat; they were now utterly useless. But not so thought Sir John Pender, and others like him, as to the attainable undertaking, and the Anglo-American Company (of £600,000) was then formed to lay a new cable and to recover the former if possible. Negotiations with Glass, Elliot and Company, and the Gutta Percha Company, therefore had been under arrangement. But difficulties arose between the two manufacturing companies. The Gutta Percha Company found that it was surrendering its accustomed business in favour of a supreme object, and in the failure of that one purpose might lose all. It was here that the genius of Sir John Pender rose to heroism. Delay would have been fatal to an Atlantic cable, and to all the capital, approaching two millions, that had been expended. The Gutta Percha Company were asked by Sir John what amount of guarantee they required. A quarter of a million sterling was the answer. "Will you take my personal guarantee for that amount?" "Yes." "Well, you have it." And in a few weeks more, Glass, Elliot and Company and the Gutta Percha Company were formed into the Cable Construction and Maintenance Company, with Sir John as chairman. The cable was not only successful—luckily for Sir John and the world—but the same expedition that laid it, recovered the one that had been lost; and the two companies, Atlantic and Anglo-American, were brought back successfully to life and land. This result would have been enough to crown the adventures of any one man but Sir John had no sooner seen the Atlantic cables established than he proceeded to work indefatigably in the organisation and development of the Mediterranean, Eastern (Indian and China), Australian, South African, and direct African cables—in short a world system, of which the American is now but a segment. Sir John is now at the head of the Eastern, the Eastern Extension, the Cap; and other systems outside the Atlantic—in fact, he is virtually the dominant spirit of all submarine telegraphy. He is chairman of the Direct Company, having a cable across the Atlantic also; and his influence is present in all direction, where submarine telegraphy is active, and in these days it is difficult to say where it is not active. Sir John Pender was a merchant in London, Glasgow and Manchester; he is a D.L. for Lancashire and Middlesex; a J.P. for Middlesex, Manchester, Lancashire, Denbighshire and Argyllshire. He published in 1869 "Statistics of the Trade of the United Kingdom with Foreign Countries from 1840;" was member for Totnes 1862-66, and was first returned for Wick Burghs in 1872, which he represented in three Parliaments. Sir John has shown great interest in technical education, and gives a Medal annually to be competed for by the students at the College of Science, Glasgow. On the occasion of quite a recent visit to Constantinople, Sir John Pender was sent for by the Sultan, and, in recognition of the great part he had played in connection with submarine telegraphy, his Imperial Majesty presented Sir John with the Grand Cordon of the Medjidieh. This is the highest honour the Sultan can grant to an alien. Sir John, years ago, was the recipient of the Knight-Commandership of the St. Saviour of Greece, and has also the Order of the Rose of Portugal. He is also Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Hemarried, first, 1840, Marion, daughter of Jas. Cearn, Esq.; second, Emma, daughter of the late Henry Denison, Esq., of Daybrook, Notts.

PENGELLY, William, F.R.S., F.G.S., was born at East Looe, in Cornwall, Jan. 12, 1812. He is the author of several memoirs and papers on Rainfall, the Devonian and Triassic rocks of Devonshire, the ossiferous caverns and the submerged forests of the same county, and (conjointly with Dr. Heer, of Zürich) of a monograph on "The Lignite Formation of Bovey Tracey, Devonshire," published in 1863. He collected and arranged the Devonian Fossils, which, under the name of the "Pengelly Collection," were lodged in the Oxford University Museum by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, in connection with the Burdett-Coutts Geological Scholarships. In 1837 Mr. Pengelly re-established the Torquay Mechanics' Institute; in 1844 he originated the Torquay Natural History Society, and in 1862 the Devonshire Association for the Advancement of Science, Literature, and Art. He has always taken an active part in the management of these institutions. On Jan. 8, 1874, he was elected Membre titulaire de la Société d'Anthropologie de Paris.

PENNELL, Henry Cholmondeley, eldest son of Sir Charles Henry Pennell, was born in 1838. He entered the public service about 1853, and after serving in various departments of the Admiralty, Whitehall, was appointed one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Fisheries in 1866. In Jan., 1875, he was selected by the English Government, at the request of the Khedive of Egypt, to initiate and assist in carrying out various important commercial reforms, and was afterwards nominated Director-General of Commerce for the Interior. Mr. Pennell made his first mark in literature in "Puck on Pegasus," 1861—a book which attracted considerable notice, and has since gone through many editions. His other poetical works are "Crescent," 1866; "Modern Babylon," 1873; "The Muses of Mayfair," 1874; "Pegasus Re-saddled," 1877 (the two last-named subsequently formed two of the volumes of "The Mayfair Library;" and "From Grave to Gay," 1885. During 1864-66 he edited the Fisherman's Magazine and Review, and afterwards the Angling Department of the Sporting Gazette, whilst contributing to the literature of angling and ichthyology a number of very successful works, of which the most important are: "The Angler-Naturalist," 1864 (2 editions); "The Book of the Pike," 1866 (4 editions); the "Modern Practical Angler," 1873 (5 editions); "The Badminton Library of Sport," 1885; "Salmon and Trout" (6 editions); "Pike and other Course Fish" (5 editions); "The Sporting Fish of Great Britain," 1886; "Modern Improvements in Fishing Tackle and Fish-hooks," 1887. Of this author's less known contributions to angling and ichthyology, may be instanced: "How to Spin for Pike," 1862; "Fishing Gossip," 1867; "Oyster Legislation," 1868; "The Oyster and Mussel Fisheries of France," 1868; "Oyster Fisheries and Legislation, a reprint of Letters to the Times," 1875; also, in 1875, a series of angling manuals in a popular form, viz: "Fly-fishing and Worm-fishing for Salmon, Trout, and Grayling;" "Float Fishing;" "Trolling for Pike, Salmon, and Trout;" these have since passed through numerous editions. Mr. Pennell has contributed to Punch, the Athenæum, the Field, Fishing Gazette, &c., and more recently to Temple Bar, Longman's Magazine and other periodicals.

PENROSE, F. C., was born at Bracebridge Vicarage, near Lincoln, in Oct., 1817. His father was the Rev. John Penrose, formerly of Corpus College, Oxford, and his mother was a daughter of the Rev. Edmund Cartwright, D.D., F.R.S. After four years at Bedford Grammar School, he entered the foundation at Winchester College. On leaving Winchester, he became a pupil of Edward Blore, architect; and afterwards entered Magdalene College, Cambridge, and graduated there in 1842. For three years he held the appointment of Traveling Bachelor to the University of Cambridge. In 1851 he brought out, for the Society of Dilettanti, a work entitled "The Principles of Athenian Architecture." In the following year he was appointed Surveyor of the Fabric to St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. Penrose published, in 1869, a work named "A Method of Predicting Occultations of Stars and Solar Eclipses by Graphical Construction." The Royal Gold Medal of the Institute of British Architects was presented to him in 1883. In 1885 he was elected an Honorary Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge, and, in 1886, was appointed Director of the British Archaeological School at Athens.

PENZANCE (Lord), The Right Hon. James Plai tted Wilde, P.C., 1st Baron, born in London, July 12, 1816, is the fourth son of the late Edward Archer Wilde, Esq., and nephew of the late Lord Truro. He received his education at Winchester College, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1838, and M.A. in 1842. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1839, and devoted his attention to mercantile and marine law, and went the Northern Circuit. He was appointed Junior Counsel to the excise and Customs in 1840, Queen's Counsel in 1855, Counsel to the Duchy of Lancaster in 1859, and a Baron of the Exchequer in April, 1860, when he received the honour of knighthood. In 1863 he succeeded Sir Creswell Creswell as Judge of the Court of Probate, and Judge Ordinary of the Divorce Court, appointments which he retained until 1872, when he resigned owing to ill-health. He was sworn a Privy Councillor in July, 1864, and created a peer of the United Kingdom April 6, 1869, since which time he has sat as a member of the Final Court of Appeal in the House of Lords. In June, 1875, he was appointed Judge under the Public Worship Regulation Act (Dean of Arches), and Judge of the Provincial Courts of Canterbury and York. He unsuccessfully contested Leicester in the Liberal interest in 1852, and Peterborough in 1857. He was a Member of the Commission appointed to consider the feasibility of forming a digest of the Common Law which he had shortly before advocated in an address delivered at the meeting of the Social Science Congress at York. He was a Member of the Commission of the Marriage Laws; a Member of the Judicature Commission and took a leading part in opposing the changes which aimed at a fusion of Law and Equity and which were afterwards carried out in the destruction of the old Common Law Courts. He was also a Member of the Ecclesiastical Courts Commission. Upon the abolition of Purchase in the Army, he was a Member of a Commission appointed to consider the claims of certain of the Purchase Officers, and shortly afterwards he was appointed Chairman of the Commission on Retirement and Promotion in the Army, and prepared the Report which was afterwards in part carried out by Royal Warrant. He was Chairman of the Commission appointed to report on the condition of Wellington College. He was also Chairman and drew the Report of the Commission which sat to inquire into the practices of the Stock Exchange. When Mr. Peel was elected Speaker of the House of Commons he took his place as Chairman of a Departmental Committee appointed by the War Office to consider the position of Engineer Officers in India. He took a leading part, in conjunction with the late Lord Kedesdale, in opposing the abolition of the judicial functions of the House of Lords, an opposition which resulted in Lord Cairns withdrawing the Bill brought into the House of Lords for that purpose.

PEPOLO, Countess, née Maria Alboni, was born at Cesena, in Italy, in 1824. Her father, who held a post in the customs department, gave her a good education. Having, at an early age, given proof of possessing an exquisite taste for music and singing, she became the pupil of Rossini, and at 15 made her début at the Communal Theatre at Bologna. It was a great success, and led to her being engaged at the theatre of La Scala, at Milan, where she established her reputation so firmly that she undertook a professional tour through most of the capitals of Europe, and appeared, in 1846, at Covent Garden Theatre, London, then under the direction of Mr. Lafield. Here she presented a counter attraction to Jenny Lind at the rival house of Her Majesty's Theatre, and was at once enrolled amongst the leading singers of Europe. In 1847 she went to France, and in October gave three or four concerts at the Paris Opera, and succeeded in attaining the highest position. She accepted an engagement on her own terms from M. Vatel, the director of the Italian Opera, and played in succession the parts of Arsace in "Semiramide;" of Malcolm in "Donna del Lago;" and of Orsinia in "Lucrezia Borgia;" besides appearing in "Cenerentola," "Il Barbiere," and other pieces. Madame Alboni has visited America and other countries, in all which she has experienced an enthusiastic reception, and has appeared during provincial tours in Dublin, Edinburgh, Birmingham, Manchester, and most of the larger cities of the three kingdoms. During the last few seasons of her professional career Madame Alboni was engaged at Her Majesty's Theatre, and there was scarcely an opera of high merit in which she did not appear. Madame Alboni's celebrity as a lyric artiste was chiefly owing to the power, fine quality, flexibility, and compass of her rich contralto voice, which ranged as high as that of a mezzo-soprano; and her florid style of singing was rendered the more effective by her vivacity and grace. Some years since this lady became the wife of Count Pepolo, of the Roman States, though she retained upon the stage to the last that maiden name under which she first became a favourite, and she retired from public life in 1863.

PEPPER, John Henry, born at Westminster, June 17, 1821, was one of the eleven children of Charles Bailey Pepper and Anne his wife. He was educated at Loughborough House, Brixton, and King's College School, Strand. In 1840 he was Assistant Chemical Lecturer at the Granger School of Medicine. From May 24 to June 25, 1847, he gave his first lectures at the Royal Polytechnic Institution; and in 1848 he was finally appointed Analytical Chemist and Lecturer on Chemistry at the Royal Polytechnic. He is the author of the "Playbook of Science;" "Playbook of Metals;" "Cyclopædic Science Simplified;" "The True History of the Ghost," besides numerous articles in boys' books. He gave scientific evidence at many trials, but declined to act for Palmer when tried for poisoning his friend with strychnine. He improved Dirck's rough model, and rendered the exhibit of the Ghost a practical thing, which could be shown in any hall or theatre. The exhibit, during the first six months, realised £12,000 at the old Royal Polytechnic. He revived the Ghost illusion at the Polytechnic in Christmas 1889, after his return from Australia, where (principally in Queensland) Professor Pepper stayed ten years, and previously five years in America. He was appointed Public Analyst to the Mayor and Corporation of Brisbane, Queensland, holding the appointment in spite of annual competition for many successive years. He gave numerous courses of lectures, and was requested by the late Governor, Sir

Anthony Musgrave, to deliver a private course of lectures to himself, Lady Musgrave and family, at the School of Arts, Brisbane, where every week Professor Pepper gave a practical demonstration of Chemistry to a numerous class of pupils.

PERCIVAL, The Rev. John, Hon. LL.D., born about 1835, was educated at Oxford, where he was scholar of Queen's College from 1854 to 1858, and Fellow of the same college from 1858-62. From 1860-62 he was a Master at Rugby School, and was then appointed first Head-Master of Clifton College, a post which he most successfully filled until 1878, when he was elected President of Trinity College, Oxford. A few years later he was made a Canon of Bristol. He has published "Some Helps for School Life," sermons preached in Clifton College Chapel, and "The Connection of the Universities with the Great Towns." He was one of the originators of the University College, Bristol; and is known throughout the country, and especially in the west, for his exertions for the spread of university education among the middle classes. In 1887 Dr. Percival was appointed Head-Master of Rugby School, in succession to Dr. Jex-Blake, and resigned his Head-mastership at Trinity College, Oxford, and also the Canonry at Bristol.

PEREZ GALDÓS, Benito, a Spanish novelist, was born in 1845 at Las Palmas in the Canary Isles. As a writer of fiction he first distinguished himself by the publication of two historical romances relating to the state of Spain in 1820 and 1824, and entitled respectively "La Fontana de Oro" (Madrid, 1871), and "El Audaz." Next, in imitation of MM. Erckmann-Chatriain, he published two series of "Episodios Nacionales," the first dealing with subjects taken from the War of Independence against Napoleon, and the second describing the struggle of Spanish Liberalism against the tyranny of Ferdinand VII. These novels achieved a great success in Spain, and were also widely read in Spanish America. Among them we may mention "Baillón," 1873-75; "Napoleon en Chamartin," 1874; "Cadiz," 1874; Juan Martín el Empecinado," 1874; "La Batalla de los Arapiles," 1875; and "El Terror de 1824," Madrid, 1877. Encouraged by the continually increasing success of these productions, he composed other romances, entitled "Doña Perfecta" (translated into English in 1880); "Gloria" (translated into English by Nathan Wetherell, 2 vols., Lond., 1879); "Marianela," and

"La Familia de Leone Roch," which augmented his fame, and brought him into the foremost rank of Spanish novelists. He composed a long series of contemporary romances, entitled "La Desheredada," 1880; "El Amigo Mando," 1881; "Tormento," 1883; "Lo Prohibido," 1884; "Fortunata y Jacinta," 1886; "Mian," 1888; "La Incognita," 1890; "Prealidad," 1890. For some years past Señor Perez Galdós has been living at Madrid, working hard at literature as a profession, and figuring for a time as the head of the principal Spanish review, the Revista de España. In politics he belongs to the Liberal party.

PERKIN, William Henry, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in London on March 12, 1838. As a clever chemist and inventor he has long been noted in scientific circles; but to the world at large his title to enduring fame is based on his greatest and earliest achievement, the discovery of the first aniline colour. He was educated at the City of London School, the only school in England at that date where scientific subjects were taught. Regular courses of illustrated lectures in chemistry and physics were given there by the late Mr. Thomas Hall, B.A., one of the masters of the school. Young Perkin showed a great interest in these subjects, and in a very short time was allowed to assist in preparing the lectures. By the advice of Mr. Hall he was induced to study chemistry systematically under Dr. A. W. Hofmann, at the Royal College of Chemistry. This was in 1853, when he was only 15 years of age. Two years afterwards he acted as assistant to Dr. Hofmann in his research laboratory, and in the following March he read an account of his first research before the Chemical Society. During the Easter vacation of that year (1856), whilst conducting an investigation at home, which had for its object the artificial formation of quinine, he obtained results which led him to the discovery of the "aniline purple," or "mauve," a discovery which laid the foundation of the industry of the coal tar colours, which has now assumed such remarkable dimensions. After experimenting with this colouring matter in Messrs. Pullars' dyeworks at Perth, and being encouraged by them to follow up its manufacture, Perkin left the College of Chemistry in order to devote himself to the development of his new discovery, which was patented in 1856, he being then not more than 18 years of age. The manufacture of mauve being an entirely new industry, naturally presented many difficulties, as most of the substances required for its production were at that date known in only a few scientific laboratories, and none of the plant in ordinary use in chemical works was suitable for their production. But owing to Perkin's scientific knowledge and practical turn of mind these difficulties were overcome. In this undertaking he was associated with his father and brother, and the firm was known as Perkin and Sons. The works were erected on the Grand Junction Canal at Greenford Green, Middlesex. The new dye was successfully made in the course of the year 1857, and supplied first to the silk dyers in London, and then at Macclesfield, and some time afterwards to calico printers in Scotland and elsewhere. In 1859 the Société Industrielle of Mulhouse awarded Perkin a Silver Medal, and some time afterwards a Gold Medal for his discovery of the mauve. Besides the mauve, he discovered also several other coal-tar colouring matters; and after Graebe and Liebermann had made their celebrated discovery of the formation of alizarine from anthracene in 1868, he found two new processes by which this was rendered of practical value; and alizarine was first manufactured commercially at Greenford Green in 1869. Perkin also discovered that with artificial alizarine another colouring matter was associated, viz., anthrapurpurine, which has proved to be of great value, as it produces colours of a more scarlet shade than pure alizarine, and when mixed with the latter renders its shades more brilliant. At the end of the year 1873, Perkin retired from technical work. During the entire period in which he was occupied in carrying on the manufacture of coal-tar colours he was actively engaged in scientific research, not only in reference to this industry, but also in pure chemistry. Out of his very numerous papers the following, relating to pure chemistry, may be referred to, viz., those on the halogen derivatives of acetic and succinic acids, which resulted, among other things, in the artificial formation of glycocine, a derivative of gelatine, 1859; and tartaric acid, 1861. These were carried out in conjunction with the late Mr. B. F. Duppa, and were of special interest at that date, when but few bodies of animal or vegetable origin had been produced artificially. In 1867 he published his first papers on salicylic aldehyde, showing that this substance is not only an aldehyde but also a phenol. This was the commencement of a series of researches, which resulted in the artificial formation of coumarin (the odorous principle of the Tonka bean, sweet-scented vernal grass, &c.), and the discovery of several new bodies of this class, showing the existence of a whole series of these odoriferous substances. The further prosecution of this line of research led to the discovery of a new reaction, by which cinnamic acid could be easily obtained from benzaldehyde, by heating it with acetic anhydride, and a salt of a fatty acid; and moreover, by substituting other aromatic aldehydes, and also varying the anhydride, a large number of new acids of this class were obtained. By modifying this reaction, which is now known as "Perkin's Reaction," Dr. Caro succeeded in producing cinnamic acid technically (at the Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik), for the artificial production of indigo by the method discovered by Bayer. Perkin's later work has been on the remarkable property of substances to rotate the plane of polarization when placed in the field of a magnet (discovered by Faraday), and he has shown that this rotation varies with bodies of the homologous series in a definite manner for each addition of CH_2 , and moreover, it exhibits distinct differences between normal and isomeric compounds, and is therefore likely to be of value in determining the constitution of bodies. By this property it appears also to be possible to distinguish between bodies which, when hydrated, form definite chemical products and those which only form molecular compounds. Dr. Perkin was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1856, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1866, at the age of 28. In 1869 he became one of the honorary secretaries of the Chemical Society, a post which he held until elected President of that society in 1883; he was also President of the Society of Chemical Industry in 1884-85. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of Ph.D. of the University of Würzburg and in 1884 he was made an honorary member of the German Chemical Society. In 1879 the Royal Medal, and in 1889 the Davy Medal were awarded to him by the Royal Society; and in 1888 he received the Longstaff Medal of the Chemical Society, the two latter being given in recognition of his researches on the magnetic rotation of bodies; and in 1890 the Albert Medal from the Society of Arts was awarded him for his discoveries in colouring matters.

PEROWNE, The Right Rev. John James Stewart, D.D., Bishop of Worcester, was born March 13, 1824, at Burdwan, Bengal, of a family of French (Huguenot) extraction, that came over to this country at the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He was educated at Norwich Grammar School, and at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; was appointed Bell's University Scholar in 1842, Crosse (Theological) Scholar in 1845, Tyrerwhitt's (Hebrew) Scholar in 1848, and Member's Prizeman (Latin Essay) in 1844, 1846, and 1847. Dr. Perowne took his B.A. degree in 1845, and that of M.A. in 1848, and was elected a Fellow of his College in 1849. He was Examiner for the Classical Tripos in 1850 and 1851. He was Select Preacher at the University Church in 1853, 1861, and 1873, and frequently since; Hulsean Lecturer in 1868, and Lady Margaret's Preacher in 1874. For several years he held a Lectureship and Professorship in King's College, London, and was Assistant-Preacher at Lincoln's Inn, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Norwich. From 1862 to 1872 he was Vice-Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, and whilst there succeeded in obtaining for the College a Charter empowering it to confer the degree of B.A. He was in 1872 appointed Praelector in Theology, and in 1873 elected a Fellow of Trinity College; from 1874 to 1876 he was Cambridge Preacher at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall. He was Canon Residentiary of Llandaff from 1869 to 1878, and Hulsean Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, having been elected to this office June 17, 1875; he was also Examiner in the Text of Scripture, &c., in the University of London. He was appointed an honorary chaplain to the Queen, May 13, 1875. In Aug., 1878, he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to the deanery of Peterborough, vacated by the death of Dr. Saunders; and in 1890 was nominated Bishop of Worcester, in succession to Dr. Philpott, who resigned. Dr. Perowne was succeeded in the Deanery of Peterborough by Canon Marham Argles. Dr. Perowne was made an Hon. D.D. of the University of Edinburgh at the Tercentenary of the University in 1884, and was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1888-89. In 1888 he was made a Justice of the Peace for the Borough and Liberty of Peterborough, and in the same year was elected the first Hon. Fellow of his old College, Corpus Christi, Cambridge. Dr. Perowne is the author of "The Book of Psalms, a new Translation, with Notes, Critical and Exegetical," 2 vols., 7th edit.; Hulsean Lectures on "Immortality;" a volume of sermons; occasional sermons; "The Athanasian Creed;" "Confession in the Church of England;" "The Church, the Ministry, the Sacraments;" "Disestablishment and Disen-dowment; "The Interest of the people of England in the maintenance of the National Church;" articles in Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," Contemporary Review, Epositor, Sunday Magazine, Good Words, and an Essay on Welsh Cathedrals. He is also the editor of Al Adhrumieh, an Arabic Grammar, and of "Rogers on the Thirty-Nine Articles," of Bishop Thirlwall's Charges and Literary Remains, and of "The Cambridge Bible for Schools," and "The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools." Dr. Perowne was a member of the Company engaged on the revision of the Old Testament, and also of the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Courts. He married, in 1862, Anna Maria, third daughter of the late Humphry William Woolrych, Esq., Sergeant-at-Law, of Croxley, Hertfordshire.

PERRY, The Right Rev. Charles, D.D., formerly Canon of Llandaff, and previously Bishop of Melbourne, youngest son of the late John Perry, Esq., of Moor Hall, Essex, was born in 1870, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1828, as Senior Wrangler and first Smith's prizeman, and also first class in classics. He was afterwards elected a Fellow and subsequently became a Tutor of his College. Having married, he held a parochial cure in Cambridge for several years. He was consecrated, in 1847, to the See of Melbourne, on the subdivision of the diocese of Australia. He resigned his See in 1876. Dr. Perry was appointed Prolocutor of the Order of SS. Michael and George, May 25, 1878. In Nov. of the same year he was appointed a Canon of Llandaff Cathedral, which office he resigned in 1889, having been incapacitated for his duties by a stroke of paralysis.

PERRY, Professor John, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S., Assoc. M.I.C.E., member of the Councils of the Physical Society, and the Society of Telegraph Engineers, was born at Garvagh, a town in Ulster, in 1850. Dr. Perry attended the Model School, Belfast, and won a silver medal in natural science. He graduated in 1870 as Bachelor of Engineering, in the Queen's University of Ireland, with first honours, Gold Medal, and Peel Prize; and gained a Whitworth Scholarship in that year. The honorary degree of Master in Engineering was conferred on him by the University Senate in 1882. He was Lecturer in Physics at Clifton College, 1870-74; and there started the earliest School Physical Laboratory and Workshop, still thriving institutions. He published "Elementary Treatise on Steam," in 1873; was a secretary of the A section, British Association, 1874; and in that year became Thomson Scholar, and hon. assistant to Sir William Thomson in Glasgow. He wrote the mathematical and physical articles in Blackie's "Cyclopedia." His first scientific paper was read before the Royal Society of London, early in 1875, on "The Electric Conductivity of Glass as Dependent on Temperature." In partnership with Sir William Thomson, he read a paper on "Capillary Surfaces of Revolution," before the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In 1875 he went to Japan as joint Professor (with the Principal) of engineering in the Imperial College of Engineering, and returned to England in 1879. He gained the Silver Medal of the Society of Arts, in 1881, for his lecture on "The Future Development of Electrical Appliances," since translated into German by Professor Weinhold, and published as a separate book. He delivered a course of Cantor lectures on hydraulic machinery in 1882; and became Professor of Mechanical Engineering and applied Mathematics at the Finsbury Technical College. He is Secretary of the Physical Society. Professors Ayrton and Perry were appointed joint engineers to the Faure Accumulator Company, and remained in that capacity until the English patents were disposed of. Their more important inventions are: A dynamo machine; permanent magnet and spring ammeters and voltmeters, with and without commutators; solenoid and shielded ammeters and voltmeters; spring balances; resistances for use with strong currents varied by foot and hand; ergmeters; power-meter; ohmmeter; non-sparking key; electromotors; switches for use with accumulators, and arrangements for lighting railway trains; photometers; secohmmeters; dynamometer couplings and transmission and absorption dynamometers; an electric arc lamp; the governing of motors and dynamos; an electric tricycle; an electric railway system with friction gearing, contact boxes and locomotives, forming part of the general system belonging to the Telferage Company (Limited). Of their inventions which are not commercially valuable may be mentioned their arrangement for "Seeing by Electricity;" their multireflex arrangement exhibited in Paris; their ballistic galvanometer, and their many forms of apparatus employed in the teaching of electricity, &c. On the death of Professor Fleeming Jenkin, Professor Perry became engineer to the Telferage Company, and from July to October, 1885, superintended the erection and settling to work of the Telfer line at Glynde in Sussex. In June 1885 Professor Perry was elected to a Fellowship of the Royal Society. The Royal University of Ireland has bestowed on him its highest scientific degree, that of Doctor of Science. His amusements are novel-reading and debating at the Kensington Parliament. He delivered the "operatives" lecture of the British Association meeting of 1890 on "Spinning Tops." He is now utilizing part of the immense water power of Galway (in partnership with his brother, who is County-Surveyor there) in Electric Lighting and Transmission of Power.

PERSIA, Shah of. See NASR-ED-DEEN, CHAH EN CHAH.

PETERBOROUGH, Bishop of. Not yet appointed. THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM CONNOR MAGEE, the late Bishop, has just been made Archbishop of York.

PETHERICK, Edward Augustus, F.R.G.S., F.L.S., is the eldest son of Peter John Petherick, and grandson of Edward Jarman Petherick, R.N., of Bridgwater, and was born March 6, 1847, at Burnham, Somerset, where his father was bookseller and librarian. Emigrating to Australia with his parents in 1852 he was very early trained to official life in the municipal and other public offices at Collingwood, Victoria. In 1862 he entered the bookselling and publishing house of Mr. George Robertson, Melbourne, and in 1870 was sent to London as buyer and representative of the firm and its correspondents in Australia and New Zealand. He is the editor of the Torch and Colonial Book Circular, a guide to new books, English and American, including publications relating to or issued in the British Colonies. Mr. Petherick has done much bibliographical work, among which may be mentioned a "Bibliography of Australasia," now in course of publication, and a "Catalogue of the York Gate Library" (S. W. Silver), issued in 1882, extended and re-issued in 1886 as "An Index to the Literature of Geography and Travel in all Ages and Countries." He is also the author of a series of papers contributed to the Melbourne Review, treating especially of Discovery in the Southern Hemisphere; and has a work in the press relative to the voyages of Spanish and Portuguese navigators in the 16th century. Mr. Petherick is an authority on Colonial matters generally and has collected a large and valuable Library at his private residence Yarra Yarra, Brixton Hill, S.W. He has travelled round the world twice, passing through Canada and the United States; is an occasional lecturer, and as a non-party candidate received large and influential support at the last election of the London School Board.

PETIT, The Hon. Sir Dinshaw Manockjee, a philanthropic Parsee, was born in 1823, and is the chief representative of one of the oldest Parsee families which obtained its surname from the French sobriquet of Petit, owing to their short stature. Sir Dinshaw acquired his English education at a school kept by a pensioned sergeant named Sykes. At seventeen he entered an English firm as clerk, at the same time trading on his own account with the rest of India and with China. Some time after he had inherited about twelve lakhs on the death of his father in 1859, he took full advantage of the American civil war to invest all his capital in the extension of the cotton industry, and such were his energy and prudence that he not only increased his fortune, but succeeded in preserving it intact during the worst crisis of the share mania. He deserves all the credit for having acted as the pioneer of that milling industry which has turned Bombay into an Asiatic Lancashire. He is now the chief owner of seven of the largest mills in his Presidency, and is considered to be one of the wealthiest men in India. In 1887 he received the honour of knighthood on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee, and in the following year he was appointed member of the Viceroy's Judicial Council—a post which he recently resigned owing to the pressure of his other engagements. During the last twenty-five years Sir Dinshaw has dispensed large sums in public and private charity, principally the latter, and the amount of these benefactions is stated on trustworthy authority to exceed £200,000. One of the most notable of his latest gifts was to present the freehold of the land on which the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute has been erected. He has recently given a lakh of rupees (100,000) towards the founding of a leper hospital in Bombay. These and other benefactions have made the Parsee community of Western India famous throughout the world.

PETRE, Sir George Glynn, C.B., K.C.M.G., entered the diplomatic service in 1846, and was attached to the Legation at Frankfort. He was transferred to the Embassy in Paris March 1853, and in 1856 he went to Naples, and acted as Chargé d'Affaires from July to October, when, in conjunction with the French Minister, he broke off diplomatic relations with the King of the Two Sicilies, and was subsequently re-appointed to the Embassy in Paris. He was appointed Secretary of Legation at Hanover, June 6, 1859, Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen Dec. 1864, and assisted at the Investiture of his Majesty Christian IX. with the Order of the Garter, as a bearer of a portion of the Insignia. He was transferred to Brussels in 1866, and promoted to be Secretary of Embassy in Berlin, June 26, 1868. Mr. Petre was accredited Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, April 1, 1881; Minister Plenipotentiary to the Republic of Paraguay, March 2, 1882, and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Portugal, Jan. 16, 1884. In 1886 he was made a Companion of the Bath, and in 1890 a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

PETRIE, W. M. Flinders, Egyptologist, was born June 3, 1853. Ancestors: Paternally, Martin Petrie, Commissary and Accountant-General, and (his son) William Petrie, Commissary-General; Maternally, Captain Matthew Flinders, R.N., author of "Important Original Researches in 1801," &c.; on "Magnetism and on correcting, by fixed iron bars," "The Deviations of Ships' Compasses;" a method usually credited to more recent Scientists; and discoverer and explorer of great part of Australian coasts, with exceptional accuracy in his hydrographic surveying, inherited by his grandson, his only descendant, W. M. Flinders Petrie. The latter, having weak health in childhood, was educated privately. Chemistry and Egyptology, Land-surveying and optical instruments became his objects of study and research. From 1874 to 1890 he was employed measuring and mapping ancient British earthworks; copies of these surveys are deposited in the British Museum. Whilst so engaged he wrote "Inductive Metrology, or the recovery of ancient Measures from the monuments," with a synoptic sheet of the exact results so obtained from the different ancient nations, published 1877. During the same interval he wrote, also, against some of the metric hypotheses much promulgated in connection with the "Anglo-Israel" theory, which he followed up, in 1878, with a pamphlet, "The Return of Judah and Israel," presenting extracts from Scripture as precluding that theory. In 1880 he published "Stonehenge, plans, description and theories." The years 1881 and 1882 were spent in Egypt, measuring and surveying, with special instruments, the "Pyramids and Temples of Ghizeh;" the publication of the results of this important expedition was furthered by the Royal Society granting £100 for the purpose, in 1883. In 1884 he again visited Egypt, this time as explorer to the Egyptian Exploration Fund, and excavated the mounds of San, the "Zoa" of Scripture. Mr. Petrie's Memoir on "Tanis," part I. with plans and illustrations, was published by the Committee in 1885. He again went out, in the same capacity, and discovered the site and ruins of the long-lost Græco-Egyptian city of Naukratis, in the Delta; published by the Committee in 1886. His third expedition resulted in the discovery of the sites of Am, and of Defenneh; on the latter site he discovered the ruins of Pharaoh's house, and a palace-fort of remarkable construction. The household relics, &c., found in this historic palace, were exhibited by the Egypt Exploration Fund in Sept., 1886; and a description of them was published in "Tanis," part II., with 63 plates, including Foundation-deposits, and types of weights, with Diagram-curves showing the mutual relations of 775 additional examples of ancient weights carefully examined, 1888. In 1887 and until 1890 he explored in the Fayoum, on his own account. In 1887 he wrote the article on "Weights and Measures" in the 9th edit. of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." In 1888 he published "Historical Scarabs," 2,220 figures arranged chronologically on 68 pages; also "A Season in Egypt," with 32 plates, on the rock inscriptions of Assuan; "Historical Data of the XI. Dynasty;" "Surveys of the Pyramids of Dashur;" "The earliest known Column in architecture early in IV. Dynasty;" "Weights used in Memphis," &c. In 1889 he published "Hawara, Biahmu and Arsinoë," with 30 plates, including ancient picture-frames and painted portraits, toys, papii, and the pair of Colossi of Amenemhat III., XII. Dynasty, at Biahmu, restored from their remains; and with notes of 400 additional weights, making, in all, 4998 examples of ancient weights, carefully examined, weighed, and tabulated. In 1890 he published his excavations and surveys of the Pyramid of Hawara and tombs of XII. Dynasty, and of Illahum and Tal Gurob. He works in the Fayoum until March, 1891, and explores and excavates, for the Palestine Exploration Fund, at Umm Lakis, Tel Hesi, &c., in the South-West of Judæa. He is on the Council of the Royal Archæological Institute; and on the committee for preserving ancient monuments in Egypt; but he seeks not positions of membership and publicity. He is the author of many papers on Archæologic questions; an accomplished draughtsman and photographer, is well acquainted with Chemistry, speaks Arabic fluently, and is a fine numismatist.

PETTIE, John, R.A., was born in Edinburgh in 1839, and exhibited his earliest works in the Royal Scottish Academy. He came to London in 1862, and in 1866 was elected A.R.A.; and, in 1873, R.A., in the place of Sir Edwin Landseer. His daughter is married to the eminent composer Mr. Hamish McCunn.

PETTIGREW, Professor James Bell, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., was born at Roxhill, Lanarkshire, Scotland. He was educated at the Free West Academy of Airdrie, and at the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow. In 1861 he graduated in medicine at Edinburgh University with first-class honours. In 1858-9 he was awarded Professor John Goodsir's Senior Anatomy Gold Medal for the best treatise "On the arrangement of the Muscular Fibres in the Ventricle of the Vertebrate Heart." This treatise procured for him the appointment of Croonian Lecturer to the Royal Society of London for 1860. His next successful effort was in the Class of Medical Jurisprudence, where he gained the annual Gold Medal (1860) for an essay "On the Presumption of survivorship." In 1860 he was elected President of the Royal Medical Society, an honour greatly prized by all Edinburgh alumni. On graduating in medicine in 1861, he selected as the subject of his inaugural dissertation, "The Ganglia and Nerves of the Heart, and their connection with the Cerebro-spinal and Sympathetic Systems in Mammalia," a very involved and intricate investigation. For this he received a graduation Gold Medal—the highest honour the University of Edinburgh confers. (Proc. Roy. Soc. Edin. 1865.) In 1861 he became house surgeon to Professor Syme at the

Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. In 1862 he obtained the post of Assistant Curator of the Hunterian Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of London. Here he remained for five years. During the period mentioned (1862-67) he added about 600 finished dissections, injections, and casts, to this celebrated museum. In addition to museum work he wrote several important memoirs, each memoir being profusely illustrated by dissections and drawings. The following may be mentioned: "The Valves of the Vascular systems in Vertebrata" (Phil. Trans., 1864). "The Muscular Arrangements of the Bladder and Prostate" (Phil. Trans., 1867). "The Mechanical Appliances by which Flight is Attained in the Animal Kingdom" (Trans. Linn. Soc., 1867). In 1867 he retired from the Hunterian Museum, and spent two years in the South of Ireland, where he occupied himself in extending his knowledge of the flight of insects, bats, and birds. He also experimented largely at this period on the subject of artificial flight. In 1869 he was made a Fellow of the Royal Society of London, and, in the autumn of that year, he returned to Edinburgh, having been appointed Curator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, and Pathologist to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. There he continued his anatomical and physiological researches, particularly those of flight, and in 1870 he produced a memoir, "On the Physiology of Wings, being an analysis of the movements by which Flight is produced in the Insect, Bird, and Bat" (Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., vol. xxvi. pp. 321-446). At that period he added numerous specimens to the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh; these with the other specimens deposited in the Hunterian Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and the Anatomical Museum of the University of Edinburgh, amounted to considerably over 1000. He also gave daily demonstrations in morbid anatomy at the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh to large classes of students. In 1872 he delivered a course of lectures to the President and Fellows of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, "On the Physiology of the Circulation in Plants, in the Lower Animals, and in Man." In that year (1872) he was made a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and a member of the Harveian, Botanical, Medico-Chirurgical, and other learned societies. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, and appointed Examiner in Physiology to the College. He also (1873) became Lecturer in Physiology to the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. On assuming the duties of teacher of Physiology, he chose as the subject of his opening address, "The Relation of Plants and Animals to Inorganic Matter, and the Interaction of the Vital and Physical Forces." In that year (1873) he published his work on "Animal Locomotion; or Walking, Swimming, and Flying," the most popular and best known of all his writings. This volume was translated, shortly after its appearance, into French, German, and other languages. In 1874 he was awarded the Godard prize of the French Academy of Sciences for his Anatomico-physiological Researches, and made a laureate of the Institute of France. In 1875 he was appointed Chandos Professor of Medicine and Anatomy and Dean of the Medical Faculty in the University of St. Andrews, positions which he still holds. On being inducted to his Chair, he gave as his introductory lecture "Man in his Anatomical, Physical, and Physiological Aspects." In 1875-76-77 he delivered special courses of physiological lectures in Dundee, and did much to foster the higher learning in that important commercial centre. To his efforts, and those of his colleagues, the now prosperous University College of Dundee largely owes its origin. In 1877 he was elected by the Universities of Glasgow and St. Andrews as their representative at the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom (the so-called Medical Parliament), and these Universities he represented for nine years, viz., till 1886, when a new Medical Bill was passed which enabled each of the Scottish Universities to return its own member. Since that date (1886) he has represented his own University—St. Andrews. In 1883 he was appointed Examiner in Anatomy to the University of Glasgow, and in 1886 he had the honorary degree of LL.D. of that University conferred upon him. In 1889 he was made President of the Harveian Society of Edinburgh and gave as his Harveian Oration, "The Pioneers in Medicine prior to and including Harvey" (Edin. Med. Journ., 1889). In addition to the works already mentioned, Prof. Pettigrew has contributed a large number of articles on medical and science subjects to various periodicals.

PETTITT, Henry, dramatist. His leading works are, "Queen's Evidence;" "Black Flag;" "The World," in collaboration with Messrs. Merritt and

Harris; "Taken from Life;" "Pluck" (Pettitt and Harris); "In the Ranks" (Pettitt and G. R. Sims); "Human Nature" (Pettitt and Harris); "Harbour Lights" (Pettitt and Sims); "Bells of Haslemere" (Pettitt and Grundy); "Hands across the Sea;" "Faust up to Date" (Pettitt and Sims); "The Silver Falls;" "London Day by Day" (Pettitt and Sims); and "A Million of Money" (Pettitt and Harris), 1890.

PEYTON, Colonel John Lewis, LL.B., F.R.G.S., etc., of Steepphill-by-Staunton, Virginia, lawyer, litterateur, author, etc., was born Sept. 15, 1824, at Montgomery Hall, Augusta co., Virginia, and is the son of the eminent lawyer and State Senator, John Howe Peyton. He graduated at the law department of the University of Virginia 1845, after receiving a military, scientific, and classical education at the Virginia Military Academy. In 1848 he made an extensive tour through Canada, the North West Provinces, and United States territories, living sometime among the Indians, and thence through the Maritime provinces. In 1851 he was sent by the United States Government on special service to England, France, and Austria. In 1853 he returned and resided two years in Chicago and was Major in the 1st Regiment and Lieutenant-Colonel commanding the 18th Battalion of the National Guard. Owing to his high standing at the Chicago Bar, he was tendered in 1855, by President Pierce, the office of United States district Attorney for Utah, which he declined from ill-health. In 1856 he returned to Virginia, was elected J.P., bank director, to the Board of Visitors of the State College in Augusta and to other high and responsible positions. He served as chief of staff to General Lane, of Virginia and in 1861, while raising a force for the confederate army, was appointed Foreign Agent of North Carolina to England and France; broke the Charleston, South Carolina blockade in the confederate Man of War Mashville; visited Bermuda, en route for England, and arrived in Southampton, Nov. 1861. Discussed with Napoleon III., Cardinal Antonelli, and the leading Statesmen of Europe, the political events growing out of the civil war; sojourned abroad till 1876, when he returned to Virginia and resumed his residence at Steepphill, where he has since been engaged in literary, scientific, and agricultural pursuits. A recent writer, giving an account of a visit to Steepphill, says, "Colonel Peyton is an old-fashioned man in the simplicity of his manners and habits, generous in his hospitality. He thinks nothing vulgar but what is mean, and he thinks nothing mean that contributes to health and cheerfulness. He is, in a word, a contented man, whom no good fortune can pamper or corrupt, no adversity sour and no fashion change." For some years Colonel Peyton has been immersed in plans for the development of the vast mineral and other resources of Virginia and has, within the past twelve months, obtained important results—one of them being the doubling of his own ample fortune. He is a corresponding member of the Virginia Historical Society, of the Wisconsin State Historical Society, of the Society of Americanists, of Luxembourg, Prussia, and of many other learned bodies. He has written "A Statistical view of the State of Illinois," 1854; "Railway communications with the Pacific and the trade of China," 1854; "The American Crisis," 1866; "The Adventures of my Grandfather," 1867; "Over the Alleghanies and across the Prairies," 1869; "Memoir of William Madison Peyton, of Roanoke," 1870; "A Biographical sketch of Anne Montgomery Peyton," 1876; "A History of Augusta co., Virginia," 1882; "Memorials of Nature and Art;" "Rambling Reminiscences of a residence abroad," 1889. He has also edited, with an introduction, "The Glasse of Time;" reprinted in New York in 1886, from the London edition of 1620. He has been a voluminous writer for the papers and periodicals and has contributed to Hunt's Merchants' Magazine of New York, The Magazine of American History, De Bow's Review, and Appleton's New American Cyclopædia.

In the year 1831 he was elected Fellow and Assistant Tutor of his College. In 1835, he became senior Tutor, and continued in the office till 1846, when he was appointed to the Rectory of Sandon, Essex. This preferment he held till 1857. Phillips, Esq., of Bloomsbury Square, was born in London, Jan. 29, 1842, and educated at Dr. Pinches' school, which he left at the age of fourteen, to study mechanics. In 1861 he started in business as a watch and chronometer manufacturer, since which time he has constructed some of the most complicated and highly finished specimens of the horological art, and by the invention of various forms of mechanism has done much towards the introduction of keyless watches, and the simplification of chronographs and calculating machines. He retired from business in 1882. In Nov., 1865, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and in March 1885 a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1863 was published "The Autographic Album," which was followed, in 1871, by "Horological Rating Tables," and in 1873 by his "Dictionary of Biographical Reference." Since the publication of this latter work he has occupied himself with success as a painter and etcher, and has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions, and is an Associate of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers.

PICKERING, Professor Edward Charles, American astronomer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, July 19, 1846. He graduated in Civil Engineering at the Lawrence Scientific School (Harvard) in 1865, and in 1866 was appointed Assistant Instructor of Physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, of which he held the full Professorship from 1868 to 1877. During that period he made many researches in physics, particularly investigating the polarization of light and the laws of its reflection and dispersion. He also described a new form of spectrum telescope, and invented (1870) a telephone-receiver. In 1870 he had charge of the polariscope in the United States Coast Survey Expedition sent to Spain to observe the total eclipse of the sun, he having previously been a member of the party sent to Iowa by the United States Nautical Almanac Office to witness that of 1869. Since 1876 he has been Professor of Astronomy and Geodesy, and Director of the Observatory at Harvard University, which, under his management, has become one of the foremost observatories in America. He has been principally engaged there in determining the relative brightness of stars by means of a Meridian Photometer, and he has prepared a catalogue giving the relative brightness of over 4,000 stars. He has also made photometric measurements of Jupiter's Satellites while they were undergoing eclipse, and of the Satellites of Mars, and of other very faint objects; and has made other important researches on the application of Photography to Astronomy. Professor Pickering is an Associate of the Royal Astronomical Society of London, and was awarded its Gold Medal in 1886 for photometric researches. (Bencher of the Inner Temple, Judge of the Passage Court at Liverpool, and at one time Attorney-General for the County Palatine), and of (formerly) Miss Spencer Stanhope, granddaughter of Coke of Norfolk, first Earl of Leicester. He was educated at Eton, from which he obtained, in 1875, an Exhibition in Science at Balliol College, Oxford, converted, in 1876, into a Brackenbury Scholarship, the first Science Scholarship ever obtained from Eton. In 1880 he took First-Class Honours in Natural Science at Oxford. From Jan., 1881, to July, 1883, he was Modern Master at Highgate School, and from Oct., 1881, to April, 1889, Lecturer in Chemistry at Bedford College. His principal works have been published in the Journal of the Chemical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, the Chemical News, and the Zeit. f  r Physikal. Chemie. Mr. Pickering was elected to the Chemical Society in 1878, the Physical Society in 1886, the Institute of Chemistry in 1888, and the Royal Society in 1890.

PICKERSGILL, Frederick Richard, Hon. R.A., nephew of the late Henry William

Pickersgill, R.A., born in London, in 1820, studied at the Royal Academy. His first production, "The Combat between Hercules and Achelous," an oil painting, exhibited in 1840, was followed by a prize cartoon of "The Death of King Lear," exhibited in Westminster Hall in 1843; and "The Burial of Harold," a picture for which he received a first-class prize, in 1847, and which was immediately purchased for the new Houses of Parliament. Mr. Pickersgill was for many years a regular exhibitor. In 1847 he was elected A.R.A., and in 1857 was promoted to the rank of Academician. He retired a few years ago.

PIEROLA, Gen. Nicolas de, ex-President of Peru, was born at Camana, Peru, Jan. 5, 1839. He was educated at the College of Santo Torobio, in Lima, was admitted to the Bar in 1860, and founded a review, El Progreso Católico. In 1864 he became Editor of El Tiempo. Subsequently he travelled in Europe, but in 1869 was appointed Minister of Finance. At the end of his administration he was impeached, and although acquitted went into exile in the United States. In 1874 and 1877 he organised expeditions against the Peruvian Government, but was unsuccessful. The second time he surrendered and was banished. At the outbreak of the Chilian war he proffered his services to Gen. Prado, then President of Peru, but they were not accepted. In 1879, however, he was allowed to return to Lima. After Gen. Prado went away, Gen. Pierola assumed the charge of affairs, and continued the fighting. In Jan., 1881, he abandoned Lima, and in the following November resigned the Provisional Presidency (to which he had been elected in July of that year), as Chili refused to treat with him. In 1882 he visited Europe and the United States, and has since resided in Peru. He was a candidate for President in the past year (1890), but failed to secure the election. For attempting to excite a riot in Lima in connection with that election he was, in April last (1890), imprisoned by the Peruvian Government.

PIERREPONT, The Hon. Edward, LL.D., D.C.L., was born at North Haven, Connecticut, March 4, 1817. He graduated at Yale College in 1837; was admitted to the Bar in 1840, and practised in New York until elected to the Superior Court Bench in that city (1857). In 1860 he resigned his seat to resume the practice of law. In 1862 he was appointed, with Major-General Dix, to try various prisoners of State. He was a Member of the Judiciary Committee of the New York State Constitutional Convention in 1867, and in the same year conducted the case of the Government against John H. Surratt, indicted for aiding in the murder of President Lincoln. From 1869 to 1870 he was United States District Attorney for New York, and in 1873 he was appointed Minister to the Russian Court, but he declined the honour. In April, 1875, he was appointed Attorney-General of the United States, and in 1876 Minister to the Court of St. James's. He resigned that office in Dec., 1877, and returned to the United States, and now resides at New York. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Columbia College in 1871, and by Yale College in 1873; and that of D.C.L. by Oxford University in 1876.

PIGOU, The Very Rev. Francis, D.D., Vicar and Rural Dean of Halifax, Yorkshire, was born at Baden-Baden, in Germany, in the year 1831. His father was an officer in the Queen's Bays, and his mother was the daughter of the Rev. G. Smith, for many years rector of Marston, in Yorkshire. His earliest education was received at Neuwied, on the Rhine; afterwards he was at the Grammar School at Ripon, and subsequently at Cheltenham College. On leaving Cheltenham he was placed at the Edinburgh Academy, where he was under the late Archdeacon Williams, and the Rev. Dr. Hannah. From Edinburgh his next step was to Trinity College, Dublin, where he passed through the Divinity course, and took his degree in 1853. In the year 1855 he was ordained Deacon by the late Bishop Wilberforce at Cuddesdon, and commenced his ministerial life as Curate of Stoke Talmage, in Oxfordshire. Shortly after he had taken Priest's Orders in 1856, he was offered and accepted the Chaplaincy of the Marbœuf Chapel in Paris, and there for three years he ministered among the English residents and visitors. He subsequently accepted the Curacy of Vere Street Chapel, London, where Canon Cook was preacher. Very shortly afterwards he accepted a Curacy at Kensington Parish Church, under Archdeacon Sinclair. Two years later, on the death of Canon Repton, in 1860, he was presented by Mr. Kempe, the present Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly, to the Incumbency of St. Philip's, Regent Street. There he continued for the period of eleven years; and then, upon Dr. Vaughan accepting the Mastership of the Temple, in 1869, he was presented to the important Vicarage of Doncaster, by the late Archbishop of York, who, when in town, had been one of his congregation. The vicarage of a large parish was in many respects a very different sphere from any that he had previously occupied; but the character of his labours, as Vicar and Rural Dean of Doncaster, was so apparent, that, when the still more important Vicarage of Halifax became vacant, by the death of Archdeacon Musgrave in 1875, he was selected by the Crown to fill the post. The income of the Vicarage of Halifax is £2,000 a year, and there are no fewer than thirty-two livings in the gift of the Vicar, whose position is thus semi-episcopal. He is also the Rural Dean of Halifax. During the last four years of his ministry there, the Vicar's rate question has been settled; £13,000 having been raised by the Churchmen of the parish to redeem it; thus securing to the Church what was at one time seriously threatened. When this was accomplished, Dr. Pigou next set to work to get the Parish Church restored. He found it in a dilapidated condition, and, seconded by Sir Henry Edwards, Bart., he raised £20,000; so that now the Halifax Parish Church is one of the finest in the kingdom. In the year 1871, Dr. Pigou was appointed Honorary Chaplain to the Queen; and in 1874, Chaplain-in-Ordinary. In 1878, his University conferred on him the two degrees of B.D. and D.D., a rare distinction, which is seldom done, unless one is raised to the Bench. Very recently he has published a small volume of "Addresses at Holy Communion." Dr. Pigou is also the author of "Faith and Practice" (a volume of sermons), "Two Sermons Preached before the Queen, on Unostentatious Piety and Private Prayer." Dr. Pigou occupies a place in the very front rank of the Clergy of the Church of England.

PINERO, Arthur Wing, born in London in 1855, is the son of a solicitor, and was educated with the view of following his father's profession. Having no particular liking for the law, however, he ultimately prepared for the stage, and made his début in Edinburgh in June, 1874. The following year he joined the Lyceum company, and played Claudius to Mr. Irving during his first "Hamlet tour" at all the principal theatres in the United Kingdom. Subsequently Mr. Pinero played Lord Stanley in the Lyceum revival of "Richard III.," the Marquis of Huntley in "Charles I.," and Alderman Jorgens in "Vanderdecken." He is the author of several very successful plays, among which are "£200 a Year," 1877; "The Money Spinner," 1880; and "The Squire," 1881; "Lords and Commons" and "The Rocket," 1883; "Low Water," 1884; "The Magistrate," 1885; "The Schoolmistress," "The Hobby Horse," 1886; "Sweet Lavender," 1888; "The Profligate," 1889.

PINTO, Alexandre Alberto da Rocha Serpa, was born April 20, 1846, at the Tendaes in the Province of Douro, Portugal, and educated at the Royal Military College, Lisbon. He entered the 7th Infantry Regiment, Aug. 13, 1863; became ensign July 14, 1864; lieutenant in the 12th Rifles, Nov. 20, 1868; captain, Oct. 10, 1874; major, April 17, 1877; and aide-de-camp of the King of Portugal, March 10, 1880. In 1869 he was in the Zambesi War, and in the battle of the 23rd Nov. at Massangano he succeeded in saving the regiment of India. He was then in command of the African Native Troop. During 1877-79 he crossed Africa from Benguela to Durban, and he has admirably described the journey in a work entitled "How I Crossed Africa," Lond., 1881. These geographical tasks obtained for him the Gold Medals (first class) of the Geographical Societies of London, Paris, Antwerp, Rome, and Marseilles. He was also elected a Fellow of all the most important geographical societies in the world, and of many scientific associations. Major Serpa Pinto is a Knight Commander of the Order of St. James of Portugal, a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and of Leopold of Belgium, and has received many other foreign orders.

PITMAN, Mrs. E. R., an authoress of works of fiction, biography, and missionary information, was born, in 1841, at Milborne Port, a small manufacturing town on the Southern border of Somersetshire. While in her teens she gained several prizes for essays on various subjects, and became a contributor to The Sunday at Home, Old Jonathan, and other periodicals. When about seventeen years of age, she planned and wrote her first book, entitled "The Power of Little Things." For several years after this she was known as a contributor to religious, temperance, and Sunday-school journals; but during recent years her works have been mainly issued in volumes. Of these, her principal productions are "Vestina's Martyrdom, a Story of the Catacombs," 1869; "Earnest Christianity," 1872; "Margaret Mervyn's Cross," 1878; "Profit and Loss," 1879; "Heroines of the Mission Field," 1880; "Mission Life in Greece and Palestine," 1881; "Garnered Sheaves,"

"Florence Godfrey's Faith," "Life's Daily Ministry," and "My Governess Life," 1882; "Central Africa, Japan, and Fiji," 1883; "Elizabeth Fry" (Eminent Women Series), 1884; "George Müller and Andrew Reed" (World's Workers' Series), 1885; and "Lady Missionaries in Foreign Lands," 1889. In 1866 she was married to Mr. Edwin Pitman; and of the four children born of the marriage, three are in H. M.'s Civil Service.

PITMAN, Isaac, was born at Trowbridge, Wilts, Jan. 4, 1813, and educated at the Grammar School in that town. At the age of twelve years he left school, and entered the counting-house of a cloth manufacturer, where his father was manager. The change was necessary for the preservation of his health. Above a hundred boys were taught in a small room, and he frequently fainted through breathing the vitiated air. After six years' service as a clothier's clerk, chiefly in his father's factory, he was sent to be trained in the Normal College of the British and Foreign School Society, Borough-road, London, and after five months' training, at the close of 1831, was appointed Master of the British School, Barton-on-Humber. He established the British School at Wotton-under-Edge in 1836, and removed to Bath in 1839. His first treatise on shorthand, entitled "Stenographic Sound-hand," appeared in 1837, and he thus became the originator of the Spelling Reform, to which, and the propagation of his system of phonetic shorthand, he has devoted his entire attention since 1843, when the Phonetic Society was established. Last year's list of the Society (1890) contains above 4,500 members. His system of shorthand was re-named in 1840, and entitled "Phonography, or Writing by Sound;" and his "Phonographic Reporter's Companion" appeared in 1846. The "Phonetic Institute," at Bath, is really a phonetic printing office, and a publishing house for the dispatch of phonetic books to all parts of the world. Mr. Pitman edits and prints the Phonetic Journal, which has a large weekly and monthly circulation. It records the progress of the "Writing and Spelling Reform," in the ordinary orthography, and contains articles in the "First Stage" of the Spelling Reform, and in phonetic printing with an enlarged alphabet furnished with thirteen new letters: it also gives several pages of shorthand printed from moveable type, with a key. Besides printing his own instruction-books for teaching phonetic shorthand, Mr. Pitman has issued a little library of about eighty volumes, printed entirely in shorthand, ranging from the Bible to "Rasselas." In the autumn of 1887 an International Shorthand Congress and Jubilee of Phonography was held in London, and Mr. Pitman's family were presented with his bust: a replica is placed in the Royal Literary and Scientific Institution, Bath. A Gold Medal from the phonographers of the United States, and one from those of Great Britain and the Colonies, were presented to Mr. Pitman in recognition of the invention of his system of shorthand, and of his labours for the reformation of English orthography. The useful art of shorthand is now included in the new Educational Code as a "specific subject" to be taught in the Board schools.

PLANQUETTE, Robert, a musician, was born in Paris in 1850, and educated at the Conservatoire there. He is the composer of the popular operetta "Les Cloches de Corneville," which was published in 1877, and had immense success in France and in England. In 1882 he produced "Rip van Winkel;" in 1887 "The Old Guard;" and in 1889 "Paul Jones."

PLAYFAIR, Professor, The Right Hon. Sir Lyon, K.C.B., P.C., LL.D., Ph.D., F.R.S., son of Mr. George Playfair, Chief Inspector-General of Hospitals of Bengal, and nephew of the late Col. Sir Hugh L. Playfair, was born at Meerut, Bengal, May 21, 1819, educated at St. Andrews, N.B., and at a very early age took especial interest in chemistry. In 1834 he studied chemistry under Professor Thomas Graham, at the Andersonian University, Glasgow; but his health failing in 1837, he revisited India, and upon his recovery returned to England, and rejoined his friend Graham, then Professor to the London University. In 1838 he went to Giessen, to study organic chemistry under Liebig, translated some of his works into English, and on his return to Scotland undertook the management of the large calico-print works of Messrs. Thompson, of Clitheroe; whence he removed, in 1843, to Manchester, and was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Institution. In 1844, at the recommendation of the late Sir Robert Peel, he was appointed on the Commission constituted to examine into the sanitary condition of our large towns and populous districts. At the close of the Commission, Professor Playfair was by the late Sir R. Peel appointed Chemist to the

Museum of Practical Geology. In the Great Exhibition of 1851 he was appointed Special Commissioner in charge of the Department of Juries; and at the close of the Exhibition, in recognition of his scientific services, he was made a Companion of the Bath, and received an appointment in the late Prince Consort's household. At the Great Exhibition of 1862, he again had charge of the Department of Juries, and was intrusted with the appointment of the Jurors, who numbered upwards of 600 persons, consisting of the most eminent men of rank, science, and industry, of all countries of Europe. In the French Exhibition of 1878, the Prince of Wales, who was the President of the English Commission, appointed Professor Playfair as Chairman of the Finance Committee, which was charged with the executive work. On the establishment of the Department of Science and Art, in 1853, he was appointed Joint Secretary with Mr. Henry Cole; but in 1856, when Mr. Cole assumed the office of Secretary, he became Inspector-General of Government Museums and Schools of Science. In 1857 Professor Playfair was elected President of the Chemical Society of London, and in 1858 was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh, where he had the honour to number among his pupils the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred. In conjunction with Sir Henry De La Bèche, he examined, at the desire of the Admiralty, into the suitability of the coals of the United Kingdom for the purposes of the Navy; and into the causes of accidents in mines. He was one of the Royal Commissioners appointed on the appearance of the cattle plague in this country, and was Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Fisheries of the Scottish coasts. This commission laid the basis for the withdrawal of legislative restrictions on sea fisheries. He was President of the Civil Service Inquiry Commission of 1874, which produced an elaborate scheme for the reorganization of the Civil Service. Dr. Lyon Playfair was elected as member of Parliament for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews in the general election of 1868, and is a Liberal in politics. He held office in the Ministry of 1873-74, as Postmaster-General. After the general election of 1880, he was appointed Chairman of Ways and Means, and Deputy-Speaker of the House of Commons. These offices he resigned in the Session of 1883, being on his retirement created a K.C.B. In the general election of 1885 he was returned for the South Division of Leeds, and was appointed Vice-President of the Council in Mr. Gladstone's Government of 1886. After the dissolution he was again returned for South Leeds. Sir Lyon Playfair is a Privy Councillor of the Queen, and also of the Prince of Wales in the Duchy of Cornwall. He holds honorary appointments as one of H.M.'s Commissioners in the Board of Manufactures, is one of the Royal Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1881, and in addition to being member of many learned societies, is Commander of the Legion of Honour; Commander of the Austrian Order of Francis Joseph; Knight of the Portuguese Order of the Conception; Knight of the Swedish Order of the Northern Star; and Knight of Würtemberg. He is Ph.D. of Giessen; LL.D. of Edinburgh, St. Andrews, McGill University, Montreal, and Harvard University, United States. Dr. Playfair edited, conjointly with W. Gregory, Baron Liebig's "Chemistry in its Applications to Agriculture and Physiology." He is the author of numerous scientific memoirs, and on general subjects he has published "Science in its Relations to Labour," being a speech delivered at the anniversary of the People's College, Sheffield, Oct. 25, 1883; "On the Food of Man in relation to his Useful Work," a lecture, 1865; "On Primary and Technical Education," two lectures, 1870; "On Teaching Universities and Examining Boards," being an address to the Philosophical Institution of Edinburgh, 1872; "Universities in their relation to Professional Education," being an address to the St. Andrews Graduates' Association, 1873; and "The Progress of Sanitary Reform," an address delivered at the annual meeting of the Social Science Association at Glasgow, 1874; "Science in relation to the Public Weal," an address as President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, 1885. Several of his addresses on Political Economy were published in a volume, entitled "Subjects of Social Welfare." 1889.

PLIMSOLL, Samuel, fourth son of Thomas and Priscilla Plimsoll, was born at Bristol in 1824. He was educated at Penrith (to which place his parents moved when he was a child), by the curate of the parish, and later at Sheffield, at a private school. He was first a clerk in a solicitor's office; and afterwards went into a brewery as clerk, and became manager there, where he remained till 1853, when he came up to London and started in business for himself. He successfully contested Derby in the Liberal interest in 1868, and sat for that town till 1880, when he gave up his seat to Sir W. V. Harcourt. Mr. Plimsoll went into Parliament for the express purpose of helping the sailors, and gave up his seat for the same reason, thinking that a Cabinet Minister might be able to render better service to the sailors' cause than a private member could. Whilst in Parliament Mr. Plimsoll was instrumental in passing Acts for the Amendment of the Shipping Laws, in 1871, 1873, 1875, and 1876, and is working hard outside the House to secure the passing of another Bill. Mr. Plimsoll published, in 1872, "Our Seamen;" and is now writing a sequel to it.

PLUMMER, William E., Hon. M.A. Oxford, was born at Deptford, in Kent, in 1849, and was privately educated in that town. Having early developed a taste for astronomy, he entered the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and there acquired a certain aptitude for the practical details of that science. In 1870 he became attached to Mr. Bishop's Observatory at Twickenham, then under the direction of Mr. Hind, the present superintendent of the "Nautical Almanac" office. That observatory was then engaged in the formation of charts of the stars situated near the Ecliptic, to facilitate the discovery of minor planets. In preparation of the charts for Hours eight and twenty-three Mr. Plummer took a part, as well as in the observation of comets, and the subsequent determination of their orbits. The establishment of the Oxford University Observatory, in 1874, led to Mr. Plummer's appointment as senior assistant to that institution, in which capacity he has taken a considerable share in the photometric and extrameridional observations carried on in that observatory. Mr. Plummer, in 1879, entered the Royal Astronomical Society; in 1888, was elected to a seat on the Council; and, in the following year, received the honorary degree of M.A. from the University of Oxford. He is a frequent contributor to the periodical scientific literature, and has written on "The Motion of the Solar System in Space;" "The Sidereal System;" and on "Cometary Astronomy" generally.

PLUNKET, The Right Hon. David Robert, P.C., Q.C., LL.D., is the fourth son of the third Lord Plunket, and consequently a grandson of the first Lord Plunket, the great orator and lawyer, who held the Great Seal in Ireland from 1830 to 1841, and again from 1835 to 1841. He was born Dec. 3, 1838, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1859. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1862, and in 1863 was appointed "Law Adviser to the Castle at Dublin." He was nominated a Q.C. in 1868; and was elected M.P. for the University of Dublin in the Conservative interest in 1870, when he succeeded to the vacancy caused by the retirement of Mr. Anthony Lefroy. Mr. Plunket was Solicitor-General for Ireland from Dec., 1874, to March, 1877. He was Paymaster-General for a few weeks in 1880, when he was added to the Privy Council; and First Commissioner of Works in Lord Salisbury's administration, June, 1885, to Feb., 1886, a post which he again filled in the Government of Aug., 1886. Mr. Plunket was very active in the Unionist cause during the election campaign of 1886, and his eloquent speeches on public platforms had no little influence upon the electorate.

PLUNKET (Lord), The Hon. and Most Rev. William Conyngham Plunket, Protestant Archbishop of Dublin, eldest son of the third Lord Plunket, by Charlotte, daughter of the late Right Hon. Charles Kendal Bushe, was born in 1828, and succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1871. He was chaplain to his uncle, the late Bishop of Tuam, 1857-64; Treasurer, and subsequently Precentor, of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 1864-76; and Bishop of Meath, 1876-84. On the resignation of Archbishop Trench, Lord Plunket was elected Archbishop of Dublin (1884). He is one of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland. His Grace married, 1863, Annie Lee, only daughter of the late Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, Bart., and sister of Lord Ardilaun. She died Nov. 8, 1889.

POCHIN, Henry Davis, born at Wigston, Leicestershire, 1824, is the eldest son of William Pochin, Esq. He was educated at the Proprietary School, Leicester, and studied chemistry at the Pharmaceutical Society, London. Subsequently he started in business in Manchester as a manufacturing chemist, and soon afterwards discovered the means of completely decomposing China clay (silicate of alumina) by sulphuric acid, which produced a rich salt of sulphate of alumina. That process he patented in 1855, and shortly afterwards introduced the material into commerce, by the term "Aluminas Cake." It is now used by almost all paper-makers in the world for sizing paper. Another invention that Mr. Pochin patented in connection with Mr. Edward Hunt was the purification of rosin, by means of distillation; prior to this invention, rosin was always believed to be incapable of distillation without decomposition. Mr. Hunt and Mr. Pochin, however, discovered that if rosin is heated to 400 degrees Fahrenheit, and steam in considerable quantities passed (blown) through, it distills undecomposed, and free from colour; rosin refined by this process is now very largely used in the manufacture of the pale yellow soaps of commerce, being the foundation of almost all fancy soaps. Mr. Pochin has for many years taken an active part in connection with popular education both in Manchester and in Salford, of which latter borough he has been twice mayor (1866 and 1867). He is a J.P. for Lancashire and Salford, and J.P. and D.L. for Denbighshire, and in 1866 published a pamphlet on "Parliamentary Reform."

POGSON, N. R., C.I.E., the Government Astronomer at the Madras Observatory, was born at Nottingham, March 23, 1829, and is the son of an old-established manufacturer in that town, who, as he intended him for a commercial career, gave him only an ordinary school education, chiefly private; and he had to leave home and become self-supporting when only sixteen, to enable him to take to science as the future pursuit of life. He taught mathematics as a means of subsistence until he was able to get an astronomical post. His first appointment was that of assistant in Mr. Bishop's Observatory, Regent's Park, in Jan., 1851, under the direction of Mr. J. R. Hind, the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac. His second appointment was in the Radcliffe Observatory, Oxford, in Jan., 1852. Next he was Director of Dr. Lee's private observatory at Hartwell, in Jan., 1859; and finally he became Government Astronomer at Madras, in Feb., 1861, which post he still holds. He has published numerous papers in the "Astronomische Nachrichten;" in the "Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society;" in the "Radcliffe Observations, Oxford;" in Reports to Government; in the "Annual Reports of the British Association;" and in various periodicals and local papers. More recently, since at liberty to make known Madras Results, he has published "Telegraphic Determinations of the difference of Longitude between Madras and Eight other Stations; viz., Pondicherry, Singapore, Ayanashi, Jaffna, Colombo, Kurrachee, Muddapore, and Roorkee" (this was the first of the Madras series (quarto), commenced in April, 1885); "Results of 5761 Observations of Fixed Stars, made with the Meridian Circle at Madras in 1862, 1863, and 1864," published in April, 1887; "Results of 7651 Observations of Fixed Stars made with the Madras Meridian Circle in 1865, 1866, and 1867," published in Oct., 1888; "Results of 5867 Observations of Fixed Stars, made with the Madras Meridian Circle in 1868, 1869, and 1870," published in Aug., 1890. Mr. Pogson has discovered ten new minor planets—four at Oxford, and six at Madras. Two of these were co-discoveries shared with other astronomers; but the eight were independent undisputed discoveries, and were named Isis, Ariadne, Hestia, Asia, Sappho, Sylvia, Camilla, and Vera. Mr. Pogson discovered also a telescopic comet in Dec., 1872; possibly a portion of Biela's lost periodical comet. He likewise discovered twenty new variable stars between 1852 and 1865.

POLE, William, Mus. Doc., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., civil engineer, was born in 1814. After following his profession for some years he was, in 1844, appointed by the East India Company Professor of Civil Engineering in Elphinstone College, Bombay. In 1847 he returned to London, devoting his chief attention to the mechanical branch of his profession. From 1871 to 1883 he was Consulting Engineer for the Imperial Railways of Japan, and on his retirement the Mikado honoured him with the decoration of the Third Degree (Knight Commander) of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun. He served on the Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers from 1871 to 1885, in which year he was appointed Honorary Secretary. Between 1859 and 1867 he was Professor of Civil Engineering at University College, London, and Lecturer at the Royal Engineer Establishment, Chatham. He served the Government from 1861 to 1864 as a member of the Iron Armour Committee; from 1863 to 1865 as a member of the Whitworth and Armstrong Gun Committee; from 1865 to 1867 as Secretary (appointed by Her Majesty) to the Royal Commission on Railways; and from 1867 to 1869 as Secretary to that on Water Supply, afterwards undertaking important official investigations in regard to the supply of London. In 1882 he was appointed by the Queen, Secretary to the Royal Commission for inquiring into the pollution of the river Thames, and in 1885 he served as Secretary to a Government Committee on the Scientific Museums at South Kensington. In June, 1861, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London; he has served six years on the council, and was Vice-President in 1876 and 1889. He was elected into the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1877, and into the Athenæum Club without ballot (as a scientific distinction) in 1864. He published in 1844 a quarto Treatise on the Steam Engine; in 1848 a translation of a German work on the same subject; in 1864 and 1870 Scientific Chapters in the Lives of Robert Stephenson and I. K. Brunel; in 1872 a Treatise on Iron; in 1877 "The Life of Sir William Fairbairn, Bart.;" and in 1888 "The Life of Sir William Siemens." He is also the author of a well-known scientific work on the game of Whist; has written a great number of papers for scientific journals and periodicals; and is a contributor to the Quarterly Review. He has likewise studied music, and has been an organ player and composer. He took, in 1860, the Oxford Degree of Bachelor, and in 1867 that of Doctor of Music, and remains a member of St. John's College in that University. He has held for twelve years the office of Examiner in Music at the University of London, and has been made an Honorary Fellow of the College of Organists. He is the author of "The Philosophy of Music," 1879; and "The Story of Mozart's Requiem," 1879.

POLLEN, John Hungerford, M.A., son of Richard Pollen of Rodbourne, Wilts, born 1820, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and elected to a Fellowship of Merton, where he painted the College Chapel. He studied painting in Rome, was appointed Professor of Fine Arts by Cardinal Newman, in the Catholic University of Dublin; built and painted the Church in Stephen's Green, was appointed Official Editor of the Museum at South Kensington, and was inter alia Editor of the Universal Catalogue of Books on Art. He acts as Examiner for the Department, and is a member of the Committee of Selection in reference to purchases. He is the author of "Ancient and Modern Furniture and Woodwork," "Ancient and Modern Gold and Silversmith's Work," "The Trajan Column," and other publications; and has contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Art Journal," "Magazine of Art," and several periodicals on subjects connected with the fine arts, and was Cantor Lecturer of the Society of Arts in 1885. He was appointed Private Secretary to the Marquis of Ripon in 1876. He has executed several paintings—designs for glass, mosaic, carving, &c.—in the Oratory, London; at Lyndhurst, Hants; Alton Towers (wars of the famous John Talbot), Blickling Hall;

Kilkenny Castle; Wilton House; Heythrop House; Ingestre Hall; and many other places, both in this country and in India. Mr. Pollen is Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of Madrid, the Archæological Society of Belgium, and other learned bodies.

POLLOCK, The Hon. Sir Charles Edward, was born Oct. 21, 1823, and received his education at St. Paul's School. When his father, the late Sir Frederick Pollock, was Attorney-General in 1843-4, Mr. Pollock acted as his secretary, and on the elevation of his father to the position of Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in 1844, Mr. Pollock became a pupil of the late Mr. Justice Willes, in whose chambers he remained for nearly three years. Mr. Pollock was called to the Bar in 1847, and was created a Queen's Counsel in 1866. He was appointed a Baron of the Exchequer in succession to Mr. Baron Channell, resigned, in Jan. 1873, and soon afterwards received the honour of knighthood. Before his elevation to the Bench he published several legal text-books, including a "Treatise on the Law of Merchant Shipping," and another on the "Law and Practice of the County Courts."

POLLOCK, Professor Sir Frederick, Bart., eldest son of Sir William Frederick Pollock, Bart., and grandson of the late Sir F. Pollock, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, was born Dec. 10, 1845, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow in 1868. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1871, and was examiner in law at Cambridge, 1879-81. In 1882 he was made Professor of Jurisprudence at University College, London; in 1883 was appointed Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence at Oxford, and in 1884 Professor of Common Law. He is also editor of the Law Quarterly Review, and has been Hon. Librarian of the Alpine Club since 1881. From 1859 to 1861 he was on light-house duty. On the outbreak of the Civil War he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers (May, 1861), and in June, 1862, was given the same rank in the regular army, with the command of the army of Virginia. In Sept., 1862, he was placed in charge of the Department of the North-West, where he remained until Jan., 1865, when he was transferred to the command of the Military Division of the Missouri. In June, 1865, he became head of the Department of the Missouri; in April, 1867, of the 3rd Military District; and in 1868 of the Department of the Lakes. From 1870 to 1883 he was in command of the Department of the Mississippi. In Oct., 1882, he was made a Major-General in the regular army. PORTER, Admiral David Dixon, was born at Chester, Pennsylvania, June 8, 1813. He is the son of Commodore David Porter, who commanded the Essex frigate in the war with Great Britain in 1812-14. He entered the service as Midshipman, Feb., 1829, and served in the Mediterranean until 1835, when he was employed for several years in the coast survey and river explorations, and became a Lieutenant in 1841. At the close of 1845 he was placed on special duty at the Observatory in Washington, which position he relinquished in 1846, in order to take part in the Mexican War. At the outbreak of the Civil War, in 1861, he was promoted to the rank of Commander, and at the beginning of 1862 proposed an expedition for the capture of New Orleans. The mortar fleet for the reduction of the forts below New Orleans was placed under his orders, the entire naval force being commanded by Flag-Officer Farragut. After the capture of New Orleans he proceeded up the river with his fleet, and was engaged in the unsuccessful siege of Vicksburg, which was raised July 22, 1862. In the summer of 1863, during the second siege of Vicksburg, he bombarded the works, and inflicted immense damage on them and on the city, rendering great assistance to General Grant, who commanded the besieging army, until the occupation of that stronghold, July 4. For this he was made Rear-Admiral, and received the "thanks of Congress." Admiral Porter commanded many important expeditions, especially in the two combined attacks on Fort Fisher, which commanded the approaches to Wilmington, North Carolina. The first of these, at the close of 1864, mis-carried. The second in Jan., 1865, was completely successful. Admiral Porter was advanced to the rank of Vice-Admiral, July 25, 1866. From 1866 to 1870 he was Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. On the death of Admiral Farragut, Oct. 17, 1870, he was advanced to the rank of Admiral of the navy of the United States. His residence is at Washington. He has published "Incidents and Anecdotes of the Civil War;" "Adventures of Harry Marline;" "Allan Dare and Robert le Diable;" "Arthur Merton;" and a "Memoir of Commodore David Porter;" besides many contributions to current periodical literature.

In 1836 he was ordained Pastor of the Congregational Church at New Milford, Connecticut, and in 1843 was settled at Springfield, Massachusetts. He returned to Yale as Professor of Metaphysics and Moral Philosophy in 1846, and on the resignation of Dr. Woolsey in 1871 was elected President of Yale. POTT, The Ven. Alfred, B.D., born at Norwood, Surrey, Sept. 30, 1822, was educated at Eton, and at Balliol and Magdalen Colleges, Oxford. He was appointed Vicar of Cuddesdon in 1852; first Principal of the Theological College there in 1853; Rector of East Hendred, Berks, in 1858; Vicar of Abingdon and Honorary Canon of Christ Church in 1863; Archdeacon of Berkshire, and Chaplain to the Bishop of Oxford in 1873; Vicar of Clifton Hampden, Oxfordshire, in 1874; and Vicar of Sonning, Berks, in 1882. Canon Pott is the author of "Confirmation Lectures," 1850; Village Sermons," 1867; and several "charges," sermons, and tracts.

POTTER, George, was born at Kenilworth in 1832. He was apprenticed to a carpenter and joiner at Coventry, where he worked several years after he had learned his trade. He came to London in 1853, and obtained employment as a journeyman joiner in the large firm of Myers & Son. In 1857 the workmen in the building trades started an agitation for a reduction in their hours of labour, and Mr. Potter was sent as a delegate to represent the carpenters and joiners, when he soon attracted attention by his argumentative and practical speeches, and subsequently he was elected Secretary to the Nine Hours' Movement. The great lock-out in the building trades of Aug., 1859, occurred, and he was called from his trade to conduct the movement, which lasted twenty-seven weeks. In 1860 Mr. Potter established the Beehive, an organ of labour on behalf of workmen. The paper afterwards changed its name to the Industrial Review. Mr. Potter has taken part in all the social and political movements of the working-classes during the last twenty years, and his services were recognised by the working-men of London and the country in 1866, when they presented him with an address and a purse containing £300. In 1873 he was elected a member for Westminster on the London School Board, and was re-elected in 1876, and again in 1879. At the general election of 1874, he contested Peterborough, but without success. He also contested Preston in 1886 as a Gladstonian and Labour candidate. On this last occasion, the secession of Liberals upon the "Home Rule" question brought him another defeat, but he polled nearly 5,000 votes. In 1868 Mr. Potter, as President of the London Working Men's Association, inaugurated the first Trades Union Congress, and he was unanimously elected to preside over its proceedings. From then until now, the Trades Union Congress has held its annual meeting in the various large towns of the country. In 1870 and 1871 he wrote a series of articles for the Contemporary Review upon Trade Unionism, the future relations of Capital and Labour, Co-operation, and cognate subjects. He has also been a contributor to the Nineteenth Century, Fortnightly and National Reviews, and to the Times upon labour questions. He is the author of a series of social and political "Tracts for the People."

POTTER, The Right Rev. Henry Codman, D.D., LL.D., son of the late Bishop of Pennsylvania, and nephew of the late Bishop of New York, was born at Schenectady, New York, May 25, 1835. He graduated from Union College, Schenectady, and from the Theological Seminary of Alexandria, Virginia (1857). His first rectorship was in a small village (Greensburg) in Pennsylvania, from which he went to St. John's Church, Troy, New York, and afterwards to Boston. In 1868 he became Rector of Grace Church, New York, where he remained until 1883, when he was consecrated Assistant Bishop of New York, with the right of succession. He became Bishop of New York, on the death of his uncle, in Jan., 1887. He has published "Sisterhoods and Deaconesses," 1872; "The Gates of the East," 1876; and "Sermons of the City," 1880; besides a number of sermons and discourses. In 1890 the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard University.

He was educated at the private school of the late W. Watson, B.A. (London), at Reading, and in 1873 he worked in the Biological Laboratory at the University Museum, Oxford, and obtained an open scholarship in Natural Science at Jesus College. In 1876 he obtained a first class in the Final Honour School of Natural Science and took B.A. degree. From 1877 to 1879, he was Demonstrator of Biology under the late Professor G. Rolleston. In 1878 he obtained the Burdett-Coutts University Scholarship in Geology; and from 1877 to 1878 he was Librarian of the Oxford Union Society; and in 1879 (Lent Term) its President. From 1880 to 1889 he was Lecturer in Natural Science, and then Tutor of Keble College, Oxford; 1881 to 1889 Lecturer in Natural Science, Jesus College, Oxford; 1886 to 1887 Lecturer in Zoology and Comparative Anatomy at St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington. Sci.*, July, 1888. He is also one of the editors of the translation of Professor Weismann's "Essays on Heredity and Kindred Biological Problems," Clarendon Press, 1889; and is the author of "The Colours of Animals, their Meaning and Use, especially considered in the case of Insects," 1890, International Scientific Series. At the 1890 meeting of the British Association held at Leeds, Mr. Poulton delivered one of the Evening Addresses, choosing for his subject "Mimicry in the Animal Kingdom."

POUYER-QUERTIER, Augustin Thomas, a French statesman, was born Sept. 3, 1820, at Étoutteville-en-Caux (Seine-Inférieure), and became a large manufacturer. In 1854, he was elected Maire of Fleury-sur-Andelle, and has been President of the Conseil Général de l'Eure since 1870; he has been President of the Chamber of Commerce at Rouen; for many years was Administrator of the Bank of France (branch of the Seine-Inférieure); and President of the Committee formed for the relief of the workmen engaged in the manufacture of cotton. In 1857 and 1863 he was elected a Deputy in the Corps Législatif in the government interest for the first circonscription for the department of the Seine-Inférieure. M. Pouyer-Quertier rendered himself very conspicuous by the pertinacity with which he opposed the doctrines of Free Trade, especially as applied to the Treaty of Commerce with England, and by his unsparing exposure of the abuses of the great financial and railway companies in France. In consequence he lost the support of the government, and at the General Election of May, 1869, failed to secure his re-election. After the fall of the empire, M. Pouyer-Quertier was returned to the National Assembly, and as Ministre des Finances was intrusted by M. Thiers with the conduct of the negotiations with Germany respecting the Alsace-Lorraine treaties, which, in Oct., 1871, he brought to a successful issue. He having, in June, 1871, issued the first loan of £100,000,000 for the liberation of the country, he was promoted to be a Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, Oct. 20, 1871. He was elected a Senator in Jan., 1876, and was re-elected when his term of office expired in 1882.

POWDERLY, Terence Vincent, American labour agitator, was born at Carbondale, Pa., Jan. 22, 1849. At the age of twelve he began tending switch on the railway of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Co., and later was apprenticed in its machine shops. In 1869 he went to Scranton, Pa., where he has since lived, and was employed in the shops of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western R. R. Co. He joined the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union in 1871 and soon became its President. In 1874 he was initiated into the Order of Knights of Labour (founded in 1869), and shortly afterwards succeeded in persuading the former Union to disband and enter the latter. From his entrance into the Order he became a very active member, and for many years was one of its district leaders. In 1879 he was elected Grand Worthy Foreman (the second highest office in the body), and later, in the same year, was made the head of it, General Master-Workman, a position he has been continuously re-elected to since. Under his management the Society has grown to be the largest and most powerful labour organization in the United States, and probably in the world, and has accomplished much in raising the wages, shortening the hours, and improving the condition of workmen. Mr. Powderly has been elected several times Mayor of Scranton. He helped to establish the Labor Advocate at Scranton in 1877 and frequently contributes to it as well as to the Journal of United Labor, and to other periodicals. When the Irish Land League movement was organized in America he was made one of the Vice-Presidents, and at the Convention in 1883 opened the meeting.

POWELL, Major John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., American geologist, was born at Mount Morris, New York, March 24, 1834. His early life was passed at various places in Ohio, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and he studied at Illinois College and at Wheaton College, finally taking a special course at Oberlin (Ohio), teaching in the public schools at intervals in the meanwhile. At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the Union army as a private, and by its close had gained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, having lost his right arm during its progress. He had, prior to the war, attained prominence as a scientist, and in 1865 was made Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in the Illinois Wesleyan University, but he soon resigned this position to accept a similar one in the Illinois Normal University. In 1868 he organized and conducted an expedition to explore the cañon of the Colorado, which was so successful that Congress established, in 1870, a Topographical and Geological Survey of the Colorado River of the West, and placed it in his charge. The results of the thorough exploration made by him of the physical features of this region (covering about 100,000 square miles), and of other surveys instituted by the United States Government in the Rocky Mountain country proved so important, that Congress, in 1879, consolidated them under the permanent and independent organization of the United States Geological Survey, of which Major Powell, in 1881, succeeded Clarence King as the Director. In the meantime Major Powell had devoted considerable attention to ethnology and had issued through the Smithsonian Institution 3 vols. of "Contributions to North American Ethnology." To insure the continuance of this work a special Bureau of Ethnology was established by Congress and he was placed at its head, a position he continues to hold, in addition to the direction of the Survey. Major Powell received the degree of Ph.D. from the University of Heidelberg in 1886, and in the same year that of LL.D. from Harvard. In 1880 he became a Member of the National Academy of Sciences, and from 1879 to 1888 was President of the Anthropological Society of Washington. He became a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1875, its Vice-President in 1879, and President in 1887. In addition to these he is a Member of a number of other learned and scientific societies. His publications embrace many scientific papers and addresses and numerous government volumes, including reports of various surveys of the Bureau of Ethnology and of the United States Geological Survey. The special volumes that bear his own name are: "Exploration of the Colorado River of the West and its Tributaries," 1875; "Report on the Geology of the Eastern Portion of the Uinta Mountains," 1876; "Report on the Lands of the Arid Region of the United States," 1879; and "Introduction to the Study of Indian Languages," 1880. He has recently (1890) published a series of papers on irrigation in The Century Magazine.

POYNTER, Edward John, R.A., was born in Paris, March 20, 1836, being the son of Mr. Ambrose Poynter, architect. He was educated at Westminster School, and at Ipswich Grammar School; afterwards he studied art in English schools from 1854 to 1856, and under Gleyre in Paris from 1856 to 1859. He was made an Associate of the Royal Academy in Jan., 1869; a Member of the Belgian Water-Colour Society in 1871; and was appointed Slade Professor of Art at University College, Gower Street, London, in May, 1871, the appointment being renewed in 1873 for four years. He was elected a Royal Academician, June 29, 1876. Mr. Poynter exhibited at the Royal Academy, "Israel in Egypt," 1867; "The Catapult," 1868; "Perseus and Andromeda," 1872; "More of More Hall and the Dragon," 1873; "Rhodope," 1874; "The Festival," and "The Golden Age," 1875; "Atalanta's Race," 1876; "The Fortune-Teller," his diploma picture, 1877; "Zenobia Captive," 1878; and "Diadumene," 1885. This picture was one of those which offered a text to the memorable discussion upon the morality of the nude in art which enlivened the season of 1885. Mr. Poynter also painted cartoons for the mosaic of St. George in the Westminster Palace, 1869; designed the architectural and tile decorations for the grill-room at South Kensington, 1868-70; painted a fresco in St. Stephen's Church, Dulwich, 1872-3; and has exhibited many other smaller works in the Academy and Dudley Water-Colour Exhibition, and at the Royal Water-Colour Society, of which he is a Member. At the Royal Academy in 1889 he exhibited "On the Terrace," and "A Corner in the Villa;" and, in 1890, "Pea Blossom," "On the Temple Steps," and "The Meeting of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba." For several years he was Director for Art and Principal of the National Art Training School at South Kensington, but he resigned that office in July, 1881, though he consented to continue his connection with the Department as Visitor of the Training School. He is the author of "Ten Lectures on Art," 1879.

POYNTING, Professor J. H., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in 1852, at Monton, near Manchester, and is the son of the late Rev. T. Elford Poynting, Unitarian Minister of Monton. He was educated first at a private school conducted by the Rev. T. E. Poynting, afterwards at Owens College, Manchester, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, graduating in Mathematical Tripos in 1876; late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; D.Sc., Cambridge; B.Sc., London and Victoria; F.R.S.; Demonstrator in the Physical Laboratory at Owens College, Soc.*, 1878; "On the Transfer of Energy in the Electromagnetic Field," Phil. Trans. 1884; "On the Connection between the Electric Current and the Electric and Magnetic Induction in the Surrounding Field," Phil. Trans., 1885; "On the Fluctuations in the Price of Wheat," Proc. of the Stat. Soc., 1884; and other physical papers.

PRAED, Mrs. Campbell Mackworth, née Rosa Murray-Prior, was born March 27, 1852, in Queensland, Australia. On her father's side she is of Irish descent. Her grandfather, Colonel Murray-Prior, fought in the 18th Hussars at Waterloo. Her father, a squatter in Australia, took an active part in Australian political life and held office as Postmaster-General in several Queensland Ministries. Mrs. Praed grew up between bush life and the life of the rising capital of the colony, Brisbane. In 1872 she married Mr. Campbell Mackworth Praed, nephew of the poet Praed. The first years of her married life were passed on an island off the Queensland coast, bought by her husband as a cattle station. In 1876 she came, for the first time, with him to England. "An Australian Heroine," her first novel, was published in 1890; "Policy and Passion," 1881; "Nadine," 1882; "Moloch," 1883; "Zero," 1884; "Affinities," "Sketches of Australian Life," and "The Head Station," 1885; "The Brother of the Shadow," and "Miss Jacobsen's Chance," 1886; "The Bond of Wedlock," 1887, was also dramatized by Mrs. Praed and produced by Mrs. Bernard Beere under the title of "Ariane" in the same year; "The Romance of a Station" was published in 1890. She has also written, in collaboration with Mr. Justin McCarthy, "The Right Honourable," published in 1886; "The Rival Princess," first published anonymously as "The Rebel Rose," 1888; and "The Ladies' Gallery," 1889.

PREECE, William Henry, F.R.S., M.I.C.E., &c., was born in Carnarvon, on Feb. 15, 1834. He was educated at King's College, London, passing through the School and College. He first entered the engineering office of Mr. Edwin Clark in 1852, passing the next year into the Electric and International Telegraph Company, and became, three years later, superintendent of their southern district. In 1858 he was appointed engineer to the Channel Islands Telegraph Company, and in 1860 superintendent of telegraphs to the London and South Western Company. On the transfer of the telegraphs to the State, he became a Divisional Engineer, and in 1877 was promoted to the post of Chief Electrician, which he still holds. His researches for the advancement of electricity, his practical inventions and his repute as a speaker and lecturer have made his name familiar to many outside the scientific world. He is a prominent member of many of the learned societies, including the Royal Society, the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Electrical Engineers (of which he is a past President), the Physical Society, the Royal Institution, the British Association and the Society of Arts. Mr. Preece has patented many inventions, though of late years his work is lost in that of his department at the General Post Office. These include a new method of duplex telegraphy, 1855; a new mode of "terminating" wires, 1858; working miniature signals by electricity to assimilate electric signals with outdoor signals on railways, 1862; the application of electricity to domestic telegraph purposes, 1864; the application of electricity for signalling between different parts of a train in motion, 1861; locking signals on railways by means of electricity, 1865; a new telephone, 1878, &c. He introduced both the telephone and the phonograph into England. Mr. Preece has written, in conjunction with Mr. Sive-wright, a "Text-book of Telegraphy," which is in general use, and also a book on the Telephone, with Dr. Julius Maier; he has edited several works and given at various scientific meetings numerous papers on telegraphy, lightning conductors, the telephone, the phonograph, electric lighting, and various aspects of electricity, too numerous to mention.

PRENDERGAST, General Sir Harry North Dalrymple, F.C., K.C.B., born Oct. 15, 1834, served with the Sappers and Miners in Persia in 1857; was present at the bombardment of Mohum-rah, and served with the Malwa Field Force. He gained the Victoria Cross for conspicuous bravery on Sept. 23, 1858, at Mundisore, where he was severely wounded; he served throughout the Central India Campaign under Sir Hugh Rose, and was severely wounded at Jhansi Jhansi. In the Abyssinian War

he commanded the detachment of three companies of Madras Sappers and Miners. He was Field Engineer during the advance, and was present at the action before Magdala. During Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty he was appointed an honorary Aide-de-camp, and has since held many military commands in Madras. When the ultimatum was despatched to King Theebaw, and it was seen that war with Upper Burmah was inevitable, he was appointed to the command of the expeditionary force, and lost no time in dispatching his troops to the frontier. On the King's refusal to the terms proposed, General Prendergast issued a proclamation declaring that as no improvement could be hoped for in the "condition of affairs in Upper Burmah, the Government of India had decided that his Majesty should cease to reign." The expedition proceeded up the River Irrawady, and the troops were engaged at Nyanargben Maw, Guegyaun Kamyo Minhla, Nyaungoo, Pakoko and Myingyan. He reached Mandalay on Nov. 28, 1885, and with his troops surrounded the city and palace. The next day the King surrendered. General Prendergast was created a C.B. in May, 1875, and K.C.B., Dec., 1885. Sir Harry Prendergast afterwards commanded all the forces in Burmah, and has since been employed as Resident at Travancore and at Mysore, and as Governor General's Agent in Beluchistan and at Baroda, where he is now serving.

PRESSENSÉ, Edmond de, D.D., a Protestant minister, born in Paris, Jan. 27, 1824, pursued his studies in that city, at Lausanne, under Professor Vinet, and at the University of Halle and Berlin. On his return to Paris he was appointed pastor of the Taitbout Chapel, where he soon gained a high reputation as a preacher. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Breslau in 1863, and from that of Edinburgh in 1884. He sat in the National Assembly as a deputy for the department of the Seine from July, 1871, till the close of the year 1875, was elected a Life Senator, Nov. 17, 1883, and member of the Institute, Jan., 1890. Of his numerous works the following have been translated into English:—"The Religions before Christ, being an introduction to the History of the Three First Centuries of the Church, translated by L. Corkran," 8vo, Edinburgh, 1862; "The Land of the Gospel: Notes of a Journey in the East," 8vo, London, 1865; "Jesus Christ: his Times, Life and Work," translated by Annie Harwood, 8vo, London, 1866, 2nd edit. 1868, 3rd edit. 1869; "The Redeemer: Discourses," 8vo, Edinburgh, 1864, 8vo, Boston (U.S.), 1867; "The Mystery of Suffering, and Discourses," translated by Annie Harwood, 8vo, London, 1868; "The Church and the French Revolution, a History of the Relations of Church and State, from 1789 to 1802, translated by T. Stroyan," 8vo, London, 1869; "The Early Years of Christianity," translated by A. Harwood, 8vo, London, 1869; "A Study of Origen," translated by A. H. Holmden, 1883.

PRESSENSÉ, M^{me}. de, wife of the above, was born and brought up in Switzerland, and belongs to an old family of French refugees. Her father, M. du Plessis, had in his youth passed several years in Paris at the time when the great actor Talma was reviving on the stage the French classic dramatists. He retained the love of Racine and Corneille which he had then imbibed, and often in his walks amidst the lovely scenery of the Canton de Vaud, where every break in the foliage affords a glimpse of the Alps, sparkling with snow, and of the blue lake, he would stop to repeat to his children some passage of his favourite authors. M^{lle}. du Plessis had thus the rare privilege of being brought up in the full enjoyment both of nature and of intellectual culture. Whilst still quite young she began to render her impressions in verse, and she kept her soul open to everything that was noble and beautiful. At the age of eighteen she went to stay at Lausanne. This pretty little town was at that moment singularly favoured. St. Beuve, the great French critic, was giving a course of lectures, which afterwards became his admirable "History of Port-Royal;" Vinet, one of the first thinkers of our time, was exercising there a vivifying influence. It was for Lausanne one of those hours of expansion which occasionally strike for nations as well as for individuals. It was here that M^{lle}. du Plessis met her future husband, who was to take her to live in France. M. de Pressensé had come to Lausanne for his theological studies. He thence returned to Paris, where he was to begin his pastoral career. M^{me}. de Pressensé was no longer quite young when her first book, "Rosa," appeared. She began to write with much diffidence, and only, as it were, in a tentative way. The success of this volume must have revealed to her her vocation as a writer, and it was followed at rapid intervals by others equally successful. There is nothing, perhaps, so difficult as to write for children, to speak to them in a simple and natural language which is at the level of their understanding without becoming insipid and affected; to amuse them, to interest them, and to address oneself to their conscience without assuming a sermonising tone. It seems to be a natural gift and one that cannot be acquired. This gift M^{me}. de Pressensé possesses in a high degree. The following are some of M^{me}. de Pressensé's juvenile books:—"La joyeuse Niché," "La Maison Blanche," "Bois-gentil," "Seulette," "Le Pré aux Saules," "Petit Monde d'Enfants," and "Petite Mère," which is perhaps the most touching book that M^{me}. de Pressensé has written. But she has not written for children only; she has also addressed herself to another public. "Sabine," and "Gertrude de Chanzanne" are two novelettes forming one volume. "Geneviève" has been very severely judged in some quarters, but there can be no doubt that it appeals to our most generous instincts and that it is, moreover, full of vivid pictures, and observations both subtle and just, respecting the corner of Paris to which it takes us. The poems of M^{me}. de Pressensé have obtained the rare success (for poems) of going through a large number of editions. But alas! the fatal year 1870 came with its deadly war, and 1871, with its yet more mortal anguish, the criminal excesses of the Commune, and the cruel repressions of Versailles. These are sufferings which even poetry is powerless to charm away, and for which silence is best. M^{me}. de Pressensé ceased to write poetry, but she then started a work in one of the poorest and most populous quarters of Paris, which, albeit small and humble in its beginnings, increased from day to day. Schools, workrooms, and infant schools have been founded by M^{me}. de Pressensé.

PRESTWICH, Joseph, D.C.L., F.R.S., the descendant of an old Lancashire family, was born at Pensbury, Clapham, near London, March 12, 1812. He was educated at various preparatory schools, and in Paris, and finally at University College, London. Mr. Prestwich's first works were papers on the Gamrie Ichthyolites, and Shells in the Till of Banffshire, and on the Geology of Coalbrook Dale, published in the Transactions of the Geological Society, 1835; this was followed by a series of papers on Tertiary Geology, published in the Journal of the Geological Society, and by two papers on the Quaternary beds of the valley of the Somme, published in the Philosophical Transactions, in which he was the first to show on sufficient geological evidence the certainty of the fact, of the Contemporaneity of man with the extinct mammalia. He is also the author of a little work on the geology of the neighbourhood of London, entitled "The Ground beneath us," as well as of a more elaborate work, "The Water-bearing Strata of the Country around London." In 1849 the Geological Society awarded him the Wollaston Medal for his researches on the Coalfield of Coalbrook Dale, and those on the tertiary districts of London and Hampshire. In 1865 the Royal Society awarded him a Royal Medal for his contributions to geological science, and more especially for his paper in the Philosophical Transactions "On the Occurrence of Flint Implements associated with the remains of animals of extinct species in beds of a late geological period in France and in England;" and that "On the Theoretical Considerations on the Conditions under which the Drift deposits containing the remains of extinct Mammalia and Flint Implements were accumulated, and on their geological age." He served on the Royal Coal Commission of 1866; and on the Royal Commission on Water Supply of 1867. He was President of the Geological Society 1870-72; Vice-President of the Royal Society 1870-71. In 1874 the Institution of Civil Engineers awarded him a Telford Medal and Premium for his paper on the "Geological Conditions affecting the Construction of a Tunnel between England and France." He was appointed Professor of Geology at Oxford, June 29, 1874, in succession to the late Professor Phillips, and his inaugural lecture was published under the title of "The Past and Future of Geology," 1875. In 1876, in investigating the conditions for a better water-supply, he pointed out that there was under Oxford an abundant source of mineral water, allied to, but stronger than those of Cheltenham and Leamington. In 1876 also his elaborate paper on "Submarine Temperatures," which reviewed all that had been done before the Challenger expedition, appeared in the Philosophical Transactions. The verata questio of the "Parallel Roads of Glen Roy" next engaged his attention, and this was followed by several other papers, amongst which may be mentioned those on "Underground Temperatures" and on "Volcanic Action." In 1885 he was elected by the Institute of France a Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences. In 1886, the 1st vol. (Chemical and Physical) of his work on "Geology" was published by the Clarendon Press. The 2nd vol. (Stratigraphical and Palæontological)

with a Geological Map of Europe, appeared in 1888. In the same year the University of Oxford conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.C.L. He was elected President of the "Congrès Géologique International," which held its 4th Session in London in Sept., 1888. His latest papers read at the Geological Society of London, relate to the Pre-glacial Drifts of the South of England, with a view to determine a base for the Quaternary series, and to ascertain the period of the genesis of the Thames.

PRICE (Professor), The Rev. Bartholomew, M.A., F.R.S., son of the late Rev. William Price, Rector of Coln St. Dennis, Gloucestershire, where he was born in 1818, was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, and graduated B.A. in 1840, taking first-class honours in mathematics. He was elected Fellow of his college, and was afterwards appointed Tutor, and has several times been one of the Public Examiners in Mathematical and Physical Science. He was appointed Sedleian Professor of Natural Philosophy at Oxford in 1853, and is a member of the Hebdomadal Council, a Delegate of the Clarendon Press, a Curator of the Bodleian Library, an honorary Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, a member of the Governing Body of Winchester College, and a visitor of Greenwich Observatory. He is the author of a work on the Infinitesimal Calculus, including separate treatises on Differential Calculus, Integral Calculus, Statics, and Dynamics, published at the Clarendon Press in 1854-59. Professor Price was for many years Secretary of the Clarendon Press, and on his resignation in 1885, was succeeded by Mr. P. Lyttelton Gell.

PRIESTLEY, William Overend, M.D., LL.D., born near Leeds, Yorkshire, June 24, 1829, is the son of Joseph Priestley, Esq., grand-nephew of the celebrated chemist, Joseph Priestley, LL.D. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh, and took the degree of M.D. in 1853. The hon. degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1884. Besides other academic distinctions, he was Senate Gold Medallist at his graduation, this being the highest honour of the University, and awarded only for original researches. Settling in London as a physician in 1856, he became one of the lecturers at the Grosvenor Place School of Medicine. Somewhat later he was appointed Lecturer on Midwifery at the Middlesex Hospital, and in 1862 Professor of Obstetric Medicine in King's College, London, and Physician to King's College Hospital.

He is now Consulting Physician to King's College Hospital. Dr. Priestley is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians both in London and in Edinburgh, a Fellow of the Linnean Society, a Fellow of King's College, a Member of the Council of King's College, and member of various learned societies. He has held the office of Examiner for the prescribed term of years in the University of London, the Royal College of Physicians, and the Royal College of Surgeons, the University of Cambridge and the Victoria University. In 1875 and 1876 he was President of the Obstetrical Society of London. Dr. Priestley is the author of works "On the Development of the Gravid Uterus," "On the Pathology of Intra-Uterine Death," and joint editor of Sir J. Y. Simpson's "Obstetric Works;" and has written various papers on natural history and medicine. He was one of the Physicians-Accoucheurs of H.R.H. the late Princess Louis of Hesse (Alice of Great Britain), having been commissioned by the Queen to attend her daughter at Darmstadt. He is also one of the Physicians-Accoucheurs of H.R.H. the Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein.

PRITCHARD, The Rev. Charles, D.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., born about 1808, graduated B.A., in 1830 as fourth Wrangler at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which society he was elected a Fellow. He is well known in the scientific world, and has written various treatises, many of which are published in the Transactions of the Royal Astronomical Society. Amongst these may be mentioned, "A Treatise on Statical Couples," "On the Figure of the Earth," "On the Conjunctions of Jupiter and Saturn," and a "Paper on an Improved Method of using Mercury for Astronomical Purposes." He wrote the article, "The Star of the Magi," in the Biblical Dictionary, and several sermons; more particularly one preached before the British Association at Nottingham in 1866. He is the author of several articles in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. He was elected President of the Royal Astronomical Society in Jan., 1866; Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge in Feb., 1867; and Savilian Professor of Astronomy at Oxford, Feb. 10, 1870. Many of his writings have been collected into a volume entitled "Occasional Thoughts of an Astronomer on Nature and Revelation," 1890. At his urgency the University of Oxford has recently erected an Observatory, provided with lecture-rooms and all necessary appliances for the instruction of the students, and for original researches. In 1886 he was awarded the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society for his "Uranometria Nova Oxoniensis," and was elected Hon. Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

PROCTOR, The Hon. Redfield, American Statesman, was born, June 1, 1831, at Proctorsville, Vermont (a town founded by his grandfather). He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1851 and at the Albany Law School in 1859, and began the practice of his profession in Boston. At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the Union Army as a Lieutenant and had risen to the rank of Colonel when mustered out in 1863. He resumed his law practice in Rutland, Vermont; was sent to the State Legislature (lower branch) in 1867 and 1868; and in 1869 became manager of the Sutherland Falls Marble Co. He was a member of the Vermont Senate in 1874; was elected Lieut.-Governor of the State in 1876; and Governor in 1878; and was a Delegate to the Republican National Conventions in 1884 and 1888. On the organization of President Harrison's Administration in March, 1889, Mr. Proctor was appointed Secretary of War, a Cabinet position which he still holds.

He was educated at Marlborough, and afterwards became scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, and B.A. (2nd class Classical Tripos) 1865. He was Assistant Master to Dr. Bradley at Marlborough, 1865 to 1867; served as Curate of St. Giles in the Fields, 1868; and during his tenure of the Rectory of Kirkby Wiske, 1868 to 1888, was chaplain successively to Bishops Bickersteth and Carpenter. In 1888 he was appointed Suffragan to the Bishop of Ripon, and Rector of Stanhope in Weardale. The title of Bishop of Penrith, which he received at his consecration, was afterwards changed by Royal Warrant to Bishop of Richmond under the Bishops-Suffragan Nomination Act, 1889.

PULLING, Alexander, Serjeant-at-law, son of the late Capt. G. C. Pulling, R.N., born at St. Arvan's, Monmouthshire, Dec. 1, 1813, was educated at a private school, and afterwards at Merchant Taylors' School, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1843 was made a Serjeant-at-law, 1863; and became one of the leaders of the South Wales Circuit. He was appointed a revising barrister in 1857, a magistrate for Gloucestershire in 1867, frequently acting as Deputy-Judge of County Courts, and Judge under the Welsh Circuit Commissions. Serjeant Pulling originated the useful reform in our law reporting system, which is now carried out by the Council of Law Reporting. He was also a working member of the Law Amendment Society until its amalgamation with the Social Science Association. In 1855 he was appointed to act as senior commissioner in carrying into effect the Metropolis Management Act; and in 1866 was an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of Boston. Serjeant Pulling is the author of the "Treatise on the Laws, Customs, and Franchises of the City of London," 1842; and his work "The Order of the Coif," 1883, is well known; he is also the author of other works, and of pamphlets on local government, private bill legislation, corrupt practices at elections, trial by jury, reform of the law reports, crime and criminals, public prosecutor; likewise articles in the Edinburgh Review and Law Review and Magazine.

PUVIS DE CHAVANNES, Pierre, a French painter, was born at Lyons, Dec. 14, 1824. He became a pupil of Henri Scheffer and Couture, and devoted himself specially to mural and decorative painting. His first considerable work was a series of five compositions intended for the dining-room of his brother. One of these "Un Retour de Chasse," was exhibited at the Salon of 1859. In 1861 he exhibited "La Paix" and "La Guerre." These two subjects won for him his first public success. They were destined for the Museum at Amiens; and two others of the same series, "Le Travail" and "Le Repos," appeared at the Salon of 1863. These decorations were completed by eight symbolical figures and an allegorical representation of the Department of the Somme, "Ave Picardia Nutrix," 1865. He has also exhibited "L'Automne," 1864; "La Nuit," which attracted great attention; "La Vigilance" and "La Fantaisie," 1866; "Le Jeu," 1868; "Massilia, Colonie Grecque," and "Marseille, Porte de l'Orient," executed for the Museum of Marseilles, 1869. In 1872 "L'Espérance," in 1874 "Charles Martel, vainqueur des Sarrasins," "Rade-gonde au couvent de Ste. Croix" (staircase of the Poitiers Museum); 1875, "La famille du pêcheur." From 1873 to 1878 "Scènes de la vie de St. Geneviève," for the Panthéon. In 1881 he exhibited

"Le pauvre Pêcheur;" in the Salon in 1882, "Doux pays," and the great composition "Pro Patrie Ludus" (staircase of the Amiens Museum), which won him the medaille d'honneur. In 1884 "Bois sacré," to which must subsequently be added three other compositions, "Vision Antique," "Inspiration Chrétienne," and "Le Rhône et le Saône." These four compositions are placed in the staircase of the Museum of Lyons. From 1886 to 1889 M. Puvis de Chavannes has painted the large hemicycle of the Sorbonne; and in 1890 "Inter Artes et Naturam" for the staircase of the Rouen Museum.

QUATREFAGES DE BRION, Jean Louis Armand de, born at Valleraugne (Gard), France, Feb. 10, 1810, of an old Protestant family, of which several members fled to England after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He completed his education at Strasburg, where he took the degree of M.D., and began to write on subjects of natural philosophy as early as 1829. In 1839 he was called to the chair of Zoology at Toulouse and took the degree of Doctor of Natural Science, but soon resigned that appointment and went to Paris. In 1842, and after having travelled round the coasts of Italy and Sicily, he contributed some papers on natural history to the Revue des Deux Mondes, republished in 1854 under the title of "Souvenirs d'un Naturaliste." He was nominated Professor of Natural History in the Lycée Napoléon in 1850, and was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences, April 26, 1852. He was called to the chair of Anthropology in the Museum of Natural History in Paris in 1855, and was promoted Commander of the Legion of Honour, Aug. 14, 1863. One of his latest works has been translated into English by Isabella Innes, under the title of "The Prussian Race Ethnologically Considered," to which is appended, "Some Account of the Bombardment of the Museum of Natural History by the Prussians in Jan., 1871," London, 1872. He has since published "L'Espèce Humaine," 1877, which has been translated into English, Italian and German. R.

RAE, John, L.R.C.S., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.G.S., Honorary Correspondent of the Geographical Society of America, Honorary Member of the National History Society of Montreal, Founder's Gold Medallist, R.G.S., was born at the "Hall of Clestrain" in the Orkney Islands, and up to sixteen years of age was educated by tutors at home. In the autumn of 1829 he began the study of medicine at the University of Edinburgh; and after the usual course of study, took his degree as Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons in the spring of 1833, before he was twenty years of age. Almost immediately afterwards, he was appointed Surgeon to the Hudson's Bay Company's ship which annually visits Moose Factory, on the shores of Hudson's Bay. In 1845 he accepted the command of an expedition in two small boats to the Arctic seas, to endeavour to complete the survey of some 700 miles of coast forming the shores of a large bay which Parry, in 1822-23 with two ships and crews of 100 or 120 men, failed to accomplish. In June, 1846, Rae and a party of ten men set out from York Factory for the North, in two small boats carrying only four months' provisions but no fuel, on a voyage of 900 miles, during which much dangerous obstruction by ice was met with; the party reached latitude 66° 32' N. in Repulse Bay, which was the actual starting point of the survey, and wintered there, during which the temperature often fell to 35° to 40° below zero. Early in April foot journeys were commenced and carried out to the extent of over 1,300 miles by which 700 miles of new coast line were surveyed, practically uniting the surveys of Ross on Boothia with Parry's explorations at the Strait of the Fury and Hecla. A month or two after arriving in London, Rae was offered, and after some consideration accepted, the place of second in command under Sir John Richardson, an old comrade of Franklin, to search for him. Boats and men, sappers, miners, and sailors, with four boats had been sent out to York Factory in 1847, and were overtaken en route by Sir John and Rae, who left England in the early spring of 1848. On the 13th day Fort Confidence on Great Bear Lake, lat. 66° 54' N. (winter quarters) was reached, after coasting in three boats, all the Arctic shores from the McKenzie River eastward to the Coppermine River without finding a trace of the lost expedition. In the spring Sir John Richardson set out for England, and Rae as soon as the navigation opened descended the Coppermine River with a single boat and crew of five men, the object being to cross over to Wollaston Land, which the ice prevented being done in the previous autumn. Next season Rae was appointed to command another search expedition to the Arctic coast, with no instructions, beyond telling him to take the route he thought best. In spring, to utilize the time before the navigation opened, Rae and two men made a sledge journey to and along the coast, searching every corner along the shore of Wollaston Land. This journey was over 1,100 miles, and the average day's march was 25 miles, Rae himself hauling a light sledge of from 50 to 75 lbs. weight, with which he travelled a good many miles further than his more heavily laden men, as he followed the turns and windings of all bays and inlets. The whole shore eastward of the Coppermine for 300 miles was examined; then the south shore of Wollaston Land, the part that had not been seen in spring, and of Victoria Land were minutely searched; also Victoria Strait, in which it was afterwards found that Franklin's ships had been abandoned, was discovered and named, the searching party getting north to about the latitude in which the ships were icebound. In early winter snowshoes were mounted, and with sledges on which to haul provisions the party marched continuously for 1,350 miles at the average daily rate of 27 miles, to Fort Garry, now Winnipeg; thence Rae and two of his men, aided by dogs, travelled to Crow-Wing in the United States, 450 miles in ten days, having thus been something like eight months continually at hard work, either sledge-hauling on the coast, travelling by boat and snowshoes, making a distance of 5,380 miles, only about 700 of which was new discovery, for which and the survey of 1847, the Founder's Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society was awarded in 1852. There being still a considerable portion of the Arctic coast of America unexplored, Rae, on his return to England, proposed to the Hudson's Bay Company to fit out another boat expedition, for the purpose of tracing the west coast of Boothia as far north as Bellot Strait, and uniting the surveys of Sir James Ross and Dease and Simpson. The company agreed to this proposal, but only on the understanding that he himself would take command. Two boats were prepared at York factory; and Rae, leaving England early in the spring of 1853, and travelling rapidly in a canoe through the rivers and lakes, reached that place sufficiently soon to take advantage of the first navigable sea along the coast northward. As in 1846, Rae was sole officer. No Eskimos having made their appearance, which had been depended upon for getting dogs, the sledge party started early in spring, five in all, including the interpreter, each hauling a sledge, that of Rae being much lighter than the others, as he had sometimes to make long detours. Sir James Ross's survey and that of Dease and Simpson were united, and King William's Land proved to be an island, instead of being part of the main shore as before supposed. In this expedition, sledge journeys of over 1,100 miles were made, about 400 of which were new discoveries. These two Hudson's Bay Co.'s expeditions, 1846-47 and 1853-54, cost respectively under £1,400 and £1,600. The work done on these and on those of 1848 and 1850-51 under Government control consisted of over 23,000 miles by lake and river, by sea along the coast, and on foot either sledging on the ice or on snowshoes over land. Of the above distance between 1,750 and 1,800 miles were new discoveries, laid down carefully by astronomical observations or by compass bearings. On visiting the Admiralty, Rae was told by the first Lord, Sir James Graham, that "his party was entitled to a reward of £10,000 for bringing the first information of the fate of the Franklin expedition (the first knowledge that Rae had of the subject), and that he would stand in his own light if he did not put in a claim for it." He put in a claim, which was acknowledged, and after some natural delay the money was paid. In 1860 Rae took the land part of the survey of a contemplated telegraph line to America viâ the Faroe Islands and Iceland, both which were traversed, the first from south to north, the latter from east to west. Then Greenland was visited and the great ice field examined for a few miles inland until a great crevasse was reached, which there was no intention of attempting to cross. The sea voyage was a chapter of accidents, and the little Fox and all on board had a very fortunate escape from destruction. In 1864 Rae commenced another telegraph survey from Winnipeg across the Rocky mountains through the Yellow Head Pass, which was found 13 miles wrong in latitude; the altitude of the pass was taken, and found to agree within a few feet with the more correct and complicated observations of the engineer, Mr. Sandford Fleming, who explored the route subsequently for the Canada Pacific Railway. Some hundreds of miles of the most dangerous part of the Fraser River were run down in small dug-out canoes, without any guide, a very unusual and perilous undertaking, but one that was successfully accomplished. Rae's publications are very few, consisting of a number of short papers on the Eskimos and other subjects; a brief narrative of the Arctic expedition of 1846-47; brief reports of his various expeditions addressed to the Royal Geographical Society, &c.

RAGONA, Professor Domenico, Director of the Royal Observatory in Modena, was born in Palermo on Jan. 20, 1820, and studied in that Royal University. He derived very great advantage from the private instruction of his maternal uncle Domenico Scina, a celebrated Sicilian scientist. Whilst still very young, after the death of Scina, he competed for and obtained the post of demonstrator and Assistant Professor of Physics at the University of Palermo. Afterwards he was appointed assistant at the Royal Observatory of Palermo. In 1851, after having carried out long and arduous astronomical and geodesical observations with regard to the triangulation of the province of Palermo, he was sent, at the expense of the government, to Germany for some years, in order to perfect himself in the science of astronomy. He had excellent theoretical and practical instructions in Berlin from Professor Encke, and in Bonn from Argelander. In Berlin he had the honour of enjoying the affection and esteem of the most celebrated Baron Alexander Humboldt, through whose powerful influence Ragona obtained a Merz's refractor of great dimensions, and one of Pistor and Martin's meridian-circles, instruments which now adorn the Observatory of Palermo. On his return after his long travels, and after having visited the principal observatories of Europe, he was appointed director of the Observatory of Palermo and Professor of Astronomy. He held that post up to 1860, and then was transferred to the Observatory of Modena, where he is still. As regards the astronomical works of Professor Ragona, it is sufficient to mention: The observations carried on in Berlin and published in the Transactions of that observatory; the numerous determinations of fixed stars, and principally of 30 fundamental or principal stars; the observations of a great number of planets and comets, published in the Bulletin International of Le Verrier and in the Astro-Meteorological Journal of Palermo; the invention of two new micrometers; the measurements of the diameters of various planets, published in the Memoirs of the Society of Natural Sciences of Cherbourg, &c.; the Ephemerides of Vesta for 1855, published in the Berlin Annals; the calculations of the orbits of planets and comets, printed separately, and in the above mentioned Astro-Meteorological Journal; the treatise on the theory of the equatorial; and the new formulæ for the calculations of the parallax. Among his works with regard to Physics, may be mentioned the notes on the phenomena of deflection causing the longitudinal lines or bands of the spectrum, published in Poggendorff's Annalen, and reproduced in the Philosophical Magazine; and the observations on some new subjective coloration discovered by Ragona, which observations were printed in many scientific journals of Europe, and mentioned by Helmholtz in his classical work, "Physiological Optics." Professor Ragona has published numerous papers on meteorology. They contain many new and fundamental laws in meteorology, especially his annual and diurnal periods of meteorological elements; on the daily oscillations in the declination of the magnetic needle; on the velocity of the wind; on nebulousity, &c., as also on the relation of meteorology to terrestrial magnetism. Professor Ragona has not only published many dissertations on various subjects relating to meteorology and magnetism, but what is much more, has also enriched these branches with many new instruments. Ragona founded the Italian Meteorological Society, and presided over it for the first three years; when he was succeeded by the illustrious Father Denza. Professor Ragona also translated from German into Italian the classical treatise on meteorology by Professor Mohn. Professor Ragona founded, in 1870, a network of meteorological field-stations in the province of Modena, the first in Italy provided with that useful arrangement. Professor Günther, in his account of the present state of practical meteorology, and Professor Kuhn, in his report to the Royal Academy of Sciences of Bavaria on some works of Ragona, count him among the most illustrious meteorologists of our time.

RAIKES, The Right Hon. Henry Cecil, M.P., P.C., eldest son of the late Mr. Henry Raikes of Llwynegrin, Flintshire, was born in 1838, and educated at Shrewsbury School, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1863, and elected a Bencher in 1880. From 1868 to 1880 he sat as a Conservative for Chester; afterwards for Preston until Nov., 1882, when he was elected one of the members for Cambridge University, which he has continued to represent up to the present time. From 1874 to 1880 he was Chairman of Ways and Means and Deputy-Speaker of the House of Commons, and became a Member of the Privy Council in 1880. In 1886 Lord Salisbury appointed him Postmaster-General. Mr. Raikes was from 1881-85 Chairman of the Mersey Railway Co. and of the Minas and Rio Railway. He was President of the Council of Diocesan Conferences, 1880-86.

RAILTON, Herbert, artist, was born Nov. 21, 1857, at Pleasington near Blackburn in Lancashire, and was educated at Mechlin in Belgium, and then at Ampleforth College in Yorkshire (Roman Catholic); he was articled to an architect, but gave up his profession, and came to London in the beginning of 1884 to try art work, since which time he has resided there; and has illustrated several books, viz., the greatest portion of "Windsor Castle," in 1886; the "Jubilee Edition of Pickwick," in 1887; "Coaching Days and Coaching Ways" (along with his well-known friend Hugh Thomson), in 1888; "Westminster Abbey," 1889; and has just completed a book to be called "Dreamland in History," the illustrations to which have been running in a series of articles by the Dean of Gloucester, in Good Words.

RAMSAY, Sir Andrew Crombie, LL.D., F.R.S., born in 1814, and educated at Glasgow, was appointed to the Geological Survey of Great Britain in 1841, and became Director of the same in 1845. He was nominated Professor of Geology at University College in 1848, Lecturer on Geology at the Royal School of Mines in 1851, and was President of the Geological Society in 1862 and 1863. He became F.R.S. in 1849; Knight of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus in 1862; LL.D. of Edinburgh; Neil Gold Medallist, Royal Society, Edinburgh, in 1866; and Wollaston Gold Medallist, Geological Society of London, 1871. In 1872 he was appointed Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, and of the Museum of Practical Geology. On retiring from these offices in 1881 he received the honour of knighthood. He presided over the meeting of the British Association which was held at Swansea in Aug., 1880. He is an Associate of many foreign societies, including the Academy of Sciences of Brussels, the American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia, the Royal Academy of Sciences, Turin, the Natural History Society of Switzerland, the Natural History Society of Neuchâtel, the American Society of Sciences, Boston, and of many British provincial societies. He has written "The Geology of Arran," "Geology of North Wales," 1858; "Old Glaciers of North Wales and Switzerland," 1860; "Physical Geology and Geography of Great Britain," 1878; and many miscellaneous memoirs, chiefly on theoretical questions in geology, some of which have been translated into German and Italian.

RAMSAY, Professor William, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born at Glasgow, Oct. 2, 1852; his father, of the same name, was a civil engineer, and subsequently Secretary to the Scottish Union and National Insurance Office; his mother, Catherine Robertson, was the daughter of Archibald Robertson, M.D., who practised in Edinburgh. William Ramsay was educated at the Glasgow Academy, up till his fifteenth year; and subsequently at Glasgow University. At the age of 19 he went to Tübingen to study chemistry under Professor Fittig, now at Strasburg, and graduated Ph.D. in 1872. From 1872 to 1874 he acted as Chief Assistant to the "Young" Chair of Technical Chemistry in Anderson's College, Glasgow; and from 1874 to 1880 as "Tutorial" Assistant to the Chemical Professor in Glasgow University. He was appointed Professor of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, in 1880; Principal of that College in 1881; was President of the Bristol Naturalists' Society from 1884 to 1887; was appointed to the Chemical Chair at University College, London, in 1887, which appointment he now holds. He was elected a Fellow of the German Chemical Society in 1872, of the Chemical Society of London in 1874; and is one of the original members of the Institute of Chemistry, and of the Society of Chemical Industry. He was elected a Fellow of the Physical Society in 1886, and of the Royal Society of London in 1888; and has served on the Councils of the Physical and Chemical Societies. He is the author of numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions, the Chemical Society's Transactions, and in other British and Foreign Journals; also of a Textbook of Inorganic Chemistry.

RANAVALO, Manjaka III., Queen of Madagascar; but the power is really in the hands of the Prime Minister, Rainilaiarivony, who is the husband of the Queen.

RANDEGGER, Signor Alberto, composer, conductor, and singing-master, was born at Trieste, April 13, 1832. He began the study of music, at the age of thirteen, under Lafont for the pianoforte and L. Ricci for composition; and soon began to write, and, by the year 1852, was known as the composer of several masses and smaller pieces of church music, and two ballets, "La Fidanzata di Castellamare," and "La Sposa d'Appenzello," both produced at the Teatro grande of his native town. In the latter year he joined three other of Ricci's pupils in the composition of a buffo opera to a libretto by Gaetano Rossi, entitled "Il Lazzarone," which had much success, first at the Teatro Maurona at Trieste, and then elsewhere. The next two years were occupied as musical director of theatres at Fiume, Zera, Sinigaglia, Brescia, and Venice. In the winter of 1854 he brought out a tragic opera in four acts, called "Bianca Capello," at the chief theatre at Brescia. At that time Signor Randegger was induced to come to London. He gradually took a high position there, and has become widely known as a teacher of singing, conductor and composer, and an enthusiastic lover of good music of whatever school or country. In 1864 he produced at the Theatre Royal, Leeds, "The Rival Beauties," a comic opera in two acts. In 1868 he became Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, and has since been a Director of that institution, and a Member of the Committee of Management. In the autumn of 1857 he conducted a series of Italian operas at St. James's Theatre; and in 1879-80 the Carl Rosa Company at Her Majesty's Theatre. He has since been appointed conductor of the Norwich Festival, vice Sir Julius Benedict resigned. Signor Randegger's published works are numerous and important.

RANDOLPH, The Rev. Francis Charles Hingeston. See HINGESTON-RANDOLPH.

RANSOME, Arthur, M.D., M.A. Cantab., F.R.S., the son of Joseph A. Ransome, twenty years surgeon to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, was born at Manchester on Feb. 11, 1834, and was educated at Manchester, Dublin, Cambridge, London and Paris. He took diploma as licentiate in midwifery, Dublin, 1853; M.R.C.S., 1855; L.S.A. 1856; M.B. Cambridge, 1858; M.D. Cambridge 1869; and was elected F.R.S. in 1885. When at Cambridge, at Gonville and Caius College, he was Carian Scholar in Anatomy and Physiology, and Mecklenburg Scholar in Chemistry. He obtained honours in Mathematics in the second class Senior Optimus in 1856; and first class in the Natural Science Tripos. He was Honorary Secretary and Lecturer in Physiology to the Working Men's College, Manchester, from 1857-60. He joined the Committee of the Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association in 1857; was Honorary Secretary in 1861 and 1862; Deputy-Chairman from 1874-80; and has been Chairman since 1880. During that period he has taken an active part in assisting the Association in the formation of the following institutions:—"The Nurse Training," "The North-Western Association for Medical Officers of Health," "Noxious Vapours Prevention Association," "The Day Nursery Association," and the "Children's Country Holiday Fund." He was instrumental in promoting weekly returns of sickness, which were for twenty years published by the Association. The success of the undertaking and Dr. Ransome's efforts, first as Honorary Secretary, and afterwards as Chairman of the Registration of Disease Committee, have materially forwarded the Notification of Infectious sickness throughout the country. In connection with this subject he wrote pamphlets on "Numerical Tests of the Health of Towns," "Epidemics studied by Means of Statistics of Disease," "Disease in St. Marylebone and Manchester," "Ten Years of Disease, between 1861 and 1870, in Manchester and Salford." To the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society he has contributed papers on the "Influence of Atmospheric Changes on Disease," "Atmospheric Pressure and its Relations to Disease, especially Hæmorrhages," "The Germination and Early Growth of Seeds," "On the Organic Matter of the Breath," "On Epidemic Cycles," and "On the Graphical Representation of Chest Movements." In the Proceedings of the Royal Society he has published papers on the "Movements of the Chest," and on the "Discovery of the Tubercle Bacillus in the Aqueous Vapour of the Breath." To the Epidemiological Society he has communicated papers published in their Transactions "On the Form of the Epidemic Wave," and "On Tubercular Infective Areas;" to the Medico-Chirurgical Society "On Respiratory Movements of Man," and "Observations on the Value of Stethometry in the Prognosis of Chest Diseases;" to the British Medical Association, and published in their journal, "On the Need of Combined Medical Observation," "On the Physiological Relations of Colloid Substances;" and numerous other papers. To the Health Journal he has contributed papers "On the Distribution of Death and Disease," and the "Causes of Consumption." He has published two larger works, one on "Stethometry" and the other on "Prognosis in Lung Disease." As President of the Health Section of the British Medical Association and in other capacities, he has delivered several addresses relating to "State Medicine," and before the Sanitary Institute he has lectured on the "Success of Sanitary Effort," and "On the Prevention of Phthisis." He was instrumental in organizing the Collective Investigation of Disease by the British Medical Association; and in 1875 his suggestions for an examination in Sanitary Science were adopted by the University of Cambridge; the result of which has ultimately been the issue of Diplomas in Public Health by all the universities of the Kingdom. He holds an appointment as Honorary Physician to the Manchester Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Throat; and in connection with this work has published papers "On the Influence of Iodoform upon the Body-weight in Phthisis;" "On the Value of the Bacillus Search," and "On the Use of Ozone in Phthisis." He was for two years Examiner for the second M.B. to the University of Cambridge, and for seven years for the Sanitary Science Certificates of the same University. He was, until 1890, Examiner in Hygiene and Public Health to the Victoria University, and lecturer on these subjects to the Owens College; and has been appointed Milroy Lecturer to the College of Physicians for the year 1890, his subject for four lectures being "The Etiology and Prevention of Phthisis."

RANYARD, Arthur Cowper, F.R.A.S., a son of Mrs. Ellen Ranyard, who wrote, under the initials L. N. R., "The Book and Its Story," "Life Work," "The Missing Link," and other popular religious books, was born at Swanscombe, Kent, June 21, 1845; took his B.A. degree (Cambridge) in Feb., 1868; and was called to the Bar (Lincoln's Inn), June 2, 1871. He was one of the principal movers in the foundation of the London Mathematical Society, of which he was, in conjunction with George De Morgan one of the first secretaries; the first president being Professor Augustus De Morgan. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in Nov., 1864. In 1870 he acted as one of the Secretaries of a Joint Committee of the Royal Society and Royal Astronomical Society which organized the expedition sent to Sicily, Spain, and Oran, to observe the Total Solar Eclipse of Dec. 21, 1870. On his way to Sicily, on board H.M. ship Psyche, he was wrecked off Arci Reali, but subsequently observed the eclipse near Agosta. On his return to England he undertook to assist Sir G. B. Airy in the preparation of the Report of the Observations which it was at first proposed to publish with the then unpublished Observations of the Total Eclipse of 1860. As the work progressed, it was found desirable to collate, for comparison, all the more important eclipse observations which had been made up to that date. The work was ultimately handed over by Sir G. B. Airy to Mr. Ranyard, who was occupied upon it till 1880, in which year it was published by the Royal Astronomical Society, as vol. 41 of its Memoirs. It includes a general discussion of Eclipse Observations up to the Total Eclipse of 1878. Mr. Ranyard was Secretary of the Royal Astronomical Society from Nov., 1873, to Feb., 1880. He observed the Total Eclipse of July 29, 1878, from Cherry Creek near Denver, Colorado, where he was encamped with the American Expedition under Professor C. A. Young; and the Total Eclipse of May, 1882, from Sohag, in Upper Egypt, where he went with a French Expedition. In addition to papers on the Corona and matters connected with Physical Astronomy, Mr. Ranyard has published papers on the "Early History of the Achromatic Telescope" and on "Photographic Action." In 1872 he undertook, in conjunction with Lord Crawford, a series of experiments on Photographic Irradiation, by which the true causes of the enlargement of the photographic image of a bright object with over exposure were discovered. In 1886 Mr. Ranyard showed, by a series of comparatively rough experiments, that the intensity of photographic action varies directly as the brightness of the object photographed, and directly as the time of the exposure. Thus a uniform light, acting for half an hour, gives the same photographic density as a quarter the light acting for two hours. On the death of Mr. R. A. Proctor in 1888, Mr. Ranyard undertook the Editorship of Knowledge, a monthly periodical chiefly devoted to Astronomy and Natural Science.

RASSAM, Hormuzd, was born in 1826, at Mossul, in Northern Mesopotamia, on the bank of the Tigris, opposite the site of ancient Nineveh. In 1845 he joined Mr. Layard to assist him in his Assyrian researches, and lived with him as his friend and guest for more than two years. When Mr. Layard returned to England in 1847, Mr. Rassam came with him to complete his studies at Oxford, but at the end of 1849 he was sent out by the British Museum authorities to assist Mr. Layard in his second undertaking. The history of this mission was published by Mr. Layard, in his "Nineveh and Babylon." The trustees having determined to carry on further researches, Mr. Layard commissioned Mr. Rassam to succeed him. During this expedition Mr. Rassam discovered in Nineveh the palace of Assur-Beni-Pal, who is commonly known by the name of Sardanapalus, in which there were found the beautiful sculptures representing the lion hunt, now in the British Museum, with many other remarkable antiquities relating to the history of the Assyrian monarchy. The funds available for the researches having come to an end, Mr. Rassam returned to England in 1854. After this he held a political appointment at Aden. When the quarrel took place in 1861 between the Imam of Muscat and his brother, the Sultan of Zanzibar, Mr. Rassam was chosen by Lord Elphinstone, the Governor of Bombay, to represent the British Government at Muscat while the Governor-General of India was trying to act as a mediator between the brothers. He also received the special thanks of the Supreme Government of India, with a substantial present for the services he rendered to the State during the Indian Mutiny. When the news reached the Foreign Office in 1864 that Consul Cameron and other European gentlemen had been imprisoned and ill-treated by Theodore, King of Abyssinia, Mr. Rassam was chosen by the British Government to proceed to the court of that monarch with a letter from the Queen asking for the release of the captives. He accordingly went to Massowah, the port of Abyssinia, whence he wrote to Theodore for a safe conduct; and after having waited there more than a year, he was invited by the king to proceed to his court. Mr. Rassam was accompanied by Lieutenant Prideaux and Dr. Blanc, of the Bombay army, and they were received with every mark of distinction and honour. It seemed at one time that Mr. Rassam's mission would be crowned with success, but through Theodore's eccentricity, coupled with intrigue from other quarters, it was doomed to disappointment. Hopeful as Mr. Rassam was at first of procuring the liberation of Consul Cameron and the other captives, he was himself arrested with his suite, and the three were sent as prisoners with the old captives to Magdala, where they were kept in chains for nearly two years. After the old captives, Consul Cameron and his fellow prisoners, had undergone about four years' rigorous confinement—and Mr. Rassam and his companions shared their fate for nearly two years and a half—they were ultimately set free by Theodore on the Easter Eve of 1868, after his defeat the day before by the British force under the command of Sir Robert Napier, at Arogay, below Magdala. Mr. Rassam published a narrative of the "British Mission to Theodore, King of Abyssinia, with Notices of the Country traversed from Massowah through the Soudan, the Amhara, and back to Amnesty Bay from Magdala," 2 vols., London, 1869. In 1876 he was selected by the trustees of the British Museum to conduct the Assyrian Explorations under a Firman granted to him by the Ottoman Government, through the influence of Sir Henry Layard, who was then acting as Her Majesty's ambassador at Constantinople. From that time until July, 1882, he conducted the British National Archæological researches in Assyria, Armenia, and Babylonia; during which time he succeeded in securing for the British Museum important relics connected with the history of those three great ancient kingdoms, amongst which he discovered in a small mound called "Balauat," in the vicinity of Nineveh, a magnificent pair of bronze gates, twenty feet high, forming a memorial of the wars of Shalmenesar III., B.C. 850. The rich embossed bronzes are now in the British Museum. He also discovered, amongst other sites, the great cities of Sippara, or Sepharvaim, and Cuthah, situated in Southern Mesopotamia.

During the Turko-Russian war he was sent by the British Foreign Office on a special mission to Asia Minor, Armenia, and Kurdistan, to inquire into the condition of the different Christian communities, who were said to be maltreated by their Moslem fellow-countrymen.

RAVENSTEIN, Ernest George, geographer and statistician, was born at Frankfurt-on-Main, Dec. 30, 1834; and held an appointment in the Topographical and Statistical Department of the War Office, 1855-74. He has published "The Russians on the Amur" (London, 1861); "Geographie und Statistik des britischen Reiches" (Leipzig, 1862); "London," one of Meyer's Handbooks for Travellers (first edition, 1870); "London and the British Isles, an Itinerary Guide" (London, 1877); "The Laws of Migration" (London, 1878); "Englischer Sprachführer" (Leipzig, 1884); and various papers in the Journals of the Royal Geographical and Statistical Societies, &c. He is likewise the compiler of numerous maps, including one of Eastern Equatorial Africa, in 25 sheets, published by the Royal Geographical Society; another of British East Africa, issued by authority of the Imperial British East Africa Company. Mr. Ravenstein was one of the founders of the German Gymnastic Society, 1861, was its President during the first ten years of its existence, and published a "Handbook of Gymnastics and Athletics," London, 1864.

RAWLINSON, Professor The Rev. George, M.A., F.R.G.S., third son of A. T. Rawlinson, Esq., of Chadlington, Oxon., born about 1815, was educated at Swansea Grammar School, and at Ealing School; entered Trinity College, Oxford, in 1835; took a first class in classics in 1838; and was elected a Fellow of Exeter College in 1840. He obtained the Denyer prize for a Theological Essay in 1842, and again in 1843; and having held for some years a Tutorship in his College, was appointed Moderator in 1852; became Public Examiner in 1854, again in 1856, 1868, and 1874; and preached the Bampton Lecture in 1859. He was elected without a contest to the Camden Professorship of Ancient History in the University in 1861, and took an active part in the agitation which preceded the passing of the Oxford University Act, in favour of the changes then effected. In Sept., 1872, he was appointed a Canon of Canterbury by the Crown; and in 1888 was presented by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury to the Rectory of All Hallows,

Lombard Street, London. He has written (in conjunction with his brother, Sir Henry Rawlinson, and Sir G. Wilkinson) "The History of Herodotus," a new English version, with copious notes, 1858-60; and also, independently, "The Historical Evidences of the Truth of the Scripture Records, in Eight Lectures delivered in the Oxford University Pulpit, at the Bampton Lecture for 1859," published in 1860; "The Contrasts of Christianity with Heathen and Jewish Systems, in Nine Sermons preached before the University of Oxford on various occasions," 1861; "The Five Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World," 4 vols., 1862-67; "A Manual of Ancient History," 1869; "The Sixth Great Oriental Monarchy; or, the Geography, History, and Antiquities of Parthia," 1873; "The Seventh Great Oriental Monarchy; or, the Geography, History, and Antiquities of the Sassanian or New Persian Empire, collected and illustrated from Ancient and Modern Sources," in 1876; a "History of Ancient Egypt," 2 vols., in 1881; a "History of Phœnicia," in 1889; and other, smaller, works. Professor Rawlinson contributed an essay, the subject being "The Genuineness and Authenticity of the Pentateuch," to "Aids to Faith," edited by Dr. Thomson, in reply to "Essays and Reviews;" and was a large contributor to Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible." He wrote the article on "Herodotus" in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. He supplied the comments on Kings, Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and the two Books of Maccabees, to "The Speaker's Commentary;" that on Exodus to the Bishop of Gloucester's "Commentary on the Old Testament;" and those on Exodus, 2 Kings, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and Isaiah to the "Homiletic Commentary" of Dean Spence and Mr. Exell. He held the office of Classical Examiner under the Council of Military Education from 1859 to 1870. He has been Proctor in Convocation for the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury since 1873. He was selected a Member of the Athenæum Club, as the representative of Literature, in 1870, and is a Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of Turin.

RAWLINSON, Sir Henry Creswicke, Bart., G.C.B., F.R.S., D.C.L. Oxon., LL.D. Cantab., K.L.S., brother of the Rev. George Rawlinson, born at Chadlington, Oxfordshire, in 1810, was educated at Ealing School, served in the Bombay army from 1827 till 1833, was sent to Persia in Nov., 1833, and between that time and Dec., 1839, was actively employed in various parts of that country. He held high commands, and did good service in re-organising a body of Persian troops; was granted a commission as Major in Persia in 1836, and received the Second Class of the Order of the Lion and Sun. When the rupture with Persia compelled our officers to withdraw from that country, he proceeded through Scinde to Afghanistan, and in June, 1840, was appointed political agent at Kandahar, having been previously under orders for Khiva to meet Perofsky's expedition then on the march. Throughout the troubles that ensued he held the southern capital of the Afghans safe from all intrigues within and attacks without, and was repeatedly mentioned by General Nott for his services in the field, and was made C.B. for his military services at that period. He returned with the avenging army through Cabul and the Punjab to India, to reappear in 1843, on the ground he had before occupied, having been appointed political agent in Turkish Arabia, on the part of the Government of India. In March, 1844, he was named Consul for Bagdad; in 1850, was promoted to the rank of Lieut.-Col. in Turkey; in 1851, was made Consul-General, but resigned that post in Feb., 1855, and, returning to England, was made a Crown Director of the East India Company. In 1856 he retired from the Indian service, and was made K.C.B. (Civil). Two years later he became a Member of the Council of India from Sept., 1858, to the following April, when he was sent as Envoy to the court of Teheran, with the local rank of Major-General. Sir Henry, who is a F.R.S., Honorary D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Cambridge and Edinburgh, a Chevalier of the "Order of Merit" in Prussia, and "Associé étranger" of the French Institute, is the author of various papers on the antiquities of the East, and on the interpretation of the cuneiform inscriptions of Persia, Assyria, and Babylonia, in the Journals of the Geographical and Asiatic Societies; also of "England and Russia in the East: a series of papers on the Political and Geographical Condition of Central Asia," 1875. He was Member for Reigate, in the Liberal interest, from Feb. to Sept., 1858, and was returned for Frome at the general election in July, 1865. Having represented that borough for three years, he withdrew at the general election in 1868, and was re-appointed a Member of the Council of India. He was appointed a Trustee of the British Museum, in the place of the late Sir David Dundas, in March, 1878.

On May 25, 1882, he was elected a foreign honorary member of the Vienna Imperial Academy of Sciences, in place of the late Mr. Darwin, and has also received diplomas from most of the Oriental and Antiquarian Societies of Europe and America. He is, further, K.L.S. (First Class), and has received the Star of the Duráni Empire. He was selected by the Government to attend upon the Shah of Persia during His Majesty's two visits to England in 1873 and 1889. In 1889 he received the Grand Cross of the Bath (Civil Division), and finally in 1891 was created a Baronet "in recognition of his distinguished service to the State, stretching over a long series of years."

RAWLINSON, Sir Robert, K.C.B., civil engineer, born in Bristol, Feb. 28, 1810, is the son of Thomas Rawlinson, of Chorley, Lancashire, and Grace Ellice, of Exeter, Devonshire. Mr. Rawlinson's father being a mason and builder at Chorley, the son learned the practical part of that business there, and in 1831 entered, under Jesse Hartley, C.E., the Liverpool Dock Engineer's office, and in 1836 passed on to the Blisworth Contract (London and Birmingham Railway), under Robert Stephenson, C.E. On the completion of that line of railway Mr. Rawlinson returned to Liverpool, and became assistant-surveyor to the corporation, remaining such to the end of 1844. Then, at the recommendation of Mr. Hartley, he became engineer to the Bridgewater Canal. In 1847 he devised a scheme to supply Liverpool with sixty million gallons of pure water per day, to be brought by an aqueduct from Bala Lake and the district in North Wales. This project was, however, considered at the time too grand for the town. During the time that he was assistant-surveyor to the Corporation he was brought into contact with the late Harvey Lonsdale Elmes, the young architect to St. George's Hall, Liverpool. He designed and constructed the hollow brick ceiling over the great hall, which is the lightest work of the kind in existence. In the autumn of 1848 Mr. Rawlinson was appointed by the government of the day one of the first superintendent inspectors under the Public Health Act; and as the father of Modern Engineering Sanitary Science, he made the first inspection (1849) and wrote the first report (Dover). He inspected and reported on Berwick-upon-Tweed, Alnwick, Morpeth, Gateshead, North Shields, Exham, Penrith, Keswick, Carlisle, Lancaster, Ormskirk, and many other cities, towns, and villages to Land's End in Cornwall. But the most important work was the devising, executing, and establishing a new system of main-sewering, which has been accepted and is acted upon for cities, towns, villages, and houses in all parts of the civilized world—from the palace to the cottage. In the spring of 1855 he was sent as Engineering Sanitary Commissioner to the British Army in the East. The commissioners landed at Constantinople, March 6, 1855, and at the harbour of Balaclava on April 3. Works were begun immediately, both at the great hospitals situate on the Bosphorus and at the camp in the Crimea, such as cleansing, ventilating, and furnishing purer water. The returns from the four great hospitals on the Bosphorus, containing upwards of 4,000 sick British soldiers, showed, March 17, 1855, an average rate of mortality equal to 8·61 per cent. per month of the sick, which mortality was reduced by June 30 of the same year to 1·01 per cent. per month. In the Crimea, during the winter (1854-55) previous to the advent of the Sanitary Commission, the losses in some regiments at the front had ranged for three months as high as seventy per cent., a mortality unexampled even in the worst of any former wars; by the end of this summer (1855) the entire British army in the Crimea was placed in a better state of health, and had a lower rate of mortality than it had ever experienced in barracks at home. Under the supervision of sanitary committees established upon this Crimean pattern, the average mortality in the British army has, since 1858, been reduced about one-half, that is, from 17·5 per 1,000 to below 8·0 per 1,000 per annum. Sir R. Rawlinson has received acknowledgments and thanks for his services and reports on Army sanitation from the Secretary of the Sanitary Commission of North America at the termination of their Civil War, from the Emperor of Germany, Prince Bismark, and Count Moltke. Waterworks, on the English plan, have been executed, under Mr. Rawlinson's directions, for Hong Kong and Singapore. A great social question was entrusted to Mr. Rawlinson during the Cotton Famine, caused by the American War. In 1863 he was sent to Lancashire by Lord Palmerston's Government, as Engineer Commissioner to organize, under the Right Hon. Pelham Villiers, M.P., President of the Poor Law Board, "Work for Wages" amongst the distressed cotton operatives. Sanitary works were carried out simultaneously in ninety-three towns and places within the distressed cotton districts. Mr. Rawlinson practically proved that Government could profitably lend money at 3½ per cent. for town improvements and sanitary works generally, without loss to the State, and strongly advocated the extension of the practice to all cases; consequently an Act is now in force under the powers of which the Exchequer Loan Commissioners can advance money to any Urban or Rural Sanitary Authority for terms extending to 60 years—30 years at 3½ per cent., 40 years at 3¾ per cent., and 50 years and upwards at 4 per cent. Up to the present date, repayments of loans with interest have been made without loss in any instance. Mr. Rawlinson has served on several Royal Commissions; as chairman on the Royal Commission for inquiring into and reporting on the Pollution of Rivers, as chairman of the Royal Commission for inquiring and reporting on the improvement of the sanitary condition of Dublin, and the purification of the river Liffey, and on special Government inquiries, and is a member of the Army Sanitary Committee, which considers all questions connected with barracks, hospitals, and stations for the army, both at home, in India, and wherever British soldiers are stationed. He was decorated with the civil companionship of the Bath (1865), and is at present Chief Engineering Inspector under the Local Government Board, and Commissioner to grant Certificates under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act. He received the honour of knighthood, Aug. 23, 1883. He retired at Christmas, 1889, and upon the recommendation of Lord Salisbury, received from the Queen at Windsor, the decoration of K.C.B.

RAWSON, Sir Rawson William, K.C.M.G., C.B., eldest son of the celebrated oculist, Sir William Adams, who assumed the name of Rawson (that of his wife) in 1825, was born in London, Sept. 8, 1812; was educated at Sunbury, Rottingdean and Eton, 1825-28; and was appointed to the Board of Trade in Jan., 1829, at the age of sixteen. In 1830 he became Private Secretary to the Vice-President, Mr. Poulett Thomson; and, in 1834, to the President, Mr. Alex. Baring. Upon the creation of the Statistical Department in the Board of Trade, he was appointed first assistant to its chief, Mr. G. R. Porter, which office he continued to hold until 1842. In 1835 he became a Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society of London, one of its Honorary Secretaries and Editor of its Journal; in 1838 he became a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society; and in 1841 was elected a member of its Council; in 1838 he became a Member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science; and, in the three following years, acted as one of the Secretaries of Section F (Statistical Science). In 1841, upon the Hon. W. E. Gladstone's first appointment to office as Vice-President of the Board of Trade, he selected Mr. Rawson to be his Private Secretary; but in July, 1842, Mr. Rawson was called away to Canada, having been selected by the late Lord Derby, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, for the office of Chief, or Civil, Secretary in that Colony. Subsequently the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with a view to the abolition of that office, transferred Mr. Rawson to the Treasury of Mauritius, to which island he proceeded in Jan. 1844. There he took a prominent part in the business of the Council, as President of the Finance Committee. He conducted inquiries concerning, and submitted two important reports upon, the expediency of continuing the Immigration of Indian Coolies into the island, and upon the value of the Silver Rupee. He also conducted the Census of the island in 1851. In 1849 he visited England on leave, and married Marianne Sophia, the daughter of the Hon. and Rev. H. Ward, with whom he returned to Mauritius in 1850. In 1854 he was promoted to the Colonial Secretaryship of the Cape of Good Hope. For his services in the first session, in the double capacity of Colonial Secretary and Financial Minister, having a seat in both Houses, he was created a C.B. Here, too, he directed the Census of the Colony in 1861, and he also published, with Dr. Pappe, a "Synopsis of the Ferns of South Africa." In 1864, during the Civil War in the United States, the Duke of Newcastle, having induced the Legislature of the Bahamas to increase the salary of their Governor for six years, offered the post to Mr. Rawson, which he accepted, together with the dormant commission of Acting Governor of Jamaica. While in the Bahamas, Mr. Rawson, in his first annual Blue Book report, made the first correct and complete description of the physical and economical condition of the Islands; this the Secretary of State for the Colonies considered of sufficient value and usefulness to have reprinted in a convenient form for distribution in the schools throughout the Islands. Mr. Rawson also gave a minute description of the hurricane which caused so great a destruction of shipping and property throughout the Archipelago in 1866. In 1869 Mr. Rawson was promoted to the post of Governor-in-Chief of the Windward Islands, of which Barbados was the seat of Government, and served there till May, 1875, when he returned to England, and retired from the public service. In Barbados he reported on the Census in 1871, and upon the Rainfall in that Island for a long series of years. He paid a visit to the Governor of the neighbouring French Colony of Martinique, and received his return visit—the first interchange of such courtesy that had ever occurred between the two islands. On his retirement Mr. Rawson was created a K.C.M.G., and resumed his connection with the several scientific societies of which he is a Fellow. He was elected a Member of the Councils of the Royal Geographical and Statistical Societies, and in 1884-85 he was chosen President of the latter. He joined the Colonial Institute and Imperial Federation League, and is a Member of the Council and Executive Committee of the latter. In 1885, on the creation of the International Statistical Institute, he was elected its first President, and has been twice re-elected to that office, which he now holds. His principal publications, since his retirement, have been his two addresses to the Royal Statistical Society on "British and Foreign Colonies," and "International Vital Statistics," 1884-85; a "Synopsis of the Tariffs and Trade of the British Empire," in 2 vols., 1888-89; two contributions to the Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society on the "Territorial Partition of the Coast of Africa," 1884; and "European Territorial Claims on the Coasts of the Red Sea," in 1885; and a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the relative value of Gold, Silver, and Commodities, 1884-88. He is also the author of "Our Commercial Barometer," in the Journal of the Imperial Federation League. Sir Rawson is a Member of the American Philosophical Society, of the Statistical Society of Paris, of the Central Statistical Commission of Belgium, and of the Geographical and Geological Societies of Vienna.

RAYLEIGH, Lord, John William Strutt, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., 3rd Baron, was born Nov. 12, 1842, and succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1873. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., Senior Wrangler, and 1st Smith's Prizeman, 1865; Fellow of his College, 1866; M.A., 1868; Honorary D.C.L., Oxford, 1883; Honorary LL.D., McGill University, Montreal, 1884, and Dublin University, 1885); is a D.L. and J.P. for Essex, and a Cambridge Commissioner under the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Act (1877); and was Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge from 1879 to 1884; Professor of Natural Philosophy in the Royal Institution, 1887. He is the author of two volumes on "The Theory of Sound," 1877-78; and of many memoirs in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, and other scientific publications. Lord Rayleigh married, in 1871, Evelyn Georgina Mary, daughter of the late James Maitland Balfour, Esq., of Whittinghame, Prestonkirk, and has three sons.

READ, Clare Sewell, a distinguished agriculturist, born at Ketteringham, in 1826, is the eldest son of George Read, Esq., of Barton Bendish Hall, Norfolk. He entered Parliament in 1865 in the Conservative interest, as a member for East Norfolk, and was one of the most prominent advocates of the reduction of the Malt Tax. After the dissolution in 1868 he was returned for the southern section of the county, and continued to represent that constituency until 1885. In 1874 he was appointed Parliamentary Secretary of the Local Board, a position he retained until January, 1876, when he resigned on account of a difference of opinion upon the question of Inspection and Restrictions in Ireland, for the prevention of the spread of pleuro-pneumonia and foot-and-mouth disease among cattle. He advocated uniformity of treatment in both countries, and as an acknowledgment of his services the farmers of England presented him with a service of plate and a cheque for £5,500. He is a member of the Council of the Central Chambers of Agriculture, of the Smithfield Club, and of the Farmers' Club, and also of all the Local Agricultural Societies in the county of Norfolk.

READ, General John Meredith, LL.D., F.S.A., M.R.I.A., F.R.G.S., &c., was born at Philadelphia, Feb. 21, 1837, and received his education in a military school. He commanded a corps of National Cadets, which furnished 127 officers during the Civil War; was Aide-de-Camp to the Governor of Rhode Island; won the rank of Colonel in 1855; graduated M.A. at Brown University in 1858, and LL.B. at the Albany Law School in 1859; and studied civil and international law in Europe. He was actively engaged in the presidential campaign of 1856; organized important political movements in that of 1860; accepted in November of that year the office of Adjutant-General of the State of New York, and won the rank of Brigadier-General at the age of twenty-three. He was chairman of a committee of three to draft a bill appropriating

3,000,000 dollars for the purchase of arms and equipments, and received the official thanks of the War Department for his ability in the organization and equipment of troops during the war. In 1868 he took a leading part in the election of General Grant, who appointed him United States Consul-General in France and Algeria, to reside in Paris. General Read likewise acted as Consul-General of Germany during the Franco-German War, and afterwards, for nearly two years, directed all the Consular affairs of that Empire, including the protection of German subjects and interests during the first and second sieges of Paris (1870-72). For these services he received the commendation of the President of the United States in his annual message to Congress and the repeated thanks of both the French and the German Governments. He was also warmly praised by the French Government and people for his services in ministering to the wants of the Parisian population while shut up in Paris during the two sieges. In 1872, at the invitation of the French Minister of War, he presided during a year over a commission to examine into the expediency of extending the study of the English language in the French Army, and received the thanks of the French War Department. From 1873 to 1880 he was United States Minister to Greece, during which time he received the thanks of his Government for securing the release of the American ship Armenia, and for obtaining from the Greek Government a revocation of the order prohibiting the sale and circulation of the Bible in Greece. During the Russo-Turkish War he discovered that only one port in Russia for the delivery of grain was still open, and he pointed out to Secretary of State Evarts the advantages that would accrue to the commerce of the United States were a grain fleet despatched for the peaceable capture of the European markets. The event justified his judgment, since the exports of cereals from the United States showed an increase within the year of seventy-three millions of dollars, which was the turning-point in the financial situation in America, which had been passing through a severe crisis. While Minister to Greece he received the thanks of his Government for his effectual protection of American persons and interests in the dangerous political crisis of 1878. In 1881 the King of Greece created him a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Redeemer for his eminent services, after his resignation as United States Minister, in connection with the acquisition of new territory. He was named Honorary Member of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion in recognition of his services to his country during the War of Secession. General Read was President of the American Social Science Congress at Albany in 1868, and a Vice-President of the British Social Science Congress at Plymouth in 1872. He is an honorary Fellow or member of a great number of learned bodies. He is the author of "Relation of the Soil to Plants and Animals," 1860; of an important "Historical Inquiry concerning Henry Hudson," which first threw light upon his origin and upon the sources of the ideas which guided that navigator, 1866; this work gained for him a high reputation in Europe and America; an abridged edition of it was published in Edinburgh in 1882, by the Clarendon Historical Society. His theory has been adopted both by American and by English writers. He is also the author of a "Letter upon the death of Lord Stanhope," in Greek and English, 1875; and of contributions to current literature. He has made a series of rich collections of unpublished historical documents in each country which he has visited, and is now engaged in their arrangement, with a view to future publication. In 1879 he discovered a series of important unpublished letters from many of the most distinguished men in Europe of the eighteenth century, including Voltaire, Rousseau, Gibbon, Frederick the Great, and Malesherbes, which will be comprised in a work, one volume of which is already prepared.

READING, Bishop of. See RANDALL, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES LESLIE.

REANEY, Mrs. Isabel, is a daughter of the late Mr. Robert Edis, of Huntingdon, and her two brothers occupy as prominent a place in the world as she does; for, one is Colonel Edis, of the London County Council, and the other is Dr. A. W. Edis, of Wimpole Street, the well-known specialist in women's complaints. In her girlhood she visited the poor in their humble homes, and conducted a religious service in one of their cottages. As years went on, the cottage became crowded to its utmost capacity with eager and earnest participants in the reading of the Word of God, and devotion; but at this point both official and friendly zeal interposed obstacles, and the girl teacher, still only in her teens, seemed likely to be overborne, and the work in danger of being stopped. First came the family doctor—The crowded cottage, with its low ceiling and imperfect ventilation, would certainly impair the young teacher's health. Most likely the doctor was right, but the work, nevertheless, was not to stop, and the doctor himself was pressed into the service. By his help the use of a large class-room was obtained from the Congregationalists, and on a Sunday afternoon soon after, the crowd of grown-up scholars, without bonnets or shawls, or any change of gear, women and men like big children, followed their young captain from the cottage to this new place of meeting. Here the simple, conversational attitude hitherto adopted became, with an auditory greatly increased in numbers by outsiders, inconvenient; and thus the girl teacher became a public speaker and preacher, and in course of time the meeting becoming so large that it had to be transferred to a public hall. Here occurred a more formidable interposition than that of the doctor. The bishop of the diocese intervened with an authoritative criticism upon the nature of the work, which was, he said, "disturbing the regular order of the Church." Miss Isabel Edis's reply to his lordship had in it a characteristic directness, which, perhaps in the case of private intercourse, is not so easily recognised as in her public speaking. She said, "I have an authority higher than that of bishops or arch-bishops; and that being so, speak I must. But if I am likely to injure the Church, I will quietly withdraw from it." The first part of this reply sounds like one that was made to ecclesiastical authority more than 1800 years ago; and, like that, it was very effective. The bishop rejoined, "If I may be satisfied that your conviction is that of a woman, and not the transient feelings of the girl, go on, and God bless you." Miss Isabel Edis's part in these labours was sometimes interrupted by ill-health, but they were never relinquished until her marriage with the Rev. G. S. Reaney, and then only to be resumed in other spheres. Mr. Reaney being a native of the same town with his wife's family, it is not surprising that he should have turned his attention in the direction of the girl preacher, and it was during his pastorate at Warrington that Isabel Edis became his wife. Here, and subsequently at Reading, Mrs. Reaney's labours amongst the poor were continued. At Warrington no fewer than 2,000 working men, with their families, would crowd the Public Hall in which she held, during the four years, her Sunday afternoon services. Amongst the puddlers in the iron-works, and other working men, she found a warm and constant welcome. She says, "If I had gone amongst them with a 'preachy-preachy' attitude, they would have had no intercourse with me. But the simple attitude of friendship, and a manifest interest in their welfare, never failed to win their affection." The same work was carried on during the five years of Mrs. Reaney's residence in the densest part of the East of London. Any of my readers who have not seen one of Mrs. Reaney's Sunday afternoon services, would do well to go to Stepney for once, at least, and see it. As the preacher comes into view, they will see a pale face with no "preachy-preachy" aspect; no official garb to distinguish the preacher from any other well-dressed middle class lady; no affectation of special sanctity; but unadorned simplicity, looking down at a sea of upturned faces, and speaking with the warm fervour of a loving woman's heart to the hearts that are throbbing beneath. Mrs. Reaney's labours are not confined to preaching. There is her excellently-managed Convalescent and Holiday Home at Blackpool. The story of its start is somewhat curious, and dates really from the chance question of a worthy puddler at Warrington, who, when Mrs. Reaney invited him to a service, bluntly asked, "what there was to pay," adding that as there was no charge for seats, a box ought to be held at the door for the contributions of "the likes of me, who don't want our religion cheaper than our bread." The collections while she was at Stepney enabled her to open a home at Folkestone; but at the commencement of 1888 she handed this over to the Rev. Andrew Mearns, to be continued on behalf of the poor of London, opening one for the invalids of the North at Blackpool. To be homelike and comfortable, sympathetic and kindly, is her aim and effort in this. Since it was opened she has received 460 patients; 150 wholly free, the rest paying a slight sum according to their means. She has established, chiefly by her personal exertions, a convalescent home at Folkestone where, in four years and a half, 1,800 patients were nursed into perfect health and restored to their homes to begin the work of life afresh. In addition to this, Mrs. Reaney is now engaged in the establishment of a "Rescue Home," where cases of incidental distress, individuals or families overwhelmed by unavoidable calamity, will find temporary refuge and sustenance until permanent or substantial relief can be obtained. This establishment will be opened in the ensuing autumn. She is a warm advocate of Temperance, and is constantly requested to address meetings in all parts of the country. "Missions" of practical bearing she frequently conducts among young women, especially of the better classes, whose lives she thinks need loftier direction quite as often as the lives of those who toil. Lastly is her labour on behalf of the tram and omnibus men. As a writer Mrs. Reaney is well known to a very large circle of readers. The complete list of her works is too long for insertion here, but among the chief of them may be mentioned "Just in Time; or, Howard Clarion's Rescue," "Daisy Snowflake's Secret," "Our Brothers and Sons," "Our Daughters," "The Story of our Tramcar Men," &c. The stand which she recently made between the toil-driven tramcar men and their employers, if fame were coveted by Mrs. Reaney, would have been sufficient to make her famous. More grateful to her heart will be the invocation, breathed in the days which have recently passed, by many a humble wife and mother, and in which the editor unites with them in the words, before quoted, of the good Bishop of Ely, "Go on, and God bless you."

REAY (Lord), Sir Donald James Mackay, D.C.L., G.C.I.E., Governor of Bombay, was born in Holland in Dec., 1839, and is the son of the late Baron Mackay Ophemert, Vice-President of the Privy Council, by the daughter of Baron Fagel, Privy Councillor of the Netherlands. Lord Reay was educated at the University of Leyden, where he graduated as D.C.L. in 1861. In the same year he became Attaché to the Netherlands Legation in London, and held that post till 1865, when he was transferred to the Netherlands India Office, where he remained till 1869. He succeeded to the title and estates of his father in 1876, and became a naturalized British subject; and, in the year 1881, was created a peer of the United Kingdom. In 1884 he was elected Rector of St. Andrews University, and in 1885 became Governor of Bombay. On the occasion of Her Majesty's Jubilee, Lord Reay was made a Knight Grand Commander of the Order of the Indian Empire. His excellency married, in 1876, Fanny Georgina Jane, daughter of Mr. Richard Hasler, of Aldingbourne, Sussex, the widow of the late Captain Alexander Mitchell, M.P., of Stow, Midlothian.

RECLUS, Jacques Elisée, a French geographical writer, the son of a Protestant minister, was born at Sainte-Foy-la-Grande (Gironde), March 15, 1830, and from 1841 to 1844 educated in Rhenish Prussia. He studied at the Protestant College at Montauban, and then at the University of Berlin, where he was a pupil of K. Ritter's. Holding extreme democratic opinions, he left France after the coup d'état of Dec. 2, 1851, and travelled from 1852 to 1857 in England, Ireland, the United States, Central America, and New Granada, where he stayed several years. On his return to Paris he communicated to the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Tour du Monde, and other periodicals, the results of his voyages and geographical researches. M. Reclus is the author of "Guide à Londres," 1860; "Voyage à la Sierra Nevada de Saint-Marthe," 1861; "Les Villes d'Hiver de la Méditerranée et les Alpes-Maritimes," 1864; and in conjunction with his eldest brother is the author of a very valuable introduction to the "Dictionnaire des Communes de la France," 1864, 2nd edit., 1869; and above all, "La Terre," a magnificent work on physical geography, the English edition of which, entitled "The Earth," has passed through two editions. Unfortunately (or fortunately), M. Reclus did not confine himself to scientific studies, but wrote also in various socialist organs. When the insurrection of March 18, 1871, broke out, M. Reclus, after publishing an eloquent appeal to his countrymen in favour of conciliation, flung in his lot with the Commune, and was taken prisoner by the Versailles troops as early as April 5, while making a reconnaissance near Chatillon. At his trial, evidence was given in his favour by M. E. Charton, a deputy in the National Assembly, and the editor of several works on geography. M. Nadar, the well-known aeronaut, under whom the prisoner had served during the siege of Paris, also spoke as to his high character and great scientific attainments. But M. Reclus was nevertheless sentenced to transportation for life (Nov. 1871). His sentence was, however, commuted into one of banishment in Feb. 1872. He subsequently resided at Lugano, in Switzerland. He was admitted to the benefit of the amnesty in March, 1879. In 1882 he gained fresh notoriety as the practical initiator of the Anti-Marriage Movement; and his two daughters were actually "married" in his own fashion without any religious or civil ceremony. The first volume of his "Géographie Universelle" was published in 1875, the fifteenth in 1890.

REDHOUSE, Sir James William, K.C.M.G., LL.D., born Dec. 30, 1811, in Walworth, London, of a Suffolk family, was educated at Christ's Hospital; went to Constantinople 1826, where he studied French, Italian, Turkish, Arabic, and Persian; and served the Ottoman Government by assisting in the preparation of various military, naval, and literary works; visited south Russia in 1830, acquiring some knowledge of the language, and commencing the preparation of a Turkish, English, and French Dictionary; returned to London in 1834 to publish the same, but the appearance of Bianchi's Turkish-French work made the attempt fruitless; was entrusted with the superintendence of about twenty Turkish naval and military officers sent over to study and serve in the Royal Artillery and Navy, etc.; returned to Constantinople in 1838; was appointed to the Translation Office of the Porte, and in 1839 was selected by the Grand Vizier for confidential communications with the British Ambassador, Lord Ponsonby; was afterwards appointed a Member of the Naval Council, to co-operate with Capt. Baldwin Wake Walker, R.N. (afterwards Sir B. W. Walker, Bart., K.C.B., &c.), then in the Turkish Naval Service; assisted in drawing up naval instructions for the officers of the Turkish fleet; went to Alexandria when hostilities were commenced by the allies, England, Austria, Russia, and Turkey, against Egypt; accompanied the Consuls-General to the British Fleet at Beyrut; served as means of communication between the Turkish General on shore and Admiral Sir Robert Stopford concerning a combined attack on St. Jean d'Acre, this plan being referred through Mr. Redhouse to Lord Ponsonby and the Ottoman Government, and ultimately carried out successfully by orders of the allied Governments, Mr. Redhouse receiving the Turkish Order of the Nishani Iftikhar in brilliants. On a change of ministry in 1841, Mr. Redhouse returned to the Porte, and was employed in confidential communications between the Turkish Government and Sir Stratford Canning, G.C.B. (afterwards Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, K.G.), who succeeded Lord Ponsonby. In Jan. 1843 he proceeded to Erzerum as Secretary to the Mediating Commissioners, Major Williams (afterwards Sir W. F. Williams, Bart., of Kars, G.C.B.), and the Hon. R. Curzon (afterwards Lord Zouche), and ultimately assisted in concluding in 1847 a treaty of peace between Turkey and Persia, receiving the Persian Order of the Lion and Sun, with Colonel's rank, first class; and publishing meanwhile in Paris his "Grammaire raisonnée de la Langue ottomane." In 1854 he was appointed Oriental Translator to the Foreign Office; published an English-Turkish and Turkish-English Dictionary, also a Vademecum of Colloquial Turkish for the Army and Navy in the Crimean War,

In 1857 he assisted the late Lord Cowley in Paris in wording the treaty of peace with Persia, that set our troops free to act under Sir Hugh Rose (Lord Strathnairn) in suppressing the Indian Mutiny. Sir James is an Hon. Doctor of Letters of Cambridge, and Hon. Member of St. John's College. In 1884 he was engaged in publishing numerous treatises on Oriental subjects. He was formerly Secretary to, and is now Hon. Member of, the Royal Asiatic Society; also Hon. and Corresponding Member of several learned societies. He was created C.M.G., 1885, and K.C.M.G., 1888. He has presented to the library of the British Museum a manuscript (incomplete) dictionary of Arabic, Persian, Ottoman-Turkish, Eastern Turkish and English, in ten large folio volumes, the result of sixteen years' labour; and to the University Library, Cambridge, a transcript of a unique Arabic manuscript which was in the library of the India Office, a gift of Warren Hastings to the East India Company, with translation, commentary, maps, and index. He married, first in 1836, Jane E. C. (who died 1887), daughter of the late T. Slade, of Liverpool, and second, 1888, Eliza, daughter of Sir Patrick MacChombaich de Colquhoun, Q.C., LL.D., &c.

REED, Sir Edward James, K.C.B., F.R.S., M.P., born at Sheerness, Sept. 20, 1830, was educated at the School of Mathematics and Naval Construction, Portsmouth, served in a subordinate capacity in Sheerness dockyard, and was afterwards editor of the Mechanics' Magazine. He paid great attention to naval architecture, on which he became an authority, and was induced to accept the Secretaryship of the Institution of Naval Architects. He submitted to the Admiralty proposals to reduce the dimensions, cost, and time required for building our iron-clads, and was soon after appointed Chief Constructor of the Navy. In about three years he designed iron-clad ships for the British Navy, amounting to an aggregate of 35,000 tons; a large iron-clad frigate for the Turkish government; a fleet of steam-transporters for the service of our Indian government, consisting of five ships of 4,000 tons each, a paddle despatch-steamer of war, and numerous tugs, life-boats, and other smaller vessels. After four years of further service as Chief Constructor, Mr. Reed, whose objections to rigged sea-going turret ships were well known, found these vessels so much in favour, that he resigned his office in July, 1870. His resignation was made remarkable by the capsizing of the turret ship Captain a few weeks afterwards. Mr. Reed was afterwards engaged in private pursuits, visiting occasionally the foreign dockyards of Europe. He was returned to Parliament in the Liberal interest as member for the Pembroke boroughs at the general election of Feb., 1874. He represented that constituency till April, 1880, when he was returned for Cardiff. He was re-elected for Cardiff at the general election in Nov., 1885, and again in Feb., 1886, on his appointment as Lord of the Treasury in Mr. Gladstone's administration. He received the Companionship of the Bath from the Queen of England; the Star of the Imperial Order of St. Stanislas (1st class) from the Emperor of Russia; the Star and Ribbon of the Medjidieh (2nd class) from the Sultan of Turkey, and the Knight Commandership of the Imperial Order of Joseph from the Emperor of Austria. He is the author of works on Practical Shipbuilding, Iron-cased Ships, and Coast Defence. In Oct., 1878, he started on a visit to Japan, at the invitation of the Imperial Government. He returned to this country in May, 1879, and published a work on "Japan: its Histories, Traditions, and Religions," 2 vols., 1880. In Aug., 1880, he was created a K.C.B. In 1883, Sir Edward Reed was appointed by the Government to inquire into the cause of the capsizing of the SS. Daphne during the operation of launching on the Clyde; and in 1884 was also appointed by the Government as President of the Load Line Committee, which was formed for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the question of a proper load-line for the ships of the Mercantile Marine.

REED, Robert Threshio, Q.C., M.P., the second son of the late Sir J. J. In "Leaves from the note-book of T. A. Reed" (2 vols.), he has given a series of sketches of the daily work of reporters and shorthand-writers, founded on his long and varied experience. He has adapted Phonography to the French language, and published a little work on that subject in 1882. He was the chief organizer and Chairman of the Committee of the first International Shorthand Congress held in London in 1887 in celebration of the Tercentenary of the art. From 1870 to 1872 he was Attorney-General of Maine, and from 1874 to 1877 was City Solicitor of Portland. In 1876 he was elected a Member of Congress, and has been continuously re-elected since then, his present term expiring in 1891. He is a J.P. for the county of Hants. He succeeded the late Sir G. C. Lewis as editor of the Edinburgh Review in 1855. He published a translation of De Tocqueville's well-known work on "Democracy in America," and of "France before the Revolution of 1789," and of M. Guizot's "Washington." In 1855 he brought out a new and revised edition of "Whitelocke's Journal of the Swedish Embassy in 1653-54." In 1874 Mr. Reeve published a "Journal of the Reigns of King George IV. and King William IV., by Charles C. F. Greville, Esq.," which had been placed in his hands for that purpose by the author, and the sequel to this work was published by Mr. Reeve in 1885. He has also published a collection of Historical and Biographical Essays, under the title of "Royal and Republican France." He was elected in 1865 a corresponding member of the Institute of France by the Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, and a Foreign Member of the French Institute in 1888. REEVES, Mrs. Henry, née Helen Buckenham Mathers, novelist, was born in 1852, at Crewkerne, Somerset, and educated at Chantry, near Frome. Her first novel was "Comin' thro' the Rye," 1875, which immediately became immensely popular, and was soon translated into several languages. "The Token of the Silver Lily," a poem, was published in 1876; "Cherry Ripe," Miss Mathers' second novel, was published in 1877, and followed in 1878 by "The Land o' the Leal," and "As He Comes up the Stair," which are novelettes. Her third novel, "My Lady Green Sleeves," appeared in 1879, and was followed in 1881 by "The Story of a Sin." "Sam's Sweetheart," and "Eyre's Acquittal," were published in 1883 and 1884, and "Found Out," which appeared in shilling form in 1885, was rapidly followed by that series of cheap novels by many authors which has since become so popular. In 1876 Miss Mathers was married to Mr. Henry Reeves, F.R.C.S.E., a well-known surgeon to several large metropolitan hospitals, and author of "Human Morphology."

REEVES, John Sims, tenor singer, born at Shooter's Hill, Kent, Oct. 21, 1822, was first instructed by his father. At an early age he held the appointment of organist and director of the choir at the church of North Cray, and after taking lessons on the pianoforte from J. B. Cramer, he was placed under the care of T. Cooke, Hobbs, and other distinguished Professors of singing. In Dec. 1839 he made his first appearance on the stage at Newcastle, at which time he was singing baritone parts; he next visited the principal provincial towns, and went to Paris to study his profession. Not long afterwards he made his first appearance in Italian opera at La Scala, Milan, in the tenor part of Edgardo, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," and came out in the same character at Drury Lane Theatre, Dec. 6, 1847, then under the management of the late M. Jullien. His first original character was in Balfe's opera of the "Maid of Honour," and he appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre, as Carlo, in "Linda di Chamouni," in 1848, and was engaged at the Royal Italian Opera, at Covent Garden, in 1849. Since that time Mr. Reeves has appeared at all the great performances of oratorios, at Exeter Hall, the provincial festival and at the Crystal Palace. One of his best original parts was in Mr. Macfarren's opera of "Robin Hood," produced at the performances of English opera at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1860. Mr. Sims Reeves has made strenuous efforts to reduce the present high pitch to that of the Normal Diapason. He has just completed his Jubilee, and written a book setting forth some interesting events in his long and successful career. He will take his farewell of the public at the Albert Hall on May 11, 1891, when Madame Christine Nilsson comes over expressly to assist on this memorable occasion. Mr. Sims Reeves married Miss Emma Lucombe, a soprano singer. His son, Herbert, is a tenor who evidently has been well taught by his father.

published work is "Sermons on the Origin of Christianity," preached before the Universities of Oxford and Dublin in 1881 and 1882. In 1858 he was created D.D. by the University of Dublin. On Aug. 19, 1885, he was elected Bishop of Meath, which ranks first in the Irish Bishopricks, and its occupant has the title of Most Reverend.

He was made Honorary Physician to the Queen, 1881; and K.C.B., 1882. On leaving office, in 1888, the Board of Admiralty were pleased to record that "the able and zealous manner in which he had conducted the duties of the office had been most marked, and their Lordships and the Naval Medical Service viewed his retirement with equal regret."

REID, Thomas Wemyss, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1842, being the son of the Rev. Alexander Reid. He was educated by Dr. Collingwood Bruce at Newcastle; became a journalist in 1861; in 1864 was appointed editor of the Preston Guardian, and in 1870 to 1887 editor of the Leeds Mercury. Mr. Reid has contributed largely to the leading reviews and magazines. He is the author of "Charlotte Brontë; a Monograph," a biographical work, intended to supplement Mrs. Gaskell's well-known "Life of the author of 'Jane Eyre.'" This work, which was published in 1877, has gone through several editions both in England and in the United States. In 1883, Mr. Reid published "Gladys Fane, a story of Two Lives." It passed through four editions within a few months of its publication. Two years later, at Christmas, 1885, appeared "Maulverer's Millions," a sensational story, the scene of which was laid in Yorkshire; it has had a large sale. In 1888 Mr. Reid published the "Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster," a work tracing the personal history of the author of the Education Act, and throwing considerable light on recent political events. Six editions of the Life appeared within twelve months from its publication. The other works written by Mr. Reid are "Cabinet Portraits," sketches of leading Statesmen of both parties, 1872; "Politicians of To-Day," 1879; and "The Land of the Bay," 1882, a narrative of a visit to Tunis during the military operations of France. Mr. Reid has also contributed to the Leeds Mercury an extensive series of literary and social essays, under the title of "The Rambling Philosopher," as well as letters descriptive of travel in various parts of the world. In 1887 Mr. Reid resigned the editorship of the Leeds Mercury, and accepted the post of manager to Messrs. Cassell and Company. He is at present engaged in writing the life of the late Lord Houghton, and since the beginning of 1890 has been editor of The Speaker, a weekly political and literary review.

REID, The Hon. Whitelaw, was born near Yenia, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1837. He graduated from Miami Univ. (Oxford, Ohio) in 1856, and immediately took up journalism, soon becoming editor of the Yenia News. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was sent into the field as correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, and served for a while as aide-de-camp to Gen. Rosecrans. From 1863 to 1866 he was librarian of the House of Representatives. He was then engaged for a short time in cotton planting in Louisiana, the result of his observations while there on the condition of the South "After the War" appearing in 1866. Returning to Ohio he devoted himself for two years to writing a complete history of "Ohio in the War," which was published in two volumes in 1868. In the same year he joined the staff of the New York Tribune, of which, on the death of Mr. Greeley in 1872, he became the editor-in-chief and principal owner. He was chosen a regent (for life) of the University of the State of New York in 1878, and was for many years President of the Lotos Club (N.Y. City). The mission to Germany was tendered him by both President Hayes and President Garfield, but he declined both offers. On the accession to the Presidency of Mr. Harrison in 1889, however, he accepted an appointment as American minister to France. In addition to the works already mentioned, he is the author of "Schools of Journalism," 1871; "The Scholar in Politics," 1873; "Some Newspaper Tendencies," 1879; and "Town-Hall Suggestions," 1881.

REINKENS, Joseph Hubert, D.D., one of the leaders of the "Old Catholic" movement in Germany, was born at Burt-schied, Aix-la-Chapelle, March 1, 1821, studied theology in the University of Bonn, entered the seminary at Cologne in 1847, and was ordained priest in the following year by the late Cardinal von Geissel. Afterwards he returned to Bonn to continue his studies; graduated as D.D. at Munich in 1849; settled as private tutor at Breslau in 1850; was appointed in 1852 preacher on festivals, penitentiary at the cathedral, and incumbent of the Electoral Chapel; in 1853 Extraordinary Professor of Church History; in 1857 ordinary; and was rector of Breslau University, 1865-66. He was one of the fourteen professors who, at Nuremberg, protested against the Vatican decrees in Aug. 1870. For this he was suspended from his clerical functions; and in 1872 he was excommunicated by Bishop Förster of Breslau. Dr. Reinkens became a prominent leader of the so-called "Old Catholics," and was elected Bishop of the Old Catholics (the new sect is the Vatican Church) June 4, 1873, at Cologne, in an assembly consisting of twenty-one priests and fifty-six laymen. The consecration ceremony was performed (Aug. 11) by the Dutch Old Roman Catholic Bishop Heycamp of Deventer. Dr. Reinkens has published numerous works in German on the theological controversies of the day; his advocacy being for "Unity, not Uniformity," in the Christian Church, and for religious life, rather than religious ceremonies.

REINOLD, Arnold William, F.R.S., Professor of Physics in the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, was born in Hull, June 19, 1843. His father, a native of Elberfeld, settled in England in 1836, and carried on the business of a ship-broker. Professor Reinold was educated at St. Peter's School, York; whence, having obtained an open Mathematical Scholarship at Brasenose College, he proceeded to Oxford in 1863. At Oxford he gained a first-class in Mathematical Moderations, and in the final Schools of Mathematics and Natural Science, also the Junior and Senior University Mathematical Scholarships. He took his degree of B.A. in 1866, and M.A. in 1870; and was elected to a Fellowship at Merton College in Dec. 1866, which he resigned, on marrying, in 1869. He was elected Senior Student and Lee's Reader in Physics, at Christ Church, in 1870. On the establishment of the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, in 1873, he was appointed Professor of Physics; and Examiner in Physics in the University of Oxford in 1871, and in the University of London in 1875 and 1882. He is joint author (with Professor A. W. Rücker) of papers dealing with the phenomena of "Thin Films" published in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, and the Philosophical Magazine, and was elected F.R.S. in 1883. He acted as Hon. Sec. of the Physical Society from its foundation in 1874, up to 1888, when he succeeded the late Dr. Balfour Stewart as President.

RENAN, Joseph Ernest, philologist, member of the Institute of France, was born at Tréguier, Côtes-du-Nord, Feb. 27, 1823, and was destined for the ecclesiastical profession, and went to Paris at an early age in order to study. His abilities having attracted attention, he was chosen at the termination of his classical studies to follow the course of theology at the seminary of Saint-Sulpice, when he showed a taste for the study of languages and philosophy, and studied Hebrew, Arabic, and Syriac. But his independence of thought did not accord with the necessary qualifications for the priesthood, and he quitted the seminary in order to be better able to pursue his own course. In 1847 he gained the Volney prize for a mémoire upon the Semitic languages, which has been published under the title of "Histoire Générale et Systèmes Comparés des Langues Sémitiques," and in 1848 he similarly carried off the prize for his paper "Sur l'étude du grec dans l'Occident pendant le moyen âge." In 1849 he was sent to Italy on a literary mission by the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres; in 1851 he was attached to the department of Manuscripts in the Bibliothèque Nationale, and in 1856 was elected a member of the Académie des Inscriptions in place of M. Augustin Thierry. At the end of 1860 he was sent on a mission to Syria. In 1862 he was appointed Professor of Hebrew, but did not permanently occupy the chair for fear of a renewal of the manifestations which occurred at his opening lecture in February. In 1863 he published his well-known "Vie de Jésus," which he wrote after his voyage to Syria, and of which numerous editions have been issued. This work was vehemently attacked by the bishops and clergy, the result being that the author was dismissed from his professorship. M. Duruy the Minister of Public Instruction, endeavoured to conceal the significance of this dismissal by giving him an office in the Bibliothèque Impériale; he, however, strongly protested against the appointment, which was revoked June 11, 1864. At the elections to the Corps Législatif in May, 1869, he was an unsuccessful candidate in the second circonscription of the department of Seine-et-Marne. M. Renan was elected a member of the French Academy June 13, 1878, in the room of M. Claude Bernard; he defeated M. Wallon by 19 votes to 15. He attended the Congress of Orientalists held at Florence in Sept., 1878. M. Renan has, in addition to the works already mentioned, published numerous memoirs on comparative philology, and articles in the Liberté de Penser, the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Journal de l'Instruction Publique, the Debats, &c. Some of these were published in a collected form, under the title of "Études d'Histoire Religieuse," in 1857. He published a translation of "Le Livre de Job," 1859, and of the "Cantique des Cantiques," 1860; "Lettre à mes Collègues," 1862; "Mission de Phénicie," 1864; "Trois Inscriptions Phéniciennes," 1864; "Les Apôtres," 1866; "Nouvelles Observations d'Épigraphie Hébraïque," 1867; "Sur les Inscriptions Hébraïques des Synagogues de Kefr-Bereim, en Gaillée," 1867; "Rapport sur les Progrès de la Littérature Orientale et sur les Ouvrages relatifs à l'Orient," 1867; "La Mission en Phénicie," 1874, containing an account of the scientific researches in Syria during the sojourn of the French army in 1860-61; "Dialogues et Fragments Philosophiques," 1876; "Spinoza," a lecture, 1877; His "Histoire des Origines du Christianisme," begun in 1863, was completed in 7 vols. in 1882. This history of primitive Christianity comprises the "Vie de Jésus," "Les Apôtres;" "Saint-Saul;" "L'Antechrist;" "Les Évangiles;" "L'Église Chrétienne;" "Marc Aurèle." His "Souvenirs d'Enfance et de Jeunesse," 1883, discloses why he separated himself from the Catholic Church while remaining "a moral disciple of Jesus." Of his new book, "The History of Israel before the Birth of Christ," two volumes are already published; "The History of the People of Israel till the time of David" was published in 1889. In 1880 M. Renan delivered, in London, in his native language, the Hibbert Lectures on "The Influence of the Institutions, Thought, and Culture of Rome on Christianity and the Development of the Catholic Church." On the occasion of this visit to London he also delivered at the Royal Institution, a lecture on the Roman Emperor, Marcus Aurelius. In June, 1883, he was appointed rector of the Collège de France. In 1884 he published "Nouvelles Études d'Histoire Religieuse." M. Renan married a daughter of Henri Scheffer, the painter, and was decorated with the Legion of Honour in Dec. 1880.

RENDEL, Sir Alexander Meadows, K.C.I.E., civil engineer, born in 1829, is the eldest son of James Meadows Rendel, civil engineer, and was educated at King's School, Canterbury, and Trinity College, Cambridge (Scholar and Wrangler); studied as engineer under his father, on whose death in 1856 he became engineer to the then London Dock Company, the Leith Harbour and Dock Commissioners, the East Indian Railway, and other companies. He visited India in 1857-8, and at various other times; subsequently he built the Shadwell New Basin, the Royal Albert Dock, and other works on the Thames, the Albert and Edinburgh Docks at Leith, the Workington Dock and Harbour, and other kindred work; was a member of the Commission appointed in 1870 by the Secretary of State for India, to determine what should be the narrow gauge for India, and is at present engineer in England (commonly called consulting engineer) to the Secretary of State for India, the East Indian, the Bombay and Baroda, the South Mahratta, the Nizam's, and other Indian Railway Companies engaged in the construction and working of about 9000 miles of railway. He is a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers. He married, in 1853, Eliza, eldest daughter of the late Captain Hobson, R.N., late Governor of New Zealand, and was created K.C.I.E. on the formation of the order in 1887.

RENDEL, George Whitwick, second surviving son of the late J. M. Rendel, F.R.S., the eminent civil engineer, was educated at Harrow, and as a civil engineer in his father's office, where he subsequently took an important part in reference to some of the later engineering works carried out by Mr. Rendel—notably the superstructures of the great bridges on the East Indian Railway crossing the Ganges and the Jumna at Allahabad.

He joined Sir William Armstrong's firm at Elswick in 1858 as managing partner of the new Elswick Ordnance Works, which he continued to direct during 24 years (in conjunction with Captain Noble from 1860). During that time he took a large part in the development of guns, ironclads, and ships of war. He devised and carried out the system of hydraulic machinery for mounting and working heavy guns, first tried in H.M.S. Thunderer, and subsequently adopted in the Dreadnought, Inflexible, Colossus, and all the later ironclads of the British Fleet, as well as in the Duilio, Dandolo, Italia, and Lepanto, of the Italian Fleet. He designed and directed the building of the Esmeralda for the Chilian Government, the swiftest and most powerful unarmoured cruiser of her time, which has become a type of unarmoured cruisers. Also the gunboat Staunch for the British Government, and the numerous gunboats, developments of the Staunch, known as the "alphabetical gunboats," and built on the Tyne for the Chinese Government. Mr. George Rendel was a member of the Committee on Designs of Ships of War, appointed by the English Government in 1871, to settle the types of English ironclads to be built; also of the Committee appointed by the Government in 1877 to decide upon the questions raised by Sir E. J. Reed in reference to the design of the Inflexible. In March 1882 he accepted the invitation previously made to him by Mr. Smith under the Conservative Administration, and repeated by Lord Northbrook, first Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's administration, and became professional Civil Lord of the Admiralty, abandoning for the purpose all connection with the Elswick firm. In June 1885 on the fall of Mr. Gladstone's Government he, for family reasons, resigned his position at the Admiralty and retired to Italy.

RENDEL, Stuart, M.P., third surviving son of James Meadows Rendel, F.R.S., the engineer of the Harbours of Refuge of Holyhead and Portland, and of many docks and railways in Great Britain and abroad, and brother of the two preceding, was born in 1834; educated at Eton and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated an honorary 4th in 1856. He was called to the Bar in 1861, but has never practised; was appointed (on behalf of Sir William Armstrong) member of the Armstrong and Whitworth Committee, which sat from 1861 to 1863, and carried out the most exhaustive known series of artillery experiments; became a member of Sir Wm. Armstrong's firm in Feb. 1870, and its managing partner in London; has been closely associated with the growth of the great works at Elswick, Newcastle-on-Tyne, which now employ 14,000 men, and form a second arsenal for the empire. He is an officer of the Order of Charles Albert of Italy, and a Knight of the Order of Charles XII. of Spain. In 1880 Mr. Stuart Rendel retired from the Armstrong firm, and contested and won the representation in Parliament of the county of Montgomery as a Liberal. This seat had been held by the Wynns, of Wynnstay, ever since 1800. In recognition of this remarkable victory for the Liberal cause, Mr. Rendel was invited by Mr. Gladstone to move the Address to the Crown in the Session of 1881. The scheme for higher education in Wales having resulted in the creation of new colleges at Cardiff and Bangor, each endowed by government with £4,000 a year, Mr. Rendel in 1884 successfully moved a resolution in the House of Commons in favour of the old University College of Wales at Aberystwyth, and obtained a grant for it of £2,500 a year; and later, in 1885, procured the increase of this grant to £4,000. Mr. Rendel became more and more identified with the advocacy of Welsh National causes, as well in relation to religious freedom as to educational progress. In the General Election of July, 1885, he again defeated Mr. Charles Wynn by an increased majority, and in that of Nov. 1885, he won the county seat in a third contest. In Dec., 1886, Mr. Stuart Rendel was elected First President of the North Wales Liberal Federation. In 1887 he was elected First President in the Welsh National Council, and to these two offices he has been since annually re-elected. In 1888 he was elected by the Liberal M.P.'s of Wales and Monmouthshire as Chairman of their Party in Parliament. In 1889 he introduced and carried the Intermediate Education Act for Wales, and in 1890 he recovered £20,000, part of the Meyricke Endowment (which had lapsed to Jesus College) for the support of such education in Wales. He married in 1857, Ellen, second daughter of William Egerton Hubbard, of Leonardslee, Horsham, brother of the 1st Lord Addington. Mr. Rendel's 2nd daughter is the wife of Mr. Gladstone's 3rd son.

RENOUF, Peter Le Page, oriental scholar, was born in the Isle of Guernsey in 1824, received his early education in Elizabeth College there, and afterwards became a Scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford. At Easter, 1842, he became a member of the Roman Catholic Church. On the opening of the Catholic University of Ireland, in 1855, he was appointed by Dr. Newman, Professor in that institution, where he filled the chairs of Ancient History and Eastern Languages. In 1864 he became one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, and continued to hold that appointment till 1886. Whilst at the Catholic University he was one of the editors of the Atlantis and of the Home and Foreign Review; and he has since contributed to various other periodicals, particularly to the Chronicle, the North British Review, and the Academy in this country; and to the Zeitschrift für Ägyptische Sprache und Alterthumskunde, conducted by Dr. Lepsius at Berlin. Some papers by Mr. Renouf are published in the "Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology." A list of his writings, as far as they are separately published, is subjoined:—"The Doctrine of the Catholic Church in England on the Holy Eucharist," 1841; "The Greek and Anglican Communion," 1847; "Traduction d'un Chapitre du Rituel funéraire des Anciens Egyptiens. Lettre adressée à M. le Professeur Merkel, Bibliothécaire Royal à Aschaffenburg," 1860; "Note on some Negative Particles of the Egyptian Language," 1862; "A Prayer from the Egyptian Ritual, translated from the Hieroglyphic Text," 1862; "Sir G. Lewis's attacks on Champollion and other decipherers of ancient inscriptions; "A few words on the supposed Latin Origin of the Arabic Version of the Gospels," 1863; "University Education for English Catholics. A Letter to the Very Rev. Dr. Newman, by a Catholic Layman," 1864; "Miscellaneous Notes on Egyptian Philology," 1866; "The Condemnation of Pope Honorius," 1868, a work furiously attacked by the ultramontane press and placed on the Index: "The Case of Pope Honorius reconsidered, with reference to recent Apologies," 1869; "Note on Egyptian Prepositions," 1874; "An Elementary Manual of the Egyptian Language," 1875; and "Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as illustrated by the Religion of Ancient Egypt," 1880, being the Hibbert Lectures delivered in the previous year. After the death of Dr. Samuel Birch, in 1885, Mr. Renouf was appointed to succeed him as Keeper of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities at the British Museum. In Jan. 1887 Mr. Renouf was elected President of the Society of Biblical Archæology. In 1886 he edited for the Trustees of the British Museum the "Ancient Egyptian Texts from the Coffin of Amamu," a posthumous work of the late Dr. Birch, and in 1890 the "Facsimile of the Papyrus of Ani," with an introduction to the contents of the Egyptian "Book of the Dead." He is Corresponding Member of the Imperial German Archæological Institute at Rome. Through his marriage in 1857 with Ludowika, the eldest daughter of Christian Brentano, Mr. Renouf became closely allied to many persons whose names are illustrious in the literature of Germany.

REUTER, Baron Paul Julius, was born at Cassel, in 1818. He was connected with the Electric Telegraph system from its earliest establishment. The practical working of the telegraph, in 1849, between Aix-la-Chapelle and Berlin—the first section open to the public—convinced him that a new era in correspondence had arisen, and in the former town he established the first centre of an organisation for collecting and transmitting telegraphic news. As the various telegraph lines were opened in succession, they were made subservient to his system; and when the cable between Calais and Dover was laid in 1851, Mr. Reuter, who had become a naturalised British subject, transferred his chief office to London. Previous to the opening of his office, the leading London papers had furnished the public with scanty and incomplete intelligence, which was reproduced by the rest of the Press, and Mr. Reuter, to remedy this defect, established agencies in all parts of the world, to supply him with news, since which time the British Press has contained a daily record of the latest important events connected with politics, commerce, and science. The system which he adopted of supplying all the papers indiscriminately with the same intelligence has greatly contributed to the important development of the penny Press. A similar organisation has been inaugurated by Mr. Reuter in America, India, China, Australia, and all the Continental States. It was only by the united contributions of the several branches that the extensive staff of correspondents and the great expenses necessarily incidental to the work could be supported, the richest Press of any single country being insufficient to render such an undertaking possible. During the Franco-Austrian war, and during the Civil War in America, Mr.

Reuter was fortunate in being the first to publish the most important news, thereby gaining the confidence of the nation and the press—a confidence which he has maintained by his constant activity. In 1865, Mr. Reuter transferred his business to a Limited Liability Company, of which he is the manager, and in the same year he obtained from the Hanoverian Government a concession for the construction of a submarine telegraph line between England and Germany, which enabled a through telegraphic communication to be made direct between London and the principal towns of Germany. Mr. Reuter also obtained a concession from the French Government for the construction and laying of a cable between France and the United States, which was laid in 1869, and which is worked in conjunction with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. In 1871, the Duke of Coburg Gotha, in recognition of his public services, conferred on him the title of Baron. Since 1878, the Baron has relinquished his office of Managing Director of Reuter's Telegram Company, but still retains a seat on the Board of its Directors. Baron Reuter has greatly attracted the attention of the political world, through a concession granted to him, in 1872, by the Shah of Persia. In virtue of this concession, Baron Reuter has the exclusive privilege of constructing railways, working mines and forests, and making use of all the other natural resources of that country, besides farming the customs. This immense monopoly, which Baron Reuter endeavoured to render subservient to British interests—without, however, excluding other nations—met with difficulties through certain intrigues; these difficulties he expected to remove, as Her Majesty's Government had interposed in his favour. But the concession was annulled in Jan., 1889; and he received instead the concession of the Imperial Bank of Persia.

REVILLE, Albert, pastor and French Protestant writer, was born at Dieppe, Nov. 4, 1826. He contributed to the most important French Protestant organs, and by his writings took a prominent position among his co-religionists. For some months he was suffragan at Nîmes, then pastor at Luneray, near Dieppe, and in 1851 he was called to Rotterdam as pastor of the Walloon Church. In 1862 the University of Leyden conferred upon him the degree of Doctor; in 1880 he was appointed Titular Professor of Religious History in the College of France, and in 1886 he accepted the Presidency of the Section des Sciences religieuses at the Sorbonne. Among his works are: "Authenticité du Nouveau Testament," 1851; "De la Rédemption," 1859; "Essais de Critique Religieuse," 1860; "Manuel d'Histoire Comparée de la Philosophie et de la Religion," 1861; "Études critiques sur l'Évangile selon St. Matthieu," 1862; "Théodore Parker, sa vie et ses œuvres," 1865; "L'Enseignement de Jésus Christ," 1870; "Histoire du dogme de la Divinité d'Jesus Christ," 1876; "Prolégomènes de l'Histoire des Religions," 1881; "Les Religions des peuples non-civilisés," 1883; "Les Religions du Mexique, de l'Amérique centrale et du Pérou," 1886; "La Religion Chinoise," 1889. M. Réville is one of the chief leaders of the Liberal movement among the French Protestants.

REYER, Ernest. whose real name is Rey, was born at Marseilles, Dec. 1, 1823. He studied solfeggio at the Free School of Music in his native city, and became a good reader. At the age of sixteen he went to Algiers as a Government official, continued his pianoforte practice, and began to compose without having properly learned harmony and counterpoint. His compositions became popular, and in 1848, when the Revolution deprived him of his situation, he returned to Paris and completed his musical education under his aunt, Madame Louise Farrene. He composed the music of "Le Selam," an Oriental symphony, which was produced with success April 5, 1850; and "Maitre Wolfram," a one-act opera, which also was successful at the Théâtre Lyrique, May 20, 1854; "La Statuette," produced at the same theatre, April 11, 1861, showed much facility and power. His other works include "Erostate," performed at Baden in 1862; and "Victoire," a cantata. M. Reyer has written for the Presse, the Revue de Paris and Courrier de Paris, and, after the death of Berlioz, he became musical critic to the Journal des Débats. He is librarian to the Opéra, and succeeded David at the Institute of France in 1876.

REYNOLDS, The Rev. Henry Robert, D.D., son of the Rev. John Reynolds, of Romsey, and grandson of Dr. Henry Revell Reynolds, physician in ordinary to George III., was born at Romsey, Hampshire, Feb. 26, 1825, and educated at Coward College and at University College, London. He graduated B.A. in 1844, obtained the University Scholarship in Mathematics; was elected a Fellow of University College in 1848, and received the degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh in 1869. REYNOLDS, Professor James Emerson, M.D., F.R.S., was born Jan. 8, 1844, at Bootentown, co. Dublin, where his father, Dr. James Reynolds, was for many years a medical practitioner. He is M.D. of the University of Dublin; Member of the College of Physicians, Dublin and Edinburgh. In 1880 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, London; is a Vice-President of the Chemical Society of London; and has been Examiner in Chemistry at the University of London from 1883; and is Commissioner of Irish Lighthouses. He was appointed, in 1867, Keeper of the Mineral Department in the National Museum, Dublin; in 1870, Professor of Analytical Chemistry in the Royal Dublin Society; in 1873 Professor of Chemistry in the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland; and in 1875 to the Professorship of Chemistry and Chemical Philosophy in the University of Dublin. lished "Six Lectures on Experimental Chemistry," 1874; "General Experimental Chemistry," 4 vols., 1880; which has gone through many editions and been translated into German; and, with others, "The Manual of Public Health for Ireland," 1876. He is the discoverer of a large number of compounds of theoretical importance, including Thiocarbamide and numerous derivatives, a new class of colloid bodies, and several groups of silicon compounds of new types; these and others are described in the course of about seventy papers published by various learned societies. RHODES, Cecil, the Premier of the Cape, was born in England; and, after his education at College, went out to Africa and became director of various diamond mines at Kimberley, and amassed so large a fortune that he obtained the designation of "The Diamond King." He gave £10,000 to the cause of Home Rule. He entered the Cape Parliament as member for West Barkley, took office under the ministry of Sir T. Scanlon, and on July 17, 1890, became Prime Minister. He has been the chief mover in obtaining mining rights over Matabeleland.

RHYS, John, M.A., born June 21, 1840, at Abercaero, near Ponterwyd, Cardiganshire, served a pupil teacher's apprenticeship at Penllwyn British School, near Aberystwyth from August, 1855, to the end of 1859; was trained at Bangor Normal College to be a public elementary schoolmaster in 1860; and had charge of a school in Anglesey till the end of 1865. He matriculated as a commoner of Jesus College, Oxford, at Michaelmas, 1865; and at the end of 1869, was elected a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. He also attended lectures at intervals from 1868 to 1870 at the Sorbonne, the Collège de France, and the University of Heidelberg. In 1870 he matriculated at Leipzig, and in 1871 at Göttingen, but soon afterwards returned, having been appointed Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools for the counties of Flint and Denbigh in May, 1871. He was appointed Professor of Celtic in the University of Oxford in Feb., 1877. In that year he published his "Lectures on Welsh Philology." He had previously been known as a Celtic Scholar by his articles in Kuhn's Beiträge zur vergleichenden Sprachforschung, the Revue Celtique and the Archæologia Cambrensis. Mr. Rhys was elected a perpetual member of the Société Linguistique de Paris in 1873; made a corresponding member of the Dorpat Gelehrte Ethnische Gesellschaft in 1877; and elected an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford, Oct. 30, 1877. He served on Lord Aberdare's Commission appointed in August, 1880, to inquire into the condition of Intermediate and Higher education in Wales. In Oct., 1881, he was elected to a Fellowship at Jesus College, and in 1882 a work of his on Celtic Britain was published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. He was the Hibbert Lecturer for the year 1886, and chose for his subject "Celtic Heathendom." In December, 1889, he delivered, in Edinburgh, Rhind Lectures on Archæology in connection with the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. They were subsequently published in the Scottish Review.

RHYS, Miss Myvanwy, was born at Rhyl, in North Wales, her father, now Professor of Celtic at Oxford, being at that time H.M. Inspector of Schools in the counties of Flint and Denbigh. Welsh naturally was her mother-tongue, and it was not indeed until some time after the family migrated to Oxford that she began to speak English. For some years she studied French under the careful tuition of her mother, Mrs. Rhys, a remarkably accomplished linguist, and when the time came for her and her sister to attend the Oxford High School she had already obtained a considerable mastery of the language. At school Miss Rhys had the advantage of M. Bu's admirable teaching, from which she derived great profit. Amongst their school-fellows the two girls soon acquired a reputation for more than ordinary intelligence, and a possession of that general information which is only obtained in a cultivated home circle, and which no institution whatever can impart. Miss Rhys has lately risen to the head of the school, and has been first in German besides. Last year she gained the Ada Max Müller scholarship for German. She is a young lady of whom the world will certainly hear more anon. She is only sixteen, but already she has carried everything before her. Her crowning triumph was celebrated at the Mansion House, when she received at the hands of the Lord Mayor the Gold Medal given by the French Minister of Public Instruction. This honour was awarded upon the result of a competition among English schools conducted by the National Society of French Professors in England, and the only other candidate similarly distinguished was a gentleman, Mr. F. A. P. Wilkins. Considering then the numerical strength of the candidates of both sexes with whom she had to compete, and her own youth, the achievement of Miss Rhys is most noteworthy. The gift of languages and the love of study are with Miss Rhys an inheritance from both parents.

RICHARDS, Admiral Sir George Henry, K.C.B., F.R.S., F.R.G.S., son of the late Capt. George Spencer Richards, R.N., was born Jan. 13, 1820, at Anthony, Cornwall. After receiving a suitable education at a private school, he was appointed to the naval service in 1833, made a Lieutenant in 1842, a Commander in 1845, a Captain in 1854, Rear-Admiral in 1870, Vice-Admiral in 1877, and Admiral in 1884. While a Captain he served as naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, was present during the Chinese war of 1841-2, at the action and storming of the forts at Obligado in the Parana River, 1845, was Commander of H.M.S. Acheron in New Zealand 1847-51, and of H.M.S. Assistance, in search of Franklin in the Arctic Regions during 1852-3-4. He received the Companionship of the Bath in 1871; is a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Royal Geographical Societies of London, Berlin, and Turin, and a Member of the Academy of Sciences of Paris. Admiral Richards has been engaged in, and has conducted many nautical surveys of, foreign countries—China, the Falkland Isles, Rio de la Plata, New Zealand, Australia, Vancouver Island, British Columbia, &c.; was a Queen's Commissioner for settling the Oregon boundary from 1856 to 1862; and Hydrographer of the Admiralty from 1863 to 1874. He was knighted in 1877, created K.C.B. in 1886, and is at present the acting Conservator of the Mersey.

RICHARDSON, Benjamin Ward, M.D., F.R.S., LL.D., F.S.A., born Oct. 31, 1828, at Somerby, in the county of Leicester, was educated at the school of the Rev. W. Y. Nutt, at Burrow-on-the-Hill, Leicestershire, and at Anderson's University, Glasgow. He graduated in Medicine at the University of St. Andrews in 1854, and received the honorary degree of M.A. from the same University in 1859. He gained the Fothergillian Gold Medal in 1854, for an essay on the diseases of the child before birth; and the Astley Cooper prize of £300 in 1856, for an essay on the coagulation of the blood. Dr. Richardson became a member of the Royal College of Physicians by examination in 1856, and was elected a Fellow of the College in 1861; he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1867, and Croonian Lecturer in 1873; F.S.A., 1877; honorary member of the Philosophical Society of America in 1863; of the Imperial Leopold Carolina Academy of Sciences in 1867; and of the Physiological and Statistical Academy of Milan in 1870. He is also an honorary member of the Royal Society of Hygiene of Italy and of the Society of Hygiene of France. In 1865 he conducted an experimental research on the nature of the poisons of the spreading contagious diseases, which ended in the detection of a special poisonous product, common in these poisons, to which he gave the name of septime. In 1866 he discovered the application of ether spray for the local abolition of pain in surgical operations. He introduced methylene bichloride as a general anæsthetic, and discovered the controlling influence of nitrite of amyl over tetanus and other spasmodic affections. He originated, and for some years edited, the Journal of Public Health, and afterwards the Social Science Review. Dr. Richardson's principal contributions to medical and scientific literature have been directed to the advancement of medical practice by the experimental method. The study of disease by synthesis; the restoration of life after various forms of apparent death; the maintenance of life in factitious atmospheres; the investigation of the theory of a nervous atmosphere or ether; the effects of electricity on animal life; methods of killing animals without the infliction of pain, which led to his invention of the "lethal chamber," now so largely used for subjecting domestic animals to painless death; numerous original papers on new medicines and new modes of treatment of diseases; and a series of researches on alcohol in relation to its action on man, the results of which were delivered before the Society of Arts in the Cantor Course of Lectures for 1874-5. Dr. Richardson has been President of the Medical Society of London and thirty-two times President of the St. Andrew's Medical Graduates' Association. In 1869 he succeeded Lord Jerviswoode as assessor for the General Council in the University Court of St. Andrews, an office which he held for nearly sixteen years. He is Honorary Physician to the Royal Literary Fund, the Newspaper Press Fund, and the National Society of Schoolmasters. In 1868, "in recognition of his various contributions to science and medicine," he was presented by six hundred of his medical brethren and fellows in science with a testimonial consisting of a microscope by Ross, and one thousand guineas. At the Social Science Congress held at Brighton in Oct., 1875, he read a paper which gave rise to much subsequent discussion. In it he gave a sketch of an imaginary "model City of Health" to be called Hygeia. The University of St. Andrews conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D., Feb. 15, 1877. Dr. Richardson's most recent researches have been directed to the study of the diseases incident to modern civilisation, and for seven years past he has published quarterly the Asclepiad, a book of original research and observation on the science, art, and literature of medicine, preventive and curative, all the work being from his own pen. He has likewise contributed to general literature a work entitled "The Son of a Star: a romance of the Second Century." In addition to his professional and literary labours he has taken an active share in the development of cycling, as President of the Society of Cyclists.

When that party returned to office in Feb., 1874, he was made Lord President of the Council, and he retained that office until the defeat of the Conservatives in April, 1880. He introduced the Bill by which Church Patronage was abolished in Scotland (1874), and also the Agricultural Holdings Bill of 1875. In Lord Salisbury's first ministry the Duke of Richmond held the post of President of the Board of Trade from Jan. to Aug. 1885, and was then appointed to fill the new post of Secretary for Scotland; but he holds no office in Lord Salisbury's second Ministry.

RICHMOND, George, Hon. R.A., D.C.L., LL.D., son of an artist, born in 1809, early began to study art, and in 1824 became a student at the Royal Academy, about which time he was introduced to William Blake, "sweet visionary Blake," as Hayley calls him, to whom he looked for direction and guidance in art till, in 1827, he followed him to the grave. In 1837 he left England for Italy, and spent two years in the study of the great works in Venice, Florence, and Rome. In 1840, he returned to the practice of water-colour portraits, which he had suspended for two years, adding largely to it life-size studies in chalk, as a preparation for future practice in oil. In 1854 he exhibited a whole-length portrait of Sir Robert Harry Inglis, painted for the Bodleian Gallery, at Oxford; and a half-length of the Bishop of New Zealand (Dr. Selwyn), for St. John's College, Cambridge; and from that time he has been almost exclusively employed in oil painting. In 1847, he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone a member of the council of the Government Schools of Design; and in 1856, by Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, one of the Royal Commissioners for determining the National Gallery site, &c. In 1867, the University of Oxford conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.C.L., and in 1890, the University of Cambridge gave him the honorary degree of LL.D. The portraits executed by him number between 2,000 and 3,000, hundreds of which have been engraved.

RICHMOND, William Blake, son of George Richmond, A.R.A., D.C.L., was born in London, Nov. 29, 1843. As a student at the Royal Academy he obtained two Silver Medals in 1857; in 1860 he exhibited a portrait of his two brothers. In 1859 and 1860 he travelled in Italy, working at several pictures, which were not exhibited. In 1865 he again went to Italy, and studied in Rome, working at sculpture, architecture, fresco, and tempera painting. Between 1865 and 1868 he painted "The Procession of Bacchus." In 1870 he settled in England, and painted numerous portraits and other pictures. In 1873 he executed for J. S. Hodgson, Esq., of Lythe Hill, Haslemere, a series of frescoes, illustrating "The Life of Woman." In the same year he painted a colossal "Prometheus Bound," exhibited at the Academy the following spring, with several portraits. Since that time Mr. Richmond has exhibited at the Grosvenor and the Academy "Ariadne abandoned by Theseus," "Sarpedon Carried by Night and Death," "Electra at the Tomb of Agamemnon," "Hercules Releasing Prometheus," "The Ten Virgins," "An Audience at Athens," and "Hermes," besides portraits of Holman Hunt, Darwin, the Bishop of Salisbury, Lord Cranborne, Princess Louise, and many others. Mr. Richmond was elected Slade Professor at Oxford in the place of Mr. Ruskin in 1878, but resigned the post in 1883, when Mr. Ruskin again filled it. He received an honorary M.A. degree, and was elected Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He has made many studies all over Italy, Greece, and Egypt during several successive autumn journeys.

RICHTER, Gustav Karl Ludwig, a celebrated German artist, born in Berlin in 1823. He studied at the Berlin Academy, and in Paris under Cogniet in 1844, and subsequently (1847-49) in Rome. Among his most famous works are "The Raising of Jairus's Daughter," 1856, now in the Berlin National Gallery, and "The Building of the Pyramids," in the Maximilian Museum at Munich. His most renowned portraits are those of "The Emperor William," "The Empress Augusta," and "The Queen Louise of Prussia," now in the Cologne Museum. The Queen is represented as descending the palace steps,

RICHTER, Hans, a celebrated conductor of orchestral concerts, was born April 4, 1843, at Raab in Hungary, where his father was Capell-Meister of the cathedral. In 1853 he entered the Löwenburg School in Vienna. For three or four years he was a member of the Court Chapel Choir, and in 1859 entered the Conservatorium, studied the horn under Kleinecke, and theory under Sechter. For some time he was horn-player in the orchestra of the Kärnthnerthor opera. Esser brought him under the notice of Wagner, who took him to Lucerne, and there he made the first fair copy of the score of the "Meistersinger." In 1868 he became conductor at the Hof und National Theatre, Munich. Early in 1871 he went to Pesh as chief conductor of the National Theatre. He first attracted general attention in Jan., 1875, when he conducted a grand orchestral concert in Vienna, and was invited to assume direction of the Court Opera Theatre on the retirement of Herbeck in April of the same year. Previous to this he had been conducting the rehearsals of the "Niebelungen Ring" at Bayreuth, and in 1876 he directed the whole of the rehearsals and performances of the Festival there, and received, at the close of the third set of performances, the order of Maximilian from the King of Bavaria, and that of the Falcon from the Grand Duke of Weimar. In 1877 he produced the Walkyrie in Vienna, and followed it in 1878 by other portions of the tetralogie. The same year he was made Capell-Meister, and received the order of Franz Joseph. In 1879 he began the series of Orchestral Concerts in London, which, under his direction have excited much attention. Dr. Richter has a perfect knowledge of the scores of Beethoven's symphonies and other large works, and conducts them from memory. In 1885 he was chosen Director of the Birmingham Festival.

RIDDELL, Mrs. Charlotte Eliza Lawson, is the youngest child of James Cowan, of Carrickfergus, co. Antrim. She is married to J. H. Riddell, Esq., a civil engineer, by whose initials she is generally known. Mrs. Riddell is the author of many popular novels, including "Too Much Alone," "City and Suburb," "George Geith," "A Life's Assize," "Mortomley's Estate," 1874; "Above Suspicion," 1875; "Her Mother's Darling," 1877; "The Mystery in Palace Gardens," 1880; "The Senior Partner," and "Daisies and Buttercups," 1882; "A Struggle for Fame," 1883; "Susan Drummond," and "Berna Boyle," 1884; "Mitre Court," 1885; "Miss Gascoigne," and "The Nun's Curse," 1887; and "Princess Sunshine," 1889.

RIDDING, The Right Rev. George, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwell, son of the late Rev. Charles Ridding, Vicar of Andover, by Charlotte, daughter of the late Ven. Timothy Stonhouse-Vigor, 3rd son of Sir James Stonhouse, 7th Bart., was born March 16, 1828; educated at St. Mary's College, Winchester, and at Balliol College, Oxford (Craven Scholar, B.A. 1st class in Literis Humanioribus, 2nd class in Mathematics and Fellow of Exeter College, 1851, Latin Essay and M.A. 1853, D.D. 1869); ordained Deacon 1854, and Priest 1856; was a Tutor of Exeter College 1852-63, Junior Proctor of Oxford University 1861-62, Select Preacher 1862-64, Second Master of Winchester College 1863-66, and Head Master of Winchester College 1867-84; consecrated 1st Bishop of Southwell, May 1, 1884; married first, 1858, Mary Louisa, who died 1859, daughter of the Right Rev. George Moberly, D.C.L., 92nd Bishop of Salisbury; secondly, 1876, Lady Laura Elizabeth Palmer, daughter of the 1st Earl of Selborne.

RIGG, The Rev. James Harrison, D.D., was born in 1821, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, being the son of the Rev. John Rigg, a Wesleyan minister, who was famous in his day. He received his education at Old Kingswood school, where he was afterwards a teacher, and in 1845 he entered the Wesleyan ministry. He was one of the leading writers for the Biblical Review (1846-49), and for many years, indeed, the Wesleyan Conference was more indebted for the defence and exposition of its proceedings and principles to this young minister than to any other person. In 1865 he was elected by the Conference to be Chairman of the Kent District, and in 1866 a member of the "Hundred," or the "Legal Conference." In 1868 he was elected Principal of the Wesleyan Training College—a position which he still holds. In 1878 Dr. Rigg was chosen President of the Wesleyan Conference. His name is associated with the admission of laymen into the Conference that year, and with the Thanks-giving Fund, which has realized over £300,000 for Methodist work. For many years Dr. Rigg has been Chairman of the "Second London District" of the Wesleyan community. He was one of the original members of the London School Board, on which he represented Westminster for six years. In 1886, 1887, and 1888, he was a Member of the Royal Commission on Elementary Education. He has written "The Principles of Wesleyan Methodism," 1850; "Connexionalism and Congregational Independency," 1851; "Modern Anglican Theology," 1857, 3rd edit., 1879; "Essays for the Times on Ecclesiastical and Social Subjects," 1866; "The Churchmanship of John Wesley," now in its 3rd edit.; "The Living Wesley as he was in his Youth and in his Prime," "National Education in its social conditions and aspects, and Public Elementary Schools, British and Foreign," 1873; "Connexional Economy of Wesleyan Methodism," 1879; "Discourses and Addresses on Leading Truths of Religion and Philosophy," 1880; "The Sabbath and the Sabbath Law before and after Christ," 1881; "Was Wesley a High Churchman?" and "Is Modern Methodism Wesleyan Methodism? or Wesleyan Methodism and the Church of England," and "Church Organization: Primitive and Protestant," 1887. Dr. Rigg was formerly English correspondent of the New Orleans Christian Advocate (1851) and of the New York Christian Advocate (1858-76). He has written for the Wesleyan Magazine, the Quarterly, Contemporary, and International Reviews, and has contributed articles on Methodism to the new edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He has for many years been the editor of the London Quarterly Review, which is the quarterly literary organ of the Wesleyan Methodists.

RIPON, Bishop of. See CARPENTER, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM BOYD.

RIPON (Marquis of), The Right Hon. George Frederick Samuel Robinson, K.G., P.C., D.C.L., long known as Earl de Grey and Ripon, is the only son of Frederick John, first Earl of Ripon (better known by his original title of Viscount Goderich, which he bore when he held the post of Premier for a few months in 1827), by Lady Sarah Albina Louisa Hobart, only child of Robert, fourth Earl of Buckinghamshire. He was born in London, Oct. 24, 1827, and succeeded to his father's titles, Jan. 28, 1859, and to those of his uncle, as third Earl de Grey, Nov. 14, in the same year. He began his political life as attaché to a special mission to Brussels in 1849. At the general election in 1852 he was returned to the House of Commons by his courtesy title of Viscount Goderich as member for Hull, and continued to sit for that borough until 1853, when he vacated his seat to oppose Mr. Starkey, at Huddersfield, where he succeeded in winning the seat for the Liberals by a majority of eighty. At the general election in 1857 he was returned for the West Riding of Yorkshire without opposition. In June, 1859, the year in which he succeeded to the Upper House, Lord Herbert selected him for the post of Under-Secretary for War, and in Feb., 1861, upon the accession of Sir George C. Lewis, he was made Under-Secretary for India. Upon the death of Sir G. C. Lewis, in April, 1863, his lordship, who had shown great efficiency in his subordinate office, took the place of his chief as Secretary for War, together with a seat in the Cabinet. He remained at the War Office nearly three years, and in Feb., 1866, when Sir Charles Wood, afterwards Viscount Halifax, withdrew from the Ministry, was appointed Secretary of State for India. On Mr. Gladstone's accession to office in Dec., 1868, he was appointed Lord President of the Council, but he resigned that office in Aug., 1873. He was created a Knight of the Garter in 1869. In 1871 he acted as Chairman of the High Joint Commission which arranged the Treaty of Washington; and in recognition of the services he rendered in that capacity he was, soon after his return from the United States, created Marquis of Ripon. His lordship, who is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the North and West Ridings of Yorkshire, and for the county of Lincoln, was created an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford in 1870, and on April 23 in that year was installed as Grand Master of the Freemasons of England, in succession to Lord Zetland. In the autumn of 1874 the Grand Lodge received a communication to the effect that the Marquis of Ripon had resigned the post of Grand Master, and their surprise was heightened to dismay by the circumstance that he did so without assigning any reason for the step. A few days afterwards, however, it transpired that his lordship had joined the Roman Catholic Church, which, as is well known, has condemned Freemasonry and all other oath-bound societies. The reception of the Marquis into the Roman Catholic Church took place at the Oratory, Brompton, Sept. 4, 1874, and his conversion gave rise to much comment in the public journals, both here and on the continent. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to power, the Marquis of Ripon was appointed Viceroy of India. He arrived at Bombay, May 30, 1880, and was installed at Simla, June 8. On June 18 a large meeting was held in Exeter Hall to protest against the appointment of a Roman Catholic to the Viceroyalty of India. As Viceroy Lord Ripon excited much diversity of opinion by his policy, which was directed towards extending the rights of natives of India, and, in certain directions, towards limiting the privileges of Europeans. The excitement caused by the famous "Ilbert Bill" was the chief instance of this; and in a word it may be said that there never was a Viceroy so unpopular among Anglo-Indians or so popular among natives. Lord Ripon's departure was the occasion of the most extraordinary manifestations in his favour on the part of the Hindoo population of Bengal and Bombay. In Mr. Gladstone's short "Home Rule" administration Lord Ripon was First Lord of the Admiralty. The Marquis was elected in 1882 President of the Yorkshire College, Leeds. He married, in April, 1851, Henrietta Anne Theodosia, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Vyner; she has been a Lady of the Bedchamber to the Princess of Wales, and by whom he has surviving issue, Frederick Oliver, born Jan. 29, 1852, now Earl de Grey, heir to the marquise.

RISTICH, John, a Servian statesman, born at Kragujevatz in 1831, began his studies in Germany and continued them in Paris. Under the government of Prince Karageorgevitch he was appointed Secretary and afterwards head of a department in the office of the Minister of the Interior. Milosch Obrenovitch III. on his return in 1858, appointed M. Ristich secretary to a deputation which he sent to Constantinople; and at a later period the same Prince accredited him as the representative of Servia at the Sublime Porte. Scarcely had he been installed in his post, however, when the crisis commenced which culminated in the bombardment of Belgrade (1862). M. Ristich extricated himself with such ability from the difficulties which ensued, that five years later (1867) he succeeded in obtaining the evacuation of all the Servian fortresses occupied up to that time by the Turkish troops. This service gained for him the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, but he soon resigned it in consequence of his inability to agree with the Prince Michael on certain questions of detail. He was present as the representative of Prince Michael at the baptism of Prince Nicholas of Montenegro. While on his way back from Cetinje he learned the news that Prince Michael had been assassinated (July 10, 1868), and had been succeeded by his grand-nephew, Prince Milan. The young Prince was then pursuing his studies in Paris, and the provisional government which had been established sent M. Ristich to that capital to escort him to Servia. On the Prince's arrival at Belgrade the Grand National Skuptschina was convoked, and nominated a Council of Regency, composed of three members, to govern the country during the Prince's minority. M. Blasnavatz, M. Ristich, and M. Gavrilovitch, formed this Council, which discharged its functions till 1872, when the Prince attained his majority. This Council then became a Ministry, in which M. Ristich held the portfolio for Foreign Affairs, and on the decease of his colleague, Col. Blasnavatz, he became President of the Council. He afterwards withdrew from public life for two years, until the insurrection occurred in Herzegovina, when he became Minister for Foreign Affairs. In May, 1876, he and his friends returned to office, which they had been obliged to resign eight months previous, in consequence of the diplomatic pressure of the Cabinets of Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburg. He held the office of Foreign Minister during the disastrous war with Turkey (1877), in which the Servians were thoroughly defeated. In 1878 he was sent to the Congress of Berlin, where he successfully pleaded the cause of Servia's independence. Since that date he has often been prominent in Servian affairs, but his strong pro-Russian leanings long prevented his holding office since Servia began to incline definitely towards Austria for support. However, in 1889, on the abdication of King Milan, he became head of the Regency during the minority of King Alexander.

RISTORI, Adelaide. See GRILLO, MARQUISE DEL.

RITCHIE, The Right Hon. Charles Thomson, M.P., son of the late Mr. William Ritchie, of Rock Hill, Forfarshire, was born at Dundee in 1838, and is engaged in business in the east of London. In 1874 he was elected as Conservative member for the Tower Hamlets, and continued to hold the seat until 1885, when after the Redistribution Bill he was returned for the St. George's Division of the old borough. In Lord Salisbury's first administration, having gained a considerable reputation for practical ability and converseance with affairs, he was made Secretary to the Admiralty. He has taken a prominent part in the agitation against foreign bounties on sugar. In Lord Salisbury's second administration Mr. Ritchie was appointed President of the Local Government Board. In Oct. 1888 he paid a visit to his native town, Dundee, and was presented with the freedom of the borough.

ITCHIE, Mrs. Richmond, daughter of the great novelist, William Makepeace Thackeray, was born in Albion Street, London. Some years of her childhood were spent in Paris, but she has passed the greater part of her life in Kensington. Her first published work was "The Story of Elizabeth," 1863, which was at once successful; this was followed in 1865, by "The Village on the Cliff;" "To Esther, and other Sketches;" "Old Kensington," the work by which she is best known; "Blue Beard's Keys," "Toilers and Spinsters," "Miss Angel," 1875; "Anne Evans," 1880; "Madame de Sévigné," 1881; "A Book of Sybils," 1883; and "Mrs. Dymond," 1885. Various articles by her, on Tennyson, Ruskin, &c., have appeared from time to time in the American Magazines.

RIVES, Amélie. See CHANLER, MRS. AMÉLIE.

RIVIÈRE, Briton, R.A., a distinguished animal-painter, was born in London, Aug. 14, 1840, being the son of Mr. W. Rivière, who was head of the drawing school at Cheltenham College, and afterwards a teacher of drawing at Oxford. He found in his father an experienced and able master, under whom he studied during the nine years he was at Cheltenham and subsequently at Oxford. While studying art in the latter place the influences, other than artistic, by which he was always surrounded, prevailed to turn his attention to classical and other scholarly matters; he entered the University, took his B.A. degree in 1867, and that of M.A. in 1873. The first pictures he exhibited were home rural scenes, as "Rest from Labour," and "Sheep on the Cotswolds," in the Academy Gallery, in 1858; and, in the next year, "On the Road to Gloucester Fair." From that date till 1864 he was absent from the Academy as an exhibitor, but in the last-mentioned year he sent "Iron Bars" and "Romeo and Juliet." Among his subsequent works are "The Poacher's Nurse," "Strayed from the Flock," a dead lamb lying in the snow, and "The Long Sleep," 1866; "Fox and Geese" (exhibited in the exhibition of water-colour painters at the Dudley Gallery in 1868, and now in the collection at South Kensington); "Prisoners," 1869; "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Charity," 1870; "Come Back!" and "Circe and the companions of Ulysses," 1871; "Daniel," 1872; "Argus" and

"All that was left of the Homeward Bound," 1873; "Apollo" and "Genius Loci," 1874; "War Time," and "The Last of the Garrison," 1875; "A Stern Chase is always a Long Chase," and "Pallas Athene and the Swineherd's Dogs," 1876; "A Legend of St. Patrick," and "Lazarus," 1877; "An Anxious Moment," a flock of geese frightened at the sight of a hat on the ground; "Sympathy," "Victims," and "The Ruins of Persepolis," 1878; "In manus tuas Domine," "The Poacher's Widow," now in the public library, Birmingham, and "A Winter's Tale," 1879; "The Night Watch," "The Last Spoonful," and "Endymion," 1880; "A Roman Holiday," "Envy, Hatred, and Malice," "Hope Deferred," and "Let Sleeping Dogs Lie," 1881; "The Magician's Doorway," "Una," and "Portrait of Miss Potter," 1882; "The Unclean Spirits entering into the Swine," "Old Playfellows," "The Last of the Crew," and "Giants at Play," 1883; "Actæon," "St. Bartholomew's Eve," "The King and his Satellites," "The Enchanted Castle," 1884; "The Sheepstealer," "Væ Victis," "After Naseby," "Stolen Kisses," 1885. Exhibited in the Academy in 1886, "Rizpah," "Union is Strength," "The Exile 1746," and "The Welcome." In 1887 "An Old World Wanderer" and "Jilted." In 1888 "Requiescat" and "A Cavatina." At the Grosvenor "Adonis's Farewell." In 1889 "Pale Cynthia" and "Of a Fool and his folly there is no End." At the Grosvenor, "Prometheus." In 1890 "Rus in Urbe." Exhibited by Mr. James Agnew, "Daniel's answer to the King." Many of the above have been engraved on steel by F. Stacpoole, A.R.A., S. Cousins, R.A., and C. J. Lewis; and other works have been etched by various hands. Mr. Rivière was elected A.R.A. Jan. 16, 1878, and R.A. May 5, 1881.

ROBERT I. (Robert - Charles - Louis Marie de Bourbon), ex-Duke of Parma, Infant of Spain, born July 9, 1848, succeeded his father, Duke Ferdinand Charles III., March 27, 1854, as Robert I., under the regency of his mother, the dowager-Duchess Louise-Marie-Thérèse de Bourbon, daughter of the Duke de Berry. Her rule came to an end in 1859, in consequence of the revolution, and she, with her son, sought refuge in the Helvetic States. The ex-Duke Robert married, in Rome, April 5, 1869, the Duchess Marie Pia des Grâces, daughter of the late Ferdinand II., King of Naples. She died Sept. 29, 1882. He married, secondly, on Oct. 15, 1884, Marie Antonia, Princess of Brigance. He has nine children by his first wife, and four by his second.

ROBERTS, General Sir Frederick Sleigh, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.I.E., & C., Commander-in-Chief in India, son of the late Sir Abraham Roberts, G.C.B., was born in 1832, and educated at Eton, Sandhurst, and Addiscombe. He received his first commission as second lieutenant in the Bengal Artillery in 1851, and, after passing through the various other grades, was promoted to lieutenant-general in 1883. He served with distinction throughout the Indian Mutiny campaign, and received the Victoria Cross for personal bravery in the field in 1858. "Lieutenant Roberts's gallantry has on every occasion been most marked. On following up the retreating enemy on Jan. 2, 1858, at Khodagunge, he saw in the distance two sepoy's going away with a standard. Lieutenant Roberts put spurs to his horse, and overtook them just as they were about to enter a village. They immediately turned round and presented their muskets at him, and one of the men pulled the trigger, but fortunately the cap snapped, and the standard-bearer was cut down by the gallant young officer, and the standard taken possession of by him. He also, on the same day, cut down another sepoy who was standing at bay, with musket and bayonet, keeping off a sowar. Lieutenant Roberts rode to the assistance of the horseman, and rushing at the sepoy, with one blow of his sword cut him across the face, killing him on the spot." Throughout the Abyssinian campaign of 1868 he held the office of Assistant-Quartermaster-General; he superintended the re-embarkation of the whole army, and was selected by Sir Robert Napier, as the bearer of his final despatches. He also acted as Assistant-Quartermaster-General with the Cachar column in the Looshai Expeditionary Force (1871-72). At the beginning of the Afghan campaign he was appointed Commander of the Kuram Field Force, and subsequently he had the chief command of the Army in Afghanistan, where he achieved the most brilliant triumphs. After the massacre of our embassy, Sir Frederick Roberts re-occupied Cabul at the close of 1879. Towards the end of July, 1880, a terrible defeat was inflicted by the troops of Ayob Khan, at Maiwand, on General Burrows, the remnant of whose force with difficulty joined General Primrose's garrison at Candahar. An attack on that city seemed imminent, but Ayob hesitated, and lost his opportunity. Meanwhile, a bold resolution was taken at Cabul, Sir Frederick Roberts, gathering a force of over 9,000 picked men, marched to the relief of Candahar, allowing Abdurrahman Khan to occupy Cabul, and leaving to General Stewart the duty of leading back the rest of the British troops by the Khyber to the Punjab. Sir Frederick Roberts, cut off from direct communication with his countrymen, disappeared, as it were, from human ken for three weeks, during which time the national anxiety was extreme. At last he emerged victorious from the trackless region between Cabul and Candahar. Immediately, he grappled with Ayob Khan, and inflicted on that pretender a crushing defeat. On the return of Sir Frederick Roberts to England he was loaded with honours; he was presented with the freedom of the city of London, received the thanks of Parliament, and was created a baronet. In Feb., 1881, he was appointed to succeed Sir George Colley in the command of the troops in Natal and the Transvaal, but peace was concluded with the Boers before his arrival in the colony. He was afterwards appointed a member of the Council of Madras, and commanded the troops in that Presidency from 1881-5, and since then has been Commander-in-Chief in India. On the death of Sir H. Macpherson (Oct., 1886), Sir F. Roberts assumed the command of the Burmese expedition. He had been twenty-three times mentioned in despatches before the Afghan war, during which campaign he was eight times thanked by the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief in India. To the Nineteenth Century for Nov., 1882, he contributed an article on the "Present State of the Army," thus supplying the sequel to an interesting speech which he had delivered at the Mansion House about two years before.

ROBERTS, Isaac, F.R.S., F.R.A.S., F.G.S., was born in Denbighshire, North Wales, in the year 1829. A large part of his life has been devoted to practical investigations in Geology, Microscopy, Spectrum Analysis, Astronomy, and other kindred branches of science. He is the author of several papers on Geological and Astronomical subjects, amongst which are Investigations of the physical conditions affecting the circulation of the underground water and the filtering and hygroscopic properties of triassic sandstone. He has for several years (by the aid of self-recording mechanical contrivances designed by himself for tracing continuous diagrammatic curves) studied the movements in the underground water which are caused by capillarity, by rainfall, by variations in atmospheric pressure, and by solar and lunar attraction. He has made exhaustive experiments by means of specially designed weighing machines, to determine the vertical and lateral pressures of grain when stored in cells up to eighty feet in height. Some of the results of these investigations are published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society. For several years he has been pursuing stellar photography with powerful instruments specially constructed for the purpose, and has succeeded in adding considerably to the knowledge of the stars, clusters and nebulae. In 1885 he commenced to chart by photography the stars in the northern hemisphere of the sky, but ere he had been a year engaged upon this work, the French Astronomers arranged that the charting of the stars should be done internationally on a uniform scale by instruments of similar construction. Mr. Roberts thereupon turned his attention to special researches on star clusters, and nebulae, with long exposures of the photographic plates. These photographs have been regarded with the highest interest and admiration wherever they have been exhibited. He has devised a method and a machine by which the stars that have been photographed can with accuracy be engraved directly from the negatives on copper plates for the purpose of printing; the machine is also adapted for measuring the positions and magnitudes of the stars. In 1870 he was elected a Fellow of the Geological Society, and of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1882. Last year (1890) he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society.

ROBERTS, Samuel, F.R.S., Mathematician, the son of the Rev. Griffith Roberts, for many years minister of the English Presbyterian Chapel at Kirkstead, near Horncastle, Lincolnshire, was born at Hackney in 1827. He received his school education at Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, Horncastle, and subsequently went to Manchester New College, then located in Manchester. In 1849 he took the Master of Arts degree of London University, and received the Gold Medal. He entered the legal profession, and was admitted as Solicitor in 1853. After an interval of some years, Mr. Roberts resumed his mathematical studies; and, having removed to London, became in 1865, a member of the London Mathematical Society established in the same year. He was for several years Treasurer, and has also filled the offices of Vice-President and President, 1880-2, of that Society. In 1878 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society. Except a few early articles of an ephemeral kind, his writings have related to Mathematical subjects. They are contained in the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and various other English and foreign Mathematical journals.

ROBERTS, Sir William, M.D., F.R.S., was born in Anglesea in 1830, and is the son of David Roberts, Surgeon. He was educated at University College, London; took the degree of M.D., London, 1854; was appointed Physician to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, where he settled in practice as a physician in 1855. He was elected Fellow of the College of Physicians, London, in 1865; Fellow of the Royal Society in 1877, and was appointed Professor of Clinical Medicine to the Victoria University, on the founding of that University. His published works are: "A practical Treatise on Urinary and Renal Disorders," of which the 4th edition was published in 1885; "The Digestive Ferments and Preparation, and the use of Artificially Digested Food," 1880; "Lectures on Dietetics and Dyspepsia," 1885; and numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions and the Proceedings of the Royal Society and the Medical journals. He was knighted in 1885.

ROBERTS - AUSTEN, Professor W. Chandler, F.R.S., the Queen's Assay Master, was born in 1843, and is the son of George and Maria Louisa Roberts. His father's ancestry were Welsh, and his mother belonged to the old Kentish family of Chandler, which intermarried with the Hulses and Austens, and included among their more distinguished members the learned scholar, Isaac Casaubon, Canon of Canterbury. In 1885, at the request of his uncle, the late Major Austen, J.P., of Haffenden and Camborne in Kent, Mr. Roberts obtained Royal licence to take the name of Austen. Mr. Roberts-Austen entered the Royal School of Mines in 1861, with a view to becoming a Mining Engineer; but, on obtaining the Associateship of the School, the late Professor Graham, then Master of the Mint, secured his services. With him he conducted a remarkable series of researches, and on Professor Graham's death in 1869, he succeeded to one of the appointments which Professor Graham had held—that of Assayer to the Mint—being subsequently, in 1882, entrusted with all the duties of the "Queen's Assay Master." In 1880, on the retirement of the late Dr. Percy, F.R.S., at the request of the then Lord President of the Council,

Mr. Roberts-Austen was appointed to the Chair of Metallurgy at the Royal School of Mines, a post which he still holds in addition to his office at the Mint. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875, and is the author of several papers, mostly relating to metals, published in the Philosophical Transactions and elsewhere. He was one of the founders of the Physical Society of London, of which he was for some time Secretary, and afterwards a Vice-President. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales appointed him a Member of the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition, 1883; and he served on the British Executive Council of the late Paris Exhibition. He was chosen Vice-President of the International Mining and Metallurgical Congress in Paris; and received from the President of the French Republic the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

ROBERTSON, Professor George Croom, was born at Aberdeen, March 10, 1842, was educated at the Aberdeen Grammar School, and graduated M.A. in Aberdeen University in 1861. He became Ferguson Ethical Scholar later in the same year, and continued his studies at University College, London, and the Universities of Berlin and Göttingen, and in Paris, till the end of 1863, and was Assistant-Professor of Greek in the University of Aberdeen from 1864 to 1866. He was appointed Professor of Philosophy of Mind and Logic in University College, London, in Dec., 1866, and has been Philosophical Examiner in the University of London from 1868 to 1873, and from 1883 to 1888; in the University of Aberdeen from 1869 to 1872, and 1878 to 1881; and in the University of Cambridge (Moral Sciences Tripos), 1877-78. Professor Robertson is Editor (in conjunction with Professor A. Bain) of Grote's posthumous work, "Aristotle," published 1872; Editor of Mind: A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy, from its commencement in Jan., 1876; and the author of "Hobbes" (Blackwood's Philosophical Classics), 1886. He has written much in Mind, and contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," (9th edit.). In 1872 he married Caroline, the second daughter of Mr. Justice Crompton.

ROBERTSON, The Right Hon. James Patrick Bannerman, M.P., Q.C., LL.D., Lord Advocate for Scotland, was born at Forteviot, Perthshire, in 1845, and is the son of the late Rev. R. Robertson, of Forteviot, by Helen, daughter of the Rev. J. Bannerman, of Cargill, Perth-shire. He was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, of which he was Dux, and at the University of Edinburgh. He took the degree of M.A. in 1864; and had the honorary degree of LL.D. (Edin. University) conferred on him April 10, 1890. He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1867; made Q.C. in 1885, and Solicitor-General for Scotland in the same year; re-appointed to the latter post in Aug., 1886, and appointed Lord Advocate for Scotland, Oct., 1888, on the elevation of Lord Advocate Macdonald to the post of Lord Justice Clerk, and sworn in as a Privy Councillor the same year. He was elected M.P. for Buteshire in 1885, which constituency he still represents. He is a distinguished counsel and statesman, and was successful, as the responsible Minister of the Crown, in passing the Local Government Act for Scotland, and the Universities (Scotland) Act, in the session of 1889.

ROBERTSON, "Madge." See GRIMSTON, MRS. WILLIAM HUNTER.

ROBERTSON, Miss Mary W., is the distinguished lady who was recently awarded the Experimental Science Studentship of £100 per annum for three years at the University of Dublin. She is the eldest daughter of the Rev. Chas. Robertson, and pursued her studies entirely at home till her entrance into Alexandra College, in Oct. 1880, having won an exhibition in the Junior Grade Intermediate Examinations in the previous June. In 1881 she carried off another exhibition in the Middle Grade, and in 1882 a prize in the Senior Grade. She matriculated at the Royal University in 1883. In 1885 she obtained a second class exhibition, receiving the B.A. degree in 1887 with first honours in experimental science. She gained her M.A. in 1888 and second honours in experimental science. The studentship which she now holds will, it is hoped, be the means of enabling her to carry on some valuable scientific research in the near future.

ROBINS, Edward Cookworthy, F.S.A., was born in London in Sept., 1830, and was educated at Esher, Derby, and London Schools. He early applied himself to geometrical drawing, to which his taste led him, and was eventually placed with the late Emile de Buck, a Belgian civil engineer, who was also an artist. In 1853 he was elected an Associate, and in 1860 a Fellow, of the Royal Institute of British Architects. He now occupies a seat on the Council of that body. In 1878 Mr. Robins was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1880 he was elected on the Council of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society. He is one of the original members of the Institution of Surveyors, and in 1882 was elected on to the Council of the Sanitary Institute, whose transactions he has edited for several years past. In 1887 he was chosen on the Council of the Society of Arts. Mr. Robins has been the architect of many churches, as St. John's, Wandsworth, St. Jude's, Brixton, St. Saviour's, Brixton, Emmanuel Church, Dulwich, St. Saviour's, Battersea Park, Wesley Church, Essex, besides many Congregational churches, as at Wandsworth, Clapham, Streatham Hill, Holloway, East London, &c. He gained the first premium for Mr. Spurgeon's tabernacle in 1859, and only lost the competition for the London Orphan Asylum, at Watford, by the casting vote of the chairman. He has long been architect to the London Missionary Society, and enlarged their premises in Bloomfield Street. He designed the four memorial churches for Madagascar, the Theological College at Antananarivo, and at Kruman in South Africa.

ROBINSON, Sir John Charles, born 1824, formerly Art Superintendent of the South Kensington Museum, at present holds office in Her Majesty's household as Crown Surveyor of Pictures, is an F.S.A., Hon. Member of the Academy of St. Luke in Rome, Florence, Bologna, Madrid, Lisbon, &c., and a Knight Commander of the Order of Isabella la Catolica and of Santiago of Spain and Portugal. After several years' study as an architect, Mr. Robinson proceeded to Paris and became pupil of the eminent historical painter, Drolling. On his return, he received an appointment in the Government school of design as Master of the School of Art at Hanley, Staffordshire Potteries (1847). In 1852 he was called to London to assist in the development of the newly-created Science and Art Department, founded under the auspices of the Prince Consort, and in 1853 the organisation of the Art Museum at Marlborough House, afterwards transferred to South Kensington, was entrusted to him. In this post he remained till 1869, and the country owes to him the acquisition of an immense mass of varied art treasures gleaned from every part of Europe, where, especially in Italy and in the Spanish peninsula, a great portion of every successive year was spent in long expeditions, during which the remotest corners of these countries were minutely explored. The system of circulating objects of art from the central museum to provincial institutions was, moreover, first suggested and carried into effect by Mr. Robinson in the early years of his tenure of office. In 1862 he suggested and carried out the special loan exhibition of art treasures, in connection with the General Industrial Exhibition of that year, an example which has since been repeatedly followed, but perhaps never surpassed in interest or importance, in France, Germany, and other continental countries. In association with the Marquis d'Azeglio, Italian Minister in London, and the late Baron Marochetti, he founded, and for many years directed as Hon. Secretary, the well-known "Fine Arts Club," now the Burlington Fine Arts Club. In 1869 he resigned his appointment at South Kensington on a retiring pension, but he has not ceased to render from year to year disinterested services to that institution, in the promotion of notable acquisitions and the formation of special loan collections, &c. In 1881, on the resignation of Mr. Redgrave, R.A., the Queen confided the post of Crown Surveyor of Pictures to Mr. Robinson, the office being that of art adviser in the Lord Chamberlain's Department, and comprising the supervision and control not only of the pictures, but of nearly all the art treasures of the Crown, in the various royal palaces, including the Hampton Court Gallery. Amongst the great number of his published works in diverse branches of art may be specified the catalogue of the Soulages Collection, that of the Art Treasures Exhibition in 1862, and of the Italian Sculpture collections of the South Kensington Museum, all prefixed by original introductory essays. In 1870, at the request of the Oxford University authorities, he wrote "A critical account of the drawings of Michel Angelo and Raffaele in the University Galleries," an elaborate work, which has obtained general recognition, more especially on the Continent. An essay on the Early Portuguese School of Painting, undertaken on the head of extensive original researches in the country by desire of His Majesty the King Regent Don Fernando, was translated into Portuguese, and re-issued by the Lisbon Academy, and it remains one of the most important contributions made to the history of Art in Portugal. Very numerous contributions in the shape of letters and essays on various branches of art have also for a long series of years been contributed by Sir Charles Robinson to the columns of the Times newspaper. He received the honour of knighthood on the occasion of Her Majesty's Jubilee in 1887.

ROBINSON, Miss A. Mary F. See DARMESTETER, MADAME.

ROBINSON, John Richard, editor and journalist, born at Witham, Essex, Nov. 2, 1828, is the son of the Rev. R. Robinson, and became connected at an early age with provincial journalism. On coming to London in 1846 he joined the paper which had been known as Douglas Jerrold's Newspaper, and soon afterwards undertook the editorship of the Evening Express. This was the property of the Daily News, and Mr. Robinson soon took an active part in the conduct of the morning paper. On the change of proprietorship in 1868, when the Daily News joined the ranks of the penny papers, he was appointed sole manager. On the outbreak of the Franco-German War in 1870 he developed an effective system of special correspondence, and in his selection of writers, as well as in his method of organization, was very successful. His management during the campaign of Ashanti, the Zulu war, and the Russo-Turkish war, was distinguished by equal initiative faculty and fertility of resource. During the Franco-German war Mr. Robinson suggested that a fund should be raised for the relief of the French peasants in the occupied districts of the North-West, and upwards of £20,000 was subscribed under his auspices, the whole of which was distributed without one shilling being taken from the fund for expenses. For many years Mr. Robinson was a copious contributor to the columns of the American press, including the Boston Advertiser and the Chicago Tribune. He has also edited a work on shorthand. In June, 1887, Mr. Robinson became editor of the Daily News, continuing to fill at the same time the post of manager of the paper.

ROBINSON, Philip Stewart (known as PHIL ROBINSON), son of Rev. Julian Robinson, was born at Chunar in India, Oct. 13, 1849; educated at Marlborough College, joined the Pioneer as sub-editor to his father in 1869, contributing to that journal (1870-71) the papers afterwards republished as "In my Indian Garden." He was appointed (1872) editor of the Revenue archives of the Benares Province by the government of the N. W. P., which published his compilations (1876) in 2 vols. "Records of the Benares Collectorate." Meanwhile he was gazetted

Professor of Literature (1873), and exchanged (1875) to the chair of Logic and Metaphysics, and held simultaneously the appointment to the Supreme Government of Censor of the Vernacular Press. He retired from the service 1877; joined the Daily Telegraph in the same year, and served as one of the war-correspondents of that journal in Afghanistan (1878-9), Zululand (1879), Egypt (1882), Soudan (1885). He travelled over the United States as Special Commissioner of the New York World (1881-2), and published his experiences "Sinners and Saints" (1883). His other works are "Under the Punkah" (1881); "Noah's Ark or Mornings in the Zoo, an Essay in Un-Natural History" (1882), and "The Poets and Nature," 3 vols. (1884-86). The first "authorized" edition of his works in America appeared in 1882 as "Under the Sun." He is a regular contributor to the Contemporary Review, Gentleman's Magazine, and Harper's Monthly.

ROBINSON, The Right Hon. Sir Hercules George Robert, G.C.M.G., P.C., second son of Captain Hercules Robinson, born in 1824, and educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, held, for some years, a commission in the 87th Foot, but retired from the service in 1846, and was employed in various capacities in the Civil Service in Ireland until 1852. He was appointed President of Montserrat in 1854, Lieutenant-Governor of St. Christophers in 1855, succeeded Sir John Bowring as Governor of Hong Kong in 1859, when he received the honour of knighthood; was promoted to the governorship of Ceylon in Jan., 1865, and to the governorship of New South Wales in March, 1872. In Aug., 1874, he proceeded to the Fiji Islands for the purpose of settling matters between the British Government and the native power. On Oct. 15 he accepted the unconditional cession of the islands, annexed them to the British Empire, and hoisted the British Flag. For some time he retained in his own hands the general supervision of the Provisional Government which he established. In Jan. 1875 he was created a Grand Cross of the Order of SS. Michael and George, in recognition of his services in connection with the cession of the Fiji Islands. He was, in Dec., 1878, appointed Governor of New Zealand, in succession to the Marquis of Normanby. He was appointed Governor of the Cape of Good Hope in the place of Sir Bartle Frere, in Aug., 1880. Except for his unfortunate disagreement with Sir Charles Warren as to the settlement of Bechuanaland, Sir Hercules Robinson's rule has been not only successful, but comparatively tranquil. On May 22, 1883, he was sworn of the Privy Council, and in 1886 was appointed High Commissioner to examine into the state of Mauritius, where the quarrel between the Governor (Sir John Pope Hennessey) and the Colonial Secretary (the late Mr. Clifford Lloyd) had caused a grave scandal. The result of this inquiry was the temporary suspension of the Governor in Dec., 1886, who, on his return to England, gave his account of the quarrel to the Secretary of State, and was restored to office.

ROBY, Henry John, M.P., J.P., LL.D., is a native of Tamworth, where his father was a solicitor, and where he was born Aug. 12, 1830. When he was 12 years of age his family removed to Bridgnorth, and for seven years he was a day-scholar at the Grammar School there. In 1849, he went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, and was elected scholar and exhibitor of the College, graduating B.A. in 1853, being first in the first class of the Classical Tripos. As senior classic, he was elected the following year to a Fellowship at St. John's, and subsequently was appointed tutor and classical lecturer. He remained at Cambridge until 1861, filling, among other offices, that of Secretary to the Committee of the Cambridge Local University examinations, and that of one of the examiners for the Law Tripos, the Classical Tripos, and the Moral Science Tripos. Mr. Roby took an active part in promoting reform in his college, and in the university under the Cambridge University Act, and published a pamphlet on the subject, "Remarks on College Reform," 1858. Upon leaving Cambridge, he became an under-master at Dulwich College, and while there (1861-1865) he published his Elementary Latin Grammar. From 1864 to 1868, under the appointment of the Crown, he was successively Secretary to the Schools Inquiry Commission, and in 1869 Secretary to the Endowed Schools Commission, and, subsequently, 1872, Commissioner. This Commission expired Dec. 31, 1874. During this period he was for two years Professor of Jurisprudence at University College, London, where he lectured on Roman Law. Mr. Roby assisted the Schools Inquiry Commissioners in preparing their Report (issued March, 1868) and in compiling and editing the twenty volumes appended thereto. In 1877 he was appointed a life governor and a member of the Council of Owens College, and the same year a governor of Manchester Grammar School, and subsequently one of the governors of Hulme's Charity. Between 1871 and 1874 he had published the two volumes of his larger Latin grammar, "Grammar of the Latin Language, from Plautus to Suetonius;" in 1880 a school edition of the work; and in 1884 his "Introduction to Justinian's Digest and Commentary," in recognition of the importance of which work the University of Edinburgh conferred upon him in 1887 the honorary degree of LL.D. He has filled the office of Chairman of the Manchester Liberal Executive, Chairman of the Executive for the North-West Manchester Liberal Association, Chairman of the Manchester Liberal Union, and President of the Eccles Liberal Association. He is M.P. for Eccles, a seat which he wrested from the Conservatives at the bye election in Oct., 1890. In 1861 Mr. Roby married Matilda, elder daughter of Peter A. Ermen, Esq. of Dawlish.

ROCHEFORT-LUCAY, Victor Henri, Count de, commonly known as Henri Rochefort, a French journalist, was born in Paris in 1831. In early life he was one of the writers of the Charivari, and his articles in this journal led to his appointment as sub-inspector of Fine Arts in Paris, a post he resigned in 1861, to devote himself wholly to journalism. After contributing to various papers, he joined the staff of the Figaro at an annual salary of 30,000 francs, but in 1865 he retired to save the journal from prosecution and established the Lanterne, whose first nine weekly issues reached a circulation of over 1,150,000. The paper was, however, soon suppressed on account of its violent attacks upon the Imperial family, and its author was condemned to a year's imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 10,000 francs. M. Rochefort fled to Brussels and continued to publish the Lanterne till Aug. 1869, when on his election to the Legislative Body he was permitted to return to Paris. In the same year he founded the Marseillaise, in which Victor Noir was a collaborator. The attacks in this journal on Prince Pierre Bonaparte led to the assassination of Victor Noir by the Prince; the paper was seized, and M. Rochefort committed to the prison of Sainte Pélagie. On the proclamation of the Republic in Sept. 1870, he was released by the mob, and was for a short time connected with the Government of National Defence. He was President of the Commission of Barricades during the siege of Paris, and in Feb. 8, 1871, he was elected one of the representatives of Paris in the National Assembly. During that time he was the editor of the Mot d'Ordre, in the columns of which he justified the Commune, and vehemently assailed the government of Versailles, and M. Thiers personally. On May 19, 1871, while endeavouring to escape from Paris, he was taken, tried by court-martial, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. In Sept. 1872, he was temporarily released to enable him to legitimate his children by marrying their mother, who was dying. Subsequently M. Rochefort was transported to New Caledonia, but effected his escape in 1874. He returned to Europe and attempted to revive the Lanterne in London and Geneva, but without success. The general amnesty of July 11, 1880, permitted M. Rochefort to return to Paris, where he at once assumed the direction of a new Radical paper L'Intransigeant, and renewed his attacks upon all the governments in turn. He has since been elected for Paris, but Parliament was irksome to him, and he resigned. In 1886 he proposed to take part in the workmen's riots in Belgium, but the Belgian authorities would not permit him to cross the frontier. He is a partisan of General Boulanger, and came to England with him in 1889.

ROCHESTER, Dean of. See HOLE, THE VERY REV. SAMUEL REYNOLDS, D.D.

ROCKHILL, Mr., formerly Secretary to the American Legation in Peking, and a well-known Tibetan scholar, who attempted last year to travel to Lhasa disguised as a Lama, sent to Trübner's Oriental Record a letter which he had received from Monsignor Felix Birt, Vicar Apostolic of Tibet, dated Tatsienlu, Sept. 8, 1889. Tatsienlu, it should be mentioned, is on the borders of Eastern Tibet, on the high road from Szechuen to Lhasa. As the letter throws light on an important event in Mr. Rockhill's life, the editor reproduces it here. The Bishop writes:—"I have received the letter which you sent me from Chung King on July 31, the eve of your departure for Shanghai. Your servants have twice for three days been put in chains by the Lamas at T'ehgundo, and during their captivity two of your horses perished. When on your arrival at T'ehgundo the Lamas went to Derge to ask for instructions as to the way in which they were to treat you, you did wisely in taking your departure at once, leaving your goods and servants to follow you at short stages. Had you waited for the return of the Lamas from Derge, it is certain that they would have killed you, or that you would have been compelled to return off your road towards the north frontier. For, the Lamas brought back the order that they were to prevent you at all hazards from exploring between Silinfu and Tatsienlu through the provinces of Derge. Thanks to your prudence and firmness, to your acquaintance with Tibetan and Chinese, and to your extraordinary self-possession, aided by a robust constitution, which has allowed you to brave all hardships, you have been enabled to accomplish this important exploration of an interesting part of Tibet to which no European has hitherto been able to penetrate. Since Messrs. Huc and Gabet's journey to Lhasa in 1845, your exploring expedition, I do not hesitate to say, has been the most difficult and the most important executed in Asia in the course of this century—the most difficult and the most dangerous, I say, considering that you have travelled these immense steppes, that land of grass, without an escort, only accompanied by a few servants, living on tsamba, the meal of roasted barley and rancid butter, sleeping in the open air, unable to lay in a fresh stock of provisions in those desert regions, and dreading the habitations of man more than the solitude, for in the centres which are somewhat fertile and inhabited one is sure to find Lamaserai; but the Lamas are the sworn enemies of explorers. You have opened up the road, you have mapped out a route, a route of prime importance for commerce, and of political and civilizing influence for Tibet."

ROGERS, The Rev. J. Guinness, B.A., Congregational Minister and writer, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1843, and afterwards prepared for his ministerial duties by study at Lancashire Independent College. He has been successively Congregational Minister at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Clapham, where he now officiates. He was elected Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1875; and has contributed to the Congregationalist, Contemporary, British Quarterly, and the Congregational Review, of which he is Editor.

ROHLFS, Mrs. Charles, née Anna Katharine Green, novelist, daughter of James Wilson Green, a lawyer, who has held public positions in New York and elsewhere, was born at Brooklyn, New York, and educated at Ripley College, Poughkeepsie, Vermont. She has published "The Leavenworth Case," 1878; "A Strange Disappearance," 1879; "The Sword of Damocles," 1881; "The Defence of the Bride, and other Poems," 1882; "X Y Z," and "Hand and Ring," 1883; "The Mill Mystery," and "7 to 12," 1886; "Risifi's Daughter," a drama, 1887; "Behind Closed Doors," 1888; and "The Forsaken Inn," 1890. On Nov. 24, 1884, Miss A. K. Green was married to Mr. Charles Rohlf, and now resides at Buffalo, New York.

ROMANES, Professor George John, F.R.S., LL.D., born in Kingston, Canada, May 20, 1848, son of the late Rev. Professor Romanes, M.A., LL.D., spent his boyhood in London, France, Germany, and Italy, being educated by tutors and in private schools. In 1867 he entered Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, where he became a scholar in natural science. In 1870 he graduated in natural science honours, was Burney Prize essayist in 1873, and Croonian Lecturer to the Royal Society in 1875. Having published a series of papers in the "Philosophical Transactions" on the nervous system of Medusæ, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879. He has continued to contribute papers both to the "Transactions" and to the "Proceedings" of the Royal and other learned societies; and in 1881 was again appointed Croonian Lecturer; his lecture being "On the locomotor system of Echinodermata." Shortly afterwards he became Zoological Secretary to the Linnæan Society, and received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Aberdeen. While still at Cambridge he formed an intimate friendship with the late Mr. Darwin, and has ever since continued to be an ardent member of the Darwinian school. He has particularly devoted himself to extending Darwinian teaching in the domain of psychology, in which work he has been assisted by Mr. Darwin having lent him his MSS. "Animal Intelligence," "Mental Evolution in Animals," and "Mental Evolution in Man," constitute the instalments in which Professor Romanes is publishing his researches in this direction. His work on the "Origin of Human Faculty," and his paper on "Physiological Selection, an additional suggestion on the Origin of Species," have given rise to animated discussion. His "Jelly-fish, Star-fish, and Sea-urchins," is a popular exposition of his Royal Society papers before mentioned. Mr. Romanes is an active contributor to periodical literature on matters of scientific and philosophic interest. He is also well known as a Lecturer at the Royal Institution, London Institution, and elsewhere. In particular, it may be noticed that he gave the evening lecture in Biology before the British Association in Dublin, and the Rede Lecture, in 1885, in Cambridge. At the present time he is Fullerian Professor of Physiology in the Royal Institution of London, and Rosebery Lecturer on Natural History in the University of Edinburgh. His extensive treatise entitled "The Philosophy of Natural History before and after Darwin" is a copiously annotated publication of the lectures delivered in both these capacities.

ROME, Pope of. See LEO XIII.

ROMER, The Hon. Robert, born in London Dec. 23, 1840, is the second son of the late Francis Romer, and was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge; Senior Wrangler and Smith's Prizeman, 1863; Fellow of Trinity Hall, 1867. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1867; was Examiner in Civil Law at Cambridge 1869-70; was made Queen's Counsel in 1881; Benchet of Lincoln's Inn in 1884, and was appointed one of the Justices of the High Court Nov. 17, 1890, in the place of Sir Edward Ebenezer Kay, created a Lord Justice of Appeal. He married Betty, the daughter of the late Mark Lemon, editor of Punch.

RONNER, M^{de}me., whose charming pictures of cats were recently (1890) on view at the Fine Art Gallery in New Bond Street, was born in Amsterdam in 1821, and was educated with great strictness for the profession of an artist. Her first tutor was her father, Herr Knip, who kept her at work for many hours daily, adopting the unusual plan of shutting her up in darkness for two hours in the midday, in order to rest her eyes, a proceeding much more likely to be injurious than beneficial. Forty years ago she married, since which time she has lived in Brussels, and devoted her attention almost solely to animal portraiture. On the Continent she is regarded as an animal painter of the highest merit, and receives from the Brussels National Gallery, the Luxembourg, and very many town and corporation museums, commissions to paint portraits of favourite dogs and cats. The great characteristic of her work is her absolute truthfulness.

ROSCOE, Professor Sir Henry Enfield, M.P., V.P.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., born Jan. 7, 1833, in London, is a grandson of William Roscoe, Esq., of Liverpool, and son of Henry Roscoe, Esq., barrister-at-law. He was educated at Liverpool High School,

University College, London, and Heidelberg, (B.A., London 1852); was appointed Professor of Chemistry at Owens College, Victoria University, Manchester, from 1858 to 1885; elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1863; and received the Royal Medal of that Society in 1873, "for his chemical researches, more especially for his investigations of the chemical action of light, and of the combinations of Vanadium." Professor Roscoe has published several series of investigations on the Measurement of the Chemical Action of Light in conjunction with Professor Bunsen, of Heidelberg, and is author of many papers in the "Philosophical Transactions" and scientific journals on other subjects; also of "Lessons in Elementary Chemistry," since translated into German, Russian, Hungarian, Italian, Urdu, and Japanese, and republished in America; "Lectures on Spectrum Analysis," 1869, 4th edit. 1885; and, conjointly with Professor Schorlemmer, F.R.S., of a "Treatise on Chemistry," 8 vols., 1877-90, in which the facts and principles of the science are more fully expounded than in the smaller work. The University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1878, that of Cambridge in 1883, and that of Montreal in 1884, and he received the D.C.L. of Oxford in 1887. He is honorary member of the German Chemical Society, and of many foreign academies. He was joint editor with Professors Huxley and the late Balfour Stewart of Macmillan's Science Primer Series, and author of the "Chemistry Primer." He acted for many years as Examiner in Chemistry to the University of London and to the Science and Art Department. In 1880 he was President of the Chemical Society of London; in 1881 President of the Society of Chemical Industry, of which he is one of the founders; and in 1882, President of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester, and a member of the Royal Commission on Technical Instruction 1882-84; in the latter year he received the honour of Knighthood for his services on that Commission. He is now (1891) acting on the Royal Commission on Scottish Universities. In 1887 he was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science for the Manchester Meeting; in 1889 he received the decoration of Officer of the Legion of Honour from the French Government in recognition of his services as a sectional Vice-President at the Paris Exposition of that year; in the same year he was appointed President of the Midland Institute, Birmingham, and delivered an address on Pasteur's discoveries. At the general election, Nov. 1885, he won the seat for South Manchester for the Liberal party, of which he is a staunch supporter. In 1886 he was elected again.

ROSEBERY (Earl of), The Right Hon. Archibald Philip Primrose, LL.D., P.C., son of the late Archibald Lord Dalmeny by Lady Catherine Lucy Wilhelmina, only daughter of the fourth Earl Stanhope, was born in London in 1847, and received his education at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford. He succeeded to the title on the death of his grandfather, the fourth Earl of Rosebery, in 1868. The first time he ever spoke in public was in 1871, when, at the opening of Parliament, he was selected by the Prime Minister, Mr. Gladstone, to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne. He soon took a decided position on the question of national education, and when the Government Education Bill for Scotland was before the House of Peers, he moved an amendment to it by which he aimed at the exclusion of catechisms from public schools. He also spoke in the same session on Lord Russell's motion regarding the Alabama Treaty; and he was appointed Commissioner to inquire into Endowments in Scotland. In the session of 1873 Lord Rosebery was much engaged in an endeavour to obtain a Committee of Inquiry on the supply of horses in this country. He moved for, and obtained the Committee, and was made the chairman of the same. It may be said that to the labours of that Committee the remission of the taxes on horses is fairly due. During the session of 1874 Lord Rosebery moved for, and was made the chairman of, a Committee on the Scotch and Irish representative Peerages. He was President of the Social Science Congress which met at Glasgow Oct. 1, 1874. On Nov. 16, 1878, he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen in succession to Mr. W. E. Forster. In Nov. 1880, he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh, but he did not deliver his inaugural address till Nov. 4, 1882. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in August, 1881, in succession to Mr. Leonard Courtney, who was transferred to the Colonial Office. His lordship resigned the Under-Secretaryship in June, 1883, and in Nov. 1884, became First Commissioner of Works in succession to Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, who succeeded Mr. Fawcett as Postmaster-General. In Mr. Gladstone's next Government (1886) Lord Rosebery was appointed Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; and won general approval, at home and abroad, for the firmness with which he conducted the difficult questions arising out of the Servo-Bulgarian war and the Greek desire for a territorial indemnity. In 1888 Lord Rosebery received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge. On Jan. 17, he was elected, in company with Sir John Lubbock, member for the City Division of the London County Council; and on Feb. 12, was appointed Chairman, but has resigned, and been succeeded by Sir John Lubbock. He married, March 20, 1878, Hannah, only child of Baron Meyer de Rothschild. She died Nov. 19, 1890.

ROSS, Alexander Milton, M.D., F.R.S.L., was born at Belleville, Ontario, Canada, Dec. 13, 1832. While yet a boy he went to New York, and after many reverses became a compositor on the Evening Post, then edited and owned by Wm. Cullen Bryant. In 1851 he began the study of medicine, taking his degree in 1855. From 1855 to the outbreak of the Civil War he took an active part in the anti-slavery agitation. During that war he was employed by President Lincoln as confidential correspondent in Canada. He was one of the founders of the Society for the Diffusion of Physiological Knowledge in 1881. During the small-pox epidemic in Montreal in 1885 Dr. Ross was a prominent opponent of vaccination, declaring that it was not only useless as a preventive of small-pox, but that it propagated the disease when practised during the existence of an epidemic. In place of vaccination, he strongly advocates the strict enforcement of sanitation and isolation. He maintains that personal and municipal cleanliness is the only scientific safeguard against zymotic diseases. He has been a member of the British Association of Science for twenty years, and of the American and French Associations for seventeen years, and is a Fellow of many scientific societies both in Europe and in America. He has been knighted by the Emperor of Russia, King of Italy, King of Greece, King of Portugal, King of Saxony, and has received the Medal of Merit from the Shah of Persia, the decoration of honour from the Khedive of Egypt, and the decoration of the Académie Française from the government of France. He was offered (and declined) the title of baron by the King of Bavaria, in recognition of his labours as a naturalist, and was appointed consul to Canada by the King of Belgium and the King of Denmark. He has received many other honours and distinctions from Academies of Science in Europe and Asia. For many years he has been eminent as a naturalist, devoting special attention to the ornithology, ichthyology, botany and entomology of Canada. He has collected and classified five hundred and seventy species of birds that regularly or occasionally visit the Dominion of Canada; two hundred and forty species of eggs of birds that breed in Canada; two hundred and forty-seven species of mammals, reptiles, and fresh-water fish; three thousand four hundred species of insects; and two thousand species of Canadian flora. He has published "Recollections of an Abolitionist," 1867; "Birds of Canada," 1872; "Butterflies and Moths of Canada," and "Flora of Canada," 1873; "Forest Trees of Canada," 1874; "Ferns and Wild Flowers of Canada," 1877; "Mammals, Reptiles, and Fresh-water Fishes of Canada," 1878; "Friendly Words to Boys and Young Men," 1884; "Vaccination a Medical Delusion," 1885; and "Natural Diet of Man," 1886. Dr. Ross is one of the founders of the St. Louis Hygienic College of Physicians and Surgeons, in which he is professor of hygiene, sanitation and physiology. He is a graduate of the allopathic, hydropathic, eclectic and botanic systems of medicine, and a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba.

ROSSE, Earl of, Laurence Parsons, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., a Representative Peer for Ireland, was born at Birr Castle, Parsonstown, King's County, Nov. 17, 1840; succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1867; was educated at Trinity College, Dublin (LL.D., 1879; and Hon. D.C.L., Oxford, 1870); is Chancellor of Dublin University; a D.L. and J.P. for King's County; (High Sheriff 1867); a J.P. for County Tipperary, and one of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland. He is the author of various scientific papers in the Philosophical Transactions, and in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, London; the Royal Dublin Society; the Reports of the British Association (Montreal Meeting); and in the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society. Lord Rosse married, in 1870, Frances Cassandra, daughter of the fourth Baron Hawke, and has two sons and one daughter.

ROSSETTI, Christina Georgina, poetess, was born in London, Dec. 5, 1830, and educated at home. She is the daughter of Gabriele Rossetti, an Italian patriot of the lyre and the sword, who took refuge in England from the troubles of his native land, and was the well-known commentator on Dante. Her mother was Frances Mary Lavinia Polidori, an Italian lady of partly English extraction, who died in 1886. Miss C. G. Rossetti is the sister of Dante Gabriel, William Michael, and Maria Francesca Rossetti, and is the author of "Goblin Market, and other Poems," 1862; "The Prince's Progress, and other Poems," 1866; "Commonplace and other Short Stories, in Prose," 1870; "Sing Song, a Nursery Rhyme-book," 1873; "Speaking Likenesses," 1874; "Annus Domini; a Prayer for each Day of the Year, founded on a Text of Holy Scripture," 1874; "Seek and Find," "Called to be Saints," "A Pageant, and other Poems," 1881; "Let-ter and Spirit," and "Time Flies."

ROSSETTI, William Michael, brother of Dante Gabriel and Christina Georgina Rossetti, was born in London, Sept. 25, 1829, and educated at King's College School, London. He was appointed in Feb. 1845, to an extra Clerkship in the Excise Office, London (now the Inland Revenue Office), and became in July, 1869, Assistant-Secretary in the same office. Mr. Rossetti has been a critic of fine art and literature since 1850. He has acted in that capacity (principally as regards Fine Art) for the Critic, Spectator, Reader, Saturday Review, London Review, Chronicle (weekly), Fraser's Magazine, Academy, Athenæum, and "Encyclopædia Britannica." He was much mixed up (along with his brother, Millais, Holman Hunt, Woolner, and two others) in the "Pre-Raphaelite" movement in fine art, from its commencement in 1848; and he edited and wrote in The Germ, the magazine got up by the Pre-Raphaelites in 1850. He has published "Dante's Comedy, the Hell," translated into blank verse, 1865; "Fine Art, chiefly Contemporary," 1867, a volume of republished criticisms; an edition of Shelley, 1870, with a memoir, and a large body of notes; this was in 2 vols., and was re-issued in 3 vols., revised, in 1878; "Lives of Famous Poets," 1878, being brief biographies of 23 British poets, from Chaucer to Longfellow, some of them reproduced from the series named "Moxon's Popular Poets," with others added; an edition, with preface and notes, 1887, of the "Collected Works of Dante Gabriel Rossetti;" a "Life of Keats," 1887, in the series named "Great Writers;" and a volume, 1889, entitled "Dante Gabriel Rossetti as Designer and Writer." The series above-named,

"Moxon's Popular Poets," was edited by Mr. Rossetti from 1870 to 1875, including 2 vols. of American poems and humorous poems, selected. He also edited, with a full memoir, the edition of Wm. Blake's Poems, in the Aldine series; and issued a selection, in 1868, of the Poems of Walt Whitman; likewise works of different kinds, published by the Early English Text Society, and the Chaucer Society. He is now chairman of the Committee of the Shelley Society, and has read to this body some papers on Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound," and on other matters. Among his other works are a poem of modern life, in blank verse, entitled, "Mrs. Holmes Grey," published in The Broadway, about 1869; and a "Criticism of Swinburne's Poems and Ballads," 1866. Mr. Rossetti delivered in 1875, &c., at Birmingham and elsewhere, lectures on Shelley's Life and Poems, and on "The Wives of Poets." In May, 1890, he was engaged on a copiously annotated edition of Shelley's "Adonais," for the Clarendon Press. In March, 1874, he married Lucy, elder daughter of Ford Madox Brown, the painter. She is an artist, and has exhibited at the Royal Academy.

ROSSI, Ernesto, an Italian actor, born at Leghorn, in 1829, received his early education in his native town, and afterwards studied law in the University of Pisa. Having a great liking for the stage, he used often to take a part in amateur theatricals, and also in the performances of a regular dramatic company, that of Marchi. Subsequently he entered the dramatic school which had just been founded by Gustavo Modena. After having appeared at Milan, Turin, and other Italian cities, he went in 1853 with Mdlle. Ristori to Paris, where, by his masterly acting, he enabled the French public to appreciate the works of several Italian dramatists, and notably those of Goldoni. Signor Rossi achieved a like success in Vienna, and he then returned to his native country, where he established a dramatic company, of which he himself took the management. In 1866 he paid a second visit to Paris, and on the occasion of the anniversary of Corneille, appeared at the Théâtre Française, in an Italian translation of "The Cid." After having visited Portugal and Spain, he returned to Paris in 1875, and gave at the Salle Ventadour, with remarkable success, a series of Shaksperian representations, in which he himself played the leading parts. He next visited London, where he met with an encouraging reception. M. Rossi, who has been styled the "Italian Talma," is the author of some dramatic pieces of no great merit. He has been decorated with the cross of SS. Maurice and Lazarus, and with several foreign orders.

ROST, Reinhold, LL.D., Ph.D., C.I.E., was born Feb. 2, 1822, at Eisenberg, in Saxe-Altenburg, where his father was archdeacon. He was educated at the Gymnasium at Altenburg and the University of Jena, where he took his degree of Ph.D. in 1847. Dr. Rost came to London in the same year; was appointed Oriental Lecturer in St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, in 1850; Secretary to the Royal Asiatic Society in 1863; and Librarian to the India Office in 1869. He has written a treatise on the sources of the ancient Burmese laws (Weber's Indische Studien, vol. i.), and a descriptive catalogue of the palm-leaf manuscripts belonging to the Imperial Public Library of St. Petersburg, 1852; he edited Prof. N. H. Wilson's "Essays on the Religion of the Hindus, and on Sanskrit Literature," 5 vols., London, 1861-65; H. B. Hodgson's Essays (2 vols., 1880), and Miscellaneous Papers on Indo-China (4 vols., 1886-8). He has contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and to the Athenæum articles on Oriental philology and literature, and is editor of Trübner's "Oriental Record." He is Honorary M.A. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Edinburgh, Honorary Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, and of the Asiatic Societies of Singapore, the Hague and Batavia; Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Munich and the German Oriental Society, and Honorary Fellow of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury. He was created a Companion of the Order of St. Ann in 1851, C.I.E. in 1888, and Chevalier of the Order of Wasa in 1889.

ROTHSCHILD, Alfred de, second son of the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild, was born July 20, 1842, and educated at Cambridge. He is a member of the firm of N. M. Rothschild and Sons, a director of the Bank of England, and Consul-General for the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Like almost all the members of his family, he is a passionate collector of works of art; especially of Dutch, French, and old English pictures, Sevres china, Louis XVI. furniture and bronzes, and Renaissance enamels and metal work. A sumptuous catalogue of this collection was privately printed in two folio volumes, 1885. Among Mr. De Rothschild's most famous pictures may be named Greuze's "Le Baiser envoyé;"

Teniers, "The Marriage of Teniers;" Gainsborough's "Mr. and Mrs. Villebois;" and Romney's "Mrs. Tickell."

ROTHSCHILD, Baron Ferdinand James de, M.P., son of Baron Aurelius de Rothschild, of Vienna, was born in Paris, December 17, 1839, and educated in Vienna. He has been long resident in England, and at a bye-election in 1885, was returned member for Aylesbury, being re-elected at the general election of 1885, and again as a Unionist Liberal in 1886. He was also made High Sheriff of Buckinghamshire in 1884. Like many of his family Baron de Rothschild is an enthusiastic collector of works of art, and in his houses in Piccadilly and at Waddesdon, has a large number of rare treasures. Romney's "Mrs. Jordan" is one of the most famous of them.

ROTHSCHILD, (Lord) Nathaniel Mayer de, first Lord Rothschild, eldest son of Baron Lionel Nathan de Rothschild, was born in London, November 8, 1840, and educated at King's College School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was elected as Liberal member for Aylesbury, 1865, and retained the seat until 1885, when he was created a Peer. He is the head of the London banking firm of N. M. Rothschild and Sons. At Tring Park, and in his fine house in Piccadilly, Lord Rothschild has assembled a multitude of treasures of art; among which it is enough to mention three masterpieces of Gainsborough, "Mrs. Sheridan," "Squire Hilyard and his Wife," and "Mrs. Hibbert," and two of Sir Joshua Reynolds, "Garriek between Tragedy and Comedy," and "Mrs. Lloyd."

ROUMANIA, King of. See CHARLES, KING OF ROUMANIA.

ROUMANIA, Queen of. See ELIZABETH, QUEEN OF ROUMANIA.

ROUSSET, Camille Félix Michel, a French historian, born in Paris, Feb. 15, 1821, became Professor of History at Grenoble, next at the Collège Bourbon (afterwards called the Lycée Bonaparte), from 1845 to 1863, and in 1864 was appointed historiographer and librarian to the Ministry of War. On Dec. 30, 1871, he was elected a member of the French Academy by 17 votes against 12 recorded for M. Vielcastel. M. Rousset is the author of "Précis d'Histoire de la Révolution Française," 1849; "Histoire de Louvois et de son Administration politique et militaire," 4 vols., 1861-63, a work which in three consecutive years gained the first Gobert prize of the French Academy; "Correspondance de Louis XV. et du Maréchal de Noailles," 2 vols., 1865; "Le Comte de Grisors," 1868; "Histoire de la Guerre de Crimée," 2 vols., 1877; and "La Conquête d'Alger," 1879.

ROUTH, Edward John, M.A., D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Quebec, Canada, in 1831, being son of Sir Randolph Routh, K.C.B., Commissary-General to the Forces. At the age of 11 he was brought to England, and subsequently was sent to University College School, where he stayed only a year before entering University College. Here he made rapid progress in mathematical studies under Professor de Morgan. He passed through the higher classes, gaining the mathematical prizes at the yearly examinations. This encouraged him to attend the matriculation examination in the University of London in 1847, and afterwards the B.A. examination in 1849, gaining the Mathematical Scholarship at each. He received also the Gold Medal at his M.A. examination in 1853. In Oct. 1851, he entered Peterhouse, Cambridge. He studied for a year under Mr. Todhunter, of St. John's College, and for the remaining two years and a quarter under Mr. Hopkins, of Peterhouse. In 1854 he graduated as Senior Wrangler, and at the Smith's Prize examination he was bracketed equal with Mr. Clerk Maxwell, afterwards Professor of Experimental Philosophy at Cambridge. He was then elected a Fellow of Peterhouse, and adopted the profession of teaching as his career in life. From 1861 to 1885 (with the single exception of 1883), the Senior Wrangler has every year been his pupil, besides twice before that date, and once since; in all twenty-seven times. He has also had amongst his pupils forty-one Smith's Prizemen. This success is without precedent. In 1855 Mr. Routh wrote a book in conjunction with Lord Brougham. In 1859 he was appointed Examiner in Mathematics in the University of London, and, after the necessary interval of a year, he held the office for a second quinquennial period (1865-70). Soon after his graduation he was elected a member of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, of the Geological Society, and of the Royal Geographical Society; subsequently he became a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society and a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is also an original member of the London Mathematical Society, having been one of those who helped to establish it. In 1860 he was moderator, and in 1861, Examiner for the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge. In 1867 he gained the Adams Prize for his essay on the Stability of Motion. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1879 by the University of Glasgow. In 1883 he was one of the first to take the degree of Doctor of Science, then established in the University of Cambridge for those who have "given proof of distinction by some original contribution to the advancement of science." He was elected Honorary Fellow of Peterhouse in the same year. In 1884 Dr. Routh was appointed by the Crown a Fellow of the University of London, and is therefore now a member of the governing body of that university. In 1886 Dr. Routh ceased taking any new pupils, and during the next two years he merely conducted through the remainder of their Mathematical course those who had already begun to read with him. In the thirty-one years from 1857 to 1888 he thus "coached" nearly seven hundred pupils through the Mathematical Tripos, five hundred of them becoming wranglers. In 1888 his old pupils presented Mrs. Routh with a portrait of her husband painted by Herkomer as a memorial of their attachment to him. The presentation took place in Peterhouse, the ceremony being described at some length in the Times of Monday, Nov. 5, 1888. In this year he was elected a member of the Council of the University of Cambridge, and a member of the Council of the Royal Society. He is also on the governing bodies of Cavendish College, Dulwich College, and the schools at Ipswich. Dr. Routh has written a book on "Rigid Dynamics," in two volumes, the fifth edition of which has just appeared. He has also written for the Syndics of the University Press, a treatise on "Statics." Besides these he has contributed numerous papers on Mathematical subjects to the Mathematical Messenger, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the volumes of the London Mathematical Society. In 1864 he married the eldest daughter of Sir G. B. Airy, K.C.B., the late Astronomer-Royal.

ROWBOTHAM, John Frederick, is the only son of the late Rev. Frederick Rowbotham, Incumbent of St. James's, Edinburgh. He was born in 1854, and was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and at Rossall School, of which he was Captain. From Rossall he proceeded to Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained the Balliol Scholarship at the age of eighteen. He was the favourite pupil of Professor Jowett. Among other distinctions at Oxford, he took a first class in classics and the Taylorian University Scholarship for Italian. After leaving college he travelled for some years on the continent, in order to collect materials for his "History of Music." He studied at the libraries of Madrid, Paris, Rome, Florence, Venice, and Vienna; and even visited monasteries to peruse their manuscripts. The "History of Music," was published in 1885, and was at once acknowledged by the entire press to be the standard work on the subject. After completing the History of Music, Mr. Rowbotham devoted himself to epic poetry, which had been the passion of his life. His first epic poem, "The Death of Roland," was published in 1886. "The Human Epic," which has been described as one of the most original poems of the age, appeared in 1890. For some years previous Mr. Rowbotham engaged in wide scientific studies with a view to the production of this poem, the subject of which had been conceived by him in his boyhood. Its theme is the history of the earth through the various geological periods, the evolution of life according to modern science, and the early annals of uncivilized man. The first five cantos, entitled respectively "The Earth's Beginning," "The Origin of Life," "The Silurian Sea," "The Old Red Sandstone," and "The Age of Trees," have now appeared. Among those who have taken a deep interest in Mr. Rowbotham's writings is the Queen of Roumania.

ROWSELL, The Rev. Thomas James, M.A., Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, educated at Tonbridge School, whence he took an exhibition, and then at St. John's College, Cambridge, was for seventeen years engaged in the very laborious work of St. Peter's district, Stepney, one of the poor East-end parishes, and was appointed, by the Bishop of London, Rector of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, in 1860. He has been three times select preacher before the University of Cambridge, and on several occasions preached at the special services in St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey. Having no parochial charge attached to his benefice, Mr. Rowsell has been actively employed on the committee of the Bishop of London's Fund, is Honorary Secretary of the Metropolitan Visiting Association, and of other societies in London. He was appointed Honorary Chaplain to the Queen in 1866, and one of Her Majesty's Chaplains in Ordinary, Nov. 18, 1869. He succeeded Bishop Lightfoot as Deputy-Clerk of Closet to the Queen. He resigned the Rectory of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, in June, 1872, when he became vicar of St. Stephen's, Westbourne Park, Paddington. In Nov. 1881, he was appointed a Canon of Westminster. He resigned his living after his appointment to the canonry.

ROWTON (Lord), Montagu William Lowry Corry, C.B., second son of the Right Hon. Henry Corry (son of the second Earl of Belmore, and of Lady Harriet, daughter of the sixth Earl of Shaftesbury), was born in London, Oct. 8, 1838. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his degree in 1860. Called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1863, he practised for three years on the Oxford Circuit, and in 1866 was officially appointed Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, then Chancellor of the Exchequer. After Mr. Disraeli's defeat in 1868 he declined offers of public appointments which were made to him, and rendered voluntary service to that statesman till his return to power in 1874, subsequently continuing to act as Lord Beaconsfield's private secretary till his death in 1881. He accompanied Lord Beaconsfield to the Congress of Berlin, being then appointed one of the joint-secretaries to the Special Embassy of Great Britain, and, at its close, received the Companionship of the Bath. At the termination of Lord Beaconsfield's Government in 1880, he was raised to the peerage, taking his title from his estate at Rowton Castle in Shropshire. Lord Beaconsfield bequeathed to Lord Rowton the whole of his letters, papers, documents, and manuscripts, leaving it to his absolute discretion to destroy, preserve, or publish any of them, at such time as, in his uncontrolled judgment, might seem fit. It was at first inferred from the terms of the bequest that Lord Beaconsfield had left behind him some sort of diary or memoirs for publication. This has, unfortunately, proved not to be the case, while research has made it clear that the only manuscript contemplated in the testator's will was that of "Endymion," almost completed at the date of the signing of the will, and afterwards published during the life of the writer. Lord Rowton is one of the trustees of the Guinness Fund for the erection of dwellings for the housing of the poor in London and Dublin.

RUBINSTEIN, Anton Gregor, a Russian pianist and composer, born at Wech-wotynetz, on the frontier of Roumania, Nov. 30, 1830, was taken to Moscow while quite a child, and studied the piano under

Alexis Villoing, after having received preliminary instruction from his mother. He made his first appearance in public when only eight years of age, and at ten went with his teacher to Paris, where he resided two years, performing at several concerts with a success which won for him the encouragement and the advice of Liszt. Next he visited England, Sweden, and Germany. In Berlin, where his relatives had determined to settle for some time, he studied composition under Dehn. On the completion of his course of instruction he devoted himself for some time to teaching, first in Berlin and afterwards in Vienna. He then returned to his native country, where he was appointed pianist to the Grand-Duchess Helena, and subsequently director of the concerts of the Russian Musical Society. In the spring of 1868 he again visited Paris, and he next came to London, achieving, in both capitals, a brilliant success as a pianist and dramatic composer. In 1872-73 he visited America. Since 1867, Rubinstein has held no post, and spends his time in travelling and composing. Both in playing and in composition he aims at what may be called the "grand style," excelling more in splendour and sublimity than in correctness and delicacy of detail. Among his operas are "Dimitri Donskoi," "Les Chasseurs Sibériens," "La Vengeance," "Tom le Fou," "Les Enfants des Bruyères," and "Lalla Rookh," most of them represented in St. Petersburg, Berlin, Vienna, and some of them in London; "Nero," represented at Covent Garden Theatre in 1877, and "Ivan Kalashorikoff." His oratorio, "Paradise Lost," has been often performed with great success, notably in the Salle de la Noblesse in St. Petersburg, on Dec. 17, 1876. His sacred drama "The Maccabees," was produced at the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, in 1878. He has also composed symphonies, quartets, sonatas, concertos, overtures, studies and a number of exceedingly beautiful songs. The jubilee of his public service was celebrated in St. Petersburg by a fête on Nov. 18, 1889. The late Czar ennobled him in 1869; and in 1877 he received from the President of the French Republic the decoration of the Legion of Honour.

RÜCKER, Professor Arthur William, M.A. (Oxon.), F.R.S., M.I.E.E., eldest son of the late D. H. Rücker, Esq., of Errington, Clapham Park, was born in 1848. He was educated at the Clapham Grammar School, and in 1867 obtained an open mathematical scholarship at Brasenose College, Oxford. After a distinguished University career, he was elected Fellow and Lecturer of his College, and Demonstrator in the Clarendon Laboratory of the University. In 1874 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Physics in the newly founded Yorkshire College, Leeds. In the general election of 1885 Professor Rücker contested the Northern Division of Leeds in the Liberal interest; and, in 1886, he stood as a Unionist Liberal for the Pudsey Division of the West Riding. In the latter year he was appointed Professor of Physics in the Royal College of Science, South Kensington. Professor Rücker is the author, or joint author, of many papers on scientific subjects. Together with Professor Reinold, F.R.S., he has published in the Transactions of the Royal Society, 1881, 1883, 1886, a series of memoirs on the properties of liquid films; and, in conjunction with Professor Thorpe, F.R.S., he has carried out the magnetic survey of the United Kingdom which formed the subject of the Bakerian Lecture delivered before the Royal Society in 1889. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884; is Treasurer of the Physical Society of London; and an Honorary Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford. Professor Rücker married in 1876 the second daughter of J. D. Heaton, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.P., of Claremont, Leeds. Mrs. A. W. Rücker died in 1878.

RUDLER, Frederick William, was born in London, July 8, 1840, and appointed an Assistant in the Museum of Practical Geology in Jernyn Street, in 1861. He was Assistant-Secretary of the Ethnological Society in 1870; and for some time edited its Quarterly Journal, and that of the Anthropological Institute. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Natural Science in the University College of Wales, but resigned that position in 1879, to take the Curatorship of the Museum of Practical Geology. He also held the office of Registrar of the Royal School of Mines until its amalgamation with the Normal School of Science. For many years he has been Honorary Secretary of the Anthropological Institute, and in 1880, presided over the Anthropological Department of the British Association. In 1887 and 1888 he was President of the Geologists' Association. In conjunction with the late Mr. Robert Hunt, he edited the seventh edition of Ure's "Dictionary of Arts," and, jointly with others, was author of the volume on Europe in Stanford's "Compendium of Geography." Mr. Rudler was a contributor to the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and to Longman's two Dictionaries of Chemistry. He is a copious writer of articles and reviews, mostly anonymous, in various scientific journals, and is a lecturer in connection with the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching.

RUMBOLD, Sir Horace, Bart., K.C.M.G., fifth son of Sir William Rumbold, third baronet, was born in 1829, and entered the diplomatic service as Attaché at Turin, Sept., 1849. He was paid attaché successively at Stuttgart and Vienna, and appointed secretary of Legation in China in 1858. He held the same position in Athens, 1862, was transferred to Berne in 1864, but was in charge of the Mission in Athens during May and June, 1864, and attended the King of the Hellenes on His Majesty's first journey to the Ionian Islands after their annexation to Greece. In 1868 he proceeded to St. Petersburg as secretary of Embassy; was transferred thence to Constantinople in 1871; and was promoted to be Minister Resident and Consul-General in Chili, Oct. 24, 1872, and Minister Resident at Berne, Jan. 17, 1878. He was accredited Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Aug. 15, 1879; to the King of Sweden and Norway in 1881; and to the King of the Hellenes, Dec. 17, 1884. At Athens Sir H. Rumbold has had the difficult and unwelcome task of persuading the Greeks that they must not make war; the persuasion, in 1886, having to be accompanied by a forcible blockade of the Greek ports. He was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of the Netherlands Feb. 1, 1888.

RUSDEN, George William, was in 1849 appointed agent for the establishment of national schools in the Port Philip District, now Victoria, and afterwards Agent and Inspector of Schools in New South Wales. When Victoria was separated from New South Wales in 1851, he was made under-secretary, or chief clerk in the colonial secretary's office; clerk of the executive council in 1852; and in 1856 was attached to the establishment of a new constitution with the Houses of Legislature, as clerk of the Legislative Council, and Clerk of the Parliaments. From 1853 till his retirement from the Civil Service in 1882, he served as a magistrate, and was for some time a member of the National Educational Board in Victoria. He has been a member of the Council of the University of Melbourne since its foundation, and through his advocacy a Shakespere scholarship was founded. He is the author of "Moyarra: An Australian Legend;" "National Education;" "Discovery, Survey, and Settlement of Port Philip;" "Curiosities of Colonization;" "History of New Zealand," and a "History of Australia," published in London in 1883. Mr. Rusden is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, and a member of the Corporation of the Royal Literary Fund in England.

RUSK, The Hon. Jeremiah McLain, American statesman, was born in Morgan co., Ohio, June 17, 1830. He received a common school education, and in 1853 removed to Vernon co., Wisconsin, where he was engaged in farming until 1862, when he entered the Union army as a Major of Volunteers. During the Civil War he rose to the rank of Lieut.-Colonel and was brevetted Brigadier-General. At the close of the struggle (1865) he returned to Wisconsin and was Comptroller of the State from 1866 to 1870. In 1871 he entered Congress, where he served for three terms, retiring in 1877. President Garfield offered him in 1881 the appointment of Chargé d'Affaires for Paraguay and Uruguay, and also that of Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; but he declined them both. He was elected Governor of Wisconsin in 1881 and was twice re-elected, his third (continuous) term expiring in Jan., 1889. In the following March he entered the Cabinet of President Harrison as Secretary of Agriculture.

RUSKIN, John, M.A., LL.D., son of a London merchant, was born in Hunter Street, Brunswick Square, London, in Feb. 1819, and was educated privately, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he gained the Newdigate Prize in 1839. He then devoted himself to painting, and worked under Copley Fielding and J. D. Harding. A pamphlet in defence of Turner and the modern English school of landscape-painting was his first effort in the cause of modern art, and it was enlarged into a standard work, entitled "Modern Painters," the first volume of which appeared in 1843. The author's success as a writer on art was decided by the warm reception accorded to this volume, of which several editions have since been published. Mr. Ruskin's views, however, were combated with bitter asperity by some of the art critics of the day, who resented with an affectation of contempt his free expression of dissent from the trammels of their school. In his second volume of "Modern Painters," written after a residence in Italy, and published in 1846, he took a much wider survey of the subject originally entered upon, including the works of the great Italian Painters, and discussed at length the merits of their respective schools. This, his chief work, has been completed by the publication of three additional volumes, the last of which, published in 1860, contains illustrations by himself. Mr. Ruskin temporarily diverted his attention from the study of painting to that of architecture, and wrote "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," published in 1849, as a first result, followed by the first volume of "The Stones of Venice," in 1851: the second and third volumes of which appeared in 1853. The illustrations in the last-named productions, which excited some of the same professional hostility that his first publication evoked, displayed to much advantage his artistic powers. Mr. Ruskin has expounded his views both in lectures and in newspapers and reviews, having, as early as 1847, contributed articles to the Quarterly on Lord Lindsay's "Christian Art." In 1851 he advocated Pre-Raphaelitism in letters to the Times; and in 1853 he lectured in Edinburgh on Gothic Architecture. In addition to the above-mentioned works, Mr. Ruskin has written "Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds," the "King of the Golden River," a story for children, illustrated by Doyle, in 1851; "The Two Paths: Lectures on Architecture and Painting," in 1854; "Notes to Pictures in the Royal Academy, Nos. 1 to 5," in 1854-9; "Giotto and his works in Padua," written in 1855 for the Arundel Society, of which he is a member; "Notes on the Turner Collection," in 1857; "Cambridge School of Art," and "Lectures on Art: Political Economy of Art," in 1858; "Elements of Perspective," and "Lectures on Art: Decoration and Manufacture," in 1859; "Unto this Last: Four Essays," republished from the Cornhill Magazine, in 1862; "Ethics of the Dust: Ten Lectures," "Sesame and Lilies: Two Lectures," and "Study of Architecture in our Schools," in 1865; "Crown of Wild Olive: Three Lectures," in 1866; and "The Queen of the Air; being a Study of the Greek Myths of Cloud and Storm." To the Art Journal he contributed "The Cestus of Aglaia," and he has written for various periodicals. Mr. Ruskin was appointed Rede Lecturer, at Cambridge, in April, 1867, and the Senate conferred the degree of LL.D. upon him, May 15. He was also elected Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford, and in 1872 published "Aratra Pentelici; Six Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture, given before the University of Oxford in Michaelmas Term, 1870." In 1871 he proposed to devote £5,000 for the purpose of an endowment to pay a master of drawing in the Taylor Galleries, Oxford, and this handsome offer was, with some modifications, accepted by the University in Jan., 1872. He was re-elected to the Slade Professorship of Fine Art, March 1, 1876. A Collection of his Letters, with a preface by himself, was published in 1880, under the title of "Arrows of the Chase." In 1883 he was again elected Slade Professor, and at his inaugural lecture was received with unprecedented enthusiasm. So great was the crowd that thronged to hear his lectures that it was impossible to accommodate the audience, and Prof. Ruskin undertook to deliver each lecture twice. He was obliged to resign the post in 1884 on account of failing health. Of late he has been issuing, in parts, his autobiography, under the title of "Præterita." In 1887 he published "Hortus Inclusus: Letters from Mr. Ruskin to the Ladies of the Thwaite." For several years he has lived in tranquil retirement at Brantwood, Coniston.

RUSSELL, Sir Charles, Q.C., M.P., was born at Newry in 1833, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He began his professional career by practising as a Solicitor in Belfast; but, coming to England, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and became Q.C., and was elected Benchers of Lincoln's Inn in 1872. He entered Parliament in the Liberal interest as Member for Dundalk, which he represented from 1880 till 1885; and South Hackney 1885-86, when he became Attorney-General in the Gladstone Administration, and was knighted. His powerful and eloquent speech before the Parnell Commission was one of the most masterly orations of modern times.

RUSSELL, Clark, was born at the Carlton House Hotel, Broadway, in the city of New York, on Feb. 24, 1844. His father was Mr. Henry Russell, the famous composer, whose songs, "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," "To the West," "Far, Far upon the Sea," "There's a Good Time Coming, Boys," and many other compositions of a like kind achieved more for emigration than any other appeals ever made. Mr. Clark Russell's mother was, prior to her marriage, Miss Lloyd, a connection of the poet Wordsworth, the associate in her youth, and of Coleridge, Southey, Lamb, and others of that school. Mr. Clark Russell was educated at Winchester and in France, and was sent to sea as a midshipman in the Merchant Service at the age of thirteen and a half.

He made several voyages to India, Australia, and China, but abandoned the sea after seven or eight years. His taste for literature entirely dominated his father's desire to interest him in commerce, and he wrote a few novels under a nom-de-plume and contributed to a few London periodicals. He wrote his first nautical novel, "John Holdsworth, Chief Mate," in 1874. The success of this book was great and immediate. It was followed by "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," which appears to have proved the most popular of his stories, though in no sense, in his opinion, is it comparable with his later works. In the "Grosvenor" he anticipated the efforts which have been made by Mr. Samuel Plimsoll to improve the dietary of the British seaman. "The Little Loo" followed the "Grosvenor," and then came in rapid succession "A Sailor's Sweetheart," "An Ocean Free Lance," "A Sea Queen," and "The Lady Maud." At this time Mr. Clark Russell was associated with the Newcastle Daily Chronicle, the property of the eloquent Mr. Joseph Cowen, then one of the members for that city; but being importuned by the proprietors of the London Daily Telegraph to join the staff of that journal, he reluctantly bade his friend Mr. Joseph Cowen farewell and settled in London. There he wrote "Jack's Courtship" and the "Strange Voyage," at the same time contributing stories and leading articles to the Daily Telegraph. His health failed him, and he was obliged to take up his residence by the sea-side. While at Ramsgate, in Kent, he continued to write for the Daily Telegraph, but with growing dislike of the work, as the exactions upon his time and imagination grew heavier and heavier in proportion as his publishers asked for fresh novels from him. At Ramsgate he wrote "The Golden Hope," "The Death Ship," "A Frozen Pirate," and "Marooned." In 1887 his connection with the Daily Telegraph ceased, but the greater bulk of his contributions to that paper have been published in volumes such as "Round the Galley Fire," "My Watch Below," "In the Middle Watch," "On the Fok'sle Head," etc. These works cover a very extensive range of seafaring interests. Since 1888 he has lived at Deal, where he has written "An Ocean Tragedy," "My Shipmate Louise," "Betwixt the Forelands," a "Life of Nelson," "The Romance of Jenny Harlowe," and other works. He is now engaged upon a novel entitled "Helga."

RUSSELL, George William Erskine, son of Lord Charles James Fox Russell, and grandson of John, sixth Duke of Bedford, was born Feb. 3, 1853, at 16, Mansfield Street, Portland Place, and educated at Harrow and University College, Oxford, where he was Scholar and Prizeman. He graduated in honours, B.A. 1876, M.A. 1880. He entered the Inner Temple, 1875, and was elected Liberal member of Parliament for Aylesbury, 1880 and 1885. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board 1883-5, and is the author of "George Eliot," "The Trustees of Posterity," and many other lectures and essays. At the general election of 1885 he unsuccessfully contested the Borough of Fulham, and was again defeated as a Liberal in 1886. He was elected an Alderman of the County of London for six years in 1889.

RUSSELL, Henry Chamberlaine, B.A., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., F.R. Met. Soc., Government Astronomer of New South Wales, Vice-President of the Board of Technical Education, New South Wales, Fellow of the Senate of the University of Sydney. He has done much for the promotion and study of science in New South Wales. He has been in charge of the Government Observatory since 1862, and Government Astronomer since 1863. He organized and led the N.S.W. Expedition to Cape Sidmouth in 1871; organized and sent out four parties to observe the Transit of Venus in 1874, and six parties in 1882, also three parties for the Transit of Mercury in 1881; and he originated and presided over the first Australasian Meteorological Conference, 1879. He is the author of seventy-five Reports and Original Papers upon Astronomical, Meteorological, and Physical matters, published by the New South Wales Government, in the Memoirs and Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, London; and in the Journal of the Royal Society of New South Wales. He is the designer of several improved forms of self-recording Barographs, Thermographs, Pluviometers, Anemometers, Tidegauges, Actinometers, &c. Amongst the above seventy-five papers are "Measures of Double Stars, and a list of 351 New Double Stars;" "Nebula surrounding Eta Argus;" "Measures of Coloured Clusters about Kappa Crucis;" "Measures of Alpha Centauri;" "The Great Southern Cross," 1880; "Meteorology and Climate of New South Wales;" "Tropical Rains;" "Rain Maps;" "Atmospheric Lines between D lines at Sydney," &c.

Geoghegan's school in Hume Street, Dublin, and entered at Trinity College 1838. After the elections, of which he wrote descriptions for the Times in 1843, he accepted an engagement on the staff of the paper. In 1846 he entered the Middle Temple, and in 1850 was called to the Bar, but four years later, when in fair practice in election and Parliamentary cases, he was asked, on the declaration of the war with Russia, to act as special correspondent, and in July 1854 he accompanied the British troops to Malta, whence he proceeded to Turkey, Bulgaria, and finally to the Crimea, where he remained from the beginning to the close of the war, and was present at Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, the assaults and the fall of Sebastopol, being thus the first member of what has almost become the profession of war correspondents. His letters were the means of making known to the country the terrible condition of the army in the winter, and raised a storm of indignation against the ministry, before which it was swept out of office. In 1856, soon after the evacuation of the Crimea, he went to Moscow to describe the Coronation of the Czar. When the mutiny broke out, in 1857, he proceeded to India, and was with Lord Clyde, and served in the campaigns in Rohilund, Oude, &c., from the capture of Lucknow till the suppression of the mutiny, for which he received the Indian War Medal with the Lucknow Clasp. In 1858 he returned to England, and in 1860 established the Army and Navy Gazette, of which he is now editor and principal proprietor. In 1861 he went to the United States as war correspondent of the Times, and was present at the first battle of Bull Run, where his account of the defeat of the Federal army entailed on him great unpopularity, and in 1862 returned to England, where he remained until the outbreak of the war between Prussia and Austria, 1866, when he joined the Austrian army, where he was attached to the Head Quarters of Feldzeugmeister von Benedek, and was present at the battle of Königgrätz, the retreat to Olmütz, &c. When war was declared between France and Prussia in 1870, Mr. Russell went to Berlin, and thence accompanied the staff of the Crown Prince. He was present at the battle of Sedan, and at the siege and fall of Paris, which he entered with the Crown Prince. In 1875 he was attached as Honorary Private Secretary to the staff of the Prince of Wales, whom he accompanied in visits to Egypt, Constantinople, the Crimea, &c., previously on his tour in India. He went to South Africa with Lord Wolseley in 1879, and was at the taking of Sekukuni's stronghold, and he was in Egypt during the operations which led to the fall of Cairo. Mr. Russell has published "Letters from the Crimea," 1855-6; "Diary in India," "My Diary North and South," "Canada; its Defences," "Rifle Clubs and Volunteer Corps," "The adventures of Dr. Brady," "My Diary in the East," "Hesperotheren: or Notes from the West," 1882. Mr. Russell unsuccessfully contested Chelsea in the Conservative interest in 1869. He is a Knight of the Iron Cross, a Commander of the Legion of Honour, has the Turkish War Medal of 1854-6, the Indian War Medal 1857-8, the South African War Medal, 1879, and the Medjidieh (3rd and 4th class) the Osmanieh (3rd and 4th class), the St. Sauveur of Greece, Chevalier of Fraz Josef—the Redeemer of Greece, &c., Portugal, &c.

RUSSELL, W. H. L., F.R.S., was born on August 26, 1823. His grandfather was a Royal Academician, painter of several portraits which have been engraved, and afterwards of the Moon. His principal picture of the Moon is now in the University of Oxford. His father was Rector of Shepperton, Middlesex, the place where W. H. L. Russell was born. He was devoted to Mathematics from his earliest years. The first book which he can remember holding in his hands was "Wood's Mechanics." He was enraptured with the diagrams, and, as a child, steam engines, machines, and all scientific instruments were the chief objects of his thoughts. When eleven years of age he was able to work Problems producing simple equations, and began the differential calculus when about fourteen. At the usual age he went to Cambridge; but a nervous disorder commenced at that time which entirely prevented him from doing anything while at the University. He began by writing on definite Integrals, and considered the summation of sizes analogous to that which occurs in the exponential theorem, by definite Integrals, and he applied the results to the solution of Differential equations. He then wrote on the Calculus of symbols, and on functional equations, and afterwards contributed sixteen papers on definite Integrals to the Proceedings of the Royal Society, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1866. He has written also on the finite solution of linear differential equations, on geometry and has described a contrivance which he made for tracing all algebraical curves by machinery. He has studied much the English, French, and German Mathematical Journals; also comparative anatomy, and has written a paper for Macmillan's Magazine in favour of the Evolution of Species, and hopes, under Providence, he says, to effect much more.

RUSSIA, Emperor of. See ALEXANDER III., EMPEROR OF ALL THE RUSSIAS.

RUTHERFORD, The Rev. William Gunion, LL.D., born 1853, is the son of the Rev. Robert Rutherford, Newlands, Peeblesshire, and was educated at St. Andrew's University, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1876. He also received the degree of LL.D. from St. Andrew's in 1884. He was ordained deacon by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1883, and priest by the Bishop of London in 1885. He held a classical mastership at St. Paul's School from 1876 to 1883, when he was appointed, without examination, Fellow and Prælector of University College, Oxford. In the same year he became Head-Master of Westminster School. In 1881 he published "The New Phrynichus, a revised Text of the Ecloga of the Grammmarian Phrynichus, with Introductions, and a Commentary;" in 1883 an edition of "The Fables of Babrius, with Introductory Dissertations, Critical Notes, Commentary, and Lexicon," and in 1889 "The Fourth Book of Thucydides, a revision of the Text, illustrating the Principal causes of Corruption in the manuscripts of this author." The introductory chapters of "The New Phrynichus" have been translated into German by Dr. A. Funck, at the instance of the late Professor Georg Curtius of Leipzig, under the title of "Zwei Abhandlungen zur Geschichte des Atticismus" (Leipzig, 1883), and into French by Professor Kehlhoff with the title "Contribution à l'étude du dialecte attique." Besides these larger works, Mr. Rutherford has published several smaller books, of which the most important are "A First Greek Grammar," which has gone through many editions; and "Lex Rex; or, a Short Digest on the principal Relations between Latin, Greek, and Anglo-Saxon sounds." Dr. Rutherford is an advocate for the frank recognition of the altered circumstances of Westminster School, and desires to see it removed into the country, or if this is impossible, converted into a great London Day School.

RUTLAND (Duke of), John James Robert Manners, LL.D., D.C.L., G.C.B., second son of the late John Henry, fifth Duke of Rutland, by the Lady Elizabeth Howard, fifth daughter of Frederick, fifth Earl of Carlisle, born at

Belvoir Castle, Leicestershire, Dec. 13, 1818, was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1839. In June, 1841, he was, with Mr. Gladstone, returned member in the Conservative interest for the borough of Newark, but he did not present himself again to that constituency at the general election in Aug., 1847. He was defeated in a contest for Liverpool in the latter year, and in another contest for the City of London with Baron Rothschild, in June, 1849, but he was returned for Colchester in Feb., 1850, and continued to represent that borough till March, 1857, when he was elected for North Leicestershire. He made his maiden speech in Feb., 1842, when he opposed the repeal of the Corn Laws, advocating, subsequently, the cultivation of diplomatic relations with the See of Rome, and of a better understanding with the Irish priesthood, a relaxation of the law of mortmain, and the passing of the Ten Hours Factories Act, and in many other matters showing that he held too broad opinions to act always with his party, though he opposed Sir R. Peel's free-trade measures in 1845-46, and from that time identified himself completely with Conservatives. He was appointed First Commissioner of the Office of Works, with a seat in the Cabinet, and sworn a Privy Councillor in Lord Derby's first administration in 1852, held the same post in Lord Derby's second administration in 1858-59, and was re-appointed in Lord Derby's third administration, 1866-67. On the return of the Conservatives to office in Feb., 1874, he was appointed Postmaster-General, and he held that post until the Conservatives went out of office in April, 1880, when he was created a G.C.B. In 1885 he was returned for the new Melton Division of Leicestershire, and was Postmaster-General in Lord Salisbury's Government. The honorary degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon him by the University of Oxford in 1876. Previously, in 1862, the degree of LL.D. of Cambridge University was conferred on him. His Grace is a staunch defender of the rights of the Church, a supporter of the agricultural interest, and has acted for many years as Chairman of the Tithe Redemption Trust. His first literary performance was "England's Trust; and other Poems," 1841. Appended to this volume are some minor pieces, headed "Memorials of other Lands," commemorative of His Grace's excursion, in company with his elder brother, then Marquis of Granby (the late Duke of Rutland), through France, Spain, Switzerland, and Italy. His other works are: "A Plea for National Holy-days," 1843; "Notes of an Irish Tour," 1849; "Notes of a Cruise in Scotch Waters on board the Duke of Rutland's Yacht, Resolution, in 1848," Lond., 1850, a handsome folio volume embellished with sketches by John Christian Schetky, Esq.; "English Ballads and other Poems," 1850; "The Factories Bill, a Speech," 1850; "The Church of England in the Colonies," a lecture, 1851; "The Importance of Literature to Men of Business," one of a series of lectures so entitled, 1852; "Speech on the Abolition of Church Rates," 1856. In 1886 he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in Lord Salisbury's second administration. He succeeded to the dukedom on the death of his brother, March 2, 1887. His Grace married first, in 1851, Catharine Louisa Georgiana, daughter of the late Colonel Marlay, C.B. (she died April 7, 1854); and secondly, in 1862, Janetia, eldest daughter of Thomas Hughan, Esq.

RYDBERG, Professor Abraham Victor, Swedish author, born at Jonkoepping, Dec. 18, 1828, was educated at Vexio, and in 1851 entered the University of Lund for a short time. In 1855 he joined the staff of the Gothenburg Shipping and Mercantile Gazette. He was a member of the Swedish Parliament from 1870 to 1872, and in 1876 he was instructed by the local government of Gothenburg to inaugurate the philosophical and historical conferences, which continue to be held annually. In 1877 he was elected to the Swedish Academy, and in the same year the University of Upsal conferred upon him the degree of doctor. In 1884 he was named Professor by the New Academy of Stockholm. He has written "Signoalla," a gipsy romance, 1857; "The Last Athenian," a novel, 1859; "What the Bible teaches concerning Christ," 1862; "Magic in the Middle Ages," 1864; "Roman Days," studies of the busts of the Roman Emperors, 1875-77; "Poems," 1882; a translation of Goethe's "Faust" into Swedish, 1878; and "Teutonic Mythology," 1886-89.

SACHER - MASOCH (Knight), Leopold Ritter von, novelist, born at Lemberg, the capital of Austrian Poland, Jan. 27, 1836, is the son of an Aulic Councillor and police-director of Galicia, and is a Roman Catholic, not a Jew, as is generally believed from his great knowledge of Judaism and his "Jewish Stories." Having received a preliminary training at home he passed through the Normal School and the Gymnasium of his native city, studied philosophy at Gratz and Prague, obtained his Doctor's degree at the age of 19, and two years later became a private teacher of history in the University of Gratz. In 1857 he published his historical account of "The Insurrection in Ghent under Charles V." (Der Aufstand in Gent unter Karl V.); and in 1866 his first novel, "Eine galizische Geschichte." His literary success led him to abandon in 1868 the profession of a teacher. His series of novels entitled "Cain's Inheritance" (of which the first parts were published in 1870), was translated into most European languages and obtained for the author a European reputation. His principal works, in addition to those named above, are, "Die geschiedene Frau," a novel, 1870; "Die Republik der Weiberfeinde," a novel, 1872; "Maria Theresia und die Freimaurer," an historical romance, 1872; "Falscher's Hermelin," 1873; "Geschichten aus der Bühnenwelt," 1873; "Russische Hofgeschichten," 1873; "Der neue Hiob," a novel, 1874; "Wiener Hofgeschichten," 1876; "Das schwarze Cabinet," 1880; "Der Flau," 1880; "Der alte Castellan," 1882; "Basil Hymen," 1882; "Paradise on the Dniester," 1882; besides several dramas and comedies. Sacher-Masoch is an especial favourite with the French; and since 1871 a large number of his novels have appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes. In 1883 the French Republic conferred upon him the order of the Legion d'Honneur. By his book, "Die Ideale unserer Zeit," in which, being very Liberal, he criticised sharply the German affairs after 1871, he got, though wrongly, the reputation of being anti-German. Being Liberal, Sacher-Masoch has a great liking for England, which he defended warmly against an attack of the German historian, Johannes Scherr. His books are chiefly on Galician life, and especially on the rising of 1846. In 1881 he founded a monthly international review, On the Heights (Auf der Höhe), published at Leipzig. To this review he contributed a novel, "The Jews' Raphael" (Der Juden Raphael), a continuation of his series of novels; "Cain's Inheritance," mentioned above, being from the fourth part of that work, "Death." He also published in the Review the memoirs left by his father, which treat of and describe persons and matters during the period from 1809 to 1874. His more recent works are the two romances, "Die Seelenfängerin" "The Serpent in Paradise," and the superbly illustrated work, "Contes Juifs," written in the French language, and published at Paris in 1888. In 1873 he married Aurora Rümelin (who published several romances under the pseudonym of Wanda von Dunajew). After his divorce in 1887, he married the authoress, Hulda Meister, with whom he has resided latterly at Lindheim, in Oberhessen.

SACHS, Dr. Julius von, Privy Councillor, and Austrian Professor in Ordinary of Botany, was born at Breslau (Silesia), on Oct. 2, 1832, where he attended the Elisabethethanum Gymnasium. In 1851 he went to Prague (Bohemia) as private assistant to the Physiologist Purknyi; in 1857 he was private lecturer on the Physiology of Plants at Prague; in 1859 at the Agricultural Academy at Tharandt near Dresden; from 1861-67 he was Professor of Botany at the Academy of Poppelsdorf, near Bonn, on the Rhine; 1867-68, Professor of Botany at Freiburg (Baden); 1868-90, Professor of Botany at Winzburg, Bavaria. He is Knight of the Royal Order of Merit of the Bavarian Crown and of St. Michael; as well as of the Royal Bavarian Order of Maximilian for Science and Art; Member of the Royal Academies of Sciences in Munich, Turin, and Amsterdam; of the Royal Society of London; and of the Royal Irish Academy at Dublin; of the Silesian Society for Home-culture; of the Senkenberg Society; Honorary Member of the Philosophical Society of Cambridge; of the Botanical Society of Edinburgh; of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester; of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain; of the Society of Natural Philosophy of Odessa; Foreign Member of the Linnean Society of London; of the Royal Botanical Society of Brussels; holder of the Sömmering Medal; Honorary Doctor of the medical Faculty of Bonn, and of the Faculty Physical Science at Bologna. He is the author of the following scientific works:—"Experimental Physiology of Plants" (translated into Russian and French) in 1865; "Compendium of Botany," 4 editions (translated into Russian, French, and English) in 1868-74; "History of Botany," 1875 (translated into English in 1889); "Lectures on the Physiology of Plants," 1882 and 1887, (translated into English).

SACKVILLE (Baron Sackville, of Knole, in the County of Kent), Lionel Sackville West, Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, J.P., and Deputy-Lieut. for Kent, was born July 19, 1827, at Bourn Hall, Cambridgeshire, and is the fourth son of George John, 5th Earl De La Warr, by his marriage with Elizabeth Sackville, daughter of John Frederick, 3rd Duke of Dorset. He was educated at home, was assistant Precis writer to the Earl of Aberdeen, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in 1845; entered the diplomatic service in 1847; served as Attaché to Her Majesty's Legations in Lisbon, Naples, Stuttgart, and Berlin, till 1858; as Secretary of Legation in Turin, Madrid, and Berlin; and Secretary of Embassy in Paris till 1872; was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic 1873; transferred to Madrid, 1878; and to the United States 1881. He negotiated in conjunction with Sir James Hudson, the commercial treaty with Sardinia, 1863; Represented H.M. Government and that of Denmark at the Conferences of Madrid on the affairs of Morocco, 1880; was Minister Plenipotentiary at the Conference in Washington on the affairs of Samoa, 1887; and negotiated, in conjunction with Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Sir Charles Tupper, the Fisheries Treaty of Washington, 1888. He received his passports from the United States Government in 1889, and returned to England.

SAGASTA, Praxedes Mateo, a Spanish statesman, was born at Torrecilla de Cameros, July 21, 1827. He studied in the school of Engineers in Madrid, practised his profession at Valladolid and Zamora, and was elected by the latter town to the Constituent Cortes of 1854. He took part in the insurrection of 1856, and was obliged to seek refuge in France. On the amnesty being proclaimed, he returned to Spain, and became a Professor in the School of Engineers in Madrid. He was also the editor of La Iberia, the principal organ of the Progressist party. After the unsuccessful insurrection of June, 1866, he was again under the necessity of seeking an asylum in France, and he did not return to Spain until after the fall of Queen Isabella II. Appointed Minister of the Interior in the first Cabinet formed by General Prim, he gradually adopted more and more the views of that statesman and of the Conservative party, and completely broke off his relations with his old friend Zorilla. He was consequently exposed to bitter attacks from the Republican minority in the Cortes. Appointed Minister of State in Jan. 1870, he ordered several towns, including Barcelona, to be placed in a state of siege, declared himself in favour of the monarchy, and proposed, on Dec. 17, 1870, the dissolution of the Chamber, after the king had taken the oath. He continued to be Minister of State and Minister of the Interior in the first Cabinet of King Amadeus, and during that monarch's brief reign he took part in several ministerial combinations, either as a member or as President of the Council. Under the Presidency of Marshal Serrano, in 1874, he was Minister for Foreign Affairs (Jan. 4), Minister of the Interior (May 13), and President of the Council (Aug. 4). After the coup d'état re-establishing the monarchy, he withdrew for a time from public life. In June, 1875, he gave in his adherence to the cause of Alfonso XII., and endeavoured to form a Liberal Constitutional party. Subsequently he joined the Opposition, and attacked the administrations formed by Martinez Campos and Cánovas 1877-79. When a new Liberal party was formed in 1880 Señor Sagasta gave in his adhesion to it. The Conservative Cabinet of Señor Cánovas del Castillo was overthrown early in the year 1881, and a coalition between Señor Sagasta and General Martinez Campos came into power. Sagasta's Ministry remained in office till Oct. 1883, when it was superseded by a Cabinet formed from the Dynastic Left. This, however, was shortlived, and was followed by a return of the Conservatives to power. On the death of Alfonso XII., Nov. 23, 1885, Señor Sagasta, at the request of the Queen Regent, again became the head of the government; but, in consequence of a crisis, he reformed the Cabinet in 1888. Among the acts of his ministry may be mentioned the passing of the Anglo-Spanish commercial treaty.

SAÏD, Seyyid Ali, Sultan of Zanzibar, is the son of Iman Saïd, Saïd of Muscat, and succeeded his brother Seyyid Khalifah Ben Saïd, who died on Feb. 13, 1890.

ST. GAUDENS, Augustus, American sculptor, was born in Dublin, March 1, 1848. At the age of six months he was taken to New York City, which has since been his home. He began to draw at Cooper Union in 1861, and in 1863-66 was a student at the National Academy of Design. From 1867 to 1870 he attended the Ecole des Beaux Arts at Paris. Thence he went to Rome, where in 1871 he produced his first figure, "Hiawatha." He returned to New York in 1872 and opened a studio. His most important works are "The Puritan," "Adoration of the Cross by Angels," a bas-relief in St. Thomas's Church, New York; statues of Admiral Farragut (1880) in New York, Robert R. Randall (1884) at Sailors' Snug Harbor (Staten Island, New York), of Abraham Lincoln (1887) in Chicago, and of Samuel Chapin (1887) in Springfield, Mass.; and portrait busts of W. M. Evarts (1872-73), T. D. Woolsey (1876) and the late Gen. Sherman (1888).

ST. JOHN, Sir Spenser, K.C.M.G., third son of the late Mr. James Augustus St. John, was born in London, Dec. 22, 1825. After receiving a careful education, he began to turn his attention towards the East, and having applied himself diligently to the study of the Malay language, was, in 1848, appointed secretary to Sir James Brooke. He resided in Borneo several years as H.M. Consul-General, and received in 1861 the appointment of Chargé d'Affaires to the republic of Hayti. On returning to this country in 1862, he published an account of his Eastern residence and travels, entitled "Life in the Forests of the Far East." Early in 1863 he left England for the West Indies, and some years later was promoted to the post of Minister Resident and Consul-General in Hayti. About the same time he was accredited also as Chargé d'Affaires to the Dominican Republic. In 1874 he was appointed Minister Resident and Consul-General at Lima, Peru, and in 1875 he proceeded on a special mission to Bolivia. He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1881 for services rendered during the war between Peru and Chili. In May, 1883, he was sent on a special mission to Mexico, to negotiate for the resumption of diplomatic relations with that country; and was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Mexico, Nov. 28, 1884. Sir Spenser St. John, who is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, published, in 1879, "The Life of Sir James Brooke, Rajah of Saráwak," and in 1885, "The Black Republic," an account of Hayti.

ST. JOHN-BRENON, Edward, F.S.A., F.R.G.S., Poet, Essayist and Journalist, the eldest son of the Rev. William Brenon, M.A., was born in Dublin, Feb. 21, 1847, and educated at the High School, and Trinity College in that city. In 1866 he published his first volume of poems entitled "Bianca, the Flower-girl of Bologna." In 1869 followed "Ambrosia Amoris," and a few years afterwards, in rapid succession, "Two Gallian Laments," "The Witch of Nemi," and "The Tribune Reflects." These last two books created some sensation. "The Witch of Nemi" was withdrawn from sale by Messrs. Longman & Co., on account of a dramatic poem in it called "Joseph and Amensis," Amensis being the name Mr. St. John-Brenon gave to Potiphar's wife, and "The Tribune Reflects" because it was a scathing satire, supposed to be spoken in soliloquy by the "Tribune" (Mr. Parnell), who is a friend of the poet's, in which he expresses his private opinions of his parliamentary followers in 1880. Mr. St. John-Brenon has on several occasions essayed unsuccessfully to enter Parliament; first having contested the city of Gloucester as a Conservative in 1868. He for many years resided in Italy, principally Rome and Naples, and has travelled a great deal in France, Spain, Greece, Turkey and Asia Minor. To him is due the credit of having brought about the now famous Parnell Commission, for it was the consequence of his celebrated action for libel against the publishers of the "Black Pamphlet," Messrs. Ridgway & Co. In this Mr. St. John-Brenon was accused of a variety of political crimes and designated "The Stormy Petrel of Fenianism." It was this trial which first demonstrated that notwithstanding strong party feeling an Irish Home Ruler if libelled, could have a fair trial and justice at the hands of an English Jury. Mr. St. John-Brenon has written some remarkable articles, historical and political, in many of the leading periodicals, one of the most important being "The True Story of Beatrice Cenci," in which he proves, beyond doubt, that this heroine of Shelley was a vulgar parricide. Mr. St. John-Brenon is now the editor of Piccadilly.

ST. LÉON, M^{me}, née Cerrito, Francesca, called Fanny, a celebrated dancer, born in Naples, March 11, 1821, is the daughter of an old soldier of the Empire. While quite a child, she was distinguished for great natural grace and vivacity. She made her first appearance in 1835, at the San Carlo theatre, in a ballet called "The Horoscope," and created great enthusiasm, and afterwards danced at the principal theatres of Italy. She was in Vienna for two years, and was a favourite every season from 1840 to 1845, in London, where she danced the famous pas de quatre with Taglioni, Carlotta Grisi, and Lucille Grahm. About this time she was married to a distinguished dancer and violinist, M. A. St. Léon, from whom she was separated in 1850. M^{me}. Cerrito, who was called the "Fourth Grace," composed, jointly with M. Théophile Gautier, the "Gipsy," "Gemma," and other ballets. She is now residing in Paris.

SAINT-SAËNS, Charles Camille, musical composer, was born in Paris, Oct. 9, 1835. Having lost his father, he was brought up by his mother and a great-aunt, who taught him the elements of music. At seven, he began to study the piano with Stamaty, and afterwards had lessons in harmony from Maleden. In 1847 he entered Benoist's class at the Conservatoire, obtained the second organ prize in 1849, and the first in 1851. At the age of seventeen he composed his first symphony, which was performed with success by the Société de Sainte Cécile. In 1853 he became organist of the church of St. Merri. In 1858 he was appointed organist at the Madeleine, and distinguished himself as much by his talent for improvisation as by his execution. Shortly afterwards he occupied the post of Pianoforte Professor at Niedermeyer's Ecole de Musique Religieuse. For his cantata, "Les Noces de Prométhée," he gained the prize awarded by the International Exhibition of 1867. "La Princesse Jaune," was produced at the Opéra Comique, June 12, 1872, and "Le Timbre d'Argent," at the Théâtre Lyrique, Feb. 23, 1877. Neither of these operas met with much success, and M. Saint-Saëns produced his next work "Samson et Delilah," a sacred drama, at Weimar, in December, 1877, and "Etienne Marcel," an opera, at Lyons, Feb. 8, 1879. The printed catalogue of his works includes 64 numbered, besides many unnumbered, pieces. He visited England in 1871, and played at the Musical Union. In 1874 and 1879 he took part in the Philharmonic Concerts, and on Dec. 6, 1879, he conducted his "Rouet d'Omphale," at the Crystal Palace. He produced at the great Opéra of Paris

"Henry VIII.," in 1883 and "Ascanio," in 1890. In 1886 he conducted his last great symphony in C minor in the Philharmonic Concerts, (1st performance). In addition to his other claims to distinction, M. Saint-Saëns is an able musical critic, and has contributed articles to "La Renaissance," "L'Estafette," "Le Voltaire," "La France," "La Nouvelle Revue," and "L'Artiste." He was elected a member of the Institute, Feb. 19, 1881.

SAINTSBURY, George Edward Bateman, was born at Southampton, on Oct. 23, 1845, and educated at King's College School, London. In 1863 he was elected to a Post-Mastership at Merton College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1868 and that of M.A. in 1873. After holding for a few months a Mastership in the Manchester Grammar School, he became Senior Classical Master in Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and held that post from 1868 to 1874. In the latter year he was appointed to the Head Mastership of the Elgin Educational Institute, which he resigned in 1876. For the last ten years Mr. Saintsbury has been a frequent contributor to the London periodical press on literary and political subjects. He has also published "A Primer of French Literature," 1880; "Dryden" in the series of "English Men of Letters," 1881; "French Lyrics," and "A Short History of French Literature," 1882; "Specimens of French Literature," 1883; "Specimens of English Prose Style," and "Marlborough," in the series of "English Worthies," 1885: besides contributing to the "Encyclopædia Britannica" superintending a revised edition of Scott's "Dryden," editing several volumes of "Selections from French Authors," for the Clarendon Press, and furnishing prefaces to some reprints of English Classics.

SAINT-VALLIER, Charles Raymond de la Croix de Chevières, Comte de, a French Senator and diplomatist, descended from an ancient Legitimist family, was born at the Château de Coucy-les-Eppes (Aisne), Sept. 12, 1838. Having at an early age entered the diplomatic service he was attached to the Legation in Lisbon, next to that in Munich, and afterwards to the Embassy in Vienna. Being an admirer of Napoleon III., the Count remained in the diplomatic service after the coup d'état, and accompanied the Comte de Moustier to Constantinople as secretary. The opportunity given him at the Turkish capital to display his talent as Chargé d'Affaires procured him the Under-Secretaryship of State on his return to Paris. On the death of Comte de Moustier, who died when Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. de St.-Vallier gave up his Under-Secretaryship and repaired to Stuttgart as Envoy (Feb. 1869). At this post he vigorously asserted French interests in the pregnant year preceding the war of 1870. Having in vain cautioned Napoleon touching Würtemberg's policy in the war, M. de Saint-Vallier, when his government would not be warned, had to leave Germany, and was forthwith despatched to the then important post in Copenhagen. Upon the restoration of peace, being conversant with the German tongue and society, he was attached as diplomatic agent to Field-Marshal von Manteuffel, the Commander of the German Army of Occupation. Having come to the conclusion that the Republican form of Government was, in the circumstances, the best for France, he became a candidate at the senatorial elections in the department of the Aisne, in concert with M. Waddington and M. Henri Martin, and was elected Jan. 30, 1876. M. de Saint-Vallier took his place among the party of the Left Centre. He was elected the first Secretary of the Senate, and held that post till the Marquis de Gontaut Biron, the Legitimist ambassador of the Republic in Berlin, was recalled (Dec. 1877), when M. de Saint-Vallier was appointed by Marshal MacMahon to be his successor, on the recommendation of M. Waddington, who had become Minister of Foreign Affairs. The appointment was most acceptable to the German Government. As second Plenipotentiary of France he rendered valuable assistance to M. Waddington at the Congress of Berlin (1878). He was succeeded at the Court of Berlin by M. de Courcel.

SALA, George Augustus Henry, journalist and author, is the son of an Italian gentleman who married a favourite English singer of West Indian extraction. He was born in London in 1828, was brought up with a view to following art as a profession, but quitted it for literature, and became a constant contributor to Household Words. He was an extensive and regular contributor to the Welcome Guest, the founder and first editor of the Temple Bar Magazine, for which he wrote the stories of "The Seven Sons of Mammon," and "Captain Dangerous," afterwards republished as separate works; wrote for several years in the Illustrated London News, the Hogarth papers in the Cornhill Magazine, and a story entitled "Quite Alone," for

All the Year Round, which appeared in a separate form, in Nov. 1864. He still writes "Echoes of the Week" in the Illustrated London News. He went as special correspondent for the Daily Telegraph to the United States, in 1863, and on his return, at the close of 1864, published the result of his observations under the title of "America in the Midst of War." He wrote, in 1864, a series of graphic letters for the Daily Telegraph, from Algeria, during the Emperor's visit to that colony, and re-visited Algeria and Morocco in 1875. In 1870 Mr. Sala was at Metz and in Eastern France as war correspondent for the Daily Telegraph. After witnessing the fall of the Empire in Paris on Sept. 4, he went to Rome to record the entry of the Italian army into the Eternal City. In Jan. 1875, he again visited Spain on the occasion of the entry of Alfonso XII.; on his return in April he was despatched to Venice to describe the fêtes consequent on the interview of the Emperor Francis Joseph and King Victor Emmanuel, and he afterwards published his impressions under the title of "Two Kings and a Kaiser." In Dec. 1876, he again visited Russia as special correspondent for the Daily Telegraph; and travelling from St. Petersburg to Moscow, proceeded thence to Warsaw, and subsequently traversed the length of the Empire to observe the mobilisation then in progress of the Russian army; ultimately reaching Odessa and Constantinople by the Black Sea, in time for the opening of the Conference on the Eastern Question. His best-known works in addition to those already mentioned, are "How I Tamed Mrs. Cruiser," published in 1858; "Twice Round the Clock," and "Journey due North: a Residence in Russia," in 1859; "The Baddington Peerage," "Looking at Life," and "Make your Game, a Narrative of the Rhine," in 1860; "Dutch Pictures, with some Sketches in the Flemish Manner," in 1861; "Accepted Addresses," "Ship Chandler, and other Tales," and "Two Prima Donnas and the Dumb Poor Porter," in 1862; "Breakfast in Bed," and "Strange Adventures of Captain Dangerous," in 1863; "After Breakfast: or, Pictures done with a Quill," and "Quite Alone," in 1864; "Trip to Barbary by a Roundabout Route," in 1865; "From Waterloo to the Peninsula," in 1866; "Notes and Sketches of the Paris Exhibition," in 1868; "Rome and Venice," and "Wat Tyler M.P.," a burlesque, in 1869; "Under The Sun: Essays mainly written in Hot Countries," in 1872; "Paris Herself Again;" and

"America Revisited," in 1882; "A Journey Due South," 1885; a description of a visit to Australia in that year was published in the Daily Telegraph, under the title of "The Land of the Golden Fleece."

SALAMAN, Charles Kensington, composer and professor of music, born in London, March 3, 1814, was educated by private tuition. He began the study of music at a very early age under Charles Neate and Dr. Crotch; made his first appearance as a composer and pianist in 1828, and entered the musical profession in 1831. Mr. Salaman has acquired considerable reputation as a pianist in England, Germany, and Italy, and was elected an honorary member of the Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome in 1846. His first series of songs, in which is included Shelley's celebrated serenade, "I arise from dreams of thee," was composed in 1836, and published in 1838. He has since contributed largely to the repertory of English, Italian, French, and German vocal music, and to chamber pianoforte music. Besides about 100 musical settings of poems by the most eminent lyric poets of this country, Mr. Salaman has been the first composer to wed music to the odes of Horace, Catullus, and Anacreon in the original texts. He has also composed anthems for the English Church service, and nearly 100 numbers of sacred part music, in the Hebrew language, for the service of the Synagogue. His orchestral compositions have been few, the most recent being the "Grand Funeral March in memory of Victor Hugo," first performed at the Albert Hall. Mr. Salaman was one of the founders of the Musical Society of London, and was for nearly ten years its honorary Secretary. He was also one of the founders, in 1874, of the Musical Association for the "investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art and science of music," and he performed the duties of honorary secretary until the end of 1877, when he retired as a Vice-President of the Association. Mr. Salaman, although he has retired from public life, is yet engaged in his profession as composer, musical critic, and writer on musical subjects; and in 1882 he published an important volume entitled "Jews as they are," which deals with the modern Jews from a social, political, and religious point of view, and seeks to vindicate the Jewish character from reproach and prejudice.

SALISBURY, Bishop of. See WORDSWORTH, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN.

SALISBURY, (Marquis of), The Right Hon. Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoigne Cecil, K.G., eldest surviving son of the second Marquis of Salisbury, by his first wife, the daughter and heir of Bamber Gascoigne, Esq., born at Hatfield in 1830, was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated, and was elected a Fellow of All Souls' College (1853). In 1853 he was elected M.P. for Stamford, and he represented that borough in the Conservative interest until his succession to the marquise on the death of his father, April 12, 1868. While in the Lower House he was known as Lord Robert Cecil, until the decease of his elder brother, on June 14, 1865, when he assumed the courtesy title of Viscount Cranborne. His lordship took an active part in all public measures which affected the interests of the Established Church, and in the chief political questions of the day, and he was a frequent contributor to the Quarterly Review and to other periodicals. In Lord Derby's third administration he was, in July, 1866, appointed Secretary of State for India, which post he resigned on account of a difference in opinion respecting the Reform Bill, March 2, 1867, when two other Cabinet ministers, viz., General Peel, War Secretary, and Lord Carnarvon, Colonial Secretary, also gave in their resignations. On Nov. 12, 1869, he was elected Chancellor of the University of Oxford, in succession to the late Earl of Derby. In 1871-72 he and Lord Cairns, as arbitrators, conducted a long investigation into the complicated affairs of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company. His lordship was again appointed Secretary of State for India when Mr. Disraeli returned to office in Feb. 1874. When at the close of the War between Turkey and Serbia, differences arose between the former Power and Russia, the Marquis of Salisbury was sent as Special Ambassador to the Sublime Porte, and he and Sir Henry Elliot acted as joint Minister Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain at the Conference of Constantinople. His lordship left England, Nov. 20, 1876, and en route, visited Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and Rome. The progress towards agreement made at the preliminary meetings held at the Russian Embassy in Constantinople were so satisfactory that the formal Conference, at which the joint proposals of the Powers were pressed upon the Porte, was opened on Dec. 23. At the same time the new Constitution of the Ottoman Empire was formally promulgated by its author, Midhat Pasha. The Marquis of Salisbury really took the place of leader at the Conference, which held altogether seven plenary meetings. On Sunday Jan. 14, 1877, he had an audience of the Sultan, at which Sir Arnold Kemball acted as interpreter, and pressed upon his Majesty the two points on which the two Powers intended to insist, informing him that if they were not accepted the Ambassadors would immediately leave Constantinople. These two proposals were, that there should be a mixed Turkish and International Commission of Supervision, and that the first appointment of the Governors should be ratified by the Powers. On Jan. 18, a special meeting of the Ottoman Grand Council was held, and about 140 Mussulmans, and about sixty leading Christians were present. The proceedings lasted two hours, and were opened by Midhat Pasha. With one dissentient voice the Council were unanimous in insisting on the rejection of the proposals of the Powers. The Conference held its last sitting on Jan. 20, and immediately afterwards Lord Salisbury left for England. On April 2, 1878, he was appointed Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in the room of the Earl of Derby resigned, and he at once wrote a memorable despatch, in which he clearly enunciated the policy of the Government with regard to the Eastern Question. He and the Earl of Beaconsfield soon afterwards were the representatives of Great Britain at the Congress of Berlin, and on their return to London they met with the most enthusiastic reception at Charing Cross (July 16, 1878). The Queen invested the Marquis of Salisbury with the Order of the Garter, July 30. On Aug. 3, he and the Earl of Beaconsfield received the freedom of the City of London, and were afterwards entertained at a grand banquet at the Mansion House. He went out of office with his party after the defeat they sustained at the general election of April, 1880. At a meeting of Conservative Peers held on May 9, 1881, after the death of Lord Beaconsfield, the Marquis of Salisbury was elected to lead the party in the House of Lords. Since then his career has been identified with that of the Conservative Party. He opposed but finally accepted, the Irish Land Act, of 1881; he vigorously criticised Mr. Gladstone's Egyptian policy; he carried the rejection of the County Franchise Bill in 1884; he represented the Conservatives at the memorable conference between the opposing leaders, which led to the framing of the Redistribution Bill of 1885. On June 9 of that year Mr. Gladstone was beaten on a Budget vote, and resigned, and Lord Salisbury took office as Premier. The principal events of his short tenure of power were, the annexation of Burmah, and the re-opening of the Eastern Question by the revolution in Eastern Roumelia and the Servo-Bulgarian war; England supporting Prince Alexander by her "friendly" neutrality. After the general election of Nov. 1885, Lord Salisbury was turned out on the address at the end of January. He vigorously opposed Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule policy, and after the second general election, in 1886, he became once more Prime Minister. When Lord R. Churchill's resignation led to the reconstruction of the Cabinet, Lord Salisbury took the Foreign Office, in the place of Lord Idlesleigh, resigned. The Marquis of Salisbury is a member of the Council of King's College, London, Deputy-Lieutenant of Middlesex, and hon. col. of the Herts Militia. For many years he was Chairman of the Middlesex Sessions. Lord Salisbury's tenure of office during the Jubilee year of the Queen's reign will be memorable in his lordship's family for the honour which Her Majesty paid him by going in person to visit him at Hatfield. In 1857, he married Georgiana Caroline, daughter of Sir Edward Hall Alderson, Baron of the Exchequer, and niece of the celebrated Mrs. Opie. His eldest son is Viscount Cranborne (born 1861), M.P. for the Darwen Division of Lancashire.

SALMON, The Rev. George, D.D. (Dublin, and Hon. Edin.), D.C.L. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Cantab), F.R.S., born in Dublin in 1819, was educated at Cork, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as Senior Moderator in Mathematics in 1839. He was successively Scholar and Fellow of his College, and was elected Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Dublin in 1866, which office he held until his appointment as Provost of the College in 1888. Besides various contributions to theological and mathematical periodicals, he is the author of treatises on "Conic Sections," on "The Higher Plane Curves," on "The Geometry of Three Dimensions," and on "The Modern Higher Algebra," which have been translated into the principal European languages, and which have been honoured by the Royal Medal of the Royal Society, and the Conyngham Medal of the Royal Irish Academy. He has published four volumes of sermons, besides many single sermons. He has also published two series of lectures delivered in the Divinity School of the University; one forming an Introduction to the New Testament, and the other treating of the Infallibility of the Church. He is a member of the Royal Irish Academy, a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, and a corresponding member of the Institute of France, and of the Royal Academies of Science at Göttingen, Berlin, and Copenhagen. He was President of the Mathematical and Physical Science Section of the British Association at the meeting held in Dublin in Aug. 1878.

SALOMONS, Sir David Lionel, Bart., M.A., A.I.C.E., M.S.T.E., is the son of the late Mr. Philip Salomons, and was born on June 28, 1851, at Brighton. Having lost both his parents when he was very young, the responsibility of his guardianship was undertaken by his uncle, the late Sir David Salomons. He was first educated by private tutors, afterwards proceeding to Caius College, Cambridge, graduating in the Natural Science Tripos, the innate bent of his mind tending rather to physical science than to pure mathematics. The pursuit of scientific attainments has been almost the exclusive occupation of his life. Not content with mere theoretical knowledge, he was in the habit of frequenting workshops, working with the men, and thus gaining a thoroughly practical insight into things mechanical; his uncle, moreover, provided him with a laboratory where he could devote his attention to the subjects which interested him so deeply. When, however, he succeeded to his uncle's position, he was not neglectful of its duties and responsibilities. He worked assiduously as a county magistrate, being a Justice of the Peace for Kent, Sussex, Middlesex, Westminster and London, and he is also a Deputy-Lieutenant for Kent. In 1874, Sir David Salomons stood in the Liberal interest for Mid-Kent, but he was defeated; and at the general election of 1880, through holding the offices of sheriff and returning officer, he was precluded from seeking election. Since that period he had relinquished things political, until some months since, when he consented to contest the new Borough of St. George's-in-the-East. Sir David Salomons is a life member of the National Liberal Club; a County Councillor for Kent, representing one of the Tonbridge Divisions; and belongs to many societies, being an Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers, a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society; of the Chemical Society; of the Geological Society; of the Royal Meteorological Society; and a member of the Telegraphic Engineers and Electricians; and he makes a point of perusing the papers and Transactions of these societies, that he may be always abreast of scientific progress. He is on the Council of the Institution of Electrical Engineers; and of the Photographic Society of Great Britain. Sir David has also studied drawing and painting, the better to appreciate art and its difficulties. He has served on the Scientific Committee appointed by the Telegraphic Engineers' Society for settling Symbols, &c., and has recently brought out several new and successful inventions. He is also the author of a treatise, "On Constant Electromotive Force in an Electric Light Circuit," being a paper read before the Society of Telegraphic Engineers and Electricians on March 12, 1885; "Electric Light Installations and Management of Accumulators," 6th edit., "Photographic Notes and Formulæ," &c. Regarding the "Woman's Rights" question Sir David Salomons has adopted a distinct attitude. Like Ruskin and his "Fors Clavigera," he periodically issues from Broomhill original and instructive manifestoes, one of the most interesting being his "Address to the Ladies of England." He married, in 1882, the daughter of Baron de Stern, of Hyde Park Gate, London, by whom he has had issue three daughters and a son and heir.

SALVINI, Tommaso, an Italian tragedian, was born at Milan Jan. 1, 1830. His father was an able actor, and his mother a popular actress named Guglielmina Zocchi. When quite a boy he showed so rare a talent for acting, that his father determined to devote him to the stage. For this purpose he placed him under the tuition of the Great Gustavo Modena. Before he was thirteen years of age Salvini had already won a kind of renown in juvenile characters. At fifteen he lost both his parents, and the bereavement so preyed upon his spirits that he was obliged to abandon his career for two years, and returned once more under the tuition of Modena. When he again emerged from retirement he joined the Ristori troupe, and shared with that great actress many a triumph. In 1849, Salvini entered the army of Italian independence, and fought valiantly for the defence of his country, receiving in recognition of his services several Medals of Honour. Peace being proclaimed, he again appeared upon the stage in a company directed by Signor Cesare Dondini. He played in the Edipo of Nicolini—a tragedy written expressly for him—and achieved a great success. Next he appeared in Alfieri's "Saul," and then all Italy declared that Modena's mantle had fallen on worthy shoulders. Wherever he went he was received with enthusiasm.

He visited Paris, where he played Orasmane, Orestes, Saul, and Othello. On his return to Florence, he was hospitably entertained by the Marquis of Normanby, then English ambassador to the Court of Tuscany. In 1865 occurred the sixth centenary of Dante's birthday, and the four greatest Italian actors were invited to perform in Silvio Pellico's tragedy of "Francesca di Rimini," which is founded on an episode in the "Divina Commedia." The cast originally stood on the play-bills thus: Francesca, Signora Ristori; Lancelotto, Signor Rossi; Paulo, Signor Salvini; and Guido, Signor Majeroni. It happened, however, that Rossi, who was unaccustomed to play the part of Lancelotto, felt timid at appearing in a character so little suited to him. Hearing this, Signor Salvini, with exquisite politeness and good-nature, volunteered to take the insignificant part, relinquishing the grand rôle of Paulo to his junior in the profession. He created by the force of his genius, an impression in the minor part which is still vivid in the minds of all who witnessed the performance. The government of Florence, grateful for his urbanity, presented him with a statuette of Dante, and King Victor Emmanuel rewarded him with the title of Knight of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. Later he received from the same monarch a diamond ring, with the rank of officer in the Order of the Crown of Italy. In 1868 Signor Salvini visited Madrid, where his acting of the death of Conrad in "La Morte Civile" produced such an impression that the easily excited Madrilese rushed upon the stage to ascertain whether the death was actual or fictitious. The queen, Isabella II., conferred upon the great actor many marks of favour, as did also, shortly afterwards, King Luis of Portugal, who frequently entertained him at the royal palace of Lisbon. Signor Salvini visited America, in 1874, and England in 1875, having immense success, especially in the character of Othello. He made his first appearance in Brussels, as Othello, Dec. 25, 1877. He gave a series of performances in the United States in 1881, and revisited England in 1884.

SAMBOURNE, Edward Linley, one of the most original and inventive caricaturists and humorous artists of the day, was born Jan. 4, 1845, and was educated at the City of London School, and the College, Chester. He was intended for the engineering profession, and was placed at John Penn & Son's Works, Greenwich, 1861-1867, but in 1867 he was introduced to Mark Lemon, and published his first drawing in Punch, April 27, 1867. Since then he has devoted himself to the art of illustration. His principal works are the illustrations to "New History of Sandford and Merton," by F. C. Burnand, 1872; "Military Men I Have Met," by Captain Dyne Finton, 1872; "Our Autumn Holiday on French Rivers," by L. J. Molloy, 1874; "Our Holiday in the Scottish Highlands," by Arthur à Beckett, 1876; "Modern Venice," 1877; "The Water Babies," by Charles Kingsley, 1885, "Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales," 1887. He designed the Diploma for the Great International Fisheries Exhibition, 1883, which was exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1885. It is, however, by his innumerable drawings for Punch that he is best known.

SAMUEL, Sir Saul, K.C.M.G., C.B., born Nov. 2, 1820, is the son of the late Sampson Samuel, Esq., of London. He sailed for New South Wales in 1832; and, after completing his education at the Sydney College, he became extensively engaged in Squatting, commercial, mining and manufacturing pursuits, and is recognised as the pioneer of several industries which have since developed into importance. His public career commenced in 1854, two years before responsible government was inaugurated in New South Wales; he was then elected a member of the Legislative Council. Soon after the promulgation of the new Constitution in 1856, he was elected a Member of the Legislative Assembly; and, in 1859, first accepted office in the Forster Administration, as Colonial Treasurer. He held the same portfolio in the Cowper Government of 1865, the Robertson Ministry in 1868, and the Cowper Administration of 1869. He has also acted as Postmaster-General in several Governments, and successfully conducted negotiations with the United States Government for a Postal Convention with New South Wales, which resulted in the establishment of the San Francisco Mail Service with Australia. After holding high office under every Governor of the Colony (except Lord Carrington) since the inauguration of responsible Government, he in 1880 resigned the Postmaster-Generalship in the Parkes' Administration and was appointed Agent-General for the Colony in London, a position which he continues to fill. In that capacity he has conducted diplomatic and financial business of the highest importance with uniform success, and to the great satisfaction of successive Governments. He was created C.M.G. in 1874; K.C.M.G. in 1882; and C.B. (Civil) in 1886. He has been twice married (1st) in 1857, to Henrietta Matilda, daughter of Benjamin Goldsmid Levien, Esq., of Geelong, Victoria; and (2ndly) in 1877, to Sara Louise, daughter of E. Isaacs, Esq., of Auckland, New Zealand.

SAMUELSON, James, is the eighth son of the late Samuel H. Samuelson, merchant, of Liverpool and Hull. He was born in the latter place in 1829, was educated in Liverpool by the Rev. John Brunner (father of Mr. Brunner, M.P.), and studied Zoology under Dr. Zaddach at Königsberg University. In 1867 he passed the General Examination of the Inns of Court, and was called to the Bar of the Middle Temple in 1870, but never practised. Mr. Samuelson has all his life been connected with manufacturing industries, and he is now the chief proprietor in a limited company at Birkenhead, managed by his two sons, for crushing Palm Kernels and Cocoa nuts. His leisure has been employed in literary and social work, the latter including the foundation of the Liverpool Science and Art Classes, of which he is President. He has frequently acted as an intermediary in the settlement of trade disputes, and notably in conjunction with the Earl of Derby and the late Mr. R. Lowndes, as arbitrator in the great Dock Strike of 1879. Mr. Samuelson's earlier works were chiefly of a popular scientific character. In 1860 he published two works called "Humble Creatures," dealing with the microscopic anatomy of certain insects. In 1862 he founded, and for a short time edited the Popular Science Review, and in 1864, the Quarterly Journal of Science. This review he edited for eight years, with the assistance of Mr. W. Crookes, F.R.S., Sir W. Fairbairn, Bart. F.R.S., and other leading scientists. Amongst his works on Social Science are "The German Working Man," 1869; and the "History of Drink," 1879. He has travelled over a great part of the civilized world, east and west; and has published monographs of some of the countries visited, as "Roumania, Past and Present," 1882; the only work of the kind in the English language, for which he received from the King the Roumanian Cross, and was made "Officer of the Crown of Roumania;" "Bulgaria, Past and Present," 1887; and "India, Past and Present," 1889. He has recently projected and is now editing for Messrs. Routledge a quarterly review called Subjects of the Day, the distinctive feature of which is that each number treats exhaustively of one current topic of interest, and is composed so as to form a text book of permanent value, to which a bibliography and index are attached.

The Magazine already reckons amongst its contributors, present or prospective, many leading experts and officials connected with the subjects to be treated. In politics Mr. Samuelson is an advanced Liberal, and he has unsuccessfully contested two constituencies. He belongs to the two Reform Clubs in Liverpool, and is an original member of the National Liberal Club.

In 1883 he sat on the Royal Commission on Hospitals for infectious diseases. He is the author of various Reports on the above and other subjects in the Reports of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council in 1860 and for several succeeding years; papers on physiological and pathological subjects read before the Royal Society, particularly an elaborate series of researches on the Electrical Properties of the Dionæa Muscipula, as well as on the electrical organs of the skate and other electrical fishes. He was President of the Biological Section of the British Association at the meeting at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1889. SANT, James, R.A., was born at Croydon, April 23, 1820, and received his first instructions in art from John Varley, one of the fathers of the British School of painting in water-colours. Later on, Sir Augustus Calcott, R.A., gave him some valuable hints and instruction in oil painting. It was not however till 1842 that he devoted himself to painting as a profession by becoming a student of the Royal Academy where he studied for four years. Shortly after leaving, he began to exhibit those "subject pictures," or "fancy subjects," of single figures generally, and these frequently children, by which pictures he is probably most widely known, many of them having been engraved. Of these we may select as typical examples the "Infant Samuel," the "Infant Timothy," "Little Red Riding Hood," and "Dick Whittington." Among Mr. Sant's numerous other works of this description are the "Light of the Cross," "Mother's Hope," "Morning," and "Evening," "She Never Told her Love," "Harmony," "Young Minstrel," "Retrospection," "Saxon Women," "The Boy Shakespere," "The Walk to Emmaus," "The Miller's Daughter," and "Young Steele." After some years, however, Mr. Sant began to paint portraits, and his pretty pictures of ladies and children became, and for some time continued to be, the fashion. The largest collection of Mr. Sant's works was at Strawberry Hill. For Countess Waldegrave the artist painted no fewer than 22 members of her distinguished circle, including the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marchioness of Westminster when Lady Constance Grosvenor, the Countess of Shaftesbury, the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, the Duchess of Wellington when Marchioness of Douro, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, Lord Lyndhurst, the Marchioness of Clanricarde, M. Van der Weyer, the Belgian Minister, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, Countess Morley, Earl Grey, Bishop Wilberforce, and Countess Waldegrave herself. This Strawberry Hill gallery of pictures was exhibited at the French Gallery, Pall Mall, in 1861. He was elected A.R.A. in 1861; R.A. in 1870; and in Jan. 1871. was appointed Principal Painter in Ordinary to the Queen in succession to the late Sir George Hayter, and was commissioned to paint a large picture of Her Majesty and her Royal grandchildren, the eldest three children of the Prince of Wales, and a State portrait of the Queen for the Turkish Embassy. In June, 1877, Mr. Sant was elected a corresponding member of the Royal Accademia Raffaello in Urbino. Mr. Sant married a daughter of R. M. M. Thomson, staff-surgeon, Bengal Presidency.

SANTLEY, Charles, baritone singer, was born at Liverpool in 1834, and after receiving a good musical and general education in his own country, proceeded to Italy to complete his professional training. He made his first appearance as an operatic singer in this country at Covent Garden, during the Pyne-Harrison management, and achieved his first great success in the part of Rhineberg, in Vincent Wallace's opera of "Lurline," in March, 1860. He created so favourable an impression in this character that he took rank as one of the most effective baritones of the day. His career, especially since he attached himself exclusively to the Italian operatic stage, where he has distinguished himself in most of the great capitals of Europe, has been very successful. His voice is as remarkable for its quality as for the extent of its register, in the upper part of which it partakes of a pure tenore robusto, while in the lower portion it displays the rich qualities of the basso profondo. In Gounod's opera of "Faust," Mr. Santley performed in the same season the parts of Valentin and Mephistopheles. Mr. Santley married, first, Gertrude Kemble, a grand-daughter of Charles Kemble; she had appeared in public as a soprano singer, but gave up her professional career after her marriage. One of his daughters has inherited her father's gifts, and has adopted his profession. Mr. Santley married, as his second wife, Miss Rose Innes, a South American lady.

SARASATE, Pablo Martin Meliton, Spanish violinist, was born at Pampeluna, March 10, 1844. He entered the Paris Conservatoire in Jan., 1856, became the favourite pupil of Alard, and gained the first prizes for solfeggio and violin. He then entered Reber's harmony-class and secured a premier accessit in 1859, but afterwards relinquished the study of composition for the career of a concert player. His performances were highly successful. He has played in nearly all the great towns between Napoli and Norway, and Portugal and Moscow, and has visited America, North and South. His first appearance in London was at the Philharmonic Concert on May 18, 1874. He again appeared at the Musical Union of June 9 of the same year. In 1877 he played at the Crystal Palace on Oct. 13; on March 28, 1878, at the Philharmonic; in 1885 he gave several violin recitals in London, with very remarkable success, and in 1886 a series of equally successful concerts.

SARCEY, Francisque, French writer, was born at Dourdan, Oct. 8, 1828, and educated at the Normal School. He followed the profession of school-master for some time, but then turned to literature in Paris, first writing for the Figaro and the Revue Européenne. In 1859 he accepted the post of dramatic critic to the newly founded Opinion Nationale, and in 1867 accepted a similar post on the Temps, which he has since occupied. Here he wields very great influence over the theatres and the public. He also contributes a good deal to the XIX^{me} Siècle. He has published several books, a "History of the Siege of Paris," 1870, a lively and graphic account written from a diary kept throughout the siege; "Le Nouveau Seigneur du Village," 1862; "Le Mot et la Chose," 1862; "St. Etienne Moret," 1872; "Le Piano de Jeanne," 1876; "Comédiens et Comédiennes," 1878; and "Souvenirs du Jeunet," 1880.

SARDOU, Victorien, a celebrated French dramatist, is the son of M. Léandre Sardou, a professor in Paris, and the compiler of several publications. He was born in Paris Sept. 7, 1831. At first he studied medicine, but he was obliged, in consequence of the embarrassments of his family, to give private lessons in history, philosophy, and mathematics. He also made attempts in literature, writing articles for several reviews, for the minor journals, and for the "Dictionnaire de la Conversation." His first comedy, "La Taverne des Étudiants," was brought out at the Odéon April 1, 1854, and proved a complete failure. In the year 1857 M. Sardou was in a state of abject poverty and extreme distress. He was living in a garret, and was prostrated by an attack of typhoid fever; but a neighbour, Mlle. de Brécourt, nursed him with tender care during his illness, from which he slowly recovered. He married this friend in the following year, and by her he was introduced to Mlle. Déjazet, who had just established the theatre which was named after her. M. Sardou undeterred by his former failure, now turned his attention again to dramatic composition, and quickly built up for himself a brilliant reputation. Nine years later he was in possession of a handsome fortune and a European renown, when a gloom was temporarily cast over his career by the death of his devoted wife (1867). M. Sardou's earlier pieces were performed at the Théâtre Déjazet, viz.:—"Les premières Armes de Figaro," September 27, 1859; "Monsieur Garat," April 30, 1860; and "Les Prés-Saint-Gervais," April 24, 1862. "Monsieur Garat" was one of the most prolonged successes of the little theatre, and "Les Prés-Saint-Gervais," transformed into an opera-bouffe, was afterwards brought out at the Théâtre des Variétés, and also, in an English version, at the Criterion Theatre, London. Subjoined is a list of his other works, with the dates of their first representation:—"Les Gens nerveux" (Palais Royal, Nov. 4, 1859); "Les Pattes de Mouche" (Gymnase, May 15, 1860); "Les Femmes Fortes" (Vaudeville, Dec. 31, 1860); "L'Écureuil," under the pseudonym of Carle (Vaudeville, Feb. 9, 1861); "Piccolino" (Gymnase, July 18, 1861); "Nos Intimes," one of his most brilliant successes (Vaudeville, Nov. 16, 1861); "La Papillonne" (Théâtre Français, April 11, 1862), a piece which was unfavourably received; "La Perle noire" (Gymnase, April 12, 1862); "Les Ganaches" (same theatre, Oct. 29, 1862); "Batailles d'Amour," a comic opera in three acts, written in conjunction with M. Daclin (Opéra-Comique, April 13, 1863); "Les Diables noirs" (Vaudeville, 1863), a drama in four acts, which after being interdicted by the censorship, was severely criticised by the press; "Le Degel" (Déjazet, April 12); "Don Quichotte," 1864; a fairy piece in three acts (Gymnase, June 25, 1864); "Les Pommes du Voisin" (Palais Royal, Oct. 25, 1864); "Capitaine Henriot" (Opéra-Comique, Dec. 26, 1864); "Les Vieux Garçons" (Gymnase, Jan. 21, 1865); "La Famille Benoiton" (Vaudeville, Nov. 4, 1865); "Nos bons Villageois" (Gymnase, Oct. 3, 1866); "Maison neuve" (Vaudeville, Dec. 4, 1866); "Séraphine," originally entitled "La Dévote" (Gymnase, Dec. 21, 1868); "Patrie" (Porte-Saint-Martin, March 18, 1869); "Fernande" (Gymnase, March 8, 1870); "Le Roi Carotte" (Gaité, Jan. 15, 1872); "Rabagas" (Vaudeville, Jan. 1872), a piece which was supposed to have reference to M. Gambetta; "Les Merveilleuses" (Théâtre des Variétés, 1873); "Andréa" (Gymnase, March 17, 1873); "L'Oncle Sam," a satire on American society (Vaudeville, Nov. 1873); "La Haine," a tragedy which was not successful (Gaité, Dec. 1874); "Ferréol" (Gymnase, Nov. 1875); "Dora," a comedy in five acts (Vaudeville, Jan. 1877); and "Les Bourgeois de Pontarsy" (Vaudeville, 1878); "Daniel Rochat," a five-act comedy (Théâtre Français, Feb. 15, 1880); "Odette," a play in four acts (Vaudeville, Nov. 1881); "Divorçons," a comedy in three acts, 1881; "Fédora," and "Théodora," the last two being written for Madame Sarah Bernhardt. M. Sardou has realised a princely fortune by his writings, and has built a splendid château at Marly-le-

Roy. He married, secondly, on June 17, 1872, Mdlle. Soulier, daughter of the Conservateur of the Museum of Versailles. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1863, and was elected a Member of the French Academy in June, 1877, in succession to M. Joseph Autran. His reception into the French Academy took place May 23, 1878.

SASSOON, Sir Albert Abdullah, Bart., K.C.S.I., was born at Bagdad, in 1818, and settled with his father in Bombay in 1832. He received a European education, and on the death of his father succeeded to the leadership of the great banking and mercantile firm of David Sassoon and Co., founded by his father. During his career in India, he distinguished himself by the munificence with which he promoted charitable undertakings and public works. To his persistence was mainly owing the erection of the new buildings in Bombay for the Elphinstone High School. Towards the cost of the erection Sir Albert contributed a lac of rupees on the occasion of the recovery of the Prince of Wales from his serious illness. Subsequently he added a gift of half a lac. Many other benevolent institutions have been founded by him in India, both for the benefit of his own co-religionists and for the people of the country generally. He presented the Town Hall of Bombay with a magnificent organ, and, as a memorial of the Royal visit to India in 1875, adorned its commanding site with a colossal equestrian statue of the Prince of Wales, by the late Mr. J. E. Boehm, R.A. The statue to the memory of the late Prince Consort in the Victoria and Albert Museum at Bombay also is the gift of Sir A. Sassoon. The inscription on the pedestal is in Hebrew. In 1873 the Queen conferred the honour of knighthood on Sir Albert, and in November of the same year the Corporation of London presented him with the freedom of the City. Sir Albert Sassoon is the first Anglo-Indian on whom this distinction has been bestowed. In 1867 he had been appointed Companion of the Star of India, and a year later he became a member of the Bombay Legislative Council, continuing his membership till 1872. Since his residence in London Sir Albert has been a prominent personage in society, and has taken a deep interest in the affairs of the Anglo-Jewish community. He is a Vice-President of the Anglo-Jewish Association. He distinguished himself by the magnificence of the entertainment he offered the Shah of Persia on the occasion of His Majesty's visit to this country.

SAUNDERS, Sir Edwin, Kt., F.R.C.S., F.G.S., son of Mr. Saunders, publisher and author, of the firm of Saunders and Ottley, was born in London, March 12, 1814, and has become distinguished as a dental surgeon. From 1837 to 1854 he was Surgeon-Dentist and Lecturer on the Anatomy and Diseases of the Teeth at St. Thomas's Hospital, and has been Surgeon-Dentist to the Queen since 1848. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, has been twice President of the Odontological Society, was President of the Met. B. of the British Medical Association, and President of Section XII. of the International Medical Congress of 1881, and is the author of "Advice on the Care of the Teeth," and "Teeth the Test of Age, considered with reference to the Factory Act." Sir Edwin Saunders received the honour of knighthood in 1883.

SAVAGE, George Henry, M.D., was born at Brighton, Nov. 12, 1843, and is the second son of William Dawson Savage, J.P., of Brighton. He was educated at private schools at Brighton, then attended classes at Brighton College, and was pupil at the Sussex County Hospital, under Drs. Ormerod, Moon, Blaker, Lowdell and others. He entered at Guy's, after matriculating at the London University, and took his degree at that University, obtaining a Gold Medal for organic chemistry and materia medica; being bracketed with scholar in medicine at the final M.B., obtaining honours in obstetric medicine. He received the treasurer's Gold Medal at Guy's, for clinical medicine, and held all the appointments open to students at Guy's Hospital, including the House Surgeonship. On leaving Madrid he presented the National Gallery with a remarkable picture by Velasquez. In 1860 he was appointed Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople, but the close of the same year saw him back in St. Petersburg, where he was Chargé d'Affaires in 1862, 1864, and again in 1865. In 1866 he was elected an Associate of the Imperial Russian Academy of Fine Arts, and in the same year he was promoted to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Saxony. He was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of Italy in Sept., 1883. SAXONY, King of. See ALBERT.

SAY, Jean Baptiste Léon, a French statesman, born in Paris, June 6, 1826, is the son of Horace Emile Say, and grandson of Jean Baptiste Say, the celebrated political economist. Following the traditions of his family, he devoted himself to the study of political economy, and for many years he was contributor to the Journal des Débats, of which he continues to be the principal proprietor. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the Corps Législatif in 1869, but in Feb. 1871 he was returned to the National Assembly as one of the representatives of two departments, Seine and Seine et Oise; he took his seat for the Seine. In June the same year he became Prefect of that department. In Oct. 1871, he came to London accompanied by M. Vautrain, the President of the Municipal Council of Paris, and presented to the Court of Aldermen at the Guildhall a bronze medal of the Hôtel de Ville, and the large Gold Medal which was struck in commemoration of the revictualling of Paris by voluntary subscriptions collected in this country. At the same time he, on behalf of M. Thiers, presented the Lord Mayor with the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. He and M. Vautrain were entertained at a public banquet in the Mansion House (Oct. 18). On Dec. 7, 1872, he was made Minister of Finance by M. Thiers, on whose downfall he naturally left office (May 24, 1873). He again accepted the portfolio of Finance in M. Buffet's administration, in March, 1875. Soon afterwards he was elected a Senator for the department of the Seine-et-Oise; his term of office expiring in 1882, he was re-elected. He retained his portfolio in the Dufaure cabinet of the 10th of May, 1876, and in the Jules Simon cabinet of the 13th of Dec. following, but he retired with the latter, May 17, 1877. When a new ministry was formed under the presidency of M. Dufaure in Dec. 1877, M. Léon Say again became Minister of Finance. He presided over the International Monetary Conference held at the Foreign Office, Paris, in Aug. 1878. He retained the position of Minister of Finance in the first cabinet formed by President Grévy. He retired from the Administration, Dec. 17, 1879, with the head of the cabinet, M. Waddington, and resumed his place among the members of the Left Centre. In April, 1880, he was appointed Ambassador in London, with a view to his conducting the negotiations for a Treaty of Commerce, and he met with a cordial reception, but he returned to Paris in the course of a few weeks, in consequence of his having been elected President of the Senate, May 25, 1880, in place of M. Martel, who had resigned on account of ill-health. In 1889 he resigned his seat as a Senator, and was elected as Député de Pau, Basses Pyrénées. He was re-elected President of the Senate, Jan. 20, 1881, and he became Minister of Finance in the De Freycinet cabinet, formed Jan. 30, 1882. M. Léon Say, who is a great authority on financial and economical questions, has written "Théorie des Changes Étrangers," translated from the English, and preceded by an introduction; "Les finances de la France, une année de discussion," 1882; "Le socialisme d'État," 1884; "Les solutions démocratiques de la question des impôts," 1886; "Turgot," 1887. His political speeches have been re-edited, especially "Discours prononcés pendant les sessions de 1876—question monétaire." He published as editor, conjointly with MM. Fayal and Lanjalley, "Le Dictionnaire des Finances," 1889; and, conjointly with M. J. Chailley, "Le Dictionnaire d'Économie politique." He has contributed to the Annuaire de l'Économie Politique and the Journal des Économistes. In Dec. 1874, the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences elected M. Léon Say to the seat left vacant by the death of M. Dubois as "membre libre," and in 1880 as "membre titulaire," as successor to M. Michel Chevalier. He was elected a member of the French Academy in 1886, as successor to M. Edmond About.

SCHARF, George, C.B., F.S.A., is the son of a Bavarian artist of the same name who had settled in London in 1816, and died there Nov. 1860. He was born Dec. 16, 1820; and was educated at London University school, and having gained Medals at the Society of Arts, was admitted a student of the Royal Academy in 1838. His first published work was a series of etchings, entitled "Scenic Effects" illustrating the Shakespearian and Classical revivals by Macready, at Covent Garden Theatre in 1838-9. He travelled in Italy in 1840, and accompanied Sir C. Fellows in a journey through Lycia and other parts of Asia Minor, whither he proceeded again in 1843, as draughtsman to a Government expedition. A large collection of his drawings, both of Lycian views and outlines of sculpture, is deposited in the British Museum. His time has been chiefly devoted to illustrating books; among which may be mentioned Fellows's "Lycia," Murray's "Illustrated Prayer-Book," Macaulay's "Lays of Ancient Rome," 1847; Milman's "Horace," 1849; Kugler's "Handbook of Italian and German Painting," 1851, 2nd edit., 1855; "Layard's works on Nineveh," Dr. Smith's "Classical Dictionaries," Keats's "Poems," Pollock's "Dante," and Bray's "Life of Spotswood." He was elected F.S.A. in 1852, and Corresponding Member of the Archæological Institute of Rome in 1858. He delivered a course of lectures on Italian art at the Royal Institution, and was appointed Art Secretary at the Manchester Exhibition of 1857, and in the same year Secretary and Keeper of the National Portrait Gallery. He has written "History of the Characteristics of Greek Art," prefixed to Wordsworth's "Greece;" "Descriptions of the Greek, Roman, and Pompeian Courts at the Crystal Palace;" "Artistic and Descriptive Notes on Remarkable Pictures in the British Institution Exhibition of Ancient Masters," published in 1858; a "Catalogue of Pictures and Works of Art in Blenheim Palace," in 1860; and a "Catalogue Raisonné of the Pictures belonging to the Society of Antiquaries of London," reprinted from the Fine Arts Quarterly Review, in 1865. In 1866 he delivered a course of lectures at the Royal Institution, upon portraits, illustrated by numerous sketches taken by himself from the original pictures; a second series was given in March, 1868. He is also the author of an account of the celebrated portrait of Richard II., preserved in Westminster Abbey, printed in the Fine Arts Quarterly Review, 1867; and of an historical account of the pictures belonging to the Crown, recording their vicissitudes from the reign of Henry VIII., to the present century, and published in the volume of the Archæological Institute, entitled "Old London," 1867; together with essays on various ancient portraits. In 1882, after a service of twenty-five years, as Secretary, he was constituted Director of the National Portrait Gallery. In 1882 his services were rewarded by a Companionship of the Order of the Bath. He took an active part in selecting authentic portraits for the Stuart and Tudor Exhibitions held in London in 1889-90.

SCHARLIEB, Mrs., physician. She obtained the M.B. and B.Sc. degrees at the London University in 1882; and in Dec. 1889 passed its M.D. examination, being the first lady who had attained that distinction.

SCHILLING, Johann, a German sculptor, was born at Mittweida, in Saxony, June 23, 1828. After studying with Rietschel and Hänel he made his début as a sculptor in 1851 with a beautiful group—"Amor and Psyche." Working then in Berlin with Drake—the artist of the Victory Column—he produced a pair of relief medallions—"Jupiter and Venus," which procured him a travelling scholarship; and the result of the two years' residence in Italy which he was thus enabled to spend, were his "Wounded Achilles" and his "Centaur and Venus." Returning to steady industry in Dresden he turned out in rapid succession a variety of high productions; and on the death of Rietschel undertook the execution of the city of Spiers' figure for the Luther monument at Worms. Equal admiration was bestowed on his "Four Seasons" on the Brühl Terrace in Dresden, his Schiller statue in Vienna, his Maximilian statue in Trieste, and his War Memorial at Hamburg, not to mention other creations, which were all surpassed and crowned by the Grand National Monument, on the edge of the Niederwald, overlooking the Rhine. This was unveiled by the Emperor William, Sept. 28, 1883.

SCHNADHORST, Francis, was born at Birmingham 1840, and educated at King Edward VIth's Grammar School of that town. In 1873 he was invited by the leading liberals of Birmingham to reorganize the party in the city. He became secretary of the Liberal association and speedily made for it a considerable reputation through the country. His services were recognized by the presentation of a purse of a thousand guineas and an address in the Birmingham Town Hall on April 9, 1877, the presentation being made by Mr. J. Chamberlain, M.P. Under Mr. Schnadhorst's organization liberal associations upon the lines of the Birmingham organization were established in most of the English constituencies; and in 1887 these associations were banded together in the National Liberal Federation, of which body Mr. Schnadhorst became secretary. The inaugural meetings of the new national organization were attended by Mr. Gladstone. In 1884 Mr. Schnadhorst resigned the secretaryship of the Birmingham Association, and was made its Chairman of Committee. In the following year he was appointed President, but resigned that post on leaving Birmingham to take up his residence in London, to which place the headquarters of the National Liberal Federation were removed after the split in the Liberal party upon the Irish question. On March 9, 1887, Mr. Schnadhorst was entertained at a Banquet at the Hotel Métropole, and was there presented with a national testimonial of ten thousand guineas and an illuminated address. Lord Burton presided at the banquet, and Sir Wm. Harcourt was the chief speaker. A letter was read from Mr. Gladstone expressing his sense of the services which Mr. Schnadhorst had rendered to the party. On coming to London Mr. Schnadhorst accepted the post of honorary secretary to the Liberal Central Association, which office he still retains. Ill health has compelled Mr. Schnadhorst during recent years to pay lengthened visits to Australia, Egypt, and, during the past year (1890) to South Africa, from which place he returned in May last. On reaching England he was entertained at a banquet by the Liberals of Plymouth and the western counties (May 27, 1890). Mr. Schnadhorst has been frequently invited to enter Parliament, but has hitherto declined all requests. It is, however, thought that there is some probability of his entering the House of Commons at the next general election.

SCHNEIDER, Hortense Catherine, a French actress, born at Bordeaux about 1835, displayed while very young an aptitude for the stage, and at the age of fifteen played with applause in "Michel et Christine" at the Athénée of her native city. An old teacher named Schaffner gave her lessons in singing, and she subsequently spent three years at Agen, playing secondary parts. Going to Paris, she obtained an engagement in the company of the Bouffes-Parisiens, and on Sept. 19, 1853, made her début in "Le Chien de Garde" at the Théâtre des Variétés. Here she met with considerable success, which was increased by her performances at the Théâtre du Palais Royal, where she made her first appearance Aug. 5, 1858. In Dec. 1864, Mdle. Schneider returned to the Variétés and elicited great applause by her acting in "La Belle Hélène." She achieved a success even more signal in "La Grande Duchesse de Gérolstein" during the Universal Exposition of 1867, and appeared in the same part in London in July, 1868. In the following year she returned to the Bouffes-Parisiens. On her marriage, in 1881, she retired from the stage.

SCHNITZLER, Edward (Emin Pacha), was born in Oppeln, in Silesia, in March 1840, and is the son of the late Ludwig Schnitzler, a merchant there. At the age of five, on the death of his father, the family removed to Neisse, near Prague, and there he received his earliest education. Subsequently he studied in the medical schools of Breslau and of Berlin, where he qualified as a surgeon. In early life he took great delight in the study of natural history, and made collections of plants, etc., in the Altvater mountains. He left Neisse for Constantinople in 1864, and formed one of an expedition sent out to Arabia; and afterwards, in the train of Ismail Hakki Pacha, he visited Erzeroum, and other places, being absent nine years. In 1876 he went to Egypt, and offered his services to General Gordon, then Governor-General of the Equatorial province of the Soudan, and the two became fast friends. Emin, "the faithful one" (for he had changed his name to one more Turkish in character when on the staff of Ismail Hakki Pacha), was a linguist, possessing a rare knowledge of Arabic; and he was appointed chief medical officer of the province, with the rank of Effendi, and visited and relieved the sick poor with the greatest self abnegation and devotion. In 1878 Emin was made a Bey, and appointed Governor of the Equatorial province. From 1878 to 1883 he had a score of stations, and a post fortnightly between them and Lado. He added the cultivation of cotton, indigo, coffee, and rice, and instituted such improvements that he changed a deficit of £32,000 into a profit of £8,000 per annum. Emin's spirit was expressed in the words:—"The work that Gordon paid for with his blood I will strive to carry on, if not with his energy and genius, still according to his intentions." In the year 1881 alone, Emin was instrumental in liberating nearly 700 slaves. "He redressed wrong, encouraged agriculture, and protected the whole people from slave-raiders. For his humane influence he was enthusiastically loved, and by it he acquired a deep hold upon the affection and trust of thousands and tens of thousands in the dark regions." But the tide of insurrection in the Soudan swept southwards and Emin was imprisoned in his own Province till rescued by Stanley in 1889.

SCHOFIELD, General John McAllister, was born in Chautaugua county, New York, Sept. 29, 1831. He graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1853, and served two years in Florida as Lieutenant of the 1st Artillery. From 1855 to 1860 he served at West Point as Assistant Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, and from 1860 to 1861 was Professor of Physics at Washington University, St. Louis. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil War he was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and in Nov., 1862, Major-General of Volunteers, commanding in Missouri and Kansas, with headquarters at St. Louis. In Feb., 1864, he took command of the Army of the Ohio, and joining the combined armies under General Sherman, bore a prominent part in all their operations to the close of the war. He was appointed Brigadier-General in the regular army in 1864 and Major-General in 1869. In 1867 he was placed in command of the First Military District consisting of the State of Virginia. In 1868 he was appointed Secretary of War, but resigned in 1869, and was given the command of the Department of the Missouri, and in 1870 of the Division of the Pacific. From 1876 to 1881 he was Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point. In 1882 he was again given the command of the Division of the Pacific; from which, in 1883, he was transferred to the command of the Division of the Missouri, with headquarters at Chicago; and, in 1886, to the Division of the Atlantic, with head-quarters at Governor's Island, New York City. Since the death of General Sheridan, in August, 1888, he has been in the command of the Army with head-quarters at Washington.

SCHOTT, Wilhelm, philologist and ethnologist, was born at Mayence, in Sept. 1809, and graduated as Doctor of Philosophy at Halle, in 1827, since which time he has devoted himself to the study of the European and Asiatic languages. His first work, "An Essay on the Tartar Languages" ("Versuch über die Tatarischen Sprachen"), appeared in 1836. In 1840 he was nominated a Professor in the High School of Berlin, and in 1842 a Fellow in ordinary of the Imperial Academy of Sciences of Berlin. The same year he published "De Lingua Tschuwaschorum," in which he demonstrated the Turkish character of this idiom. In 1849 followed his work, "Concerning the Altaic or Finnish-Tatar group of Languages;" in 1854, "The Numeral in the Tschudic Class of Languages;" and after this a yet unconcluded series of treatises entitled "Altaic Studies," 1860-72. Dr. Schott, who is Professor-Extraordinary in the University of Berlin, has also written largely on the Chinese language and literature, and on the Ugro-Finnish class of languages.

SCHREINER, Olive, a South-African authoress of great promise, of whom the editor hopes to have more to report in the next edition. She is the daughter of a Lutheran clergyman in Cape Town, is the authoress of "The Story of an African Farm," and is an advocate of the omnipotence of lovingkindness as an influence for good.

SCHUMANN, Madame Clara (née Wieck), was born Sept. 13, 1819, at Leipzig, and very early displayed remarkable musical gifts. She was taught entirely by her father, Friedrich Wieck, and began to play in public at ten years of age. At twelve she appeared at one of the famous "Gewandhaus" Concerts at Leipzig, and from that time travelled over Europe, creating a great sensation in Vienna, Berlin, and Paris. In 1837 she became engaged to the great composer Robert Schumann, and was married to him in 1840. Under his influence her pianoforte playing became even more effective, and passing on from Beethoven, to whose works she at first almost entirely confined herself, she studied Chopin and composers of the more recent schools. On the death of her husband, in 1856, she removed with her children to Berlin, and has since resided at Wiesbaden and Frankfurt-on-Main. Madame Schumann, besides teaching at the Conservatoire of Frankfurt, has frequently played in most of the chief cities of Europe, the works of her husband being generally the favourites in her repertoire. On the 50th anniversary of her first appearance at the Leipzig Gewandhaus she played there again, and had a magnificent reception. In 1886 she visited London and played to crowded audiences in St. James's Hall.

SCHUNCK, Edward, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in Manchester, in 1820. On the completion of his school education, he was sent to Germany to study chemistry, as it was intended that he should take the direction of his father's large print and calico works in Manchester. At Berlin, under Rose and Magnus, he made first-rate progress, and under Liebig, at Giessen, he took the degree of Ph.D. On returning to England, Dr. Schunck engaged for some years in practical work, but finding this repugnant to his tastes and inclination, he gave it up, and devoted himself to pure science. It is in consequence, however, of his early connection with print and dye-work, that his attention was directed more especially to the chemistry of colouring matters, a knowledge of which is most essential to the proper understanding of dyeing processes. The research which Dr. Schunck conducted in Germany was "On the Action of Nitric Acid on Aloes." The chief result of this investigation was the discovery of a new and remarkable nitro acid, with curious optical properties, called "chrysammic acid." The acid crystallises in golden yellow laminae, sparingly soluble in water, and it re-acts like a strong bibasic acid. The product of the action of ammonia on the acid belongs to the class of which oxamic acid is the type, but it was discovered and described before the latter. By the action of reducing agents on "chrysammic acid," a remarkable substance resembling indigo-blue, is produced, "hydrochrysammide," which crystallises in blue needles with a coppery lustre. This body has formed the subject for many subsequent investigations. The next subject which occupied the attention of Dr. Schunck was the class of substances contained in various species of lichens. Several memoirs resulted from this investigation, notably one read to the Chemical Society, in 1842, "On some of the Substances contained in the Lichens employed for the Preparation of Archil and Cudbear." Among all the colouring matters there are none the study of whose properties and reactions is calculated to throw more light on the whole class, than those which are prepared by an artificial process from certain kinds of lichens. Dr. Schunck, in common with many other philosophers, was surprised that lichens, a class of plants, themselves colourless, should yield colouring matters by the combined action of ammonia and oxygen. Another paper on this subject appeared in 1846, being a special research "On the Substances contained in the Roccella Tinctoria," which derives its interest from the fact of its being that species of lichen from which the finest kind of archil dye is prepared. From 1846 to 1855, Dr. Schunck was at work on the subject of the colouring matters of madder, then one of the most important dye stuffs used in calico printing, but which has since been replaced by artificial alizarin. Dr. Schunck investigated the properties of "rubian" at great length, and read several memoirs on the subject to the Royal Society. In 1854, Dr. Schunck produced, among other papers, one "On the Action of the Ferment of Madder on Sugar," being one of a series of papers on various ferments. Dr. Schunck discovered a very interesting fact, unique in the history of fermentation, viz., the production of succinic acid. That important subject, the formation of Indigo-blue, next occupied Dr. Schunck; and in 1855 he read to the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester a long investigation, "On the Formation of Indigo-blue." An investigation by Dr. Schunck, "On the Occurrence of Indigo-blue in Urine," appeared in the Philosophical Magazine, in 1857, and in the following year one, "On a Yellow Colouring Matter, obtained from the leaves of the Polygonum Fagopyrum, or Common Buckwheat," was read to the Manchester Society. On the discovery of the artificial formation of alizarin, in 1867, a discovery by which the names of Græbe, Liebermann, and Perkin have been immortalised, Dr. Schunck undertook an investigation of the products formed at the same time, and discovered, partly in conjunction with Dr. Roemer, three new bodies isomeric with alizarin, viz. — Anthraflavic acid, iso-anthraflavic acid, and anthrarufin, which, singular to say, have no dyeing properties whatever. In 1868, Dr. Schunck read a paper "On some Constituents of Cotton-Fibre," to the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester. From 1868 to 1873 he was engaged on investigations of anthraflavic acid, a yellow colouring matter accompanying artificial alizarin. In 1874, a paper "On Methyl-Alizarin and Ethyl-Alizarin" appeared. During the last few years he has been engaged in the study of chlorophyll, the green colouring matter of plants. One of his most pleasing and interesting researches was commenced in 1879, and the first communication on the subject was read to the Chemical Society of London, in September of that year, entitled "On the Purple of the Ancients." This colour which in ancient times was extracted from various kinds of sea shell-fish, and applied to the dyeing of linen and woollen fabrics, has at all times excited the interest of the curious, and has been made the subject of numerous learned treatises. Dr. Schunck has been a Fellow of the Royal Society since 1850; and has taken much interest in the affairs of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, in which he has held the post of Secretary, Vice-President, and President; and was President of the Chemical Section of the British Association at its meeting in Manchester in 1887.

SCHURZ, Carl, was born at Liblar, near Cologne, Germany, March 2, 1829. He was educated at the Gymnasium of that city, and at the University of Bonn. In 1848 he became associated with Gottfried Kinkel, in editing a revolutionary journal, and subsequently he participated in the insurrectionary movement in South Germany. At the surrender of the fortress of Rastadt, he escaped into Switzerland, whence, in May, 1850, he returned secretly to Germany and rescued Kinkel, who had been sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment in the fortress of Spandau. The two escaped to Leith, Scotland. Schurz then went to Paris as a newspaper correspondent, but a year later returned to London as a teacher. In 1852 he went to the United States, remained in Philadelphia for two years, and then settled in Wisconsin, and became prominent as a political orator in the German, as well as the English language. The following year he was nominated by the Republicans for Lieutenant-Governor of the State, but was defeated. In 1861 he was appointed Minister to Spain, where he remained till Dec. 1861; returning to the United States, he resigned his office, and entered the army, and in the May following was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He took part in the second battle of Bull Run, was promoted to the rank of Major-General, and commanded a division in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. In the autumn of 1863 he went to Tennessee, and took part in several battles, but resigned in 1865. In the summer of 1865 he was sent by President Johnson on a confidential mission into the Southern States, and his elaborate report on their condition was published by Congress. In 1866 he removed to Detroit, Michigan, where he founded and edited for some time the Detroit Post. In 1868 he removed to St. Louis, and in 1869 was elected U.S. senator from Missouri. He opposed President Grant's San Domingo policy, and in several speeches advocated the return to specie payments. In the Presidential canvass of 1872 he united with that portion of the Republican party known as "Liberals," who nominated Mr. Greeley for President, in opposition to General Grant; but on the defeat of Mr. Greeley he, with most of the "Liberals," returned to the regular Republican party; and in 1876 took an active part in the canvass for Mr. Hayes, by whom he was, in 1877, appointed Secretary of the Interior. During his occupancy of that position he seconded Mr. Hayes' efforts at a reform of the civil service by instituting competitive examinations for appointments to clerkships in his department. At the expiration of his term, 1881, he removed to New York, and was the editor of the Evening Post until August, 1883. Since then he has been engaged in literary pursuits. In 1884 he took a leading part in the "Independent" movement in the presidential campaign, opposing the election of James G. Blaine and advocating that of Grover Cleveland. He published a "Life of Henry Clay," in 2 vols., in 1887. In 1888 he visited Germany and was received with distinction by Prince Bismarck, the present Emperor (then Crown Prince) and many of the prominent public men of the Empire. In the same year he wrote a public letter in favour of the re-election of President Cleveland.

SCHUSTER, Professor Arthur, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in Frankfort-on-Main, on Sept. 12, 1851, and educated in the Gymnasium of that city, until he went to Geneva in his eighteenth year, where he attended the lectures given at the academy. His parents having settled in Manchester in 1869, he joined them there in the following year and entered business in his father's firm. In Oct., 1871, however, all intentions of a commercial career were relinquished, and he pursued his studies first at the Owens College, and then at the University of Heidelberg, where Kirchhoff held the Chair of Physics. He took his degree of Ph.D. while at Heidelberg. During the session 1873-74, he held the post of Honorary Demonstrator in the Physical Laboratory of the Owens College. After having spent a few months in Helmholtz's Laboratory in Berlin, he was appointed, early in the year 1875, by the Council of the Royal Society, chief of the Eclipse expedition which was then about to leave England for Siam. In 1881 a professorship of Applied Mathematics was founded at the Owens College, and he was appointed to the chair, which he held till 1888, when he succeeded Balfour Stewart as Professor of Physics. He took part, on four different occasions, in observations of total solar eclipses. The Siamese eclipse, which has already been mentioned; the eclipse in Colorado, which took place in 1878; the 1882 eclipse in Egypt; in which he photographed for the first time, on plates prepared by Captain Abney, the spectrum of the solar corona; and finally the eclipse of 1886, in the West Indies. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879. In 1888 he accepted the Presidency of section A. of the British Association, but had to resign on account of ill health. He was appointed by the Council of the Royal Society to give the Bakerian Lecture in 1884 and 1890, on the discharge of electricity through gases. He is the author of several papers published in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the Reports of the British Association; amongst others a paper, published by the Royal Society in 1884, in which the experimental proof was first given that the apparent repulsion observed in Crookes' radiometer is due to the residual gas left in the vacuum. The Philosophical Transactions of the year 1889 contain a full discussion of the diurnal variation of terrestrial magnetism, in which it is proved that the cause of the variation is to be found in the earth's atmosphere. A number of his papers "On the present state of Spectrum Analysis," are published in the Reports of the British Association. During the last few years Professor Schuster's time has principally been given up to the investigation of the discharge of electricity through gases.

SLATER, Philip Lutley, M.A., Ph.D., F.R.S., second son of the late W. L. Slater, Esq., of Hoddington House, Hants, born in 1829, was educated at Winchester School, and at the age of 16 was elected Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1849, taking a first class in mathematics.

He was subsequently Fellow of the same College. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1855, and went the Western circuit for several years; became secretary to the Zoological Society of London in 1859, was elected F.R.S. in 1861, and was made Doctor Philosophiæ by the University of Bonn (honoris causâ) in 1860. He is editor of the Ibis, a journal of ornithology, and is author of a "Monograph of the Tanagrine Genus Calliste," "Monograph of the Tacamars and Puff-birds," "Zoological Sketches," "Catalogue of American Birds," "Guide to the Gardens of the Zoological Society of London," of three volumes of the "Catalogue of Birds in the British Museum," and of upwards of 800 papers and memoirs on ornithology and other branches of natural history in the "Transactions" and "Proceedings" of the Zoological Society, the "Journal of the Linnean Society," the "Annals of Natural History," and in the Ibis, the Natural History Review, and the Journal of Science. In 1875 Mr. Sclater was appointed Private Secretary to his brother, the Right Hon. G. Sclater-Booth, President of the Local Government Board (now Lord Basing), but resigned that office in 1877. In the same year he became one of the General Secretaries to the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and continued to act in that capacity until 1882. He is also a Member of the Council of the Royal Geographical Society.

SCLATER-BOOTH, The Right Hon. George. See BASING, LORD.

SCOTT, Benjamin, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of London, son of the late B. W. Scott, Esq., who long held the post of Chief Clerk to the Chamberlain, and who volunteered, in 1832, a report to the City Corporation on the subject of a general embankment of the river Thames, was born in 1814, and having entered the Chamberlain's office, attained the post of Chief Clerk in 1842, but resigned that and other offices in 1853. He founded the Bank of London, to which he was secretary until the death of Sir John Key, in 1858, when he was unanimously elected to the office of Chamberlain. He has taken an active part in education, having founded, in 1851, the Working Men's Educational Union. Mr. Scott has published, among other works, "A Statistical Vindication of the City of London," "Contents and Teachings of the Catacombs at Rome," "Progress of Locomotion in Great Britain." He compiled for the Corporation, in 1884, a work, "London's Roll of Fame," containing addresses and votes to distinguished persons, and their replies, between A.D. 1756 and 1884, and published by Cassell & Co. In 1890 he published "A State Iniquity, its rise, extension and overthrow," being a history of the struggle for the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts, 1866-1869. Mr. Scott is a Commissioner of Her Majesty's Lieutenancy for the City of London.

SCOTT, The Rev. Charles Brodrick, D.D., born at 3. Merrion Square South, Dublin, Jan. 18, 1825, was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1848 as Senior Classic and 22nd Wrangler. He gained the Pitt University scholarship (1847); was Senior Chancellor's Medallist; and was elected, in 1849, a Fellow of Trinity, of which College he became assistant tutor in 1852. Afterwards he graduated M.A., 1851; B.D., 1860; D.D., 1867. He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1860 and 1869. He became Head Master of Westminster School in 1855; a Prebendary of St. Paul's in 1874; and an honorary student of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1875. Dr. Scott resigned the Head-mastership of Westminster School in August, 1883, and was succeeded by Mr. W. G. Rutherford.

SCOTT, Clement William, son of the Rev. William Scott, Vicar of St. Olave, Old Jewry, London, was born Oct. 6, 1841, at Christ Church parsonage, Hoxton, London, and educated at Marlborough College, Wiltshire, under the late Dr. G. E. Cotton, Bishop of Calcutta, and Dr. Bradley, the present Dean of Westminster. He was appointed to a clerkship in the War Office in 1860, and retired on a pension in May, 1879. He then joined the editorial staff of the Daily Telegraph, to which paper he had contributed dramatic criticisms and special articles since 1873. Previous to that time, Mr. Scott was successively dramatic critic to the Sunday Times, the Weekly Dispatch, and the Observer. He is the author of "Lays of a Londoner," 1882, "Poems for Recitation," 1884, and "Lays and Lyrics," all books of lyrical and dramatic poems, principally contributed to Punch after Mr. Burnand became editor. He has also written "Round about the Islands," "Poppy Land Papers," and "Blossom Land," being collections of holiday articles contributed to the Daily Telegraph, and other papers, and has been for many years the dramatic critic on the staff of the Illustrated London News.

SCOTT, Robert Henry, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., born in Dublin, Jan. 28, 1833, was educated at Rugby, and Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as First Senior Moderator in Experimental Physics in 1855. He was appointed Lecturer in Mineralogy to the Royal Dublin Society in 1862, and Director of the Meteorological Office in 1867, a title changed to "Secretary of the Meteorological Council" in 1877. Mr. Scott is author of a "Manual of Volumetric Analysis," 1862; "Weather Charts and Storm Warnings," 1876; "Elementary Meteorology," 1883; and of various papers on geology and meteorology in the Transactions of scientific societies. Mr. Scott is responsible for the daily "Weather Forecasts," which are one of the features of the modern newspapers.

SCRIVENER, The Rev. Frederick Henry Ambrose, LL.D., D.C.L., was born Sept. 29, 1813, at Bermondsey, Surrey, and educated at St. Olave's Grammar School, Southwark, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a scholarship in 1834, and graduated B.A. in 1835, M.A. in 1838. He was appointed Assistant Master of King's School, Sherborne, in 1835; Curate of Sandford Orcas, Somerset, in 1838; was Head Master of Falmouth School, 1846-56; Incumbent of Penwerris, Falmouth, 1846-61; Rector of Gerrans from 1861 till Dec., 1875, when the Duke of Portland presented him to the vicarage of Hendon, Middlesex; he became Prebendary of Exeter in 1875. Dr. Scrivener's special study has been the criticism of the New Testament, to which nearly all his writings refer. His "Greek Testament" (8th edit., 1886), and "Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament" (3rd edit., 1883), are text-books in many schools and universities. The "Codex Bezae" is perhaps the most elaborate of his writings. His "Cambridge Paragraph Bible of the Authorised English Version; with the Text revised, and a Critical Introduction prefixed," appeared in 1873; "Six Popular Lectures on the Text of the New Testament," in 1875; and "Greek Testament with changes made in the Common Text by the New Testament Company of Revisers," 1881. He was nominated one of the Company of Revision of the Authorised Version of the New Testament in 1870. The University of St. Andrews conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1872; the University of Oxford the honorary degree of D.C.L. in 1876. A civil list pension of £100 was granted to him Jan. 3, 1872, "in recognition of his services in connection with Biblical criticism, and in aid of the publication of his works." Although his studies were seriously interrupted by a paralytic stroke in 1884, he has since published Editio Major of the Greek Testament, with additional matter in 1887, and a critical edition of S. Chad's "Latin Gospels" (now at Lichfield) 1887. He is at present engaged in arranging for publication a mass of manuscript collections, hitherto unknown, under the title of "Adversaria Sacra Critica."

SCUDDER, Horace Elisha, American writer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, Oct. 16, 1838. He graduated at Williams College in 1858, and soon after went to New York, where he taught in a school for three years. In 1862 his first book, "Seven Little People and their Friends," appeared, and met with such success that he was induced to adopt literature as his exclusive profession. Returning to Boston he edited the Riverside Magazine from 1867 to 1870, and then became associated with the publishing house of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., a connection which lasted until his succession in the past year (1890) to the editorship of the Atlantic Monthly, vacated by Mr. Aldrich. In addition to editorial work and voluminous periodical contributions, Mr. Scudder has published "Dream Children," 1863; "Life and Letters of David Coit Scudder" (his brother), 1864; "Stories from my Attic," 1869; "The Bodley Books," 8 vols., 1875-87; "The Dwellers in Five Sisters Court," 1876; "Stories and Romances," 1880; "The Children's Book," and "Boston Town," 1881; "Noah Webster," 1882; "History of the United States," 1884; "George Washington," 1886; "The Book of Folk Stories," and "Men and Letters," 1887. He was also joint-author, with Mrs. Taylor, of the "Life and Letters of Bayard Taylor," 1884; was one of the writers of Justice Winsor's "Memorial History of Boston," 1880-81; and edited the series of "American Commonwealth," and also "American Poems," 1879; and "American Prose," 1880.

SEDDON, John Pollard, son of Thomas Seddon, cabinet manufacturer, was born Sept. 19, 1827, at London House, Aldersgate Street, E.C., and educated at Bedford Grammar School. He was articled 1848-51 to Professor Donaldson, architect, and from 1852 to 1862 was in partnership with John Prichard, diocesan architect, at Llandaff. In 1862 he settled in London, where he has since practised, His principal works are the restoration of Llandaff Cathedral in connection with Mr. Prichard, and numerous churches, parsonages, and schools in Llandaff Diocese; Lambeth Palace Chapel; St. Nicholas and St. James', Great Yarmouth; St. Barnabas, near Swindon; St. James', Redruth; St. Peter's Orphanage and Sanitarium, Thanet; University College and Llanbadern Church, Aberystwith; Hoarwithy Church, Herefordshire; mansions at Abermaise, Merionethshire, Rosdohan, County Kerry, Oxted, Surrey, &c.; North and South Wales Bank, Birkenhead. He has published "Progress in Art and Architecture," 1852; in 1859 "Memoir and Letters of the late Thomas Seddon, Artist," and in 1868 "Rambles in the Rhine Provinces."

SEDGWICK, Amy. See PARKES, MRS. W. B.

SEELEY, Professor Harry Govier, F.R.S., F.R.G.S., F.L.S., F.Z.S., &c., born in London Feb. 18, 1839, is the second son of Richard Hovill Seeley, and is of Huguenot descent on his mother's side through the Goviers of the Vale of Taunton. He was educated privately; attended lectures at the Royal School of Mines by Sir A. Ramsay, Edward Forbes, and Sir R. Owen; and afterwards at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. In 1859 the late Rev. Adam Sedgwick, F.R.S., invited him to arrange the fossils in the Woodwardian Museum, and this work continued till 1871, with teaching of Field Geology and Palæontology and occasional lectures for the Professor. In 1876 he was Professor of Geography and Lecturer on Geology in King's College and Queen's College, London; of Queen's College he became the Dean in 1881. He originated in 1885, and has since conducted, the London Geological Field Class. He became a member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1861, and subsequently Fellow of the Geological, Linnean, Zoological and Royal Geographical Societies. He was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879. His original writings, about 120 in number, relate to Palæontology and other departments of geology, and to Comparative Anatomy. He has published a "Catalogue of Fossil Reptiles in the Woodwardian Museum," 1869; the "Ornithosauria," 1870; "Physical Geology and Palæontology," 1885, issued as Vol. I. of Phillips' Geology; "The Freshwater Fishes of Europe," 1886; and "Factors in Life," 1887. He has studied the Fossil Reptilia in the public museums of France, Belgium, Holland,

North and South Germany, Austria, Russia, and Cape Colony, from which country he has collected several new types of reptiles. His scientific memoirs are contained in the publications of the Geological, Linnean and Royal Societies, the Geological Magazine, and Annals of Natural History. Among the results of his researches was the discovery (1865) that the Fossil Reptiles named Pterodactyles, are more nearly related to birds than are living reptiles; this was made out by evidence from the breathing organs and brain. He regarded (1865) the succession of geological deposits of different mineral character as evidence of changed geographical outlines of ancient lands; and explained the changes in fossil life of successive deposits as results of migration of faunas consequent on geographical changes. He enunciated the mechanical law in 1866, that growth is in proportion to work done; and regarded it as explaining the different proportions of organs and of animals. In 1869 he founded the genus Ornithopsis on a vertebra in the British Museum which had previously been regarded as part of the skull of Iguanodon, indicated it as a new ordinal group of reptiles, which have since been found in the Isle of Wight and the United States. He discovered that Ichthyosaurus was viviparous, 1880, and that some Plesiosaurs were viviparous, 1887. In a Croonian lecture of the Royal Society, 1887, the Fossil Reptilia of South Africa were found to be a link between the existing Amphibia and Mammalia. Professor H. G. Seeley received from the Geological Society the Murchison Fund, 1876, and the Lyell Medal, 1885. He was made a Foreign Correspondent of the Academy of Sciences of Philadelphia in 1878; Corresponding Member Kk. Geologische Reichsanstalt, Vienna in 1879; and Member of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow in 1889.

SEELEY, Professor John Robert, M.A., was born in London in 1834, being a son of Mr. Seeley, the publisher, of Fleet Street. He was educated at the City of London School, of which he became the captain, and thence proceeded to Christ's College, Cambridge. He took his B.A. degree in 1857, when he was bracketed with three others at the head of the first class in the classical tripos, and he was also Senior Chancellor's Medallist. In July, 1858, he was elected a Fellow of his college, where he was a lecturer for about two years and a half. He was then appointed principal classical assistant at his old school, and held that post until his appointment, in 1863, to the Professorship of Latin in University College, London. The Queen, on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, appointed him Professor of Modern History at Cambridge, Oct. 9, 1869. He was elected to a professorial fellowship at Caius College, Cambridge, in Oct., 1882. Professor Seeley's chief work, published anonymously in 1865 (though 1866 is the date on the title page), is entitled "Ecce Homo; a Survey of the Life and Work of Jesus Christ." It passed rapidly through several editions, created great excitement amongst the members of the various Protestant communities, and elicited numerous replies. Another work by the author of "Ecce Homo" appeared in 1882 under the title of "Natural Religion." Among the Professor's avowed works may be mentioned:—"Classical Studies as an Introduction to the Moral Sciences," a lecture, 1864; "English Lessons for English Readers" (in collaboration with the Rev. E. A. Abbott), 1869; "Lectures and Essays," 1870; an edition of "Livy, with Introduction, Historical Examination, and Notes," the first volume of which appeared in 1871; "Life and Times of Stein: or Germany and Prussia in the Napoleonic Age," 3 vols., 1879; "The Expansion of England," 1883; and "A Short Life of Napoleon the First," 1885; "Greater Greece and Greater Britain," 1887. He has also written many articles in reviews on historical method and the place of history in education; also a series of three articles, which appeared in the Contemporary Review, on Goethe, and an article in the first number of the English Historical Review (Jan., 1886) on the House of Bourbon.

SELBORNE (Earl of), The Right Hon. Roundell Palmer, D.C.L., P.C., second son of the late Rev. William Palmer, rector of Mixbury, Oxfordshire, by Dorothea, youngest daughter of the late Rev. William Roundell, of Gledstone, Yorkshire, was born at Mixbury, Nov. 27, 1812. He was educated at Rugby and Winchester Schools, and was elected in 1830 to an open Scholarship at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated, as a first-class in classics, in Easter term, 1834, having gained the Chancellor's prize for Latin verse in 1831, the Newdigate prize for English verse in 1832, and the Ireland scholarship in the same year. The subject of the Latin verse composition was "Numantia," and of the English "Staffa." He was elected to a Fellowship at Magdalen College, and obtained the Chancellor's prize for the Latin essay in 1835, and the Eldon Law Scholarship.

In 1837 he graduated M.A., and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn on June 9, the same year. He was created a Queen's Counsel in April, 1849, and was immediately elected a Benchers of his inn. Sir Roundell Palmer was first returned to Parliament as member for Plymouth, at the general election of July, 1847. He represented Plymouth till July, 1852, when he was not re-elected; but regained his seat in June, 1853, and held it till March, 1857, when he did not offer himself as a candidate. In July, 1861, though he had not a seat in Parliament at the time, he was appointed Solicitor-General in Lord Palmerston's Administration. Sir Roundell then received the honour of knighthood, and he was soon after elected M.P. for Richmond. In Oct., 1863, he became Attorney-General, and retired from office with Lord John Russell's second administration in June, 1866. On the return of the Liberal party to power, under the leadership of Mr. Gladstone, in Dec., 1868, he was offered the Chancellorship, but not being able to support the policy of the Government in relation to the Irish Church, declined taking office. Sir Roundell Palmer's views on the Irish Church question were embodied at the time in a speech addressed by him to his constituents at Richmond. He was prepared to acquiesce in the disestablishment of the Irish Church, but differed with the Government on the question of disendowment. He continued, however, to be an independent supporter of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet on most of the public questions of the day, and consented to represent Her Majesty's Government as counsel before the Arbitration Court at Geneva in 1871. He was appointed Lord Chancellor of England, in succession to Lord Hatherley, in Oct., 1872, on which occasion he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Selborne, of Selborne, in the county of Hants. He was the author of the Judicature Act of 1873; and soon afterwards went out of office, on the defeat of the Liberal party in Feb., 1874. On the appointment of the Commission for reforming Oxford University Lord Selborne was made its chairman. He was re-appointed Lord Chancellor of England on the return of the Liberals to office under Mr. Gladstone in May, 1880. In Dec., 1882, he was created Viscount Wolmer, of Blackmoor, Hampshire, and Earl of Selborne, in the same county. He edited the "Book of Praise, from the best English Hymn-Writers," published in 1862, and in 1863 was made hon. D.C.L. by the University of Oxford. He was elected Lord Rector of the University of St.

Andrews in Nov., 1877. In 1878 his lordship published "Notes on some Passages in the Liturgical History of the Reformed English Church;" and in 1886 he published "A Defence of the Church of England against Disestablishment;" and, in the following year, a volume entitled, "Ancient Facts and Fictions as to Churches and Tithes."

SELWYN, The Rev. Edward Carus, Head Master of Uppingham School, was born Nov. 25, 1853, at Lee, Kent. His father was the Rev. E. J. Selwyn, then Head Master of Blackheath Proprietary School, and is at present the Rector of Pluckley, Kent. The family includes many names of scholars and divines, notably the late Bishop Selwyn of New Zealand and Lichfield, and his brothers, Professor Selwyn of Cambridge, and Sir Charles Jasper Selwyn. Mr. Selwyn was educated at Blackheath Proprietary School and at Eton; whence, after obtaining the Newcastle scholarship, he proceeded, in 1872, to King's College, Cambridge, of which college he was elected a scholar. As an undergraduate, he obtained the Carus Greek Testament Prize in 1872; was Bell's Scholar in 1873; and Browne's Medallist 1874 and 1875. In 1876 he graduated B.A. as 7th Classic; and from 1876 to 1878 was Assistant Classical Lecturer at King's College. He was ordained in 1879, and held, for some months, a curacy at St. Paul's, Jarroon-on-Tyne, of which the Rev. Canon Edward Liddell was rector. He returned to Cambridge in 1880, as Divinity Lecturer of Emmanuel College, and Dean and Divinity Lecturer of King's College. On the retirement of the late Canon Butler in 1882, Mr. Selwyn was offered, and accepted the Principalship of Liverpool College. In 1887 he succeeded Mr. Thring as Head Master of Uppingham School, the position he now holds. He married a daughter of Thomas Arnold, Esq., Professor in the Royal Irish University, second son of Dr. Arnold of Rugby.

SELWYN, The Right Rev. John Richardson, Bishop of Melanesia, son of the late Dr. George Augustus Selwyn, Bishop of Lichfield, born in 1845, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1866, M.A. 1870). He was Curate of St. Alrewas, Staffordshire, 1869-70; of St. George, Wolverhampton, 1870-71; and Vicar of the last-named parish, 1871-72. He entered on the Melanesian mission in 1872, and in Feb., 1877, became successor to Bishop Patteson, the first Bishop of Melanesia, who was consecrated in 1861, and murdered in 1871.

SEMBRICH, Marcella, a distinguished vocalist, was born at Lemberg, Austria, Feb. 15, 1858, and for some years studied the piano and violin under the best masters, with the idea of being a professional. While receiving piano lessons from Liszt in Vienna, it was discovered that she had a splendid voice, and she was at once sent to Milan to study singing. She made her début as an opera singer in Athens in "I Puritani," 1877, and then returned to Vienna for further study; she subsequently appeared in Dresden, and remained at the Royal Opera House till 1880. She soon became a great favourite in the characters of "Zerlina," "Susanna," "Constance," "Martha," "Lucia," etc. In 1880 she made her first appearance in London. Middle Sembrich has sung in all the principal cities of Europe, and has been everywhere received with the greatest enthusiasm. In 1883-4 she was a member of Mr. Abbey's Italian Opera Company at New York, where she created a great sensation by the compass of her voice and the brilliance of her execution.

SENDALL, Walter Joseph, K.C.M.G., is the son of the late Rev. S. Sendall, Vicar of Rillington, Yorkshire, and was educated at Bury St. Edmunds and Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A., 1858, 1st Class Classics; Junior Dpt., Mathematics). He was a Member of the Colonial Civil Service, Ceylon, 1860-73 (Inspector of Schools, 1860-70; Director of Public Instruction, 1870-73); Assistant Inspector Local Government Board, 1873-76; General Inspector, 1876-78; Assistant Secretary, 1878-85. He was Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Windward Islands, 1885-89; and was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Barbados in Nov., 1889. He was created C.M.G., 1887; and K.C.M.G., 1889.

SENIOR, William, journalist and author ("Redspinner"), is the angling editor of the Field. In 1873 he published "Notable Shipwrecks," which has passed through several editions. This was followed in 1875 by "Waterside Sketches;" in 1877 by "By Stream and Sea;" in 1878 by "Anderton's Angling," a novelette; in 1880 by "Travel and Trout in the Antipodes;" in 1883 by "Angling in Great Britain," being one of the handbooks issued in connection with the Great International Fisheries Exhibition; and in 1888 by "Near and Far," a book of sport in Australasia and at home. Mr. Senior is a regular contributor to periodical literature. In 1875 he accepted a Government appointment as editor of the Queensland "Hansard," and proceeded to that colony to start an official daily report of the Parliamentary debates. This publication, the first of the kind ever issued in the Colonies, having been most successfully established, he returned to England, after five years' residence in Queensland, and rejoined the special correspondent staff of the Daily News.

SERVER PACHA, a Turkish statesman, commenced his official career in the Imperial Divan, and after filling the post of chief of the correspondence department in the Ministry of War, was appointed First Secretary of the Ottoman Embassy in Vienna; then in the same capacity in [Paris; and when the Sultan sent Mehemet Kubrisli Pacha to St. Petersburg as Ambassador upon the coronation of the Emperor Alexander, Server Effendi was chosen as principal secretary. After the return of the Ambassador to Constantinople, Server Effendi remained in Russia as Chargé d'Affaires, and by his ability and tact succeeded in establishing the most friendly relations between the Cabinet of St. Petersburg and the Sublime Porte. On his return to Constantinople, he was appointed Secretary-General of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. In 1859 he was Imperial Ottoman Delegate on the Commission for settling the frontier of Montenegro. After this he was successively appointed Under-Secretary of State of the Ministry of Commerce; then President of the Municipality; Imperial Commissioner in Egypt in reference to the Suez Canal; and Civil Commissioner in Crete during the insurrection of 1867. The improvements carried out by him during his tenure of office as Mayor of Constantinople, 1868-70, caused him to be styled the "Haussmann of Stamboul." On Aug. 31, 1870, he was appointed Musteschar of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, and during the three months' illness of A'ali Pacha was Minister ad interim. On the death of A'ali Pacha, Sept. 6, 1871, Server Effendi was created a Muchir by the Sultan, and definitely appointed Minister for Foreign Affairs. Server Pacha possessed in an eminent degree all the qualifications necessary for this high post—experience in its special duties, a very conciliatory manner, a European education, and great popularity with the diplomatic body. Server Pacha subsequently became, in succession, Minister of Public Works, Commissary-General for carrying out the reforms in Bosnia, Governor-General of Herzegovina, and President of the First Ottoman Senate. He was recalled to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in the place of Aarifi Pacha, July 31, 1877. He resigned in Feb., 1878, in consequence of the publication of statements which had been made by him to the correspondent of the Daily News, and which had been declared by Mr. Layard, our Ambassador at the Porte, to be injurious to Great Britain. On Aug. 4 in the same year, Server Pacha succeeded Mahmoud Pacha as Minister of Justice.

SHARP, Isaac, a venerable minister of the Society of Friends, whose missionary journeys and labours in all parts of the world justly entitle his name to a prominent place in the records of "the Heroes of the Cross." And as if the love of Christ and the souls of his fellow men had rendered him superior to the infirmities of age, we learn that, although in his eighty-fifth year, he has once more consented, at the call of his people, to undertake another missionary journey, which, should he live to complete it, will again take him round the world in the interests and service of the Gospel. Isaac Sharp was born on July 4, 1806, and belongs to a family whose members have been honourably distinguished in the Society of Friends for their devotion to the cause of education and to other departments of Christian philanthropic work. Much of the earlier and middle part of Mr. Sharp's life was spent at Middlesbrough, where he rendered important services to the coal-mining and iron works, and to the shipping and other enterprises which have contributed to raise Middlesbrough from being a small hamlet with a population of a few hundreds to be a flourishing town of many thousand inhabitants and the centre of a widespread industry and commerce. All this was well, but while his mind and influence were thus usefully employed in promoting the material and social welfare of those around him he often felt his sympathies drawn out toward fellow-Christians scattered through the northern regions of Europe and America. Hence, in obedience to this inward call, he has on several occasions visited Norway, ministering the word of life and encouraging the little Societies of Friends in the west of that country, and other Christian families and individuals which he found along the coast line from the Naze to the North Cape. On the same errand and in the same spirit he has visited the Shetland and Orkney Islands and the Faroe Islands, still more remote. In conjunction with Moravian brethren, for whom Mr. Sharp has the strongest sympathy and the warmest appreciation of their self-denying labours, he has visited Labrador and Greenland, and on various occasions has helped the missionaries labouring in those cold and gloomy lands by sending them books, models, tools, toys, and other objects to cheer them in the long dark winters peculiar to those high northern latitudes. Mr. Sharp has also visited Iceland in the service of the Gospel, and, as if no climate or perils could deter him, he has travelled the burning sands of Africa and has even penetrated the dense forests of Madagascar on the mission of love and mercy to his fellow-men. A life of such devotion and zeal is far above all human praise, and we know that everything of that kind would be offensive to the subject of this memoir. We have in his case another testimony to the truth that in proportion to their numbers the world is more indebted to the Society of Friends for the example of the highest Christian philanthropy than to any other section of the Christian Church.

SHARP, William, M.D., F.R.S., of Horton House, Rugby, Warwickshire, was born Jan. 21, 1805, at Armley, in the parish of Leeds, where, and at Little Horton and Bradford, his family had resided for several centuries. Dr. Sharp was educated at Wakefield Grammar School, 1813-16, living with his uncle, the Rev. Samuel Sharp, at the vicarage; then at Westminster School, 1817-20, under Dr. Page and Dr. Goodenough. In 1821 his uncle, William Sharp, the leading surgeon in Bradford, took him as a pupil, and subsequently, in 1825, he was taken as pupil by the second William Hey of Leeds, his uncle's cousin, and remained with him until Oct. 1, when his hospital career commenced in London at Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospitals, where Sir Astley Cooper was chief. In 1826 he obtained from the Society of Apothecaries his licence to practise, at that time the only legal qualification. Remaining at the hospitals another year, he obtained the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons; this was in 1827. He then went to Paris, attended the University lectures at the Sorbonne, when Gay Lussac, on Physics, had a class of 1,500, and Thenard, on Chemistry, had nearly as many; he also attended the lectures at the School of Medicine, where Orfila had 1,200 students. The great hospitals were daily visited, where Baron Dupuytren was at the Hôtel-Dieu, and Baron Larrey, who had been Surgeon-in-Chief to Napoleon's army, was at the military hospital. In 1828 he returned to Bradford as his uncle's assistant; in 1829 he was elected surgeon to the Infirmary; in 1833, on his uncle's death, he succeeded him and had a large practice. On the deaths of Mr. Blakey and Mr. Lister he became, in 1837, senior surgeon to the Infirmary. In 1843 he resigned his practice at Bradford; and, after living four years at Hull, his wife's native place, where he gave two winter courses of lectures on Chemistry at the

Hull and East Riding School of Medicine, and spending some time in travel, he went to Rugby in 1847, for the education of his sons in the school under Dr. Tait (afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury), and has resided there ever since. He has ventured outside his profession only twice—once in Bradford, by a course of lectures on Science (which was followed by the formation of a Philosophical Society in 1839, of which he was elected first President, and the main design of which was to form a Local Museum, limited to objects of interest belonging to the town and neighbourhood), and in 1839, at the meeting in Birmingham of the British Association for the advancement of Science, where he read a paper recommending such local museums; this was so favourably received, that few, if any, large towns in England are now without their museums; and for this the Fellowship of the Royal Society was conferred upon him in 1840. The second time was in Rugby, by suggesting to Dr. Tait the introduction of the teaching of physical science into the school; the suggestion was acted upon, and Dr. Sharp was the first "Reader in Natural Philosophy," in 1849 and 1850; all the other public schools in the kingdom have since followed this example. This being set on foot he resigned his post, that he might henceforward give his whole time and thought to the improvement of the medical treatment of the sick. This has been uninterruptedly continued for forty years, has involved an investigation of the various systems of medicine, including Homœopathy, and has resulted in the discovery, as he thinks, of laws of nature—law-facts he calls them—which may form for medicine a scientific basis, a foundation it has never yet had, and lead to a very great improvement in the art of healing. The details of these inquiries have been given in a series of "Essays on Medicine," published at irregular intervals since 1851, and now numbering fifty-eight.

SHAW, Captain Eyre Massey, C.B., Chief of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, is the son of the late Bernard Robert Shaw, Esq., of Monkstown, co. Cork, and was born in 1830, and educated at Dr. Coghlan's School, Queenstown, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his B.A. and M.A. degrees. He entered the army, but retired in 1860, and became Superintendent of the Borough Forces of Belfast, including Police and Fire Brigade. On the death of Mr. Braidwood in 1861, he was appointed Chief Officer of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, which, from being originally supported by the Insurance Companies, was taken in charge by the Metropolitan Board of Works, and under Captain Shaw's able guidance has become the most efficient brigade in the world. Captain Shaw was in 1879 made C.B., and has published various books connected with Fires and Fire Protection, besides Annual Reports on the work of the Brigade.

SHAW-LEFEVRE, The Right Hon. George John, M.P., son of Sir John George Shaw-Lefevre, K.C.B., by Rachel Emily, daughter of Mr. Ichabod Wright, of Mapperley Hall, Nottingham, was born in 1832, and received his education at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1856. In 1863 he was first elected M.P. for Reading, in the Liberal interest, and he continued to be one of the representatives of that borough down to 1885, when he was defeated by Mr. Murdoch. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from May to July, 1866; Secretary to the Board of Trade from Dec., 1868, to Jan., 1871; Secretary to the Admiralty from the last date to Feb., 1874, and again from April, 1880, to the following November, when he was appointed First Commissioner of Works and Buildings in succession to Mr. Adam, who had resigned that office on being appointed Governor of Madras. As First Commissioner, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre introduced great improvements into the streets of London, notably at Westminster and at Hyde Park Corner. On the death of Mr. Fawcett he was appointed Postmaster-General (Nov., 1884), and his tenure of this office was marked by the introduction of sixpenny telegrams. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre was elected a Benchler of the Inner Temple in Nov., 1882. He is the author of an important article on "Public Works in London," in the Nineteenth Century (Nov., 1882). After his defeat at Reading in Nov., 1885, he was without a seat until, at a bye election, April, 1886, he successfully stood for Bradford, vacant by the death of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster. At the General Election of 1886 he was again elected as a Gladstonian Liberal. He has published several useful works, some of a statistical kind, on the English and Irish Land Question. One of his sisters, Miss Madeleine Shaw-Lefevre, is Principal of Somerville Hall, Oxford.

SHEA, Sir Ambrose, K.C.M.G., was born in Newfoundland in 1820, received his education there, and for over thirty years occupied a foremost place in the public affairs of that Colony. For six years he was Speaker of the Assembly, and subsequently for five years was an unofficial Member of the Council of Government. He was one of the two Delegates from the Colony at the celebrated Quebec Conference at which the Constitution of the Canadian Dominion was framed. In 1888 Sir Ambrose was delegated to London to urge the right of the Colony to enforce restrictions on French fishing operations on the Newfoundland coasts, but owing to some Imperial Cabinet difficulties at the moment nothing could be done. The Legislature of the Island, however, renewed their efforts, and he was again sent, in conjunction with the Premier, Sir Robert Thorburn, to press the question, and this time with success. Soon afterwards Lord Knutsford offered Sir Ambrose the Governorship of the Bahamas, on the acceptance of which he retired from commercial pursuits. This post he assumed at the end of 1887, and it would be difficult to parallel the record he has made in that Colony during the short period of two and a half years. On his arrival the place was in a state of impending bankruptcy. The precarious resources, fruit, and sponge-fishing, were declining, and those having means were unwilling to invest a shilling in any untried adventure. The population were thinning by emigration to the Southern States, and no one thought of the future without misgiving. The prospect for a new Governor was cheerless in the extreme; but Sir Ambrose is of the "nil desperandum" class, and he betook himself at once to an examination of the situation. He had not been a month in his position before he felt that he had lighted on a solution of the difficulties. His attention was attracted to a bold-looking plant of the aloe order, and he found on inspecting it that it held a fibre similar to Manila; and his experience enabled him to see that this had a stable commercial value, though he was not encouraged when he explained what he thought of the capabilities of this plant. He was told that attempts had before been made in the direction he proposed, but without any success, and that the plant was now universally regarded as a noxious weed, which defied all efforts to eradicate it. This was the prevailing feeling; but Sir Ambrose had formed a strong opinion, and gradually he gained assent to his views. The growth seems to set all ordinary adverse or disappointing influences at defiance; and the product is all but, if not quite, equal to the celebrated Manila hemp. The exports of the Colony have hitherto averaged about £125,000 a year, but no one on the spot, who knows on what grounds the calculations rest, has a doubt that within a very few years the value of the exports will be quadrupled, and an output of a million is within range of the most reasonable contemplation. Land has gone up to four times its former value, and already the revenue responds to the industrial activity that prevails. These results are by common consent due solely to the ability and unflagging energy of the Governor. Sir Ambrose is the first Colonist who ever held the Post of Imperial Governor, and his splendid success will be hailed with great satisfaction by Colonists everywhere, for there are few to whom his name as a prominent Colonist has not been long familiar.

SHEDD, William Greenough Thayer, D.D., LL.D., was born at Acton, Massachusetts, June 21, 1820. He graduated at the University of Vermont in 1839, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1843. He has published a "Translation of Theremin's Rhetoric," 1850; edited "Coleridge's Works with Introductory Essay," 7 vols., 1853; published "Translation of Guericke's Church History," 2 vols., 1857, 1863; edited "Augustine's Confessions with Introductory Essay," 1860; published a "History of Christian Doctrine," 2 vols., 1863; "Homilies and Pastoral Theology," 1867; "Sermons to the Natural Man," 1870; "Theological Essays," 1877; "Literary Essays," 1878; "Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans," 1879; "Sermons to the Spiritual Man," 1884; "Doctrine of Endless Punishment," 1886; "Dogmatic Theology," 1888; and "Revision of the Westminster Standards," 1890.

SHEPSTONE, Sir Theophilus, K.C.M.G., was appointed, in Jan. 1835, head-quarters interpreter of the Kaffir language at the Cape of Good Hope, and served on the staff during the Kaffir war of that year. He was also employed in various services on the frontier of the Cape Colony; was appointed Captain-in-Chief of the native forces in Natal in 1848; Judicial Assessor at Natal in 1855; Secretary for Native Affairs in 1856; member of the Executive and Legislative Councils of that Colony the same year; proceeded on a special mission in 1873 to crown the King of Zululand; returned to England in Aug. 1874; and proceeded once more to Natal in Sept. 1876 to conduct negotiations between the Transvaal States and the Zulus, which resulted in his annexing the country of the Transvaal to the British Crown by proclamation, dated April 12, 1877. He was nominated a Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George in 1869, and a Knight Commander of the same Order in 1876.

SHERBROOKE (Viscount), The Right Hon. Robert Lowe, C.B., LL.D., D.C.L., son of the late Rev. Robert Lowe, rector of Bingham, Notts, by Ellen, daughter of the late Rev. Reginald Pynard, rector of Madresfield, Worcestershire, was born at Bingham in Dec. 1811, and educated at Winchester, and at University College, Oxford, where he graduated in high honours in 1833; was elected Fellow of Magdalen in 1834, and became a private tutor at Oxford. He was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn in Jan. 1842, went the same year to Australia, where he practised with much success as a barrister, and sat in the council of that colony from 1843 to 1850; was afterwards elected member for Sydney, and returned to England in 1851. He was one of the joint secretaries of the Board of Control from Dec. 1852 till Feb. 1855; was appointed Vice-President of the Board of Trade and Paymaster-General in Aug. 1855, retiring on the return of Lord Derby to power in 1858; was appointed Vice-President of the Education Board in June, 1859, and resigned in April, 1864. He has been a member of the Senate of the University of London since 1860, was returned member for Kidderminster in July, 1852, and represented that borough till April, 1859, when he was elected for Calne. During the sessions of 1866 and 1867 Mr. Lowe was one of the most strenuous opponents of the Reform Bill, and a collected edition of his speeches on the question appeared in 1867. In Dec. 1868 he was elected the first representative in the House of Commons of the University of London, and in the same month, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's administration, he was appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer and a member of the Council on Education. He resigned the Chancellorship of the Exchequer in Aug. 1873, and was appointed to succeed Mr. Bruce at the Home Office. At the same time Mr. Gladstone assumed the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, in addition to his office of First Lord of the Treasury. Mr. Lowe of course went out of office with his party in Feb. 1874. On the return of the Liberals to office, in May, 1880, he was raised to the peerage by the title of Viscount Sherbrooke. He was created honorary LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1867, and honorary D.C.L. of Oxford in 1870. He published, in 1884, a volume of poems, mostly written in early life. He married, in 1836, Georgiana, second daughter of Mr. George Orred, of Aigburth House, Liverpool; she died on Nov. 3, 1884. In 1885 he married Caroline, daughter of the late Thomas Sneyd, of Ashcombe Park, Sheffield, and the same year received the order of the Grand Cross of the Bath.

SHERMAN, The Hon. John, brother of the late Gen. W. T. Sherman, was born at Lancaster, Ohio, May 10, 1823. He received an academic education, studied law, and began its practice in 1844. He was a delegate to the National Whig Conventions of 1848 and 1852; and a Member of Congress from 1855 to 1861. He entered the Republican party soon after its formation, and has since acted with it. In 1861 he was elected to the U.S. Senate and re-elected in 1866 and 1872. On the accession to the presidency of Mr. Hayes in 1877, Senator Sherman was appointed Secretary of the Treasury, a position retained by him until the close of President Hayes's administration in 1881, when he re-entered the Senate, of which he is still a member (and chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations), his present term expiring in 1893. It was due to his management while at the head of the Treasury that the resumption of specie payments (in 1879) was effected without disturbance to the financial or commercial interests of the country. Senator Sherman was a prominent candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 1880 and 1888, and was the presiding officer of the Senate, 1885-87. He published in 1879 a volume of his "Selected Speeches and Reports on Finance and Taxation," 1859-78.

SHIPLEY, Orby, M.A., was born July 1, 1832, at Twyford House, in the county of Southampton, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge. For twenty-three years he worked as a clergyman of the Church of England; and on Oct. 26, 1878, was received into the Roman Catholic Church. He was the editor, prior to 1878, of many ascetic and devotional works, translated from Catholic sources; of three volumes of Religious poetry from all sources, "Lyra Eucharistica," "Messianica," and "Mystica;" and of several volumes of essays, by various authors, "The Church and the World," "Tracts for the Day," "Ecclesiastical Reform," and "Studies in Modern Problems." He is an occasional contributor to periodic literature—amongst other reviews, to the Nineteenth Century, the Fortnightly, the Contemporary, and Dublin Reviews. As a Roman Catholic, he has edited "Annus Sanctus, hymns of the Church for the Ecclesiastical year," and a series of old English ascetical books. He is engaged in the compilation of an "Authology" of sacred verse in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, from English, Irish and American Sources, but chiefly of printed poetry, and from all sources and of all dates, original and translated.

SHREWSBURY, Bishop of. See STAMER, THE RIGHT REV. SIR LOVELACE T.

SIDGWICK, Professor Henry, LL.D., D.C.L., Oxford, born at Skipton, Yorkshire, May 31, 1838, was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was Fellow of Trinity College from 1859 to 1869; and Lecturer of Trinity College from 1859 to 1875, when he was appointed Prælector of Moral and Political Philosophy. Prof. Sidgwick is the author of "The Methods of Ethics," "Outlines of the History of Ethics," the "Principles of Political Economy," and of several articles on philosophical and literary subjects. He took a prominent part in the promotion of the Higher Education of Women at Cambridge, especially in the foundation and management of Newnham College. Professor Sidgwick is LL.D. of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and St. Andrews, and was made a D.C.L. of Oxford in 1890.

SIEMENS, Dr. Werner, Hon. Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, was born at Lenthe, in Hanover, in 1816; and educated at the Lübeck Gymnasium. Dr. Siemens joined the Prussian Artillery in 1834, where his eminent talents soon attracted notice and—having passed through the Military schools—gained him the rank of lieutenant in 1837. While still holding this appointment in the army, he applied himself with great zeal to the study of practical chemistry and the physical sciences, and became the inventor of the process of electro-gilding, of the differential governor, and of the electric automatic recording telegraph,

As member of a Commission of the Prussian General Staff for the introduction of the electric telegraph system in place of the optical telegraphs, he proposed, in 1847, the application of subterranean conductors, insulated by gutta-percha; and he executed successfully experimental lines coated with gutta-percha, by means of a press invented by him for that purpose, which is still being used in the manufacture of cables. With the help of these insulated wires he succeeded, in the spring of 1848, together with Professor Himly, in laying the first submarine mines with electric ignition, for the protection of the harbour of Kiel from the Danish fleet. In the same year he carried out the first great telegraph line in Germany between Berlin and Frankfort-on-Main; and, in the following year, the subterranean line between Berlin and Cologne. Dr. Siemens left the Government service in 1850, and devoted himself afterwards entirely to scientific studies and to private enterprises. In 1847 he had already laid the foundation of the telegraph works carried on afterwards by him under the firm of Siemens and Halske, in Berlin, the celebrated establishment which was destined to become, and at present is, one of the chief centres for the application of electricity to the industrial arts. Its world-wide reputation, acquired within a short time, led him to open branch works in London and St. Petersburg, which also rapidly developed into entirely independent large concerns, under the management of his younger brothers, William and Charles. Dr. Siemens' personal achievements are to be found in the fields of science as well as in those of the technical arts. His scientific merits enabled the University of Berlin to confer on him the dignity of Doctor of Philosophy, honoris causa, in 1860; they opened likewise for him the doors of the Academy of Sciences in Berlin in 1874; and, subsequently, of many other academies and societies. Amongst his many and various achievements in matters relating to science and the technical arts must be mentioned as particularly noteworthy, the invention and practical application of the quicksilver unit (Siemens' unit), by means of which exact and comparative measurements became possible for the first time; further, that of the gutta-percha press already referred to; that of the development of methods for testing underground and submarine cables, and determining the position of faults in them; the invention of polarised relays; of the so-called Siemens Armature; and of the dynamo-electric machine, the principle of which he published first at the meeting of the Berlin Academy of Sciences, on Jan. 17, 1867; the electric railway; and of numerous other inventions, such as the pneumatic despatch tube system; and the Siemens alcoholimeter for registering the quantity of absolute alcohol contained in any alcoholic liquid passing through the instrument. Dr. Siemens has been created a Member of the Prussian Order "Pour le Mérite." The late Emperor Frederick III. of Germany conferred upon him the Patent of Nobility. He has also become the recipient of many other distinctions and honours. Dr. Siemens' numerous lectures and papers have been published in the Transactions of different learned and scientific societies, and in various periodicals, especially the following:—"Sitzungsberichte der Königlich Preussischen Academie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin," "Poggendorff's Annalen der Physik und Chemie," Dingler's "Polytechnisches Journal," and others. A collection of these lectures and papers was published under the title: "Gesammelte Abhandlungen und Vorträge," Berlin, 1881, Verlag von Julius Springer. A second and enlarged edition of this work was printed 1889; and a second and a third volume are to follow in course of time.

SIEVEKING, Sir Edward Henry, M.D., LL.D., Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen, and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, was born in London, within the sound of Bow bells, in 1816. He is descended from an old North German family, still flourishing in Hamburg; and was partly educated in England and partly in Germany. He was in Bonn at the University, and subsequently at University College, London, and the University of Edinburgh, where he took his degree of M.D. in 1841. He travelled abroad, studying in Paris, Vienna, and Berlin. He practised among the English colony at Hamburg for four years; and while there, contributed to Oppenheim's Medical Journal; wrote a treatise on Ventilation, a previously unconsidered subject in Germany, and built a Children's Hospital. In 1847 he returned to London; became a Member of the Royal College of Physicians, and four years later, Fellow. After serving as Physician to the Northern Dispensary in 1851, he was appointed to St. Mary's Hospital, with which he remained actively associated for 35 years, and is now Consulting Physician. He has been President of the Harveian, and President of the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society. His first publication in England was in 1849, and was a pamphlet on Nursing; in which the provision of Nurses for the Poor, as part of a perfect system of state sanitation, was strongly urged. A paper on the same subject by Dr. Sieveking was subsequently read before the Epidemiological Society; and this led to the formation of a committee, which for a series of years sought to carry out the views advocated by him. Lord Shaftesbury on two different occasions introduced the committee to the Poor Law Board, which gave its official support; but nothing came of it. The present appreciation of nursing, as an aid to curative medicine may, in a great measure, be attributed to the work done by the committee. Dr. Sieveking was a co-translator of Rokitauský's great work on Pathology for the Sydenham Society; and subsequently translated from the German for the same Society, Romberg's work on Nervous Diseases. In 1854, with his colleague at St. Mary's, Dr. Handfield Jones, he published a work on pathological Anatomy, of which a second edition has since been edited by Dr. Payne. From 1855 to 1860 Dr. Sieveking was editor of the British and Foreign Medical and Chirurgical Review, founded, and long carried on, by his friend Sir John Forbes. In 1863, at the recommendation of Sir J. Clark, the position of Physician in Ordinary to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales was offered to, and accepted by, Dr. Sieveking. In 1873 he was made Physician Extraordinary, and in 1888 Physician in Ordinary, to Her Majesty the Queen. He was knighted in 1886; made Honorary LL.D., Edinburgh, at the Tercentenary of Edinburgh University; wrote a work on Epilepsy, two editions; a work on Medical advice in Life Assurance; and has delivered frequent addresses of various kinds. He was Croonian Lecturer at the Royal College of Physicians; and delivered the Harveian oration there in 1877; in consequence of which the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons materially aided Sir E. H. Sieveking in producing an autotype publication of the MS. of W. Harvey's original Physiological Lecture, delivered in 1616, et seq. Sir E. H. Sieveking has filled many offices at the Royal College of Physicians. He was the Founder of the Edinburgh University Club, and is a member of the Athenæum. He married, in 1849, Miss Jane Ray, youngest daughter of J. Ray, Esq., of Finchley, J.P., and has five sons and three daughters.

SIMEONI, Giovanni, an Italian Cardinal, was born at Paliana, in the diocese of Palestrina, July 23, 1816, and having been ordained priest, he was, on account of his learning, employed in offices of importance. In 1847 he was Auditor of the nunciature of Madrid. After some years we find him in Rome, Prefect of Studies in the Pontifical Lyceum of the Roman Seminary, and attached to the Secretary's office for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs. In the year 1857 he was appointed Domestic Prelate to the Pope, and sent again to Spain in the quality of Envoy for the affairs of the See in order to renew the connections with Rome, which had been interrupted by the revolution. In the year 1858 he was made Pro-nuncio Apostolic in full. For eight years he was Secretary to the Congregation of the Propaganda for the affairs for the Oriental Rite, and in 1868 he became Secretary of the Latin Rite and adviser to the Roman Inquisition, and also adviser for the affairs of the Oriental Rite to the congregation of the council for the revision of the provincial councils and to the congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical affairs. When the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican was convoked Mgr. Simeoni was one of the Advisers for the Commission of Oriental Churches and Missions and for Ecclesiastical Discipline. The diplomatic relations between Rome and the Court of Spain having been re-established in 1875 Pope Pius IX. sent Mgr. Simeoni as Nuncio to Madrid, having just recognized him Archbishop of Chalcidonia. In the Consistory of March 15, 1875, Pius IX. created him Cardinal, reserving him in petto, and on Sept. 17 the same year he published him in Consistory. Mgr. Simeoni, having been created Cardinal, remained in the nunciature in Madrid as Pro-nuncio, and on the death of Cardinal Antonelli, in 1876, he was appointed Secretary of State to Pope Pius IX.—an office which he retained until the death of that Pontiff—and Prefect of the Sacred Apostolic Palaces and the Sacred Laetetan Congregation. He was afterwards made a member of the Roman Universal Inquisition and of other ecclesiastical congregations. He was succeeded as Secretary of State by Cardinal Franchi in March, 1878, when Pope Leo XIII. appointed Cardinal Simeoni Prefect-General of the Propaganda.

SIMMONDS - LUND, Peter, F.L.S., F.R.C.I., author and journalist, was born July 24, 1814, at Aarhus, Denmark, and is the eldest son of the late Lieutenant George Simmonds, R.N. Mr. Simmonds entered the navy as a midshipman at the age of twelve, on board the Cygnat, one of the ten-gun brigs then carrying the mails from Falmouth, commanded by his uncle, Captain Gording. In Oct., 1831, Mr. Simmonds was sent out by his uncle to Jamaica, as a sugar planter, and remained there three years, having thus the opportunity of witnessing the several stages of slavery, apprenticeship and freedom. Being invited to give a lecture before the Literary and Philosophical Society at Portsmouth, he incidentally compared the condition of the negro in the West Indies with that of the poor at home, in favour of the former. Subsequently he wrote a series of articles on Life and Slavery in the West Indies, compiled a "History of the Rise and Progress of the Newspaper Press of all Countries," and published an abstract of his researches in the Journal of the Statistical Society for 1841. In that year he became Secretary to Mr. Shaw, the originator of the Royal Agricultural Society and the Farmers' Insurance Office, editor of the Mark Lane Express, &c. Mr. Simmonds contributed largely on Agricultural subjects to the Farmers' Magazine, and leaders to the Mark Lane Express; and was engaged, as sub-editor, by Mr. C. M. Johnson, F.R.S., in bringing out the "Farmer's Encyclopædia," in 1842. After carrying on the Colonial Magazine for several years Mr. Simmonds, in 1853, brought out his first important work, "The Commercial Products of the Vegetable Kingdom," a volume of 668 pages, which has in subsequent years been issued in two large editions under the title of "Tropical Agriculture," and has become a standard book. In 1857 Messrs. Routledge brought out a condensed work of his on "Arctic Discoveries," which has gone through many editions; and in the following year a "Commercial Dictionary of Trade Products and Technical Terms" (Routledge & Co.), which is a useful work of reference, and containing more than 22,000 definitions of new words, has been a mine of wealth for various subsequent lexicographers. Mr. Simmonds having published more than fifty volumes during his long literary career, it would be impossible to enumerate them all. Among the most important may be mentioned: "The Curiosities of Food," 1859; "Waste Products and Undeveloped Substances," 1862, which has gone through several editions; new and enlarged editions of "Ure's Philosophy of Manufactures," "Ure's Cotton Manufactures," 1861; and "Waterston's Cyclopædia," 1863; "The Technologist," 6 vols., 1861-66; "The Journal of Applied Science," 12 vols., 1870-1881; "The Commercial Products of the Sea," 1879; "Animal Food Resources of different Nations," 1885; "Science and Commerce," a series of essays, 1872; "Animal Products," 1877; "The Popular Beverages of various Countries," 1888; "The British Roll of Honour," 1887; and many others. Besides this special literary work, Mr. Simmonds has been an active contributor to periodical literature as leader-writer for many years for the Shipping Gazette, the Mark Lane Express, and City Editor of the Globe; a contributor of articles to the Mining Journal, Cassell's Magazine, Chambers's Journal, the Art Journal, the London Review, the Quarterly Journal of Agriculture, the Nautical Magazine, the Paper-makers' Journal, Leather, the Gardeners' Chronicle, and the Journal of the Society of Arts. To the latter journal he has been a constant contributor of lectures and articles for the last thirty-five years. So highly were these contributions appreciated that the Council of the Society, under one of their rules, made him a Life Member without payment, in consideration of being "eminent in the application of Abstract Science to the Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce." He was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour of France, and of the Crown of Italy in 1878. He is Honorary and Corresponding Member of the Geographical Societies of Marseilles and Paris, of the Industrial Society of Mülhouse, the Imperial Austrian Agricultural Society of Vienna, the Society for promoting Industry of Holland, of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, and various other Foreign Societies. He is also Vice-President of the City of London College, and Honorary President for England of the Académie Nationale of Paris.

SIMMONS, Field-Marshal Sir John Lintorn, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., son of Captain Thomas Frederick Simmons, R.A., was born at Langford, Somerset, in 1821, and educated at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and at the Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1837, and after serving for several years in North America was appointed Inspector of Railways, Dec. 1846, and in 1850 Secretary to the Railway Commissioners. Upon the dissolution of that Commission he was transferred to the Board of Trade as Secretary to the Railway Department. In 1853, being in Turkey, he was specially employed by the late Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe on several important missions, and became Her Majesty's Commissioner with the Turkish Army under the command of Omar Pacha, in which position he served on the Danube. In Dec. 1854, he went to the Crimea to concert with the allied Commanders-in-Chief. He took part in the Battle of Eupatoria, in the Siege of Sebastopol, and was present at the forced passage of the Ingur, where he commanded the division which crossed the river and turned the enemy's position, capturing his works and guns. He was the British Commissioner for the regulation of the Turco-Russian Boundary in Asia, in 1857; Consul-General at Warsaw from 1858 to 1860; Commanding Royal Engineer at Aldershot, 1860 to 1865; Director of the School of Military Engineering at Chatham, 1865 to 1867; appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, March 18, 1869, and Governor the succeeding year, which appointment he held till June, 1875. He then became Inspector-General of Fortifications, which post he held until 1880. He was attached to the Special Embassy during the Congress in Berlin, and was appointed to assist Lord Amphilh at the Conference in Berlin on the Greek Frontier Question. He has received the Crimean Medal and Clasp, the Turkish Gold Medal for the Danubian Campaign, a Sword of Honour from the Turkish Government, the Grand Cordon of the Order of the Medjidieh, and the Fourth Class of the Legion of Honour. He was made C.B. in 1855; K.C.B. in 1869; G.C.B. in 1878; G.C.M.G., in 1887. He was Governor of Malta from June 1884 to Sept. 1888, and has since been sent as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Pope Leo XIII.

SIMON, Sir John, K.C.B., D.C.L., Oxon.; LL.D., Cantab. and Edin.; M.D. Dublin; F.R.S.; was born in 1816, became an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1844; was for many years Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and was the first appointed Officer of Health to the City of London. From 1855 to 1876, he was Medical Officer to the Board of Health, to the Privy Council, and to the Local Government Board. He is the author of several papers on Physiology, Pathology, and Surgery, and of reports and other official papers relating to the sanitary state of the people of England. The University of Munich, at its 400th anniversary in 1872, conferred upon him the honorary diploma of Doctor of Medicine "propter præclarissimam de sanitatè publicâ tuendâ atque augendâ meritâ." He was nominated a Companion of the Bath in May, 1876, and K.C.B. in 1887. He is one of the Crown Members of the General Medical Council.

SIMON, Jules, a French statesman, was born at Lorient (Morbihan) Dec. 31, 1814. The name given to him by his parents was Jules François Simon Suisse, but he adopted the name of Simon only, and has never been known by any other. He studied first at the little college in Lorient, and at another similar one at Vannes, after which he entered, as an assistant teacher, the Lycée at Rennes. He remained at the Normal School for some time, was received as Fellow of Philosophy in 1835, and taught that science successively at Caen and Versailles. At the latter place he achieved a brilliant success. Victor Cousin, whose earnest disciple he was, called him to Paris, and secured for him a charge at the Normal School in that city. For a time he was a supplementary lecturer on the History of Philosophy, but a year after his arrival in Paris he became the principal lecturer. In 1839 he succeeded M. Cousin, at the request of the latter, in the philosophy course, and for twelve years had a brilliant career as one of the most promising University men in France. In 1845 he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. The next year he presented himself to the electors of Lannion (Côtes-du-Nord) as the candidate of the Constitutional Left, but he was defeated. In Dec. 1847, he founded in Paris, in conjunction with his University colleague, M. Amédée Jacques, a political philosophical review called La Liberté de Penser. M. Simon edited the political department of this publication. After the revolution of Feb. 1848, he was elected to the Constituent Assembly from the department of the Côtes-du-Nord. He classed himself with the Moderate Left in the Assembly, and was appointed a member of the committee on the organization of labour. In March, 1849, he was elected a member of the Council of State, and he resigned his seat as representative (April); but on the reconstitution, on the 29th of June, by the Legislative Assembly, of the first half of that Council, he was not retained on it, and consequently he found himself removed from public life. After the coup d'état, M. Simon's course of lectures on philosophy at the Sorbonne was suspended, and as he refused to take the oath of allegiance to the Empire, it was assumed that he had resigned his professorship. In 1863 he was sent to the Corps Législatif from the 8th circonscription of the Seine. He was returned by that circonscription and also by the 2nd circonscription of the Gironde in 1869, when he elected to represent the latter constituency. M. Simon soon became the chief of the Republican party. He ranked high as an orator, and in the discussions on treaties of commerce he proved himself to be an able political economist and an earnest advocate of Free Trade. On the formation of the Government of National Defence he took the post of Minister of Public Instruction, Public Worship, and Fine Arts. After the armistice he was sent to Bordeaux to see that the decrees relating to the elections were carried out in their integrity, and not with the modifications introduced by M. Gambetta. At the elections of Feb. 8, 1871, M. Simon's candidature failed in Paris, but he was re-elected a representative of the department of the Marne in the National Assembly. He classed himself among the members of the Left, and was chosen by M. Thiers to take, in the Cabinet of Conciliation formed Feb. 19, 1871, the portfolio of Public Instruction. He held it till May, 1873, when he resumed his seat among the members of the Left, who made him their President. On Dec. 16, 1875, he was elected a Senator for Life. In Dec. 1876, M. Dufaure resigned, and a new Ministry had to be formed, which, according to constitutional principles, must rest upon a Parliamentary majority. The President sent for M. Jules Simon, who became Premier, holding, with the Presidency of the Council, the portfolio of the Interior. The cabinet lasted till May 16, 1877, when Marshal MacMahon sent M. Simon a letter which was, in fact, nothing less than a dismissal from office. M. Simon went immediately to the Marshal and tendered his resignation, which was accepted. M. Simon was elected a member of the French Academy in Nov. 1875, in the place of the Comte de Rémusat, and was formally received into that learned body June 22, 1876. M. Jules Simon vigorously opposed the Bill introduced by M. Ferry in 1879 for the suppression of the non-authorized religious congregations. In April, 1880, the French Academy elected him a member of the new Supreme Educational Council, and on Nov. 11, 1882, he was elected permanent Secretary of the Academy of Moral and Political Science, in the place of M. Mignet. In 1890, at the Labour Conference held in Berlin, the German Emperor sent to M. Jules Simon, as a souvenir, the musical works of Frederick the Great. Among M. Jules Simon's works are:—"Du Commentaire de Proclus sur le Timée de Platon," 1839, one of his two theses for the degree of doctor; "Étude sur la Théodicée de Platon et d'Aristote," 1840; "Histoire de l'École d'Alexandrie," 2 vols., 1844-45, 2nd edit. 1861; "Le Devoir," 1854; "La Religion Naturelle," 1856; "La Liberté de Conscience," and "La Liberté," 2 vols., 1859; "L'Ouvrière," 1863; "L'École," 1864; "Le Travail," 1866; "L'Ouvrier de huit ans," 1867;

"La Politique Radicale," 1868; "La Peine de Mort," 1869; "Le Libre-Echange," 1870; "Souvenirs du 4 Septembre," 1874; "Le Gouvernement de M. Thiers, 8 février, 1871—24 mai, 1873," Paris, 1878; "Dieu, Patrie, Liberté," 1883; and "Une Académie sous le Directoire," 1885; and three volumes since the publication of the last edition of this work; viz., "Thiers, Guizot, Remorgat," "Mignet, Michelet, Henri Martin," and "Victor Cousin." He has also brought out editions, with important introductions, of the philosophical works of Descartes, Bossuet, Malebranche, and Antoine Arnauld, and has contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes and other periodicals.

SIMPSON, Maxwell, M.D., LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., born in 1815, in the city of Armagh, Ireland, is the youngest and 9th child of the late Thomas Simpson, Esq., of Beechhill, co. Armagh, and was educated at Newry School, and Trinity College, Dublin, and is A.B. and M.B. of Dublin University. The degree of M.D. (Honoris Causa) was conferred on him by the Dublin University in 1864; and that of LL.D. (Honoris Causa) in 1878—and the degree of D.Sc. by the Queen's University in 1880. He was appointed Examiner in Materia Medica in the Queen's University in 1869, and Professor of Chemistry in Queen's College, Cork, in 1872. He is the author of papers on several chemical researches, which appeared in the Comptes Rendus, the Annalen der Chemie, and the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, and were afterwards copied into most of the scientific journals in Europe. The following is a list of some of the most important of the papers:—"On two new Methods for the determination of Nitrogen in Organic and Inorganic Compounds;" "Sur une Base nouvelle obtenue par l'action de l'Ammoniaque sur le Tribromure d'Allyle;" "On the Action of Acids on Glycol;" "On the Synthesis of Succinic and Pyrotartaric Acids;" "On the action of Chloride of Iodine on Iodide of Ethylene and Propylene Gas;" "On the Synthesis of Tribasic Acids." Dr. Maxwell Simpson became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1862; is Honorary Fellow of the King and Queen's College of Physicians; a Fellow of the Chemical Society, and of the Institute of Chemistry. He was a member of the Senate of the Queen's University; and, on its extinction, became a Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland.

SIMPSON, William, was born in Glasgow, Oct. 28, 1823. He began life as an architect, and turned from that to art. He went through the war in the Crimea as an artist, and published sketches in two volumes, entitled "Campaign in the East," 1855-56. Mr. Simpson travelled in India from 1859 to 1862. The result was published in a work entitled "India, Ancient and Modern," 1867. Since 1866 he has travelled in Russia, Palestine, Abyssinia, China, Japan, America, India, Afghanistan, Central Asia, with the Afghan Boundary Commission, and other places as special artist of the Illustrated London News. In addition to the works already mentioned, he has published, "Meeting the Sun, a Journey all round the World," 1873; "Shikare and Tamasha," 1876; "Photographs from Drawings of the Prince of Wales's Visit to India," "Picturesque People," 1876; and numerous archæological papers at various times. Mr. Simpson is a member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours; an Hon. Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects; a Member of the Royal Asiatic Society; and a Fellow of the Royal Geographical and other societies.

SIMS, George Robert, was born in London, Sept. 2, 1847, and educated at Hanwell College, and afterwards at Bonn. He first joined the staff of Fun on the death of Tom Hood the younger in 1874; and the Weekly Dispatch the same year. Since 1877 he has been a contributor to the Referee under the pseudonym of "Dagonet." In that newspaper his "Dagonet Ballads" first appeared. To the Dispatch Mr. Sims contributed "Social Kaleidoscope," "Three Brass Balls," and "Theatre of Life." These have been translated into German, French and Danish. He edited One and All in 1879. He produced his first play, "Crutch and Toothpick," at the Royalty Theatre in April, 1879; "Mother-in-Law," and "Member for Slocum," 1881. These were followed by "The Gay City," and "Half-Way House," "The Lights o' London" (Princess's, Sept. 10, 1881), which ran nearly 250 nights. It was followed by "The Romany Rye," and "The Merry Duchess," a comic opera. "In the Ranks" (of which Mr. Sims was part author) was produced at the Adelphi in 1883, and ran 457 consecutive nights. His other plays are, "The Golden Ring," 1883; and "Jack in the Box" and "The Harbour Lights," written in collaboration, in 1885, ran for 513 consecutive nights. Mr. Sims has since written in collaboration the following plays: "The Golden Ladder," produced at the Globe Theatre in 1887; "The Silver Falls" and "London Day by Day," at the Adelphi; "Master and Man," at the Princess's, and "Faust Up to Date," a burlesque, at the Gaiety. The novels he has published include "Rogues and Vagabonds," "The Ring o' Bells," "Memoirs of Mary Jane," "Mary Jane Married," "Tales of To-day," "Dramas of Life," and "The Case of George Candlemas;" and his revelations of the condition of the poor in "How the Poor Live," and "Horrible London," a series of letters to the Daily News, helped to focus public attention on the housing of the working classes and to bring about the Royal Commission.

SIMS, Richard, born at Oxford, in 1816, was educated at New College School in that University, and, at the recommendation of the late Rev. Dr. Bliss, of Oxford, entered the public service in 1841 as an attendant in the Manuscript Department at the British Museum. In 1859 he became a Transcriber, and subsequently a Junior Assistant. On the accession of Mr. Bond to the Keepership of Manuscripts, in 1868, he was further promoted to the class of Senior Assistants in the same department. In 1849 he published an "Index to the Heralds' Visitations;" in 1854 "A Handbook to the Library of the British Museum;" in 1856, "A Manual for the Genealogist, Topographer, Antiquary, and Legal Professor;" in 1855, in conjunction with Mr. F. Netherclift, jun., the "Autograph Miscellany;" in 1860-61, "The Handbook to Autographs: being a Ready Guide to the Handwriting of Distinguished Men and Women of every Nation;" and in 1864-65, "The Autograph Souvenir. Mr. Sims has been for some time engaged in preparing for the press "A Classical Catalogue of Manuscripts relating to British Heraldry and Topography, deposited in the Public and many of the Private Libraries of the Kingdom," as well as a second edition of the afore-mentioned "Index to the Heralds' Visitations."

SKEAT, Professor The Rev. Walter William, M.A., born in London, Nov. 21, 1835, was educated at King's College School; at Sir R. Cholmeley's School, Highgate; and at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1858, being 14th Wrangler. He was elected Fellow of his college in July, 1860; became Curate of East Dereham, Norfolk, in Dec., 1860; Curate of Godalming, Surrey, in Dec., 1862; and Mathematical Lecturer at Christ's College in Oct., 1864. He was elected to the recently founded Elrington and Bosworth Professorship of

Anglo-Saxon at Cambridge, May 15, 1878; and re-elected to a Fellowship at Christ's College in Jan., 1883. Mr. Skeat, who has chiefly devoted his attention to Early English literature and English etymology has published: "The Songs and Ballads of Uhlund, translated from the German," 1864; "A Tale of Ludlow Castle: a Poem," 1866; and "A Mæso-Gothic Glossary," printed by the Philological Society, 1868. Mr. Skeat was chosen by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press to continue and complete the work of the well-known Anglo-Saxon scholar, the late J. M. Kemble, who died before his edition of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels was finished. In 1880 he built the steamer Eira, and again went north. After attempting to reach the east coast of Greenland, and to pass to the north-east of Spitzbergen, he returned to the south of Spitzbergen; and steaming east, and then north, through much ice, reached Franz Josef Land, on Aug. 14; then, going to the west, he discovered many islands, and over 200 miles of new coast line. In 1881 he again started in the Eira for Franz Josef Land, which he reached on July 24, but unfortunately the Eira was crushed in the ice on Aug. 21, and sank before many stores were saved. The crew built a hut of turf and stones, where they wintered, living mostly on bears and walrus. On June 21, 1882, they left in four boats, and reached Nova Zembla on Aug. 2. The next day they fell in with the Willem Barents and the Hope, which had been sent to their relief, and they arrived at Aberdeen on board the Hope on Aug. 20. He is a magistrate and D.L. for Middlesex, and a magistrate for Herts and Oxon, and a member of the Council of King's College, London.

SMITH, Professor William Robertson, M.A., LL.D. Aberd., D.D. Strasburg, was born at Keig, Aberdeenshire, Nov. 8, 1846, and educated privately, and then at Aberdeen University, the New College, Edinburgh, and the Universities of Bonn and Göttingen. He was appointed Professor of Hebrew in the Free Church College, Aberdeen, in 1870, and was removed from that office by an extraordinary act of the General Assembly in 1881, on account of his critical views as to the Old Testament, published in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and elsewhere. From 1881 he was associated with the late Professor Baynes in editing the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." From 1868 to 1870 he was assistant to the Professor of Physics at Edinburgh, and from 1872 he was a member of the Old Testament Revision Company. Professor Robertson Smith travelled in Arabia, 1879-80, and described his journey in letters to the Scotsman newspaper. In Jan., 1883, Professor Robertson Smith accepted the Lord Almoner's Professorship of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, vacant by the death of Professor Palmer. He has published "The Old Testament in the Jewish Church," 1880; "The Prophets of Israel, and their Place in History to the close of the Eighth Century B.C.," 1882; "Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia," 1885; and "Lectures on the Religion of the Semites" (first Series of Burnett Lectures), 1889. In Feb., 1886, he was appointed Librarian to the University of Cambridge, in succession to the late Mr. Henry Bradshaw, and in 1889 he succeeded the late Professor William Wright in the Sir Thomas Adams Professorship of Arabic in the same University.

SMITH-WILLIAMS, Mrs., née McKENZIE, Marian, A.R.A., an eminent contralto singer, is the elder daughter of Captain Joseph McKenzie, shipowner, of Plymouth, where she was born. She studied singing under Mr. Samuel Weeks of that town; and, coming to London, to complete her education, gained the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, also the Westmoreland Scholarship, and the bronze, silver, and gold medals of the Academy, the latter for declamatory singing. She was a pupil of Signor Randegger, and, for elocution, of Mr. Walter Lacy. She has also studied Oratorio singing with Miss Anna Williams, and has an extensive repertoire in works of the classical composers from Bach and Handel, down to those of the present day. Among the latter we notice repeated successes in Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," Dvorak's "Stabat Mater," and Dr. Hubert Parry's "Judith." Besides having a rising reputation as a Festival singer, Miss McKenzie has achieved distinction in classic and ballad concerts. With a voice remarkable for richness and sympathy, she is perhaps unrivalled for sweetness and distinctness in the use of the mother tongue. She is an Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, and of the Philharmonic Society. Miss Marian McKenzie married Mr. Smith-Williams, the brother of Miss Anna Williams, one of our leading English sopranos.

SMYTH, Charles Piazza, LL.D. Un. Ed., F.R.A.S., F.R.S.E., for a time F.R.S., and for 43 years Astronomer Royal for Scotland, was born in 1819, at Naples, and is the second of three sons of the late Admiral Smyth, but was educated in England. He commenced his astronomical service at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope, under Sir T. Maclear in 1835; and subsequently assisted in the re-measurement of La Caille's South African Arc of the Meridian. He was appointed, in 1845, to succeed Thomas Henderson, First Astronomer Royal for Scotland in the Royal Observatory, Edinburgh. He applied himself, on arrival, to clearing off five years' arrears of computation and printing; and next to continuing Meridian star observations;

besides establishing a daily time-ball, and afterwards an electrically-fired daily time-gun for the service of the City. In 1858 he was appointed to prepare for Government all the meteorological deductions furnished by 55 observing stations. In 1856, soon after his marriage with Jessie Duncan, he spent several months in testing, with her, the qualities of the Peak of Teneriffe for star observation above the level of the clouds. In 1859 he visited and published on the Russian Observatories. In 1864-5 he visited, investigated, and published on, the Great Pyramid in Egypt, and described the results in various works, one of which has just reached its 5th edit. In 1872 he began to compose a comprehensive star-catalogue and ephemeris of all the Edinburgh, and best contemporary, observations of the same stars; of which new kind of catalogue, the first Four hours were published in 1877 in the 14th volume of the Edinburgh Observatory's publications; and the last Twenty hours were published in 1886, as the 15th volume. Then, with failing instruments and insufficient means for rectifying them, he applied for retirement, and obtained it in August 1888, and was awarded a small pension. He embraced the opportunity for secluded residence in the little town of Ripon, where he is now, in 1890, endeavouring on his own scanty resources alone, to complete a 16th quarto volume of the Edinburgh Observatory series, devoted to Spectroscopy; but complains that he is oppressed almost as much as heretofore, by never ending scientific correspondence.

SODOR AND MAN, Bishop of. See BARDSELY, THE RT. REV. JOHN WAREING.

SOLLAS, Professor W. J., M.A., D.Sc., Cambridge, LL.D. Dublin, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., Officier d'Académie Française, born May 30, 1849, at Birmingham, is the son of a shipowner in London; and was educated in the City of London School, afterwards in the Royal School of Mines, and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1882. He took his B.A. degree in 1873, subsequently D.Sc., and was made an honorary LL.D. (Dublin) in 1886. He was appointed Lecturer on the Cambridge University Extension in 1873, and for it delivered courses of lectures on geology in most of the large towns of England and Wales; in 1880 he was appointed Professor of Geology and Zoology in the University College, Bristol, and in 1883 was elected Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. He has been continuously writing memoirs on scientific subjects since 1872, most of these have appeared in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, Geological Magazine, and in the publications of the Royal Irish Academy and the Royal Dublin Society. These have for subjects, amongst others: the relations of fossil to recent sponges, the replacement of silica (opal) by carbonate of lime, the origin of flint, of freshwater faunas, the estuary of the Severn, the characters of plesiosaurus, the structure and history of granite, and the anatomy of living sponges. He is the author of the article "Sponges" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and of the 24th volume of the Reports of the Challenger Expedition treating of the Tetractinellida, 1888.

SOLOMON, J. Solomon, artist, was born in Southwark, Sept. 1860. His father is a leather manufacturer, and his mother a native of Prague (Bohemia). He was educated at the school of Mr. Thomas Whitford, M.A., and privately by the Rev. Mr. Singer. His artistic training was begun in 1876, at Heatherly's School of Art in Newman Street, and the next year he entered the Schools of the Royal Academy. In 1879, through the kindness of H.I.H. Prince Lucien Bonaparte, he got an introduction to Cabanel, who received him into his studio in the Beaux Arts in Paris. The following year found him in Munich; but he thought little of the German training, and, after a tour round Italy and Holland, he returned to England, and exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy (a portrait of a gentleman). Mr. Solomon's friend Hacker and he journeyed through Spain, resting a while at the Shrine of Velasquez in Madrid, and passed the winter working in Morocco, where it was difficult at that time to induce the Moors to become their models. He again sought his master, Cabanel, and remained with him for about nine more months, having a studio of his own in Paris, and exhibiting at the Salon a portrait of Dr. Stevens, and, at the Royal Academy, a small highly-finished work, "Waiting." His next exhibit was "Ruth and Naomi," done in his garden in Tangier, on his second visit to Morocco, and since then, every year, he has shown a composition and a portrait at the Academy. The picture which first brought him any reputation was "Cassandra," now in Ballarat; then "Samson," "Niobe" following, and an allegorical work, "Sacred and Profane Love," with a portrait of Sir John Simon. Mr. Solomon was elected a Member of the Institute in 1887. At the Salon, of 1889, he received a Medal for "Niobe," and last year at the Academy he exhibited "Hippolyte," and a portrait of "Mrs. George Mosenthal," full length.

SORBY, Henry Clifton, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Woodbourne, near Sheffield, May 10, 1826, and educated at the Sheffield Collegiate School, and by private tutors. He is an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge (1879), and he has been President of the Geological Society. On April 25, 1882, he was elected President of Firth College, Sheffield. He is the author of many separate papers on the microscopical structure of rocks, on the construction and use of the microspectroscope in studying animal and vegetable colouring matter, on a new method of studying the optical characters of minerals, on the physical geography of former geological periods, and on various other subjects connected with geology and the use of the microscope. His latest publications have been on the microscopical structure of iron and steel, and on the temperature of the water in estuaries. He is now much occupied with certain special archæological studies, and in making preparations of invertebrate animals, as lantern slides, and for museum specimens.

SOUTHWELL, Bishop of. See RIDDING, THE RIGHT REV. GEORGE.

SPAIN, King of. See ALFONSO XIII.

SPAIN, Queen-Regent of. See MARIA CHRISTINA.

SPENCE, The Very Rev. Henry Donald Maurice, M.A., D.D., Dean of Gloucester, son of George Spence, Esq., Q.C., M.P., born in Pall Mall, London, in 1836, was educated at Westminster School and at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (B.A., 1864; M.A., 1866; D.D., 1887). While at the University he obtained a first-class in the voluntary theological tripos (1864), the Carus Undergraduate University Prize (1864), and the Carus and Scholefield University Prize (1865, and again, 1866). He was Select Preacher at the University Church in 1883 and 1887. He was appointed Professor of Modern Literature in David's College, Lampeter, in 1865; Rector of St. Mary de Crypt, Gloucester, 1870; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol (Dr. Ellicott), in 1870; Principal of the Theological College of Gloucester, and Honorary Canon of Gloucester in 1875. In 1877 the vicarage of St. Pancras, London, was presented to him by the Queen. Mr. Spence was in the same year appointed Rural Dean of St. Pancras. In 1886 he was appointed by the Crown to the Deanery of Gloucester. He has contributed many papers to the "Bible Educator," Good Words and other magazines; is joint author with Dean Howson of a Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles (Anglo-American Commentary); and is one of the Commentators of the New Testament and also of the Old Testament, edited by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Dean Spence is likewise editor and one of the writers of the "Pulpit Commentary on the Old and New Testaments," of which work 35 volumes have already been published (1890), and of several works on the Talmud. He is the author of a translation of the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," with excursus and notes (1885). He married Louise, daughter of David Jones, Esq., M.P., for Carmarthenshire.

SPENCER, Herbert, was born at Derby, in 1820. He was educated by his father, a teacher in Derby, and his uncle, the Rev. Thomas Spencer, a clergyman of the Established Church, who was active in various philanthropic movements. At the age of seventeen he became a civil engineer, but after about eight years abandoned the profession, having during that period contributed various papers to the Civil Engineers' and Architects' Journal. His first productions in general literature were a series of letters on "The Proper Sphere of Government," published in the Nonconformist in 1842, which were reprinted in pamphlet form. From 1848 to 1853 he was engaged as sub-editor of the Economist, and during that time published his first considerable work, "Social Statics: or, the Conditions essential to Human Happiness specified, and the first of them developed," 1851, but this is out of print and has been suppressed. Various articles, chiefly for the Westminster and other quarterly reviews, were written during the next four years. In 1855 appeared his "Principles of Psychology," which interpreted the phenomena of mind on the general principle of evolution (this was four years before the "Origin of Species" appeared). A break-down in health followed, which prevented work for eighteen months. 1857, 1858, and 1859, were occupied in writing various essays for the quarterly reviews, &c. In 1860 Mr. Spencer issued the programme of his "System of Sys-

thetic Philosophy," which proposed to carry out in its application to all orders of phenomena the general law of evolution set forth in two essays published in 1857. To the execution of this project his subsequent life has been mainly devoted. Of the works composing the System, the following have already been published: "First Principles," 1862 (7th edit., 1889); "The Principles of Biology," 2 vols., 1864 (4th edit., 1888); "The Principles of Psychology," 2 vols., 1872 (5th edit., 1890); "The Principles of Sociology," vol. I., 1876 (3rd edit., 1885); "Ceremonial Institutions," 1879 (3rd edit., 1888); "Political Institutions," 1882 (2nd edit., 1885); "Ecclesiastical Institutions," 1885 (2nd edit., 1886); "The Data of Ethics," 1879 (5th edit., 1888). Mr. Spencer's other works are:—"Education: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical," 1861 (23rd edit., 1890); "Essays: Scientific, Political, and Speculative," 2 vols., 1858-63 (4th edit., 3 vols., 1885); "The Classification of the Sciences; to which are added, Reasons for Dissenting from the Philosophy of M. Comte," 1864 (3rd edit., 1871); "The Study of Sociology," 1873 (11th edit., 1885); "The Man versus the State," 1884 (8th thousand, 1886). Beyond his own proper work Mr. Spencer has published eight parts of the "Descriptive Sociology," classified and arranged by himself, and compiled by Professor Duncan, Dr. Scheppig, and Mr. Collier. This work was originally undertaken simply for the purpose of providing himself with materials for the "Principles of Sociology," but was eventually published for the use of others. Part VIII., published in 1881, contained the announcement that having during the preceding 14 years sunk between £3,000 and £4,000 in the undertaking, he could no longer continue it. Mr. Spencer paid a visit to the United States in 1882. On May 12, 1883, he was elected a correspondent of the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, for the section of Philosophy, in the room of Emerson, but he declined that in common with all Academic honours. Mr. Spencer's works have been extensively translated. All are rendered into French, nearly all into German and Russian, many into Italian and Spanish; and the work on Education has appeared also in Hungarian, Bohemian, Polish, Dutch, Danish, Swedish, Greek, Japanese, and Chinese. Since 1886 Mr. Spencer has been an invalid, and has published very little.

SPENCER (Earl), The Right Hon. John Poyntz Spencer, K.G., LL.D., only son of the fourth Earl Spencer, born at Spencer House, Oct. 27, 1835, received his education at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1857. He represented the southern division of the county of Northampton in the House of Commons from April to Dec., 1857, when he succeeded to the title on his father's death. He was Groom of the Stole to the late Prince Consort, 1859-61; and Groom of the Stole to the Prince of Wales, 1862-67. In Dec., 1868, he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and he made his public entry into Dublin Jan. 16, 1869. He retained that office till the resignation of the Gladstone Ministry in Feb., 1874. On the return of the Liberals to office in May, 1880, he was appointed Lord President of the Council. He was nominated Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, on the resignation of Earl Cowper, May 1, 1882, retaining his seat in the Cabinet. He arrived in Dublin Castle on May 6, on the evening of which day Lord Frederick Cavendish, the newly-appointed Chief Secretary, and Mr. Thomas A. Burke, the Under-Secretary, were stabbed to death by assassins in the Phoenix Park, close to the Castle. After this it fell to Lord Spencer to administer the provisions of the Crimes Act. In March, 1883, Earl Spencer resigned the office of Lord President of the Council, but still remained a member of the Cabinet, until the close of Mr. Gladstone's administration in June, 1885. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to office in Feb. of the following year, Lord Spencer became for the second time Lord President of the Council. By that time he had adopted Home Rule opinions, and his support was of great value to the government. The University of Dublin conferred on Lord Spencer the honorary degree of LL.D. June 30, 1883. His lordship is Lord-Lieutenant and Chairman of the County Council of Northamptonshire.

SPERANI, Madame Bruno, is the nom de plume of one of the most famous Italian authoresses of the present day. She is a native of Dalmatia. One of her short sketches, which is entitled "The two Houses," is a charming story of child-life, and gives us an interesting glimpse of her own childhood on the shores of the Adriatic—a barren and desolate region, but with a wild beauty of its own in sea and sky and distant mountains. Left an orphan at an early age, the little girl was brought up by two very severe old aunts, who put as much restraint as possible upon the warm, impulsive nature of their niece. She loved to escape from the dull, monotonous house and ramble on the sea shore in company with the old dog Fiume and a few favourite playmates. After such wanderings the return home in the evening with torn frock and other mishaps would be followed by scolding and punishment. The house in town was still more dull and monotonous, for escapades in the country were then impossible; the only consolation was an attic full of all sorts of odds and ends fascinating to a childish heart. Among the débris were books, and here Mme. Sperani began to love literature, spending many a lonely hour in the company of Leopardi, Ossian, Ivanhoe—a pell-mell of fairy tales, novels, poems—all devoured eagerly. Her works are, as yet, comparatively little known outside Italy; no one has, we believe, translated them into English, though a German edition of one, if not more, of her books has already appeared. Mme. Sperani began her literary career by writing for newspapers and magazines, but she became celebrated by the novels which she has given to the world during the last twelve years. Her books are remarkable as showing a broader interest in social problems, and a more fearless way of attacking them than is the case with the writings of most women—and many men. They are not merely stories pure and simple—recitals, that is, of what certain people did and said on certain days, how they looked, and so forth; they have a deeper raison d'être in that they deal with some question of human and social life—they are written with a purpose. At the same time they are so interesting as to be read eagerly by those who look for no deeper meaning than a story of events. Mme. Sperani takes wide views of things; sometimes, it is true, disagreeing with the conventional standards. She writes because she has something to say, and goes straight to the point with a simple, forcible directness which carries you with her, making you at all events think about the matter, whether you agree with her conclusions or not. This was the case with a novel of hers entitled, "La Morte," in which the authoress has treated most delicately and skilfully a difficult social question—one of vital interest, moreover, to society—which may be thus summed up: Is a woman who has sinned against the laws of society to be for ever condemned and unpardoned—ruined, in fact? The book had many who agreed with its conclusions and many who condemned it, but it was, at any rate, eagerly read. The most important work of Mme. Sperani is one published a few years ago, entitled "Numeri e Sogni" (Numbers and Dreams), a story describing the life of a young painter. Mme. Sperani shows wonderful insight in portraying, not only the outward circumstances, but the inner life of an artist; she shows his efforts to realise some ideal conception—how he falls short, often because the world with its absorbing interests rushes in to jar and fret him—the moment of inspiration passes, never to be recalled. At present she is in the prime of life, busy with her works, full of interest in all social and literary questions—in fact, in all that tends to make life freer and fuller. She lives in a quiet and retired manner in Milan (the great centre of literary activity in Italy), and is the mother of a daughter who has already written some promising sketches in magazines.

SPIELHAGEN, Friedrich, a German novelist, was born at Magdeburg, Feb. 20, 1829, being the son of a Government official. At an early age he accompanied his father to Stralsund, and on that journey the sea made a lasting impression on the susceptible mind of the future novelist, who has in most of his works described life and incidents at sea with remarkable force and vividness. In 1847 he entered the University of Berlin, and then removed to Bonn, where he applied himself to the study of the law for about six months, and then turned his attention to philological and literary studies, which he pursued with great zeal in Berlin and at Greifswald. In 1854 he settled at Leipzig, where he taught in the Gymnasium, but the sudden death of his father changed his circumstances and prospects, and led to his adopting literature as a profession. Since the year 1854 he has brought out, with ever increasing success, a series of novels, which have gained for him a foremost place among German writers of fiction. His larger works are: "Problematical Natures," 1861, 9th edit. 1880, and its sequel "Through Night to Light," 1862; "Hammer and Anvil," 1869, 8th edit. 1881; "Ever Forward!" 1872; "What the Swallow Sang," 1873; and "Storm-Floods," 1878. He has also written "The Hohensteins," 1864; "Rank and File," 1866; "Low Land," 1879; and "Quisisana," 1880. Among his smaller pieces are "Clara Vere," 1857; "On the Downs," 1858; "At the Twelfth Hour," 1863; "The Rose of the Court," 1864; "Hans and Margaret," a village story, 1868; "The Village Coquette," 1869; "German Pioneers," 1870; "Ultimo," 1873; "The Skeleton in the House," 1879; and "Angela," 1881; two comedies, "Love for Love," 1875, and "Uhlen-

SPRENGEL, Hermann Johann Philipp, Dr. phil. (Heidelberg, 1858), F.R.S. (London, 1878), was born in 1834, at Schillerslage, near Hanover in Germany, and received his education first at the family home, by a private tutor, later at school in the town of Hanover, whence he removed to the Universities of Göttingen and Heidelberg, where he studied natural sciences (chemistry and physics in particular), and took his degree Aug. 2, 1858 (examine rigoroso summa cum laude superato). Coming to England early in 1859 he engaged in research-work with the Professor of Chemistry at the University of Oxford till the middle of 1862; after which he settled in London, engaged in research-work at the laboratories of the Royal College of Chemistry, Guy's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, till the autumn of 1864; and, since then, in work more or less connected with his inventions and discoveries, which, with only a few exceptions, he published in English. The more important among these refer to the two extremes in the gaseous state of matter—to vacua and detonating agents. As to vacua he discovered (Journal of the Chemical Society, 1865) a new method of producing them, viz., by the fall of water or mercury in tubes, a method distinguished by its convenience and effectiveness. Thus we see (Chemical News, vol. xxix., p. 125) that in 1870 his mercury air-pump produced vacua so nearly perfect, that the trace of air remaining in the exhausted vessel amounted to only $\frac{1}{1000000}$ part of its original volume, leaving for further cultivation that field which lies between $\frac{1}{1000000}$ and 0. The eyes of the scientific world turned towards this instrument in 1866, after the late Professor Graham, Master of the Mint, had bestowed upon it (anent his then newly discovered occluded gases) the following encomium (Philosophical Transactions, vol. 156, p. 408): "The pneumatic instrument of Dr. Sprengel is particularly applicable to researches of the present kind. Indeed without the use of his invention some parts of the inquiry would have been practically impossible." Since then this instrument has become a very useful servant both in science and industry, and has been singularly productive of further important results, which to enumerate fully we have no space. Suffice it to point to a few, e.g., to Bunsen's filtering-process, to Crookes's radiometer-work and to Edison and Swan's incandescent vacuum-lamp industry. Dr. Sprengel's researches on explosives (Journal of the Chemical Society, 1873) can likewise be only briefly referred to here. He was the first who drew attention to Picric acid (Melinite, Lyddite) as a powerful explosive, when fired by a detonator. He was the first who suggested Ammonium-Nitrate as the basis of an explosive and fired the first ammonium-nitrate shot, which started the industry in this class of explosives, represented by Explosif Favier, Bellite, Securite, Roburite, &c. He was the first who described and patented in England a number of substances called Safety-Explosives, consisting either of two liquids or of a liquid and a solid, which are non-explosive by themselves, but become explosive when mixed, and are known as Hellhoffite, Oxonite, Pancastite, Rackarock, &c. The latter one in particular, consisting of 79 parts of potassium chlorate and 21 parts of nitrobenzol, has recently become famous in America, for it was chosen by Gen. John Newton, Chief of Engineers, U.S. Army, to rack a rock called Flood Rock, which, covering an area of nine acres, obstructed Hell-Gate, an entry to the harbour of New York. The mine, excavated underneath this rock, was charged with 107 tons of "rackarock" primed by 22 tons of dynamite, and the whole enormous charge (costing £22,190) was successfully fired Oct. 10, 1885. The explosion, which ensued, produced an earthquake of one minute's duration felt at a distance of 135 miles, and will be remembered as the greatest of its kind as yet recorded.

SPRIGG, Sir John Gordon, K.C.M.G., Commander of the Legion of Honour, was born at Ipswich, Suffolk, in 1830, and is the son of a Baptist Minister. He went to the Cape Colony in 1858, owing to ill-health; and was first returned to the House of Assembly in 1869. He has been twice Prime Minister of the Colony, and has held various Ministerial Offices for nearly ten years.

SPULLER, Eugène, a French politician, born at Seurre (Côte-d'Or), Dec. 8, 1835, studied at the Lyceum and the Faculty of Laws at Dijon, and became a member of the Paris Bar in 1862. After having been employed in several political cases, he abandoned the legal profession in order to engage in active political life and journalism. At the general election of 1863 he supported at private meetings the candidature of Émile Ollivier against the official candidature of M. Varin, in the third circonscription of the Seine. He then became editor of the Europe of Frankfurt, and contributed to the Nain Jaune, the Journal de Paris, and the Journal de Genève. Having formed a friendship with M. Gambetta, he became, in 1868, one of the founders of the Revue Politique. He was also one of the contributors to the Encyclopédie Générale (1869-70). At the legislative elections of 1869 he opposed M. Emile Ollivier's candidature, which, not long before, he had supported; and he vehemently opposed the plébiscite of May, 1870, publishing a "Petite Histoire du Second Empire, utile à lire avant le vote du Plébiscite." After the revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he was M. Gambetta's confidential friend and secretary, and in Nov. 1871, he became the principal editor of La République Française. He resigned that post in 1876, when he was elected a Deputy for the 3rd arrondissement of Paris. On Feb. 6, 1880, he was elected President of the Advanced Left Deputies, defeating the more Radical M. Boysset by 51 to 37. Besides the works already cited, M. Spuller has written, "Michelet, sa vie et ses œuvres," 1876; "Ignace de Loyola et la Compagnie de Jésus," 1876; and "La Compagnie de Jésus devant l'Histoire," 1877; and a collection of his "Conferences," 1879.

SPURGEON, Charles Haddon, born at Kelvedon, Essex, June 19, 1834, was educated at Colchester, Maidstone, and elsewhere, and became usher in a school at Newmarket. Having adopted Baptist views, he joined the congregation which had been presided over by the late Robert Hall, at Cambridge. He subsequently became pastor at Waterbeach, and his fame as a preacher reached London, and he was offered the Pastorate of the Church meeting in New Park-street chapel, in Southwark. Mr. Spurgeon first preached before a London congregation in 1853, with so much success, that ere two years had elapsed it was considered necessary to enlarge the building, pending which alteration he officiated for four months at Exeter Hall. The enlargement of the chapel in Park-street, however, proved insufficient, and hearers multiplied with such rapidity, that it became expedient to engage the Surrey Music Hall; and Mr. Spurgeon's followers determined to build a suitable edifice for their services. The Metropolitan Tabernacle was opened in 1861. Mr. Spurgeon has published a sermon weekly since the first week of 1855; and at the end of 1889 the series—inclusive of double numbers—had reached No. 2,120. The weekly circulation is about 25,000. He has published a number of other works, the chief of which is "The Treasury of David," or an exposition of the Psalms, in seven volumes, 8vo. The Stockwell Orphanage, founded by him in 1867, has since been enlarged to accommodate 250 boys and as many girls, and down to 1889, more than 1,100 children had been received. The Pastors' College, founded by him in 1856, has educated over 800 men, of whom in 1889, 673 were still engaged as pastors, missionaries, evangelists, or in some department or other in the work of the Lord. The Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association has about seventy or eighty agents, occupying districts in different parts of the country, who, in addition to other service, sell pure literature in the course of a year to the amount of about £9,000. "A Book Fund," carried on in Mr. Spurgeon's house, and superintended by Mrs. Spurgeon, has in ten years supplied indigent ministers of various denominations, free of cost, with over 115,000 volumes. Mr. Spurgeon carries on a society for evangelists at home, and another for mission work in North Africa. His church has about 30 Mission Halls and Schools affiliated with it. In 1879 Mr. Spurgeon received "A Silver Wedding" Testimonial of over £6,000. In 1884, on his attaining his 50th year, another sum of about £5,000 was presented. These funds were almost entirely distributed in charity, £5,000 having been devoted to the endowment of the Tabernacle almshouses. In 1887 Mr. Spurgeon withdrew from the Baptist Union.

STAINER, Sir John, was born in 1840, and was a chorister at St. Paul's between 1847 and 1856. At the age of sixteen he became organist to St. Michael's College, Tenbury, then recently founded by the late Sir F. G. Ouseley; and three years afterwards, he was, at the early age of nineteen, made organist of Magdalen College, Oxford. He seized the opportunity of graduating in arts as well as in music, proceeding to Mus. Bac. in 1859, B.A. 1863, Mus. Doc. 1865, M.A. 1866. In 1860 Dr. Stainer had been appointed organist of the University Church by the then Vice-Chancellor, the Rev. Dr. Jeune, late Bishop of Peterborough, and he held this appointment, together with the organistship of Magdalen, until 1872, when he was appointed to succeed Sir John Goss, as organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, which post he resigned early in 1888. He has composed a large number of anthems and Church services, as well as songs of a secular character, a "Treatise on Harmony" (5th edit. 1881), educational primers on Harmony, Composition, and the Organ, and "The Music of the Bible." He has achieved a high reputation as a scientific musician. A cantata by Dr. Stainer, "The Daughter of Jairus," was composed for, and produced at, the Worcester Festival, 1878. In 1883 his cantata, "St. Mary Magdalen," was produced at the Gloucester Festival. In the same year Dr. Stainer was appointed Inspector of Music to the Education Department in the place of the late Dr. Hullah, and also had the honour of being nominated a member of the Council of the Royal College of Music by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. In 1885 Dr. Stainer received the degree of Mus. Doc. honoris causâ, from the University of Durham. In 1888 he received the honour of Knighthood, and in 1889 was appointed Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, as successor to Sir F. G. Onseley, deceased. He is an honorary member of the Royal Academy of Music, an honorary Fellow of the Tonic Solfa College, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the college of Organists, and President of the Musical Association.

STANFORD, Professor Charles Villiers, is the son of the late John Stanford, Esq., Examiner to the Irish Court of Chancery. He was born in Dublin, Sept. 30, 1852, and received his first musical instruction from Mr. A. O'Leary, and Sir R. P. Stewart. In 1870 he matriculated at Queen's College, Cambridge, but shortly afterwards migrated to Trinity, where, on the death of Dr. J. L. Hopkins in 1873, he was elected organist of the College, a post he has retained ever since. In the same year he was appointed conductor of the University Musical Society. In 1874 Dr. Stanford graduated in classical honours, and shortly afterwards studied music at Leipzig, under Reinecke, and in Berlin, under Kiel. His principal compositions up to 1876, are a setting of Klopstock's Hymn "Die Auferstehung" (op. 5), incidental music to Tennyson's "Queen Mary" (op. 6), and a setting of the 46th Psalm (op. 8), first performed by the Cambridge University Musical Society in 1876. In 1877 Dr. Stanford took the degree of M.A. In the same year an overture by him was produced at the Gloucester Festival, and a Symphony at the Crystal Palace. The next few years were devoted to the writing of various chamber compositions, two church services (one of which was written for the Festival of the sons of the Clergy in 1880), and a grand opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan" (libretto by W. Barclay Squire), which was produced at Hanover, Feb. 6, 1881. In 1882 an Elegiac Symphony was performed at Cambridge, a Choral Hymn (op. 16) to words by Klopstock at St. Paul's Cathedral, and an Orchestral Serenade (op. 17) at the Birmingham Festival. Shortly afterwards he published a collection of old Irish songs. At the opening of the Royal College of Music Dr. Stanford was appointed Professor of Composition and Orchestral playing, and in 1883, the honorary degree of Mus. Doc. was conferred upon him by the University of Oxford. In 1884 he produced two new operas, "Savonarola" at Hamburg, and (within a fortnight) "The Canterbury Pilgrims" at Drury Lane; the librettos of both works were by G. A. A'Beckett. The same year witnessed the production at the Norwich Festival of a setting of Walt. Whitman's Elegiac Ode for Abraham Lincoln (op. 21), three Cavalier Songs (words by Robert Browning) (op. 18), and a pianoforte sonata (op. 20), played at the Monday Popular Concerts. In 1885 Dr. Stanford was elected Conductor of the Bach Choir. His oratorio "The Three Holy Children" (op. 22) was produced at the Birmingham Festival, and his music to the "Eumenides" (op. 23) of Æschylus at the performance of the play at Cambridge. His choral setting of Tennyson's ballad, "The Revenge" (op. 24), was performed at the Leeds Festival of 1886, and a pianoforte quintett (op. 25), at the Monday Popular Concerts. In 1887 he set to music the "Carmen Sæculare of Lord Tennyson, which was performed at a State Concert with Madame Albani as Solo Soprano. The same artist sang the principal part in a setting of the 150th Psalm, written expressly for the opening of the Manchester Exhibition of the same year. Dr. Richter conducted the first performance of his "Irish" Symphony (op. 28), and the following autumn his music to "The Edipus Rex" (op. 29), of Sophocles was given at Cambridge. Shortly afterwards he was elected Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, in succession to Sir George Macfarren. In January, 1888, Professor Stanford conducted at Berlin his fourth Symphony in F (op. 31), on which occasion also Dr. Joachim played a Violin Suite with orchestral accompaniment (op. 32). His setting of Tennyson's "Voyage of Maeldune" was produced at the Leeds Festival of the same year. His latest work is an oratorio, "Eden," of which the poem has been written by Mr. Robert Bridges. This work is announced for production at the Birmingham Festival of 1891.

STANHOPE, The Right Hon. Edward, the second son of Philip Henry, fifth Earl Stanhope, and Emily Harriet, daughter of General Sir Edward Kerri-son, was born in Grosvenor place, Sept. 24, 1840, and educated at Harrow, and Christ Church, Oxford. He obtained a first class in mathematics at the first public examination, Dec. 1861, graduated B.A., 1862, M.A., 1865; and was elected Fellow of All Souls', 1862. He was called to the Bar in 1865, and was elected M.P. for Mid-Lincolnshire in Feb. 1874, for which constituency he sat until 1885, when he was elected for the Horncastle Division of that county. He was parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade from Nov., 1875 to April, 1878, Under Secretary of State for India from that date until April, 1880, Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education from June to August, 1885, and President of the Board of Trade from the latter date until Jan. 1886. He is a Trustee of the National Portrait Gallery. In Lord Salisbury's Cabinet of August, 1886, he was appointed Secretary of State for the Colonies, and was transferred to the War Office in January, 1887.

STANLEY, The Right Hon. Frederick Arthur, Lord Stanley of Preston, G.C.B., P.C., Governor-General of Canada, younger son of the fourteenth, and brother of the present Earl of Derby, by Emma, second daughter of the first Lord Skelmersdale, was born in London in 1841, and received his education at Eton. He entered the Grenadier Guards in 1858, was appointed Lieutenant and Captain in 1862, and retired in 1865. He represented Preston in the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, from July, 1865, till Dec., 1868, when he was elected for North Lancashire. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from Aug. to Dec., 1868, and Financial Secretary for War from Feb., 1874, till Aug., 1877, when he became Financial Secretary to the Treasury. On April 2, 1878, Colonel Stanley was appointed Secretary of State for War, in succession to Mr. Hardy, now Lord Cranbrook, and was sworn of the Privy Council. In the autumn recess of that year he and Mr. W. H. Smith, the First Lord of the Admiralty, with a numerous suite, visited the island of Cyprus. He went out of office with his party, in April, 1880. In Lord Salisbury's government he was Secretary of State for the Colonies from June, 1885, till Feb., 1886, and in the Cabinet of Aug., 1886, was appointed President of the Board of Trade, and raised to the peerage with the title of Lord Stanley of Preston. In 1888 he became Governor-General of Canada. He married, in 1864, Lady Constance, eldest daughter of the fourth Earl of Clarendon. Lord Stanley is heir presumptive to the Earldom of Derby.

STANLEY, Henry Morton, D.C.L., LL.D., African Explorer, was born near Denbigh, in Wales, on Jan. 28, 1841. When three years of age he was placed in the poor-house of St. Asaph, where he remained ten years, and received an education which enabled him to teach in a school. At the age of fifteen he sailed as cabin-boy in a vessel bound for New Orleans. Here he was adopted by a merchant named Stanley, whose name he took, in place of his original one, which was John Rowlands. His patron died without leaving a will, and young Stanley was left to his own resources. He enlisted in the Confederate army, was made a prisoner, and subsequently joined the Federal Navy, serving as acting ensign on the Ticoncleroga. After the close of the war he went to Turkey as a newspaper correspondent, and in 1867 was sent by the New York Herald as its correspondent with the British army in Abyssinia, and subsequently travelled in Spain and elsewhere for the same paper. He was finally sent by the conductor of the Herald to find Dr. Livingstone, of whom nothing had been heard for more than two years. Stanley sailed from Bombay in Oct., 1870, and reached Zanzibar, on the east coast of Africa, early in Jan., 1871, and on Nov. 10 found Livingstone at Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika, where he had just arrived from the south-west. Stanley furnished him with supplies, explored the northern part of Lake Tanganyika with him, and remained until Feb., 1872, when Livingstone started on the journey from which he never returned, and Stanley made his way back to Europe, reaching England in July, 1872. Here he was received with great enthusiasm, was publicly entertained and presented by Her Majesty with a gold snuff-box set with diamonds, and by the Royal Geographical Society (1873) with the patron's Gold Medal. The éclat of his first expedition induced the conductors of the New York Herald and of the London Daily Telegraph to send him, at their own expense, on another African expedition. He reached Zanzibar in the autumn of 1874, and learning that Livingstone was dead, resolved to go north-westward, and explore the region of Lake Victoria N'yanza. This, after many encounters with the natives and the loss by death or desertion of 104 men out of 300, he reached in Feb., 1875, and found it to be the largest body of fresh water on the globe, having an area of 40,000 square miles. He then pushed westward towards Lake Albert N'yanza, and was able to satisfy himself that it was not, as had been generally supposed, connected with Lake Tanganyika. Forced by the hostility of the natives to return to Ujiji, he determined to descend the great river discovered by Livingstone, and believed by him to be the Nile, but which others thought was the Congo (and Stanley by this journey ascertained it was). It had been named by Livingstone the Luálaba, but by Stanley it was named the Livingstone. The descent, chiefly by canoes, occupied him eight months, cost him the lives of thirty-five men, and was accomplished under the greatest difficulties and privations. On reaching a settlement on the coast, a Portuguese national vessel took him to St. Paul de Loanda, whence an English vessel conveyed the party to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence to Zanzibar. Here his men were left at their home; and Stanley reached England in Feb., 1878. He has published an account of his first expedition, under the title of "How I found Livingstone," 1872. Of his second expedition an account is given in "Through the Dark Continent," 1878 (abridged edition, 1885). The President of the French Geographical Society presented the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour to Mr. Stanley at the Sorbonne, Paris, June 28, 1878. In 1879-82 he visited Africa again, sent there by the Brussels African International Association with a view to developing the great basin of the river Congo. The King of the Belgians devoted from his private purse £50,000 per annum towards this costly enterprise. Stanley completed the work in 1884, having established trading stations along the Congo River from its mouth to Stanley Pool, 1400 miles by river. A description of his labours in this field was published by him in 1885 under title of "The Congo and the Founding of its Free State." On Jan. 13, 1887, he was presented with the honorary freedom of the City of London, just on the eve of his departure for a fourth time to Africa. This expedition was made for the purpose of relieving Emin Pasha, Governor of Equatorial Africa, whose condition was known in Europe to have become precarious. Stanley fulfilled his mission, succoured Emin and brought him and his followers safely back to Egypt, but only after the most severe hardships endured in any of his explorations, and with a loss of over 400 out of the 650 men he had taken with him. Nearly three years were occupied in the journey. Among the important geographical results of the expedition were the discovery of the Semliki River, of Mount Ruvenzori (thought to be 17,000 feet high), of Lake Albert Edward, and of the South-western extension of Lake Victoria. Lake Albert Edward proved to be the primary source of the White Nile, and it was shown that its waters connect through the Semliki with the Albert N'yanza. Stanley reached Cairo near the close of 1889 and remained there until the following spring in order to write a record of the journey. This was published simultaneously in England, France, Germany, and the United States in June, 1890, under title of "In Darkest Africa" (2 vols.). His return to England was an unending ovation. The Universities of Oxford and Durham bestowed upon him the degree of D.C.L.; that of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge, and every institution and individual sought to do him honour. On July 12, 1890, in Westminster Abbey, he was married to Miss Dorothy Tennant.

STANNARD, Mrs. Arthur, "John Strange Winter," the popular author of "Bootles' Baby" and many other well-known novels, who was recently described by Mr. Ruskin (in a letter to the Daily Telegraph) as "The author to whom we owe the most finished and faithful rendering ever given of the British soldier," was born at York on Jan. 13, 1856. She was the only daughter of the late Rev. H. V. Palmer, Rector of St. Margaret's, York, who, before taking Holy Orders was in the Royal Artillery, and was one of the officers selected to attend the Coronation of Queen Victoria. One of her ancestors was the celebrated actress, Hannah Pritchard, to whose memory a monument was erected, by public subscription, in Westminster Abbey, close to those of Shakespeare and Scott. Mrs. Stannard began her public literary career in 1874; and was, for some years after then, a prolific contributor to periodical literature. Her first publication in volume form was a collection of military sketches entitled, "Cavalry Life," issued in 1881, for which her publishers induced her to adopt the masculine nom de guerre by which she has since become so well known. In 1885 two stories from her pen, entitled, "Bootles' Baby" and "Houp-la," appeared in the Graphic, and attracted immediate attention from the author's racy style and evident familiarity with army matters and child life. Up to this time it was universally assumed that the author was a cavalry officer, but when the success of "Bootles' Baby" had established her reputation as a competent writer on army life, she disclosed her identity. Since then she has become a familiar and favourite figure in literary and artistic circles. The following is a list of her works:—"Cavalry Life," "Regimental Legends," "Bootles' Baby," "Houp-la," "Pluck," "In Quarters," "On March," "Army Society," "Garrison Gossip," "Mignon's Secret," "That Imp!" "Mignon's Husband," "A Siege Baby," "Confessions of a Publisher," "Bootles' Children," "Beautiful Jim," "My Poor Dick," "Harvest," "A Little Fool," "Buttons," "Mrs. Boh," "Dinna Forget." She was married in 1884 to Mr. Arthur Stannard, a civil engineer, and has three children.

STANSFELD, The Right Hon. James, M.P., the eldest son of Mr. James Stansfeld, of Moorlands, Judge of the County Court of Yorkshire, at Halifax (who died Jan. 29, 1872), was born at Halifax in 1820; and educated at University College, London, where he attained the degree of LL.B. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1840; was elected one of the members for Halifax, in the advanced Liberal interest, in April, 1859; was appointed a Lord of the Admiralty in April, 1863, and resigned in April, 1864, owing to the dissatisfaction caused by his intimacy with the conspirator Mazzini. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State under Lord Russell's second administration, in Feb., 1866, and retired in June of that year. He was made Third Lord of the Treasury on Mr. Gladstone's coming into office in Dec., 1868, and in Oct., 1869, he succeeded Mr. Ayrton as one of the joint Secretaries to the Treasury. The latter office he resigned in March, 1871, when he succeeded Mr. Goschen as President of the Poor Law Board. He was appointed the first President of the new Local Government Board in Aug., 1871; and held that office till the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet in Jan., 1874. Mr. Stansfeld supported Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule policy, and in 1886, on the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain, succeeded him as President of the Local Government Board, re-entering the Cabinet for the first time for twelve years. He has continued to sit for Halifax since 1859. Mr. Stansfeld is chiefly known throughout the country for his opposition to the Contagious Diseases Acts, and his support of woman's suffrage.

STANTON, Vincent Henry, son of Rev. V. J. Stanton, late Rector of Halesworth, Suffolk, and formerly Colonial Chaplain of Victoria, Hong Kong, is descended, on the mother's side, from Robert Barclay, of Ury, and was born at Victoria, Hong Kong, June 1, 1846. He was educated at Kensington Grammar School, and by private tuition; was Minor Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge 1866; Major Scholar 1868; B.A. 1870 (20th Wrangler and 2nd class in Classical Tripos); M.A. 1873; B.D. 1890; and Fellow of Trinity College, 1872. He was ordained deacon 1872, and priest 1874; appointed one of the first University Extension Lecturers on the commencement of the scheme in 1873; was made Junior Dean of Trinity College 1874-76; Senior Dean 1876-84; Tutor 1884-89; Divinity Lecturer at Trinity 1882-89; Ely Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, and Canon of Ely 1889; Select Preacher before the University in 1874, 1878, &c.; Hulsean Lecturer 1879; Cambridge Whitehall Preacher 1880-81; Examining Chaplain from 1875 to the successive Bishops of Ely. He has for some years taken an active part in college and university business, and is a member of the Council of the Senate of the University; and is the author of "The Jewish and the Christian Messiah, A Study in the Earliest History of Christianity," and of various sermons and pamphlets.

STAPLETON, Augustus Granville, born in 1800, was educated at Rugby and St. John's, Cambridge. He was appointed private secretary to Mr. Canning in 1822. At that statesman's death he was made a Commissioner of Customs by desire of George IV., as "a tribute to Mr. Canning's memory," and having been entrusted with Canning's papers, he published, in 1830, his "Political Life during his last tenure of office. Mr. Stapleton contributed letters on foreign policy, signed "Sulpicius," to the Times during April and May, 1836. He contested Birmingham (without success) at the election in 1837. In 1843 he published two pamphlets on Ireland. From 1850 to 1855 he contributed letters on foreign policy and international law; signed "Lex Publica," to the Morning Herald. He published in 1850 "Suggestions for a Conservative and Popular Reform of the House of Commons," advising a distinct and separate representation in Parliament of the educated classes. This was followed by a pamphlet on "The Educational Franchise." He was invited in 1851, by the friends of Protestant education in Ireland, to examine the schools under the National Board and the Church Education Society, and he gave evidence (1853) before a Committee of the House of Lords as to the result of his inquiry. In 1857 he published a pamphlet, "Hostilities at Canton," on the Lorcha Arrow case; and in 1859 "George Canning and his Times;" in 1866, "Intervention and Non-Intervention;" in 1868, "The Origin of Fenianism;" in 1871, "The French Case truly stated," showing how the French Government were beguiled into the declaration of war against Prussia; and in 1873, essays in Macmillan's Magazine, commenting, from a contemporary point of view, on Charles Greville's Memoirs.

STEAD, William Thomas, was born at Embleton, Northumberland, on July 5, 1849; and is the son of a Congregational Minister who, a few months later, settled in Howdon-on-Tyne. Mr. Stead was educated at home and at Wakefield. He left school when 14; became office boy in a mercantile office, then Russian Vice-Consulate at Newcastle-on-Tyne; was appointed editor of the Northern Echo, a halfpenny daily paper published at Darlington, July, 1871; assistant editor to Mr. J. Morley on the Pall Mall Gazette Sept., 1880; succeeded to the control of the paper in the spring of 1883; resigned the editorship Dec. 31, 1889; and is now editing and publishing the Review of Reviews, a sixpenny monthly, founded by him in Jan., 1890. As editor of the Pall Mall Gazette he was said by Mr. Matthew Arnold to have invented the "New Journalism," naturalized the interview in the English press, introduced illustrations into the daily newspaper, and established the Pall Mall Extras. It was his interview with General Gordon at Southampton which led to the mission to Khartoum. His "Truth about the Navy and its Coaling Stations" marked the beginning of the revival of our Naval Supremacy. In July, 1885, Mr. Stead published "The Maiden Tribute of Modern Babylon," an exposure of crimes against women and children, for which the law provided no remedy. The immediate result was the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1885, which successive ministries had in vain endeavoured to pass. The attempt to illustrate the actual state of the unreformed law by the impunity with which crimes against children could be committed by procuring, taking to a house of ill-fame, and subsequently sending abroad, young girls offered by their parents, or guardians, for sale for immoral purposes led, months after the act had been passed to a prosecution in the case of one of those girls, all the information concerning which was furnished by Mr. Stead himself. The jury found that Mr. Stead had been deceived by his agent, and he received two sentences of three months each, to run concurrently, for aiding in the abduction of the child Armstrong, and for abetting in having her examined by a midwife. After spending three days as an ordinary criminal convict in Coldbath prison, Mr. Stead was removed by the order of Lord Salisbury to Holloway, where he spent the rest of his sentence as a first-class misdemeanant, but was welcomed, on his release, by a crowded demonstration and presentation at Exeter Hall. Mr. Stead visited Ireland in 1886, and published "No Reduction, No Rent, a Plea for the Plan of Campaign." In 1888 he visited Russia, of which country he has been the foremost advocate in the English press, and published on his return "Truth About Russia," in one volume. In 1889 he went to the Vatican to report to the New Era on the attitude of the Pope, and published a work on that subject in Jan., 1890. Mr. Stead is married, and has six children.

STEDMAN, Edmund Clarence, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, Oct. 8, 1833. He is a graduate of Yale College, 1853, and A.M. of Yale and of Dartmouth. After some experience on the Connecticut press, he obtained a position, in 1859, in the New York Tribune Office. During the Civil War he was a war correspondent of the New York World. In 1865 he left journalism, and went into business in Wall Street, in order to obtain the means and time for purely literary work. Besides his contributions to the Atlantic, Century, and other periodicals, he has published "Poems," 1860, 1873; "Alice of Monmouth," 1864; "The Blameless Prince," 1869; a volume of essays on "Victorian Poets," 1875; "Octavius Brooks Frothingham and the New Faith," 1876; "Hawthorne and other Poems," 1877; "Lyrics and Idyls" (London), 1879; "Edgar Allen Poe," 1880, and a collection of his "Poetical Works," 1884. In 1885 his "Poets of America" appeared, and in 1887 the thirteenth edition of "Victorian Poets," extended to the fiftieth year of Her Majesty's reign. Since 1883 he has been engaged, with Ellen M. Hutchinson, in the compilation of "A Library of American Literature," an inclusive work, of which the eleventh and final volume appeared last year, 1890. He will initiate the newly-founded Turnbull Lectureship on Poetry, at Johns Hopkins University, with the opening course of lectures, early in 1891.

STEEL, Miss Kate, the first lady Professor of singing at the Royal Academy of Music since 1867, was educated at Liverpool. As a child she was remarkable for her extraordinary vocal powers, having then a high soprano of great natural flexibility. She studied music and composition under Mr. Toms, of the Royal Academy, and achieved early a great proficiency on the pianoforte under Mr. Walter Macfarren. At sixteen she came up to London, and her rare musical sensibility and great natural facility seemed to point her out as destined to become a pianiste of the first order, but, after a successful debut at St. James's Hall, her wrists gave signs of weakness, which made the needful practising impossible. Meanwhile, she had prosecuted her vocal studies with such success, that a brilliant career in the concert room or on the stage seemed open to her. But here too, she was doomed to disappointment, for no sooner had she appeared once or twice in public and won golden opinions, than her throat also proved unequal to the excessive strain now put upon professional singing, and she had to abandon this second career also. But so exceptionally gifted a musician could not be allowed to leave the Royal Academy, so her services were retained unofficially by Signor Randegger, and for some years she was chiefly engaged in preparing his pupils. At a late meeting of the Tenterden-street Committee, with the full approval of Principal Mackenzie, and the warm support of Signor Randegger, it was decided to offer Miss Steel the post of Lady Professor of Singing at the Academy, which she accepted, and is at present the only lady Professor at the Royal Academy of Music.

STEEL, Sir John, R.S.A., sculptor to Her Majesty for Scotland, born in Aberdeen, in 1804, studied art in Edinburgh, where his parents resided; afterwards proceeded to Rome, and on his return from that city, in 1833, distinguished himself by a colossal model of Alexander and Bucephalus, now cast in bronze and erected in Edinburgh. His sitting statue of Sir Walter Scott, in gray Carrara marble, under the lower ground arch of the monument to the great novelist at Edinburgh, brought him into notice. A public competition took place for this statue, and Sir John's model was unanimously selected from among numerous others. One of his principal works in Edinburgh, the sitting colossal figure of the Queen, in her royal robes, with orb and sceptre, above the Royal Institution, gained for him the appointment of sculptor to Her Majesty for Scotland, and another of his works, the equestrian statue of the late Duke of Wellington, in bronze, was erected in 1852 in front of the Register House, Edinburgh. The bust taken from this figure so pleased the Duke that he ordered two to be executed for him—one for Apsley House, and the other for Eton. Sir John Steell's statue of Admiral Lord de Saumarez, in the Hall of Greenwich Hospital, his bronze statue of Lord Melville, his statues in marble of Lord Jeffrey and Lord Justice-General Boyle, in Edinburgh, and his monument to the 93rd Highlanders, in the Cathedral at Glasgow, have been favourably noticed by competent critics, and his statues of the late Marquis of Dalhousie, and of the distinguished financier, the late Right Hon. James Wilson, have been erected in Calcutta. His statue of the late Professor Wilson, in bronze, twelve feet high, was placed on its pedestal in Princes Street, Edinburgh, March 21, 1865. He has executed another colossal statue of Allan Ramsay; a marble statue of the Countess of Elgin, for Jamaica; busts of the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and numerous other works. In 1872 Sir John Steell executed in bronze a full-size copy of his colossal statue of Sir Walter Scott, for the Central Park, New York; and he has completed the Scottish National Memorial to the late Prince Consort, which is erected in the centre of Charlotte Square, Edinburgh, and was inaugurated in August 1876 by the Queen, who conferred the honour of knighthood on the sculptor. He has executed a colossal bronze statue of the late Dr. Thomas Chalmers, erected in George Street, Edinburgh, and for America a colossal statue in bronze of the great Scottish poet, Robert Burns, erected in the Central Park, New York, as well as a replica of it for Dundee. He lately executed a large monumental work in memory of those who fell of the 42nd Royal Highlanders in the Russian war; it is in fine statuary marble, and erected in the Dunkeld Cathedral; and a large allegorical frieze for Montreal. More recently he has executed for London a colossal bronze statue of Burns, somewhat altered from his statue in New York; and a duplicate of it for Dunedin, New Zealand. Among his more interesting busts may be mentioned that of Miss Florence Nightingale, modelled just after her return from the Crimea. He was married early in life to a daughter of John Graham, Esq., of Edinburgh; she died in 1885.

STEERE, The Hon. Sir James George Lee, third son of Lee Steere, Esq., of Jayes,

Surrey, was born in 1830, and was educated at the Clapham Grammar School. He emigrated to Western Australia in 1860; became Justice of the Peace, 1861; has been Member of the Legislative Council since 1868; Member of the Executive Council since 1884; Member of the Federal Council of Australasia since 1885; and Speaker of the Legislative Council since 1886. He received the honour of knighthood 1888. Sir J. G. L. Steere married, in 1859, Kate, the only daughter of the late Luke Leake, Esq., of Perth, Western Australia.

STEINITZ, William, was born May 17, 1836, at Prague, Bohemia, where he was also educated, finishing his studies, however, at the Polytechnic Institute, Vienna. He early attained distinction as a chess-player, and by his defeat of the late Professor Anderssen in 1866 won the match championship of the world, a position which he has held against all contestants to the present time. He has gained every single-handed match, or series played since 1862 and either first or second place (or been tied for first or second) in every tournament he has entered since 1867. His average score in tournaments has been the highest, and in any single one, his score has been the best. Among the tournaments in which he has taken part have been those held in Dublin, 1865, Paris, 1867, Dundee, 1867, Baden, 1870, London, 1872-1883, and Vienna, 1873 and 1882; and among the well-known players he has been matched against are Blackburne, Bird, Zukertort, Martinez, Mackenzie, Tschigorin, Golmayo, and Vasquez. In 1883 he settled in the United States where, since 1885, he has been the editor of the International Chess Magazine. He has recently (1889) published the first part of a work entitled the "Modern Chess Instructor."

STEPHEN, Sir Alfred, G.C.M.G., C.B., Lieutenant-Governor of New South Wales, third son of the late John Stephen, a Judge of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, born in 1802, was educated at the Charterhouse, and the Grammar School of Honiton, Devon. He was called to the Bar in 1823, and appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court of New South Wales in 1839, having previously held, for several years, the posts of Solicitor-General and Attorney-General of Tasmania. He was Chief Justice of New South Wales from 1844 till Nov., 1873; received the honour of knighthood in 1846; was nominated President of the Legislative Council, on its creation in 1856, but resigned in the following year; was created a C.B. in 1862; administered the government of the colony, on the retirement of the Earl of Belmore, from Feb. 23 to June 2, 1872; was created a K.C.M.G. in 1874; was appointed Governor of New South Wales in Nov., 1875. Sir Alfred is a cousin of the late Right Hon. Sir James Stephen, and of the late Serjeant Stephen, the author of "Commentaries," whose pupil he was.

STEPHEN, Sir George, Bart., was born at Dufftown, Scotland, in June, 1829; emigrated to Canada in 1850; became a merchant in Montreal, and amassed an immense fortune. In 1878 he was made President of the Bank of Montreal. In 1887, as a memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee, he and Sir Donald Smith gave a quarter of a million pounds sterling to found the Victoria Hospital in Montreal. In the year previous to this munificent gift he was created a baronet for his public services in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

STEPHEN, The Hon. Sir James Fitzjames, K.C.S.I., D.C.L., eldest son of the late Right Hon. Sir James Stephen, born at Kensington Gore, London, March 3, 1829, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1852, was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, in Jan., 1854. He chose the Midland Circuit, became Recorder of Newark-on-Trent (1859-68), and acted as Counsel for the Rev. Roland Williams when that gentleman was tried by the Court of Arches on a charge of heresy preferred against him by the Bishop of Salisbury. His speech was reprinted in a separate form in 1862. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of Harwich in 1865, and for the Recordship of London on the resignation of Mr. Russell Gurney. In Dec., 1869, he received the appointment of Legal Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, in the place of Mr. (now Sir Henry) Maine, and he held it till April, 1872, when he returned to this country. During the three years which he spent in India he laboured hard to consolidate, abbreviate, and simplify Indian law. In 1873 he unsuccessfully contested Dundee. He was appointed by the Inns of Court Professor of Common Law in Dec., 1875, and a member of the councils of legal education and law reporting. In 1877 he was nominated a K.C.S.I.; and in 1878 a member of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the provisions of a Draft Code relating to Indictable Offences. Sir James has published a "General View of the Criminal Law of England," 1863; "Essays by a Barrister," reprinted from the Saturday Review, 1862; "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity," 1873; "A Digest of the Law of Evidence," and a "Digest of the Criminal Law," 1877, which formed the basis of an elaborate Bill on Indictable Offences which was brought forward in the House of Commons by the Attorney-General (Sir John Holker) on the part of the Government, in 1878, and the consideration of which was postponed till the following session. In Jan., 1879, he was appointed to a Judgeship of the High Court of Justice (Exchequer Division), vacant by the resignation of Baron Cleasby. Since then he has published "A History of the Criminal Law of England," 3 vols., 1883, and other works.

STEPHEN, Leslie, M.A., son of the late Rt. Hon. Sir James Stephen, the author of "Essays on Ecclesiastical Biography," and brother of the Hon. Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, was born at Kensington, Nov. 28, 1832, and educated at Eton School and at King's College, London, whence he proceeded to Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1854 and M.A. in 1857. For several years he was Fellow and Tutor of Trinity Hall. In 1864 Mr. Stephen left Cambridge, and since then he has been actively engaged in literary pursuits in London. He was editor of the Cornhill Magazine from 1871 till 1882, when he resigned that post in order to undertake the responsible task of editing the important "Dictionary of National Biography," which is in course of publication in a series of quarterly volumes. In May, 1883, he was elected to the Lectureship of English Literature at Cambridge, founded in honour of the late W. G. Clark, of Trinity College, but he held the office for only a year. His separate publications are:—"The Playground of Europe," 1871; "Hours in a Library," 1st series, 1874, 2nd series, 1876, 3rd series, 1879; "Essays on Free-thinking and Plain Speaking," 1873; "History of English Thought in the 18th Century," 1876; "The Science of Ethics," 1882; and "Johnson," "Pope," and "Swift," in "English Men of Letters." He edited Fielding's works, "with a biographical essay," 10 vols., 1882. His latest book is "The Life of Henry Fawcett," 1885. Mr. Leslie Stephen has also contributed numerous articles to the Saturday Review and the Pall Mall Gazette. Mr. Stephen married Harriet Marian, younger daughter of Mr. William Makepeace Thackeray, the celebrated novelist. (This lady died in 1875.) He married, secondly, in 1878, Julia Prinsep Duckworth.

STEPHENS, Professor George, LL.D., Ph.D., Professor of English language and literature in the University of Copenhagen, son of the Rev. John Stephens, and his wife, Rebecca Eliza Rayner, of Ongar, Essex, who died in 1857. He was a Wesleyan minister and President of the Conference, but always held fast to the Church of England. He died in London in 1841. They had twelve children, of whom George is the last survivor. For the career of his brother Joseph, see the Life by G. J. Holyoake, 1881. George Stephens was born in Liverpool, Dec. 13, 1813, educated in several English public and private schools, and in University College, London. He showed an early bias for language, especially for his own, and wandered over many British and Scandinavian provinces to study the local dialects. Pecuniary accidents having prevented his final career in Oxford, he married, Jan. 16, 1834, Maria Bennett, daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Bennett, of Brentwood, in Essex. He then settled in Stockholm, Sweden, to learn the origins of English in the folk-tales and literature of our Scandinavian homeland. In 1851 he was appointed Lecturer (afterwards Professor) of Old-English (Anglo-Saxon) and the modern tongue in the University of Copenhagen (Kjöbenhavn, Cheapinghaven, Denmark), where he is still lecturing—always in English—as "Professor of the English Language and Literature." His activity as a writer has been so great, that we cannot here give the titles of even a tithe of his publications. It embraces prose and poetical contributions to literature in general, history, folk-lore, old-lore, linguistics, and runology. A list up to 1865 may be seen in his biography in the Danish work, "Supplement til Almindeligt Forfatter-Lexicon," by Erslev, vol. iii., Kjöbenhavn, 1868, pp. 268-278. But in addition to the above-mentioned list, we may point out a few things later than 1865. For instance, "Machbeth" 1876, which shows how a Swedish Runic stone identifies the last battle-field of that Scottish king; "Thunor the Thunderer," 1878, explaining a remarkable Swedish Font (about A.D. 1000), sculptured with antique Christian symbolism; "Some Runic Stones in Northern Sweden," and "On the Dialect of the First Book printed in Swedish," both in "Nova Acta Reg. Soc. Scient. Upsal," 1879 "The Old-Northern Runic Monuments of Scandinavia and England," folio, with hundreds of illustrations, some of them in gold and colours, vol. i., 1866-67, vol. ii., 1867-68, vol. iii., 1884. A 4th volume will follow, should funds and life permit. "Handbook of the Old-Northern Runic Monuments," 4to, 1884; with all the O.N. engravings and translations, but a very short text; "The Oldest yet found Document in Danish," all in the later Runes on a small leaden tablet. (In "Mémoires des Antiquaires du Nord," 1887.) "Cantata, at the Copenhagen University Festival, Nov. 17, 1888," translated in the metre of the original poem by Carl Ploug. Professor Stephens is F.S.A., Lond.; Honorary Dr. of Philosophy of the University, Upsala; Honorary Doctor of Letters, Cambridge; Honorary Member of many learned academies and societies at home and abroad; Knight-Commander of the North Star, Sweden; Knight of the Order of St. Olaf, Norway; Knight of the Danebrog, and also Danebrogsmann, Denmark.

STEPHENSON, Augustus Keppel, K.C.B., was born in London, Oct. 18, 1827, and is the son of the late Henry Frederick Stephenson, Barrister-at-law, formerly M.P. for Westbury, and a Commissioner of Inland Revenue, and the Lady Mary Keppel, daughter of William Charles, 4th Earl of Albemarle. He was educated privately, and at Caius College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree in 1849, and was called to the Bar as barrister-at-law of Lincoln's Inn, 1852; for two years he was Marshall and Associate in the Court of Queen's Bench to the Lord Chief Justice Campbell; went the Norfolk Circuit; was a Revising Barrister and Recorder of Bedford; appointed Assistant-Solicitor of the Treasury by Earl Russell in 1865; ad interim Registrar of Friendly Societies by Mr. Lowe, when Chancellor of the Exchequer; appointed Solicitor to the Treasury in 1876; and Her Majesty's Procurator-General, 1877, by Mr. Disraeli, when First Lord of the Treasury; Director of Public Prosecutions by Statute 47 & 48 Vic. cap. 58, 1884. He was created a C.B. on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, when First Lord of the Treasury in 1883, and a K.C.B. on the same recommendation in 1886. Sir Augustus Stephenson was made Queen's Counsel in 1889, on the recommendation of Lord Chancellor Halsbury. He married, in 1864, Eglantine, second daughter of the late Right Hon. Edward Pleydell Bouverie.

STEPHENSON, Rev. Thomas Bowman, B.A., Lond., D.D., LL.D. (Hon.), minister of the Wesleyan-Methodist Church, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in the year 1839. His father, the Rev. John Stephenson, was a minister of the same church. Dr. Stephenson was educated at Wesley College, Sheffield; and graduated at the University of London in 1860. His first clerical appointment was to Norwich, where he took part in the then novel experiment of theatre preaching. Removing to Manchester in 1862, he threw himself into the various labours rendered necessary by the Cotton Famine; and then, and subsequently at Bolton, his attention was turned to those social and philanthropic problems which have specially engrossed his subsequent years. He held two charges in London; and in the year 1869 commenced the great group of Institutions known as the Children's Home, by opening for waif lads a small Cottage in Lambeth. These institutions have so grown that there are over eleven departments in London and the provinces, in which efforts are made for the benefit of homeless children of both sexes, of ragged children, of young women, and of many others. With two exceptions, Dr. Stephenson's Institutions are the largest of the kind under any one man's control. In connection with the work, he has advocated the employment for religious and philanthropic purposes of women of culture and, when possible, of means, who should act together as a Sisterhood, duly trained and confederated, though, without any "vow." The "Sisters of the Children" have been organized and at work for about fifteen years. He is now promoting a considerable extension of the work of "Deaconesses," chiefly in connection with his own church. He was a member of the Second School Board for London; is an ardent "Temperance Reformer," and connected with several of the leading Philanthropic Societies. He has travelled extensively in many parts of the British Empire; has promoted, for many years, emigration, especially that of children, to Canada. He has been a frequent contributor to Reviews and Magazines; and is the author of several well-known hymns and tunes. He is considered to be a leader of the progressive section of Methodism.

STEPNIAK, Sergius Michael Drago-manoff, was born in 1841 at Hadjatsch, in the Ukraine Mountains, in the government of Poltawa, and comes of a seminoble family descended from the Cossacks of Little Russia. He studied at Kiev from 1859 to 1863. In that time he published several works in the Little Russian dialect, which were prohibited by the Government in 1862. In 1865 he became docent in ancient history in the University of Kieff, and in 1870 he became a Professor, but was removed from his chair by the government three years later. His criticisms on the system pursued by Count Tolstoi, one of the Ministers of Justice, led to his exile in 1876. He went to Geneva then and settled there, producing popular writings in the Little Russian dialect. In 1877 he began a series of reviews in the Ukraine dialect called, "Hromada," which means, "common things." At the same time he worked hard for the establishment of equal political rights for all people in Russia and declared against Socialism as well as Absolutism. Some of the principal works which Stepniak has produced are "The Turks Within and Without," "Tyrannicide in Russia," and "Little Russian Internationalism." He has also contributed to the magazines some papers on East European peoples, and the propaganda of Socialism, and "Historical Poland and the Muscovite Democracy." He is also known for his works on the ethnography, history and literature of Little Russia, and, with M. Antonowitch, has edited a collection of Little Russian folk songs.

STERLING, Antoinette. See MACKINLAY, MRS. JOHN.

STEVENSON, David Watson, R.S.A., was born in 1842 at Ratho, a few miles to the west of Edinburgh; and began his artistic life under the late William Brodie, R.S.A., in November 1857, devoting himself from the first with the enthusiasm characteristic of his countrymen, alike to his work in the studio during the day and to his studies in the evening and during every leisure hour. Under Mr. Brodie he remained eight years, receiving every encouragement; and, although not a pupil, he had opportunities of acquiring varied experience in all the departments of Sculpture. During the first half of that period he attended the School of Art under the Board of Manufactures for Scotland, a copy of "The Venus of Melos," made in his last session at the School, was published by the Board, and largely subscribed for by the members. Admission to the life School of the Royal Scottish Academy having been gained in the usual way, he continued his studies there for about four years, at the same time studying anatomy. In the Exhibition of the Royal

Scottish Academy for 1859, a juvenile work by Mr. Stevenson had, by a stretch of indulgence, been accepted; it was followed, however, next year by better work, and Mr. Stevenson has continued a regular contributor to the Annual Exhibitions of the Academy, of which body he was elected an Associate in 1877, and an Academician in 1886. In 1866, without friends and with a small sum which he had saved, augmented by £20 lent by his mother, and afterwards amply repaid, he began work on his own account; his first sitters being Mr. J. H. A. Macdonald, afterwards Lord Advocate, now Lord Justice Clerk, and Mrs. Millar, wife of Lord Craighill. The figure of a youth modelled at this time attracted the attention of Mr., afterwards Sir. John, Steell, R.S.A., Her Majesty's Sculptor for Scotland, who, on the death of George Maccallum in October 1868, commissioned him to execute the life-size group representing "Labour" at one of the angles of the Prince Consort Memorial, Edinburgh, primarily entrusted to that promising young sculptor, but by him only carried the length of the first sketch, and which was then begun de novo. The execution of this group proving satisfactory to the Committee, it was immediately followed by the commission to carry out the companion group representing "Learning," and on the unveiling of the memorial by the Queen in August, 1876, he had the honour, along with the other Artists who had been engaged upon the work, of being presented to Her Majesty. In the spring of 1876, while alterations were being effected in the studio, and preparations made for carrying out this important undertaking, he paid a long-desired visit to Rome, modelling while there a life-size statue of Eve, a design for which he had carried with him. He modelled a statue to Tannahill, the poet, which was erected at Paisley; and a colossal statue of Wallace for the national monument to the Hero and Patriot on the Abbey Craig, Stirling; where are also, in the interior of the tower, a series of busts in marble, also by Mr. Stevenson, of eminent Scotsmen, beginning with that of King Robert the Bruce, not altogether ideal, being based on the cast taken from the bones of the head found in the grave of the King in Dunfermline Abbey. The series includes busts of Knox, Buchanan, Adam Smith, Burns, Scott, Watt, Tannahill, Thomas Chalmers, and Hugh Miller. A statue of Knox also was executed for Haddington. In the intervals between these larger works, various ideal figures were executed, including a "Nymph at the Stream," a seated figure now in the Art Gallery at Oldham. He executed also a statue in marble of "Lady Godiva," one of "Echo," in movement; and one of "Galatea." A group of a "Pompeian Mother," attracted the attention of the Prince of Wales at the International Exhibition of 1886 at Edinburgh. In 1881 Mr. Stevenson was one of the successful competitors in the first competition for four groups of statuary for Blackfriars Bridge, London; his design "India visits Britain" being awarded the third premium by the assessors, among whom were Sir Frederic Leighton, P.R.A., Mr. W. Calder Marshall, the veteran sculptor, and other members of the Royal Academy. Mr. Stevenson has executed numerous portrait busts of eminent men, among the more recent being Sir John Fowler, Bart., the well-known engineer, exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1889, and Mr., now Sir. William, Arrol, the constructor of the Forth Bridge.

STEVENSON, Robert Louis Balfour, novelist (generally known as Louis Stevenson), was born in Edinburgh, Nov. 13, 1850, and is the son of Thomas Stevenson, the author of "Lighthouse Optics." He was educated at private schools and at the University of Edinburgh; and was called to the Scottish Bar, but travelled and devoted himself to literature. One of his earliest works was an account of his travels in California, but the book which established his reputation as a writer of fiction was "Treasure Island," published in 1883. Amongst the most popular of his works is "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which was dramatised and played at the Lyceum Theatre in 1888. Mr. Stevenson has also written a life of his father, the celebrated lighthouse engineer. The New York Critic says of Robert Louis Stevenson: "Truly in his power to 'harrow up the soul, freeze the young blood,' etc., Stevenson is unsurpassed by modern writers. We feel our flesh creep upon our bones as we sit absorbed in some of his weird and witch-like tales. Then, though we may be ashamed to confess it, we seem to lose our years, and shrink into an eager, uninitiated boy once more, as we huddle over 'Treasure Island' or 'Kidnapped,' 'The New Arabian Nights,' or 'The Black Arrow,' letting the hour-hand on the clock creep on to midnight unheeded; we may protest that it is the sheerest juvenile nonsense in the world, but none the less are we held by a spell; there are no pauses, no tame meanderings, when we might break away and begone; but the racy narrator hurries us on over adventurous by-ways, twisting and turning, bursting upon new surprises, dashing into dangerous pit-falls, until breathless we come plump into an unwelcome Finis, and close the book perforce."

STEWART, General Sir Donald Martin, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born in 1824. He received his education at the University of Aberdeen, and entered the Bengal Staff Corps in 1840. He served against the Hill Tribes in the Peshawur district in 1854 and 1855, when he was honourably mentioned in the despatches. In May and June, 1857, at the outbreak of the Sepoy Mutiny, he commanded the volunteers serving in the Allyghur district. When all communication with the upper provinces was cut off, Captain Stewart volunteered to carry despatches from the Government of the North-West Provinces to the officer commanding at Delhi. This he performed with success, and on his arrival at the camp before Delhi he was appointed Deputy Assistant-Adjutant-General, in which capacity he served with the field force throughout the siege of Delhi. He was again mentioned in despatches with signal approval, and was promoted to the brevet rank of Major. He afterwards served in the siege of Lucknow as Assistant-Adjutant-General, and throughout the campaign in Rohilkund. His services on this occasion were further recognised, and he obtained a brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, with the Medal and two Clasps. In the Abyssinian Expedition of 1867-68 Colonel Stewart commanded the Bengal Brigade, and commanded for some time at Zulla and Senafé. He was then rewarded with the title of C.B. He attained the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1877. He was in command of the Candahar column of operations in the Afghan campaign from Nov., 1878, to April, 1880, and for his services received the thanks of Parliament and was made K.C.B. He commanded the field force which marched from Candahar to Cabul in April, 1880, fought and defeated the Afghans at Ahmed Kheyl, and again at Oorzoo. General Stewart subsequently held supreme command of the army in Northern Afghanistan, and after dispatching Sir Frederick Roberts to the relief of Candahar, he carried out the withdrawal of the British Army from Cabul and Northern Afghanistan. For these services he received the thanks of Parliament, and was made G.C.B. and baronet. In Sept., 1880, he was appointed Member of the Council of the Governor-General, and in April, 1881, succeeded Sir F. Haines as Commander-in-Chief in India. Sir D. Stewart is now a member of the Indian Council.

STEWART, Sir Robert Prescott, Mus. D., son of the late Mr. Charles Frederick Stewart, of Dublin, by Anna, daughter of Mr. Francis Dawson, of Monaghan, was born in Dublin in Dec. 1825. He received his education in the school of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, and at the age of eighteen he was appointed organist of Trinity College, Dublin, and of both the Dublin Cathedrals. He took the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Music in 1851. He composed an "Ode to Industry," for the Exhibition held at Cork in 1852, and a "March," which was played before Her Majesty and Prince Albert at the Dublin Exhibition in the following year. In 1858 he produced his cantata "A Winter-Night's Wake;" and subsequently another cantata, "The Eve of St. John." He became Professor of Music in the University of Dublin in 1862. In 1872 he was knighted by the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, in acknowledgment of his musical attainments. He is a member of the Council of the Royal College of Music. Sir Robert Stewart has written works on "Irish Music," and "Dance Forms;" "The Life and Works of Handel;" and many articles in the "Dictionary of Music," edited by Sir George Grove. He was the first to remodel the organ compass in Ireland to the true German compass of C.: before his time, both manual and pedal keyboards were erroneously made to begin at F or G. Sir Robert was also the first to make the following literary curriculum compulsory in the case of all musical graduates:—"A Bachelor in Music must pass an Examination in the following subjects:—(1) English Composition, History, and Literature; (2) a modern Language (Italian, French, or German); (3) Latin, or, instead of it, a second modern Language; (4) Arithmetic." This was done immediately upon his election to the chair of Music in the University of Dublin in 1862, before which date no literary examination was required of any graduate in music, at any College or University in the Kingdom. The Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and London adopted this idea in 1878; some private Colleges having done so about 1872.

STEWART, Thomas Grainger, M.D., born in Edinburgh, Sept. 23, 1837, was educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh, and after graduating, studied in the Universities and Hospitals of Berlin, Prague, and Vienna, especially under Virchow, Rokitsky, and Oppolzer. On his return to Edinburgh he became Resident Physician in the Royal Infirmary, and there made observations upon the diagnosis of certain forms of kidney disease, which attracted considerable attention. As a result of this work he was, in 1862, appointed Pathologist to the Royal Infirmary, and Lecturer on Pathology at Surgeons' Hall. During the succeeding seven years he published numerous papers on pathological and clinical subjects, and in 1869 unsuccessfully contested the chair of General Pathology in the University of Edinburgh. He then resigned the Pathologistship and the Physicianship to the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, and was elected ordinary Physician to the Royal Infirmary and Lecturer on Clinical Medicine. In 1876, he was appointed Professor of the Practice of Physic in the University of Edinburgh. Dr. Stewart is the author of a book on Bright's Diseases of the Kidneys, which has passed through two editions in this country, and two in America. The views embodied in this work have been to a large extent accepted on the Continent as well as in this country. He has also published a volume of Lectures on the Nervous System, and three Lectures on Giddiness, and fifteen on Albumen urea, being the first and second of a series of Clinical Studies on Important Symptoms, as well as many papers, particularly on the nervous system, the lungs, and the liver. He is a member of various learned societies at home and abroad, an Honorary Fellow of the King and Queen's College of Physicians, and M.D. (Honoris Causa) of the Royal University of Ireland. He has been President of the Medico Chirurgical Society of Edinburgh, and of the Medicine section of the British Medical Association, and has for many years taken a special interest in the Medical Students' Christian Association. He is at present President of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh. In 1882 he was appointed Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen in Scotland.

STIGAND, William, son of the late William Stigand, Esq., of Devonport, born in 1827, was educated at Shrewsbury and St. John's College, Cambridge. After studying the Equity branch of the profession of the law, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in June, 1852. He has written "A Vision of Barbarossa, and other Poems," 1860; "Athenais; or, the First Crusade," 1866; and "Life, Work, and Opinions of Heinrich Heine," 2 vols., 1875. Mr. Stigand has contributed largely to the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews, the Times, and other periodicals; he entered the British Consular's Service as Vice-Consul of Boulogne sur Mer in 1873, and has been successively Consul at Ragusa, Königsberg and Palermo.

STIRLING, Mrs., an accomplished and versatile actress, daughter of the late Capt. Hehl, of the Horse Guards, born in Queen Street, Mayfair, in 1817, was educated at a convent in France, and on her return home, finding that her family had fallen into pecuniary difficulties, she determined, although then but sixteen years of age, to try her fortune upon the stage. Adopting the name of Miss Fanny Clifton, she obtained an engagement at the East London Theatre, at which her reception was encouraging, attributable in no small degree to her handsome person and musical voice. This was followed by a better engagement at the Pavilion, where she met Mr. Edward Stirling, the stage manager, to whom she was soon afterwards married. Mrs. Stirling's next professional engagement was with Mr. Davidge, of the Liverpool Theatre, where she remained one season, went to Birmingham, and soon after returned to London, and played at the Adelphi in "Victorine," "The Dream at Sea," and other new pieces. About this time she accepted an engagement for three years under Mr. Macready, at Drury Lane, where she obtained important parts, and won her way to popularity. Her next engagement was at the Princess's, where she took leading Shaksperian characters, both tragic and comic; and amongst these her Cordelia was regarded as the most successful, though in Rosalind, Desdemona, and Portia her talents were displayed to great advantage. Mrs. Stirling's engagements at the Olympic and at the Strand Theatres, under Mr. Farren, and her later performances at the Haymarket, Adelphi, and St. James's Theatres, were attended with great success, especially in the prominent parts of Lady Teazle, in Sheridan's comedy of "The School for Scandal," Lady Gay Spanker, Maritana, the Widow Green, Mrs. Bracegirdle, in the "Tragic Queen," and Peg Woffington. Her later rôles have been the Nurse in "Romeo and Juliet," and Martha in "Faust," both at the Lyceum. Mrs. Stirling finally retired from the stage in 1886.

STIRLING, The Hon. Sir James, a Judge in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, was born in 1836; called to the Bar in 1862; junior Counsel to the Treasury in 1881; Member of the Bar Committee in 1883; and was raised to the Bench in 1886.

STIRLING, James Hutchinson, LL.D., born at Glasgow, June 22, 1820, was educated at Glasgow University for nine consecutive winter sessions in arts and medicine, and spent six years afterwards in France and Germany. He became LL.D. of Edinburgh, 1867; and a Foreign Member of the Philosophical Society of Berlin, 1871. In earlier days he held appointments as surgeon to the Hirwain and other iron and coal works, South Wales, but he relinquished professional practice in 1851, and went to the Continent to pursue there those literary and philosophical studies for which, as a student at College, he had shown a taste, and in which he had gained distinction. Returning to England in 1857, he devoted himself to the study of philosophy and literary pursuits generally. Leaving earlier contributions out of view, he published in 1865 "The Secret of Hegel," from the appearance of which work there dates in Great Britain, academically and generally, a new movement towards the study of philosophy, more particularly German and ancient. The following are the titles of his other works:—"Sir William Hamilton, on the Philosophy of Perception," 1865; "Schwegler's History of Philosophy, translated and annotated," 1867, tenth edit. 1888; "Jerrold, Tennyson, and Macaulay, with other Critical Essays," 1868; "Address on Materialism," 1868; "As Regards Protoplasm," 1869, second edit. 1872; "Lectures on the Philosophy of Law, &c.," 1873; "Burns in Drama, together with Saved Leaves," 1878; "Text-Book to Kant," 1881; "Of Philosophy in the Poets," "The Community of Property," 1885; "Thomas Carlyle's Counsels," 1886. In 1888 he was appointed the first Gifford Lecturer to the University of Edinburgh; and, as such, in the two subsequent sessions, delivered courses of lectures on Natural Theology. These lectures are in course of publication. He has also contributed to periodicals.

STOCKHAUSEN, Julius, was born in Paris, July 22, 1825. His father was a harpist, and his mother a well-known singer. Intended at first for the priestly calling he received his early education at the school of Gebwiler in Alsace, and subsequently attended the College in Strashbourg. His mother's success at a farewell concert given in Basle, however, changed the course of his life, and in 1845 he went with his father to Paris, and there became the pupil of Hallé and Stamaty for piano, and of the famous Garcia for singing. In 1848 he sang the part of Elijah in Basle and with such success that from that time he gave himself up entirely to singing. In 1849 he came to England, where he continued his studies with Garcia, and in 1851 sang in the 9th Symphony in London. From 1857-59 he was engaged at the Opera Comique in Paris, where he specially distinguished himself in the part of the Sénéchal in Boieldieu's Teau de Paris. There he formed a close friendship with Ary Scheffer, the painter, in whose house, together with Berlioz Dupiez, Pauline Viardot and Saint-Saëns, German music was diligently cultivated. Concert tours followed in 1859-62. At Leipzig and Cologne he sang Schumann's Faust for the first time. In 1869 he entered on the second period of his musical activity as leader of the Hamburg Philharmonic Society; and in 1874, as director of the famous Stern Choral Society in Berlin. Great as his success as a leader and teacher has been Stockhausen's musical importance culminates in his achievements as a singer. His technic was perfect and he had such mastery over his instrument that the purity of tone and the intellectual expression never had to be sacrificed the one to the other. The astonishing distinctness of his pronunciation as well as its beauty and intellectual significance was due to a complete understanding of the nature of the elements of speech. Nowhere was the slightest trace to be detected of a mere seeking after effect, or a display of the voice. As Joachim plays the violin, and Clara Shumann the piano, so does Stockhausen sing and interpret the thoughts of the great masters. Seldom, if ever, in singing has the reproductive art been distinguished for such purity, elevation, and dignity. In 1878 began the third period of his artistic career, that of a teacher, first at the newly founded Hoch Conservatoire in Frankfort-on-Main, which, however, he quitted in the following year. Since then he has been at the head of a singing school of his own, and has repeatedly, up to the most recent date, himself sung in Concerts and Oratorios. His "Method of singing," a very important work, was published in 1884 in Leipzig, and translated into English in 1888.

He subsequently became connected with a daily paper, in Philadelphia, and afterwards with Hearth and Home, New York. Later he joined the editorial staff of Scribner's Monthly (now The Century), and on the establishment of St. Nicholas became its assistant editor. His "Kudder Grange" papers, which appeared in Scribner's, were the first to attract general public attention, which he had successfully held by the novel character of the short stories for which he is chiefly celebrated. Among the best known of these are "The Lady or the Tiger," "The Transferred Ghost," "The Spectral Mortgage," "The Discourager of Hesitancy," "Negative Gravity," etc. He has also published novels entitled

He has also edited a series of dainty works, entitled "Bric-a-Brac Series" (1874-75); and "Sans Souci Series," and more recently a number of volumes relating to English literary history and memorabilia. In conjunction with others he published in 1877 a volume, entitled "Poets' Homes." He was for a short time after leaving the Custom House, City Librarian, and is now (1890) the literary editor of the New York Mail and Express. His wife, ELIZABETH D. (BARSTOW) STODDARD, born at Mattapoiset, Massachusetts, in 1823, is also a contributor to periodicals, and has published three novels: "The Morgesons," 1862; "Two Men," 1865; and "Temple House," 1867. Mr. Story's two sons are artists of much distinction; Mr. Waldo Story being a sculptor, and Mr. Julian Story a painter; their works are well known in London, Paris, and Rome.

STOUGHTON, The Rev. John, D.D., born at Norwich, Nov. 18, 1807, was educated at Highbury College, Islington, now incorporated with New College, St. John's Wood, and University College, London. He was appointed pastor of the Congregational Church, Windsor, in 1832, and thence removed to Kensington in 1843, where he remained in office until 1875, and on his retirement received a presentation from his congregation of £3,000. He became Professor of Historical Theology and Homiletics in New College, St. John's Wood, the same year; that office he has since relinquished, and is now living in retirement at Ealing. But he still is active in managing the business of New College; of which he was one of the founders, when three previously existing Academies for ministerial culture were incorporated in that one Institution. He was Congregational Lecturer in 1855, Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1856, and received the degree of D.D. at Edinburgh in 1869. He took an active part in the Conference at New York, 1873, and Basle, 1879, in connection with the Evangelical Alliance, of which he is an honorary secretary. Dr. Stoughton is the author of numerous works, of which the following are the principal: "Windsor in the olden Time," 1844; "Spiritual Heroes," 1848; "Ages of Christendom," 1856; "Church and State Two Hundred Years Ago," 1862; "Ecclesiastical History of England," 5 vols., 1867-74; "Haunts and Homes of Martin Luther," 1875; "Lights of the World," 1876; "Progress of Divine Revelation," 1878; "Our English Bible: its Translations and Translators," 1878; "Worthies of Science," "Introduction to Historical Theology," "Footprints of Italian Reformers," "William Wilberforce," "William Penn," 1882; and "Howard, the philanthropist," 1884. In addition to the works on "Luther" and the "Italian Reformers," he wrote one on "The Spanish Reformers," 1884. All three contain descriptions of localities, resulting from repeated visits to many of the spots. Since then he has published "Golden Legends of the Olden Time," dedicated to his children and grandchildren, 1885; also "Shades and Echoes of Old London," 1889. Dr. Stoughton visited Egypt and the Holy Land in 1865, and gave an account of his travels in different publications. The large work on Ecclesiastical History, continued to the end of the last century, has been republished in 6 vols., 1881, under the title of "Religion in England from the Opening of the Long Parliament to the end of the Eighteenth Century." To these, two more volumes were added in 1884, under the title of "Religion in England from 1800 to 1850."

STOUT, Sir Robert, K.C.M.G., late Premier of New Zealand, is the eldest son of Thomas Stout of Lerwick, in the Shetland Isles, merchant, was born at Lerwick in 1844, educated at Lerwick Parish School, and was trained for the profession of teacher, serving his pupil teachership in the same school. Towards the end of 1863 he went to Otago, New Zealand, and shortly after his arrival he obtained an appointment in the Grammar School. He was engaged in the exercise of his profession as teacher until 1867, either in the Government schools or in private grammar schools, when he commenced the study of law. He was admitted to the New Zealand Bar in 1871, and before long became one of its leading members, not only of Dunedin, but of the colony. In 1872 Mr. Stout obtained a seat in the Provincial Council of Otago. In 1875 he was elected to the House of Representatives, as member for Cavenham. In 1876 he was elected as one of the members for Dunedin, and retained his seat until his retirement in June, 1879. He was offered, and accepted, the office of Attorney-General and Minister of Lands in Sir George Grey's Ministry in 1878. From 1879 to 1884 Mr. Stout was not engaged in politics, but during that period, as before, he took part in the administration of various local bodies, e.g., the Otago Land Board and others. In 1884 Mr. Stout was elected Member of the House of Representatives for Dunedin East, and on the downfall of the Atkinson Ministry, took office as Premier, Attorney-General, and Minister of Education, with Sir Julius Vogel as Colonial Treasurer. In 1886 Mr. Stout received the Order of K.C.M.G. At the General Election in 1887 Sir R. Stout again stood for Dunedin East, but was defeated chiefly, it was said, as a protest against the unpopular financial policy of the Ministry. He was offered seats in several parts of the Colony, but preferred to retire into private life, and has not since taken any active part in politics. He has been an industrious contributor to numerous journals and magazines, and the writer of a number of pamphlets. He has also delivered, and still delivers, lectures and addresses on political, social and religious subjects. He is a Fellow of the New Zealand University, and has always taken an active interest in education. At the General Election of 1890 he was again requested to enter active political life by several constituencies, but declined.

STOWE, Mrs. Harriet Elizabeth, American writer, daughter of the late Lyman Beecher, and sister of the late Henry Ward Beecher, was born at Litchfield,

Connecticut, June 14, 1812. She was associated with her sister Catherine in the labours of a school at Hartford in 1827, afterwards removed (1832) to Walnut Hill, near Cincinnati, and was married in 1836 to the Rev. Calvin E. Stowe, D.D. Mrs. Stowe wrote several tales and sketches, which were afterwards collected under the title of "The May Flower," 1849. In 1851-52 she contributed to the National Era an anti-slavery paper published in Washington, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," as a serial. This was published in book-form in 1852, and met with great success; nearly 500,000 copies were sold in the United States within five years of its publication, and in Great Britain also its sale was enormous. It has been translated into more than twenty languages, including Welsh, Russian, Armenian, Arabic, Chinese, and Japanese; there were fourteen different German and four different French versions; and it was dramatised in various forms. Mrs. Stowe subsequently published, "A Peep into Uncle Tom's Cabin for Children," 1853; "A Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin," giving the original facts and statements on which that work was based, 1853; and "The Christian Slave," a drama, founded upon "Uncle Tom's Cabin," 1855. She visited Europe in 1853, and in the following year published, "Sunny Memories of Foreign Lands." A little work entitled "Geography for My Children" was published in 1855, and the next year appeared her second anti-slavery novel, "Dred: a Tale of the Dismal Swamp," republished in 1859 under the title of "Nina Gordon." In subsequent works Mrs. Stowe has delineated the domestic life of New England of fifty or a hundred years ago. These include: "Our Charley, and what to do with Him," 1858; "The Minister's Wooing," 1859; "The Pearl of Orr's Island," 1862; "Agnes of Sorrento," 1863; "Reply on Behalf of the Women of America to the Christian address of many thousand Women of Great Britain," 1863; "The Ravages of a Carpet," 1864; "House and Home Papers," 1864; "Religious Poems," 1865; "Stories about our Dogs," 1865; "Little Foxes," 1865; "Queer Little People," 1867; "Daisy's First Winter, and other Stories," 1867; "The Chimney Corner," 1868; "Men of Our Times; or, Leading Patriots of the Day," 1868; "Old-town Folks," 1869; "Little Pussy Willow," 1870; "Pink and White Tyranny," 1871; "Sam Lawson's Fireside Stories," 1871; "My Wife and I," 1872; "Palmetto Leaves," 1873; "Betty's Bright Idea, and other Tales," 1875; "We and Our Neighbours," 1875; "Footsteps of the Master," 1876; "Bible Heroines," 1878; "Paganic People: their Loves and their Lives," 1878; "A Dog's Mission," 1881; and, with her sister Catherine, "The American Woman's Home," 1869. A Selection from her writings entitled "Golden Fruit in Silver Baskets," was issued in 1859. In Sept., 1869, Mrs. Stowe contributed to the Atlantic Monthly and to Macmillan's Magazine an article entitled "The True Story of Lady Byron's Life." This article evoked a storm of indignant literary criticism, which was by no means allayed by the publication in 1870 of her work entitled "Lady Byron Vindicated." Mrs. Stowe's Health for some years has been very precarious. She resides at Hartford, Conn., with her son, the Rev. Charles E. Stowe, who, in 1889, published a "Life of Harriet Beecher Stowe, compiled from her Letters and Journals," by himself.

STRACHEY, Lieut.-General Richard, R.E., C.S.I., F.R.S., son of Edward Strachey, B.C.S., was born July 24, 1817, at Sutton Court, Somersetshire. He was educated at a private school and at Addiscombe, and in 1836 entered the corps of Bombay Engineers, from which he was shortly transferred to the Bengal Engineers. He was employed on irrigation works in the N. W. P. from 1840, and appointed executive engineer on the Ganges Canal in 1843. He served in the Sutlej campaign with Sir Harry Smith's division; was in the battles of Aliwal and Sobraon, was mentioned in despatches and received a brevet majority. In 1857 he became Under Secretary to the Government in the Public Works Department; and, in the same year, was appointed Secretary to the Government in the Central Provinces, which, during the mutiny, were placed under Sir John Peter Grant as Lieut.-Governor. He became Consulting Engineer in the Railway Department in 1858; Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department in 1862; and Inspector-General of Irrigation in 1866. He was appointed additional Member of the Governor-General's Council in 1869. He took an active part in the organisation and improvement of the Accounts of the Public Works Department, and originated the scheme for the decentralisation of the finances of India. He also originated the measures taken by the Government for carrying out railway and irrigation works on a large scale by means of borrowed capital. On leaving India, in 1871, he was appointed Inspector-General of railway materials and stores at the India Office. In 1875 he retired from the army on full pay as a Major-General; and in the same year was appointed a Member of the Council of India; which post he vacated in 1877, in order to proceed to India on special duty, viz., to arrange for the purchase by the Government of the East Indian Railway. He became Officiating Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General in 1878, and Officiating Military Member thereof in 1879; during those years he also presided over the Famine Commission. On his return to England, in 1879, he was reappointed to the Council of India, from which post he retired in 1889, and became Chairman of the East Indian Railway Company. He is in receipt of a good-service pension. Lieut.-General Strachey was employed on a scientific survey of the Himalayan province of Kumaon in 1848 and 1849, and made valuable geological and botanical researches and collections. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1854. He is Chairman of the Meteorological Council. He was President of the Royal Geographical Society from 1887 to 1889, and is an Honorary Member of the Geographical Societies of Berlin and Italy. He was appointed one of the Delegates of Great Britain at the International Prime Meridian Conference which was held at Washington in 1884. He has contributed papers to various scientific societies, and is the author of "Lectures on Geography," and, jointly with Sir John Strachey, of "The Finances and Public Works of India."

STRAFFORD (Earl of), The Right Hon. George Henry Charles Byng, son of the second Earl, was born in London in 1830. He received his education at Eton and at Oxford. He represented Tavistock in the Liberal interest from 1852 till Sept., 1857, and sat for Middlesex from the latter date till Jan., 1874, when he was summoned to the House of Peers in his father's barony, with the title of Viscount Enfield, under which name he had long been known in political circles. In 1855 he was attached to Earl Russell's special mission to Vienna. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor Law Board from 1865 till July, 1866. In Dec., 1870, he was appointed Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and in Sept., 1880, Under-Secretary of State for India. The latter office he resigned in Dec., 1882. He was First Commissioner of the Civil Service, unpaid, from May, 1880, to March, 1888. The appointment of Lord Kimberley as Secretary of State rendered this step necessary in order that one of the political offices connected with the home administration of India might be represented in the House of Commons. Viscount Enfield was succeeded by Mr. J. K. Cross in the office of Under-Secretary. He succeeded to the earldom on the death of his father in 1886. His wife, when Viscountess Enfield, edited the memoirs of Henry Greville.

STROSSMAYER, The Right Rev. Joseph, D.D., a distinguished prelate of the Roman Church, born at Essak, in Sclavonia, Feb. 4, 1815, received his education in the Universities of Vienna and Padua, and on May 20, 1850, was consecrated Bishop of Bosnia and Sirmio. During the sittings of the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican in 1869-70, he was constantly represented as an earnest opponent of the dogmatisation of the infallibility of the Pope. Several journals went so far as to reproduce the text of a speech alleged to have been delivered at the Council by Mgr. Strossmayer; but in 1872 the Bishop addressed to the Français a letter in which he says:—"Latterly several liberal, or rather self-called liberal papers, have published a pretended speech, supposed to have been made by myself at the Vatican Council. I resolutely and absolutely deny ever having made any such discourse. I never said a word during the entire Council which could in any way diminish the authority of the Holy See, or tend to promote discord in the Church."

STRUTHERS, John, M.D., LL.D., second son of Alexander Struthers, Esq., of Brucefield, near Dunfermline, was born there on Feb. 21, 1823. He was educated privately, and entered the Edinburgh University, in 1841, as a student of Medicine. He graduated as M.D. in 1845; and, at the same time, became a Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons. He was admitted a Fellow of the College by examination in the same year, with a view to teaching Anatomy in the Edinburgh School. He was Demonstrator of Anatomy for two years, and Lecturer on Anatomy from 1847 to 1863; during which time his classes were largely attended. He designed the Medical School, erected at the College of Surgeons in 1849; was President of the Hunterian Medical and Royal Physical Societies; Examiner and Member of the Council of the College of Surgeons; and Surgeon to the Royal Infirmary. In 1863 he was appointed by the Crown to the Chair of Anatomy in Aberdeen University; an office which he held till 1889, when he retired from teaching. The increase of the school rendered new anatomical buildings necessary, which were erected according to his plans; and he formed an extensive museum of Human and Comparative Anatomy for the University. In Aberdeen he was President of the Medico-Chirurgical Society; and one of the Vice-Presidents of the British Association at the meeting there in 1885. On the formation of the Anatomical Society of Great Britain and Ireland in 1887, he was elected the Vice-President for Scotland. In 1874-75 he was Visitor of Examinations for the General Medical Council. He has represented Aberdeen University in the General Medical Council since 1883, and is Chairman of the Education Committee of the Council. He has taken an active part in questions of medical and university reform, as settled by the Medical Act of 1886, and the Scottish Universities Act of 1889. He gave evidence before the Royal Commission on the Scottish Universities in 1876; before the Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1880 on the amendment of the Medical Act of 1858; before the Royal Commission on the Medical Acts in 1881; and before the Committee on General Education in Scotland, in 1887. In 1885 the University of Glasgow conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. When teaching in the Edinburgh School he published various researches in Human and Comparative Anatomy, mainly in the Edinburgh Medical Journal, from 1848 to 1863; among which may be mentioned:—"On the Supra-Condyloid Process," "On the Oblique Muscles of the Eye," "On Diverticula from the Small Intestine," "On the Abnormal Anatomy of the Arm," "Demonstration of Valves in the Veins of the Neck," "On the Round Ligament of the Hip-Joint," "On the Relative Weight of the Viscera on the two sides of the Body," "On Variation in the Number of the Fingers and Toes in Man," and "On the Solid-hoofed Pig." When Professor in Aberdeen he published in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, from 1869 to 1890, further researches, among which are, "On Variations of the Vertebrae and Ribs in Man," "On the Mediastinum Thoracis," "On the Rudimentary Hind-limb of the Greenland Right-Whale," "On Rudimentary Finger-Muscles in a Toothed Whale, and in the Greenland Right-Whale," "On the Cervical Vertebrae and their Articulations in Fin-Whales," "On a Method of Promoting Maceration for Anatomical Museums," and "On Methods of Preparing the Brain, Museum specimens and dissections." He published separately, in 1855, "Memoir on the Clavicle;" in 1859, "Lessons on the Human Body;" in 1867, "Historical Sketch of the Edinburgh Anatomical School;" in 1889, "Memoir on the Anatomy of the Hump-back Whale," and "References to Papers in Anatomy, Human and Comparative." His system of teaching was always demonstrative, and embraced Comparative as well as Human Anatomy. He frequently gave evening lectures to general audiences on the "Human Body," and on the "Relation of Man to the Animal Kingdom," in which he accepted the hypothesis of descent from pre-existing forms as the most reasonable explanation of similarity of structure.

STUART, Professor James, M.A., LL.D., and M.P., born at Balgonie works, Markinch, Fifeshire (of which works his father was owner), Jan. 2, 1843, was educated at home, afterwards at St. Andrews University, and then at Trinity College, Cambridge. He became Fellow of Trinity College in 1867, Assistant-Tutor of that College in 1868, first Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge, Nov. 17, 1875. He graduated as third Wrangler in 1863; M.A. of the University of Cambridge in 1869; LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews in 1876. Professor Stuart has taken a leading part in popular education. He inaugurated the system of courses of educational lectures of a University standard in connection with Cambridge and Oxford, in Nottingham, Sheffield, and many other towns, on the system indicated by his experiments, and recommended by him to the universities. He has been instrumental in the foundation and establishment of several local colleges; has taken special interest in women's education, having originated the Ladies' Lectures in 1867, and the Cambridge Higher Examination for Women in 1868. He has been a consistent friend of all movements for the amelioration of the condition of women, and honorary Secretary of "La Fédération Britannique Continentale et Générale pour le relèvement de la moralité publique." He has taken an active part in the organisation of university education, and especially in its adaptation to the wants of the engineering profession, having founded extensive workshops and drawing offices in the University of Cambridge. He is an Associate Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers; a Member of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers; and Representative of the University and the governing bodies of the colleges at Bristol, Nottingham, Liverpool, Sheffield, and Aberystwith. He is the author of "Six Lectures to the Workmen of Crewe," "A Chapter of Science," "Science and Religion, a Lecture," "The New Abolitionists," "A Letter on University Extension, addressed to the University of Cambridge," and a number of articles, speeches, and pamphlets on educational, scientific, and social questions. Professor Stuart contested Cambridge University in 1882 unsuccessfully. On the death of Professor Fawcett, in Nov., 1881, he was unanimously chosen by the Liberal Party of Hackney as his successor, and was returned to Parliament by a majority of 6,000. At the general election of 1885, Hackney being divided into seven districts, Professor Stuart stood for the Hoxton Division of Shoreditch, and was elected by a majority of 1,037. He was again returned (as a Gladstone Liberal) in 1886.

William, D.D. of Oxford, and honorary LL.D. of Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Dublin; Bishop of Oxford, born at Knaresborough, June 21, 1825, was educated at the Grammar School, Ripon, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first-class in classics and a third in mathematics, in Easter Term, 1848, and was immediately elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College. He was ordained in 1848, became vicar of Navestock, Essex, in 1850, and Librarian to Archbishop Longley, at Lambeth, in 1862. He was Diocesan Inspector of Schools in the diocese of Rochester from 1860 till 1866, when he was appointed Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford. In 1867 he was elected Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, of which he became an Honorary Fellow in 1888; in 1876 an honorary Fellow of Balliol; and in 1878, an honorary student of Christ Church. In 1879 he was appointed Canon Residentiary of S. Paul's; and in consequence resigned the rectory of Cholderton. In 1884 he was consecrated on S. Mark's day to the See of Chester, from which See he was translated to Oxford, being confirmed Jan. 15, 1889. He published, in 1850, "Hymnale secundum usum Sarum;" in 1858, "Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum;" in 1860, "Tractatus de Sancta Cruce de Waltham;" edited, in 1863, "Mosheim's Institutes of Church History;" in 1864 and 1865, "Chronicles and Memorials of Richard I.,"

Dunstan;" and, in 1876, the "Works of Ralph de Diceto;" and several other books issued by the Master of the Rolls; in 1870, "Select Charters and other Illustrations of English Constitutional History, from the Earliest Period to the Reign of Edward I.;" and published, in 1874, 1875, and 1878, "The Constitutional History of England, in its Origin and Development," 3 vols. Dr. Stubbs is Honorary LL.D. of Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Dublin, and doctor in utroque jure of Heidelberg; he is the President of the Surtees Society, and a Vice-President of the Yorkshire Archæological Society, an honorary member of the Royal Irish Academy and of the Historical Society of Massachusetts, a foreign member of the Bavarian Academy, a corresponding member of the Prussian Academy, of the Royal Danish Academy, of the American Academy of Arts, of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, of the Institute of France, of the Royal Society of Sciences at Göttingen, and of the Imperial University of Vladimir at Kieff.

SUELUS, George James, F.R.S., F.C.S., Bessemer Medallist, Vice-President of the Iron and Steel Institute, etc., was born June 25, 1837, at Camden Town, London, is the son of James Suelus, a builder, who died when George James Suelus was seven-and-a-half years of age, and the family was left impoverished by a long and heavy law-suit. Thanks, however, to a loving, self-sacrificing, and far-sighted mother, George James Suelus was provided with a good education. He was originally trained as a teacher at St. John's College, Battersea; and for some years he acted in that capacity with great success, particularly in the conduct of Science Classes under the Science and Art Department. During that time he also attended Owens College, Manchester, as a student under Professor Roscoe, and the Physical Classes under Professor Clifton. In the May examinations of 1864 he obtained the first of the Royal Albert Scholarships in competition with the whole of the United Kingdom, securing the Gold Medal for Physical Geography, Bronze Medal for Chemistry, &c., and a free education for three years at the Royal School of Mines. His career there was eminently successful, as he obtained the first scholarship in the first year, second scholarship in the second year, and the first place and the De La Beche medal for Mining in the third year, passing out as an Associate of the School in mining and metallurgy. He was then nominated by Dr. Percy for the appointment of chief chemist to the Dowlais Works, which appointment he filled for four-and-a-half years to the great satisfaction of the late William Menelaus, who, in 1871, recommended him for the post of scientific adviser to the commission then being sent out by the Iron and Steel Institute to the United States to investigate and report on the Danks Rotatory Puddling Process. Mr. Suelus had carefully studied the theory of all the processes of making steel and iron when at Dowlais, and he had at this time formed a very clear idea of the action of phosphorus, &c., upon iron, and the investigation of the Danks process enabled him to point out to Dr. Percy on his return to England in the spring of 1872, that contrary to the ideas entertained up to that date by all Metallurgists, and in opposition to the teachings of the Doctor himself (who held that the phosphorus was eliminated in the puddling process by ligation of a third phosphide of iron from the pasty puddled ball), the phosphorus was most largely eliminated in the early stage of the process, and while the iron was perfectly fluid and contained a large quantity of carbon, and that therefore it should be possible to eliminate the phosphorus during the Bessemer process; and further, that he believed he had discovered the secret of overcoming the difficulty hitherto considered unsurmountable. The Doctor at the time remarked that if this was so he had made a very great discovery. For his discovery the Iron and Steel Institute in 1883 awarded Mr. Suelus the Bessemer Gold Medal for being "The first to make pure steel from impure iron in a Bessemer converter lined with basic materials." Over ten million tons of steel have since been made from phosphoric iron previously useless for steel-making. This invention has to a large extent revolutionized steel-making, and no country has benefited by the invention so much as Germany, while owing to the stringency of the Patent Laws of that country in 1872, Mr. Suelus was unable to obtain a patent for his invention, and so has never reaped the slightest reward or recognition from Germany, although his work has brought large fortunes to those who have availed themselves of the process. At the "Inventions Exhibition" in London Mr. Suelus exhibited some illustrations of these improvements, together with the first piece of dephosphorus steel made by the basic process, and was awarded a Gold Medal for discoveries and inventions. At the Paris Exhibition of 1878 Mr. Suelus exhibited an elaborate set of analyzed samples illustrating the manufacture of iron and steel in various countries, for which he was awarded a Gold Medal. The collection was subsequently purchased as an educational collection for the Polytechnic School at Aix-la-Chapelle. Mr. Suelus is an original member of the Iron and Steel Institute, has been a member of the Council since 1881, and last year was elected one of the Vice-Presidents. The following is a list of the most important contributions to the Iron and Steel Proceedings:—"On the condition of Carbon and Silicon in Iron and Steel," 1870; "Composition of Gases evolved from the Bessemer Converters during the blow," 1871; "Sherman process," 1871; "Scientific features of the Danks Puddling Furnace," 1872; "Manufacture and use of Spiegeleisen," 1874; "Fire-clay and other refractory materials," 1875; "Use of Molten Iron direct from the Blast Furnace for Steel-making," 1876; "Removal of Phosphorus and Sulphur during the Bessemer and Siemens-Martin processes of Steel Manufacture," 1879; "Distribution of elements in Steel Ingots," 1881; "Chemical composition and testing Steel Rails," 1882. He has also contributed to the literature of Iron and Steel on many other occasions; his principal works in this direction are two able articles on "Iron and Steel in Chemistry, as applied to the Arts and Manufactures." For his work generally and his discovery of the Basic Process in particular, the Royal Society elected him a Fellow of that learned body in 1887. He was married in 1867 to Lavinia Woodward, daughter of a silk manufacturer of Macclesfield, and has now a family of three sons and three daughters.

SULLIVAN, Sir Arthur Seymour, Mus. D., was born in London, May 13, 1842. His father was principal Professor at Kneller Hall, the training school for British military bands. He received his first systematic instruction in music at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, under the Rev. Thomas Helmore, and he was still a chorister when, at the age of fourteen, he gained, the first time it was competed for, the Mendelssohn Scholarship. After two years' study under Mr. (afterwards Sir Sterndale) Bennett, and Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Goss, he studied at Leipzig for three years at the Conservatorium. Upon his return to England in 1861, he brought with him his music to Shakespeare's "Tempest," which was performed for the first time at the Crystal Palace. His next work was the cantata "Kenilworth," produced at the Birmingham Festival in 1864. This was followed by the Symphony in E (Crystal Palace), 1865; overture "In Memoriam" (Norwich), 1866; overture "Marmion" (Philharmonic), 1867; oratorio "The Prodigal Son" (Hereford), 1868; overture "Di Ballo" (Birmingham), 1869; "On Shore and Sea" (International Exhibition), 1871; Festival "Te Deum," to commemorate the recovery of the Prince of Wales (Crystal Palace), 1872; oratorio "The Light of the World" (Birmingham), 1873; and the sacred musical drama "The Martyr of Antioch" (Leeds), 1880; and "The Golden Legend," a dramatic cantata (Leeds), 1886. Sir Arthur Sullivan has produced also the following popular and successful operas and operettas: "Cox and Box," 1866; "Contrabandista," 1867; "Thespis," 1872; "Trial by Jury," 1875; "Sorcerer," 1877; "H.M.S. Pinafore," 1878; "The Pirates of Penzance," 1879; "Patience," 1881; "Iolanthe," 1882; "Princess Ida," 1884; "The Mikado," 1885; "Ruddigore," 1887; "The Yeoman of the Guard," 1888; and "The Gondoliers," 1889. He was also musical editor of "Church Hymns," for which he composed several of the best known tunes. He has written also the incidental music to the following Shakespeare's plays: "The Tempest," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "The Merchant of Venice," "Olivia," and "Macbeth." The honorary degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge in 1876; and a like honour by the University of Oxford in 1879. Sir Arthur Sullivan was Principal of the National Training School for Music from its foundation in 1876 to 1881. Sir Arthur conducted the Leeds Triennial Musical Festival of 1880, 1883, 1886, and 1889; and in 1885 and 1886 he conducted the Philharmonic Concerts in London. In 1888 he was President of the Birmingham and Midland Institution, and is a member of a large number of foreign learned and musical societies. He was British Commissioner for music at the Paris Exhibition in 1878, when he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He is also a Knight of the Order of the House of Coburg, and received from H.M. the Sultan of Turkey the Order of the Medjidieh, 1888. He was knighted by the Queen at Windsor, May 24, 1883.

SULLIVAN, Barry, tragedian, born at Birmingham, in 1824, made his first appearance on the stage at Cork, in 1840, when his success was so great that he determined to adopt the stage as a profession. After studying for some time in Ireland, he proceeded to Scotland, and joined the company of the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, under the management of the late W. H. Murray; there he remained for several seasons, studying hard and making rapid strides in his profession; he then visited Paisley, Dundee, Aberdeen, Glasgow, Liverpool, and Manchester. His reputation having reached the metropolis, he was engaged by Mr. B. Webster, and made his first appearance in London at the Haymarket Theatre in Nov., 1851, in the character of Hamlet. During his continuance at that theatre he repeatedly had the honour of appearing before the Queen and the late Prince Consort. He subsequently had engagements at the St. James's, Sadler's Wells, the Standard, and Drury Lane, and after making a farewell tour of the United Kingdom, sailed for America in Nov., 1857. He met with an enthusiastic reception throughout the United States and the new Dominion of Canada. Returning to London in May, 1860, he reappeared at the St. James's, &c.; he then made a second tour of the United Kingdom, and sailed for Australia in May, 1861, his success being so great that he played nearly one thousand nights in Melbourne alone. He also held several engagements at Sydney, and after paying a visit to Queensland, sailed from Brisbane for India, and reached England in June, 1866, thus completing a tour round the world. In the following September he reappeared at Drury Lane, in the characters of Richard III., Hamlet, Macbeth, &c. About 1869 and 1870 he was lessee of the Holborn Theatre. He made successful tours of the United Kingdom down to 1887, his last appearance being at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool, as Richard III., Saturday, June 4, 1887. Failing health has since prevented him from resuming his professional duties.

SULLY, James, M.A., LL.D., born at Bridgwater, Somersetshire, in 1842, was educated in the Independent College, Taunton, the Regent's Park College (one of the affiliated colleges of the University of London), and the University of Göttingen. He is M.A. and Gold Medallist of the University of London, where he graduated in 1866 and 1868. He is also honorary LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews. He took to a literary career in 1871, beginning as a contributor to the Saturday, Fortnightly, and Westminster Reviews. He is the author of "Sensation and Intuition: Studies in Psychology and Aesthetics," 1874; "Pessimism: a History and a Criticism," 1877; "Illusions" (International Scientific Series), 1883; "The Outlines of Psychology," 1884; and "The Teachers' Handbook of Psychology," 1886. The last three have run through several editions, both in England and in America. He is also the writer of articles on "Aesthetics," "Dreams," and "Evolution," in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." These writings, as their titles suggest, are mainly occupied with the modern science of Psychology, as developed, more especially in Germany, by help of the physiology of the brain and nervous system. At the same time they have a distinctly practical bearing, discussing such questions of the day as the Aims of Art, the Value of Human Life and of Social Progress, and the Principles of Education. Mr. Sully has served as Examiner in Philosophy (Mental and Moral Science) to his own University, and has held a similar office in the University of Cambridge, and the Victoria University. He is also Lecturer on the Theory of Education at the College of Preceptors, Bloomsbury Square.

SULLY-PRUDHOMME, René François Armand, French poet, was born in Paris, March 16, 1839, and educated at the Lycée Bonaparte. He afterwards became a lawyer's assistant, and published his first volume of poems in 1865. It attracted considerable attention, and the poem "Le Vase Fêlé" was pronounced a masterpiece of its kind. M. Sully-Prudhomme has since published several volumes of poems, mostly of a philosophical tendency: "Les Épreuves," 1866; "Les Solitudes," 1869; "Les Destins," 1872; "Les Vaines Tendresses," 1875; "La Justice," 1878. He has also published (1869) a very remarkable translation of the "De Natura Rerum," of Lucretius. In 1881 he was elected a member of the Académie Française.

SUMNER, The Right Rev. George Henry, D.D., Bishop of Guildford, youngest son of the Rt. Rev. Charles Richard Sumner, Bishop of Winchester, 1827-1868, was born at Windsor, July 3, 1824, and was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, whence he graduated in 1845, taking his M.A. in 1848. In 1847 he was ordained Deacon, and in 1848 Priest. His title for orders was that of Crawley, near Winchester, and in 1850 he was preferred to the Rectory of Old Alresford, which he held until 1885, for the last twenty-seven years of the time acting as Rural Dean, and as Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of Winchester during their lifetime. In the year 1866 he was elected Proctor in the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury for the Archdeaconry of Winchester, which office he held until his appointment as Archdeacon of Winchester, in 1884, gave him an official seat in Convocation. A year after, he was elected Prolocutor of the Lower House in succession to Lord Alwyne Compton, appointed to the Bishopric of Ely; on which occasion he had the degree of D.D. conferred upon him by decree of Convocation of the University of Oxford. The Bishop of Winchester also conferred upon him a Canonry of Winchester. He resigned the Rectory of Old Alresford and entered upon the canonical residence at Winchester. In the year 1888 he was appointed by the Crown Bishop Suffragan of Guildford, which office he now holds. In the year 1869 the Bishop edited a volume of essays, published under the title of "Principles at Stake," which passed through two editions; and, in 1881, he edited "Our Holiday in the East," by Mrs. George Sumner, which also passed through two editions. In 1876 the Bishop published a "Life of Charles Richard Sumner, D.D., Bishop of Winchester;" and, in 1890, a "Churchwardens' Manual," showing their rights, privileges, and duties. In 1848 he was married to Mary Elizabeth, younger daughter of Thomas Heywood, Esq., of Hope End, Ledbury.

SWANWICK, Anna, is the youngest daughter of the late John Swanwick, Esq., of Liverpool, a descendant of Philip Henry, the celebrated nonconformist divine. She was born in 1813; left school at the age of thirteen, and after some years of private study, repaired to Berlin, where she studied, not only German, but Greek and Hebrew. On her return to England she joined her family which then resided in London; and in 1843 she published a volume of translations, entitled "Selections from the Dramas of Goethe and Schiller." Her translation of Schiller's "Maid of Orleans" was published in 1847; and in 1850 the volume containing her translation of the first part of Faust, with other masterworks of Goethe, Tasso, Iphigenia, and Egmont. In 1878 appeared her translation of the two parts of Faust, 4to, with Retch's illustrations, which was followed by a smaller edition in 1879. She was strongly urged by the late Baron Bunsen to undertake the translation of the Great Dramas. Acting upon his suggestion she translated the Æschylean Trilogy, published in 1865, which was followed, in 1873, by her translation of the complete dramas of Æschylus, with Flaxman's illustrations. A fourth and revised edition has since been published. Impressed with the low standard of female education which prevailed in England during her younger days, Miss Anna Swanwick has taken an active part in the establishment of Ladies' Colleges and other educational centres. She sympathised also most deeply with those who were labouring to raise the people to a higher level, moral and intellectual, and for many years she superintended classes of young working men and women, whom she instructed in various departments of knowledge, and by whom she has reason to think her efforts were appreciated.

SWEATMAN, Rt. Rev. Arthur, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Toronto, was born in London, Nov. 19, 1834. He was educated at London University College, and is an honour graduate of Christ's College, Cambridge. In 1862 he was appointed to the curacy of St. Stephen's, Canonbury, and to the Mastership of the Modern Department of the Islington Proprietary School. On the invitation of Bishop Hellmuth, he accepted, in 1865, the Head Mastership of Hellmuth Boys' College, London, Ontario, and at a later date became Clerical Secretary to the Synod of the Diocese of Huron and Secretary to the House of Bishops. Resigning his educational charge, he became assistant Rector of St. Paul's, Woodstock, and Archdeacon of Brant; and, during the Bishop of Huron's absence in England, acted as his commissary. In March, 1879, he succeeded Bishop Bethune in the See of Toronto, and in the same year received the degree of D.D. from Cambridge; and in 1882 that of D.C.L. from Trinity University, Toronto.

SWEDEN and NORWAY, King of. See OSCAR II.

SWETE, The Rev. Henry Barclay, D.D., Hon. Fellow of Caius College, received the Caius Greek Testament Prize in 1855, and the Members' Prize in 1857, and graduated B.A. in the Classical Tripos in 1858. He is Professor of Pastoral Theology at King's College, and was made Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge in June, 1890. He has edited a translation of the Septuagint, and is the author of various theological works.

SWINBURNE, Algernon Charles, poet and essayist, son of the late Admiral Charles Henry Swinburne, by Lady Jane Henrietta, daughter of George, third Earl of Ashburnham, and grandson of Sir John Edward Swinburne, Bart., of Capheaton, Northumberland, was born in Chester Street, Grosvenor Place, London, April 5, 1837. He entered as a commoner at Balliol College, Oxford, in 1857, but left the university without taking a degree. He afterwards visited Florence, and spent some time with the late Walter Savage Landor. His first productions, "The Queen Mother," and "Rosamond," two plays, published in 1861, attracted but little attention. They were followed by "Atalanta in Calydon, a Tragedy," in 1864; "Chastelard, a Tragedy," in 1865; and "Poems and Ballads," in 1866. The latter work was very severely and justly censured, and was consequently withdrawn from circulation by Messrs. Moxon. Mr. W. M. Rossetti then published "Poems and Ballads: a Criticism," and Mr. Swinburne himself, "Notes on Poems and Reviews." His later works are, "A Song of Italy," and "William Blake: a Critical Essay," 1867; second edition, 1868; "Siena: a Poem," 1868; the second part of "Notes on the Royal Academy Exhibition," 1868, the first part of which was written by Mr. W. M. Rossetti; "Ode on the Proclamation of the French Republic, Sept. 4, 1870;" "Songs before Sunrise," 1871, in which he glorifies Pantheism and Republicanism; and "Bothwell, a Tragedy," 1874; "Essays and Studies," 1875; "Erechtheus," 1876; "A Note on Charlotte Brontë," 1877; "Poems and Ballads: second series," 1878; "A Study of Shakespeare," 1879; "Studies in Song," 1881; "Tristram of Lyonesse," 1882; "A Century of Roundels," 1883; and another volume of "Prose Miscellanies," and "The Life of Victor Hugo," 1886; "The Armada," 1888; and a poem (1890), in which he advocated the assassination of the Czar of Russia for the cruelties permitted under his government. This called for a remonstrance in the House of Commons.

SYBEL, Professor Heinrich von, one of the most eminent of living German historians, born at Düsseldorf, Dec. 2, 1817, studied history for four years in Berlin, under the famous Von Ranke, was Privatdozent at the University of Bonn, and became Extraordinary Professor there in 1844. The following year he was appointed ordinary Professor at Marburg, and in 1847 elected a member of the States of Hesse, and deputy in the Diet of Erfurt. Summoned to Bavaria in 1856, by Maximilian II., he became a member of the Munich Academy of Sciences, and was sent on several scientific missions. In 1861, however, he returned to Bonn as Professor, and was elected by the electors of Crefeld a member of the Chamber of Deputies in Berlin, being more recently returned to the Constituent Diet of the North German Confederation. He was appointed Director of the Prussian State Archives in Berlin in 1875. His principal works are "History of the French Revolution," which has been translated into English by Mr. Walter C. Perry, from the third German edition, and a "History of the Establishment of the German Empire by William I." He is also the author of "History of the First Crusade," 1841; "Origin of Royalty in Germany," 1845; "The Rising of Europe against Napoleon I.," 1860; "Minor Historical Writings," 4 vols., 1863-60; "Prince Eugène of Savoy," a preface to Löbel's "Gregory of Tours," and to "Memoirs of Uechtritz;" and various other historical works.

matics, in the London and Edinburgh Philosophical Magazine, in the Comptes Rendus of the Institute of France, in other English, French, Belgian, and Italian Journals, and in the American Journal of Mathematics, of which he was the founder and first editor. He received the Royal Medal of the Royal Society in or about 1860, the Copley Medal in 1880, and in 1887 the De Morgan Medal of the London Mathematical Society. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, Hon. Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge (1880), Hon. D.C.L. He introduced into England, and greatly generalised, Peaucellier's method of Linkages, on which he gave a lecture at the Royal Institution. On Dec. 12, 1885, in an inaugural lecture delivered before the University of Oxford, he made known his newly-discovered Theory of Reciprocants, which has given rise to a large literature on the subject. His latest memoir is on a Universal funicular solution of Buffon's "Problem of the Needle," published in the Acta Mathematica, June, 1890.

SYMONDS, John Addington, born at Bristol, Oct. 5, 1840, was educated at Harrow School, and Balliol College, Oxford. He was elected, in 1862, to a Fellowship at Magdalen College, in that University, and vacated it by his marriage. 1889, "In Days and Nights." Mr. Symonds has for many years been compelled by reason of ill-health, to live at Davos-platz, in the Grisons.

SYMONDS, Sir Thomas Matthew Charles, G.C.B., Admiral of the Fleet, son of the late Rear-Admiral Sir William Symonds, C.B., F.R.S., was born in 1811; educated at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth; entered the Royal Navy in 1825, became Commander 1837, Captain 1841, Rear-Admiral 1860, Vice-Admiral 1866, Admiral 1871, and Admiral of the Fleet 1879; was placed on the Retired List 1881; served in the Black Sea during the Crimean War; was Captain of H.M.S. Arethusa at the bombardment of Sebastopol 1854, Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard 1862-6, Commander-in-Chief of the Channel Squadron 1868-70, and of Naval District, Devonport, 1873; has the Crimean Medal, and 3rd class Medjidieh; was awarded pension for good and meritorious service 1858 and 1870. He was created C.B. 1855, K.C.B. 1867, G.C.B. 1880. Admiral Symonds married 1st, 1845, Anna Maria, —who died in 1847,—daughter of Captain Edmund Heywood, R.N., C.B.; 2ndly, in 1856, Prestwood Mary, daughter of Captain Thomas Wolrige, R.N.

SYMONS, George James, F.R.S., was born in London in 1838, and was educated privately. Before he was twenty-one he had been elected Member of the Meteorological Society, had given several lectures upon the subject, had commenced a series of observations with standard instruments, the records of which were supplied to Mr. Glaisher, F.R.S., for insertion in the "Quarterly Reports" of the Registrar-General, and had started, in 1857, an organization for the observation of thunderstorms and the record of injuries by lightning. In 1859 he was elected a Member of the General Committee of the British Association. In 1860 he became a Member of the Scottish Meteorological Society, issued his first separate publication "Notes on the Solar Eclipse of July 18, 1860," and accepted the invitation of Admiral FitzRoy, F.R.S., to become one of his assistants at the Meteorological Office, where he continued until nearly the time of his Chief's death, being occupied principally with preparing for publication the records of the Anemometers at Bermuda and Halifax. During these years he devoted all his non-official time to collecting details of the fall of rain, and commenced the organization known as the British Rainfall system, which now includes nearly 3,000 observers. The results have been published in 29 successive volumes of "British Rainfall," and in 25 volumes of the Meteorological Magazine, which have been compiled and edited under his direction. With the above exception, Mr. Symons has written few books, but his papers and reports communicated to scientific societies in this and other countries, and his letters to the Times on Meteorological subjects are to be numbered by hundreds. In 1872 he was elected Membre de la Soc. Mét. de France, and has served three times on the Council. In 1873 Mr. Symons was elected Hon. Secretary of the (now) Royal Meteorological Society, which office he has held ever since, excepting during 1880 and 1881, when he was President. In 1875 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute; and during that and the subsequent year drew up a complete summary of the statistics and bibliography of the meteorology of our Colonial Empire. The results of that inquiry were embodied in a paper which he read before the Royal Colonial Institute in 1877. In the autumn of 1875 serious floods occurred, and he submitted to the Institution of Civil Engineers a paper "On the Floods in England and Wales, and on Water Economy," for which he was awarded a Telford Premium. In 1878 Mr. Symons was Président Étranger of the Congrès International de Météorologie held in Paris, and in 1889 Vice-Président of a similar meeting. In 1879 he was elected Fellow, and in 1880 became Registrar, of the Sanitary Institute, which office, with its greatly developed duties, he still holds. He was a Juror of the Health Exhibition (Section for Water Supply) 1884, in which year he was elected Membre Corresp. Étranger de la Soc. Roy. de Médecine Publique de Belgique, and in 1886 he was elected Korrespondirendes Mitglied der Deutschen Met. Gesellschaft. In the autumn of 1886 the first Session of the Congrès International d'Hydrologie was held at Biarritz; and Mr. Symons was appointed Vice-Président Étranger, and subsequently Juror of the Exhibition. He afterwards visited the thermal stations of the Pyrenees, and this drew his attention to the question of the constancy or otherwise of the temperature of those waters. After full inquiry, and with the co-operation of the Royal Society, he designed special thermometers, and revisited all the principal stations in the autumn of 1887, determining the temperatures with all possible precision. Mr. Symons was elected F.R.S. in 1878, and when, in 1894, a Committee was appointed to report upon the Eruption of Krakatoa he was chosen as its Chairman, and subsequently as Editor of the Report.

T.

TAAFFE, Count Edward Francis Joseph, an Austrian statesman, was born at Prague, Feb. 24, 1833. He is Viscount Taaffe of Corren, and Baron of Ballymote, Sligo, in the Irish peerage, and was brought up along with the present Emperor Francis Joseph. He entered the Imperial service in 1857 as Secretary of the Hungarian Government, and was appointed Governor of Salzburg in 1863. In 1867 he became Austrian Minister of the Interior, and Vice-President of the Cisleithan Ministry. At the end of 1869 he served as Minister President; and in 1871 accepted the office of Governor of the Tyrol and Vorarlberg. He has shown great ability in mediating between conflicting creeds and nationalities; and has publicly expressed his disapproval of the anti-Semitic agitation.

TAINÉ, Hippolyte Adolphe, a Member of the French Academy, born April 21, 1828, at Vouziers (Ardennes), pursued his studies with brilliant success in the Collège Bourbon, gaining the prize of honour for rhetoric at the general competition of 1847, and being in the following year first on the list of those admitted to the Normal School (Section of Literature). After having obtained, in 1853, the diploma of Doctor in Letters by two theses—"De Personis Platoniciis," and "Essai sur les Fables de La Fontaine"—he renounced the career of university teaching and brought out several works. Two of these, written in a very brilliant style, contained opinions diametrically opposed to the traditional doctrines of the University, and produced a great sensation. One was an "Essai sur Tite-Live," 1854, "crowned" by the French Academy, and designed by the author as an application and a demonstration of the system of Spinoza; the other, entitled "Philosophes Français du XIX^e siècle," 1856, 2nd edit., 1860, sharply criticised the spiritualist philosophers and religious writers. These and many of his subsequent works were received with high favour by the materialist school. In March, 1863, M. Tainé was appointed Examiner in Literature at the Military School of Saint-Cyr, and, in Oct., 1864, Professor of the History of Art and Aesthetics at the École des Beaux Arts. M. Tainé was a candidate for the seat in the French Academy that had been vacated by the death of M. Thiers, but he was unsuccessful, being defeated by M. Henri Martin the historian. Martin got eighteen votes and Taine fifteen (June 13, 1878). Very soon afterwards, however, M. Taine gained the coveted seat among the forty, being elected on Nov. 14, 1878, in the place of M. de Lémenie. His reception into the French Academy took place on Jan. 15, 1880. In addition to the works already mentioned M. Taine has written:—"Voyage aux Eaux des Pyrénées," 1855; "Essais de Critique et d'Histoire," 1857; "La Fontaine et ses Fables," 1860; "Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise," 4 vols., 1864, translated into English by H. Van Laun, a work which being sent in to the competition of the French Academy was rejected by that learned body on account of the materialist and atheistical opinions it contained; "L'Idéalisme Anglais," a study on Carlyle, 1864; "Le Positivisme Anglais," a study on John Stuart Mill, 1864, translated into English by T. D. Haye, 1870; "Nouveaux Essais de Critique et d'Histoire," 1865; "Philosophie de l'Art," 1865; "Philosophie de l'Art en Italie," 1866; "Voyage en Italie," 2 vols., 1866; Notes sur Paris: ou Vie et Opinions de M. Frédéric Thomas Graindorge," 1867; "L'Idéal dans l'Art," lectures delivered at the École des Beaux Arts, 1867; "Philosophie de l'Art dans les Pays-Bas," 1868; "Philosophie de l'Art en Grèce," 1870; "L'Intelligence," 1874; "Les Origines de la France Contemporaine," vol. i. "L'Ancien Régime," 1875, vol. ii. "La Révolution," 1878, vol. iii. "La Conquête Jacobine," 1881, vol. iv. "Le Gouvernement Révolutionnaire," 1885. The conservative tendency of this work more than rehabilitated M. Taine in the eyes of his academical colleagues. M. Taine has contributed to the Journal des Débats, the Revue de l'Instruction Publique, and the Revue des Deux Mondes, numerous and important articles, most of which have been reprinted in the volumes enumerated above. In 1873 M. Taine, by the invitation of the Curators of the Taylor Institution, gave a course of lectures in French at Oxford. His impressions of his stay in England, were recorded in his well-known "Notes sur l'Angleterre." In June, 1868, he married the daughter of M. Denuelle, a rich merchant.

TAIT, Patriek Macnaghten, F.R.S., F.R.G.S., son of the late William Tait, Esq., was born in Edinburgh, and educated in his native city, having for some time been under the late Principal Tulloch. He first entered the Scottish Union Insurance Office, Edinburgh, of which Sir Walter Scott was a Director, and in 1851 proceeded to India; was in India during 1857, 1858, and 1859, the years of the Mutiny, when he raised the Rifle Company of the Calcutta Volunteer Guards, in which corps he held a command. Subsequently he travelled in India, Ceylon, China, Japan, Canada, and the United States of America. He has contributed largely to the Edinburgh Review, and Calcutta Quarterly Review, also to the Examiner, Life, and other London weekly papers. He is the author of numerous papers read before different societies, including the British Association, the Institute of Actuaries, and the Royal Statistical Society, amongst which may be mentioned, "Observations on Existing Tables of Mortality of Europeans in India," 1855; "Mortality of East Indians," published in the Calcutta Review for Dec., 1858; "Mortality of Christian Females in India," published in the Calcutta Review for March, 1859; "The Mortality of Eurasians," 1864; "The Population and Mortality of Calcutta," 1867; "The Population and Mortality of Bombay," 1869; "Anglo-Indian Vital Statistics," 1874; "The Theory and Practice of Accident Insurance on Sea and Land," "Original D and N Tables for Joint Lives in India," "Vital and other Statistics Applicable to Musicians," 1880; "Vital and other Statistics of Eastbourne," 1885; "On the Value of European and Native Life in India," 1888.

TAIT, Professor Peter Guthrie, M.A., whose father was private secretary to the Duke of Buccleuch, was born at Dalkeith, April 28, 1831, and educated at the Academy and University of Edinburgh, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he was Senior Wrangler and First Smith's Prize-man. In 1852 he was elected Fellow of Peterhouse, and in 1854 was appointed Professor of Mathematics at Queen's College, Belfast, where he remained until 1860, when he was elected Professor of Natural Philosophy in Edinburgh. Professor Tait has published a number of scientific and other works, amongst which are "Dynamics of a Particle," 1856; "Quaternions," 1867; "Thermodynamics," 1868; "Recent Advances in Physical Science," 1876; "Heat" and "Light," 1884; "Properties of Matter," 1885, besides a large number of papers contributed to different periodicals, among which may be mentioned those on "Knots," on the "Kinetic Theory of Gases," and on "Thermo-electricity." In conjunction with Sir William Thomson, he published in 1867 a "Treatise on Natural Philosophy." He was also, with the late Professor Balfour Stewart, the joint author of the quasi-scientific essay called "The Unseen Universe." To the "Challenger" Reports, Professor Tait has recently contributed an experimental discussion of the "Pressure Errors of the Challenger Thermometers," and of the "Physical Properties of Water." Another experimental work, which he carried out in conjunction with the late Dr. Andrews, deals with the "Volumetric Relations of Ozone."

TALBOT, The Rev. Edward Stuart, M.A., born in London, 1814, is the son of the Hon. J. C. Talbot, Q.C., one of the leaders of the Parliamentary Bar, and of Caroline, daughter of the first Lord Wharndcliffe. He was educated at Charterhouse, and Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a first-class Lit. Hum., 1865; and first-class Law and Modern History, 1866. He was ordained in 1867 and 1870. He was elected senior student of Christ Church in 1866, and obtained the Ellerton Prize Essay in 1869, on the "Influence of Christianity on Slavery." In 1870 he was appointed first Warden of Keble College, Oxford, and was Select Preacher in 1873 and in 1883. He was Examiner in the Final Classical Honour Schools in 1874-76, and was appointed examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1883. Mr. Talbot married in 1870, Lavinia, third daughter of the fourth Baron Lyttelton.

TALMAGE, Thomas de Witt, D.D., was born at Bound Brook, New Jersey, Jan. 7, 1832. He studied at the University of the City of New York, and graduated at the New Brunswick (N.J.) Theological Seminary in 1856. On ordination he was chosen pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church at Belleville, N.J.; from 1859 to 1862 he had charge of a church in Syracuse, N.Y.; and from 1862 to 1869 of one in Philadelphia. During the Civil War he was chaplain of a Pennsylvania regiment, and he is now chaplain of the 13th New York Regiment. Since 1869 he has been pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church at Brooklyn, N.Y. Twice during this period his church edifice has been destroyed by fire, once in 1872 and again in 1890. A new church is to be built, at a cost of £42,000. In 1884 he received the degree of D.D. from the University of Tennessee. Dr. Talmage is a popular lecturer and preacher, and his sermons are weekly reported in a large number of newspapers. He visited England in Nov. 1889, and afterwards made a Continental tour, and visited Palestine. From 1873 to 1876 he edited the (N.Y.) Christian at Work; in 1877-78 the (Chicago) Advance; and later Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine. TASCHEREAU, The Most Rev. Elzéar Alexandre, D.C.L., Cardinal and Archbishop of Quebec, was born at Sainte Marie de la Beauce, Quebec, Feb. 17, 1820. He was educated at the Seminary of Quebec and in Rome, receiving the tonsure at the age of eighteen. In 1842 he was ordained a priest at Quebec, and from that year until 1854 occupied the chair of Moral Philosophy at the Quebec Seminary. He resumed his studies in Rome in 1854, and in 1856 the degree of Doctor of Canon Law was conferred upon him by the Roman Seminary. Returning to Quebec he was Director of the Petit Séminaire until 1859, when he became Director of the Grande Séminaire and a Member of the Council of Public Instruction for Lower Canada. He was made Superior of the Grande Séminaire and Rector of Laval University in 1860, and Vicar-General of the Diocese of Quebec in 1862. In 1866 he again became Director, and in 1869 was re-elected Superior of the Grande Séminaire. He was consecrated Archbishop of Quebec in 1871; and in 1886 was made a Cardinal, being the first Canadian to receive the beretta, and was congratulated alike by the Protestant and by the Catholic press; his advancement being regarded as the merited reward of a long life devoted to educational progress.

TAUCHNITZ (Baron), Bernhard Christian, publisher at Leipzig, celebrated for his editions of Greek and Latin Classics, Hebrew and Greek Bibles, but best known to English travellers and writers for his continental editions of British authors, is a member of an old family of booksellers and printers, Karl Tauchnitz, half a century ago, having made himself famous for his cheap editions of the Classics. He was born at Schleinitz, near Naumburg, in 1816. He founded an independent establishment in 1837, and, in 1841, began his series of English authors. At that time there was no International copyright, yet he resolved to obtain the sanction of the authors to the republication of their works, and to pay them for permission to include them in his series. This collection consists of nearly 2,700 volumes, and is continually increasing. In order to mark his appreciation of the endeavours of Tauchnitz to familiarize in Germany the chefs d'œuvre of a literature of which he himself was so great an admirer, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the brother of the late Prince Consort, raised him to the rank of Baron. In 1872, on the retirement of Mr. Crowe, he was appointed British Consul-General for the Kingdom of Saxony, and in 1876 for the other Saxon Principalities. In 1877 he was called by the King to the House of Peers of Saxony. His eldest son, Baron C. C. Bernhard, a Doctor of Laws, and British Vice-Consul, has been a partner in the house since 1866.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Charles, D.D., LL.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Vice-Chancellor of the University, was born in Middlesex, May 27, 1840, and was educated at King's College School, London, and St. John's College, Cambridge. He proceeded to the degree of B.A. in 1862, and in the same year became an editor of the Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin Messenger of Mathematics. In 1863 he published his first work on "Geometrical Conics." He was elected Fellow of St. John's College in 1864, and Master of the same, 1881, and shortly afterwards received the degree of D.D., jure dignitatis. He is the author of numerous articles on Hebrew, geometrical, and other subjects; of the Kaye Essay for 1867, on the citations from the Old Testament in the New, published under the name "The Gospel in the Law," 1869; and of the following works: "The Dirge of Coheleth," 1874, a monograph giving a new and literal interpretation of the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes; "Sayings of the Jewish Fathers," in Hebrew and English, edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, 1877; an "Introduction to the Ancient and Modern Geometry of Conics, with Historical Notes and Prolegomena," 1881. In the Prolegomena he proves that the modern period properly begins with Kepler, who distinctly formulated the principles of infinity and continuity, which differentiate the modern from the ancient geometry. He has given a course of lectures at the Royal Institution on the "History of Geometry," 1886; also on the lately discovered Διδαχὴ τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων, 1885; these were published in April, 1886, under the title "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, with illustrations from the Talmud, two Lectures on an Ancient Church Manual discovered at Constantinople." Dr. Taylor received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Harvard (Cambridge, Mass.), 1886; and was made Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, 1887 and 1888.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Isaac, M.A., Litt. D., LL.D., Canon of York, born May 2, 1829, at Stanford Rivers, is the eldest son of the late Isaac Taylor, author of the "Natural History of Enthusiasm." Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he obtained the Silver Oration Cup, and graduated as a Wrangler in 1853. In 1854 he edited a translation of Becker's "Charicles." He was ordained in 1857 to a country curacy, and published in 1860 "The Liturgy and the Dissenters." Removing to London, where he successively held two West-End curacies, he published in 1864 a work on the Etymology of Local Names, entitled "Words and Places, or Etymological Illustrations of History, Ethnology, and Geography." In 1865, he undertook the charge of one of the poorest parishes in Bethnal Green. His plans and labours for the benefit of his destitute parishioners were described in a little book entitled "The Burden of the Poor." In 1867 he published "The Family Pen; Memorials, Biographical and Literary, of the Taylor Family of Ongar." In 1869 he accepted the incumbency of a church at Twickenham. In 1873 he read a paper before the Philological Society on "The Etruscan Numerals," and in 1874 brought out a volume entitled "Etruscan Researches." Presented in 1875, by Earl Brownlow, to the Rectory of Settrington, in Yorkshire, he undertook systematic researches into the origin and history of the Alphabet. The first-fruit of these studies appeared in 1879, in a book called "Greeks and Goths, a Study on the Runes." Shortly afterwards he published, at Berlin, a paper "Ueber den Ursprung des glagolitischen Alphabets," in which he discussed the origin of the earliest Slavonic alphabet. In 1879 he received from the University of Edinburgh the degree of LL.D., honoris causâ, in recognition of his discoveries and philological attainments. In 1883 Dr. Taylor published, in two large volumes, his most important work, entitled "The Alphabet, an Account of the Origin and Development of Letters." In consideration of its merits the Board of Classical Studies at Cambridge unanimously recommended its author for the degree of Doctor in Letters. In the same year, 1885, he was collated to a Canonry and Prebendal Stall in York Minster, and two years later was appointed Rural Dean. In 1887 he read a paper at the Manchester meeting of the British Association on "The Origin and Primitive Set of the Aryans," which was afterwards enlarged into a volume, published in the Contemporary Science Series in 1889. The winter of 1887-88 he spent in Egypt, whence he wrote to the St. James's Gazette a series of letters recording conversations with Egyptians on politics and religion. These letters, with additional chapters on the tenets of Islam, were republished in the autumn of 1888, in a volume entitled "Leaves from an Egyptian Note Book," with the object of dispelling prejudices as to the beliefs and practices of our Mahomedan fellow subjects in India and elsewhere. Canon Taylor, who was one of the founders of the Alpine Club, is a frequent contributor to learned periodicals, especially on subjects connected with Aryan and Ural-Altaic Philology, Onomatology, Ethnology, Palaeography, Epigraphy, and Comparative Mythology. In 1865 he married a daughter of the Hon. H. Cockayne-Cust.

TAYLOR, General Sir Richard Chambre Hayes, K.C.B., born in Dublin, March 19, 1819, second son of the Hon. and Rev. Edward Taylor, younger son of the First Earl of Bective, by Marianne, daughter of Colonel the Hon. Richard St. Leger, was educated at Hazlewood School and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the army as Ensign of the 79th Highlanders in 1835. He served in various colonies and in the Crimean War, including the battles of the Alma and Balaklava, siege and fall of Sebastopol (in command of his regiment), also in the Indian Mutiny, including the siege and capture of Lucknow, operations in Oude and Rohilcund, Trans-Gogra campaign, actions of Rooyah-Allygunge, Bareilly, Shahjehanpore, Punniar, Mahomdee, Rampoorukussia, passage of the Gogra (commanded column), and was frequently mentioned in despatches. He was Assistant-Adjutant-General, Shorncliffe and Dover Division, from July, 1860, to July, 1865; Inspecting Field Officer and Assistant-Adjutant-General, home district, from May, 1867, to April, 1871; Inspector-General of Recruiting from August, 1873, to Dec., 1876; Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Forces from Dec., 1876, to Oct., 1878; Adjutant-General of the Army from August, 1882, to Nov., 1882; Governor of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, from Jan., 1883, to August, 1886. He was promoted Colonel, May, 1858; Major-General, March, 1868; Lieutenant-General, Oct., 1877; General, April, 1883; and nominated C.B. 1857, and K.C.B. 1882; Retired list, Aug., 1886.

TAYLOR, William Mackergo, D.D., LL.D., was born at Kilmarnock, Scotland, Oct. 23, 1829. He graduated at the University of Glasgow in 1849, and at the divinity School of the United Presbyterian Church at Edinburgh in 1852. For two years he was pastor of a small church at Kilmaurs, Ayrshire, and in 1855 went to Liverpool to take charge of a newly organized Presbyterian church, which under his care became a large and influential church society. Visiting the United States in 1871, his preaching while there was received with so much favour that he was called to succeed the late Dr. Joseph P. Thompson in the pulpit of the Broadway Tabernacle (New York City), one of the most prominent Congregational Churches in America, and of this church he has been, since 1872, the pastor. In 1876 and 1886 he was lecturer at the Yale Seminary, and in 1880 at Princeton Seminary. From 1876 to 1880 he was editor of The Christian at Work. He has published "Life Truths" (sermons), 1862; "The Miracles," 1865; "The Lost Found and the Wanderer Welcomed," 1870; "Memoirs of the Rev. Matthew Dickie," 1872; "Prayer and Business," 1873; "David, King of Israel," 1875; "Elijah the Prophet," and "The Ministry of the Word" (Yale lectures), 1876; "Songs in the Night," 1877; "Peter the Apostle," and "Daniel the Beloved," 1877; "Moses the Lawgiver," 1879; "The Gospel Miracles in Relation to Christ and Christianity" (Princeton lectures); and "The Limitations of Life" (sermons), 1880; "Paul the Missionary," 1882; "Contrary Winds" (sermons), 1883; "Jesus at the Well," 1884; "John Knox, a Biography," 1885; "Joseph the Prime Minister," and "The Parables of Our Saviour," 1886; and "The Scottish Pulpit," 1887. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by both Yale and Amherst Colleges in 1872, and that of LL.D. by Princeton College in 1883.

TCHERNAIEFF, Michael Gregorovitch, a Russian general, born Oct. 24, 1828, entered the Russian military service in 1847, distinguished himself greatly in the Crimean war, and attained the rank of a General of Infantry. On the conclusion of the Crimean war he was first appointed chief of the staff of a division in Poland, and in 1858 he was sent to Orenburg in the capacity of Aide du Chef de la ligne du Syr Daria. In 1859 he commanded an expedition on Lake Aral, to support the Khirgiss tribes, at war with the Khivans. After a period of service as Quarter-Master-General of the left flank of the line held by the army of the Caucasus, Tcherniaeff for some time acted as chief of the staff of the corps at Orenburg. Next he was placed in command of an expeditionary force consisting of 1000 men, with instructions to march from Orenburg, through the passes of the mountains bounding Siberia on the south, and across the steppes of Turkestan, and to effect a junction with another detachment under Colonel Verevkin which had set out from Semipalatinsk, in Siberia. The junction occurred in the vicinity of the town of Tchekmend, then occupied by the Khokanians. This town Tcherniaeff took by assault, and immediately afterwards unsuccessfully attacked (October, 1864) the important city of Tashkend, about 80 miles south of Tchekmend, and also in possession of the Khokanians. Having wintered at Tchekmend he renewed successfully the attempt on Tashkend (June 27, 1865). It is said that he had received specific instructions to content himself with the position of Tchekmend, and to refrain from any further efforts to extend the Russian domination further southward. Tcherniaeff disobeyed his orders, took Tashkend, and was afterwards welcomed most enthusiastically at St. Petersburg, and received a sabre of honour from the Emperor in recognition of his military enterprise; but from that date he was not actively employed in the Russian service. After a time he retired from the army, and passed a legal examination qualifying him to adopt the profession of a notary, when the Emperor begged him to re-enter the army. He did so in compliance with the Imperial request, and was reinstated in his rank. After vainly waiting a whole year for active employment, he again retired from the army, and purchased the Ruski Mir, a journal which boldly advocated Slav interests, and of which, after he had quitted the military service altogether, in July, 1874, he became the recognised editor. When in 1875 the insurrection in Herzegovina broke out, he opened a subscription in its behalf, and afterwards, in the summer of 1876, he went to Belgrade and took the command-in-chief of the Servian army. The campaign was most disastrous to the Servians, although their army was largely reinforced by Russian volunteers. Tchernaieff's proclamation of Prince Milan as King of Servia was much censured at the time as a rash and foolish act. General Tcherniaeff left St. Petersburg Sept. 12, 1882, for Tashkend, to take up the reins of Government there.

TEALE, Thomas Pridgin, M.A., M.B., Oxon., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., was born at Leeds, June 28, 1831, and is the son of Thomas Pridgin Teale, F.R.S., some time surgeon to the General Infirmary at Leeds, and one of the first members of the General Medical Council nominated by the Queen. He was educated at the Leeds Grammar School, Winchester, Brasenose College, Oxford, and King's College, London. He was lecturer on Anatomy and Surgery in the Leeds School of Medicine, 1856 to 1870; Surgeon to the General Infirmary at Leeds, 1864 to 1884; and subsequently Consulting Surgeon. He is the author of "Dangers to health, a pictorial guide to Domestic Sanitary Defects," first published in 1879, now in the 4th edition. This work has been translated into French and Spanish, and into German by H.R.H. the Princess Christian, and is now in its 2nd edition. He served on the staff of Lord Wolseley in Egypt in 1882, and received the Egyptian medal and the Khedive's star, was mentioned in the despatches, and was made colonel, unattached. His Highness is colonel à la suite of the Würtemberg dragoon regiment, "Queen

His Highness married, on June 12, 1866, H.R.H. The Princess Mary Adelaide, daughter of H.R.H. Prince Adolphus Frederick, Duke of Cambridge, the seventh son of His Majesty King George III. TEGETMEIER, William B., F.Z.S., of German extraction, born at Colnbrook, Bucks, in 1816, was educated for the medical profession at University College, London. Mr. Tegetmeier is well known as a writer on natural history. He is the author of "The Poultry Book," "Pigeons," "The Natural History of the Pheasants," "Monographs of the Cranes," "Pallas's Sand Grouse," &c., and as having republished many rare ornithological treatises, as "Boddaert's Planches Enluminées" and "Moore's Columbarium." He has devoted much attention to the variation of species, and assisted Mr. Charles Darwin in the preparation of his volumes on "The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication," and other works. Mr. Tegetmeier has contributed articles to the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and "The Ibis;" and is the author of two text books on "Domestic Economy," written at the request of the School Board of London and for the Government Training Colleges. He has been for many years on the staff of the Field newspaper.

TEMPLE, The Right Rev. Frederick, D.D., Bishop of London, son of an officer in the army, born Nov. 30, 1821, was educated at the Grammar School at Tiverton, and proceeding to Oxford, became Scholar of Balliol College, and took his degree of B.A. in 1842 as a double first-class. He was elected Fellow and Mathematical Tutor of his college, and, having been ordained in 1846, was appointed Principal of the Training College at Kneller Hall, near Twickenham, in 1848. This post he resigned in 1855; and having held an Inspectorship of Schools during the interval, was appointed, on the resignation of Dr. Goulburn, in 1858, Head Master of Rugby School. Dr. Temple, who was a Chaplain to the Queen, gained some notoriety in 1860 as the author of the first of the seven "Essays and Reviews," which caused so much controversy soon after their appearance. At the general election of 1868, Dr. Temple took an active part in Warwickshire in support of Mr. Gladstone's measure for the disestablishment of the Irish Church; and the Premier nominated him to the bishopric of Exeter, in succession to the late Dr. Philpotts—an appointment which caused considerable commotion in clerical circles. The confirmation of Dr. Temple's election took place Dec. 8, 1869, at the church of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheap-side, when Bishop Trower, as the representative of a portion of the clergy who were opposed to Dr. Temple, because he was the author of one of the "Essays and Reviews," instructed counsel to oppose the election. Counsel were accordingly heard on both sides, and Dr. Temple's election was confirmed by the Vicar-General. Dr. Temple received episcopal consecration at Westminster, Dec. 21, 1869, together with the bishops-elect of Bath and Wells, and of the Falkland Islands. Dr. Temple published "Sermons preached in Rugby Chapel, in 1858-60," in 1861. In April, 1883, he was elected Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for the ensuing year. On the death of Dr. Jackson in Jan., 1885, Dr. Temple was appointed Bishop of London, and was succeeded at Exeter by Dr. Bickersteth.

TEMPLE, Sir Richard, Bart., G.C.S.I., M.P., D.C.L. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Cantab.), of the Nash, Kempsey, near Worcester, was born in 1826, and entered the third class of the Bengal civil service in 1846. Was Secretary to Sir John Lawrence in the Punjab, and First Assistant to the Financiers, James Wilson and Samuel Laing; and eventually was appointed Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and the Political Resident at Hyderabad. He was Foreign Secretary to the Governor-General, and Finance Minister of India, from 1868 to 1874. In Jan., 1874, he was appointed to superintend the relief operations in the famine-stricken districts of Bengal. He became Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in 1875; was created a Baronet in Aug., 1876; and was appointed Governor of the Presidency of Bombay, in Jan., 1877, which office he held till March, 1880. He was appointed K.C.S.I. in 1864. He returned home in 1880, in order to accept the candidature offered to him by the Conservative party for East Worcestershire, but was defeated. He has sat for the Southern or Evesham division of Worcestershire since 1885; has been Vice-Chairman of the London School Board; and has been President of the Social Science Congress. He is still the Financial Member of the London School Board. He was nominated an Extra Knight Grand Commander of the Order of the Star of India, Jan. 1, 1878. He is the author of "India in 1880;" "Men and Events of my Time in India," 1882; "Oriental Experience," 1883; "Cosmopolitan Essays," 1886; "Palestine Illustrated," 1888; and the memoir of "John Lawrence," in the series of "English Men of Action."

TENNIEL, John, artist, born in London, in 1820, was educated at Kensington. At a very early age he showed a taste for art, and whilst a boy his first picture was exhibited, and sold at the Gallery of British Artists in Suffolk Street. He studied art in his own way, and may be said to have been entirely self-taught. He was a successful candidate in one of the Cartoon competitions in Westminster Hall in 1845, painted a fresco in the Palace at Westminster, and has produced only a few pictures since, chiefly for private collections. In 1851 he became a member of Punch's "Staff," and from that time has contributed to the illustration of that periodical. For many years he has, without the break of a single week, produced the political cartoon, and may thus claim a place not only as an artist but as an historian of the time. He has illustrated, wholly or in part, many Christmas books and other works; amongst which may be mentioned "Æsop's Fables," "Lalla Rookh," "The Ingoldsby Legends," and "Once a Week." He is also the illustrator of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and its sequel, "Through the Looking Glass;" but has long since entirely discontinued making drawings for "book illustration," and has been for many years a Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours.

TENNYSON, Alfred (Lord Tennyson), D.C.L., F.R.S., Poet Laureate, third son of the late Rev. G. C. Tennyson, the elder brother of the late Right Hon. C. Tennyson D'Eyncourt, was born in 1809, at his father's parsonage, at Somerby, Lincolnshire; his mother, who died in 1865, being a daughter of the Rev. Stephen Fytche. He was educated by his father, and in due course proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1829 he gained the Chancellor's Medal by a poem in blank verse, entitled "Timbuctoo." With the exception of a volume of poems published in conjunction with his brother Charles, when they were boys, and a prize poem, composed whilst an undergraduate at Cambridge, Mr. Tennyson did not publish anything till 1830, when "Poems chiefly Lyrical" appeared, and from 1842 the steady and rapid growth of his fame may be traced. The two volumes then issued were in part merely a republication, but the most important poems were those added to his former productions. It was at once apparent that the author of the "Morte d'Arthur," "Locksley Hall," the "May Queen," and the "Two Voices," was entitled to take the first rank among English poets, a reputation which was more than sustained by the two great works which followed. So well known and popular, indeed, had Mr. Tennyson become after the publication of "In Memoriam," in 1850, that it seemed only a matter of course, upon the death of Wordsworth, in 1850, that the privilege of wearing "the laurel greener from the brows of him who uttered nothing base" should be offered to him. This was also the year of his marriage to Emily, daughter of Henry Sellwood, Esq., of Berkshire, and niece of Sir John Franklin, by whom he has had two sons, Hallam, and Lionel. The "Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington" was published in 1852, on the morning of the funeral; and since that occurrence few events of more than ordinary interest in the eyes of Englishmen have taken place without eliciting from the Laureate some poem worthy of the occasion. He has written "Poems chiefly Lyrical," published in 1830; "Poems," in 1832; "Poems," 2 vols., in 1842; "The Princess, a Medley," in 1847; "In Memoriam," issued anonymously, in 1850, being a series of elegies—a tribute of affection to the memory of Arthur Hallam, a son of the eminent historian, and the chosen friend of the poet in his earlier days at Cambridge; "Maud, and other Poems," in 1855; "The Idylls of the King," in 1858; "Enoch Arden, and other Poems," in 1864; "The Holy Grail, and other Poems," published Dec. 15, 1869; "The Widow, or the Songs of the Wrens," in 1870; and "Gareth and Lynette," in 1872. In 1879 Mr. Tennyson republished "The Lover's Tale," a poem which was originally printed in 1833, but soon withdrawn from circulation. In the re-issue it is accompanied by a reprint of the sequel, a work of the author's mature life, "The Golden Supper." After this followed "Ballads, and other Poems." Among his dramatic compositions are, "Queen Mary," 1875; "Harold," 1876; "The Cup," a play which was represented at the Lyceum Theatre, Jan. 3, 1881, Mr. Irving taking the principal character (as also was "Queen Mary"); "The Falcon," produced by Mr. and Mrs. Kendal; and "The Promise of May," a drama in three acts, brought out at the Globe Theatre, Nov. 11, 1882. "A Concordance to the entire Works of Alfred Tennyson," published in 1869, is a remarkable proof of the Laureate's great popularity. At the Commemoration of 1855, the University of Oxford, giving expression to the universal feeling of England, conferred on the poet the honorary degree of D.C.L., and the Fellows of his own college, Trinity, Cambridge, endorsing the judgment of the sister university, subscribed to purchase his bust (by Woolner), which they have placed in their library, and in 1869 they unanimously elected him an honorary fellow of the college. In Dec., 1883, Mr. Tennyson accepted a peerage as Baron Tennyson of Aldworth, Sussex, and of Freshwater, Isle of Wight. Since then he has published "Becket," "Tiresias and other Poems," and, at the end of 1886, "Locksley Hall—Sixty Years After," and, in his 81st year, he has lately produced another volume, "Demeter, and other Poems," which has been very popular with both the English and the American public.

TERBY, François Joseph Charles, was born on Aug. 9, 1846, at Louvain, Belgium, in which city he was educated; and in 1869 he obtained the degree of Docteur en Sciences. As early as 1862 he had begun making astronomical, and occasional meteorological observations; and these he has never abandoned, though for some years he was lecturer on physics at the University of Louvain. He has now in his private observatory an eight-inch equatorial by Grubb, which he devotes chiefly to planetary and lunar work. His papers have mostly been inserted in the publications of the Royal Academy of Belgium. Dr. Terby is a member of the Commission d'Inspection de l'Observatoire Royal de Belgique; Correspondent of the Academy of Sciences of Belgium; and Foreign Member of the Royal Astronomical Society of London.

TERRY, Edward O'Connor, was born in London, March 10, 1844, and made his first histrionic attempt as an amateur with the "Thespian Dramatic Club," and showing promise as an actor, entered the profession in 1863. He played at Woolwich, Rochester, Sheffield, and Belfast. On leaving Belfast he became a member of Mr. Charles Calvert's company at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester. In 1867 he made his début in London, at the Surrey Theatre. In 1868 he appeared at the Lyceum Theatre, under the management of the late Mr. E. T. Smith. After remaining the season, he accepted an engagement from Mr. Swanborough for the Strand Theatre, where he played Paul Pry for ninety-five consecutive nights, the longest run of the play on record. He next became a member of the Gaiety company, in 1876, where he has played in "Little Don César de Bazan," "Bohemian Gyrul," "Little Doctor Faust," "Robbing Roy," "Forty Thieves," and "Bluebeard." Latterly he has given up burlesque, appearing in comedy parts, as Walkinshaw in "The Rocket;" Montague Joliffe in "In Chancery." In May, 1885, he fulfilled his last engagement at the Gaiety, and has since been in the provinces, where he has produced a new farcical comedy entitled "The Churchwarden," adapted from the German by himself, and presented for the first time (in London) at the Olympic Theatre, Thursday, Dec. 16, 1886. Mr. Terry is now proprietor of a new theatre called by his name, which was erected in the Strand during 1887; in which house he produced and played in "Sweet Lavender," which was performed 670 consecutive times. Mr. Terry was invited to speak at the Church Congress at Cardiff, and read to an audience of over 2,000, a paper on "Theatres as an Amusement for the People," and was compelled to repeat it (the same night) at an overflow meeting.

TERRY, Miss Ellen Alice, actress, was born at Coventry, Feb. 27, 1818, and made her first appearance on the stage at the Princess's Theatre under the management of Mrs. Charles Kean, and remained with the Keans until they gave up management in London. Miss Terry next appeared at the Royalty Theatre, and afterwards at the Haymarket, learning her first steps in legitimate comedy in this, the London Comedy Theatre. Then followed a short engagement at the Queen's Theatre, with Mr. and Mrs. Wigan at the head of affairs, playing in the "Taming of the Shrew," and acting for the first time with Mr. Henry Irving. Leaving the stage for seven years, she returned to the Queen's Theatre, making her re-appearance as Philippa Chester in Charles Reade's "Wandering Heir." In 1875, Miss Terry was engaged by Mr.

Bancroft to play at the Prince of Wales' Theatre. In 1876, Lord Lytton's play "The House of Darnley" was produced by Mr. John Hare, at the Court Theatre, and in this play Miss Terry took the principal character. She remained at the Court Theatre until Mr. Hare gave up its direction. On Mr. Irving taking the management of the Lyceum Theatre, he was enabled to secure the services of Miss Ellen Terry, who made her first appearance at that theatre on Dec. 30, 1878, playing Ophelia to the Hamlet of Mr. Irving. "Hamlet" was followed by "The Lady of Lyons," in which she played Pauline. She afterwards took in succession the parts of Portia, in the "Merchant of Venice;" Desdemona to the Othello and Iago of Mr. Irving and Mr. Edwin Booth; and Juliet, to the Romeo of Mr. Irving. Miss Terry went with Mr. Irving and the other members of the Lyceum company on a tour to the United States in 1883, and again in 1884, playing Ophelia, Beatrice, Portia, and other leading rôles in her well-known répertoire. She was received in America and Canada with great enthusiasm. During 1889, Miss Terry visited Germany; and, after her return, had the honour of appearing before the Queen at Sandringham.

TEWFIK PACHA (Mohammed Tewfik), Khedive of Egypt, was born Nov. 19, 1852, being the eldest son of the late Khedive Ismail. He succeeded to the Vice-royalty of Egypt by a degree of the Ottoman Empire, June 25, 1879, upon the forced abdication of his father, and received the investiture on Aug. 14. He is the sixth ruler of Egypt in the dynasty of Mohammed Ali Pacha, who was appointed Vali or Governor in 1806, and who in 1841 got the Sultan, with the Five Great Powers of Europe, to settle the hereditary principality in his own family. Ali had rebelled against the Sultan, encouraged by the French Government of that day, and had made himself absolute master of the country. He was succeeded in 1848 by his son, Ibrahim Pacha, who had lived but two months after his elevation. The next ruler, Abbas Pacha, a son of Mohammed Ali's second son, reigned six years. In 1854 he was strangled by order of the Sultan, as a punishment for attempted treason. Said Pacha, a third son of Mohammed Ali Pacha, succeeded on the death of Abbas; but Said also died in 1863, whereupon his nephew, Ismail Pacha, second son of Ibrahim, born in Jan. 1829, became ruler in his turn. The title of Khedive was conferred upon him

instead of that of Vali by an Imperial firman in 1866. At the same time the law of succession was altered from that which had been established in 1841. Instead of succession devolving as heretofore, according to the usual principles of Mohammedan Law, upon the senior male descendant of the founder of the dynasty, it was to go to Ismail's eldest son, and thenceforth in the same order of primogeniture, excluding the other branches of Mohammed Ali's family. This favour was granted to the late Khedive in 1866 by Sultan Abdul Aziz, in consideration of a large money payment, but in violation of the ancient and sacred law, and of the convention with the foreign Powers. The consequence of that arrangement of 1866 was the accession of Tewfik in 1879, instead of Halim, the fourth son of Mohammed Ali. Prince Tewfik was President of the Council at the time of the coup d'état of his father, but resigned the post immediately afterwards. The principal events of his reign up to 1883 have been narrated in our notice of Arabi (q.v.). Since that time the Khedive has acted in close harmony with the British authorities. He is a loyal and an honest man; is neither cruel, vicious, extravagant, nor an intriguer; and is thus, as far as character goes, a very paragon among Khedives. Tewfik married, on Jan. 18, 1873, the Princess Emineh, daughter of the late El Hami Pacha, and has two sons and two daughters. He behaved with noble devotedness during the outbreak of cholera in 1883; in company with his wife he visited the sick and dying, in spite of the remonstrances of his ministers.

THEEBAW, ex-King of Ava (Burmah), whose Burmese titles are Theebaw Min, His Most Glorious and Excellent Majesty, &c., is the eleventh king of the Alompra Dynasty, founded in 1853 by the first Burmese King of that name. He was born in 1858, and succeeded his father, Mindong Min, in Oct. 1878. He was placed on the throne by the intrigues of the favourite Queen of the late King, who assumed the position of Dowager-Queen, and caused Theebaw to be proclaimed, at the same time forming an alliance between Theebaw and her second daughter, Soo Pyah Lat, whom he married shortly after his accession. His reign was unfortunately remarkable for palace orgies and for the murder of his relatives, followers, and servitors. Anarchy and misrule reigned throughout his kingdom. Theebaw sought to injure British trade and influence by placing the control of the whole commerce of his country and the taxation of the frontier in the hands of French agents, and took away the teak forests from British cessionnaires to give to French monopolists. For some time he endeavoured to establish relations with foreign agents, and to contract agreements or alliances with the object of creating a situation full of embarrassment for the English Government. In Nov. 1885, an ultimatum was despatched to King Theebaw, but the proposals for an amicable settlement were refused. General Prendergast then sailed up the Irrawaddy to his capital, and proclaimed his deposition and the annexation of Upper Burmah to England. Theebaw surrendered on Nov. 29, and shortly afterwards was sent first to Rangoon, thence to British India, where he still remains.

THIBAUDIN, Jean, a French General, was born at Moulins-Engilbert (Nièvre), Nov. 13, 1822, and received his military education at Saint-Cyr. He first saw active service in Africa, and afterwards went through the Italian campaign. On the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war he was sent as Lieut.-Colonel to serve under Gen. Frossard, took part in the battles of Forbach and Rezonville, and was taken prisoner after Bazaine's capitulation of Metz. He succeeded, however, in escaping, and made his way back to the French army, where, under an assumed name, he commanded a regiment. After the conclusion of peace he was promoted colonel, and in 1882 became general. In 1883 he succeeded Gen. Billot as Minister of War, and at once appeared as a prominent Radical, hostile to the Orleans Princes. By his order the Duc d'Aumale and the Duc de Chartres were placed on the retired list. On the visit of the late Alfonso XII., king of Spain, to Paris, in Sept. 1883, Gen. Thibaudin was thought to be compromised in the hostile demonstrations that took place, and he was dismissed from the Ministry (Oct. 5, 1883). In 1885 he resumed his duties as a member of the Committee of Infantry.

THISELTON-DYER, William Turner, C.M.G., M.A., F.R.S., son of the late W. G. Thiselton-Dyer, M.D., was born in the parish of St. James, Westminster, July 28, 1843, and educated at King's College School, where he was First Class Mathematical Scholar, at King's College, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he became Junior Student in 1863. He obtained a Second Class in Mathematics, a First Class in Natural Science in the Final Schools, 1867, the B.Sc., London, 1870, and the M.A., Oxford, in 1873. He has held successively the following appointments: Professor of Natural History at the Agricultural College, Cirencester, 1868; Professor of Botany at the Royal College of Science for Ireland, 1870; Professor of Botany, Royal Horticultural Society, 1872; Assistant-Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, 1875; and Director, 1885. At the International Phylloxera Congress, Bordeaux, 1881, he was the representative of New South Wales, South Australia, and Victoria. He was a Royal Commissioner for the Melbourne Centennial International Exhibition of 1888. In 1873 and several succeeding years Mr. Thiselton-Dyer delivered in the Schools of the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, courses of instruction in Botany to teachers in training. In these a new treatment of the subject was developed; the leading types of vegetable organisms were described and practically demonstrated, and for the first time the same methods of class exposition were applied to the vegetable kingdom as were more or less in general use for the animal kingdom. Mr. Thiselton-Dyer was Examiner in Botany, in the University of London, 1878-83; and Member of the Senate, 1887-90. At Kew he has been specially occupied with the development of botanical work, and the organisation of botanical departments in the Colonies and India. He has published "Flora of Middlesex," 1869 (with Dr. Trimen); an English edition of "How Crops Grow," 1869 (with Professor Church); and an English edition of "Sachs's Text Book of Botany," 1875 (with Mr. A. W. Bennett). Mr. Thiselton-Dyer married, in 1877, a daughter of Sir J. D. Hooker, K.C.S.I., late Director of Kew Gardens.

THOMAS, Annie, See CUDLIP, MRS. ANNIE HALL.

THOMAS, Arthur Goring, the youngest son of the late F. Thomas, Esq., of Ralton Park, near Eastbourne, Sussex, formerly in the 8th Hussars, latterly Master of the Southdown Foxhounds, was born Nov. 21, 1851, and was educated at Haileybury College. He was intended for the Civil Service, but his health failing, he had to go to Madeira in 1870, for three winters. On returning to England in 1873, he determined to take up music seriously, an idea which had up to that time been discouraged. He went to Paris, and, by the advice of Ambroise Thomas, studied for two years with Emile Durand, of the Conservatoire. He returned to London in 1875, and studied three years with Sir Arthur Sullivan and Mr. Prout at the Royal Academy of Music, twice gaining the Annual Medal for composition. He wrote an opera on the subject of Moore's "Light of the Harem," which was performed by students, and led to a commission being given by Mr. Carl Rosa to write for him "Esmeralda," which was produced at Drury Lane, March, 1883, with great success; and at Cologne, in German, the same year; and at Hamburg in 1885. Previous to this the most important works given in public were:—"The Sun Worshipers," a cantata written for the Norwich Festival, 1881; two ballet suites, and various concert scenes, &c. The second opera written for Carl Rosa in 1885 was a libretto, by Julian Sturgis, on a Russian subject entitled, "Nadeshda." This also was produced at Drury Lane, with Madame Valleria in title role. This opera was produced also in Breslau in 1890, and is accepted for performance at Cologne, Hamburg, and Berlin. A comic opera in three acts written for Carl Rosa Company is finished, but has not yet been produced. In the same year "Esmeralda" was played at Covent Garden in French, various important alterations having been made for that purpose. The French translation has been written by M. Paul Milliet, author of the libretto of "L'Hérodiade." Besides the above publications Mr. Thomas has published three volumes of French and English songs and duets, as well as many detached pieces.

THOMAS, Charles Louis Ambroise, a French musical composer, born at Metz, Aug. 5, 1811, is the son of a distinguished professor of music. He entered the Conservatoire in 1828, and there gained many prizes, including the grand prize of Rome at the competition of 1832. After his return from Italy, he produced the following works amongst others:—"La Double Échelle," 1837; "Le Perruquier de la Régence," 1838; "Le Panier Fleuri," "La Gipsy," ballet, composed conjointly with Benoist, 1839; "Carline," 1840; "Le Guerillero," 1842; "Le Caïd," his first great success, 1848; "La Sonde d'une Nuit d'Été," 1850; "Raymond," 1851; "La Cour de Célimène," 1855; "Psyché," 1856; "Le Carnaval de Venise," 1857; "Le Roman d'Elvire," 1860; "Mignon," 1866; "Hamlet," an opera represented for the first time on the stage March 8, 1868, and the hundredth repetition of which was prevented by the burning of the old Opera House in the Rue Lepeletier, Oct. 23, 1873; "Mignon," altered into an opera for the Baden Theatre, 1869; "Gilles et Gillet," and "Françoise de Rimini," another opera, 1877. M. Ambroise Thomas has also composed a Requiem Mass, fantasies, nocturnes, rondos, &c. He was elected a member of the Académie des Beaux Arts in succession to Spontini, in 1851; was appointed "Officier d'Instruction Publique" in Dec., 1869; and replaced Auber as Director of the Conservatoire de Musique in 1871. He has been a Commander of the Legion of Honour since 1868, and "Grand Officier" since Jan. 1, 1881.

THOMAS, Theodore, musician, was born at Esens, Hanover, Germany, Oct. 11, 1835. He first played in public at the age of six. In 1845 his family removed to the United States, and for two years he played violin solos at concerts in New York. He then travelled for a time in the South, and returning to New York in 1851, he played at concerts and at the opera; at first as one of the principal violinists, and afterwards as orchestral leader, until 1861. In connection with others he began a series of Chamber Concerts in 1855, which were continued until 1869. His first symphony concerts were given in 1861-65, and extended (excepting from 1869 to 1872) until he left New York, in 1878, to take the direction of the College of Music at Cincinnati. He remained in Cincinnati until 1880, when he resigned this position and returned to New York. With brief intervals he has been conductor of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society since 1862, and of the New York Philharmonic Society since 1878. From 1866 to 1878 he gave a series of summer concerts nightly in various cities; and in 1869 he made his first concert tour in the Eastern and Western States, which he has repeated from time to time since. He has conducted eight music festivals in Cincinnati (1873, 1875, 1878, 1880, 1882, 1884, 1886, and 1889), two in Chicago (1882 and 1884), and one in New York (1882). In the winter of 1885-86 he organised a series of popular concerts in New York, and during the same season was conductor of the American Opera Co. Mr. Thomas has unquestionably done more than anyone else to raise the musical standard in America during the past thirty years.

THOMAS, William Luson, director of the Graphic, was born on Dec. 4, 1830, and was educated privately. He is the younger brother of the late George H. Thomas, the well-known artist. At the age of sixteen he went to Paris; then to New York; afterwards to Rome, where he studied drawing with his brother. In 1848 he returned to London, and was articled pupil to James W. Linton, the wood engraver; and two years afterwards commenced business on his own account, with great success. He employed his spare time in painting, and was elected an Associate of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, and a few years afterwards full member; since which time he has been a constant exhibitor. The Institute deciding to alter their laws and admit all artists' works at their exhibition, it was proposed to build a new gallery for the advancement of Water-Colour Art in Piccadilly, and invite the senior society and the Royal Water-Colour to amalgamate. Mr. W. L. Thomas was very active in this attempt, viz., to have only one large Water-Colour Exhibition, but, unfortunately for the advancement of Water-Colour art, was not successful; he, however, succeeded in obtaining the principal portion of the large capital required, and was elected Chairman of the Piccadilly Art Galleries Co. The building embraces the picture galleries of the Institute and Prince's Concert Hall. In 1869 he established the Graphic, and was decorated by the French Government "Officier de l'Instruction Publique." In 1890 he attempted the even more formidable task of establishing a daily illustrated paper—the Daily Graphic. The difficulties are enormous, but they are being steadily surmounted. The new journal at once became a favourite, and is improving daily in every department.

THOMPSON, Edmund Symes, M.D., is the third son of the late Theophilus Thompson, M.D., F.R.S., Physician to the Hospital for Consumption, Brompton; author of "Annals of Influenza;" "Clinical Lectures on "Pulmonary Consumption," &c. Mr. E. S. Thompson was born in London on Nov. 16, 1837, and was educated (for nine years) at St. Paul's School and at King's College Hospital. At the M.B. examination of the University of London he obtained the Scholarship and Gold Medal in Medicine, and high honours (third) in the three allowed subjects. He took the M.D. Lond. in 1860, and was appointed, in the same year, Assistant-Physician to King's College Hospital. In 1864 he was elected Assistant-Physician to the Hospital for Consumption at Brompton; Physician in 1871; and Consulting Physician in 1889. In 1867 he became Professor of Physic in Gresham College (founded A.D. 1574); Fellow and (for four years) Secretary of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society; Fellow and (for three years) Secretary, Vice-President, and President of the Medical Society of London; and F.R.C.P. in 1868. He is editor of the 2nd edition (with additional chapters) of "Lectures on Pulmonary Consumption," and author of "Essays on the Influence of Cod-liver Oil;" on "Sciatica;" on "Mediastinal Growths;" on "Indigestion in early Phthisis;" on "The Elevated Health Resorts of the Southern Hemisphere;" "Gresham Lectures;" on "Coughs and Colds;" on "South Africa as a Health Resort;" on "Winter Alpine Health Resorts;" on "Sea Voyages;" &c.

THOMPSON, Edward Maunde, F.S.A., Hon. LL.D. of St. Andrews, Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford and of Durham, born May 4, 1840, in Jamaica, was educated at Rugby. He was appointed an Assistant in the British Museum in May, 1861, became Assistant-Keeper of the MSS. in 1871, and was appointed Keeper of the MSS. in succession to Mr. Bond, in 1878, and Principal Librarian and Secretary in 1888. Mr. Thompson, who is a barrister of the Middle Temple, has edited "Chronicon Angliæ, 1328-1388" (in the Rolls Series), 1874; "Letters of Humphrey Prideaux" (for the Camden Society), 1875; "Chronicon Adæ de Usk, 1377-1404" (for the Royal Society of Literature), 1876; "Correspondence of the Family of Hatton" (for the Camden Society), 1878; "Diary of Richard Cocks, in Japan, 1615-1622" (for the Hakluyt Society), 1883; jointly with Professor Jebb, the facsimile of the "Laurentian Sophocles" (for the Hellenic Society), 1885; "Chronicon Galfridi le Baker de Swynebroke, 1303-1356," 1889; and "Adæ Murimuth Continuatio Chroniconum, 1303-1347," with "Robertus de Avesbury de gestis mirabilibus Regis Edwardi Tertii" (in the Rolls Series), 1889. He is joint editor of the publications of the Palæographical Society.

THOMPSON, Sir Henry, F.R.C.S., born at Framlingham, Suffolk, Aug. 6, 1820, and educated at University College, London, was appointed Assistant Surgeon of University College Hospital, London, in 1853, Surgeon in 1863, Professor of Clinical Surgery in 1866, and Consulting Surgeon in 1874. In 1884 he held the post of Professor of Surgery and Pathology to the Royal College of Surgeons, London. He gained the Jacksonian Prize of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1852, with an essay on "The Pathology and Treatment of Stricture of the Urethra;" and the same prize in 1860, with an essay on "The Healthy and Morbid Anatomy of the Prostate Gland," both which, together with his "Clinical Lectures" and his work on "Practical Lithotomy and Lithotrity," have run through numerous editions here, and have been translated into all the chief European languages. After performing a difficult but successful operation upon the late King of the Belgians, in 1863 he was appointed Surgeon Extraordinary to His Majesty, and to the present King in 1866. He is an honorary member of the Society of Surgery in Paris, of the French Society of Hygiene, and of that of Italy; also an honorary member of l'Accademia de' Quiriti at Rome, and of the Royal Society of Fine Arts of Antwerp, besides numerous other foreign societies; he became an Officer of the Order of Leopold in 1864, and a Commander of the same Order in 1876. He was knighted in 1867. Two articles written by him in the Contemporary Review, in 1873, drew public attention to the subject of cremation. Sir Henry has since written other articles on the same subject; and, in the Contemporary Review in 1874, a paper on "The Prayer for the Sick: hints towards a serious attempt to estimate its value." At various times he has written on matters relating to Food and Diet, in the Nineteenth Century; also a work entitled "Food and Feeding," the fifth edit. of which has just been issued. Sir Henry Thompson studied painting under Mr. Elmore, and Mr. Alma Tadema, and he has frequently exhibited pictures at the Royal Academy, in the Salon of Paris, and elsewhere. He is also understood to be the author of two novels which appeared about four or five years ago under the pseudonym of "Pen Oliver." More recently he has written a small work entitled "Diet in relation to age and activity," and last year, "Modern Cremation, its History and Practice." He has been President of the "Cremation Society of England" since 1874, when it was founded, and has taken an active part in advocating the practice here and abroad.

THOMPSON, The Rev. John, A.M., was born in the city of Carlisle more than sixty years ago. He is to a large extent a self-made man. Losing his father at the age of four, his early training was conducted by a kind and prudent mother; for a few years his own hands ministered to his necessities. During leisure hours, he studied Latin and Greek under the freely given skilful tuition of a ministerial friend. He entered Glasgow College in 1843, and left it in 1848, after taking the degree of M.A. In Greek classics he obtained two prizes, and in Moral Philosophy one, awarded by the votes of his fellow-students. During his Theological Course at the United Presbyterian Divinity Hall, in Edinburgh, he obtained four scholarships, varying in value from £15 to £31 10s. He was ordained to the Holy Ministry in West Calder United Presbyterian Church in 1852. There he laboured more than six years; was then translated to St. Paul's, Birkenhead; and thence, after fourteen years, was removed in 1872 to Westmorland Road Presbyterian Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Thompson gave his chief strength to ministerial work, and was favoured with much success. At his ordination in West Calder the membership of his Church was 250; at his removal it was 375. At his induction in St. Paul's Church, Birkenhead, the members were 33; at his leaving they were 153. In 1872 the members of Westmorland Road Church were about 130; in the end of 1889 they were over 600. Occasionally Mr. Thompson has done a little literary work. Several articles from his pen have appeared from time to time in some of our religious periodicals. He published "Life-Work of Peter the Apostle," in 1870; and "Life and Writings of John the Apostle," in 1882. He was unanimously chosen moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England by the Synod of 1890. There he delivered an inaugural address on "The Spiritual Success of Christianity," a proof of its divine origin and a stimulus to ministerial activity. His presidency over the deliberations of the Synod gave general satisfaction. Mr. Thompson is a Liberal in politics; and is never reluctant to take his place on a Liberal platform. Thirteen years ago, he was elected as a Liberal candidate to a seat in the Newcastle-on-Tyne School Board. For six years he has been Chairman of the Works Committee; and throughout his career he has done everything in his power to secure for England the benefits of a liberal education.

THOMPSON, Joseph, F.R.G.S., African explorer, was born at Penpont in 1858, and at the age of twenty, visited Central Africa in company with the late Keith Johnston, and assumed the command of the expedition on the death of his chief. In 1884 he began his famous journey to Masai Land, and was successful in reaching the north-eastern corner of Lake Victoria Nyanza. He published a description of his journey under the title of "Through Masai Land." In 1888 he started on an expedition to Morocco, during which he crossed the Atlas chain of mountains in six different places. In 1889 he published "Travels in the Atlas and South Morocco." He has received the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society, and is also Gold Medallist in geology and zoology at the University of Edinburgh.

THOMPSON, Sir Ralph Wood, K.C.B., PERMANENT UNDER SECRETARY FOR WAR.

THOMPSON, Professor Silvanus Phillips, F.R.A.S., was born in York, June 19, 1851, and educated chiefly at Bootham School, York, the Flounders Institute, Pontefract, and the Royal School of Mines. He took the degree of B.A. (Lond.), 1869; B.Sc. (Lond.), first (bracketted in Honours), 1876; and D.Sc. (Lond.), 1878. He was appointed Science Master, Bootham School, York, 1874; Lecturer in Experimental Physics, University College, Bristol, 1876; Professor of Experimental Physics, in the same college, 1879; and Principal of, and Professor of Physics in, the City and Guilds' Technical College, Finsbury, 1885. He is the author of "Elementary Lessons in Electricity and Magnetism," 1881, 43rd thousand in 1889; "Dynamo-electric Machinery," 1885, 4th edition 1890; and other works on electricity. Professor Thompson has made numerous scientific researches in electricity, magnetism, acoustics and optics. He is Vice-President of the Physical Society of London, Membre de Conseil de la Société de Physique (Paris), Hon. Member of the Physical Society of Frankfurt-am-Main, Member of Council of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and Hon. Sec. of the Gilbert Club.

THOMSON, Joseph John, M.A., F.R.S., was born on Dec. 18, 1856, at Manchester, and is the son of Mr. J. J. Thomson of Manchester. He was educated at the Owens College, Manchester, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was 2nd Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos, 1880. He was elected Professor of Experimental Physics, in the University of Cambridge, in 1884. He is the author of a treatise "On the Motion of Vortex Rings," 1883; "The application of Dynamics to Physics and Chemistry," 1888; and of various papers in the Transactions of Scientific Societies. He is Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Fellow of the Royal Society.

THOMSON, Professor Sir William, President of the Royal Society, F.R.S., S.L. & E., LL.D., D.C.L., was born in Belfast in June, 1824. His father, the late James Thomson, LL.D., was lecturer on mathematics at the Royal Academical Institute in Belfast, but on his appointment to the professorship of that science in the University of Glasgow, he removed thither with his family. At the early age of eleven William entered the College, and shortly after completing his course at Glasgow he removed to Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1845 as second Wrangler, being immediately afterwards elected to a Fellowship. In 1846 he was made Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow, and still occupies that post. In the same year he accepted the editorship of the Cambridge and Dublin Mathematical Journal. To this magazine, which he continued to edit for about seven years, he contributed valuable additions to the mathematical theory of electricity, and among the principal of these was his paper on the "Distribution of Electricity on Spherical Conductors," published in 1848. In 1855 Professor Thomson delivered the Bakerian Lecture. It was entitled, "Electrodynamic Properties of Metals," and contained a series of experimental investigations of the highest value. Among the most important of his contributions to the advancement of electrical science are the construction of several beautiful instruments, and their application to the study of atmospheric electricity. His quadrant and portable electrometers, owing to their diversities of application and extreme delicacy and accuracy, have been of the greatest service; a modification of the former has been very successfully used at the Kew Observatory, to indicate and self-register changes in the electric state of the atmosphere. But it is in connection with submarine telegraphy that Sir W. Thomson's labours in electrical science are best known, he being the inventor of the Mirror Galvanometer and the Siphon-Recorder, which, owing to their extreme delicacy, can be worked by very low battery power, a circumstance that tends greatly to the preservation of the cables. To the science of magnetism also Sir W. Thomson has made important additions. In the investigation of the nature of heat, his extraordinary power of mathematical insight is seen to great advantage; and many communications from his pen on the subject of Vortex Motion have appeared in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Amongst his many valuable scientific papers we may mention those on "Thermal Effects of Fluids in Motion;" the "Mathematical Theory of Elasticity;" the "Rigidity of the Earth;" the "Determination of a Ship's place at Sea from Observation of Altitudes;" and on "Approach caused by Vibration." On the successful completion of the Atlantic Cable in 1866 he received the honour of knighthood, and was presented with the freedom of the city of Glasgow. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him successively by the Universities of Dublin, Cambridge, and Edinburgh, and that of D.C.L. by Oxford. He is a Fellow of both the London and Edinburgh Royal Societies, from the former of which he received the Royal Medal, and from the latter the Keith Prize. He delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge in 1866; was President of the British Association at its meeting in Edinburgh in 1871; and was elected President of the Geological Society of Glasgow for the year 1872. On Oct. 29, 1872, he was elected a Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, under the provisions of the College statutes, empowering the Master and Fellows to elect men eminent for science or learning. He has also received various decorations from abroad. He is Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, Commander of the Order of Leopold, and has received the German Ordre pour le Merite. In Dec., 1877, he was elected by the Paris Academy of Sciences to fill the place of the late Von Baer as Foreign Associate. He was President of the Section of Mathematical and Physical Science at the meeting of the British Association, held at York in Sept., 1881, when he delivered a remarkable address on the sources of energy in nature available to man for the production of mechanical effect. Sir W. Thomson was appointed one of the British Commissioners for the Electrical Exhibition held in Vienna in Aug., 1883. Three volumes of "Mathematical and Physical Papers" by him, "collected from different scientific periodicals," were published at Cambridge in 1882, 1884, and 1890. He has been President of the Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association five times, viz., Belfast, 1852; Dundee, 1867; Glasgow, 1876; York, 1881; Montreal, 1884. He is the inventor of a very extensively used improved form of the Mariner's Compass, in which complete and perfect correction against disturbance by the ship's magnetism, temporary and permanent, is provided; and of a Sounding Machine, by means of which soundings are taken in depths up to 100 fathoms, without even slackening the speed of the ship. Sir William Thomson has also of late years devoted much attention to the subject of Electric lighting, and is the inventor of a great variety of instruments designed for measuring the electric currents and potentials used in that industry. Sir William Thomson succeeded Sir George Gabriel Stokes, Bart., as President of the Royal Society, in 1890.

THORBURN, Sir Robert, K.C.M.G., was born March 28, 1836, at Juniper Bank, in the County of Peebles, Scotland, and is the son of the late Robert Thorburn, Esq., of Juniper Bank, and Alison, daughter of the late Robert Grieve, Esq., of Kailatar, Perthshire, Scotland. He was educated in Edinburgh; went to Newfoundland in 1852; settled at St. John's, the capital of the island, where he has followed mercantile pursuits, and is now engaged in business. He was appointed Member of the Legislative Council of Newfoundland, Feb. 14, 1870, but resigned his seat in that body in 1885, when he entered the House of Assembly, and became Premier, which office he held till the close of 1889. Sir Robert Thorburn represented the Colony of Newfoundland at the Colonial Conference in London in 1886, when he received the Honour of Knighthood, and, being senior member of the Conference, had the honour of reading and presenting the address of the Conference to Her Majesty the Queen.

THORNE, Richard Thorne, M.B., F.R.S., was born Oct. 13, 1842, at Leamington, Warwickshire, and is the eldest living son of the late Mr. T. H. Thorne, J.P., banker, Leamington. He is Bachelor of Medicine (double first-class), University of London; Fellow of the Royal Society; Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, London; was appointed a Medical Inspector to H.M. Privy Council Office in 1871; and Senior Assistant Medical Officer to the Local Government Board in 1883. He is Lecturer on Public Health to St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical School; Examiner in Public Health to the Universities of Oxford and London, and to the Conjoint Board of Physicians and Surgeons in London. He was appointed delegate to represent the British Government at the International Sanitary (Cholera) Conference in Rome, 1885; President of the Epidemiological Society of London, 1887-89; and Milroy Lecturer to the Royal College of Physicians of London, 1891. He is the author of a paper "On the Origin of Infection," published in the Transactions of the Epidemiological Society, 1878; "The Progress of Preventive Medicine during the Victorian Era, 1837-87;" "Diphtheria; its Natural History, and Prevention," 1891; "Report on the Use and Influence of Hospitals for Infectious Diseases," published in the Tenth Annual Report of the Medical Officer of the Local Government Board; and of a large number of official reports on the causation of epidemic diseases, and on the health of towns, published in the Reports of the Privy Council Office and of the Local Government Board.

THORNTON, The Right Hon. Sir Edward, G.C.B., P.C., D.C.L., LL.D., is the son of the late Right Hon. Sir Edward Thornton, G.C.B., who was for some time Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Portugal, and upon whom the title of Count de Cassilhas, in that kingdom, had been conferred by King John VI. of Portugal. Sir Edward Thornton, who succeeded to the title of Count de Cassilhas (in the kingdom of Portugal) on the death of his father about 1850, entered the diplomatic service in 1842, when he was attached to the mission at Turin. He was appointed paid attaché in Mexico in 1845, and Secretary of Legation to the Republic of Mexico in 1851. From April, 1852, till Oct., 1853, he acted as Secretary to the late Sir Charles Hotham's special mission to the River Plate. He was appointed Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General to the Republic of New Granada in May, 1854, but was transferred to the Republic of Uruguay in Sept. of the same year. He was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Confederation of 1859; in July, 1865, he was sent on a special mission to the Emperor of Brazil, and in the following month he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Brazil. He retained this post until Sept., 1867, when he was transferred in the same capacity to the court of the King of Portugal. He, however, did not proceed thither, but was appointed in the following Dec. to the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington, in the place of the late Hon. Sir Frederick Bruce, G.C.B. In recognition of his diplomatic services he was made a Companion of the Bath (civil division) in Feb., 1863; and a Knight Commander of the same order, Aug. 9, 1870. He was sworn of the Privy Council, Aug. 19, 1871. Sir Edward Thornton was appointed Ambassador at St. Petersburg in May, 1881, and to the Sultan of Turkey, Dec. 1, 1884. This post he only actually held during some months in 1886; and in Oct. of that year left Constantinople "on leave of absence," to be succeeded by Sir William White. He was created a G.C.B. in Aug., 1883.

THORNYCROFT, W. Hamo, R.A., sculptor, son of Thomas and Mary Thornycroft (q.v.), was born in London, March 9, 1850. He was brought up in a remote part of Cheshire, and educated at Macclesfield Grammar School, and at University College School, London. At the age of seventeen he began to work in his father's studio, and in 1869 was admitted a student at the schools of the Royal Academy. In 1871 he first exhibited at the Royal Academy, and in the same year proceeded to Italy, where the nature of his art received considerable modification from study of the works of the Renaissance. In 1875 Mr. Thornycroft gained the biennial Gold Medal of the Royal Academy for a group of "A Warrior bearing a Wounded Youth from the Field of Battle." In 1880 he made his first great success, with a statue of "Artemis," which he executed in marble for the Duke of Westminster, and which is now at Eaton Hall. In Jan. 1881, Mr. Thornycroft was elected A.R.A., and for the exhibition of the same year produced his statue of "Teucer," which was purchased from the Chantrey Fund, and is now, in bronze, in the South Kensington Museum. Since then his most important works have been, the statue of "The Mower," 1884; "The Memorial to the Poet Gray," at Pembroke College, Cambridge, 1885; and the statue of "The Sower," 1886. Also in 1885 he executed a bust of Samuel Taylor Coleridge for Westminster Abbey; also a memorial to Sir John Gosse for the crypt of St. Paul's, and was commissioned by the Government to execute the National Memorial to General Gordon, which now adorns Trafalgar Square. A replica of this statue, but with different sculptural treatment of pedestal, he executed for Melbourne also. In 1888 he exhibited his statue of "Medea" and was elected a Royal Academician. He is now engaged upon a public statue of John Bright, for Rochdale. In 1890 Mr. Thornycroft exhibited at the Academy his diploma work, a marble relief, entitled "The Mirror," and some small bronzes. In 1884 Mr. Thornycroft was married to Agatha, daughter of Homersham Cox, Esq., of Tonbridge.

THORNYCROFT, John Isaac, builder of torpedo boats, eldest son of Thomas and Mary Thornycroft, was born on Feb. 1, 1843, in the Via Felice, Rome, in which ancient city his parents were then studying classic art. His mechanical training was commenced at an early age by his father, who made a locomotive, on which his children rode round his studio. The cylinders of this locomotive were afterwards adapted by his eldest son to form the engines of a very successful model steamer, which contained several of the most important elements to which the success of the modern torpedo boat is due, —the closed stokehole and fan, by means of which air could be forced through the fire, and the relatively large size and low position of the propeller. Rather later, when eighteen years of age, he constructed a small steam launch, the Nautilus, which was the first steam launch on the Thames that attained sufficient speed to keep up with racing crews. In 1863 he designed the Ariel, which was built at Chiswick, where he started, almost as an amateur, boat-builder. The Ariel was an example of a very fast steamboat, which was surpassed in speed by only the Miranda. The exact performance of the Ariel was measured by Sir Frederick Bramwell in 1872, and made a considerable sensation when published at a meeting of the Naval Architects. This boat may be considered as the progenitor of the torpedo boats of the present day. The closed stokeholes, however, were perfected by Mr. Thornycroft only in 1876, in the Gitanu, a yacht on the Lake of Geneva, which has never yet been beaten by a boat of similar size. After building the Ariel Mr. Thornycroft went for nine months as a draughtsman to Palmer's Shipbuilding Co., on the Tyne; he then went to Glasgow to go through the engineering course at that University, and obtained the certificate of proficiency in less than the usual time. On leaving the University he spent nine months at Mr. John Elder's, of Govan, in studying the method of shipbuilding on the Clyde. He then returned to Chiswick, and became a builder of torpedo boats. In this profession he rapidly took the first place; and he has constructed a very large number of such boats for the British and foreign governments. Among some of the more recent inventions of Mr. Thornycroft we may mention a speed-indicator which he has perfected during the last few years, and a water-tube boiler, which combines great economy of fuel with lightness of structure, and has been fitted in many torpedo boats with marked success. The turbine propeller, also designed by Mr. Thornycroft for shallow draught vessels, is gaining

THORNYCROFT, Mrs. Mary, daughter of the late Mr. John Francis, sculptor, was born in 1814, at Thornham, in Norfolk. From an early age she was admitted to her father's studio, and soon became an exhibitor of heads and busts at the Royal Academy. The work which first attracted the attention of the public was a life-size statue called the "Flower-Girl." Miss Francis became the wife of Mr. Thornycroft, who had been a pupil of her father, in 1840, accompanied him on a tour through Italy in 1842, and at Rome derived great advantage from the advice of Thorwaldsen and Gibson. The latter was struck with her models of "Sappho" and a "Sleeping Child," and recommended her to the Queen as the best artist to model the portraits of the royal children. On her return to England in 1843, Mrs. Thornycroft received Her Majesty's command to execute a statue of the Princess Alice, and performed her task so satisfactorily, that commissions were given to her for statues of the Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred. The Queen continued to patronise her, and she executed other works for the royal family. Her admirable work, a "Girl Skipping," was greatly admired in the Paris Exhibition of 1855. Of Mrs. Thornycroft's sons, one is the proprietor of the great torpedo-boat building yard on the Thames, and one is the sculptor and A.R.A. Her daughter, Miss Helen Thornycroft, is an accomplished flower-painter.

THOROLD, The Right Rev. Anthony Wilson, D.D., Bishop of Winchester, younger son of the late Rev. Edward Thorold, rector of Hougham-cum-Marston, Lincolnshire, by Mary, only daughter of Thomas Wilson, Esq., M.D., of Grantham, was born at Hougham, June 13, 1825, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford (B.A. 1847; M.A. 1850; D.D., by diploma, 1877). He was rector of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, London, from 1857 to 1868; a member of the Schools Inquiry Commission in 1864; minister of Curzon Chapel, Mayfair, in 1868; and was elected on the first School Board for London in 1870. He became vicar of St. Pancras, Middlesex, and rural dean, in 1869; canon residentiary of York in 1874; examining chaplain to the Archbishop of York the same year; also provincial chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury. On the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, he was nominated by the Crown to the bishopric of Rochester, in succession to Dr. Claughton, who had been translated to the newly-constituted See of St. Albans. He was consecrated in Westminster Abbey, July 25, 1877, and was made Bishop of Winchester in Jan., 1891, in succession to the Right Rev. E. Harold Browne who resigned. He is the author of several devotional works, of which one, "The Presence of Christ," has gone through twenty editions.

THORPE, Professor Thomas Edward, F.R.S., was born at Harpurhey, near Manchester, Dec. 8, 1845, being the son of a Manchester merchant. He was educated at private schools, at Owens College, Manchester, and at the Universities of Heidelberg and Bonn. He was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at Owens College in 1869; Professor of Chemistry in Anderson's College, Glasgow, in 1870; Professor of Chemistry in the Yorkshire College at Leeds in 1874; and Professor of Chemistry at the Normal School of Science, and Royal School of Mines, South Kensington, in 1885. He is an F.R.S., and a Member of Council, 1890, a Vice-President and Treasurer of the Chemical Society of London, a Member of the Council of the Society of Chemical Industry, and of the Institute of Chemistry, a Fellow of the German Chemical Society, and of the Physical Society of London, Ph.D. of Heidelberg, and B.Sc. of the Victoria University, Manchester, formerly Examiner in Chemistry at, and now Fellow of, the University of London, and Examiner to the Victoria University, and the Science and Art Department, South Kensington. He was the first Longstaff Medallist of the Chemical Society of London, a Royal Medallist of the Royal Society (1889), and is a corresponding member of the Philosophical Societies of Glasgow and Leeds. Professor Thorpe is the author of upwards of 70 memoirs on Chemistry and Physical Chemistry, published in the "Philosophical Transactions," the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the Journal of the Chemical Society, and the British Association Reports. He is also the author of a "Dictionary of Applied Chemistry," 3 vols.; "Inorganic Chemistry," 2 vols.; "Qualitative Analysis;" "Quantitative Analysis;" "Chemical Problems;" and editor of "Coal: its History and Uses." He has likewise written various articles in Watts' "Dictionary of Chemistry," and is a frequent contributor to Nature and other scientific periodicals. Professor Thorpe was a member of the Solar Eclipse Expeditions of 1870, 1878, and 1886. He has acted as one of the Secretaries of the Chemical Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, was a Vice-President of the Section at the Jubilee Meeting at York in 1880, a Member of the Council, and President of the Chemical Section at the Leeds Meeting in 1890.

THRING, Lord Henry, K.C.B., born at Alford, Somerset, on Nov. 3, 1818, is the second son of the Rev. J. G. D. Thring, and Sarah, daughter of the Rev. J. Jenkyns, of Evercreech, Somerset. He was educated at Shrewsbury, and Magdalen College, Cambridge; was third in the First Class of Classical Tripos, and fourteenth Junior Optime, 1841; B.A., 1841; M.A., 1844; called to the Bar in 1845, Inner Temple; was appointed Counsel to the Home Office in 1860, and Parliamentary Counsel in 1868. He was made K.C.B. in 1873, and a Peer in 1886, on his retirement from office. He has published works on the Succession Duty Act; "The Law of Joint Stock Companies;" "Practical Legislation," and various articles in reviews. He married, in 1856, Elizabeth, daughter of the late John Cardwell, Esq., of Liverpool, and has one child, Katharine Annie.

THURLOW (Lord), The Right Hon. Thomas John Hovell-Thurlow Cumming-Bruce, P.C., F.R.S., fifth Baron Thurlow, of Thurlow, County Suffolk, was born in London on Dec. 5, 1838. He is the son of the third Baron, by Sarah, only daughter of Peter Hodgson, Esq., and succeeded his elder brother as the fifth Baron on April 22, 1874. Lord Thurlow is a descendant of a Norfolk family, which dates back several centuries. Amongst his ancestors was William Thurlow, of Burnham-Ulp, in Norfolk, who died in the year 1590. The Barony of Thurlow was created in 1792, and the first Baron was Edward Thurlow, who was born in 1732, and died in 1806. It was in recognition of his high legal merits that the first Lord Thurlow was created a peer, and occupied the Woolsack, as Lord Chancellor, for close on 20 years. The present Lord Thurlow entered the diplomatic service in the year 1858, and in the year following became attached to the Embassy at Paris. During 1860-1 Lord Thurlow was attached to the Earl of Elgin's special mission to China. He was present at the capture of the Taku forts and of Peking, and was one of the recipients of the China Medal. In 1862 he was appointed private secretary to the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and in 1864 was attached to H.M. Embassy at Vienna. During the years 1865-6 he was private secretary to Sir Frederic Bruce, H.M. Minister at Washington. Subsequently he was appointed second secretary in the diplomatic service, proceeding to the Hague in December, 1866. He resigned that appointment in July, 1870, and retired from the diplomatic service. He is a Justice of Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for the counties of Elgin, Nairn, Stirling and Suffolk, and was a Lord-in-waiting upon the Queen from Sept., 1880, to June, 1885, and from Feb. to May, 1886. From the April to the August of the last mentioned year he occupied the position of Paymaster-General; and was also, in that year, appointed to represent Her Majesty as Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which holds its annual meetings in Edinburgh. He was then also appointed a Privy Counsellor. In 1864 he married Lady Elma, the only surviving child of the eighth Earl of Elgin by his first wife, Elizabeth Mary, who was the only daughter of Charles Lennox Cumming-Bruce, Esq., M.P., of Roseisle, Dunphail and Kinnaird, N.B. Lord Thurlow assumed in the right of his wife, and by Royal license in July, 1874, the additional names of Cumming-Bruce. Lord Thurlow has six children, and his heir, the Honourable James Bruce, was born in 1867.

THURSTON, Sir John Bates, K.C.M.G., High Commissioner and Consul-General for the Western Pacific, was born in 1836, followed the nautical profession till 1866, when he became Consul at Fiji and Tonga, and was very popular there; and became the chosen and special adviser of the King and Chiefs of Fiji to confer with Her Majesty's Commissions as to the cession of Fiji. In 1874 he was Colonial Secretary and Auditor General of Fiji, and in 1879 was Secretary to the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific; and, in 1887, became Governor of Fiji and High Commissioner.

THURSTON, Professor Robert H., LL.D., formerly of the United States Naval Engineer Corps, later Professor of Engineering, was born in Providence, R.I., Oct. 25, 1839. He is the son of Robert L. Thurston, who built his first engine in 1821, and founded the Providence Steam Engine Company, in 1837. R. H. Thurston was educated at Brown University, and received, during youth, a useful practical education in his father's workshops. When he left college, in 1859, he was familiar with the work of the draughtsman, designer, pattern maker, moulder, the forge, and machine shop. He also did a considerable amount of work in the design and construction of the Sickles and the Greene engines, which were built by the firm. Then the war broke out, calling the best men of the country into the army and navy. Mr. Thurston applied for appointment in the engineer corps of the navy, passed examination in the summer of 1861, and was ordered to duty on board the Unadilla, was senior assistant, and had charge of the engines during action. January, 1866, found Mr. Thurston at the office of the Commandant of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, reporting to Admiral Porter for duty in the Department of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, as an acting assistant Professor. He was six years continuously on duty at the Naval Academy. In July, 1871, Mr. Thurston accepted an appointment at the school of mechanical engineering at Hoboken, and for fourteen years filled the chair of engineering in the Stevens Institute of Technology, resigning his commission in the navy in 1872. He organized, about 1873, or earlier, what was probably the first mechanical laboratory for research in engineering that was ever founded; and, for the dozen years succeeding, kept it employed constantly in the investigation of problems of practical importance. He was, meantime (1875-8) a member of the U.S. Board appointed to test iron, steel, and other metals, directed the greater part of the work completed by that board, and, as its secretary, edited its reports. His investigation of the laws of friction and of properties of the alloys of copper, tin and zinc, which resulted in the determination, by a new and ingenious method, of the relative values of all combinations of those elements, were perhaps the most strikingly original, and famous of these researches. In July, 1885, Professor Thurston took charge of Sibley College, reorganized it, created a department of mechanical engineering, readjusted the older departments, and saw immediate results in the rapid growth of Sibley College. Dr. Thurston was the first President of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, has been for many years a member of the American, French, Scotch, German and Austrian Societies of Civil Engineers, of the British Institution of Naval Architects, the American Institution of Mining Engineers, of which he is also Past Vice-President, the American and British Associations for Advancement of Science, three times Vice-President of the former, and once of the latter (Montreal, 1884), and of other scientific and technical associations at home and abroad. He is a member of the "Loyal Legion," and is Officier de L'Instruction Publique de France, and was given the degree of LL.D. by his Alma Mater, Brown University, on the thirteenth anniversary of his graduation. He has been an extensive writer, on professional subjects mainly, his papers numbering something like 250, and he writes some articles of a speculative character. He is the author of many books, including a "History of the Steam Engine," a three-volume treatise on "The Materials of Engineering," a treatise of "Friction and Lost Work," etc.

TICHBORNE, Charles Robert, LL.D., Ph.D., Fellow of the Institutes of Chemistry and the Chemical Society, Member of the Council of the Royal Irish Academy, and Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland, was educated at Birmingham, and is the son of William S. Tichborne, a descendant in the direct line from Sir Robert Tichborne, whose name appears on the death warrant of Charles the 1st. Charles Tichborne studied chemistry under Professor Hofmann, and shortly afterwards went to superintend the Laboratories of the Apothecaries' Hall of Ireland, with which body he has been associated for many years. He was appointed, in 1872, Lecturer on Chemistry to the Carmichael College of Medicine, and in 1874-75 he was Extern Examiner in Chemistry to the University of Dublin. He is at the present time an Examiner under the Conjoint Board of the College of Surgeons and Apothecaries' Hall. On the retirement of Sir Dominic Corrigan, Mr. Tichborne was elected President of the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland, and is at present a gas examiner for the Board of Trade, and one of the County Analysts. Mr. Tichborne began very early in life to write scientific papers, some of the most important of which are the following:—"Official Reports upon the Chemical Section of the International Exhibition, Dublin, 1864;" "Detection of Cantharides in Medico-legal Investigations," described in Taylor's Principles of Medical Jurisprudence. He contributed to the columns of the Cornhill Magazine a description of the naturally formed mummies found in St. Michan's Church, Dublin. This was transferred to the pages of the Pall Mall Gazette, Sept. 6, 1866. In 1868 appeared an analysis of the well-known Schwalheim Waters, in which the author discovered lithium; these waters had previously been examined by Liebig, and, in 1869, Tichborne described, in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, a new body, which he called colophonic hydrate. As far back as 1871 the Royal Irish Academy voted £50 to aid him in his researches upon Molecular Dissociation. In 1870-71 he published many papers on dust as a ferment, and particularly street dust. At that time this investigation was in its infancy. His papers on subjects connected with Pharmacy are too numerous to mention, but many of the processes in the British Pharmacopoeia are based upon his investigations. He also published, in connection with Dr. Frosser James, a work entitled "The Mineral Waters of Europe." Professor Tichborne invented an instrument for scientifically determining the relative hardness of stones, which was most favourably received by the Institute of Civil Engineers, and about 1888 he patented, in association with a syndicate, the collection, liquefaction, and utilization, of the carbonic acid gas given off during fermentation. This Tichborne process is being successfully carried into operation in the largest brewery in the world, Messrs. Guinness's, of Dublin. He married, in 1861, Sarah, the daughter of Surgeon Wilkinson, of Black Rock, co. Dublin, and has one son and three daughters.

TIBARD, M., twice Prime Minister of France, was born at Geneva, of French parents, in 1827. He is a working watchmaker by trade, and kept a small shop on the Boulevard Sebastopol, in Paris, till brought to the front by force of circumstances. He was elected a deputy in 1871; was one of the representatives of Paris from 1876 to 1884, when he passed to the Senate. In 1879 he was Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and subsequently he was Minister of Finance.

TISZA, von Borosjenő Koloman, late Prime Minister of Hungary, was born at Geszt, Dec. 16, 1830, and educated for the Civil Service, but his career was blocked at the outset by the Revolution of 1848. For some years he devoted himself to travel, and in 1859 first became known as an opponent of the Government policy of religious intolerance. In 1860 his party gained some independence; he then obtained a seat in the Hungarian Parliament, and succeeded Count Teleki as a leader of the Moderate Radicals. In 1875, carrying over this branch to the united Liberals under Deák, he became Minister of the Interior, and subsequently Prime Minister of the Hungarian Cabinet. In the critical period of 1876-8, he opposed Russia and Pan-slavism, being less vacillating than Count Andrassy, who kept hesitating between the views of Russia and Germany on the Eastern Question. He resigned with his co-ministers when Austrian finances were insufficient to meet the expenses of the Bosnian occupation, but eventually returned to his former position. In March, 1890, he resigned the Premiership, and was succeeded by Count Szapary.

TODD, Charles, C.M.G., M.A. (Cantab.), F.R.S., F.R.A.S., &c., Postmaster-General, Superintendent of Telegraphs, and Government Astronomer, Adelaide, South Australia, was born at Islington, July 7, 1826, and entered the Government Service at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, in 1841. In 1848 he was appointed Assistant Astronomer at Cambridge under the late Rev. Professor Challis. In 1854 he was appointed Assistant Astronomer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and in the following year he was offered, by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Lord John Russell, and accepted, the appointment of Government Astronomer and Superintendent of Telegraphs in South Australia, and left for that colony in July, 1855, where he introduced the Electric Telegraph System. In January, 1870, the Colonial Government, having decided upon amalgamating the Postal and Telegraph Services, appointed Mr. Todd Postmaster-General in addition to his duties as Superintendent of Telegraphs and Government Astronomer. Under his direction the telegraph was rapidly extended throughout the colony, his greatest work being the construction of a line from Adelaide through Central Australia, then a terra incognita, to Port Darwin, on the north coast, 2,000 miles long, to meet the cable of the Eastern Extension Telegraph Co. This work was carried out, in the face of great natural difficulties, in the space of about twenty months, being completed towards the end of 1872, in which year Mr. Todd rode across the Continent and thoroughly organised the service; and, on his return to Adelaide, received from Her Majesty the honour of the Companionship of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Shortly after this, the South Australian section, 1,000 miles long, of the telegraph line from Adelaide to Perth was constructed under Mr. Todd's immediate direction. As Government Astronomer, Mr. Todd has carried out an extensive series of Astronomical and Meteorological Observations, the latter affording much valuable information on the climate of Australia, including the dry interior, and the north coast. He determined the position of the eastern boundary line of the colony, or 141st meridian; and, in conjunction with Messrs. Ellery & Russell, the Government Astronomers of Victoria and of New South Wales, he made a careful telegraphic determination of the difference of longitude between Singapore, Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney. In 1886 the Cambridge University conferred upon him the degree of M.A., honoris causa; and in 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London. He is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide University; one of the Governors of the South Australian Public Library; has been President of the Royal Society of South Australia; and is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide School of Mines, &c.

TOLSTOI, Count Lyof Nikolaivitch, usually called Count Leo Tolstoi, the most eminent living Russian novelist and social reformer, is a descendant of Count Peter Tolstoi, the friend and comrade of Peter the Great, and was born on Aug. 28, 1828, at Yasnaia Poliana, in the Government of Toula, but was left an orphan at an early age. He received the usual education of a Russian noble, first privately and afterwards at the University of Kazan. He spent the subsequent years in study till 1851; when, at the age of 23, he entered the army and accompanied his brother to the Caucasus. On the outbreak of the Crimean war (1853) he was called to Sebastopol and saw active service there, taking the command of a mountain battery and assisting in the defence of the citadel. Resigning his commission at the close of the war (1856), he devoted himself to literature. His "War and Peace" (1860), a tale of the invasion of Russia by Napoleon in 1812, is regarded by Russians as his masterpiece; but "Anna Karenina," which appeared in 1876, is better appreciated abroad. Matthew Arnold spoke most enthusiastically in its praise a few months before his death, and George Meredith says that Anna, the beautiful but unfaithful wife, who ends her guilty passion by suicide, is the most perfectly depicted female character in all fiction. Since the publication of this last work, Tolstoi has given himself up to the earnest working out of the problems of life, the attainment of a higher religious and moral philosophy. He makes "Return not Evil" the keystone of the Christian faith, and insists that the literal interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount is the only rule of Christian life. His religious views are set forth in "Christ's Christianity" and "My Religion." His "Kreutzer Sonata," with its strange theory of morals, was published in 1890. Count Tolstoi is married, and has nine children living.

"TOM BROWN." See HUGHES, THOMAS, Q.C.

TOMLINSON, Professor Charles, F.R.S., F.C.S., was born in London, Nov. 27, 1808. His father becoming embarrassed, enlisted in the Army; and after serving in Holland, died on his passage to India, leaving his widow in poverty, and two children, Charles being the younger. She could provide them with only the mere rudiments of education, and at the age of twelve the boys were sent out into the world to earn their own living. The elder, meeting with friends, was able to obtain a University education; the younger, during many years, had to serve in very subordinate offices; but being fond of reading, he devoted his scanty leisure to study, and derived assistance from the London Mechanics' Institution, under the genial management of Dr. Birkbeck. In 1830 an opportunity offered for further improvement. He became assistant in a classical school, and a few years later, his brother being appointed to a curacy near Salisbury, it was suggested that a good day-school for boys was much wanted in that city. Accordingly the two brothers started such a school, the one undertaking the classical, and the other modern languages, and the science department. The introduction of experimental science into schools was at that time a novelty, and the lectures on Chemistry and Physics, delivered on two evenings in every week, not only interested the boys, but attracted many of the members of the boys' families. Charles even made some attempts at original research, and published papers in Thomson's Records of Science, and also in the Magazine of Popular Science. Some of these papers formed the basis of a work published in 1838, entitled the "Student's Manual of Natural Philosophy." This work was well adapted to the time, and had a rapid sale. Parker, the publisher of the Saturday Magazine, invited Charles to contribute to that work, which he did to a large extent during many years. Parker found Charles so useful to him, that he invited him to settle in London, so as to increase his literary and scientific connection with his publishing house. This offer was accepted, but before leaving Salisbury,

Charles married a highly cultivated lady, who during many years rendered him most valuable assistance in his literary work. Mr. Tomlinson's connection with Parker's house brought him into contact with various scientific men, and led to his appointment as Science Lecturer in King's College School. Mr. Tomlinson was one of the first members of the Cavendish Society, and undertook much literary work for it. He also wrote a number of scientific treatises for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, also several of the treatises in Weale's Series, and many articles on Technology in several Cyclopedias. Mr. Tomlinson's original researches in science are contained in numerous memoirs and papers in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society (of which he became a Fellow in June, 1867); the Philosophical Magazine; Jamieson's New Edinburgh Philosophical Journal; The Journal of the Chemical Society (of which he is also a Fellow); the Reports of the British Association (of which he is a Life Member); The Journal of the Society of Arts; The Pharmaceutical Journal; The Chemical News; Nature; The Proceedings of the Geologists' Association, and some others. He was also one of the original founders of the Physical Society. Mr. Tomlinson holds the opinion that the culture of a scientific man is very imperfect unless combined with a taste for literature. All through life it has been his business to become acquainted with the best books of the best authors in various languages. In 1874 he published a volume on "The Sonnet;" and in 1877 a translation of Dante's "Inferno," accompanied by an essay on Dante and his translators. This led to his appointment as Barlow lecturer on the Divine Comedy at University College, which he held during three years according to the founder's bequest, giving twelve lectures in each year. In 1881 he published a volume containing original Sonnets, and also Translations from the Italian and Spanish. In 1887 he brought out a second edition of his translation of Goethe's "Herman and Dorothea" (the first edition being published in 1849), including a long critical and historical introductory essay. In 1887 was published a volume of "Essays Old and New." Mr. Tomlinson is a Member of the Dante Society, and also of the Goethe Society; and has contributed various literary papers to the Transactions of the latter. He is also the author of a volume well known to chess players as "Amusements in Chess," and has contributed various papers to chess periodicals.

TOMLINSON, Herbert, B.A., F.R.S., was born at York, on Nov. 18, 1845, and was educated at St. Peter's School, York, and at Christ Church, Oxford. In 1868 he graduated B.A., both in the Mathematical and Natural Science Honours Schools; in 1870 he was Whitworth Exhibitioner, and in the same year was appointed Demonstrator of Natural Philosophy at King's College, London, which post he still retains. In 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in consideration of his original researches in physics. As a writer on natural science, Mr. Tomlinson is well known through his numerous contributions to the "Proceedings" of the Royal Society, the Philosophical Magazine, &c.; the most important of which relate to the influence of stress and strain on the Physical Properties of Matter. The following papers may be enumerated:—"Effect of Magnetization on the Electrical Conductivity of Iron" ("Proceedings" of the Royal Society, 1875); "Increase in Resistance to the Passage of an Electrical Current produced in Certain Wires by Stretching" (ibid., 1877); "Alteration of Thermal Conductivity of Iron and Steel caused by Magnetism" (ibid., 1878); "Moduli of Elasticity" (Philosophical Transactions, 1883); "Electrical Conductivity" (ibid.); "Relations between Moduli of Elasticity, Thermal Capacity, and other Physical Constants" (Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1885); "Alteration of the Electrical Conductivity of Cobalt, &c., by Longitudinal Traction" (ibid., 1885); "Internal Friction of Metals" (Philosophical Transactions, 1886); "Coefficient of Viscosity of Air" (ibid.); "On Certain Sources of Error in connection with Experiments on Torsional Vibrations" (Philosophical Magazine, 1885); "Temporary and Permanent Effects on some of the Physical Properties of Iron produced by raising the Temperature to One Hundred Degrees C." (ibid., 1886); "Effect of Change of Temperature on the Internal Friction and Torsional Elasticity of Metals" (abstract in Proceedings of the Royal Society 1886); and "Effects of Magnetization on the Elasticity and the Internal Friction of Metals" (Philosophical Transactions, vol. clxxix., p. 1).

TOOLE, John Laurence, comedian, son of Mr. Toole, the civic toast-master, born in London, March 12, 1833, was educated at the City of London School, and became a clerk to a wine-merchant, but soon quitted this occupation. Having been smitten with the "bias dramatic," he was induced to join the City Histrionic Club, where his qualifications for the dramatic profession were soon recognised, and he found a favourable opportunity for appearing before a public audience at a benefit to Mr. F. Webster, at the Haymarket Theatre, July 22, 1852. Having successfully passed this ordeal, he resolved to become an actor, and begun his professional career under Mr. Charles Dillon, at the Queen's Theatre, Dublin, where he achieved great success. After further testing his powers at Belfast, Edinburgh, and Glasgow, he accepted, in 1854, an engagement at the St. James's Theatre, London, under the management of Mrs. Seymour, and sustained a variety of characters in low comedy with considerable success. This was followed by an engagement with his old manager, Mr. C. Dillon, who had the Lyceum for a short term, and on the opening of the New Adelphi Theatre by Mr. Webster, Mr. Toole became the leading comedian. He has for more than thirty years been a popular favourite, whether it be in the broad region of farce, or in those more important parts in which tears and laughter equally predominate; such as "Caleb Plummer," in the version of Mr. Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth," or the honest fireman, Joe Bright in the drama "Through Fire and Water." For several years Mr. Toole has been in the habit of making a professional tour in the provinces, where he is as great a favourite as in the metropolis. In July, 1874, he went on a "starring" tour to the United States, and made his American début at Wallack's Theatre, New York (Aug. 17). He re-appeared at the Gaiety Theatre, London, Nov. 8, 1875. On Nov. 17, 1880, he undertook the management of the Folly Theatre, which he has reconstructed in accordance with all the requirements of the authorities, and re-named, calling it after his own name—Toole's Theatre. In 1888 he published his "Reminiscences." In March, 1890, he started for a tour in Australia.

TORRENS, William Torrens McCullagh, eldest son of Mr. James McCullagh, of Delville, co. Dublin, born in Oct., 1813, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A., 1834; LL.B. 1840), became a member of Lincoln's Inn, and practised at the Common Law Bar. He was appointed a Commissioner of the Poor Law Inquiry in Ireland in 1835, private secretary to Lord Taunton (then Mr. Labouchere) in 1846, represented Dundalk from 1847 till July, 1852, when he was an unsuccessful candidate for Yarmouth, for which he was returned at the general election in March, 1857; he was returned for Finsbury in July, 1865, and sat for the borough in four consecutive parliaments. In 1863 he assumed, for family reasons, his maternal name. He was a prominent member of the independent Liberal party, who secured by their support Mr. Disraeli's proposal of household suffrage for towns, and in committee on the Bill he proposed and carried the lodger franchise. In the following year he brought in the Artisans' Dwellings Bill, which passed both Houses. In 1869 he obtained the adoption of the system for London of boarding out children by Poor Law Guardians; and in 1870 an Act to amend the laws regarding extradition was passed in accordance with the recommendations of a committee, for which Mr. Torrens had moved two years before. The School Board for London was suggested and proposed to Parliament by him as an amendment to Mr. Forster's Elementary Education Bill; and he was himself elected a member of the School Board for Finsbury. When purchase in the army was abolished, he carried an address to the Crown against sending soldiers under age to serve in hot climates. Mr. Torrens has written "Lectures on the Study of History;" "The Life of R. L. Shiel;" "Life and Times of Sir James Graham;" "Industrial History of Free Nations;" "Empire in Asia, How we came by it;" "Memoirs of Viscount Melbourne;" "Reform of Procedure in Parliament;" and "Life of Lord Wellesley." In 1885, he brought in and carried an Act limiting the charge for Water Rates in London to the amount, from time to time, of the public assessment. To him also is due the enactment removing the principal prisons from the metropolis, in order to provide sites for workmen's dwellings and public gardens.

TOURGEE, Albion Winegar, American writer, was born at Williamsfield, Ohio, May 2, 1838. He studied at Rochester University, 1859-61, and then entered the Union Army and served throughout the Civil War. At its close he settled as a lawyer, farmer, and editor at Greensboro', N.C. He was a member of the N.C. Constitutional Conventions of 1868 and 1875, and was on the Commission to codify and revise the State laws. From 1868 to 1874 he was a Judge of the Superior Court of the State, and in 1876 he became U.S. pension agent for the State. In 1866-67 he published, at Greensboro', the Union Register; and from 1882-85, at Philadelphia, The Continent, a literary weekly. He is well known as a lecturer and as the author of "North Carolina Form-Book," 1869; "Toinette," 1874; "North Carolina Code," 1878; "Digest of Cited Cases," 1879; "Statutory Decisions of the North Carolina Reports," 1879; "Figs and Thistles," 1879; "A Fool's Errand," of which 135,000 copies were sold, 1879; "Bricks without Straw," 1880; "John Eax and Mamelon," 1882; "Hot Ploughshares," 1883; "An Appeal to Cæsar," 1884; "Black Ice," 1887; "Button's Inn," 1887; "Letters to a King," 1888; "With Gauge and Swallow," 1889; and "Pactolus Prime," 1890.

TRACY, The Hon. Benjamin Franklin, American statesman, was born at Oswego, N.Y., April 26, 1830. He received an academic education, studied law and began its practice as soon as he was of age. In 1853 and 1856 he was elected District Attorney of Tioga (his native) county, and in 1862 was a member of the New York legislature. He was appointed in 1862, by Governor Morgan, on a committee to organize recruiting for the United States army, and later commanded a regiment in the field, taking part in the battles of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania; and subsequently being in charge of the rendezvous and prison-camp at Elmira, N.Y. When mustered out at the close of the war he was brevetted a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He settled at Brooklyn, N.Y. (which has since been his home), and resumed his law practice. From 1866 to 1873 he was U.S. District Attorney for the district in which he lived; and from Dec., 1881, to Jan., 1883, he sat in the Court of Appeals (the highest judicial body in New York), to fill a vacancy. In 1882 he was nominated by his (the Republican) party as a Judge of the Supreme Court, but was not elected. Since March, 1889, he has been a member of President Harrison's Cabinet, holding the portfolio of Secretary of the Navy.

TRAILL, Henry Duff, D.C.L., youngest son of the late James Traill, a stipendiary magistrate of the metropolitan district, was born at Blackheath, Aug. 14, 1842, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, whence he proceeded as Probationary Fellow to St. John's College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1864. He was called to the Bar by the Society of the Inner Temple in 1868, and joined the Home (now South-Eastern) Circuit. He adopted the journalistic and literary profession in 1871, and has been an extensive contributor to the Pall Mall Gazette (under the original management), the St. James's Gazette, the Daily Telegraph, the Saturday Review, &c. He published in 1881, "Central Government" (the English Citizen series); in 1882, "Sterne" (the English Men of Letters series), and "Recaptured Rhymes," a re-issue of (principally) light political verse contributions to various newspapers and periodicals; in 1884, "The New Lucian," a series of Dialogues of the Dead; and "Coleridge" (English Men of Letters); in 1886, "Shaftesbury (the first Earl)," a monograph contributed to the series called English Worthies; in 1888, "William III." (Twelve English Statesmen); in 1889, "Strafford" (English Men of Action); and in 1890, "Saturday Songs," a reprint of political verse contributions to the Saturday Review. He is the editor of the Observer.

TRAQUAIR, Dr. Ramsay Heatley, F.R.S., Keeper of the Natural History Collections in the Museum of Science and Art, Edinburgh, is the son of the late Rev. James Traquair, Parish Minister of Rhynd, Perthshire, and Elizabeth Mary Bayley, his wife, and was born at the Manse of Rhynd, July 30, 1840. Dr. Traquair received his school education in Edinburgh, and in 1857 entered the University of Edinburgh as a student of medicine. After a course of five years' study he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine in Aug., 1862, and, on that occasion, a Gold Medal was awarded to him for his thesis on a biological subject, viz., the "Asymmetry of the Pleuronectidæ." From 1863 to 1866 Dr. Traquair acted as Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, under the late eminent Professor Goodsir, and, from 1866 to 1867, as Professor of Natural History in the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester. In the autumn of 1867 he was appointed by the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education to the Professorship of Zoology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, from which post he was transferred, in 1873, to the Keepership of the Natural History Collections in the Museum of Science and Art, Edinburgh. He has also held the Swiney Lectureship in Geology at the British Museum, for a period of five years (1883-88). Dr. Traquair's attention was early drawn to the study of the structure of fishes, and among the extinct forms of the palæozoic rocks he soon found a rich and extensive field for original investigation. He has published about forty papers on Fossil Ichthyology, of which the most important are "On the Structure and Affinities of Tristichopterus alatus," Trans. Roy. Soc., Edin., 1875; "On the Agassizian Genera Palæoniscus, Amblypterus, Pygopterus, and Gyrolepis," Qu. Journ. Geol. Soc., 1877; "The Structure and Affinities of the Platysomidæ," Trans. Roy. Soc., Edin., 1879; "Report on Fossil Fishes Collected by the Geological Survey of Scotland in Eskdale and Liddisdale," Trans. Roy. Soc., Edin., 1881. He is also engaged in monographing the Old Red Sandstone and Carboniferous Rocks of Great Britain for the Palæontographical Society, one part of the carboniferous monograph having appeared in the Society's volume for 1877. Of Dr. Traquair's contributions to the structure of recent fishes the two most important are his graduation thesis, "On the Asymmetry of the Pleuronectidæ," published in Trans. Linn. Soc. for 1865, and his "Cranial Osteology of Polypterus," Journ. Anat. and Phys., 1870. Dr. Traquair received the Neill Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1876; and, in 1881, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London.

TREVELYAN, The Right Hon. Sir George Otto, Bart., P.C., D.C.L., born July 20, 1833, at Rothley Temple, Leicestershire, is the only son of the late Sir Charles Edward Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., and Hannah More Macaulay, sister of Lord Macaulay. He was educated at Harrow School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was second in the first class in classics. He was elected member for Tynemouth in the Liberal interest in 1865, and for the Border Burghs in 1868. Mr. Trevelyan was appointed Civil Lord of Admiralty, in Mr. Gladstone's Government, in Dec., 1868, but resigned office in July, 1870, on a point of conscience connected with the Government Education Bill. He advocated a sweeping reform of the army, including the abolition of the purchase of commissions, both in and out of Parliament, and was for many years the foremost supporter of the extension of the County Franchise. Mr. Trevelyan succeeded Mr. Shaw-Lefevre as Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty in Nov., 1880, and held that office until his appointment, after the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish, as Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (May 9, 1882). This arduous post he held through two most trying years, and in Oct., 1884, he joined the Cabinet as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's third Government in 1885, he was appointed to the new post of Secretary for Scotland, but resigned on March 27, 1886, in consequence of disagreement with the Prime Minister's proposed scheme for Ireland. He failed to secure re-election after the dissolution of 1886, but in 1887 he was returned as member for the Bridgeton Division of Glasgow. He is the author of "Letters of a Competition Wallah," republished from Macmillan's Magazine in 1864; "Cawnpore," in 1865; "The Ladies in Parliament, and other pieces," collected and published in 1869; "The Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay," 2 vols., 1876, 2nd edit., 1877; and "The Early History of Charles James Fox," 1880.

TRIMEN, Henry, M.B., F.R.S., F.L.S., was born in London, Oct. 26, 1843, and was educated at King's College. He graduated M.B. at the University of London, 1865; was Curator of the Anatomical Museum of King's College, 1866-7; and Lecturer on Botany at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School, 1867-72. He entered the Botanical Department of the British Museum, as Senior Assistant, May, 1869, and held that appointment till Dec., 1879. He was appointed Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Ceylon, Jan., 1880, which post he still holds. He was editor of the Journal of Botany, 1872-79; and author of "Flora of Middlesex" (with Mr. Thiselton-Dyer), 1869; of the botanical portion of "Medicinal Plants," 4 vols., 1875-80; of a "Systematic Catalogue of the Plants of Ceylon," 1885; and of numerous papers on various branches of botanical science in the publications of the learned societies and scientific periodicals. Dr. Trimen has paid special attention to the economic aspects of Botany, particularly to the sources of drugs and other products, especially of tropical countries. In 1883, he was employed by the Madras Government to report on the botanical and cultural problems presented by the cinchona plantations in the Nilgiri Hills; and he has been the means of introducing into cultivation in Ceylon many useful and valuable products of other countries.

TRIMEN, Roland, F.R.S., F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.Ent.S., zoologist, was born in London, Oct. 29, 1840, and was educated at a private school near Brighton, and at King's College School in London. He voyaged to the Cape (on medical advice), 1858-59; and was appointed to the Cape Civil Service, July 1860. He served in the Audit, the Colonial Secretary's, the Governor's, and the Crown Lands Offices, until 1876, when he was appointed Curator of the South-African Museum, Cape Town. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, June 1883; and is the author of "Rhopaloura Africæ Australis; a Descriptive Catalogue of South-African Butterflies" (London and Cape Town, 2 vols. 1862-66), and "South-African Butterflies; a Monograph of the Extra-Tropical Species" (London, 3 vols. 1887-89); also of various memoirs on Entomology, Ornithology, and Botany in the Transactions or Proceedings of the Entomological, Linnean, and Zoological Societies of London, the Quarterly Journal of Science, and other publications. He was President of the South-African Philosophical Society, 1883-85; and has been Commissioner of the Botanic Gardens, Cape Town, since 1876. He was Chairman of the Phylloxera Commission, Cape Town, 1886; and represented the Cape at the Bordeaux Phylloxera Congress of 1881, and at the Congress of Zoologists held in Paris in August, 1889.

TRIPE, John William, M.D., born in London in 1821, is the son of a surgeon, and was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and at the London Hospital; and became L.S.A. 1843; M.D. St. Andrews 1846; M.R.C.S. Eng. 1848; M.R.C.P. Edin. 1879. He was appointed Medical Officer of Health for Hackney in 1856; and Public Analyst in 1872. He is the author of "The Mortality from the Eruptive Fevers;" "On the Winter Climate of some English Seaside Health Resorts;" "On Scarlatinal Dropsy," Brit. For. Rev., 1854; "The Relative Mortality of Males and Females," Ibid., 1857. He has contributed "Scarlatina and its Etiology," to the Med. Times, 1848; "Scarlatinal Waves," to the Sanitary Record, 1875; and is the author of numerous Reports, Essays, and Papers in the Medical, Sanitary, and Meteorological Journals, 1848 to 1890; and of papers at the Conferences of the Health Exhibition. He has been President, Vice-President, and Secretary to the Royal Meteorological Society, and is Assoc. For. Mem. French Soc. of Hygiene; Corr. Mem. Roy. Soc. Pub. Med. Belgium.

TRISTRAM, The Rev. Henry Baker, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S., C.M.Z.S., son of the late Rev. Henry Baker Tristram, vicar of Eglington, Northumberland, was born May 11, 1822, and educated at the Grammar School of Durham, and at Lincoln College, Oxford (B.A. 1844; M.A. 1846). In 1845 he was ordained to the curacy of Morchard-Bishop, Devonshire, which he was obliged to resign in less than two years in consequence of ill-health. At that juncture Admiral Sir Charles Elliot was about to proceed to Bermuda as governor, and Mr. Tristram accompanied him as Chaplain and Secretary. He resided at Bermuda three years, and then accepted, in 1849, the small rectory of Castle Eden, co. Durham. In 1855 the state of his health again induced him to seek a milder climate. He spent that winter in the city and neighbourhood of Algiers, making excursions into the northern Sahara. A second winter was occupied in researches beyond the range of the Atlas Mountains, guarded by an escort granted by Field-Marshal Randon, Governor-General of Algeria, and a third, spent on board a yacht in the Mediterranean afforded him the first opportunity of visiting Palestine. In 1860 he was collated by Bishop Longley to the Mastership of Greatham Hospital and Vicarage of Greatham, which he held till 1874, when he was appointed to a residential Canonry in Durham Cathedral by Bishop Baring. In 1863 he again visited the Holy Land, making scientific observations and identifying Scripture localities. In 1873 he made a similar tour in Moab, and in 1881 made an extensive tour through Palestine and the Lebanon, into Mesopotamia and Armenia. In 1879 he declined the offer made to him by the Earl of Beaconsfield of the Anglican Bishopric in Jerusalem. He is a Member of the Convocation of the province of York, and Provincial Grand Master of "Mark Masons" for the two northern counties. Dr. Tristram is the author of "The Great Sahara," 1860; "The Land of Israel, a Journal of Travels with reference to its Physical History," 1865, 3rd edit., revised, 1876; "The Natural History of the Bible," 1880; "The Ornithology of Palestine," 1867; "A Winter Ride in Palestine," published in "Vacation Tourists," 1864; "Scenes in the East," 1870; "The Daughters of Syria," 3rd edit., 1874; "The Seven Golden Candlesticks," new edit. 1881; "Bible Places, or the Topography of the Holy Land," 1871, 8th thousand, 1878; "The Land of Moab," 2nd edit., 1874; "Pathways of Palestine," 1st series, 1881, 2nd series, 1883; "Incidents in Bible History chiselled on Ancient Monuments," 1875; "Genesis and the Brick Kiln," 1878; "Fauna and Flora of Palestine," 1884, for the Palestine Exploration Fund; Contributions to The Contemporary Review, "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," and many scientific periodicals.

TROCHU, Louis Jules, a French general, was born in Bretagne, March 12, 1815, and received his education in the Military Academy of St. Cyr. In 1837 he entered an artillery regiment as Lieutenant. His talents soon attracted attention, and in particular that of Marshal Bugeaud, who, in recognition of his bravery displayed in the battles of Sidi-Yussuf and Isly, made him his Adjutant, and intrusted him with most important commissions. His services, circumspection, and bravery in the Crimean war, gained for him the rank of a General of Division. In that capacity he received a command in the Italian campaign of 1859. On the conclusion of peace he was relegated to the Ministry of War, and received the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. Niel had intended him for his successor as Minister of War, but the latter's celebrated brochure on French military affairs had drawn down upon him the displeasure of the Imperial Court. Before the war of 1870-71, General Trochu held command of the Army Division in Toulouse, which Niel and Lebœuf had held before him. In the crisis which followed the battle of Sedan, he was made governor of Paris and Commander-in-Chief of all the forces destined for the defence of the capital, which he held until the city surrendered to the German hosts. In Oct., 1871, he was elected President of the Council-General for Morbihan; but he afterwards resigned that post, and he has lived in retirement since Jan., 1873. His pamphlet on "L'Armée Française en 1867" reached its 20th edition in 1870. In 1873 he published a work entitled "Pour la Vérité et pour la Justice," in justification of the Government of the National Defence.

TRURO, Bishop of. See WILKINSON, THE RIGHT REV. GEORGE HOWARD.

TUIKE, D. Hack, M.D., F.R.C.P., LL.D. London, son of Samuel Tukey, Esq., the well-known author of the work on the York Retreat for the Insane, was born at York in 1827. He was for many years officially connected with the Retreat, and Lecturer on Mental Diseases at the York School of Medicine. Dr. Tukey is the editor of the Journal of Mental Science, conjointly with Dr. Savage, the late superintendent of that hospital. In 1881, he was elected President of the Medical-Psychological Association of Great Britain. In addition to a treatise on "Sleep-walking and Hypnotism," Dr. Tukey has published the results of a visit recently paid to asylums in Canada and the United States. The exposure of the bad condition of certain asylums in Canada has already borne fruit in the Colony. His principal works are, "Prize Essay on Insanity," 1853; "A Manual of Psychological Medicine," 1st edit., 1858 (conjointly with Dr. Bucknill); this has been largely used as a text-book in England and America; "Illustrations of the Influence of the Mind upon the Body," 1st edit., 1872; this has passed through several editions and been translated into French and German. In 1865 he wrote "Artificial Insanity," and suggested hypnotism in the treatment of the delusions of the insane; "Insanity in Ancient and Modern Life," with Chapters on its Prevention, 1st edit., appeared in 1878; "History of the Insane in the British Isles," 1882; the history of the Royal Hospital of Bethlehem, of which Dr. Tukey is a governor, receives special notice in that work; "Sleep-walking and Hypnotism," 1884; "The Insane in the United States and Canada," 1885; besides numerous articles in the medical journals. He has been editor since 1878 of the Journal of Mental Science. A "Dictionary of Psychological Medicine" is announced, edited by Dr. Tukey.

TUPPER, The Hon. Sir Charles, Bart., G.C.M.G. (1886), K.C.M.G. (1879), C.B. (1867), M.D., L.R.C.S. Edinburgh, was born July 2, 1821. He is LL.D. of Cambridge, M.A. and D.C.L. of Acadia College, Nova Scotia. Canada in London. TURKEY, Sultan of. See ABD-UL-HAMID II.

TURNER, Godfrey Wordsworth, was born in London, in 1825, and having some aptitude for art, became a pupil of Mr. Leigh, but by the advice of his father's friend, Leigh Hunt, he relinquished a vocation to which he had no decided call, and entered on newspaper work. His first engagement was, in conjunction with Mr. Thornton Hunt, on the Spectator. At the same time he wrote for the Morning Chronicle and the Leader; afterwards, from being fine art critic of the John Bull, he accepted a more onerous position in the conduct of that paper; whence he transferred his services to the Daily News, during the editorship of Mr. Thomas Walker. In Dec., 1860, he joined the staff of the Daily Telegraph, and has continued to serve that journal down to the present time, in various literary capacities, but chiefly as a special correspondent in many parts of the world. On the outbreak in Jamaica, he was despatched with the Royal Commission to that island. He has been an industrious contributor to the magazines and periodicals, and is the author of "Jest and Earnest," "Homely Scenes from Great Painters," "Art Studies," and other books.

TURNER, Professor Sir William, M.B., LL.D., D.C.L. Oxford and Durham, F.R.S. London and Edinburgh, was born in Lancaster, in 1832. He received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where he obtained a Scholarship, and in 1853 he became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. As a student he gained an Exhibition and Gold Medal at the University of London, and took his degree in Medicine in 1857. In 1854 he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, and in 1867, on the death of Professor John Goodsir, he became

Professor of Anatomy. In addition, he holds the office of Honorary Professor of Anatomy to the Royal Scottish Academy, and is Examiner in Anatomy in the Universities of Oxford and Edinburgh. He has, at various times, held the following appointments:—Examiner in Anatomy in the University of London; Lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology in the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, and President of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. For many years he has represented the University of Edinburgh on the General Council of Medical Education; and in December, 1889, he was elected by the Senate of the University as one of their representatives on the University Court. He was made, in 1881, a Member of the Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the Acts affecting the Medical Profession. He has written numerous articles on anatomy, both human and comparative, in the transactions of various learned societies, and in different journals, more especially in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, of which he is one of the founders and editors. He is also the author of the Reports on the Skeletons of the Races of Men, and on the specimens of Marine Mammals collected during the voyage of exploration of H.M.S. Challenger. Some years ago he was awarded by the Royal Society of Edinburgh the Niell Medal for his contributions to Scottish Natural History. He is a member of many scientific societies, and has received the honorary membership of the Royal Irish Academy, the Anthropological Society of Paris, the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society of London, and the Obstetrical Society of Edinburgh. The Universities of Oxford, Glasgow, and Durham have also conferred on him Honorary Degrees, and he has been elected a member of the Athenæum under the rule which admits those who have attained eminence in Science, Literature, the Arts or Public Service. In 1889 he acted as President of the Anthropological Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. In 1886 he received the honour of Knighthood. He joined the Volunteer force at its institution in 1859, and held for thirty years a commission in the Queen's Rifle Volunteer Brigade, Royal Scots, when he retired with the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

TÜRR, Gen. Stephen, born at Baja, in Hungary, in 1825, became a lieutenant in the Austrian army in 1848. His regiment was stationed in Italy, and his rooted dislike of the House of Hapsburg inspired him with a strong sympathy for the Italian cause. The Revolutionary Government of Hungary having called upon all Hungarians serving under the Austrian flag in Italy to desert to the Piedmontese, he went over to the latter from Buffalora, in Jan., 1849, and was appointed Colonel of the Hungarian Legion in the Sardinian service. After the disaster of Novara, the greater part of the Hungarian Legion followed their Colonel in Baden, where a revolutionary movement had taken place, and throughout the struggle Colonel Türr commanded not only the remnant of his legion, but also three Baden battalions. After the insurrection had been put down, the Hungarians took refuge in Switzerland, and the Federal Government aided many of them to start for the United States; but Colonel Türr being too ill to go, lived for four years on a small pension granted to him by the Sardinian Government. On the outbreak of the Russian war, he vainly endeavoured to serve under Omar Pacha, but succeeded in taking part as a volunteer in several of the battles in the Crimea, especially in that of the Tchernaya, and received a commission from Colonel McMurdo, the officer in command of the British transport service. While engaged in the performance of his duty, and in connection with this employment in the autumn of 1855, he was arrested at Bucharest by the Austrians as a deserter, and sent under escort to Cronstadt to be tried there. His illegal arrest caused great excitement throughout Europe, and was protested against by the British and French Governments. After a long incarceration he was tried by court-martial, and sentenced to death; which sentence was, however (owing to the urgent remonstrance of the British Government), commuted to perpetual banishment. In the Italian war in 1859, he was appointed a member of Garibaldi's staff, with the rank of colonel, and was always at the general's side during this campaign, until he was seriously wounded in the left arm at Brescia. In the spring of 1860, when Garibaldi planned his Sicilian expedition, Colonel Türr again served under him in the capacity of aide-de-camp, and, before Palermo, was promoted to the rank of general of division. The brilliant part he played in the War of Liberation was acknowledged by the Government of Victor Emmanuel, who promoted him to the rank of general of division in the army of Italy in 1861, and confided to him the military command of the town and province of Naples. He is the author of "Arrestation, Procès, et Condamnation du Général Türr," 1863; and also of "The House of Austria and Hungary," 1865. He married the Princess Adeline Wyse Bonaparte, a cousin of Napoleon III., Sept. 10, 1861, and took up his residence at Pallanza. Since his marriage he has made two journeys to Roumania, with a view of creating difficulties for Austria in the East of Europe. These political journeys were, however, thought to be compromising to the Italian Government, and, accordingly, Colonel Türr resigned his commission in 1864.

TWAIN, Mark. See CLEMENS, S. L.

TWISS, Sir Travers, Q.C., D.C.L., F.R.S., son of the late Rev. Robert Twiss, LL.D., of Pembroke College, Cambridge, and Trevallyn, Denbighshire, born in Westminster, March 19, 1809, was educated at University College, Oxford, where he graduated in high honours in 1830, and became Fellow and Tutor of his college. From 1835 till 1839 he was one of the Public Examiners at Oxford in Classics and Mathematics; in 1838 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; from 1842 till 1847 was Professor of Political Economy in the University of Oxford; from 1852 till 1855 Professor of International Law in King's College, London, which office he resigned upon being appointed Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford. In 1840 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, and was admitted an advocate in Doctor's Commons. In 1849 he was appointed Commissary-General of the City and Diocese of Canterbury, in 1852 Vicar-General of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and in 1858, on the advancement of the Right Hon. Dr. Lushington to the office of Judge of the Arches Court of Canterbury, was appointed Chancellor of the Diocese of London. In 1862 he was appointed Advocate-General of the Admiralty. On the transfer of the testamentary and matrimonial jurisdiction from the ecclesiastical to the civil courts, Dr. Twiss was created a Queen's Counsel, was elected a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, became Queen's Advocate-General in Aug., and was knighted in Nov., 1867. He has written various works; amongst which may be mentioned "Epitome of Niebuhr's History of Rome," 1837; "The Oregon Question examined with respect to facts and the Law of Nations," 1846; "View of the Progress of Political Economy in Europe since the 16th Century," 1847; "The Relation of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein to the Crown of Denmark and the Germanic Confederation," 1848; "The Letters Apostolic of Pope Pius IX., considered with reference to the Law of England and the Law of Europe," 1851; "Lectures on the Science of International Law," 1856; "The Law of Nations, considered as Independent Political Communities," 1861, 2nd edit., 1884; "Law of Nations in Times of War," 1863, 2nd edit., 1875; translated into French, and published in Paris in 1886; "The Black Book of the Admiralty," 1874. In 1872 Sir Travers Twiss resigned all his appointments, and has since devoted himself to literary and scientific pursuits, being a frequent contributor to the Nautical Magazine, the Law Magazine and Review, the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and La Revue de Droit International, being also a Vice-President of L'Institut de Droit International, established in 1872, and of the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations, established in 1873. At the request of King Leopold II. of the Belgians, Sir Travers drew up in 1884 a Constitution for the Free State of the Congo, and at the request of Earl Granville, he assisted at the West African Conference at Berlin in 1885, as legal adviser of the British Embassy during the Conference. He has served on several Royal Commissions, amongst others on that of 1852 to inquire and report on the regulations of the College of Maynooth in Ireland; on that of 1867 to inquire into the Laws of Neutrality; on that of 1868 to inquire into the Laws of Naturalisation and Allegiance; on that of 1869 to inquire into the Law of Marriage in Great Britain and Ireland and in the British Colonies. He was also a member of the Royal Commission on Rubrics, and was one of the Arbitral Commissioners who settled the boundary line between the Provinces of New Brunswick and Canada.

TYLOR, Edward Burnett, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Camberwell, Oct. 2, 1832, and educated at the School of the Society of Friends, Grove House, Tottenham. His work has been specially devoted to the study of the races of mankind, their history, languages, and civilisation. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1871; received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews in 1873, and of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1875. In March, 1883, he was appointed Keeper of the Oxford University Museum. Later in the same year (Oct.) he was appointed Reader in Anthropology. In 1888 he was elected the first Gifford Lecturer by the University of Aberdeen, delivering a two-years' course on "Natural Religion." Dr. Tylor is President of the Anthropological Society. He is the author of "Anahuac, or Mexico and the Mexicans," 1861; "Researches into the History of Mankind," 1865; and "Primitive Culture: Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Art, and Custom," 2 vols., 1871. A more recent work is an educational handbook of the Science of Man, "Anthropology, an introduction to the Study of Man and Civilisation," 1881.

TYNDALL, Professor John, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., was born Aug. 21, 1820, in the village of Leighlin-bridge, near Carlow, in Ireland. His parents were in very modest circumstances, but they gave him a sound English education. At the age of nineteen he joined in the capacity of "civil assistant" a division of the Ordnance Survey which was stationed in his native town. In 1844 he was engaged by a firm in Manchester, and for about three years he was employed in engineering operations in connection with railways. In 1847 he accepted an appointment as teacher in Queenwood College, in Hampshire, a new institution, devoted partly to a junior school and partly to the preliminary technical education of agriculturists and engineers. There he became acquainted with Mr. (now Dr.) Frankland, who was resident chemist to the College, and there he began those original investigations which have placed him in the foremost rank among the explorers of science. In 1848 the two friends quitted England together and repaired to the University of Marburg, in Hesse-Cassel, where they studied under Bunsen and other eminent Professors. Afterwards Mr. Tyndall prosecuted his researches in the laboratory of Magnus, in Berlin. He conducted investigations on the phenomena of diamagnetism, and on the polarity of the diamagnetic force, including researches on the magneto-optic properties of crystals, and the relation of magnetism and diamagnetism to molecular arrangement. He has published a volume on these subjects. He returned to England in 1851. In 1853, having been previously elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, he was chosen Professor of Natural Philosophy in the Royal Institution of Great Britain, and succeeded the celebrated Faraday as Superintendent. The publication of an essay on the cleavage of slate rocks was the proximate cause of his joining his friend Professor Huxley in a visit to the glaciers of Switzerland in 1856; and they afterwards published a joint paper on the structure and motion of glaciers. He returned to Switzerland, in 1857, 1858, and 1859, twice in the latter year. He reached Chamouni on Christmas night, 1859, through deep snow, and two days afterwards succeeded in attaining the Montanvert, where he remained nearly three days, for the most part amid blinding snow, and determined the winter motion of the Mer de Glace. In 1859 he commenced his researches on Radiant Heat, which disclosed relations previously unthought of between this agent and the gaseous form of matter. Numerous memoirs published in the "Philosophical Transactions," are devoted to this subject. Prof. Tyndall is a Rumford Medalist of the Royal Society, and a member of various foreign scientific societies; he was made LL.D. of Cambridge in 1855, and LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1866, when Mr. Carlyle was installed Rector of the University, and afterwards D.C.L. of Oxford. On the occasion of his receiving the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford, June 18, 1873, Dr. Hurler, Margaret Professor of Divinity, protested against the proceeding, on the ground that Professor Tyndall "had signalled himself by writing against and denying the credibility of miracles and the efficacy of prayer, thus contravening the whole tenor of that book, which, with its open page inscribed 'Dominus illuminatio mea,' the University still bears as her device, and therefore still professes to acknowledge as her guide." In 1872 Professor Tyndall went on a lecturing tour in the United States, in the course of which he delivered thirty-five lectures, thus realizing a sum of 23,000 dollars. Deducting expenses, the residue was carefully invested, and rose in a few years to 33,000 dollars, which was devoted to the founding of scientific scholarships in Harvard and Columbia Colleges, and in the University of Pennsylvania, "in aid of students who devote themselves to original research." Professor Tyndall presided at the annual meeting of the British Association held at Belfast, in Aug., 1874. He accepted the presidency of the Birmingham and Midland Institute for the year 1877. For some years Professor Tyndall was Scientific Adviser to the Board of Trade and to the Lighthouse Authorities, but he resigned those offices in May, 1883, when he also withdrew from the special committee appointed by the Board of Trade to investigate the subject of the best illuminants for lighthouses. He has written "The Glaciers of the Alps," 1860; "Mountaineering," 1861; "A Vacation Tour," 1862; "Heat considered as a Mode of Motion," 1863; "On Radiation: the 'Rede' Lecture, May 16, 1865," published in 1865; a volume on "Sound," a volume on "Light," two volumes of collected memoirs, 1883; "Faraday as a Discoverer," "Notes on Electricity," 1870; "Notes on Light," 1871; "Hours of Exercise in the Alps," 1871; "The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers," 1872; "Address delivered before the British Association assembled at Belfast, with Additions and a Preface," 1874; "Fragments of Science: a Series of Detached Essays, Addresses, and Reviews," 5th edit., 1876; and "Essays on the Floating Matter of the Air in Relation to Putrefaction and Infection," 1881. He married, Feb. 29, 1876, Louisa, eldest daughter of Lord and Lady Claud Hamilton.

He was educated at the City of London School and was apprenticed in the works of Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester, 1855 to 1862. Professor Unwin was Instructor at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, 1868-72; Professor of Mechanical and Hydraulic Engineering, Royal Indian Engineering College, Coopers Hill, 1872-84; and since that time has been Professor of Engineering Central Institution of the City and Guilds Institute, at South Kensington. V.

VAMBÉRY, Professor Arminius, born at Duna-Szerdahely, in Hungary, in 1832, of very poor parents, was at an early age obliged to leave the shelter of the paternal roof and seek his own livelihood. He studied in the Latin school of Pressburg, and devoted his leisure hours to the study of foreign languages. In order to complete his knowledge of oriental languages, he went to the East; and, taking up his residence in Constantinople, visited many parts of the East, and travelled in the disguise of a dervish, by routes unknown to Europeans, through the deserts of the Oxus to Khiva, and thence by Bokhara to Samarcand, in 1861-64. His "Travels and Adventures in Central Asia" appeared in London in 1864. He has been appointed Professor of Oriental Languages at the University of Pesth. From that town he has for many years written frequent letters to the Times and other English papers, warning England against the designs of Russia. He has more than once visited England on a lecturing tour; the last occasion being in 1885, when he was in London at the same time as M. Lessar, whose diplomacy he endeavoured to counteract. His more recent works are "Cagatai Language," and an account of his "Wanderings and Adventures in Persia," 1867; "Sketches of Central Asia," 1868; "Uigur Linguistical Monument," 1870; "History of Bokhara from the Earliest Period down to the Present," 1873; "Central Asia and the Anglo-Russian Frontier Question," 1874; "Mahommedanism in the Nineteenth Century," 1875; "Sketches of Manners and Costumes in Oriental Countries," 1876; "Etymological Dictionary of the Turco-Tartar Languages," 1878; "Primitive Civilisation of the Turco-Tartar Peoples," 1879; and "Theibani-name," 1885. An interesting account of his "Life and Adventures," written by himself, with a dedication to the boys of England, was published in English in 1889.

VAPEREAU, Louis Gustave, author, born at Orleans, April 4, 1819, studied at the seminary and college of his native city, and, in 1833, carried off, at a competition between all the colleges of France, the prize for Philosophy, established by M. de Salvandy. Admitted into the Normal School, he applied himself to various studies, with a special view to teaching philosophy. On quitting that establishment he remained a year in Paris, and in 1842 became Private Secretary to M. Victor Cousin, whom he assisted in his "Pensées de Pascal." He presided over a class on Philosophy at the College of Tours in 1843, and defended philosophy, violently attacked in a treatise entitled "Du Caractère Libéral, Moral, et Religieux de la Philosophie Moderne," published in 1844. Though his course of lectures was frequently denounced, he retained his professional chair for ten years, and, in addition, presided over the German course at the same college for five years, and began to study law. In consequence of the restrictions with which the teaching of philosophy was fettered, in 1852, M. Vapereau repaired to Paris, completed his law studies, and became "avocat" in 1854. About that time Messrs. Hachette intrusted to him the direction of the "Dictionnaire des Contemporains," which occupied his whole attention for four years, the first edition appearing in 1858. M. Vapereau continued to labour at this great undertaking, and the "Supplément" was published in 1859; a new edition of the work, revised and considerably augmented, in 1861, the "Supplément" to the new edition in 1863, the third edition, in a great measure rewritten, in 1865, the fourth edition in 1870, and the fifth edition in 1880, with a "Supplément" in 1886. Since 1859, M. Vapereau has issued yearly "L'Année Littéraire et Dramatique," an annual review of the principal productions of French literature, and the tenth volume contains a general table of the ten previous years. M. Vapereau subsequently brought out another important work, a "Dictionnaire Universel des Littératures." He was nominated Prefect of the Cantal by the Government of the National Defence in Sept., 1870. He was Prefect of the department of Tarn-et-Garonne, from March 26, 1871, till March 31, 1873. He returned to the University as Inspector-General of Public Instruction (primary education), Jan. 23, 1877, and he was decorated with the Legion of Honour, Feb. 7, 1878.

He was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College in 1839, and having held the living of St. Martin's, Leicester, for three years, became Head Master of Harrow School in 1844; and held that post till the close of 1859, when he resigned. Early in 1860 he was offered, but refused, the Bishopric of Rochester, and shortly afterwards was appointed to the Vicarage of Doncaster, which he held until 1869, when he was appointed to the Mastership of the Temple. In 1879 he was appointed Dean of Llandaff. This appointment did not vacate the Mastership of the Temple. In May, 1882, Dr. Vaughan was appointed one of the Deputy Clerks of the Closet in Ordinary to Her Majesty. He has published "Memorials of Harrow Sundays," "Temple Sermons," "University Sermons" (Oxford and Cambridge), "Lectures on the Revelation of St. John," "Lectures on the Epistle to the Philippians," "Epistle to the Romans" (with notes), "Heroes of Faith" (Hebrews xi.), "The Church of the First Days" (Lectures on the Acts), "Epistle to the Philippians" (for English Readers), "Epistle to the Hebrews" (with Notes), "Christ Satisfying the Instincts of Humanity," "Twelve Discourses on Liturgy and Worship," "Notes for Lectures on Confirmation," and a long series of other works.

Hamilton, Bart.," published in 1859-60. He wrote the "Memoir of Dugald Stewart," in connection with the new edition of his collected works, upon which Sir W. Hamilton was employed at the time of his death, after which this publication was superintended by Professor Veitch, at the request of the Stewart trustees. In 1864 Mr. Veitch was appointed to the Professorship of Logic and Rhetoric in the University of Glasgow. He has written a "Memoir of Sir W. Hamilton," 1869. In 1872 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is the author of "The Tweed and other

VENTRIS, The Right Hon. Lord, eldest son of Mr. Thomas Flint Field, of Fielden, Bedfordshire, was born in 1813. He was educated at Burton Grammar School, in Somersetshire, and was at first articled to Messrs. Terrell, Barton, and Smale, solicitors, of Exeter, but was afterwards with Messrs. Price and Bolton, of Lincoln's Inn. He practised in that branch of the profession in London from 1840 to 1843, as one of the firm of Thompson, Debenham, and Field, of Salters' Hall Court; but from 1843, having entered himself as a member of the Inner Temple, and reading in the chambers of Mr. T. Kingdom, of the Western circuit, he prepared for the Bar. He began in 1847 to practise under the Bar as a special pleader. In 1850 he was called to the Bar, and joined the Western circuit. This he afterwards exchanged for the Midland, where he gained a large practice, as well as in London, both in commercial cases at Guildhall and before the Privy Council. In 1864 Mr. Field was appointed a Queen's Counsel, and was elected a Bench of the Inner Temple. He became Leader of the Midland circuit, besides practising largely before the Judicial Committee and Railway Commission, and other tribunals. Mr. Field was nominated a Justice of the Queen's Bench Division in the High Court of Judicature in Feb. 1875, and shortly afterwards he received the honour of knighthood. He is the author of several papers on the mining laws of the Netherlands, and on the mineral wealth of the Indian Archipelago, and was the first to draw public attention to the occurrence of gold in workable quantities in the Isles of Sumatra and Borneo. For many years he has resided in the Dutch East Indies, and in 1875 became Superintendent of the Geological Survey of Sumatra, and as such has published important maps and memoirs. When the Krakatau eruption occurred, he was naturally selected by the Government as head of the commission appointed to examine and report upon the geological and other phenomena of that great convulsion; the report, and splendid atlases of maps, sections, and drawings which he subsequently issued are permanent proofs of his energy and ability. M. Verbeek is Ingenieur-en-chef des Mines, and Chevalier du Lion Neerlandais.

VERDI, Giuseppe, composer, is the son of an innkeeper, born at Rancola, in the duchy of Parma, Oct. 9, 1814, received his first lessons from an organist in Milan, where he resided from 1833 till 1836; studied diligently under Lavigna, and in 1839 published his earliest work, a musical drama, entitled "Oberto di San Bonifazio." His principal compositions are serious operas, and the "Lombardi," one of his first productions, made a strong impression throughout Italy, and laid the foundation of his fame. His best known operas are "Nabuccodonosor," "Ernani"

(founded on Victor Hugo's tragedy), the "Due Foscari," "Attila," "Macbeth," the "Masnadieri" (founded on the "Robbers" of Schiller), "Louisa Miller," "Rigoletto," the "Trovatore," "La Traviata," "Un Ballo in Maschera" (performed in London in 1861), and "Don Carlos" (performed at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, in 1867). The "Masnadieri," written for Her Majesty's Theatre, and produced in 1847, with Jenny Lind as heroine, proved a failure in London, though it has since been successful in Italy. The "Trovatore" and "La Traviata" have had great success, not only in Italy, but in Germany, France, and England. Signor Verdi's more recent operas are "Giovanno d'Arco," in 1868; "La Forza del Destino," in 1869; and "Aida," performed at the Scala, Milan, in 1872. His celebrated "Requiem Mass," composed in honour of his great countryman Manzoni, was first performed in the Church of San Marco at Milan, May 23, 1874. He was elected a member of the Italian Parliament in 1861, and in 1871 he went to Florence in order to assume the post offered him by the Italian Minister of Public Instruction, for the improvement and reorganisation of the Italian Musical Institute. M. Verdi, who is a member of the Legion of Honour, was elected corresponding member of the Académie des Beaux Arts, Dec. 10, 1859; was made Grand Cross of the Russian order of St. Stanislaus in 1862; Foreign Associate of the Académie des Beaux Arts, June 15, 1864; and Grand Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy in 1872, in which year the Viceroy of Egypt conferred on him the Order of Osmani. King Victor Emmanuel, by a decree dated Nov. 22, 1874, created Signor Verdi an Italian Senator. In May, 1875, he was nominated a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and the Italian Minister at Paris was charged to present him with the insignia of the order, accompanied by a flattering letter from the Duc Decazes. In the same year he was decorated with the Cross of Commander and Star of the Austrian Order of Franz-Joseph. Signor Verdi completed, in 1878, a new opera in 5 acts, entitled "Montezuma," which was given for the first time at La Scala, Milan. This was followed in 1887 by "Otello." On his return from Paris to his native country, in April, 1880, he received the Order of the Crown of Italy.

He was afterwards called to the Bar at Melbourne in 1863, was elected to the Municipal Council of Williamstown, and appointed Chairman. He was one of the first members of the Volunteer force established in 1854 for the defence of the colony, and at the head of his company was engaged in suppressing an outbreak of convicts in 1857; and received the thanks of the government and of the Commander-in-Chief for this service. In 1859 he was elected member for Williamstown, and in the following year became a Minister of the Crown, having been appointed Treasurer, which office he held with little interruption until 1868. As Honorary Secretary to the Board of Visitors of the Astronomical Observatory, and as a member of the Government, he was enabled to secure the satisfactory establishment of the Observatory on a permanent footing, and to aid in the acquisition of a complete set of instruments, of which the Great Melbourne Telescope forms part. In 1866 the Government and Legislature of Victoria resolved upon sending a Minister of the Crown to England for the purpose of bringing the subject of the defence of the colony before the Home Government, and Mr. Verdon was selected for the mission, in which he was completely successful. He received the decoration of C.B. for this service. Shortly after his return to Victoria, Mr. Verdon was appointed the permanent representative of that colony in England as agent-general, with the consent of all political parties. He was elected F.R.S., in 1870, and an associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers. He was nominated a K.C.M.G. on the occasion of his retiring from the office of Agent-General for the Colony of Victoria in 1872. He has been for many years President of the Trustees of the Public Library, Museums, and National Gallery of Victoria; and was the official representative of the British Royal Commission of the International Centennial Exhibition held at Melbourne 1888-89; and was presented by the Commission with a silver writing service, "in recognition of the great public services which he rendered as their representative."

But his fame rests chiefly on his scientific romances, the first of which appeared in 1863, under the title of "Cinq Semaines en Ballon." Its success led the author to produce many similar works, now numbering nearly 60, of which the following have been translated into English, and other languages, even into Japanese and Arabic: "Five Weeks in a Balloon: a Voyage of Exploration and Discovery in Central Africa," 1870, 2nd edit., 1874; "A Journey to the Centre of the Earth," 1872; "Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Seas," 1873; "Meridiana: the Adventures of three Englishmen and three Russians in South Africa," 1873; "From the Earth to the Moon direct in Ninety-Seven Hours Twenty Minutes; and a Trip Round it," 1873; "The Fur Country: or Seventy Degrees North Latitude," 1874; "Around the World in Eighty Days," 1874; "A Floating City, and the Blockade Runners," "The English at the North Pole," "Dr. Ox's Experiment," 1874; "Adventures of Captain Hatteras," "The Mysterious Island," "The Survivors of the Chancellor," 1875; "Michael Strogoff, the Courier of the Czar," 1876; "The Child of the Cavern," "Hector Servadac, or the Career of a Comet," 1877; "Dick Sands, the Boy Captain," 1878; "Le Rayon Vert," 1882; "Kéran-le-tétu," 1883; "L'étoile du sud," "Le Pays de Diamants," 1884; "L'Archipel en feu," "Le Billet de Loterie," "Robur le Conquérant," "Le Chemin de France," "Deux ans de Vacances," 1888; "Famille sans nom," 1889; "Mathias Sandorf," "Nord contre Sud," "César Cascabel," and "The Purchase of the North Pole," 1890.

He succeeded his father in 1826, and assumed the name of Verney in 1827 on inheriting the estates of Mary Verney, Baroness Fermanagh. Early in 1818 he went to Stuttgart, attached to the mission of Sir Brook Taylor, British Minister at the Courts of Würtemberg and Baden. He entered the army in 1819, served in the 7th Fusiliers, and in the Grenadier Guards, and retired, in 1830, with the rank of Major. From 1832 to 1841 he represented Buckingham in Parliament; Bedford, from 1847 to 1852, and Buckingham, again, from 1857 to 1874, and from 1880 to 1885. In 1858 he married, for the second time, the eldest daughter of William Edward Nightingale, Esq., of Lea Hurst, Derbyshire, sister of Miss Florence Nightingale. Lady Verney has distinguished herself as an authoress. Sir Harry Verney's eldest son, Captain E. H. Verney, sat as Liberal member for North Buckinghamshire, he was defeated at the general election of 1886, but when in 1889 Mr. Egerton Hubbard became Lord Addington, Captain Verney regained the seat.

VEZIN, Hermann, actor, was born in 1829 in Philadelphia, U.S., of German parents, his father being a distinguished merchant of that city. He was intended for the legal profession, and took the degrees of B.A. and M.A. at the University of Pennsylvania. Having a passion for the stage, he came to England, and obtained, through the kindness of Mr. Charles Kean, an engagement in the Theatre Royal, York. He made his London débüt at the Princess's Theatre under Mr. Charles Kean's management. Having visited America professionally in 1857, he returned to England a year later, and after a few provincial engagements, appeared at the Surrey Theatre, London (1859), as Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello, Shylock, King John, and Louis XI. During Mr. Phelps's management of Sadler's Wells (1860), Mr. Vezin appeared as Orlando, Marc Antony, Romeo, and Cassio. In 1864 they produced Westland Marston's comedy of "Donna Diana," at the Princess's Theatre, London. In 1870 he alternated Othello and Iago with Mr. Phelps. Later he produced Mr. W. G. Wills's romantic drama "Hinko," at the Queen's Theatre. In 1873 Mr. Vezin played with Phelps, Toole, and Mathews, at the Gaiety Theatre. At Drury Lane, 1876, he played Macbeth for the benefit of the Philadelphia Centennial. On the production at the Crystal Palace, 1876, of Sophocles' "Œdipus Colonus," the title part was assigned to Mr. Vezin. On Sept. 11, 1876, he made his first appearance at the Haymarket, in Mr. W. S. Gilbert's drama of "Dan'l Druce." After acting Dan'l Druce 106 times, he created the character of De Taldé in an English adaptation of "The Danicheffs," produced at the St. James's Theatre, 1877. In 1878 he first played, at the Court Theatre, Dr. Primrose in Mr. W. G. Wills's drama of "Olivia," founded on the "Vicar of Wakefield." Since that time Mr. Vezin has constantly acted both in London and the provinces. In 1863 he married Mrs. Charles Young.

VIARDOT-GARCIA, Madame Michelle Pauline, vocalist, daughter of the great tenor, Emanuel Garcia, and sister of the lamented Madame Malibran, born in Paris, July 18, 1821, at four years of age spoke four languages, and at seven was able to play the pianoforte accompaniments for the pupils to whom her father gave lessons. After sharing the family migrations, first to England, and afterwards to the United States, she returned to Europe in 1828, and her education was continued at Brussels. In consequence of her manual facility on the piano, she became one of Liszt's most accomplished pupils. Her father died in 1832 before her voice was formed, and her sister being constantly absent on professional tours, her studies, which included various branches of the arts, drawing and painting, as well as music and singing, were directed by her own tastes and the counsels of her mother. She made her first appearance in London at the Opera-house in 1839, in the character of Desdemona. Her voice, like that of her sister, combined the twofold register of soprano and contralto, embracing a compass of three octaves. At the close of the season she joined the Italian operatic company, then acting at the Odéon, in Paris, and was equally successful. In 1841 she reappeared in England, singing with Mario in Cimarosa's opera "Gli Orazi e Curiazi." Her next engagement was at Vienna; and Rubini, on forming an operatic corps for St. Petersburg, selected her for his prima donna. She afterwards appeared at Berlin, and when Jenny Lind quitted the German Opera, Madame Viardot-Garcia proved herself an able successor in the répertoire, which she greatly extended. Her name is associated with the first performances of "Les Huguenots," in which she took the part of Valentine, and of "Le Prophète," in which she performed the part of Fidès, an exquisite impersonation. Madame Viardot is also celebrated for her singing of Spanish songs. She retired from the stage in 1862, and devotes herself to composition. In April, 1840, she was married to M. Louis Viardot, Director of the Paris Italian Opera (he died in May, 1883).

The first domestic grief which Her Majesty suffered was the loss of her mother, the Duchess of Kent, after a short illness, March 16, 1861, followed by the sudden death of the Prince Consort, to the great grief of the entire kingdom, Dec. 14 in the same year. Her Majesty's intense sorrow for her irreparable loss, although it has in a great degree disqualified her from appearing in public, and at court ceremonials, and has imposed on her the habits of a life of comparative seclusion, has, however, never been allowed by her to interfere with the performance of her important duties as a sovereign. Neither has it checked the exercise of that anxious interest which Her Majesty has ever since her accession to the crown steadfastly manifested for the social welfare of her people. It is a source of great pride to her subjects, and must doubtless tend in no small degree to assuage Her Majesty's abiding grief, that not only in her own vast dominions, but throughout the civilised world, Her Majesty's name is never mentioned save in terms of sympathy, affection and respect, as a Christian woman and as a queen. It would occupy much more space than our limits admit to give even a brief outline of the political events of Her Majesty's reign, and we can therefore merely glance at its more prominent features. On succeeding to the throne, Her Majesty found the Whig and Conservative parties nearly evenly balanced in the House of Commons. Lord Melbourne and his colleagues continued to hold office until Sept., 1841, when, owing to their increasing unpopularity, arising mainly from a want of financial ability, or at least of financial success, they were obliged to give place to the late Sir Robert Peel. Although he was pledged to maintain the corn-laws, he found himself compelled, in 1845, to acquiesce in their repeal, which was carried into effect at his instance in 1846. The effect of this change in Sir Robert Peel's policy caused a disruption in the Conservative party, and led to the accession to power of Lord John Russell, who was succeeded, in Jan., 1852, by the Earl of Derby. In the following Dec. the Conservative party, beaten on their budget, resigned, and gave place to Lord Aberdeen and the Coalition Cabinet, which in Feb., 1855, was dismissed for having mismanaged the Russian War. It was succeeded by Lord Palmerston's first administration, which was defeated on the Conspiracy to Murder Bill, in March, 1858, and Lord Derby held power for the second time, until June, 1859, when Lord Palmerston formed his second Cabinet. On his death, Nov., 1865, the ministry was remodelled, Earl Russell assuming the post of Premier. His ministry having decided upon introducing a Reform Bill, the duty of conducting it through the House of Commons devolved upon Mr. Gladstone. Having been defeated on an important clause in June, 1866, ministers resigned. Lord Derby formed his third administration, and during the session of 1867 carried a Reform Bill, thereby settling a question which had long been a stumbling-block impeding the progress of legislation. The Conservatives being placed in a minority at the general election of 1868, Mr. Disraeli resigned office, and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Mr. Gladstone. The chief events of Mr. Gladstone's administration were the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the passing of the Irish Land Act, and the Elementary Education Act, the abolition of purchase in the army, the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington respecting the Alabama Claims, and the passing of the Ballot Act. At the general election of Feb., 1874, the Conservatives again came into power, and a new administration was formed by Mr. Disraeli, afterwards Lord Beaconsfield. By virtue of the power conferred by an Act of Parliament passed in the previous session, Her Majesty was, on Jan. 1, 1877, proclaimed Empress of India, by the Governor-General, at the durbar at Delhi, before an imperial assemblage of all the governors, lieutenant-governors, heads of Government, princes, chiefs, and nobles of India. On the defeat of the Conservatives at the general election of 1880, Mr. Gladstone formed another Liberal administration, which continued in office until June, 1885, when it was succeeded by a Conservative Government under Lord Salisbury. After the general election of Nov., 1885, the Liberals again came into power, and the spring of 1886 was devoted by Mr. Gladstone to the consideration of the Irish question. His Home Rule Bill, however, met with so much opposition that the government decided to appeal to the country, and the result of the general election of July, 1886, was an immense Conservative majority. Lord Salisbury's second government came into power on Aug. 3, 1886. In April, 1882, an attempt on the Queen's life was made at Windsor by one Roderick Maclean, who after trial was ordered to be confined during Her Majesty's pleasure. "The Early Days of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," compiled under the direction of Her Majesty, by Lieut.-General the Hon. C. Grey, was published in July, 1867, and was followed, in 1869, by "Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands;" and in 1874, by the first volume of Mr. (now Sir) Theodore Martin's "Life of H.R.H. the Prince Consort," of which the fifth and concluding volume appeared in 1880. In 1885, Her Majesty published a second volume, entitled "More Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands." In 1887, Her Majesty celebrated the Jubilee of her accession to the throne. A Thanksgiving Service was held in Westminster Abbey, and was attended by Her Majesty and all the Royal Family, the Indian Princes, the King of Denmark, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King of Saxony, the King of the Hellenes, the Crown Prince of Austria, the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Infante Don Antonio of Spain, Prince Ludwig of Baden, the Crown Prince of Greece, the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the Queen of Hawaii, with her attendants in cloth of gold, and representatives from every nation upon earth. The service in the Abbey was conducted by His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the presence of 10,000 spectators.

VILAS, William F., Postmaster-General of the United States, was born at Chelsea, Vermont, July 9, 1840. The family removed to Madison, Wisconsin, in 1851, and he graduated from the Wisconsin State University in 1858, and from the Albany (N.Y.) law school in 1860. He entered the Federal Army at the outbreak of the Civil War, and soon rose to the rank of Colonel. Since the close of the war, he has been a successful and prominent lawyer in Wisconsin. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1884-85, and chairman of the National Democratic Convention which nominated Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency in 1884. On March 5, 1885, he was appointed Postmaster-General.

VILLIERS, The Right Hon. Charles Pelham, P.C., brother of the late Earl of Clarendon, born Jan. 19, 1802, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, was called to the Bar, at Lincoln's Inn in 1827. He has been an examiner in the Court of Chancery and a Poor-Law Commissioner, is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Herts, and has been one of the members in the House of Commons for Wolverhampton since 1835. He joined the Liberal Government, and was appointed Judge-Advocate-General in 1853, was President of the Poor-Law Board, and became a member of Lord Palmerston's second Administration in 1859. Mr. Villiers, as an independent Liberal member, was one of the most able and eloquent leaders of the anti-corn-law agitation, and to the triumph of the cause his earnest speeches and persistent motions in Parliament contributed. Having been at the general election in 1847 returned for South Lancashire and Wolverhampton, he refused to abandon his old constituents. In the session of 1865 he introduced a very important measure in connection with the poor-law administration, the Union Chargeability Bill, which was carried through Parliament, and has become law. He resigned the Presidency of the Poor-Law Board in July, 1866. A marble statue of Mr. Villiers was unveiled by Earl Granville in Wolverhampton on June 6, 1879. The unveiling was preceded by a meeting under the presidency of the mayor in the Agricultural Hall, where speeches in eulogy of the public services of Mr. Villiers, especially in connection with the anti-corn-law movement, were delivered by Earl Granville, Sir Robert Peel, M.P., Mr. Staveley Hill, M.P., and Mr. Alderman Fowler. At the last two general elections Mr. Villiers has been returned unopposed for Wolverhampton. He is the oldest member in the House of Commons.

VILLIERS, Frederic, born in London in 1832, was educated in the north of France. Afterwards he studied in the Schools of Art at South Kensington, and became a student of the Royal Academy in 1870. In 1876, as special artist and correspondent to the Graphic, he went through the Servian Campaign with Mr. Archibald Forbes. He was with the armies of the Timok, Drina, Eber, and with Tcherniaieff on the Morava; was decorated with the Order of the Takova, and received a war medal for this campaign; was recalled in November to Constantinople. He then travelled in Roumelia and Bulgaria, examined the Turkish army, re-crossed the Servian lines and returned with the Turkish troops to Constantinople. Having been ordered to go into Russia, he, in January, started for Kisheniff, and saw the mobilization of the Russian troops in Bessarabia. Mr. Villiers returned to England in Feb., 1877. The day on which war was declared between Turkey and Russia, he started for Bucharest, where he joined Mr. Forbes, and was present at all the chief engagements. When the armistice was declared, he was the only English correspondent who accompanied the Russian army to enter Constantinople, and was present at San Stefano when peace was signed and announced to the Russian Guard by the Grand Duke Nicholas on Sunday, March 3, 1878. Mr. Villiers received the Cross for the passage of the Danube and the war medal. In June of that year he went to Malta, and was present at the review of the Indian Contingent by the Duke of Cambridge. In November he left England for Afghanistan. He went through the first part of that campaign till the signing of the Treaty of Gandamak; then left for Australia; was at the opening of the Sydney Exhibition; travelled through New Zealand, and returned to England via San Francisco and New York, thus making a journey round the world. Mr. Villiers left England for Egypt immediately on receipt of the news of the massacres at Alexandria, of the 11th of June, 1882; was on H.M.S. Condor during the bombardment of that city; and landed with the Marines. Afterwards he followed the army to Ismalia; was at the first fight at Tel-el-Mahouta, and was with the Highland Brigade during the night march and subsequent attack on Tel-el-Kebir. Mr. Villiers remained in Cairo till the trial and banishment of Arabi and his confederates. He received for this campaign the order and rosette of the Medijeh, and the Egyptian war medal from the hands of the Khedive. In May, 1883, he was one of the English correspondents, invited to attend the coronation of the Czar at Moscow; received silver medal and badge. In February, 1884, Mr. Villiers left for Suakim, to join General Graham, who had gone to avenge the defeat of General Baker at the first battle of Teb. Mr. Villiers was present at the Arab defeat at the second battle of Teb. On March 13, he was at the battle of Tamai, and subsequently, as special correspondent of the Daily News, accompanied Admiral Sir W. Hewett on his mission to the court of King John of Abyssinia. In the autumn of 1884 and the spring of 1885, Mr. Villiers was with the Nile Expedition for the relief of Khartoum, being present at the battles of Abu-Klea and the advance upon Metemmeh. Returning to England, he started almost at once for Ireland, where he witnessed the manoeuvres of the Evolutionary Squadron in Bantry Bay, in June, 1885. A period of rest followed, and in November, 1885, Mr. Villiers started for Servia, and was with the Servian forces at all the chief encounters with the Bulgarians. An armistice being declared, he started on his homeward journey. At Venice, he found a telegram from the proprietors of the Graphic, telling him to go to Burmah. He accomplished the journey from Venice to Rangoon in one month—arriving just in time to accompany Lord Dufferin on his journey up the Irrawaddy to Mandalay. When Lord Dufferin returned to India, Mr. Villiers left for Constantinople to await the development of events in the Balkan Peninsular. He eventually joined the Greek army and was in Athens during the blockade of the Greek Ports. As a peaceful solution of the Turko-Greek question took place, Mr. Villiers returned to England. Since 1887 he has been lecturing in England, the United States and Canada, on his varied experiences during the last decade. In August, 1889, Mr. Villiers was invited by the Governor-General of Canada to accompany his Excellency on his official tour through the Dominion, and journeyed from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast over the Canadian Pacific Railroad, visiting all the principal towns and Indian reservations of the far west.

He was appointed, March 4, 1878, to reorganise the Detective System of the Metropolitan Police with the designation of Director of Criminal Investigations, and with absolute control over the criminal administration. This post he resigned in 1884, and was appointed Colonel Commandant of the Queen's Westminster Volunteers. In 1888 he was elected to the Metropolitan Board of Works for St. George's, Hanover Square, and in 1889 was returned unopposed for the same constituency to the first London County Council. He is a magistrate for Middlesex, Westminster, and Berkshire, and a Deputy-Lieutenant for London. In 1885 he was returned as Conservative Member for the Central Division of Sheffield by a majority of 1149, and by 1195 in 1886. In Parliament he is identified with the Fair Trade Movement and Imperial Federation, while Acts for The Probation of First Offenders, Saving Life at Sea, and the Appointment of a Public Trustee, are due to his initiation. In 1886 he was created a Companion of the Bath, and is also a Knight of the Orders of the German Crown and of the Crown of Italy. His published works are "Stoffel's Reports upon the Prussian Army," 1871; "Elementary Military Geography, Reconnoitring and Sketching," 1872; "Russia's Advance Eastward," 1873; "The Law of Criticism and Libel," 1876; "The Improvement of the Volunteer Force," 1878; "Procédure d'Extradition," 1880; "A Police Code and Manual of Criminal Law," 1881; and "A Police Code for the British Empire," 1886. VINCENT, Sir Edgar, K.C.M.G., born Aug. 19, 1857, brother of the above, after assisting Mr. Goschen at the embassy at Constantinople, became President of the Public Debt, and, in 1883, was transferred to the important post of Financial Adviser to the Khedive, and now holds the office of Governor of The Imperial Ottoman Bank.

VINES, Sydney Howard, was born in London, Dec. 31, 1849. He was educated privately, and began the study of Medicine at Guy's Hospital in 1869, but soon became attracted by purely scientific subjects. Having gained an Open Scholarship at Christ's College, he went up to Cambridge in Oct., 1872. He graduated B.Sc. at the University of London in 1873, and D.Sc. in 1879. He took his Cambridge degree in 1876, and was shortly afterwards elected Fellow and Lecturer of Christ's College. He was elected to a Readership in Botany in 1884, and took his D.Sc. degree at Cambridge in the same year. In 1888 he was elected to the Sherardian Professorship of Botany at Oxford, and was admitted a Fellow of Magdalen College at the same time. He was elected Fellow of the Linnean Society

He has written a book entitled "Lectures on the Physiology of Plants," published by the Cambridge University Press in 1886; and he is an editor and one of the founders of the "Annals of Botany" (published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford).

VIRCHOW, Rudolf, a celebrated German pathologist and anthropologist, was born at Schivelbein in Pomerania, Oct. 13, 1821, and studied Medicine at Berlin. In 1849 he was appointed Professor of Pathological Anatomy at Würzburg, and soon became one of the foremost exponents of the so-called Würzburg School. In 1856 he returned to Berlin as Professor; here he did excellent work in the newly-founded pathological institute, which at once became the centre of independent research amongst the younger men of science. He has always taken a great interest in politics, and has contributed important speeches to the parliamentary debates. At the Naturalists' Conference at Innsbruck in 1869, he was one of the founders of the German Anthropological Society. In 1873 he became a member of the Academy of Sciences. He has also taken a great interest in the spreading of scientific knowledge amongst the people, and has been since 1866 part editor of a series of popular lectures, to which he has contributed essays on various historical and scientific subjects. His principal works are: "Cellular Pathology," 4th edit., 1871; "Morbid Tumours," 3 vols., 1863-66; "Collection of Treatises on Scientific Medicine," 1856; "Collection of Treatises on Public Medicine and Epidemiology," 2 vols., 1879; "Goethe as a Naturalist," 1861; "Four Lectures on Life and Illness," 1862; "The Education of Women," 1865; "The Function of Science in the New National Life of Germany," 1871; "Free Knowledge in the Modern State," 1877; and "The Necropolis of Koban in the Caucasus," 1883. His "Archives of Pathological Anatomy and Physiology, and of Clinical Medicine," founded in 1847, has, lastly, finished the 120th volume.

VIRTUE, The Right Rev. John, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Portsmouth, was born in London, April 28, 1826. He was ordained priest in Rome by Cardinal Patrizi in 1851, having previously studied at St. Edmund's College, Hertfordshire, and the English College, Rome. Poplar was the scene of his first missionary labours, and in 1853 he went with the Apostolic Nuncio (afterwards Cardinal)

Bedini as his secretary to the United States and Canada. On his return, in acknowledgment of his services, he was made Chamberlain of Honour to Pope Pius IX., April 18, 1854. Monsignor Virtue went to Aldershot Camp on temporary duty in 1855; but he was appointed Chaplain to the Forces June 24, 1855, a post which he held for twenty-seven years. He was mentioned in general orders in 1864 for "distinguished and meritorious conduct during the epidemic of yellow fever in Bernuda," and was promoted from the fourth to the third class of Army Chaplains (Feb. 2, 1865) for the services he had rendered. Monsignor Virtue was six years stationed at Malta. He was re-appointed Chamberlain of Honour to Pope Leo XIII. April 5, 1878, was appointed the first Bishop of Portsmouth by Apostolic brief of June 13, 1882, and was consecrated by the Cardinal Archbishop on July 25. He has edited a "Prayer Book for the Army," 1859; and a revised edition of Bishop Challoner's "Meditations," 1880; and has contributed various articles to the Dublin Review and the Month. He represented the English Hierarchy at the Centennial celebration at Baltimore, United States, in 1889.

VOGEL, Sir Julius, K.C.M.G., was born in London in 1835. After attending London University School, he became at sixteen a pupil of Dr. Percy's metallurgical laboratory at the Royal School of Mines, where he studied more particularly the chemical art of assaying and testing gold and silver. He went out to Melbourne with a high certificate of proficiency, intending to employ his acquirements in the gold fields of Australia, then lately discovered. Fate, however, had decreed a more extensive field of usefulness for him. He was elected a Member of the Provincial Council, and became head of the Provincial Government, a position he resigned in 1869. He also became a Member of the New Zealand House of Representatives, and removed in 1869 to Auckland. Mr. Vogel joined the ministry of Mr. (now Sir) William Fox, of Wellington, in 1869, taking the office of Colonial Treasurer, Postmaster-General, and, finally, Commissioner of Customs. After acting also as Minister in Mr. Waterhouse's Government, and holding the leadership of the Lower House, Mr. Vogel became Prime Minister at Mr. Waterhouse's resignation, which followed after a few months. He held that office until 1876, when he resigned, because his health was not equal to the arduous duties. He became Agent-General for New Zealand at the end of 1876, and held that office until 1881, when he resigned. He held office as Member of the Government, and head of it, for a period of seven years, with an interval of only four months. Through Sir Julius Vogel's exertions, extended over three years, the Colonial Stocks Act (for inscribing Colonial Stocks) was devised, and finally passed both Houses of Parliament of Great Britain. Lord Carnarvon, in moving the second reading in the House of Lords, specially referred to Sir Julius's services in connection with the measure. Sir Julius Vogel's policy in New Zealand was the means of introducing 100,000 immigrants, and constructing 1,200 miles of railway in the colony during the ten years ending 1881. He visited the colony in 1883 and again in 1884, and joined the Government of Sir Robert Stout, known as the Stout-Vogel Government. He continued in office until the end of 1887, and shortly afterwards returned to England. He was made a C.M.G. in 1871, and the K.C.M.G. was conferred on him in 1875. He is the author of several pamphlets: a New Zealand handbook; several papers in the Nineteenth Century and the Fortnightly, chiefly concerning the Federation of the Empire, a subject on which he has always taken great interest. He latterly wrote a novel, "A.D. 2000." He was married, in 1867, to Mary, eldest daughter of W. H. Clayton, Esq., Colonial Architect.

VOGT, Professor Karl, M.D., philosopher and author, born at Giessen, July 5, 1817, was educated there under Liebig, and removing to Berne in 1835, studied Physiology, and graduated M.D. He devoted his attention to Geology and Zoology under Agassiz, and became Professor of Zoology in the University of his native town. Having distinguished himself in the Frankfort Parliament of 1848, he, from motives of prudence, retired into Switzerland, and delivered in the canton of Neuchâtel some lectures "On Man, his Place in Creation, and in the History of the Earth." They have been translated into English, and published under the auspices of the Anthropological Society. Dr. Vogt, who is Professor of Natural History in the University of Geneva, a Correspondent of the Institute of France (Académie des Sciences), foreign associate of the Anthropological Society of Paris, and an honorary Fellow of the Anthropological Society of London and Berlin, has published several works, amongst which may be mentioned "Manual of Geology," "Zoological Letters," "Lettres Physiologiques," translated into French, Italian, and Russian; "Les Mammifères," translated into French, English, Italian, and Russian; "Anatomie Comparée Pratique," in German, French, and Russian, and various lectures on animals and some descriptions of travel.

VOGÜE, Vicomte Eugène Melchior de, was born on Feb. 24, 1818; became Secretary to the Embassy, first at Constantinople, and subsequently at St. Petersburg, where, at the Winter Palace in 1878, he was married to the daughter of General Annenkoff. He retired from the diplomatic service in 1881, and has since devoted his time to literature; writing much in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and the Journal des Débats. He has also written "Syrie, Palestine, Mount Athos," 1876; "Histoires Orientales," 1879; "Le Fils de Pierre le Grand," 1884; "Histoires d'Hiver," 1885; "Le Roman Russe," 1886; "Souvenirs et Visions," 1887; "Remarques sur l'Exposition du Centenaire," 1889. Vicomte Melchior de Vogüé was elected a Member of the Académie Française in Nov., 1888.

VOYSEY, The Rev. Charles. B.A., was born in London, March 18, 1828, being the youngest son of the late Mr. Annesley Voysey, architect. He was educated partly by private tuition, partly at Stockwell Grammar School, and afterwards at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1851. From 1852 to 1859 he held the curacy of Hesselc, near Hull, after which he was curate (under the crown) of Craigton, Jamaica, for fifteen months. In 1861 he was appointed curate of Great Yarmouth, but in the same year was transferred to St. Mark's, Whitechapel. Being ejected from that curacy in consequence of a sermon against endless punishment, he was recommended by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait) to the curacy of the well-known Victoria Dock parish, under the Rev. H. Boyd, Vicar. After six months' service there he was invited by the patron and vicar of Healaugh, Yorkshire, to accept the curacy of that parish, and at the expiration of six months the vicar resigned and presented Mr. Voysey to the benefice (1864). Mr. Voysey began his career as a religious reformer by the publication of a sermon entitled "Is every Statement in the Bible about our Heavenly Father strictly true?" This was soon followed, in 1865, by The Sling and the Stone, which first appeared in monthly parts, and was continued through several years; up to the present time nine volumes have been issued. The opinions expressed were denounced as heretical by the ultra-orthodox parties in the Anglican Church, and eventually in the spring of 1869 legal proceedings were instituted by the Archbishop of York's secretary against Mr. Voysey. The case was heard in the first instance in the Chancery Court, York Minster, Dec. 1, 1869, when judgment was pronounced against Mr. Voysey, and on appeal, confirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which sentenced the appellant to be deprived of his living, and to pay the costs, Feb. 11, 1871. In October of that year, Mr. Voysey began holding Theistic services, and preaching in London, first at St. George's Hall, then at Langham Hall, and since April, 1885, at the Theistic Church, Swallow Street, Piccadilly. The religious movement with which he is associated was at first called the "Voysey Establishment Fund," but in 1880, at his own request, his supporters and congregation enrolled themselves into the "Theistic Church," which has been properly settled by an elaborate Trust Deed. For the first three years of his preaching in London, Mr. Voysey's sermons were published weekly in the Eastern Post, and frequently in other papers in England, in America, and in India. Every sermon which he has preached since Oct., 1871, has been printed and circulated in many parts of the world. The issue is 1,000 a week, and the total number, including reprints, up to the present time is over 900,000. The work of the Theistic Church in eighteen years has cost over £30,000, and large sums of money have been subscribed by the Theists for purely charitable objects. Mr. Voysey is the author of a very original work, entitled, "The Mystery of Pain, Death, and Sin."

W.

WACE, The Rev. Henry, D.D., Principal of King's College, London, was born in London, Dec. 10, 1836, and educated at Marlborough, Rugby, King's College, London, and Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1860, taking a second class both in classics and mathematics. He proceeded D.D. at Oxford in 1883; and in the previous year received the honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He was ordained in 1861; served as Curate at St. Luke's, Berwick Street, from 1861 to 1863; at St. James's, Piccadilly, from 1863 to 1869; and was Lecturer at Grosvenor Chapel, South Audley Street,

He preached the Boyle Lectures for 1874 and 1875, on the subject of "Christianity and Morality." In 1879 he preached the Bampton Lectures at Oxford on the "Foundations of Faith." He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1878, and at Oxford from 1880 to 1882. In 1875 he was appointed Professor of Ecclesiastical History in King's College, London; and, in 1881, he was nominated by the Bishop of London a Prebendary of St. Paul's. He was appointed one of the Archbishop of Canterbury's chaplains in April, 1883; and, in November, the same year, Principal of King's College, London. In 1884, he was appointed one of the Honorary Chaplains to the Queen, and became Chaplain in Ordinary in 1889. In conjunction with Dr. William Smith, he is the editor of the "Dictionary of Christian Biography, Literature, Sects, and Doctrines, during the First Eight Centuries," 4 vols., 1877-87; and he is the editor of "The Speaker's Commentary on the Apocrypha." WADDINGTON, William Henry, a French statesman and diplomatist, was born in Paris, Dec. 11, 1826. His father, a rich Englishman, established cotton works in France, and became naturalized, but the son was partly educated in England. After several years passed at the Lycée St. Louis at Paris, he went to Rugby School in Oct., 1841, and remained there till June, 1845, when he went up to Trinity College, Cambridge, with an exhibition from the school. He became scholar of his college, and graduated in 1849 as second in the first class of the classical tripos, and was bracketed equal as Chancellor's Medallist. At Rugby he was distinguished for his prowess at football, and his contemporaries at Cambridge remember Waddington the sculler, member of the Second Trinity Boat Club, and No. 6 in the Cambridge boat in the University race in 1849, when Cambridge won. Soon after leaving the University he returned to France, married, and settled in the department of the Aisne. He became a member of the Society of Antiquaries of France, and in the pursuit of his favourite studies relating to ancient coins and inscriptions, he visited Asia Minor, Syria, and Cyprus (in 1850 and 1862), England, and Germany. His valuable contributions towards the history and archaeology of France led to his being elected, in 1865, a member of the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres. In that year he endeavoured at a bye-election to enter the Corps Législatif, as member for the fourth circonscription of the department of the Aisne, but his candidature was unsuccessful. However, on Feb. 8, 1871, he was sent as a representative of that department to the National Assembly. From the first he sat in the Left Centre, and allied himself to the Republicans, giving a hearty support to the policy of M. Thiers. He was a member of numerous commissions, and was the reporter of the law relating to the Conseils Généraux (Aug., 1871). Appointed Minister of Public Instruction, in the place of M. Jules Simon, May 19, 1873, M. Waddington retired, five days later, with M. Thiers, and resumed his seat on the benches of the Left Centre. Except on some questions of detail, or rather of procedure, M. Waddington voted regularly with the Republicans. On Jan. 30, 1876, he was elected a Senator for the department of the Aisne, together with M. Henri Martin and M. Saint-Vallier; his term of office expired in 1885, and was renewed for a second period of nine years. He was recalled to the Ministry of Public Instruction in the Cabinet of March 10, 1876, in succession to M. Wallon, and he retained his portfolio under the administration of M. Jules Simon, with whom he resigned office May 17, 1877. On the formation of the Dufaure cabinet in Dec., 1877, M. Waddington became Minister of Foreign Affairs. He was the first Plenipotentiary of France at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. After the resignation of Marshal MacMahon and the retreat of M. Dufaure, M. Waddington was invited by M. Grévy to remain at the Foreign Office while assuming the Presidency of the Council (Feb. 4, 1879). He had in that capacity to maintain before the Parliament a policy which was considered too Republican by the Senate, and too moderate by the Chamber of Deputies. On Dec. 27, 1879, he resigned, and was succeeded as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and as President of the Council by one of his colleagues, M. de Freycinet. At this juncture he refused the offer of the London embassy, and paid a visit to Italy, where he was received by the Pope and the King (March, 1880). In 1883 he was sent as Ambassador Extraordinary to represent France at the coronation of the Czar Alexander III., at Moscow. He was appointed Ambassador at the Court of St. James's in succession to M. Tissot, in July, 1883, and still retains the position. He is President of the General Council of the department of the Aisne. He is a Protestant, and related to the Bunsens, whose late mother, the wife of the chevalier, was a Waddington. Mr. Waddington has published:—“Voyage en Asie Mineure au point de vue numismatique,” 1852; a continuation of Lebas’ “Voyage Archéologique en Grèce et en Asie Mineure,” 1862; and “L’Edit de Dioclétien,” with new fragments and a commentary, 1864; and “Fastes des Provinces Asiatiques de l’Empire Romain,” 1872. He was elected an honorary Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, April 16, 1881.

WADE, Sir Thomas Francis, K.C.B., elder son of Colonel Thomas Wade, C.B., born about 1820, entered the army as Ensign in the 81st Foot in 1838, and served afterwards in China and elsewhere in the 42nd Highlanders and the 98th Foot, from which he retired as Lieutenant in 1847. In 1843 he was appointed Interpreter to the garrison of Hong Kong, and in 1847 Assistant Chinese Secretary; in 1852 he was made Vice-Consul at Shanghai, where he acted as Inspector of Customs for the Chinese Government. In 1855 he was appointed Chinese Secretary at Hong Kong, and in the same year he was sent by the late Sir John Bowring on a special mission to Cochin China. Owing to his familiarity with the native character and language, he was attached to Lord Elgin’s Mission to China in 1857-59, and in the last-named year he was appointed Chinese Secretary to our Mission in China. In this capacity he accompanied Lord Elgin’s Special Mission to Peking in Oct., 1860. In 1861 he was nominated a C.B. (Civil Division); in the following year he became Chinese Secretary and Translator to the British Legation in China, and was acting Chargé d’Affaires at Peking, from June, 1864, to Nov., 1865, and again from Nov., 1869, to July, 1871, when he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary and Chief-Superintendent of British Trade in China. He was advanced to the rank of K.C.B. in Nov., 1875, for his exertions in negotiating important treaties with the Chinese Government, and obtaining trading facilities in that empire. Sir Thomas Wade is the author of “Tzū-Erh Chi” (Progressive Course), 1867, which deals with both colloquial and documentary Chinese, and is of great value to students of the Chinese language.

WAKEFIELD, Bishop of. See HOW, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM WALSHAM.

WALDERSEE, Count von, Chief of the General Staff of the German Army, was born in 1832; entered the army in 1850, and served with distinction through the war of 1866, and through the Franco-German campaign. In 1882 he became Quartermaster-General, and acted as Deputy Chief of the General Staff on behalf of the aged Count von Molke, on whose resignation, he succeeded to the position of Chief of the General Staff. Count Waldersee married an American lady who had received the title of Princess Maria von Noer, as themorganatic consort of the late Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein.

WALES (Prince of), H.R.H. Albert Edward, K.G., K.P., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., P.C., heir-apparent to the British crown, eldest son of Her Majesty and the late Prince Consort, born at Buckingham Palace, Nov. 9, 1841, received his early education under the Rev. Henry M. Birch, rector of Prestwich, Mr. Gibbes, barrister-at-law, the Rev. C. F. Tarver, and Mr. H. W. Fisher, and having studied for a session at Edinburgh, entered Christ Church, Oxford, where he attended the public lectures for a year, and afterwards resided for three or four terms at Cambridge for the same purpose. His Royal Highness spent most of the summer of 1860 in a visit to the United States and Canada, where he was most enthusiastically received, was in 1858 gazetted to a colonelcy in the army, and joined the camp at the Curragh in June, 1861. Accompanied by Dean Stanley, the Prince travelled in the East, and visited Jerusalem in 1862. His Royal Highness is a K.G., a general in the army, and Colonel of the 10th Hussars, and has the titles of Duke of Cornwall (by which he took his seat in the House of Lords in Feb., 1863, in the Peerage of England); Duke of Rothesay, Baron of Renfrew, and Lord of the Isles, in Scotland; and Earl of Dublin and Carrick in Ireland; and enjoys the patronage of twenty-nine livings, chiefly as owner of the Duchy of Cornwall. His Royal Highness married, March 10, 1863, the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, by whom he has issue. (See memoir of H.R.H. The Princess of Wales.) The Prince of Wales became President of St. Bartholomew's Hospital in April, 1867. Towards the close of the year 1871, his Royal Highness was attacked with typhoid fever, and for some weeks his life was despaired of; but he slowly

recovered, and was able to take part in the memorable "Thanksgiving Service" in St. Paul's Cathedral, Feb. 27, 1872. He was elected Grand Master of the Freemasons in England in succession to the Marquis of Ripon in 1874, and on April 28, 1875, was admitted to the office at a Lodge held in the Albert Hall, South Kensington. On May 5, 1875, he was installed at the Freemasons' Hall as First Principal of the Royal Arch Freemasons. In 1875-76 His Royal Highness visited India. The great interest he took in the Paris Exhibition of 1878 contributed in no slight degree to render it a success. His Royal Highness attended the Court Festivities held at Berlin in March, 1883, to celebrate the "silver wedding" of the Crown Prince with the Princess Royal of England. On this occasion he was nominated by the Emperor as a Field-Marshal in the German army. In 1885, the Prince, in company with the Princess, made a tour through Ireland. In 1889, the Prince, with the Princess and their sons, visited the Paris Exhibition; and in Oct. of the same year he was present at the wedding of the Duke of Sparta at Athens. The annual income of His Royal Highness was raised, in 1889, from £40,000 to £76,000 (in accordance with the recommendation of a select committee appointed to inquire into the subject of Royal Grants, on the occasion of the Queen's application for an allowance for Prince Albert Victor and the Princess Louise of Wales), so that henceforth the provision for the Prince's children will be made out of the Prince's income. His Royal Highness has taken a great personal interest in all the Exhibitions recently held at South Kensington, and was Executive President of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, opened by the Queen in May, 1886. He also originated the Royal College of Music, and is the chief mover in the Jubilee scheme of an "Imperial Institute." In 1888 the Prince and Princess celebrated their silver wedding.

WALES, Her Royal Highness Alexandra Caroline Marie Charlotte Louise Julie, the Princess of, is the daughter of Christian IX., King of Denmark, and was born at Copenhagen Dec. 1, 1844, and was married at Windsor, on March 10, 1863, to His Royal Highness Albert Edward Prince of Wales, and has five children: Albert Victor Christian Edward, Duke of Clarence and Avondale, born at Frogmore Lodge, near Windsor, Jan. 8, 1864; George Frederick Ernest Albert, born at Marlborough House, June 3, 1865; Louise Victoria Alexandra Dagmar (Duchess of Fife), born at Marlborough House, Feb. 20, 1867; Victoria Alexandra Olga Marie, born at Marlborough House, July 6, 1868; Maud Charlotte Marie Victoria, born at Marlborough House, Nov. 26, 1869.

WALFORD, Edward, M.A., author and editor, is the second son of the late Rev. Wm. Walford, of Hatfield Peverel, Essex, sometime Rector of St. Runwald's, Colchester; his mother was a granddaughter of the American Royalist, Sir William Pepperell, Bart. He was born at Hatfield, Feb. 3, 1823; was educated at the Charterhouse School, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he won an open scholarship in 1841. He obtained the Chancellor's Prize for Latin verse in 1843; was proxime accessit for the Ireland University Scholarship in 1844 (when Professor Conington was the successful candidate); and took his B.A. degree with Classical honours in 1846. He subsequently won the Denyer Theological Prize in 1848 and 1849. He was ordained, but never held a parochial charge, and resigned his orders after the passing of Mr. Bouverie's Bill. He held for a year the Composition Mastership in Tunbridge School, and after his marriage he employed his time in taking private pupils at Clifton. In 1852 he settled in London and commenced his literary career. He is the author of "Old and New London," vols. 3, 4, 5, and 6; "Greater London," 2 vols.; "Londoniana," 2 vols.; "Pleasant Days in Pleasant Places;" "Holidays in Home Counties;" "The Pilgrim at Home;" "Tales of Great Families," 1st series, 2 vols.; "Tales of Great Families," 2nd series, 2 vols.; "Chapters from Family Chests," 2 vols., 12mo; "The County Families of the United Kingdom" (dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and published annually since 1860); "Handbook of the Greek Drama;" "Juvenal" in "Ancient Classics for English Readers;" "Tourist's Guide to Essex;" "Tourist's Guide to Berkshire;" "Progressive Exercises in Latin Elegiacs," 1st and 2nd series; "Progressive Exercises in Greek Iambics;" "The Grammar of Latin Poetry," and other school-books; "Annual Biography" for 1856 and 1857; "Grecian History" (Ince's outline series); "Life of Prince Consort;" "Life of the Earl of Beaconsfield;" "Life of Lord Palmerston;" "Life of Earl Russell;" "Life of Louis Napoleon;" "Jubilee Memoir of the Queen;" "Life of Pitt," 1890. He has edited: "Lodge's Peerage," annually from 1861 to 1889; Charles Knight's

"London," 6 vols., 1870; Brayley's "History of Surrey," 4 vols., 1875. Bohn's Ecclesiastical Library: Eusebius' "Church History," Sozomen's "Church History," Theodoret's and Evagrius' "Church Histories," Butler's "Analogy and Sermons," Pearson's "On the Creed." Southey's "Life of Wesley;" "Once a Week," 1859-68, 13 vols., 8vo; "Gentleman's Magazine," 1866-68, 5 vols.; "The Antiquary" (which he founded), 2 vols., 1880; "The Antiquarian Magazine," 1882-5; "The Charter-House Play," 1885; "The Shilling Peerage," "Shilling Baronetage," "Shilling Knightage," and "Shilling House of Commons," annually since 1855; "Herick's Poems, with Life;" "Lord Erskine's Speeches, with Biography," 2 vols.; "The Windsor Peerage," 1890. Besides these, Mr. Walford has been an extensive contributor of Biographical, Antiquarian, and Topographical articles to the Times, and other papers and various magazines. Mr. Walford is a Member of the Royal Historical Society; of the Archaeological Institute; of the British Archaeological Association; and on the Council of the Society for preserving the Memorials of the Dead. He is also a Member of the "Order of St. John of Jerusalem," and of the "Sette of Odd Volumes," and was one of the founders of "The Salon."

WALFORD, Mrs. Lucy Bethia, novelist, is the daughter of the second son of Sir James Colquhoun and Luss, tenth baronet of the name; and brother of the unfortunate Sir James who was drowned in Loch Lomond, within sight of his own door some fifteen years ago. Her mother was the daughter of E. Fuller-Maitland, Esq., of Stanstead, Essex, and this lady—as is little known—was the writer of the principal portion of those verses, now in every hymn-book, and usually attributed to H. Kirke White,

Onward Christians, onward go.

Of these Kirke White wrote only the first six lines, and the poem was finished by Miss Frances Fuller-Maitland, then only in her sixteenth year. From both parents Mrs. Walford thus inherits literary tastes, as her father's comprehensive sporting work, "The Moor and the Loch," lately gone into its seventh edition, is considered as a classic among lovers of the rod and the gun. It was not until four years after her marriage, in 1869, to Mr. Alfred Saunders Walford, that Mrs. Walford published "Mr. Smith," her first serious attempt. It was sent anonymously to Mr. John Blackwood, and by him was accepted and published at once. On learning who was his new correspondent, he further dissuaded Mrs. Walford from adopting a fictitious name as she had intended doing, the argument he used being that he "was sure her father's daughter would never write anything to be ashamed of, and that was the only reason he could ever imagine for the concealment of anyone's identity." Mr. Blackwood, on the success of "Mr. Smith," urged Mrs. Walford to write for the time-honoured pages of "Maga" (Blackwood's Magazine), and the result was a series of short tales, beginning with "Nan: a summer scene," which has lately been brought out under this heading in book form. They comprehended "Bee or Beatrix;" "Lady Adelaide;" "Fashion and Fancy;" "Eleonor: a tale of Non-Performers;" and "Mattie: the History of an Evening;" all which made their first appearance in Blackwood. "Pauline," Mrs. Walford's first Blackwood serial novel ran its course in 1877; "Cousins," her third novel, was published by the same firm in 1879. "Troublesome Daughters" followed in 1880; "The Baby's Grandmother" was the Blackwood serial in 1885; and "A Stiff-necked Generation" completed its course in the same pages in 1888. Alongside of these, her larger works, Mrs. Walford wrote "Dick Netherby," a one-volume tale of humble Scottish life, for Good Words, in 1881; and "Dinah's Son," on the same lines, for Life and Work, also in 1881; "The History of a Week" formed the Christmas number of the Graphic in 1885; and all these have also been re-published in book form. "A Mere Child," "A Sage of Sixteen," and "The Havoc of a Smile" have successively been added as summer novelettes to the above list, "A Sage of Sixteen" having been published first in Atalanta. Many other short sketches, stories, essays, and verses have also been scattered over these years, most of which have been reprinted under the heading of the leading tale "Her Great Idea." "The Mischief of Monica," now running as a serial for the year in Longman's Magazine, is Mrs. Walford's latest work of fiction.

WALKER, Frederick William, High Master of St. Paul's School, only son of Mr. Thomas Walker, of Tullamore, was born in London, July 7, 1830, and educated at Rugby, under Dr. Tait. He was Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, 1849 (first-class in Classics, and second-class in Mathematics, Moderations, 1852, first-class in Classics, and second-class in Mathematics, Final Examination, 1853), Boden Sanscrit Scholar, Vinerian Law Scholar, and Tancred Law Scholar, 1854; and Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College. He was called to the Bar, Lincoln's Inn, 1857; and was appointed High Master of Manchester Grammar School, 1859; Public Examiner at Oxford, 1868; and High Master of St. Paul's School, London, 1877. Under Mr. Walker's mastership the school has been removed from St. Paul's Churchyard to West Kensington.

WALKER, John James, M.A., F.R.S., President of the London Mathematical Society, Member of the Physical Society, was born Oct. 2, 1825, at Kennington, Surrey, and is the son of John Walker, B.A., by Ann, sister of Ed. Fricker, Surgeon, Cheltenham. He was educated at London High, and Plymouth New Grammar Schools (of which his father became Head Master v. Rev. L. Macaulay appointed to Repton), and Trinity College, Dublin (with which he had an hereditary connexion, his great-grandfather Matthias Walker, Clerk, his grandfather, John Walker, a Fellow, and his father, having been Graduates of Dublin University), first-class Mathematics and Logic at Previous Exam. 1845; first-class Mathematics and Physics Degree Exam. 1849; second Bishop Law's Prizeman, 1850; M.A. 1857. From 1853 to 1862 Private Tutor to the present Lord Ardilaun, Captain B. L. and Sir Ed. C. Guinness; 1865-1888, Afternoon Lecturer in Applied Mathematics and Physics University College School; and 1868-1882 Vice-Principal University Hall, London; 1871-1883 Examiner in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy for Hibbert-Trust Scholarships. He is the author of papers and reviews in the Philosophical Magazine ("Iris seen in water," 1853, reprinted in Annal de Chim, et de Physic, tome XXXIX), Cambridge and Dublin, and Quarterly Journals of Mathematics, Messenger of Mathematics, London Mathematical Society Proceedings, British Association Reports, 1859-63; Proceedings of the Royal Society; Philosophical Transactions; and Nature. Since 1888 Mr. Walker has devoted himself entirely to research in Pure and Applied Mathematics. In 1842, when residing in Somersetshire, he was fortunate, in discovering raising, cleaning and making an elaborate drawing of a fine specimen of Ichthyosaurus Tenuirostris, from the Lias near Long Sutton, on the property of the then Earl of Burlington, now Duke of Devonshire, in whose possession the specimen remains.

It was accepted by Sir R. Owen as an illustration to his British Fossil Reptiles.

WALKER, J. T., General R.E., C.B., F.R.S., LL.D., was born on Dec. 1, 1826, and is the son of John Walker, Esq., Madras Civil Service. He entered the H.E.I.C. Military Academy at Addiscombe in 1843, and obtained a commission in the Bombay (now Royal) Engineers. He served at the siege of Mooltan, and in the battle of Goograt, and the advance to Peshawur. Immediately after the annexation of the Punjab to British territory he made a survey of the Trans-Indus Frontier, from Peshawur down to Dera Ishmail Khan. He served against the mutineers in 1857, and at the siege of Delhi, and was appointed an assistant in the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India in 1853, and became Superintendent of the Survey in 1861; and Surveyor-General in 1878. He supervised the publication of nine quarto volumes of the Account of the operations of the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India, and the annual reports of the survey for 22 years, and retired in 1884. General Walker has contributed various papers to the Journals of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and to the Royal Geographical Society, and the articles "Oxus," "Pontoon," "Surveying," and "Tibet," to the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica.

WALKINGTON, Miss Letitia Alice, M.A., LL.D., was born in Belfast, but has lived nearly all her life in Strandtown, about two and a half miles out of Belfast. Her father, Mr. T. R. Walkington, comes of a family that has been well known for several generations in Antrim and Down. In 1695 Edward Walkington was consecrated Bishop of Down and Connor. Her mother is the daughter of the late Prussian Consul, G. von Heyn. Miss Walkington was educated at home by a governess, Miss Bessel, until sixteen, and then went to a boarding-school, first in England and then in Paris. She did not, however, begin to study seriously until more than a year after she had left school. She matriculated in 1882 in the Royal University of Dublin. After doing so, she studied at the Methodist and Queen's Colleges, Belfast, and with a barrister, Mr. Thos. Harrison, and took her B.A. degree in 1885, and M.A. in 1886, taking the Logic, Metaphysic, and Political Economy Honour Group for both degrees. In 1888 she took the LL.B., and in 1889 the LL.D. degree. Miss Walkington was the first lady who took the last three degrees, several ladies have since taken the M.A., but only one, Miss

F. Gray, has taken the law degrees. Miss Gray, Miss Hamilton, B.A., and Miss Walkington, have organised university classes to prepare young ladies for the Intermediate and R.U.I. examinations, hoping thereby to supply a want, as there is nothing of the kind for girls in Belfast, except in close connection with the principal schools. Their success, as far as numbers are concerned, testifies that the want was really experienced. In 1889 Miss Walkington was invited to take part in the "Congrès International des Œuvres et Institutions Féminines," in connection with the Paris Exhibition.

WALLACE, Alfred Russel, LL.D., F.L.S., born at Usk, Monmouthshire, Jan. 8, 1822, was educated at the Grammar School, Hertford, and articled with an elder brother as land surveyor and architect, but gave up that profession in order to travel and study nature. In 1848 he visited the Amazon with Mr. Bates. Returning in 1852, he published his "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro," and a small volume on "Palm Trees of the Amazon, and their Uses." In 1854 he visited the Malay Islands, where he remained eight years. He has since published "The Malay Archipelago," 2 vols., 2nd edit., 1869, and a volume of essays entitled "Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection," 1870, as well as a large number of papers in the publications of the Linnean, Zoological, Ethnological, Anthropological, and Entomological Societies. In 1868 he was awarded the Royal Medal of the Royal Society, and in 1870 the Gold Medal of the Société de Géographie de Paris. In 1875 he printed a small volume "On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism." His elaborate work, in two volumes, on "The Geographical Distribution of Animals" was published in 1876, in which year he was President of the Biological Section at the meeting of the British Association at Glasgow. In 1878 he published a volume on "Tropical Nature," containing his latest views on the colours of natural objects, on sexual selection, the geographical distribution of animals and plants, and allied topics. In 1880 he published another important work, "Island Life," in which the principles established in the "Geographical Distribution of Animals," are applied to the faunas and floras of the chief islands of the globe, &c. Since then Mr. Wallace has turned his attention to social and political problems, and in 1882 published a volume on "Land Nationalisation, its Necessity and its Aims," in which he gives a sketch of the whole subject of land-tenure, and proposes a practical scheme of occupying ownership under the State in order to remedy the numerous evils of the present system which he has pointed out. To advocate this scheme a Land Nationalisation Society has been formed, of which Mr. Wallace is president. He has also put forth a scheme for the Nationalisation of the Church of England. In 1881 he was awarded a Civil List pension of £200 a year in recognition of the amount and value of his scientific work. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin in 1882. Mr. Wallace is an opponent of compulsory vaccination, and in 1885 published his "Forty-five Years of Registration Statistics, proving Vaccination to be both useless and dangerous." In the latter part of the same year he brought out a small volume entitled "Bad Times: an Essay on the present Depression of Trade." The last two works are illustrated by means of diagrams and tables. He has also written many pamphlets, articles, and letters to the daily press on the land and other social questions.

WALLACE, Robert, D.D., M.P., was born in the parish of St. Andrews, Fifeshire, June 24, 1831, and educated at Geddes Institution, Culross, the High School, Edinburgh, and the Universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh, graduating M.A. in the former in 1853. He entered the Church, and became successively Minister of Newton-upon-Ayr, in Dec., 1857; Minister of Trinity College Church, Edinburgh, in Dec., 1860; Examiner in Philosophy, in the University of St. Andrews, in April, 1866; Minister of Old Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in Dec., 1868; D.D. of the University of Glasgow in 1869; and Professor of Church History in the University of Edinburgh, in Dec., 1872. He quitted the clerical profession in Aug., 1876, when he became editor of the Scotsman in succession to the late Dr. Russel. He resigned the editorship in Nov., 1880, and was called to the Bar in Nov., 1883. After the dissolution of 1886 he opposed Mr. Goschen for East Edinburgh, and was elected as a Gladstone Liberal by a large majority.

WALLER, Mrs. Mary Lemon, artist, the wife of Mr. S. E. Waller, the artist, was born at Bideford in Devonshire, and is the daughter of the Rev. Hugh Fowler, M.A., and any talent she at first exhibited appeared to lie rather in the direction of literature and music than of art. Her first efforts were with the pen, and writing some quaint little stories she was inspired with the desire to illustrate them.

These juvenile efforts were succeeded by attempts with the pencil at portraiture of her family and friends, which appeared to indicate so unusual an ability that the young lady was sent to the School of Art at Gloucester, where she underwent a course of freehand drawing and study from the antique under Mr. J. Kemp. A careful drawing of the Discobolus secured, in 1871, admission to the Royal Academy Schools, where she remained studying hard for two or three years. Her introduction to artistic life as an exhibitor also took place in 1871, as she in that year painted, and got accepted at the Dudley Gallery, a study called "An Unexpected Meeting," a child curiously regarding a snail, in a garden walk. This was a decided success, but it was not until some years later that Mrs. Waller appeared as an exhibitor at the Royal Academy, with a charming portrait of her little two years old son. Since then she has been a pretty regular contributor to the parent institution. Her chief works have been a head portrait of Lord Armstrong in the Academy, 1883, and a full-length of his Lordship, presented to the town of Newcastle in the same year, a work which was not publicly exhibited. In 1884 a portrait of Mildred, daughter of Colonel Tryon, was Mrs. Waller's Academy contribution, and the following year her "Little Snow-white," a fair-haired, blue-eyed child, sitting in a wood, fairly fascinated the public, and greatly added to the artist's reputation. Other works followed in due succession. "The Secret of the Sea" and "Rita, Daughter of Wilberforce Bryant, Esq.," 1886; "Dorothy, Daughter of J. G. Leeming, Esq.," 1887; "Leila," 1888, and in the same year "Eve," a child with an apple, exhibited at the Institute, Piccadilly, and reproduced in the Christmas number of the Illustrated London News; "Perdita," a portrait, in 1889 and in the Grosvenor Gallery, "Girl Fencing;" whilst in last year's Academy (1890) she had "Gladys, Daughter of Major Lutley Jordan," a work rich in the qualities of the art of portraiture. We regard as unnecessary further multiplication of the artist's works, or might mention "Mrs. Montague," in the Grosvenor Gallery, 1888, and "The Rev. Alfred Gatty, D.D.," Sub-Dean of York, and many more equally valuable specimens of the limner's art. But those we have mentioned constitute an art reputation, and on them this lady may be well content to take her stand.

WALLHOFEN, Madame, née Pauline Lucca, a celebrated singer, born of Jewish parents in Vienna, in 1842. When still a child her beautiful voice attracted attention and procured for her a musical training by Üschmann and Lévy. She made her débüt at Olmütz in 1859; and in 1860 sang at Prague in the opera of the "Huguenots," and in "Norma." Her genius elicited the admiration of the great composer, Meyerbeer, who, in 1861, procured for her an engagement in Berlin. In 1863 she appeared at Covent Garden for the first time; and she soon made herself a name in all the European capitals. In Berlin she received the appointment of Court singer; but resigned it in 1872, and went for a two years' tour through the United States. Since her return she has resided chiefly in her native city, Vienna. She married, in 1865, the Baron von Rohden, from whom she was divorced; and married Herr von Wallhofen.

WALLIS, Henry, member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colour, was born in London, Feb. 21, 1830, and studied in the art school of Gleyre, Paris, and also at Rome and Venice. His first picture (in oil colour) was exhibited at the British Institution, 1851. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1854, and succeeding years, pictures in oil representing incidents in the lives of celebrated personages, subjects from the poets, landscapes, and scenes of Venetian life of the period of the fifteenth century. His most celebrated work was "The Death of Chatterton." He joined the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colour in 1879, the pictures exhibited at the gallery of the society being mainly scenes from "The Merchant of Venice," and Italian and Oriental subjects. He has contributed papers to artistic and other journals on the history of painting and on ceramic art, also reviews of books on art.

WALLON, Henri Alexandre, was born at Valenciennes, Dec. 23, 1812; was member of the Faculty of Letters, Paris, in 1840, and successor to M. Guizot at the Sorbonne, in 1850, where he lectured on history and geography. In 1860 he gained the Gobert Prize of the French Academy for his work on Joan of Arc. He was a member of the National Assembly in 1849, but resigned in 1850. After the fall of the Empire he was again returned, as a moderate Conservative, by the department of the Nord, but he joined the Lavergne group on the question of the Constitutional Laws. To his moderation and vigour was due the definite establishment of the Republic,—indeed, he is still commonly called Father of the Republic —and accordingly M. Buffet, on forming his administration in March, 1875, nominated him Minister of Public Instruction. It was he who proposed the clauses which first gave constitutional shape to the Republic. M. Wallon is a member of the Institute, and Secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres. He was a candidate for the seat in the French Academy that had been vacated by M. Claude Bernard, but M. Renan defeated him by 19 to 15 (June 13, 1878). M. Wallon is a sound historian. His chief works are "Richard II.," "Histoire de l'Esclavage dans l'Antiquité" (3 vols.); "Jeanne d'Arc;" "St. Louis et son Temps" (2 vols.); "De l'Autorité de l'Évangile" (1 vol.); "Le Tribunal Révolutionnaire de Paris" (6 vols.), 1886; "Le Révolution du 31 Mai et la Fédéralisme en 1793" (2 vols.); "Les Représentants du Peuple en Mission et la Justice Révolutionnaire dans les Départements en l'an II" (5 vols., 1889-90).

WALPOLE, Spencer, LL.D., Lieutenant-Governor of the Isle of Man, eldest son of the Rt. Hon. S. H. Walpole, and his wife, Isabella, daughter of the Rt. Hon. Spencer Perceval, was born Feb. 6, 1839, and educated at Eton. He entered the War Office in 1858, and has been Private Secretary to the Rt. Hon. T. Sotherton Estcourt, and to his father. He was made one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Fisheries in 1867, and was appointed Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man in 1882. He received an honorary LL.D. degree from the University of Edinburgh in 1890. He is the author of the "Life of the Rt. Hon. Spencer Perceval," 1873; "The Electorate and the Legislation," 1881; "Foreign Relations," 1882; "A History of England from the conclusion of the Great War in 1815," vols. 1 and 2 (1878), vol. 3 (1880), vols. 4 and 5 (1886); and the "Life of Lord John Russell" (1889); and he has been a contributor to periodical literature. Mr. Walpole married, in 1867, Marion, the youngest daughter of Sir John Digby Murray, Bart.

WALPOLE, The Right Hon. Spencer Horatio, born in 1806, was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained the first prize for English declamation and another for the best essay on the character and conduct of William III. Having been called to the Bar in 1831, by the Society of Lincoln's Inn, of which he is a Benchet, he obtained a large practice in the Courts of Chancery, and became a Q.C. in 1846.

He was returned in the Conservative interest for Midhurst in Jan., 1846, and represented that borough till Feb., 1856, when he was elected one of the members for the University of Cambridge. He distinguished himself in the debate which took place in 1849 on the Navigation Laws, and in the discussions on the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill in 1851. On the accession of Lord Derby to office in 1852, Mr. Walpole sacrificed his practice at the Chancery Bar to accept the post of Secretary of State for the Home Department, and in that capacity carried through Parliament the measure for embodying the militia. After leaving office Mr. Walpole became Chairman of the Great Western Railway. He held the seals of the Home Office in Lord Derby's second administration in 1858, but resigned in March, 1859, owing to a difference in opinion with his colleagues with regard to the Reform Bill. He was appointed Secretary of State for the Home Department in Lord Derby's third administration in 1866, and resigned May 9, 1867, retaining a seat in the Cabinet without office. He retired with his colleagues in 1868. Mr. Walpole resigned his seat for the University of Cambridge in Nov., 1882.

WALSH, The Right Rev. William Pakenham, D.D., Bishop of Ossory, Ferns and Leighlin, was born at Mote Park, County of Roscommon, Ireland, May 4, 1820, and is the son of Thomas Walsh, and Mary Pakenham Walsh. He was educated at Trinity College, Durham; B.A., 1841; M.A., 1853; B.D. and D.D., stip. con., 1873; Ordained Deacon, 1843; Priest, 1844; Curate of Ovoca, 1843; of Rathdrum, 1845; Chaplain of Sandford, 1856; Donellan Lectures, T.C.D., 1861; Canon of Christ Church, Dublin, 1872; Dean of Cashel, 1873; and elected Bishop of Ossory, 1878. The following is a list of his published works:—"Donellan Lectures," 1861, T.C.D.; "The Moabite Stone," 1874; "The Forty Days of the Bible," 1874; "The Angel of the Lord," and "Daily Readings for Holy Seasons," 1876; "Ancient Monuments and Holy Writ," 1878; "Heroes of the Mission Field," 1879; "The Decalogue of Charity," 1882; "Echoes of Bible History," 1886; "The Voices of the Psalms," 1890. Dr. Walsh was Vice-Chancellor's prizeman; Biblical Greek Prize; Divinity prizeman; Theological Society's Gold Medalist of Dublin University. He married, in 1861, Clara, daughter of Samuel Ridley, Esq., Muswell Hill, London; secondly, in 1879, Annie Frances, daughter of Rev. J. W. Hackett, A.M., Incumbent of St. James's, Bray, co. Dublin.

WALSH, The Most Rev. Dr. William J., Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, and Primate of Ireland, was born in Dublin in 1841, and was educated at St. Laurence O'Toole's Seminary in that city, and afterwards at the Catholic University of Ireland, under the rectorship of Dr. Newman, and at Maynooth. He completed his academic course in 1864, but being too young to be ordained, he passed into the Dunboyne Establishment, where he spent three years in special ecclesiastical studies. During that period he became Assistant-Librarian at Maynooth College, and in 1867 he was appointed Professor of Theology. In 1878 he became Vice-President of the College, and on the death of Dr. Russell, in 1880, Dr. Walsh was unanimously chosen President by the Irish bishops. Acting for the bishops as trustees of the College, he gave evidence before the "Bessborough" Commission of 1869-70, explaining the refusal of the bishops, as tenants of the Duke of Leinster, to sign the "Leinster Lease," a form of agreement under which it was sought to induce tenants to "contract themselves out" of the protection of the Land Act of 1881. By this evidence on the transaction, which had resulted in the eviction of the bishops by the Duke of Leinster, Dr. Walsh exercised no little influence in the framing of the Land Act of 1881. In 1883, through his exertions, a Commission was appointed to inquire into the working of the Queen's Colleges of Ireland. For some time he was a Senator of the Royal University of Ireland, a position which he resigned in protest against the examination arrangements of that body. He became a Member of the Chapter of Dublin on the accession of Cardinal McCabe to the archiepiscopal throne. On the death of that prelate in Feb., 1885, Dr. Walsh was elected Vicar Capitular; and in the June of the same year he was appointed to the See of Dublin. Since his appointment as Archbishop he has taken an active interest in the leading questions of the day in Ireland. He has warmly advocated an amicable settlement of the Land Question through the establishment of some system of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between landlords and tenants. He was a witness before the Parnell Special Commission of 1888-89, in connection with which he also had a prominent part in the exposure of the forger, Richard Pigott. But the principal subject of Dr. Walsh's public action, outside the strictly religious sphere, has been the Irish education question: he has made many suggestions for its settlement, the keynote of his numerous letters and addresses on the subject being a demand for equality between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Ireland in the matter of educational endowments and privileges. During the last few years he has taken an active part in the settlement of trade disputes and strikes in Dublin: he opportunely intervened in the great strike on the Great Southern and Western Railway in 1890, and secured its amicable settlement, a public service for which he has received the honorary freedom of the city of Cork. His interest in the cause of temperance is warm and practical; in addition to a widespread temperance organisation in the diocese of Dublin, there has been created under his guidance a similar organisation throughout all the dioceses of his archiepiscopal province. Dr. Walsh has contributed many articles to the periodical press, especially to the Contemporary Review, the Dublin Review, and the Irish Ecclesiastical Record. He is also the author of several works on subjects of general public interest in Ireland, as well as on important branches of theological and scriptural science. Of his published works the principal are an ethical treatise on "Human Acts;" a "Harmony of the Gospel Narrative of the Passion;" "The Liturgical Music of the Office and Mass of the Dead;" a "Grammar of Gregorian Music;" a "Plain Exposition of the Land Act of 1881;" a volume of "Addresses" on various subjects of general interest; "Addresses on the Irish University Question;" and his most recently published work, a "Statement of the Chief Grievances of the Catholics of Ireland in the Matter of Education, Primary, Intermediate, and University."

WALSHAM, Sir John, Bart., British Minister at Pekin, born at Cheltenham in 1830, is the eldest son of Sir John James Walsham. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A., and was for some time employed in the Audit Office, but was appointed to a clerkship in the Foreign Office in 1854. He was made Acting Consul in Mexico in 1859, Secretary of Legation in 1861, and Chargé d'Affaires in 1863. In 1866 he was transferred as Second Secretary to Madrid; was appointed to the Hague in 1870, and promoted to be Secretary of Legation in Pekin, Oct., 1873, but did not proceed. From 1875 to 1878 he was Acting Chargé d'Affaires in Madrid, and then went to Berlin as Secretary of Embassy. In 1883 he was transferred to Paris, and acted as Minister Plenipotentiary during the absence of the ambassador. Since Oct., 1885, he has been Envoy to China, and also to the King of Corea.

WALSHE, Professor Walter Hayle, M.D., LL.D., born in Dublin in 1816, eldest son of William Walshe, Barrister-at-Law, was educated in Paris and in Edinburgh, where he graduated M.D. He is Emeritus Professor of Medicine in University College, London, having for thirteen years filled that chair, which he resigned in 1862; and Consulting Physician to three London Hospitals. He has written "Practical Treatise on the Lungs," 4th edit., 1871; "Nature and Treatment of Cancer," 1846; "Diseases of the Heart and Great Vessels," 4th edit., 1873; "Dramatic Singing, Physiologically Estimated," 1881; "Physiology versus Metaphysics in Relation to Mind," 1884; "The Colloquial Faculty for Languages, and the Nature of Genius," 2nd edit., 1886; &c. He is a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, London, and an Associate of foreign medical and scientific societies at Copenhagen, Paris, London, Athens, and elsewhere.

WALTER, John, eldest son of the late Mr. John Walter, of Bearwood, Berks, some time member for that county, born in London in 1818, was educated at Eton, graduated in honours at Exeter College, Oxford, took his M.A. degree in 1843, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1847. He was an unsuccessful candidate in the Liberal-Conservative interest for Nottingham in 1843; was returned in Aug., 1847, the day after his father's death, and continued to represent that borough till April, 1859, when he was elected for Berks. He was defeated at the general election in July, 1865, but was again elected in 1868, 1874, and 1880. After the dissolution of 1885, Mr. Walter did not offer himself for re-election. The name which Mr. Walter bears is intimately associated with the history of what Burke called "The Fourth Estate," his grandfather having published the first number of the Times, Jan. 1, 1788. His father raised that journal to eminence, and by his energy in inducing men of talent to contribute to its columns, rendered it a great organ of free opinions and popular knowledge; and, in spite of many obstacles, first brought the steam-engine to the aid and service of the newspaper press. Mr. Walter himself built the new office of the Times in Printing House Square, and also the magnificent house at Bearwood.

WANAMAKER, The Hon. John, American statesman, was born at Philadelphia, July 11, 1838. He attended the public schools for a few years, but at the age of thirteen, on the death of his father, was obliged to enter business. By 1861 he had saved money enough to make a start on his own account, and he then opened a clothing store in partnership with his brother-in-law, under the firm-name of Wanamaker & Brown. The business proved profitable, and in course of time other departments were added, until it has become the largest general retail store in the United States. Since the death of Mr. Brown, in 1868, the vast establishment has been conducted by Mr. Wanamaker under his own name alone. Mr. Wanamaker is actively interested in the Sunday-schools of the city of his birth and residence, and has the reputation of contributing liberally to charities. He is an earnest Republican in politics, and since the beginning of the present administration (March, 1889) has held the Cabinet office of Postmaster-General.

WANKLYN, James Alfred, M.R.C.S., London, 1856, an eminent chemist, was born at Ashton-under-Lyne, in the year 1834. He studied chemistry under Bunsen at Heidelberg, and became Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh in 1859, was Professor of Chemistry at the London Institution from 1863 to 1870, and Lecturer on Chemistry and Physics at St. George's Hospital from 1877 to 1880. He has held office as Public Analyst for the county of Buckingham, and for the boroughs of Buckingham, Peterborough, Shrewsbury, and High Wycombe. In 1858 he prepared propionic acid by the action of carbonic acid on sodium-ethyl, being the first example of the artificial production of an organic substance directly from carbonic acid. In 1861, in conjunction with Dr. Lyon Playfair, he communicated to the Royal Society of Edinburgh a paper "On a mode of taking the density of vapours of volatile liquids at temperatures below the boiling point." Subsequently he pursued, conjointly with Dr. Emil Erlenmeyer, a series of researches which, besides settling the formula of mannite and the relation of the sugar group to the alcoholic series, afforded one of the earliest complete studies of isomerism among the alcohols. In 1867, he prepared propione, by the action of carbonic oxide on sodium-ethyl, and, together with the late Mr. E. T. Chapman and Mr. Miles H. Smith, invented the well-known Ammonia process of Water Analysis. Some years later, conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he brought out the moist combustion process. In 1871, he conducted for the Government an investigation into the quality of the milk supplied to the London workhouses. Conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he made periodical analyses of the London Water Supply, which were regularly published by the late Government's Water Examiner in his official returns. Mr. Wanklyn is the author of five text-books for Chemists and Medical Officers of Health, viz.: a "Treatise on Water Analysis," a "Treatise on Milk Analysis," 1873; a "Treatise on Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa," 1874; "Bread Analysis," 1881; and "Air Analysis," 1890, the two last-named books being the joint production of Mr. W. J. Cooper and himself. He is also the author of "The Gas Engineer's Chemical Manual," 1886. In 1869, he was elected a corresponding member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Sciences. He was also elected an honorary member of the University of Edinburgh Chemical Society; but he belongs to none of the English scientific societies.

WARD, Adolphus William, LL.D., Litt.D., born at Hampstead, Dec. 2, 1837, was educated in Germany (where his father held consular and diplomatic appointments), and at Bury St. Edmunds Grammar School. In 1854, he entered at Peterhouse, Cambridge, of which college he became a Fellow in 1860, having graduated in the Classical Tripos of the previous year. In 1866 he was appointed Professor of History and English Literature at Owens College, Manchester. He held various examinerships in the Universities of Cambridge and London, and was, in 1879, created an hon. LL.D. of Glasgow, and in 1883 a Litt.D. of Cambridge. He took an active part in the movement for the foundation of the Victoria University, Manchester, 1880; and afterwards successively held, in the new University, the offices of Chairman of the General Board of Studies, and of Vice-Chancellor. In Dec., 1888, he was appointed Principal of Owens College. Dr. Ward is the English translator of Curtius' "History of Greece," 5 vols., 1868-73; and author of the following works: "A History of English Dramatic Literature to the Death of Queen Anne," 2 vols., 1875; "The House of Austria in the Thirty Years' War," 1869; "Chaucer," 1880; and "Dickens," 1882, in Morley's "English Men of Letters" series. He edited the Globe edition of "Pope's Poetical Works," 1869; and the Clarendon Press edition of Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus" and Greene's "Friar Bacon," 1878; second edition, 1887; and has contributed to the Dictionary of National Biography, the Encyclopædia Britannica, the Quarterly, Edinburgh, and English Historical Reviews, Herbst's Encyclopædie der neueren Geschichte, the Saturday Review, the Manchester Guardian, and other journals. In 1879 he married his cousin, Adelaide Laura Lancaster.

WARD, Mrs. Herbert D., née Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, American writer, was born at Andover, Massachusetts, Aug. 13, 1844. Most of her life has been devoted to benevolent work in her native town, to the advancement of women and to temperance and kindred topics. In 1876 she delivered a course of lectures before the Students of Boston University. She began to write for the press at the age of thirteen, and her contributions to periodicals during the past twenty-five years have been very numerous. In addition to these she has published "Ellen's Idol," 1864; "Up Hill," 1865; "The Tiny Series," 4 vols., 1866-69; "The Gypsy Series," 4 vols., 1866-69; "Mercy Gliddon's Work," 1866; "I Don't Know How," 1867; "The Gates Ajar," 1868; "Men, Women and Ghosts," 1869; "Hedged In," 1870; "The Silent Partner," 1870; "The Trotty Book," 1870; "Trotty's Wedding Tour," 1873; "What to Wear," 1873; "The Good Aim Series," 1874; "Poetic Studies," poems, 1875; "The Story of Avis," 1877; "My Cousin and I," 1879; "Old Maid's Paradise," 1879; "Sealed Orders," 1879; "Friends, a Duet," 1881; "Beyond the Gates," 1883; "Dr. Zay," 1884; "Burglars in Paradise," 1886; "Little Poems for Little People," 1886; "The Madonna of the Tubs," 1886; "The Gates Between," 1887; "Jack the Fisherman," 1887; "A Lost Winter," poem, 1889; and "The Struggle for Immortality," 1889. In 1889 she was married to Herbert D. Ward, and, in conjunction with him, she published in 1890 "The Master of the Magicians."

WARD, Professor H. Marshall, M.A., F.R.S., F.L.S., Professor of Botany in the Forestry School, Royal Indian Engineering College, Coopers Hill, is the eldest son of Francis Marshall Ward, Esq., and was born in 1854, and educated at the Owens College, Manchester, and at Christ's College, Cambridge. He commenced his scientific career as a field-botanist, after the model of the older school of naturalists, his studies being incited by his early life having been spent in the country; about 1870 he came under the influence of Darwin's writings and teachings, and in 1874 he entered more formally on a scientific career by attending Professor Huxley's Biology course at South Kensington. His success there, and in the subsequent course in Laboratory Botany then being organised by Mr. Thiselton Dyer, led to his proceeding to the Owens College, and afterwards to Cambridge. Since that period he has been distinguished especially as a Cryptogamic and Physiological Botanist, and Pathologist, a career for which his early training in experimental science, and in habits of observation in the country, have helped to fit him. In 1875 he was sent to the Owens College, Manchester, and obtained distinctions under Professors Roscoe, Gamgee, and Williamson. In 1876 he gained an entrance Scholarship in Natural Science at Christ's College, Cambridge, by open competition, and remained a scholar of that College until 1879, when he took his degree, having obtained First-Class Honours in the Natural Sciences Tripos for that year. Meanwhile he had assisted in the teaching of Botany at South Kensington, and at the Owens College, and had delivered a course of lectures on Botany at Newnham College, Cambridge. Besides coming under the influence of the late F. M. Balfour and others at Cambridge, he had also studied in Germany during vacation, and especially in the laboratories of Professor Sachs of Würzburg; he had also published the results of original investigations into the Embryology of Angiospermous flowering plants, the researches having been carried out in the laboratory at Würzburg and in the Jodrel laboratory at Kew. Immediately after taking his degree in 1879, Mr. Ward was appointed by the Colonial Government to proceed to Ceylon on a scientific mission, to investigate and report upon the causes of the Coffee Leaf disease, which was then devastating that island; this investigation occupied two years, and he returned to England in 1882, having meanwhile published several important Reports and Memoirs on his discoveries connected with the parasitic Fungus which caused that disease, and the measures necessary to combat its ravages, as well as on other botanical subjects. During his travels in the tropics he also made observations and collected material and notes for subsequent publications; some of the principal were on the structure and morphology of Asterina, and of Meliola, and other tropical Fungi, and especially of the curious epiphyte Strigula, an Epiphyllous Lichen. On his return in 1882 he was forthwith made a Berkeley Fellow of the Owens College, Victoria University, and in 1883 he was appointed Assistant Lecturer in Botany in that University; and in the same year he was also elected to a Fellowship at Christ's College, Cambridge; and in 1885 he was appointed to the official position he now holds as Professor of Botany in the then newly founded Forestry School at Coopers Hill. Professor Marshall Ward is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and has served on the Council of the Linnean Society, and on the Scientific Committee of the Horticultural Society, of both which Societies he is also a Fellow. He is the Recorder of Section D of the British Association; and is an Examiner in Botany in the University of London, and in the University of Edinburgh. He has also examined in Botany for the Natural Sciences Tripos and other examinations in the University of Cambridge, and for the Civil Service Commissioners, and the Science and Art Department. Professor Marshall Ward is the author of numerous scientific memoirs read before the Royal Society and the Linnean Society, and published in the "Philosophical Transactions," and the "Proceedings," of the Royal Society, or in the "Transactions," and the "Journal," of the Linnean Society, and in the "Annals of Botany," the "Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science," Nature, and elsewhere. These memoirs comprise investigations into the embryology, and physiology and pathology of plants, the biology of Fungi and other Cryptogams, the nature of parasitism, fermentation, and other subjects connected with the diseases of plants; the earlier of these researches were made in the laboratories at Kew and Würzburg, and in those of the late Professor De Bary at Strasburg, and of the Owens College, while the later ones have been made in his laboratory at Coopers Hill. Of these, the following are the more important:—"The Structure and Life-history of Eutyloma Ranunculii;" "Histology and Physiology of Fruits and Seeds of Rhannus" (with Mr. Dunlop); "Tubercular swellings on the roots of Vicia Faba;" "The tubercles on the Roots of Leguminos &c.;" "A Lily disease;" and papers on the potato-disease and on the Rust of Wheat. In addition to these more special memoirs, he is the author of the following books:—"Timber and some of its Diseases" (Nature Series), and

"The Diseases of Plants" (Romance of Science Series). He also translated Sach's "Lectures on the Physiology of Plants," for the Oxford Clarendon Press, and wrote the article "Schizomycetes," in the Encyclopædia Britannica, and has been a frequent contributor to the pages of Nature, the Gardeners' Chronicle, the Journal of Botany, and other periodicals. Professor Marshall Ward married, in 1883, the daughter of the late Francis Kingdom, Esq., of Exeter.

WARD, John Quincy Adams, American sculptor, was born at Urbana, Ohio, June 29, 1830. In 1850 he entered the studio of the late H. K. Brown, an eminent sculptor, where he remained six years. In 1861 he opened a studio in New York, where he modelled his "Indian Hunter," "The Good Samaritan," Commodore M. C. Perry, with reliefs, "The Freedman," and many busts and small works. In 1869 he built a studio in Forty-ninth Street, New York, where he made the "Citizen Soldier," and statues of Shakespeare, Gen. Reynolds, Gen. Washington, Gen. Israel Putnam, an equestrian statue of Gen. Thomas, Gen. Daniel Morgan and Lafayette. He built a larger studio in 1882, where he has made the colossal statue of Washington for the New York Subtreasury building, a colossal statue of President Garfield, with three typical figures on the pedestal; "The Pilgrim;" a statue of Henry Ward Beecher, with accessory statues, a seated statue of Horace Greeley, &c. He visited Europe in 1872, and again in 1887. For three years he was Vice-President, and for one term President, of the National Academy of Design.

WARD, Mary Augusta, or as the author of "Robert Elsmere" prefers to give her name on the title-page of her books, Mrs. Humphry Ward, is a granddaughter of Dr. Thomas Arnold, of Rugby, the historian of Rome. Matthew Arnold was his eldest son. The second son, another Thomas Arnold, the father of Mrs. Ward, at one time held an educational position in Tasmania. There he married the granddaughter of Governor Sorell, and there, at Hobart, several of his children were born, among them (in 1851) his eldest daughter, Mary Augusta. Mrs. Ward, who at that time devoted much attention to early Spanish literature and history, contributed a large number of articles on Spanish subjects to the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," edited by Dr. William Smith and Dr. Wace. She also, up to 1885, wrote many critical articles for Macmillan's Magazine.

Her first volume was a child's story—"Milly and Olly," 1881, illustrated by Mrs. Alma Tadema. Her first novel was "Miss Bretherton," 1884, which was favourably received but made no particular noise in the literary world. The story is a mere sketch by the side of the later novel. Mrs. Ward's next volume was the translation (1885), itself a work of fine art, of that very remarkable book, Amiel's "Journal In Time." In Feb., 1888, she published her novel of "Robert Elsmere," which was widely read and much discussed. In five months it passed, in the three volume form, through seven editions; and since that time over 60,000 copies of the one volume edition have been sold in this country, and about half-a-million in America, the sale in this latter case consisting largely of course of pirated editions. It has been translated into German, Dutch, and Danish. In the spring of 1890 Mrs. Ward took part in founding a scheme known as University Hall. University Hall has been much misunderstood. It is in reality a settlement among the poor, combined with a lecturing and teaching system devoted to the interests of modern theism and to a free and historical treatment of the Bible. The new settlement was opened to residents in October, 1890, and in November a meeting, inaugurating the work of the hall, was held at the Portman Rooms, at which Dr. Martineau, Mr. Stopford Brooke, Mrs. Ward, and others were the speakers. The address delivered by Mrs. Ward was afterwards reprinted in pamphlet form. The settlement has now eleven or twelve Residents, and the lectures on biblical criticism are well attended. Mrs. Ward remains the Honorary Secretary of it. She was married in 1872 to Mr. Thomas Humphry Ward, M.A., formerly a tutor and Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford (see following memoir).

WARD, Thomas Humphry, M.A., is a son of the late Rev. Henry Ward, formerly Vicar of St. Barnabas, King Square, E.C., and was born at Hull in 1845. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated (1st class Final Classical School) in Mich. Term, 1868. Before this he had been a candidate for the Civil Service of India, and in 1866 was placed first in the Open Competition. He resigned, however, without proceeding to India, and in Feb. 1869, was elected Fellow of Brasenose, of which College he was Tutor from 1870 to 1880. He then engaged in literary work in London. In 1880-1, with the aid of the principal critical writers of the day, he brought out "The English Poets: Selections with Critical Introductions" (4 vols.); in 1884 he published "Humphry Sandwith, a Memoir;" in 1885 he edited "Men of the Reign;" and, in 1887, the 12th edition of "Men of the Time." In 1886, with the help of various writers on Art, he brought out, "English Art in the Public Galleries of London," a work sumptuously illustrated with 120 photogravures; and in 1887 he published "The Reign of Queen Victoria: a Survey of Fifty Years of Progress." In this work he had the assistance of Mr. Matthew Arnold, Prof. Huxley, Lord Wolseley, Sir Henry Sumner Maine, and other experts. It should be added that as an undergraduate, he was (with the late Edward Nolan and R. S. Copleston, now Bishop of Colombo) joint author of "The Oxford Spectator." Mr. Humphrey Ward is art critic on the staff of the Times. In 1872 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Arnold, Mary Augusta, the authoress of "Robert Elsmere" [q.v.].

D.C.L., American writer and journalist, was born at Plainfield, Massachusetts, Sept. 12, 1829. He graduated at Hamilton College in 1851; studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1856. He practised law until 1860, when he began journalism and became editor of the Hartford (Conn.) Press which in 1867 was absorbed by the Courant, of which he has ever since been an owner. L. Clemens (Mark Twain), "The Gilded Age," 1873.

WARRE, The Rev. Edmond, D.D., Head Master of Eton College, was born in 1837, and was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He obtained a First Class in Classical Moderations in 1856, and in the final Classical Schools in 1859. He was elected Fellow of All Souls in the same year, and retained his Fellowship three years. In 1860 he went to Eton as Assistant Master, a post which he held under Drs. Goodford, Balston, and Hornby, until the resignation of the last named in 1884. At that date, Mr. Warre was designated by general opinion as the most likely successor to the vacant post for which his services and his great popularity at Eton seemed specially to qualify him. He was accordingly elected Head Master by the governing body, and shortly afterwards he took his degree of D.D. at Oxford. He became one of Her Majesty's Honorary Chaplains in 1885.

WARREN, Sir Charles, late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, is the son of the late Major-General Sir Charles Warren, and was educated at Cheltenham College, Sandhurst, and at Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1857; became Captain in 1869;

Major and Lieut.-Colonel in 1878, and Colonel in 1882. From 1867 to 1870 he conducted a series of excavations in Palestine, chiefly round the walls of the enclosure of the Temple of Jerusalem; and wrote "Underground Jerusalem," 1876; "The Temple or the Tomb," 1880; and, in conjunction with Captain Conder, "Jerusalem," 1884. In 1876 he was Special Commissioner to settle the boundary of the Orange Free State; and, in the following year, to settle the Land Question of West Griqualand. He commanded the Diamond Field Horse during the Gaika War of 1878, and the Field Force in Bechuanaland during the same year. During the Zulu War he organised a volunteer force for the assistance of the Transvaal and Natal; he, acting in the capacity of Commander-in-Chief and Administrator of Griqualand West. Major Warren returned to England in 1880, and was appointed Instructor of Surveying at Chatham; and in 1882 he went to Egypt, and was engaged in special duty in restoring in the desert the authority of the Khedive, and bringing to Justice the murderers of Professor Palmer's party. From 1884-5, Colonel Warren was commander of the Field Force in Bechuanaland; and in 1886 he was commander of the forces at Suakim; and subsequently in the same year Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, an office which he resigned in 1888.

WATERHOUSE, Alfred, R.A., was born July 19, 1830, at Liverpool. He studied architecture in Manchester, where he began to practice his profession, after travelling, chiefly in Italy. His first considerable work was the Manchester Assize Courts, the result of a hardly-contested competition. In that city he has also been the architect of the County Gaol, the Owens College, the National Provincial Bank of England, and the Town Hall, the result of another competition. In Liverpool, his works comprise the London and North Western Hotel; the Seamen's Orphanage; the Turner Memorial Home; the New Royal Infirmary, and University College; in London, the Natural History Museum; the Prudential Assurance Company's Office in Holborn; the New University Club; the New St. Paul's School; the Central Institution of the City and Guilds of London Institute; the National Liberal Club; the New Weigh House Chapel. Balliol College at Oxford, Caius and Pembroke at Cambridge, have been partly rebuilt from his designs. At Leeds the Yorkshire College of Science has been erected from his designs. The Hotel Métropole, Brighton, is also an example of his work. Among mansions may be mentioned Heythrop, Oxon, Eaton Hall, Cheshire, and Iverne Minster, Dorset, as his most conspicuous works. Mr. Waterhouse was honoured by receiving a grand prize for architecture at the Paris Exhibition of 1867, and a "Rappel" at that of 1878. He is a Member of the Royal and Imperial Academy of Vienna; an Associate of the Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique; also an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts at Brussels, Antwerp, Milan and Berlin. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts, England, Jan. 16, 1878, and became a full member on June 4, 1885. He received the Royal Gold Medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1878; and has filled the President's chair of the same body during 1888, 1889, and 1890. He is a member of the Organising Committee of the Imperial Institute, and is also one of those composing the Westminster Abbey Commission.

WATERLOW, Sir Sydney Hedley, Bart., was educated at the Grammar School, Southwark, and at the age of fourteen was apprenticed to the late Mr. Thomas Harrison, Government printer; at eighteen he was placed in charge of the Cabinet Printing Press at the Foreign Office, Downing Street, and at twenty he went abroad, and was engaged in the well-known establishment of Messrs. Galignani. In 1844 he joined his father and brothers in business at London Wall, and for the next twenty years devoted himself to the extensive business of the firm now known as Waterlow & Sons, Ltd. In 1855 he was elected for the Ward of Broad Street in the Common Council, and while a member of the Police Committee devised the scheme of over-house telegraph wires for the use of the police. In 1863 he was elected Alderman for the Ward of Langbourn, and in the same year took an active part in promoting the scheme for Artisans' Dwellings. In 1866-67 he served the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex, and received the honour of knighthood. In the following year he agreed to contest the county of Dumfries in the Liberal interest, and greatly astonished the Conservative party by being returned at the head of the poll for a county which had been held by them uncontested for eighty years. In 1870 Sir Sydney was appointed on the Royal Commission for inquiry into Friendly and Benefit Building Societies, and took an active part in establishing such societies throughout the kingdom on a satisfactory footing. In 1872 he was elected Lord Mayor of London, and appointed to the Royal Judicature Commission; in the same year he instituted the now annual Hospital Sunday Fund, of which he is the Vice-President, and the Queen, in recognition of his many services to commerce and philanthropy, created him a baronet. In the following year he was elected treasurer of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and since then has discharged the duties of his office in a manner that has conferred lasting benefit on the Institution. In 1874, at the general election, he successfully contested Maidstone, but lost the seat in 1880, and was elected for Gravesend, which he continued to represent until the general election of 1885. In 1881-2 he worked on the Committee on Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings, a subject in which he has always taken a keen interest. After resigning his alderman's gown in 1883, Sir Sydney made a tour round the world. His services to the working classes of England are well known, and have gained the appreciation which they deserve. Sir Sydney is also treasurer of the "City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education." A member of the Royal Commission for the Exhibition of 1851. In 1889 he gave to the "London County Council" his estate at Highgate, comprising buildings and about 20 acres of land for the use of the public as a Park for ever; it is now known as Waterlow Park.

WATHERSTON, Edward James, Goldsmith, born in 1839, is principally known for his persistent advocacy of the remission of the plate duties, abolished in 1890; and for his unwearied exertions, together with the late Mr. Edmund James Smith, to effect the purchase of the interests of the Metropolitan Water Companies (1878-80). He is a Pioneer in the causes of Technical Education and Free Libraries; was lately Captain (F.O.C.) in the Queen's Westminster Rifle Volunteers. He is a member of the National Liberal Club; Member of the Society of Arts, 1877; Liveryman of the Goldsmiths' Company, 1864; Secretary of the Economic Section of the Social Science Association, 1877. Mr. Watherston is the author of "Taxation of Silver Plate," "Our Railways: should they be private or National Property?" "Our Railways; Rates and Fares," "Our Iron Highways," "The Progress of British Commerce," "Elementary Education at Home and Abroad," "Technical Education," "The Industrial Employment of Women in France, compared with England," "The Industrial Employment of Women, Abroad and at Home," "French Silk Manufactures, and the Industrial Employment of Women," "Societies of Commercial Geography," "The Essence of Art; is it genius or ingenuity?" "Manual or some form of Technical Instruction, a necessary element of a Compulsory system of Education," "Gems and Precious Stones," &c.

WATKIN, Sir Edward William, Bart., M.P., is the eldest son of the late Mr. Absalom Watkin, who was born in London, but settled in Manchester, in 1800, and carried on business as a merchant in that town, from 1809 till his death in 1861. His son, Mr. Edward William Watkin, was first employed in his father's counting-house (ultimately becoming a partner), until the year 1845, when he was appointed to the Secretaryship of the Trent Valley Railway. This led to his joining the London and North-Western Co., and to his various positions as General Manager, and afterwards as a Director and Chairman of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, and President of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada; Chairman of the South Eastern Railway, and Director of the Great Western and Great Eastern Companies. In 1839-40 he became one of the directors of the Manchester Athenæum, and was one of the secretaries of the committee which was organised to extricate the institution from its pecuniary embarrassments. He suggested and carried out the great literary sources of that institution, which were held in the Free Trade Hall, and presided over by Mr. Charles Dickens, Mr. B. Disraeli, and Serjeant Talfourd, in the years 1843, 1844, and 1845 respectively. In 1843 he wrote a pamphlet entitled "A Plea for Public Parks," and became one of the honorary secretaries of the committee which followed, through whose efforts the three existing parks (viz., the "Queen's," "Peel," and "Philip's") were obtained for Manchester and Salford. In 1843, he and a few other members of the Manchester Athenæum started the "Saturday half holiday" in Manchester, which resulted in the general closing of the warehouses for business at two p.m. every Saturday. In 1845, Mr. Watkin was one of the originators of the Manchester Examiner newspaper. In 1861 he undertook a private mission to Canada, at the desire of the Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the object of bringing the five British Provinces into union, and the establishment of a connection between Canada and the Atlantic, by an independent railway system, which he successfully accomplished. Mr. Watkin was first elected to Parliament in 1857, but was afterwards unseated. He was returned to Parliament, unopposed, for Stockport, in 1864, and again returned at the head of the poll in 1865. He was defeated, however, by a narrow majority in 1868, and contested East Cheshire unsuccessfully in 1869. Whilst in Parliament, in 1866-67, he obtained, as the Chairman of two Select Committees, important alterations in the laws affecting railways, and especially the change in the law of limited liability, which enabled companies to reduce their capital by mere resolution, and without winding up. In 1868 he received the honour of knighthood. Sir E. Watkin was again returned to Parliament at the general election of Feb., 1874, for the united boroughs of Hythe and Folkestone, and was returned unopposed, for the same borough, at the general election of 1880. In that year he was created a baronet. He was High Sheriff of Cheshire, 1874. He has done much to improve the harbours of Boulogne and Calais, so as to establish fixed services by large steamers to increase the comfort of the transit, and to have already reduced the time between London and Paris to seven hours: this movement is progressing. The proposed tunnel under the Channel to connect England and France is an enterprise with which he has been connected in conjunction with the late Michel Chevallier, M. Léon Say, and other eminent French and English public men. Assuming the experiment to succeed, Mr. Watkin has recommended Mr. Gladstone to approach the European and American powers with a view to the complete neutralisation of the work, believing that this would do away with the military alarms on the question raised of late years. At present the works near Shakspeare Cliff, Dover, are kept in repair and ventilation, but Government has not yet shown any desire to give the sanction necessary for their completion. It is understood that Sir Edward has investigated the question of connecting the south coast of Scotland and the north coast of Ireland by a submarine tunnel. He has advocated the extension of harbour and other public works as a means of extending employment and augmenting the trading capacity of the country in competition with foreign nations. In 1885, and again in 1886, Sir E. Watkin was returned for the Hythe division of Kent.

WATKINS, The Venerable Henry William, M.A. of Oxford, London, and Durham, and Honorary D.D. of Durham, was born in 1844, and educated at King's College, London, of which he is a Fellow and a member of Council, and at Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was sometime a Scholar. After a distinguished University career, he graduated at London and Oxford, and was ordained in 1871 to the curacy of Pluckley, Kent, on the nomination of Dr. Plumtre, late Dean of Wells. In 1873, he was presented to the Vicarage of Much Wenlock, in Shropshire, and quitted the living two years later to become Censor, Chaplain, and Lecturer on the Greek Testament and on Hebrew, at King's College, London. Shortly afterwards he was appointed first Professor of Logic and Moral Philosophy in the same College. In 1878, Dr. Watkins was elected to the Wardenship of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the Bishop of London; and while there, he accepted the work of the poor and unwendowed parish of St. Gregory the Great. Soon after Dr. Lightfoot was consecrated to the Bishopric of Durham in 1879, Dr. Watkins was appointed one of his examining chaplains; and, in 1880, was collated to the Archdeaconry of Northumberland with a Canonry in Durham Cathedral. On the division of the See, in 1882, he was transferred to the newly-constituted Archdeaconry of Auckland; and, a few months later, on the death of Archdeacon Prest, to that of Durham. On his first arrival in Durham, he accepted a Professorship of Hebrew in the University, and found leisure to devote some of his energies to the restoration of the parish of All Saints at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he laboured as Senior Curate, at a nominal salary, among one of the most neglected and degraded of populations. On the election of Bishop Westcott to the See of Durham, the Archdeacon was again appointed Examining Chaplain. Archdeacon Watkins has contributed several papers at Church Congress Meetings at Sheffield, Swansea, Derby, Wolverhampton, and Manchester, on "Science and Religion," on "The Church and Democracy," on "Elasticity of Worship," and other subjects, which have been published separately, and he has also delivered several Charges as Archdeacon of Northumberland and Durham. Besides these, Archdeacon Watkins has contributed to Dr. William Smith's "Dictionaries of the Bible and of Christian Biography;" and wrote a Commentary on the Gospel according to St. John, for Bishop Ellicot's "New Testament for English Readers." He was appointed Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for the year 1890, and delivered the course on "Modern Criticism Considered in its Relation to the Fourth Gospel." The Archdeacon was married in 1883 to the elder daughter of Sir Henry Thompson, a lady who is well known both as an artist and as a philanthropist, and who is the author of "The Public Picture Galleries of Europe," a work which has passed through several editions.

WATKINSON, The Rev. William L., Wesleyan Minister, was born at Hull, Aug. 30, 1838. Entered the Ministry 1858, and has travelled in the Ministry in Nottingham, Manchester, Bolton, Harrogate, London, and in other towns. He is the author of the Fernley Lecture "On the Influence of Scepticism on Character," delivered in 1887 (now in the 8th edit.); "Mistaken Signs;" "The Beginning of the Christian Life;" "The Programme of the Christian Life;" "Noon-day addresses," delivered in Manchester and Leeds; and various other works.

WATSON, John Dawson, R.W.S., was born May 20, 1832, at Sedburgh, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, was educated at the Edward VI. Grammar School at Sedburgh, entered the School of Design at Manchester in 1847, came to London in 1851, and became a pupil of Alexander Davis Cooper, and a student of the Royal Academy. He exhibited his first picture, "The Wounded Cavalier," at the Royal Institution, Manchester, in 1851. He exhibited at the Royal Academy for the first time in 1853, "An Artist's Studio," and has continued to exhibit to the present time, his principal works being—"Thinking it Out;" "The Poisoned Cup," which obtained a medal at the Vienna Exhibition, 1873; "The Student;" "The Parting;" "Saved;" "Black to Move;" and "Women's Work." In 1860 he illustrated for Messrs. Routledge their Christmas edition of "The Pilgrim's Progress," followed by "Robinson Crusoe," in 1873, and contributed wood-drawings to most of the illustrated books, papers, and magazines of the time. In 1865 he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water Colours, and a Member of the same Society in 1870; and, some years afterwards, a Member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours of Belgium. His principal works have been, however, in oil, which have been exhibited in the Royal Academy. "Corporal Trim;"

"Only been with a Few Friends;" "The Gleaner;" "An Awkward Pupil;" "The Yeoman's Wedding," which is the most popular of his pictures. Painters have been particularly pleased by his pictures of moonlight, one more especially which was exhibited in the Society of British Artists. He has painted many decorative pictures; his last and best in this direction are a series of large pictures executed for Colonel Henry Platt, of Llanfairfechan, North Wales.

WATSON, John Forbes (commonly known as Dr. Forbes-Watson), M.A., M.D., LL.D., of the University of Aberdeen, a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, a Fellow of the Linnean and the Chemical Societies, and a Commander of the Order of Francis Joseph of Austria, was born in Scotland in 1827. His father was a successful Aberdeenshire farmer, and he was in training to follow his father's occupation, but the abolition of the corn laws having frightened the farmers throughout the country, it was decided that he should enter the medical profession, with the view of ultimately obtaining an appointment in the Hon. East India Company's Service. On the completion of his medical studies at Guy's, and in Paris, Dr. Forbes-Watson received a commission in the Bombay Army Medical Service; and, after serving with the artillery at Ahmednuggur, and with the Sind Horse at Khangur (now Jacobabad), was appointed Assistant-Surgeon to the Jamssetjee Hospital, and Lecturer on Physiology in the Grant Medical College; and, for a time, acted also as Professor of Medicine and Lecturer on Clinical Medicine in it. He returned to England, on sick leave, in 1853; and on his recovery, having in the interim spent some time as a student at the School of Mines, Jermyn Street, and in investigating the sanitary application of charcoal, a pamphlet on which was published by him in 1855, he was appointed by the Court of Directors to conduct an investigation into the nutritive value of the food-grains of India; the result of which formed the basis of public dietaries in India. In 1858 Dr. Forbes-Watson was, by the Secretary of State, appointed Reporter on the Products of India, and Director of the India Museum, offices which he held till the breaking up of the India Museum at the end of 1879. Dr. Forbes-Watson has published various works on an "Industrial Survey of India," and on the Natural Products and Resources of the Empire, besides two sets of sample books, prepared at the India Museum, showing upwards of 1400 specimens of Indian fabrics, and 140 large photo-chromolithographic plates; also "The People of India," in eight vols., with upwards of 400 photographs, published in conjunction with Sir John Kaye. In addition to the numerous illustrations required for some of the above-named works, the whole of the illustrations for Fergusson's "Tree and Serpent Worship," Cole's "Archæology of Kashmir and Multra," Burgess's numerous reports on the "Archæology of India," Bree's "Nilagiri Tribes," Carter's "Leprosy in India," and likewise the great Sanscrit grammar, "Mahabhashya," consisting of 4700 pages (all reproduced in fac-simile) with a number of large maps (in relief) of India, were all prepared in the photographic branch established by Dr. Forbes-Watson in connection with his department. He was Chief Commissioner for India, and Director of the Indian Department of the London International Exhibition of 1862; of that of Paris in 1867; and of Vienna in 1873; and also of the series of annual International Exhibitions at South Kensington in 1870, 1871, and 1872. In 1874-75 he submitted to the Government a proposal for the establishment of a centrally situated India Museum and Library in connection with an Indian Institute, having for one of its objects the promotion of Oriental studies in England with the view of training candidates for the Civil Service of India. His plea for an Imperial Museum for India and the Colonies was warmly supported by the Royal Colonial Institute and all the chief seats of commerce throughout the country, and, unquestionably, was the origin of the Imperial Institute, the building for which is now in the course of erection at South Kensington. Dr. Forbes-Watson, after his retirement at the end of 1879, spent some time in India; and, since his return to England, has been engaged in preparing for publication the results of investigations undertaken during the earlier periods of his career.

WATSON, The Rev. Henry William, D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in London, Feb. 25, 1827, and is the son of the late Thomas Watson, Esq., R.N. He was educated at King's College, London, and obtained a Mathematical Scholarship there on its first establishment, and entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1846; was elected Scholar thereof in 1848; and took his B.A. degree in 1850; being Second Wrangler and Smith's Prizeman. He was elected Fellow of Trinity College, and appointed Assistant

Tutor thereof in 1851; and was appointed Second Master of the City of London School, 1854; Mathematical Lecturer at King's College, London, 1856; Assistant Master of Harrow School, 1857; and was presented to the Rectory of Berkswell, near Coventry, 1865. For many years he has acted as Assistant Examiner to the Civil Service Commissioners; and has been occasional Examiner for the degree of D.Sc. in the University of London. He is the author of "A Treatise on Geometry," in Longman's text-books of Science Series, 1871; "A Treatise on the Kinetic Theory of Gases," published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1876; and sundry Mathematical and Physical papers in the Philosophical Magazine and the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and elsewhere. He is joint author of "Watson and Burbury's Treatise on Generalised Coordinates applied to the Kinetics of a Material System;" "Watson and Burbury's Electricity and Magnetism," part 1, Electrostatics, 1885; part 2, Magnetism and Electrodynamics, 1889; Article "Molecule" in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. He was appointed in 1879 a representative governor for the University of Cambridge, of King Edward VIth's School, Birmingham, and was joint founder of the Birmingham Philosophical Society in 1879, and President of the same, 1880 and 1881. The Rev. H. W. Watson was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1881.

WATSON, Thomas Henry, architect, born Nov. 1, 1839, obtained three silver medals in 1860 at the Royal Academy of Arts, the Gold Medal in 1861. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862; was awarded the Travelling Studentship of the Royal Academy 1863, and the Soane Medallion of the Royal Institute of British Architects 1864. He graduated at the Institute in the Class of Distinction 1866, was President of the Architectural Association in 1871, was elected District Surveyor of St. George's, Hanover Square, North, in 1875, and Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1877. Birch, Esq.; Newton Park, Somerset, for Earl Temple; Crowe

Hall, Bath, and works to the Villa Aurolia, Rome.

WATSON (Lord), The Right Hon. William Watson, is the son of the Rev. Thomas Watson, minister of Covington, Lanarkshire, where he was born in 1828. He was educated at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, and was admitted an advocate at the Scotch Bar in 1851. He was elected Dean of the Faculty of Advocates in 1875. In Nov., 1876, he was elected M.P., in the Conservative interest, for the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen. Mr. Watson was Solicitor-General for Scotland from July, 1874, till Oct., 1876, when he was appointed Lord Advocate. In the latter year he was created an LL.D. of Edinburgh. He was sworn of the Privy Council, and appointed a member of the Committee of Council on Education in Scotland, April 2, 1878. He continued to represent the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen till April, 1880, when he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal, and made a Peer for life, under the provisions of the Act of 1876, as Lord Watson of Thankerton, in the county of Lanark.

WATTERSON, Henry, American journalist and statesman, was born in Washington City, Feb. 16, 1840. He was educated by private tutors, and began his career as an editorial writer on the press of the national capital; but his professional work was interrupted by the Civil War, in which he served on the Confederate side. After the war, he was chosen to succeed the celebrated George D. Prentice, the founder and editor of the Louisville Journal, and, in conjunction with W. N. Haldeman, the founder of the Louisville Courier, he made a consolidation of all the newspapers of that city, into the Courier-Journal, which, under his management, has become one of the foremost American newspapers. He is a recognised authority in the Democratic party, although for many years he had to contend against the prejudices of a great majority of his party associates. He successfully opposed the reactionary movement of the Southern extremists against the reconstructory amendments to the Constitution, and of the Western extremists as to the national currency. He led what was called "The New Departure" of the Democrats in 1872, making one of a group of journalists who, in that year, became famous as "The Quadrilateral," his colleagues being Whitelaw Reid, Samuel Bowles, and Murat Halstead, and their objective point—the election of Horace Greeley to the Presidency. He was chief among the friends of the late Samuel J. Tilden, and presided over the National Democratic Convention, which nominated him for President. He has sat in each succeeding National Democratic Convention for the State of Kentucky, acting in those of 1880 and 1888 as Chairman of the Platform Committee, and exercising a decisive influence in shaping the party policy. He was the first prominent Democrat to identify himself with Free Trade ideas and to demand of Congress “a tariff for revenue only,” which is now the Democratic battle-cry, and for fifteen years has been regarded as the embodiment of tariff reform in the United States. He has steadily refused office, but in the political crisis of 1876-77 he accepted a seat in Congress, serving with distinction and declining a re-election. He is a constant public speaker and lecturer, a voluminous contributor on economic subjects to the reviews, and an active and familiar figure in the councils of his party. He is the author of many tracts and pamphlets, and a volume of sketches, entitled “Oddities of Southern Life and Character,” 1882. He has travelled extensively, and has in the press (1890) a collection of foreign letters.

WATTS, George Frederick, R.A., painter, born in London in 1820, first exhibited at the Academy in 1837. In addition to portraits, he made some historical attempts such as “Isabella finding Lorenzo dead,” from Boccaccio, in 1840, and a scene from “Cymbeline,” in 1842. At Westminster Hall, in 1843, his cartoon of “Caractacus led in triumph through the Streets of Rome,” obtained one of the three highest class prizes of £300, and created sanguine hopes for his future career. Having spent three years in Italy, he again obtained, in 1847, the highest honours at the competition in Westminster Hall. His two colossal oil-pictures, “Echo,” and “Alfred inciting the Saxons to prevent the Landing of the Danes,” which secured for him one of the three highest class prizes of £500, were, with the pictures of Pickersgill and Cross, purchased by the Commissioners. The latter is in one of the committee-rooms of the new Parliament Houses. Mr. Watts exhibited his “Paolo and Francesca,” and “Orlando pursuing the Fata Morgana,” at the British Institution, in 1848, and his full-length portrait of Lady Holland, at the Royal Academy in the same year. “Life’s Illusions,” a picture of the class of “Fata Morgana,” exhibited in 1849, was followed in 1850 by “The Good Samaritan,” painted in honour of Thomas Wright, of Manchester, and presented by the artist to the Town Hall of Manchester. For the Houses of Parliament Mr. Watts has executed one of the frescoes in the Poets’ Hall, “St. George overcomes the Dragon,” from Spenser finished in 1853, and he has painted in fresco the west end of the new hall at Lincoln’s Inn. For some time he has exhibited regularly at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery. His principal productions have been portraits and ideal or mythological subjects, such as the well-known “Love and Death,” “Endymion,” “Orpheus and Eurydice,” “Daphne,” and (1886) “Hope.” In 1882 an exhibition of Mr. Watts’ works was held at the Grosvenor Gallery. Mr. Watts has painted for his own house a number of portraits of the most eminent of his contemporaries in public life, literature and art; and these he is understood to have bequeathed to the nation. He executed a portrait of Lord Tennyson, in 1890. In 1886 Mr. Watts married Miss Fraser-Tyler.

WAY, The Hon. Samuel James, Chief Justice of South Australia, Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, Chancellor of the University of Adelaide, and in 1890 appointed Lieut.-Governor of S. Australia, is the son of the Rev. James Way, and was born at Portsmouth, April 11, 1836. He arrived in South Australia, March 6, 1853; was privately educated. He was called to the South Australian Bar, March 23, 1861; appointed Q.C., Sept. 12, 1871; elected to the House of Assembly, Feb. 10, 1875; appointed Attorney-General, June 3, 1875; appointed Chief Justice, March 18, 1876; elected Vice-Chancellor of the University of Adelaide, April 28, 1876; and Chancellor, Jan. 26, 1883. The Hon. S. J. Way has administered the Government of South Australia five times—in 1877, 1878, 1879, 1883, 1889; is a member of the Executive Council; author of the “Report of the Commission on the Destitute Act, 1881,” published in Adelaide, 1885 (an elaborate treatise on Poor Relief in South Australia), and other official publications.

WEATHERS, The Most Rev. William, D.D., a Roman Catholic prelate, born n 1814, was educated at St. Edmund’s College, Old Hall Green, where he was ordained priest in 1838; and became professor, vice-president, and finally president in 1851, which office he continued to hold until 1869, when he was removed to Hammersmith to become the first President of St. Thomas's Theological Seminary. Dr. Weathers was the theologian nominated by the English Bishops to assist in Rome at the preparations for the Vatican Council. He was made a domestic prelate by the Pope in 1868; and in 1872 was appointed Bishop of Amycla, i.p.i., and nominated Bishop Auxiliary for the diocese of Westminster.

WEBBER, The Right Rev. William Thomas Thornhill, D.D., Bishop of Brisbane, is the son of the late William Webber, surgeon, of Norwich, by Eliza, daughter of the late Sir Isaac (?) Preston, Bart. He was born in Upper Grosvenor Street, Grosvenor Square, London, Jan. 30, 1837, and educated first at Tonbridge School, and afterwards at Norwich under the late John Woolley, D.C.L. (who was subsequently head of Sydney University), and at Pembroke College, Oxford. (B.A. 1859, M.A. 1862, D.D. honoris causa, 1885.) He was ordained by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait), deacon, 1860, and priest, 1861. He was assistant curate at Chiswick from 1860 to 1864, when he was put in charge of the newly constituted district and parish of St. John the Evangelist, Red Lion Square, Holborn, which he held up to 1885. Here he built the noble church in Red Lion Square, together with clergy-house attached, and schools with accommodation for 700 children in three departments. The site, church, clergy-house, schools, &c., cost £49,000. This large sum of money was collected and administered by Mr. Webber, in the course of an exceedingly busy life of public usefulness. He was one of the Governors of Sion College, 1882-85, and represented Finsbury on the London School Board, 1882-85; was Chairman of the Local Managers of the Board Schools, 1877-85, and Guardian of Holborn Union, 1874-83. He was also connected very prominently during these years with the Charity Organisation Society, the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, the Girls' and the Young Men's Friendly Societies, and many other institutions and societies. On the resignation of Bishop Hale he was appointed to the vacant See of Brisbane, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), on St. Barnabas' Day, 1885. When the Bishop took charge of the diocese in 1885 there were but 33 clergy and 39 churches; these, as the result of five years' work, have been increased to 67 clergy and 75 churches.

WEBSTER, Augusta, daughter of the late Vice-Admiral George Davies, published her first book, "Blanche Lisle and other Poems," in 1860, under the name of Cecil Home. After her marriage with Mr. Thomas Webster, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, she published under the same name, "Lesley's Guardians," a novel; and "Lilian Gray," a poem, 1864. Under her own name she has since published translations into English verse of the "Prometheus Bound," of Æschylus, 1866; and the "Medea" of Euripides, 1868; "Dramatic Studies," 1866; "A Woman Sold, and other Poems," 1867; "Portraits," 1870; "The Auspicious Day: a Drama," 1872; "Yn-Pe-Ya's Lute," a Chinese tale in English verse, 1874; "Disguises," a Drama, and "A Housewife's Opinions" (being reprints of some of her articles in the Examiner, to which she was a regular contributor during the years 1876-78), 1879; "A Book of Rhyme," 1881; "In a Day," a drama, 1882; "Daffodil and the Croëxaxicans," 1884; and "The Sentence," a drama, 1887. The Athenæum describes Mrs. Webster as follows:—"Undoubtedly the most considerable poet among Englishwomen since Mrs. Browning." In 1879, Mrs. Webster was elected on the London School Board for the Chelsea division; and she was again returned in 1885, but was defeated in 1888.

WEBSTER, Sir Richard Everard, Q.C., M.P., Attorney-General, second son of the late Thomas Webster, Esq., Q.C., was born Dec. 22, 1842. He received his education at King's College and Charterhouse Schools and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he gained a Foundation Scholarship, and graduated in both the Mathematical and Classical Tripos. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1868, and joined the south-eastern (then home) circuit. He was afterwards appointed to the ancient but honorary offices of Tubman and Postman in the Court of Exchequer at Westminster. He was made Queen's Counsel in 1878, and is believed to be the only man who has for many years past received that honour at so early an age. He has been extensively engaged in most of the heavy commercial and railway cases of the day, and, besides having a large general practice, he has appeared in numerous appeal cases in the House of Lords. He is one of the Governors of the Charterhouse. He contested Bewdley at the election of 1880. In June, 1885, he was appointed Attorney-General in the first Government of Lord Salisbury, not having up to that date been in Parliament. From July to Nov., 1885, he represented Launceston, and at the general election of 1885 he successfully stood for the Isle of Wight, defeating Mr. Ashley, the former Liberal member, by a majority of 436. In 1886 he was again returned by a majority of 1,258. He married in the year 1872, Louisa Mary, the only daughter of the late William Calthrop, Esq., M.D., of Withern, in the county of Lincoln; she died in the year 1877.

WEDMORE, Frederick, was born at Richmond Hill, Clifton, July 9, 1844, being the son of Mr. Thomas Wedmore, a merchant and magistrate of Bristol. He was educated privately in England and on the Continent, and, resolved on the profession of journalism, he entered the office of a Bristol newspaper before he was nineteen. He remained there three years, and subsequently came to London, writing for various newspapers and magazines. His novels of "A Snapt Gold Ring" and "Two Girls," were published in 1871 and 1874. Thenceforward devoting himself very considerably to the study of pictorial and dramatic art, Mr. Wedmore travelled and lived for some time abroad, chiefly in France, and subsequently became known as a writer on the Arts. His "Studies in English Art"—which has passed through several editions—appeared in 1876, and it was followed by the "Masters of Genre Painting," 1880, and by "Four Masters of Etching," 1883. Mr. Wedmore did much towards making known in England the work of the great etcher, Méryon, previously almost unknown. In 1877 there appeared, reprinted from Temple Bar, "Pastorals of France," thus far Mr. Wedmore's single completed work of poetical prose fiction. In 1889 there was published his "Life of Balzac." Mr. Wedmore has for several years held the posts of Art critic of the Standard, and Dramatic critic of The Academy, and he has also written in the Nineteenth Century, and the Fortnightly Review. In the autumn of 1885 he visited the United States, and lectured at Harvard College, and the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

WEIR, Harrison William, born at Lewes, May 5, 1824, at an early age showed a great inclination for drawing animals and birds, and the study of natural history. He was, in 1837, articled to Mr. George Baxter, to learn designing on wood, colour-printing, and wood-engraving. This proving quite a different kind of work to what it was represented, he used means to have his articles cancelled, but having in vain endeavoured to get released from his engagement, he of necessity served his time; thus seven years of his life, as far as the work of an artist was concerned, were entirely wasted, and therefore he, in his profession, is self-taught. He was elected a member of the new Society of Painters in Water-Colours in Feb. 1849, and some time before exhibited his first picture, the "Dead Shot," at the British Institution. He also exhibited in Suffolk Street, and at the Royal Academy, his pictures of animals, birds, domestic poultry, fruit, &c., being much sought after. Among his best are, "Startled," "The Forester," "A Servant of all Work," with several of birds singing; "The Christmas Carol"—a robin, published by the Illustrated London News. Mr. Weir's first wood drawings appeared in the Illustrated London News, also The Pictorial Times; he was one of the original staff of the Field, and also the Graphic, and now of Black and White. He has been connected, either by his pencil, pen, or both, with over one hundred and twenty books, his best known being "Routledge's Natural History," "Poultry Book," "Funny Dogs with Funny Tales," "The Adventures of a Bear," also those of "A Dog," and "A Cat." His latter works, which are written by himself as well as illustrated, are, "Everyday in the Country," "Animal Stories, Old and New," "Bird Stories, Old and New," but what he considers his chief book is, "Our Cats, and All About Them," a quite original production, and one that will last as a work of reference, the standard of excellence being given in it, as laid down by Mr. Harrison Weir. For judging at shows he also gives rules for breeding cats; among others the tortoise-shell Tom, which has proved successful. He has furnished illustrations for the British Workman, The Cottager, Band of Hope Review, the Children's Friend, Chatterbox, Little Folks, Poultry and Fanciers' Gazette, and numerous others; he has laboured to improve children's books and books for the poorer classes. He is a Fellow of the Royal Horticultural Society, and has been a Member of the Fruit Committee some years, having himself been awarded Silver Medals for excellence in fruit growing. He has paid considerable attention to the management and varieties of poultry and pigeons, and has gained several cups and other prizes, besides acting as judge at poultry shows for over thirty years. He has also acted as judge of cage birds at the large shows for the same period. He established the first Cat Show at the Crystal Palace, which he intended should induce the owners of cats, through the medium of winning prizes, to take more interest in the breeding and welfare of their cats. The exhibition has so far attained its objects as to have enhanced the pecuniary value of the cat. One curious fact remains to be told, and that is, although he has planned and carried out such a large amount of work during his career of half a century, he has during nearly the whole time been an invalid, his nervous prostration often lasting many days, and for the last thirty years he has not been a day without pain. At 22 years of age he married the eldest daughter of J. F. Herring, the well-known horse painter.

WELD, His Excellency Sir Frederick Aloysius, G.C.M.G., third and only surviving son of Humphrey Weld, of Chideock Manor, Dorset, and the Hon. Christina Maria, daughter of Charles, Lord Clifford of Chudleigh, and of Hon. M. Eleonora, daughter of Henry, Lord Arundell of Wardour. Frederick Aloysius was born May 9, 1823, and was educated at Stonyhurst and Friburg, Switzerland. He emigrated to New Zealand in 1843-44; became a Member of the Executive Council, 1854; and Minister for Native Affairs, 1860. In 1864 he was entrusted with the formation of a Ministry, the Governor requesting him "in the name of Her Majesty to assist him in saving the colony in this great crisis" of threatening bankruptcy and actual war. The policy he announced was accepted by the Secretary of State, and honourably commented upon in both Houses of the British Parliament. Mr. Weld obtained great influence over the natives of his district; he was the first to explore certain uninhabited districts of the Middle Islands; for reports of these expeditions, see the New Zealand Government Gazette, 1851. He was appointed Governor of Western Australia, April, 1869; Governor of Tasmania, Sept., 1874; Governor of the Straits Settlements, Singapore dependencies, and Malay Native States, 1880-87, when he retired. He is the author of several papers and pamphlets, "Hints to Intending Sheep Farmers in New Zealand," which has passed through two or three editions; "On the great Volcanic Eruption of Mauna Loa, Sandwich Islands, 1855, and Ascent of that Mountain," published in the Journal of the Royal Geological Society, and more at large in a lecture entitled "Notes on New Zealand Affairs, London, 1869," &c. Sir Frederick A. Weld, then Mr. Weld, introduced the self-reliant policy into New Zealand, dispensing with the aid of British troops, which, whilst costing the English ratepayers about two-and-a-half millions a year, embittered the relations between the mother country and the colony, and was entailing heavy burthens and imminent bankruptcy in the latter. He believed in using small bodies of men trained to bush-fighting, in making roads, and in removing any real grievances that might exist. In Western Australia he commenced railway and telegraphic communication on a large scale, established an educational system, which still works, and sent out exploring parties into the interior of the country, his aim being to connect Western Australia (hitherto isolated) with the rest of the continent and the world. The revenue largely increased during the term of his administration, though Imperial expenditure in the colony almost ceased. Tasmania made gradual progress during his term of office, but Tasmania was under responsible ministerial government. In the Straits, Sir Frederick travelled much in the interior of the country hitherto unvisited by high officials. Very great progress was made, many native states voluntarily submitted themselves to British influence, and asked for British administration. Sir Frederick Weld was also sent by the Foreign Office on a special mission to Borneo, and recommended a protectorate, which has since been established.

WELLDON, The Rev. James Edward Cowell, son of the late Rev. E. J. Welldon, was born April 25, 1854, educated at Eton, and obtained the Newcastle Scholarship there in 1873. He was Scholar, and afterwards Fellow, of King's College, Cambridge; Bell Scholar in 1874; Browne's Medallist in 1875 and 1876; Craven Scholar in 1876; Senior Classic and Senior Chancellor's Medallist in 1877. After living some time abroad he was appointed Lecturer, and subsequently Tutor, of King's College, Cambridge. He became Master of Dulwich College in 1883, and Head Master of Harrow School in 1885. He is Honorary Chaplain to the Queen; Member of the Royal Commission on a Teaching University for London; and has several times been Select Preacher at Oxford and Cambridge; and Speaker at various Church Congresses. He is the author of "Translation of Aristotle's Politics" and of his "Rhetoric;" "Sermons preached to Harrow Boys;" and "The Spiritual Life and other Sermons."

WELLS, Henry Tanworth, R.A., was born in London in Dec. 1828. His first practice in art was as a miniature painter.

When only seventeen years of age he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait of "Master Arthur Prinsep," a brother of Mr. Valentine Prinsep, the painter. Steadily, if at first slowly, the young artist advanced in this difficult branch of art. From the year in which he first exhibited till 1866 he never ceased to be represented as a miniaturist on the walls of the Academy; and down to 1860 he usually exhibited eight works annually—the largest number allowed. In this long series were a portrait of Princess Mary of Cambridge, painted for Her Majesty, 1853; a group of the painter himself and his wife in tourist costume, 1860; together with full lengths of the Duchess of Sutherland, and Frances Countess of Waldegrave. In the Academy Exhibition of 1861 he made his first appearance as an oil-painter. A prominent place was awarded in 1865 to his "Preparing a Tableau Vivant"—a portrait group of three sisters; and he also contributed a landscape entitled "Outskirt of a Farm-yard at Twilight." In 1866 he painted his large picture of "Volunteers at a Firing Point," and in May that year he was elected A.R.A. Since that time he has been a constant exhibitor of portrait pictures, some of which are large compositions; as "The Rifle Ranges at Wimbledon," 1867; "The Earl and Countess Spencer and their Friends at Wimbledon," 1868; "Letters and News at the Loch Side," 1868; "Lord Chancellor Hatherley, with his Attendants in Procession through the House of Lords," painted on a large scale for the Fishmongers' Company; "Lord Chancellor Selborne," for the Mercers' Company; a large hunt-picture, entitled "A November Morning at Bird-sall House, Yorkshire," 1875; "Mr. Robert Jardine, with Greyhounds," 1876; "The Old Stonebreaker," and the "Laurel Walk," 1879. In 1880 he exhibited his large painting of "Victoria Regina," representing the Queen in the early morning of June 20, 1837, receiving news of the death of William IV. and the homage of Archbishop Howley and the Lord Chamberlain. In 1882 was exhibited "Friends at Yewden," a group of Academicians (including the painter himself) and other friends, painted for the collection of Mr. G. C. Schwabe. This was followed by two subjects of labour, "Loading at a Quarry," 1884; and "Quarrymen of Purbeck," 1885. In 1887 appeared his largest canvas, "The Queen and her Judges," representing the ceremonial of the opening of the Royal Courts of Justice. Mr. Wells was elected a Royal Academician in June, 1870. He married Joanna Mary

Boyce, an accomplished artist, who died in 1861.

WELLS, Sir Thomas Spencer, Bart. M.D., is the eldest son of the late Mr. William Wells, of St. Alban's Hertfordshire, by Harriet, daughter of the late Mr. William Wright of East Sheen, Richmond, Surrey. He was born in 1818 at St. Alban's, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He gained his first medical experience in the Infirmary and School of Medicine at Leeds, and subsequently studied in the Anatomical School at Dublin, and at St. Thomas's Hospital. He was admitted a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1841, and in 1844 was elected one of the honorary fellows created by the new charter. Having become an assistant Surgeon in the Navy, he saw some active service, both afloat and ashore, before and during the Crimean war; and he was sent out in 1854-5, under the auspices of Mr. Sydney Herbert, as chief surgeon of auxiliary hospitals at Smyrna, and at Renkioi on the Dardanelles. Returning to England at the close of the Russian war, he revived the operation with which his name is chiefly associated—namely, ovariectomy, and became Surgeon to the Samaritan Hospital for Women. He was President of the College of Surgeons in 1882-83, and delivered the Hunterian Oration 1882. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and surgeon to Her Majesty's Household, and at the third centenary of the University of Leyden he had conferred upon him the degree of an honorary M.D. Her Majesty, in April, 1883, conferred upon him the honour of a baronetcy in acknowledgment "of the distinguished services which he has rendered to the medical profession and to humanity." Sir Spencer Wells is the author of several important surgical works, especially on those branches of operative surgery to which he has specially devoted himself. Mr. Wells married, in 1853, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Mr. James Wright, solicitor, of New-Inn, London, and of Sydenham, Kent. His son (Arthur Spencer) was educated at Wellington College, and Trinity College, Cambridge.

He married first, on April 3, 1866, Susan Wilhelmine, third daughter of Sir William H. Dick Cunynghame, Bart., of Prestonfield (she died in 1869); and, secondly, on March 26, 1873, Millicent Julia, daughter of Colonel F. D. Fryer, of Moulton Paddocks, Newmarket. She died in 1881.

Francis Wemyss Charteris Douglas, eldest son of Francis Wemyss Charteris Douglas, eighth Earl of Wemyss, was born in 1818, and educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A., 1841). In the same year he was returned to the House of Commons for the Eastern division of Gloucestershire, which he represented until 1846, when he resigned his seat, having abandoned the support of the protective Corn Laws, and became a convert to the Free Trade measures of Sir R. Peel. In Aug., 1847, he was returned as a Liberal Conservative for Haddingtonshire, which he continued to represent until his succession to the peerage; was a Lord of the Treasury under the Aberdeen ministry, 1852-55, retiring with the Peelite party in Feb. of that year from the administration of Lord Palmerston. As Lord Elcho, he took a very conspicuous part in the Volunteer movement, and he is an authority on various questions connected with the national defence and armaments. He is Colonel of the London Scottish Volunteers, and, as Chairman of the Council of the National Rifle Association, he frequently presided over the Wimbledon Rifle Meetings. He has been a Deputy-Lieutenant of Haddingtonshire since 1846. He succeeded to the Earldom of Wemyss on the death of his father, Jan. 1, 1883. He was educated privately, and was clerk to the Royal Society from 1861 to 1879, when he was appointed Assistant Secretary to the Society of Arts, a position which he still holds. He was one of those who, under the lead of Dr. F. J. Furnivall, founded the Early English Text Society in 1864. He acted as Hon. He was appointed Inspector of the Cambridge University Library by the Library Syndicate in the years 1877, 1878, 1879, and 1882, and reported to the Syndicate on the condition of the Library. Mr. Wheatley is at present engaged on a new edition of "Cunningham's London," 3 vols., and a new edition, with additions from the original MS. of "Pepys' Diary."

WHIPPLE, George Mathews, B.Sc. His contributions to Scientific papers and Journals are numerous, dealing with Meteorology, Magnetism, Photography, and Horology.

WHISTLER, James Abbott McNeill, President of the Society of British Artists, born, of American parentage, in 1835, and educated in the Military Academy at West Point on the Hudson, U.S.A. In 1857 he came to Europe, and entered the studio of Gleyre, in Paris. He began his artistic life as an etcher; and probably by his etchings, numbering between two and three hundred, he will be best remembered. But his paintings, especially his portraits, that of Señor Sarasarte, for instance, have elicited the warmest admiration.

WHITAKER, William, B.A. (London), F.R.S., F.G.S., Assoc. Inst. C.E., was born in London May 4, 1836, and educated at St. Alban's Grammar School, and at University College, London. He was appointed to the Geological Survey, April 1, 1857; and has written many Geological Survey Memoirs, notably "The Geology of the London Basin," 1872; and "The Geology of London, and of Part of the Thames Valley," 2 vols., 1889; also many papers in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, and in other scientific publications, ranging from 1860 to 1890. Mr. Whitaker was Murchison Medallist of the Geological Society, 1886; and editor of the Geological Record for several years. He is hon. member of the Geol. Assoc. and of various local societies.

WHITE, The Hon. Andrew Dickson, American educator, was born at Homer, New York, Nov. 7, 1832. He graduated at Yale in 1853, and then travelled in Europe until 1856, when he returned to the United States and, after studying history for a year at Yale, became, in 1857, Professor of History and English Literature in the University of Michigan. This position he resigned in 1862 on account of ill-health. From 1863 to 1866 he was a member of the State Senate of New York. In 1867 he was chosen the first President of Cornell University (Ithaca, N.Y.), and he remained there until the condition of his health compelled him to retire in 1885. He visited Europe in 1867-68 for the purpose of examining into the organization of schools of agriculture and technology and of purchasing books and supplies for Cornell. In 1871 he was appointed one of the U.S. Commission on Santo Domingo, and in the same year was Chairman of the N.Y. State Republican Convention. From 1879 to 1881 he was the American minister to Germany, and in 1888 was elected a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution in place of the late Asa Gray. President White gave very largely of his own means to Cornell University, and endowed the school of history and political science in that institution with his own valuable library, comprising 30,000 vols. and 10,000 pamphlets. Besides contributions to periodicals he has written "Outlines of a course of Lectures on History," 1861; "A Word from the Northwest," 1863; "Syllabus of Lectures on Modern History," 1876; "The Warfare of Science," 1876; "Paper Money. Inflation in France," 1876; "The New Germany," 1882; "On Studies in General History and in the History of Civilization," 1885; "A History of the Doctrine of Comets," 1886; and "European Schools of History and Politics," 1887. He at present resides at Syracuse, New York.

WHITE, The Rev. Edward, was born in London, May 11, 1819, and educated at Mill Hill Grammar School and Glasgow College, where he gained the first honours in the Logic Class. His first settlement in the Congregational ministry was at Hereford, where he remained ten years; he then removed to London, and became minister of St. Paul's Chapel, Hawley Road, Kentish Town, where he has remained for thirty-five years. From 1859 to 1864 he was editor of the Christian Spectator, and he has published the following books: "The Mystery of Growth," "The Minor Moralities of Life," and "Life in Christ." It is by the last named that he is chiefly known: it has been translated into French and Danish, and has had a very wide circulation in all English-speaking countries. The leading idea of the work is a revival of a doctrine prevalent in the Ante-Nicene Church that man's soul is not necessarily immortal, and therefore it must cease to exist unless renewed in eternal life through the work of redemption in Christ. Mr. White was chosen Merchants' Lecturer on an ancient Nonconformist foundation in 1880, and Chairman of the Congregational Union in England and Wales in 1886, and, in the same year, Professor of Homiletics in New College, London.

WHITE, Walter, author, was born at Reading, Berks, April 23, 1811; educated at two local private schools, and at the age of 14 began to learn his father's trade of cabinet-making. To this he afterwards added the Study of French and German and became proficient in both languages. In 1834 he sailed to New York, whence he returned in 1839. In April, 1844, he was chosen to fill the post of Clerk to the Royal Society. In 1861 he was appointed Assistant Secretary and Librarian, and continued therein until 1885, when, in consequence of failing strength, he resigned the appointment. Mr. White began his "Holiday Walks" in 1851, with a month's tramp in Holland, a narrative of which was published in Chambers's Journal, under the title of "Notes from the Netherlands." These were followed by a series of books: "To Switzerland and back," 1854; "A Londoner's Walk to the Land's End," 1855; "On foot through the Tyrol," 1856; "A July Holiday in Saxony, Bohemia, and Silesia," 1857; "A month in Yorkshire," 1858; "Northumberland and the Border," 1859; "All round the Wrekin," 1860; "Eastern England from the Thames to the Humber," 2 vols. 1865; and "Holidays in the Tyrol," 1876. Besides these Mr. White has published a few ballads, "The Prisoner and his Dream;" "The Great Exhibition, 1851;" "Erebus and Terror," and a volume, "Rhymes," in 1873.

WHITE, Sir William Arthur, K.C.M.G., son of the late Arthur White, Esq., of the consular and colonial service, was born in 1824, and educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He entered the diplomatic service in 1857 as Clerk to the Consulate-General at Warsaw; was promoted to be Consul at Dantzic in November, 1864, and represented French interests at Dantzic during the war between France and Germany in 1870 and 1871. In 1875 he went to Serbia as Agent and Consul-General, and was summoned to Constantinople during the Conference held there in December, 1876, and January, 1877. Transferred to Bucharest in 1878, he was promoted to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Roumania. He served in the same capacity at Constantinople during the absence of the Ambassador in April, 1885, and conducted in a most able manner the Conferences called for settlement of the Serbo-Bulgarian difficulty. Soon afterwards he returned to Bucharest, and Sir E. Thornton (who had been appointed to succeed Lord Duferin at Constantinople) came to his post; but in Oct. 1886, on the reopening of the Bulgarian question, leave of absence was granted to the latter, and Sir W. White returned as Ambassador. He was created K.C.M.G. March 16, 1885.

WHITE, William Henry, F.R.S., &c., was born at Devonport, Feb. 2, 1845, and educated at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, when that institution was under the direction of the Lords of the Council, the Admiralty supporting it. He graduated at the head of the list of students in 1867, and received the highest diploma as naval architect (Fellow of Royal School of Naval Architecture); was at once appointed to the Constructive Department at the Admiralty, where he remained until 1883, rising through the various grades to the rank of Chief Constructor. He was appointed Professor of Naval Architecture at the Royal School in 1870, and held that position there and at the Royal Naval College, concurrently with his Admiralty appointment, until 1881. He resigned his position in the Admiralty in March, 1883, receiving a special letter of thanks from the Lords Commissioners for past services. From 1883 to Oct. 1885, he was engaged in the organisation and direction of the shipbuilding department of the Elswick Works of Sir William Armstrong & Co. During that period he designed and built a number of war-ships for foreign navies, with speeds exceeding any previously attained. He was invited by the Admiralty, in 1885, to assume the office of Director of Naval Construction, which he now holds, in conjunction with that of Assistant Controller of the Navy. He is the professional chief of the Royal Corps of Naval Constructors. During the period 1885-89 Mr. White had responsible charge of the construction of the battle-ships and cruisers, included under the special Programme which Lord Northbrook introduced in 1885, in addition to which he designed and constructed several new types of cruisers, amongst which are the Blake and Blenheim, the largest and swiftest cruisers yet laid down. At the present time, the seven cruisers building for Australian service under the Imperial Defence Act of 1888, and the seventy battle-ships and cruisers building under the Naval Defence Act of 1889, at an estimated cost of twenty-one millions sterling, are all being constructed from designs prepared by Mr. White. He is a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, Vice-President of the Institution of Naval Architects, Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Member of Council of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, Member of the Iron and Steel Institute, and of the Royal United Service Institution, honorary member of the North-East Coast Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders. Mr. White is the author of a "Manual of Naval Architecture," which has become a standard work, and has been translated into German and Italian, and officially approved as a text-book for the English, German, Italian, and other navies; also, of a "Treatise on Shipbuilding," and of numerous memoirs and papers on the science and practice of shipbuilding, either published separately, or appearing in the "Proceedings" of the societies of which he is a member.

WHITEHEAD, Sir James, Bart., J.P., F.S.A., of Highfield House, Catford Bridge, Kent, is the younger son of the late Mr. James Whitehead, of Appleby, Westmoreland. He was born in 1834, and was educated at the Appleby Grammar School, at that time one of the leading schools of the North. He was engaged for many years in the Bradford trade, in the City of London. In 1879 he was largely instrumental in founding the Rowland Hill Benevolent Fund for Aged and Distressed Post Office Servants, of which he is a trustee. For many years he has taken an active part in political matters, his views being those of an advanced Liberal; and in 1880, amongst other constituencies, he was unanimously invited to contest the Western Division of Kent. At that time, however, he declined to stand, his health being so precarious as to necessitate a prolonged voyage; and in 1881 he retired from business. In 1882 a requisition signed by nearly all the electors of the Ward of Cheap was presented to him, and he was elected Alderman of that ward without a contest. In 1884-5 he served the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex, and was decorated by the King of the Belgians with the Knight Officership of the Order of Leopold, on his visit to Brussels in connection with the Congo Free State.

In the same year the King of Servia invested him with the Knight Commandership of the Order of Takovo for assistance given to the Servian Minister in this country, and for his warm advocacy of a Balkan Federation. In 1885 he was Master of the Fanmakers' Company. He is one of Her Majesty's Lieutenants for the City of London; a Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Westmoreland; and a Justice of the Peace for Kent, Westmoreland, and the County of London. He was for some time Chairman of the Visiting Justices of Holloway Prison, and one of the Visitors of the City of London Asylum, at Stone. He is a Governor of Queen Anne's Bounty, and of Christ's Hospital, St. Bartholomew's, Bethlehem, and other hospitals. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and of the Royal Historical, the Royal Statistical, and other learned societies. In 1884 he was induced to become the Liberal candidate for North Westmoreland; and after the Re-distribution Bill in 1885, and again in 1886, he contested that constituency; on each occasion suffering defeat by a small majority at the hands of the Hon. Wm. Lowther. He is an extensive traveller, having visited most of the countries of Europe, the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and other British Colonies and dependencies, and is an ardent educationist, especially in regard to technical, agricultural, and higher commercial education. In Sept., 1888, he was elected Lord Mayor of London. On Nov. 9, he abolished the "circus" element, substituted a "state procession" for a "show," and instead thereof entertained 10,000 poor people. On the same evening his speech in favour of strengthening the Navy largely influenced the decisions of the Government in their proposals to that end. On the departure from England of Mr. Phelps, the American Minister, he gave a farewell banquet of great splendour to distinguished representatives of law, science, art and literature. When the Freedom of the City was conferred upon the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, and later upon Prince George of Wales, he gave banquets in their honour. He induced the Corporation to entertain the Shah on his visit to England, and was subsequently decorated with the Persian order of the Lion and the Sun. In connection with the Paris Exhibition, he raised a fund and sent over seventy-five representative artisans to examine and report on the various exhibits connected with their respective crafts, for the instruction of their fellow-workmen and the improvement of English trade. He also visited

Paris by special invitation, and was entertained by both the President of the Republic and the President of the Municipal Council of Paris. In return he himself gave a grand banquet to the Prime Minister and other distinguished Frenchmen. For his services in connection with the French Exhibition, he was at the end of the year decorated with the Commandership of the Legion of Honour. Arising out of this visit to Paris was the fund which he inaugurated for sending poor persons bitten by rabid animals to the Pasteur Institute, and for acknowledging in a practical form the gratuitous services of M. Pasteur to Englishmen. In recognition of his services to the Royal Agricultural Society, when acting as Chairman of the London Committee, he was presented with the Society's Gold Medal; and for his efforts towards the restoration of orchards in our homesteads and cottage gardens, and education in fruit growing, he was presented with the Freedom of the Fruiterers' Company, and was immediately advanced to the office of Master which he now occupies. For the famine in China he raised a larger sum than was ever collected for sufferers in any foreign country, with the exception of the fund organised after the capitulation of Paris; and, as a mark of appreciation, he received a magnificent Tablet of Honour from the Viceroy of the two Kiang provinces of China. As chairman, he established and organised a penny-a-week collection in London factories, shops, workshops, and warehouses in aid of the Hospital Saturday Fund, from which a permanent increase of £50,000 or more is expected in the income of the hospitals. To meet the deficiency in the equipment of the Metropolitan Volunteers, he raised another fund, was enabled to award to all the Metropolitan Regiments sums sufficient to complete their equipment and pay off all debts which had been incurred by them in the purchase of accoutrements. In July, 1889, he established a powerful Association to watch over the interests of Agriculture and Commerce in the revision of Railway Rates. When in Sept., 1889, the prolonged Dock Strike had dislocated the trade of London, he formed a small Committee of Mediators which was ultimately enabled to bring the conflict to a close. In addition to these more noticeable features, his mayoralty was distinguished by an extraordinary activity in educational, philanthropic, and other meetings of public utility, by an unusual number of banquets and entertainments; and by an entire abstention from political controversy. At the end of his year he was created a baronet on the recommendation of Lord Salisbury, not, as has often happened, in connection with a royal visit, but "for highly valuable services during an eventful mayoralty." In 1889 he was further decorated by the King of Servia with the Grand Cordon of St. Sava for his efforts in the cause of education. In Jan., 1890, he retired from his candidature in North Westmoreland; but in March he was induced to accept a unanimous invitation to contest Leicester at the next election. Since April, 1890, he has been Sheriff of the New County of London, in succession to Mr. Alfred de Rothschild, and in May of the present year, he organised and carried through a large Conversazione and exhibition in the Guildhall, at which the Prince of Wales was present, in celebration of the Jubilee of Penny Postage and in aid of the Rowland Hill Benevolent Fund. In 1860, he married Mercy M. Hinds, the fourth daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Hinds, of Bank House, St. Neot's, Hunts.

WHITEHOUSE, Frederic Cope, fourth son of the Right Rev. A. J. Whitehouse, D.D. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Cantab.), second Bishop of Illinois; born in New York, Nov. 9, 1842, educated at Columbia College, New York, graduated with highest honours; studied in France, Germany and Italy; called to the Bar 1870. He has been known as Cope Whitehouse, since 1881, from researches relating chiefly to the credibility of the Greek historians, the scientific knowledge of the ancient world and the Semitic traditions associated with the name of Joseph. He discovered the Raiyan depression in the Egyptian desert, established its identity with the lost lake Mœris of the Ptolemaic maps, and drew plans for its restoration, claiming it as the missing factor in Egyptian prosperity, and, by putting Goshen to the south of Memphis, explains in a new and material sense the Semitic traditions, Hebrew and Arabic. Numerous papers by him, or relating to his works, have been published (see catalogue of British Museum), in various European languages including Greek, and in Arabic. He is member of many learned societies, and was created Commander of the Osmanieh, 1888, for his services to Egyptology and exertions on behalf of the better control of the Nile.

WHITMAN, Walt (from Holland and English immigration-stock, son of Walter Whitman, farmer and carpenter), was born May 31, 1819, about thirty miles from New York City, at West Hills, Suffolk co., New York. He removed very early to Brooklyn and New York cities, where he grew up through boyhood and young manhood; had a plain education in the public schools; learned the trade of printer; and edited newspapers. He then went off for two years on a working and journeying tour through nearly everyone of the Middle, Southern and Western States, and (during the Mexican War of 1848-9) to Louisiana and Texas. Returning leisurely, up the Mississippi and Northern lakes, back to New York City, he lived and worked there till 1862, when he left for Washington, and the front of the Civil War. His intense and continued personal occupation day and night for over two years following in nursing the army wounded and sick, Northern and Southern alike, resulted in a severe prostration and paralysis at the end of the contest, from which he has suffered ever since, though his mind remains unimpaired and he still writes. He is author of "Leaves of Grass," a book of poems; "Specimen Days and Collect," a prose autobiography and notes of the war-hospitals and a collection of various essays; and "November Boughs," an old-age compilation, only yet, perhaps, partly completed. It remains to be said that Mr. Whitman is perceptibly of Quaker stamp, has been and is of buoyant spirits and robust physique, and still lives (May, 1890) at Camden, New York.

WHITNEY, The Hon. William Collins, American statesman, was born at Conway, Massachusetts, July 5, 1841. A.B. (Yale Coll.), 1863. He studied law at the Harvard Law School and began its practice in 1865 in New York City where he still resides. From 1875 to 1882 he was Corporation Counsel of New York, and from 1885 to 1889 was in the Cabinet of President Cleveland as Secretary of the Navy.

WHITNEY, William Dwight, Ph.D., LL.D., Litt.D., American philologist, was born at Northampton, Massachusetts, Feb. 9, 1827. He graduated at Williams College in 1849, and for the three following years filled a clerkship in a banking house, devoting his leisure to the study of languages. From 1849-50 he studied at Yale, and then went abroad and studied at the Universities of Berlin and Tübingen. Returning to the United States he was appointed Professor of Sanskrit at Yale in 1854, and in 1870 was made also Professor of Comparative Philology in the same institution, both which positions he still holds. He was elected a member of the American Oriental Society in 1849; was its librarian from 1855-73; its Corresponding Secretary from 1857-84; and since then has been its President. He has been a voluminous contributor to its Journal, writing more than half of the contents of vols. vi.-xii. In 1865 he became a member of the National Academy of Sciences, and in 1869, was chosen the first President of the American Philological Association. He is a correspondent of the Berlin, Turin, Rome, and St. Petersburg Academies, the Institut de France, and is a foreign knight of the Prussian order "Pour le Mérite," and, in addition, is a member of many other scientific societies both at home and abroad. The degree of Ph.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Breslau in 1861; that of LL.D. by Williams College in 1868, William and Mary in 1869, Harvard in 1876, and the University of Edinburgh in 1889; that of J.U.D. by St. Andrews in 1874; and that of Litt.D. by Columbia in 1886. Professor Whitney has written for the North American Review, the New Englander, and similar periodicals, various articles for Encyclopædias, and has contributed largely to the "Transactions" of societies with which he is connected. He has published besides, "Language, and the Study of Language," 1867; "Compendious German Grammar," 1869; "German Reader in Prose and Verse," 1870; "Oriental and Linguistic Studies," 1873-75; "Life and Growth of Language," 1876; "Essentials of English Grammar," 1877; "Sanskrit Grammar," 1879;

"Practical French Grammar," 1886; and "Practical French," taken from his larger Grammar, 1887. He was a contributor to the great Sanskrit Dictionary of Böhtlingk and Roth (7 vols., St. Petersburg, 1853-67), and now for some years has been editor-in-chief of "The Century Dictionary of the English Language," of which the first volume was published at New York in 1889.

WHITTIER, John Greenleaf, American poet, was born at Haverhill, Mass., Dec. 17, 1807. Until the age of nineteen, he worked on a farm and occasionally as a shoemaker, getting only such scanty education as a brief attendance at the neighbouring district school afforded. In 1826 he entered the Haverhill Academy, where he remained for portions of two years, about twelve months in all. The publication in local papers of some youthful poems having attracted attention to him, he went to Boston in 1829, as editor of a newspaper, the American Manufacturer, and in the following year became editor of the New England Weekly Review, published at Hartford, Connecticut; but in 1832 returned to Haverhill to edit the Haverhill Gazette, and work upon his farm. He remained there till 1836, being twice a representative in the Legislature of the State. In 1836 he became one of the secretaries of the American Anti-Slavery Society, and soon after removed to Philadelphia, where he edited for four years the Pennsylvania Freeman, an anti-slavery paper. In 1840 he returned to Massachusetts, and settled at Amesbury, where he has since resided, being for some years corresponding editor of the National Era, published at Washington. Mr. Whittier's works are, "Legends of New England, in Prose and Verse," 1831; "Moll Pitcher," a poem, 1833; "Mogg Megone," a poem, 1836; "Ballads," 1838; "Lays of My Home, and other Poems," 1843; "The Stranger in Lervill," prose essays, 1845; "Supernaturalism in New England," 1847; "Leaves from Margaret Smith's Journal," 1849; "The Voices of Freedom," 1849; "Old Portraits and Modern Sketches," 1850; "Songs of Labour, and other Poems," 1850; "The Chapel of the Hermits, and other Poems," 1853; "A Sabbath Verse," 1853; "Literary Recreations and Miscellanies," 1854; "The Panorama," 1856; "Home Ballads and Poems," 1860; "In War Time, and other Poems," 1863; "National Lyrics," 2 vols., 1865-66; "Snowbound: a Winter Idyl," 1866; "The Tent on the Beach," 1867; "Among the Hills, and other Poems," 1868; "Ballads of New Eng-

Besides these, various fine illustrated editions of some of his shorter poems have been published separately. In 1875 he published a collection of poetry, under the title of "Songs of Three Centuries." A final edition of his works revised by himself was published in 1888-89 (7 vols.).

WHYMPER, Edward, artist, author, and traveller, second son of the well-known engraver and water-colour painter, was born in London, April 27, 1840, and educated at Clarendon House School, and under private tuition. He was trained as a draughtsman on wood, but preferring active to sedentary employment, undertook a series of journeys which eventually changed the course of his life. In 1861 he ascended Mont Pelvoux (then reputed to be the highest mountain in France), and discovered from its summit another mountain 500 feet higher—the Pointe des Écrins—which is the loftiest of the French Alps, and was subsequently ascended by Mr. Whympers in 1864. Between the years 1861-5, in a series of expeditions remarkable for boldness and success, he ascended one peak after another of mountains till then reputed to be inaccessible. These expeditions culminated in the ascent of the Matterhorn (14,780 feet), July 14, 1865, on which occasion his companions, the Rev. Charles Hudson, Mr. Hadow, and Lord Francis Douglas, and one of the guides, lost their lives. In 1867 he travelled in N. W. Greenland with the intention of exploring its fossiliferous deposits, and, if possible, of penetrating into its interior. This journey was characterised by Sir Roderick Murchison as "truly the ne plus ultra of British geographical adventure on the part of an individual!" No account of it has been published, although upon it Mr. Whympers obtained cones of magnolia, and the fruits of other trees, which demonstrated the former existence of luxuriant vegetation in these high northern latitudes. This fine collection of fossil plants was described by Professor Heer in the Transactions of the Royal Society in 1869 and the first set was secured for the British Museum, where a selection is now exhibited. In 1871 Mr. Whympers published an account of his Alpine journeys, under the title "Scrambles amongst the Alps in the Years 1860-69," London, 1871. In recognition of the value of this work, its author received from the King of Italy the decoration of Chevalier of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. In May, 1872, he again left Copenhagen for North Greenland, and spent the season among the mountains, returning on Nov. 9 to Denmark, bringing back from this, his second exploring journey in Greenland, rich collections, among them fine specimens of fossil wood. In the years 1879-80, Mr. Whympers travelled in the Republic of Ecuador, exploring, ascending, and measuring the Great Andes on and near the Equator. On that journey he made the first ascents of Chimborazo (20,517 feet), Sincholagua, Antisana, Cayambe and Cotacachi. Large zoological collections were made, which are now in course of description. The rocks obtained in that journey were described by Professor Bonney in the "Proceedings" of the Royal Society, 1884.

WICKHAM, The Rev. Edward Charles, M.A., son of Rev. Edward Wickham, for many years master of an important school at Brook Green, Hammersmith, afterwards Vicar of Preston Candover, Hants, was born Dec. 7, 1834, and educated at Winchester College and at New College, Oxford (B.A. 1856, M.A. 1859). He won the Chancellor's Prizes for Latin Verso 1856, Latin Essay 1857, and was elected Fellow of New College 1854. After being ordained, he went as Assistant Master to Winchester, 1857-1859; and afterwards became Tutor of New College, Oxford, 1859-1873; Whitehall Preacher, 1872, 1873; Select Preacher in the University of Oxford, 1865-6, 1884-5; Master of Wellington College, 1873. He is the editor of "Horace" in the Clarendon Press series; and married Dec. 27, 1873, Agnes, eldest daughter of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.

WIEDEMANN, Professor Gustav Heinrich, born in Berlin, Oct. 2, 1826, where he has studied physics and chemistry since 1844; in 1850 he established himself as private teacher of physics; in 1854 he became Professor-in-ordinary of physics at the University of Basel; 1863 at the Carolinum Technical Academy at Brunswick;

1866 Professor at the Technical Academy at Karlsruhe; 1871 Professor of physical chemistry; and 1887 Professor of physics at the University of Leipzig. His researches mostly concern the science of electricity and magnetism. Among other things they touch upon the relation between the transmission of heat and electricity, electric endosmose, the relation between the mechanical and magnetic condition of bodies, as well as the dependence of the latter on chemical combination. He wrote "Lehre von Galvanismus und Electro-magnetismus," 2 vols., 1860-61; and "Die Lehre von der Electricitat," 4 vols., 1882-1885. Since 1877 Professor Wiedemann has edited the Annalen der Physik und Chemie, founded in 1790, and continued by Gilbert and Pogendorff.

WILBERFORCE, The Right Rev. Ernest Roland, D.D., Bishop of Newcastle, is the third surviving son of the late Right Rev. Samuel Wilberforce, successively Bishop of Oxford and of Winchester, by Emily, eldest daughter and heiress of the late Rev. John Sargent of Lavington House, near Petworth, Sussex. His lordship was born at Brighthelm, in the Isle of Wight, Jan. 22, 1840, and educated at Harrow, and at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A. 1864, M.A. 1867, D.D. 1882). He was ordained deacon in 1864 by his father, as Curate of Cuddesdon, Oxfordshire; and was admitted with priest's orders by him in the following year. In 1866 he was appointed Rector of Middleton Stoney, Oxfordshire; but he resigned the living in 1869, and became domestic Chaplain to his father. He was appointed, by Mr. Gladstone, Vicar of Seaforth, near Liverpool, in 1873; and was nominated to a Canonry in Winchester Cathedral, with mission work attached to it, in 1878. He held the post of Sub-Almoner to Her Majesty from 1871 till 1882, when he was appointed first Bishop of the newly created See of Newcastle-on-Tyne. His lordship married first in 1863, Frances, daughter of Sir Charles Anderson, Bart. (she died 1870), and secondly in 1874 Emily, only daughter of the late Very Rev. George Henry Connor, Dean of Windsor, and has issue, by his second marriage, a son and three daughters.

WILDE, Henry, F.R.S., was born at Manchester, Jan. 19, 1833. His tastes led him in early life to engage in electro-mechanical pursuits, and enabled him, in 1858-1864, to make some improvements in lightning conductors and electric telegraphs, for which he obtained several patents. In 1864 he made the discovery that quantities of magnetism and electricity, indefinitely small, will induce quantities of these forces indefinitely great. To demonstrate this principle he constructed, in 1865, an electro-magnetic induction machine, or "Dynamo," as the machine is now known in commerce, the electro-magnet of which was excited by an initial amount of magnetism sufficient only to sustain a weight of forty pounds, while the electro-magnet was excited to a degree estimated to sustain a weight of 25 tons. The electric current generated from this machine fused a rod of platinum two feet long and one-fourth of an inch in diameter, and produced from carbon points a powerful electric light for the first time from an electro-magnet excited entirely by magneto-electricity. (Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1866; Philosophical Transactions, 1867.) In 1869 he discovered the property of the alternating current to control and render synchronous the rotations of the armatures of a number of magneto-electric or "dynamo" machines, by which their united effect can be obtained without the use of mechanical gearing. (Philosophical Magazine 1870.) Through his various inventions he successfully applied his discoveries to the production and employment of the electric search light in the Royal Navy, as a protection against torpedoes and for other purposes, in which branch of the service, after lengthened trials at Spithead in 1874-75, it was definitely adopted. His methods of producing, regulating and projecting electric light have also been utilized in the navigation of the Suez Canal during the night, by which the carrying capacity of the canal has been nearly doubled. He has also largely applied his discoveries and inventions for generating electricity to the electro-deposition of metals from their solutions (1867-1880), which have superseded the voltaic battery in the electro-plating industries of Birmingham, Sheffield, and the United States, to the great advantage of the health and comfort of the operatives employed therein. In 1876 he solved, for the first time, the problem of the economic production of electro-coppered iron rollers used for calico printing as a substitute for solid copper rollers. In 1878 he discovered some definite quantitative relations subsisting between astronomical and chemical phenomena, which revealed some remarkable multiple relations among the atomic weights of the natural groups of elements. The new atomic relations also bear a much closer resemblance to homologous series in organic chemistry than had hitherto been observed, and just as Liebig predicted the existence of the homologous series of amides, and the properties of their compounds ten years before they were actually discovered, so the missing members of homologous series of elements have also been predicted. (Proceedings and Memoirs of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, 1878—1886). Mr. Wilde has also made other contributions to theoretical and experimental physics, in the Philosophical Magazine and in the Proceedings and Memoirs of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society. On the expiration of the several patents for his inventions relating to the generation of electricity he retired from the exercise of his profession of "Electrical Engineer," which style and title he was the first to adopt. He takes an active interest in the advancement of science and the higher education, and has given substantial aid to institutions for the promotion of these objects. For his discovery of the indefinite increase of the magnetic and electric forces from quantities indefinitely small, the Executive Council of the International Inventions Exhibition, London, 1885, awarded him a Gold Medal, although not an exhibitor. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1886, and is a Governor of the Owens College, Manchester.

WILDE, Oscar, was born in Dublin in 1856, and is the son of Sir William R. Wills Wilde, M.D., Surgeon-Oculist to Her Majesty, Antiquarian, Statistician, and man of letters; and of Jane Francesca, Lady Wilde, known as a poetess, and woman of letters. Oscar Wilde was educated at Portora Royal School, Enniskillen; proceeded to Trinity College, Dublin, of which he was Scholar; and, on having obtained the Berkeley Gold Medal for Greek, went to Oxford in 1874. He obtained first Demyship at Magdalen College; a First Class in Moderations, 1876; and a First Class in Greats; and Newdigate Prize for English poetry, 1878. He came to London, 1879, and was the originator of the Æsthetic movement. He published a volume of Poems in 1880; proceeded to America in 1881, where he delivered over 200 lectures on Art. His drama of "Vera" was produced in New York in 1882; "The Happy Prince and Other Fairy Tales" was published in 1888. He is also a contributor of critical articles to the Nineteenth Century, the Fortnightly Review, the Pall Mall Gazette, the Saturday Review, Athenæum, English Illustrated Magazine, Macmillan's Magazine, and Blackwood's Magazine, in which appeared a curious new theory about Shakespeare's Sonnets. He also wrote "Dorian Gray," a novel of modern life, which appeared in Lippincott's Magazine. He has travelled a great deal in Greece and Italy. Mr. Oscar Wilde married, in 1884, Constance, daughter of Horace Lloyd, Esq., Q.C. Issue:—Cyril, born 1885; Vivian, born 1886.

WILHELMINA, Hélène Pauline Marie (Queen of the Netherlands), the only child of King William III., by Queen Emma, his second wife, was born at La Haye on Aug. 31, 1880, and succeeded to the throne, on the death of her father, on Nov. 23, 1890; her mother having, shortly before, in consequence of the King's illness, been appointed Queen Regent.

WILKINSON, The Right Rev. George Howard, Bishop of Truro, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1855; M.A. 1859). He was curate of Kensington, 1857-59; perpetual curate of Seabam Harbour, 1859-63, and of Auckland, Durham, 1863-67. In 1867 he was appointed incumbent of St. Peter's, Great Windmill Street, London; and in 1870 he became vicar of St. Peter's, Eaton Square. He was also an honorary canon of Truro Cathedral, and examining chaplain to the bishop of that diocese. He was select preacher at Oxford 1879-81. In Jan., 1883, he was appointed to the See of Truro, which had become vacant by the promotion of Dr. Benson to the Archbishopric of Canterbury; and he was consecrated by the new Primate, in St. Paul's Cathedral, on April 25. He is the author of several works on devotional and other religious subjects.

WILKINSON, James John Garth, F.R.G.S., eldest son of James John Wilkinson, of Durham, born in Acton Street, Gray's Inn Lane, London, in 1812, was educated at a private school at Mill Hill, and Totteridge, Herts. He translated "Swedenborg's Animal Kingdom," 1843-4, and has written "Swedenborg, a Biography," 1849; "The Human Body and its Connection with Man," 1851; "The Ministry of Health," about 1856; "Unlicensed Medicine," a pamphlet; "Improvisations from the Spirit," 1857; "On the Cure, Arrest, and Isolation of Smallpox, by a new Method; and on the Local Treatment of Erysipelas, and all Internal Inflammations; with a Postscript on Medical Freedom," 1864; and a pamphlet, "On Social Health," 1865; also, "Human Sciences, Good and Evil, and its Works," and "Divine Revelation and its Works and Sciences," 1876; "The Greater Origins and Issues of Life and Death," 1885; "Revelation, Mythology, Correspondences," 1887; "Oannes according to Berosus: a Study in the Church of the Ancients," 1888; "The Soul is Form and doth the Body Make: Chapters in Psychology," 1890.

WILKINSON, The Right Rev. Thomas, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle. He is the son of George Hutton Wilkinson, Esq., Recorder of Newcastle, and its first County Court Judge, who married Miss Elizabeth Jane Pearson, heiress of Harperley Park, a large estate in the county of Durham. He was born at Harperley on April 5, 1825. His early education was in the house of the Rector of Ovingham, on the river Tyne, and at the age of thirteen he went to Harrow. Having finished his studies there he spent four years at the University of Durham. His intention then was to take orders in the Church of England, and he joined a community of young men preparing for orders at the church of St. Saviour's in Leeds. After many doubts as to his religious position, unsatisfied by the arguments of Dr. Pusey and others whom he consulted, he, with several of his companions at St. Saviour's, was received into the Roman Catholic Church on Dec. 29, 1846. After a course of theological studies at Oscott, he was ordained priest at Ushaw College, near Durham, on Dec. 23, 1848. From that time till 1871 he led an uneventful life of constant toil among a mining population, first at Wolsingham, then at Crook, both places in the immediate neighbourhood of his father's estate. In 1865 he was elected Canon of the Chapter of Hexham. At length in 1871, owing to the constant labours of his missionary life, his health broke down, and he was compelled to seek absolute rest. In 1887, his health having been partially restored, he was again brought to the front. Dr. Bewick, Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle, had died in 1886, and Provost Consitt, the Vicar Capitular or administrator of the Diocese during the vacancy, in July, 1887. In the election of a successor to the latter, the unanimous choice of the Chapter fell on Canon Wilkinson, who from that time governed the diocese till the arrival of the new Bishop, Dr. O'Callaghan, in March, 1888, becoming then Vicar-General and Provost of the Chapter. In consequence of the feeble health of Dr. O'Callaghan, Provost Wilkinson was, in May, 1888, appointed by the Pope, Bishop-Auxiliary with administrative powers, and was consecrated at Ushaw College on July 25. On the resignation of Dr. O'Callaghan he was made Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle, and was enthroned in his Cathedral Church at Newcastle on February 18, 1890.

WILKS, Samuel, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., born at Camberwell, June 2, 1824, was educated at University College, London. He was created M.D. of the London University in 1850; became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1856; a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1870; Physician to Guy's Hospital and Lecturer on Medicine; President of the Pathological Society; a Member of the Senate of the University of London, and of the General Medical Council; Vice-President of the Royal College of Physicians; and Physician to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Dr. Wilks is the author of "Lectures on Pathological Anatomy," and "Lectures on Diseases of the Nervous System." He was formerly editor of the "Guy's Hospital Reports." He was member of the Medical Commission on the Contagious Diseases Act, 1868; a member of the Royal Commission on Contagious Diseases Act, 1871; was formerly Examiner in Medicine at the Royal College of Surgeons and at the University of London. Dr. Wilks has contributed papers on Alcoholism and Vivisection to the Contemporary Review and the Nineteenth Century. He delivered the Harveian Oration at the Royal College of Physicians, June 26, 1879.

WILLARD, Miss Frances Elizabeth, was born Sept. 28, 1839, at Churchville, near Rochester, New York, and is the daughter of the Hon. Josiah F. and Mary Thompson Hill Willard. She is a graduate of the North Western University, Chicago; and took the degree of A.M. from Syracuse University. In 1863 she was Professor of Natural Science at the North West Female College, Evanston, Ill.; 1866-67 she was Preceptress Genesee in the Wesleyan Seminary, Leima, New York; 1868 to 1870 (about two years and a half) travelled abroad—studying French, German, Italian and the History of the Fine Arts; visited nearly every European Capital; went to Greece, Egypt, and Palestine; 1871, was President of the Women's College of North Western University, and Professor of Æsthetics in the University; 1874, Corresponding Secretary of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union; 1877, was associated with D. L. Moody in revival work in Boston; 1878, President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Illinois, and editor of the Chicago Daily Post; 1879, President of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, the largest society ever organized, conducted and controlled exclusively by women. In 1880 she was President of the American Commission which placed the portrait of Mrs. President Hayes in the White House as a testimonial to her example as a total abstainer. She made the tour of the Southern States in 1883, and founded, and everywhere introduced, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, for the cause of Gospel Temperance, Total Abstinence, the Prohibition of the sale of Alcoholic Drinks, and the Ballot for Women. She travelled thirty thousand miles that year in the United States, visiting every State and Territory, accompanied by her private secretary, Miss Anna A. Gordon of Boston. Miss Willard gave to the National Women's Christian Temperance Union its motto: "For God and Home and Native Land," and classified its forty departments of work under the heads of Preventive, Educational, Evangelistic, Social, Legal and Organizing. In 1884 she helped to establish the Prohibition (of intoxicating drinks) Party and was a member of its executive committee, which nominated Governor John P. St. John of Kansas for President of the United States of the National Prohibitory Convention, Pittsburgh, Pa. In 1887 Miss Willard was elected President of the Women's Council of the United States, formed from confederated societies of women; and in the same year she was elected to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which represents 100 annual conferences and two million church members; and in 1889 she was elected to the Ecumenical conference of the same church. She is the originator of the great petition against the alcohol and opium trade (two million names being secured), which is to be presented to all governments by a commission of women. She is likewise the authoress of the "Home Protection Movement," to give women in America the ballot on all temperance questions and of the following works:—"Nineteen Beautiful Years," 1863; "Hints and Helps in Temperance Work," 1875; "Women and Temperance," 1883; "How to Win," 1886; "Woman in the Pulpit," 1888; "Glimpses of Fifty Years: The Autobiography of an American Woman." The first edition of this work consisted of fifty thousand copies. Miss Willard was one of the Directors of Woman's Temperance Publishing House, Chicago; this house printed one hundred and twenty million pages of temperance literature in 1889, employs five editors, 150 hands, and is conducted solely by women. She is the chief contributor to The Union Signal, Chicago, the official organ of the National Women's Christian Union. She is associated with Joseph Cook as editor of Our Day (Boston). She is one of the Board of Directors of the Women's National Temperance Hospital, Chicago; and the Women's Temperance Temple, Chicago; which latter cost over one million dollars, and the chief room in which is called Willard Hall. Her birthday (Sept. 28) is celebrated by Children's Temperance Societies throughout the United States as a "Harvest Home." Miss Willard is also at the head of the Social Purity (white corps) work of the World's and National Women's Christian Temperance Union, which has secured from the National and State Legislatures laws for the better protection of women, and works for the scientific education of the people in habits of personal purity.

WILLIAM II., Frederick William Victor Albert, King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany, is the grandson of Her Majesty the Queen of England, being the son of the Empress Frederick. He was born in Berlin, Jan. 27, 1859; was educated at Cassel, and passed through the ordinary discipline of that establishment until 1877, when he entered the University of Bonn. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, the late Emperor Frederick, June 15, 1888. His Majesty was married in Berlin, Feb. 27, 1881, to Augusta Victoria, Duchesse de Sleswig-Holstein-Sonderbourg-Augustenburg, a niece of Prince Christian, and has six children. In Aug., 1889, and again in 1890, the Emperor paid a visit to the Queen at Osborne. On his return to Berlin in 1889 he received visits from the King of Sweden, the King of Denmark, the King of Italy, the Emperor of Austria, and the Czar of Russia. Subsequently he visited Athens to be present at the marriage of his sister, the Princess Sophie to the Crown Prince of Greece; thence he proceeded to Constantinople on a visit to the Sultan.

WILLIAMS, Charles, was born at Coleraine, Ireland, May 4, 1838, of a family originally of Worcestershire and Penryn. He was educated at Belfast Academy under Dr. Bryce, and at Greenwich under Dr. Goodwin, and was appointed leader-writer and reviewer on the Evening Herald in 1859. He became special correspondent of the Standard in Oct., 1859, and was senior special correspondent of that journal till Jan. 1, 1870, when he accepted the editorship of the Evening Standard, but he resigned in 1872 to resume his old post. He retired from the Standard in 1874, in consequence of a change of management. Mr. Williams saw some service while young in South and Central America, and he accompanied the head quarters of the army of the Loire at the beginning of the second phase of the Franco-German war, and was one of the first two correspondents in Strasburg after the fall of that city in 1870. In 1877 he went to Armenia as correspondent on the staff of Ghazi Mukhtar Pacha, and published an account of his experience in a work entitled "The Armenian Campaign: a Diary of the Campaign of 1877 in Armenia and Kurdistan," London, 1878. He served afterwards in the ranks of special correspondents at the defence, by Mukhtar Pacha, of the lines of Constantinople, and was with the head quarters of General Skobelev at the moment when the Treaty of San Stefano was signed. He subsequently went through the task of recording the phases of the Berlin Congress, and in Nov., 1878, proceeded to Afghanistan, where he visited Candahar, and wrote some "Notes on Frontier Transport in India." He was the only English correspondent with the Bulgarians under Prince Alexander in the 1885 campaign against Serbia. He accompanied the Soudan expedition, and attracted some attention by an attack on Sir Charles Wilson for his conduct of the force told off to advance upon Khartoum. Among his other works are a short treatise on "England's Defences," and some reprints on ecclesiastical questions, besides articles and stories in Temple Bar, and other periodicals. He was for a time the managing editor of the Evening News.

WILLIAMS, The Right Rev. James William, D.D., Bishop of Quebec, was born at Overton, Hampshire, Sept. 15, 1825. He was educated at Crewkerne school and at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A., taking classical honours in 1851, and proceeded M.A. Having been ordained, he held curacies in Bucks and Somerset, and went to Canada in 1857, to organize a school in connection with Bishop's College, Lennoxville, in which he held the post of Rector of the school and Professor of Belles Lettres. In 1863 he was consecrated fourth bishop of Quebec, when the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him.

WILLIAMS, The Hon. Roland Vaughan, B.A., Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, is a son of the late Right Hon. Sir Edward Vaughan Williams, formerly one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, and was born in 1838. He was educated at Oxford, where he graduated B.A., and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Michaelmas Term, 1864, when he chose the South-Eastern (then the Home) Circuit, also practising as a special pleader, and at the Surrey Sessions. He received the honour of silk in 1889. Mr. Williams married, in 1865, Laura S., youngest daughter of the late Mr. Edmund Lomax, of Netley, Surrey.

WILLIAMS, William Mattieu, F.R.A.S., F.C.S., was born in London, Feb. 6, 1820; and, to use his own expression, was "wretchedly educated during early boyhood, in three characteristic specimens of the 'Academy for Young Gentlemen,' which prevailed at the period—crammed therein with the contents of 'Carpenter's Spelling Book,' 'Walkingame's Arithmetic,' 'Lindley Murray's Grammar,' 'Goldsmith's Geography,' and the 'Eton Latin Grammar,' he was sufficiently disgusted with the latter to start afresh in a better way; and entered the London Mechanics' Institution in 1834, when Dr. Birkbeck was President, Lord Brougham, Sir Francis Burdett, Joseph Hume, Bishop Thirlwall, and other good men and true were its active working supporters." He there attended all the public lectures and joined the classes for Mathematics, Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Phrenology, Literary Composition, French, &c.; and ultimately became Lecturer in some of the classes, and member of the Committee of Management. In 1841 he entered the University of Edinburgh to supplement the above, and travelled on foot through a considerable part of Europe with the same object. He was Master of the Williams' Secular School in Edinburgh from 1854 to 1863: Professor of Experimental Physics and Chemistry in the Birmingham and Midland Institute from 1854 to 1863; and subsequently engaged in business, in literary work and in lecturing. He is the author of "The Fuel of the Sun;" "Through Norway with a Knapsack;" "Through Norway with Ladies;" "A Simple Treatise on Heat;" "Science in Short Chapters;" "The Chemistry of Cookery;" "The Philosophy of Clothing;" "The Chemistry of Iron and Steel Making;" "Short Hand for Everybody;" the Canton Lectures on "Iron and Steel;" on "Mathematical Instruments;" and on "The Scientific Basis of Cookery;" also "Science Notes" in the Gentleman's Magazine from 1880 to 1889; and various essays and other contributions to Magazines, Newspapers, and the "Transactions" of learned societies. He has now retired from business, lecturing, &c., and is engaged in completing scientific work which has been many years in hand.

WILLIAMSON, Professor Alexander William, Ph.D., F.R.S., LL.D., Dublin and Edinburgh, born May 1, 1824, was educated chiefly in his father's house, by masters in London, Paris, and Dijon; and for a very short time at Kensington Grammar School, and at foreign schools. From the age of seventeen he studied in the Universities of Heidelberg and Giessen, under Gmelin and Liebig. At Giessen he published his first chemical researches. He afterwards spent three years in Paris studying the higher mathematics. In 1849 he was appointed Professor of Practical Chemistry in University College, London; and in 1855, Professor of Chemistry in the same college, while still retaining the chair of Practical Chemistry. Soon after his first appointment at University College, Professor Williamson published his researches on "Etherification and the Constitution of Salts." The result of those researches had a considerable influence on the theories of chemical action, and they have since been adopted by the chief English and foreign chemists. For those important and successful labours the Royal Medal of the Royal Society was awarded to him in 1862. He has twice been President of the Chemical Society. In 1873 he was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. The same year he was elected Foreign Secretary of the Royal Society, a Corresponding Member of the French Academy, and a Fellow of the Berlin Chemical Society. In 1874 he was elected Treasurer of the British Association, on the retirement of Mr. Spottiswoode. In Nov., 1875, the Royal Academy of Science at Berlin elected him a corresponding member of the Section of Physics and Mathematics, and he was appointed member of the Senate of the University of London. In April, 1876, he was appointed Chief Gas Examiner to the City of London. The University of Dublin conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1878. The University of Edinburgh has conferred on him the degree of LL.D. since. Professor Williamson took an active part in promoting the establishment of degrees of science at the University of London; and for some years held, conjointly with the late Professor Wm. Allen Miller, the office of Examiner in Chemistry. He is also a corresponding member of the Reale Accademia dei Lincei in Rome, and of the Royal Society of Science at Göttingen. He has lately taken an active part in promoting the formation of a Teaching University in London. In 1887, he resigned his professorship at University College, and was elected Emeritus Professor. In 1889 he resigned his post of Foreign Secretary to the Royal Society. He has written "Chemistry for Students;" various papers on "Etherification;" "The Development of Difference the Basis of Unity;" being the inaugural lecture to the Faculty of Arts at University College on his appointment there in 1849; "On the Atomic Theory;" "The Composition of the Gases evolved by the Bath Spring called King's Bath;" a paper "On a New Method of Gas Analysis," jointly with W. J. Russell, Ph.D.; "On the Unit Volume of Gases;" "On the Classification of the Elements in Relation to their Atomicities;" "Experimental Science the Basis of General Education;" "A Plea for Pure Science;" "Address to the British Association" at Bradford, 1873. He married, in 1855, the third daughter of Professor T. Hewitt Key, F.R.S., of University College.

WILLIAMSON, Benjamin, A.M., F.R.S., Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Dublin, was born in 1827, at Cork; educated at Kilkenny College and Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1848 as First Senior Moderator in Mathematics and Mathematical Physics. He was elected Fellow of Trinity College, in 1852, and appointed a College Tutor in 1858. In 1871 he published "A Treatise on the Differential Calculus," which reached, in 1889, a 7th edition. In 1872, he produced a companion volume on the "Integral Calculus," of which the 5th edition was published in 1888. In 1884, in conjunction with F. A. Tait, F.R.C.D., he brought out a "Treatise on Dynamics," of which a 2nd edition appeared in 1889. Mr. Williamson was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879; and, in 1884, was appointed to the Professorship of Natural Philosophy in his University. Mr. Williamson contributed several articles to the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," of which may be mentioned those on the "Infinitesimal Calculus," "Calculus of Variations," "Variable Complex," and "MacLaurin." He also contributed articles to the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, Hermathena, as well as to other scientific journals.

WILLIAMSON, Professor William C., biologist and geologist, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Scarborough on Nov. 24, 1816; his father was for some time head-gardener to the then Earl of Mulgrave at Lyth Castle near Whitby. Having laboured indefatigably in exploring the Geology and Zoology of the coast of Yorkshire, and made a rich collection of its fossils and recent shells, he was, in 1828, appointed Curator of the well-known Museum of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Scarborough, amongst the collections of which much of his son's early youth was beneficially spent. He was destined for the medical profession, but, in 1835, accepted the Curatorship of the Museum of the Manchester Natural History Society. Whilst at Scarborough he contributed to the Geological Society of London the first of three memoirs on the "Vertical Distribution of the Organic Remains in the Strata of the Yorkshire Coast," and one to the Zoological Society of London on the "Birds of the Yorkshire Coast," as well as published a description of the well-known Tumulus and its contents, then recently opened on Gristhorpe Cliff. On reaching Manchester, his attention was at once directed to the local geology, and soon resulted in the publication, in the Philosophical Magazine, of a memoir on the Remarkable Limestones of Ardwick which occupied the uppermost part of the carboniferous strata in that neighbourhood. In 1838 he resumed his medical studies, first in the Manchester Medical School, Pine Street, and afterwards in the University College of London; and in Jan., 1841, commenced as a medical practitioner in Manchester. Soon after that, he began a series of investigations amongst the Recent Foraminifera, the results of which were a succession of memoirs on their minute organisation, culminating, in 1848, in the publication, by the Ray Society, of his monograph on the Recent Foraminifera of Great Britain, and in a memoir on the minute organisms found in the marine mud of the Levant. This latter memoir contained the first announcement of the existence in some of the deeper seas of what is now known as the Foraminiferous Ooze. The study of some histological features of human bones and teeth led to an examination of the scales and bones of recent and fossil fishes. Two memoirs on these subjects were published in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, in which he announced his conclusion that the scales and dermal teeth of fishes were the homologues of the oral teeth of the mammaliæ, the latter being but the relics of the dermal system so extensively developed in fishes. The publication of these two memoirs led to his election as a F.R.S. In 1851, the Owens College of Manchester began its career; when Mr. Williamson was elected its first Professor of Biology and Geology. As the institution expanded, this too-comprehensive chair was divided, and for many years past his academic labours have been confined to the Professorship of Botany. Circumstances then drew his attention to the Carboniferous Plants of Lancashire and Yorkshire. The result of these later studies has been the publication, in the Philosophical Transactions, of seventeen memoirs, "On the Organisation of the Fossil Plants of the Coal Measures." On receiving the sixth of this series, the Royal Society recognised them by awarding him their Royal Medal. The Wollaston Gold Medal of the Geological Society was awarded to Dr. Williamson in 1890. Dr. Williamson has been President, and now is Senior Vice-President of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester. The University of Edinburgh conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. The Göttingen Academy of Sciences elected him one of its foreign members, and the Royal Society of Sweden elected him to the place left vacant by the death of Asa Gray.

WILLS, The Hon. Sir Alfred, a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division, was born in 1828; entered the Middle Temple, by which Inn he was called to the Bar in 1851; was made Q.C. in 1872; and appointed Judge in 1884. He was made President of the Railway Commission in 1888.

WILLS, William Gorman, born in 1828, in Kilkenny co., Ireland, kept all his terms at Trinity College, Dublin, but did not graduate. He studied at an early age at the Royal Irish Academy as an art student. Mr. Wills is chiefly known as a dramatist. his principal plays being "The Man o' Airlie," 1866; "Hinko," 1871; "Charles the First," 1872; "Eugene Aram," 1873; and "Mary Queen o' Scots: or, the Catholic Queen and the Protestant Reformer," 1874; "Buckingham," 1875. About that period Mr. Wills resumed the practice of his other art, portrait-painting, having had a large number of sitters, and among them the Princess Louise and the infant Princess Victoria. Among Mr. Wills's more recent contributions to dramatic literature is "Jane Shore," 1876, produced at the Princess's Theatre, where it ran for five consecutive months. It was then played in the provinces till Dec., 1877, when it was again reproduced at the Princess's. "England in the Days of Charles II.," 1877; "Ninon," which ran for more than three months. It was followed by "Olivia;" "Nell Gwynne;" and "Vanderdecken," 1878, a poetical drama written by Mr. Wills, in conjunction with Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, and based on the legend of the Flying Dutchman. "William and Susan," 1880; "Juanna" and "Sedgemoor," 1881; "Claudian," 1885. In conjunction with Mr. Sydney Grundy Mr. Wells wrote "Madame Pompadour." Mr. Wills has also written several novels, the best known being "The Wife's Evidence" and "Notice to Quit," both which have been republished in America.

WILSON, Sir Charles Rivers, K.C.M.G., C.B., was born in London, Feb. 19, 1831, and educated at Eton, and Balliol College, Oxford. He was appointed Clerk in the Treasury in Feb., 1856; was Private Secretary consecutively to Mr. James Wilson and Mr. George Alexander Hamilton, Secretaries of the Treasury; Acting Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, from Aug., 1867, to Feb., 1868; Private Secretary to Mr. Lowe, Chancellor of the Exchequer, from Dec., 1868, to April, 1873; and was appointed Comptroller-General of the National Debt Office in April, 1873. Mr. Wilson represented (with the late Professor Graham) Her Majesty's Government at the International Coinage Commission in 1867, and acted as Secretary to the Royal Commission appointed to examine the question of an International Coinage in 1868. On the return of Mr. Cave to England from his Financial Mission to Egypt, Mr. Rivers Wilson, at the request of the Khedive, went to Egypt in March, 1876, with the view of his acceptance of a financial post in that country; but after the issue of the decree of May 7, 1876, by which an arbitrary readjustment of the Public Debt of Egypt was proposed, he returned to England, and resumed his post at the National Debt Office. On July 29, 1876, he was appointed one of the British Government Administrators of the Suez Canal Company; on Jan. 22, 1877, he was appointed a Royal Commissioner for the Paris Exhibition of 1878; on March 30, 1878, he was appointed Vice-President, and in the absence of M. de Lesseps acted as President, of an International Commission of Inquiry, instituted by the Khedive, at the instigation of the foreign governments, to examine the resources of Egypt, and propose measures for remedying the financial disorder in that country. The Report of the Commission, Aug. 19, 1878, traced the whole of the mischief to the system of personal administration by the Viceroy, and proposed that His Highness should surrender his estates and those of his family to make good the deficit in the revenue, and pay the large floating debt of the country. The immediate consequence of the presentation of their Report was an acceptance by the Khedive of all its conclusions, and a formal announcement to Mr. Rivers Wilson of the determination of His Highness to abandon his actual system of government for one more in conformity with European experience, and to govern in future by means of a responsible ministry. The formation of the new cabinet was entrusted to Nubar Pacha, who offered to Mr. Rivers Wilson the Post of Finance Minister. With the consent of Her Majesty's Government, Mr. Rivers Wilson accepted this position (Sept., 1878) until Jan. 1, 1881, when he would have been at liberty to return to his office of Comptroller-General of the National Debt Office. In April, 1879, however, the Khedive struck the blow he had long been meditating. He dismissed Mr. Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières; and soon afterwards Mr. Rivers Wilson was recalled by the English Government in order to resume his duties at the National Debt Office. He was created a K.C.M.G. in Jan., 1880. On April 5 in that year the new Khedive, Tewfik Pacha, signed a decree appointing Sir Rivers Wilson President of the International Commission of Liquidation. In Oct., 1880, he received the royal licence and authority to accept and wear the insignia of the First Class of the Turkish Order of the Medjidieh. In May, 1881, Sir Rivers Wilson was appointed a Royal Commissioner for the negotiation of a Treaty of Commerce with France; and in March, 1885, he was one of the delegates who assembled in Paris for drawing up an Act relative to the navigation of the Suez Canal.

WILSON, Sir Charles William, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., C.B. (civ.), D.C.L. (Oxon), LL.D. (Edin.), F.R.S., F.R.G.S., &c., a Colonel in the Royal Engineers, was born in March, 1836, and entered the Royal Engineers in 1855. After passing through the usual grades, he became Colonel in 1883. Before that date, however, he had gained distinction of a special kind, first as Secretary to the North American Boundary Commission, then for his surveys of Jerusalem and

the Sinaïtic Desert, then by his work in connection with the Palestine exploration fund, then as Director of the Topographical Department of the War Office, then by his organization of the Intelligence Department, in which he served as Assistant Adjutant-General, then as Director of the Survey of Ireland, then as British Commissioner on the Servian Boundary Commission, and then as Consul-General appointed in pursuance of the Anglo-Turkish Convention in Asia Minor, a post which he held from 1879 to 1882. He served in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, for which he obtained a Medal and a Bronze Star; and was afterwards attached to Lord Dufferin's Special Mission in Egypt. When the Soudan Expedition was sent out, Sir Charles Wilson was appointed Chief of the Intelligence Department. He was present at the actions of Abu Klea and Gubat, and when Sir Herbert Stewart received his fatal wound, the command of the Desert Column devolved upon Sir Charles Wilson. He led the advance to the Nile, fought the action at Metammeh, and commanded the force in its attempt to reach Khartoum and to rescue General Gordon; the story of which he has told in his book "From Korti to Khartoum." For his services he was thanked by Government, and in 1885 was made a K.C.B. He is now Director-General of the Ordnance Survey of the United Kingdom.

WILSON, Sir Daniel, LL.D., F.R.S.E., President of the University of Toronto, Canada, was born in Edinburgh, Jan. 5, 1816, and is an elder brother of Professor George Wilson, the eminent chemist. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh. In 1847 he published "Memorials of Edinburgh in the Olden Time," 2 vols., 4to, illustrated from his own drawings, of which a revised edition in now (1890) in the press. In 1851 appeared his great work, "The Archaeology and Prehistoric Annals of Scotland," with about 200 illustrations drawn by himself. This work, thoroughly revised and greatly enlarged by him, was published in 2 vols, 8vo., in 1863. In 1862 he issued his "Prehistoric Man: Researches into the Origin of Civilization in the Old and the New World," 2 vols., and in 1865 and 1876 enlarged editions of the same work. His latest works are "Chatterton: a Biographical Study," 1869; "Caliban; or, the Missing Link," 1873; "Spring Wild Flowers," 1875; a reprint, with additions, of an earlier volume of poems bearing the same title; "Reminiscences of Old Edinburgh," 1878;

"Anthropology," 1885; and "William Nelson, a Memoir," 1890. He has been Secretary to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, and a Fellow of that Society, when in 1853 he was appointed Professor of History and English Literature in University College, Toronto; and in 1881 succeeded Dr. McCaul in the Presidency of the institution. The growth and prosperity of the University is largely due to his efforts. He was for four years editor of the Journal of the Canadian Institute, and in 1859 and 1860 was President of the Institute. In 1882, he was named, by His Excellency the Marquis of Lorne, a Vice-President of the Literature Section of the Royal Society of Canada, and in 1885 was elected its President. In 1888, Her Majesty conferred on him the honour of knighthood.

WILSON, George Fergusson, F.R.S., F.C.S., descended from old Scotch families, was born at Wandsworth Common, March 25, 1822, and was educated at private schools, at Wandsworth, and at Streatham. He has made many useful inventions which have been patented, some of which still hold their own, but the invention for which he is best known is the distillation of glycerine. Before this invention, glycerine, even that sold at very high prices, was so impure as to be for most purposes comparatively useless; by distillation in a current of super-heated steam, Mr. G. F. Wilson obtained for the first time pure glycerine, now of the greatest value. On Nov. 30, 1854, a short paper by him "On the value of steam in the decomposition of neutral fatty bodies," was read before the Royal Society, and printed in the proceedings; and at the meeting of the British Association in Glasgow, in 1855, he read a paper on distilled glycerine, which concluded with a prophecy that "Pure glycerine will yet take its place among the most valued of modern products; and produced, as it will be, in great quantities, it will be recognised in the arts as well as in medicine as a new, real blessing to mankind." Mr. G. F. Wilson has long been known in the Horticultural World for his orchard house cultivation; and from exhibiting lilies, for which, between 1867 and 1883, he received twenty-five first-class certificates. He filled many posts in the Royal Horticultural Society; and was for a time Treasurer; member of the Expenses Committee; Chairman of the Fruit and afterwards of the Floral Committee; and member of the Scientific Committee. Mr. G. F. Wilson became a member of the Society of Arts in 1845, and was eight years on the Council; he lectured twice before the Society. He was made a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1855, of the Chemical Society in 1855, of the Linnean in 1875, and of the Institute of Chemistry at its commencement. He became a member of the Athenæum Club in 1867.

WILSON, Miss Hilda, was born in Monmouth, in 1860. From infancy music was ever in attendance upon her, her father being a Professor of the art. Possessing considerable talent, Mr. Wilson's services were held in such request as to necessitate his removal to the cathedral city of Gloucester; and the change of residence afforded his young daughter many more educational privileges, as far at least as art was concerned, than her birth-place could by any possibility have furnished. The Choral Society where, as time advanced, she could take part in rehearsing choruses of the great masters, opened up a way for her first appearance in public, for at one of its concerts, Hilda Wilson, a girl of fourteen years of age, first sang before a general audience. The promise of childhood was realised, for her success was great and decided. Friends and patrons began to declare that ere long she would be found amongst the great singers of the triennial festival. To prepare for such an honour, she came in 1879 to London to study at the Royal Academy of Music, where she was instructed in the art of singing by Mr. William Shakespeare. A year after she was permitted to enter upon public duties, and consequently was enabled to accept the offer of an engagement as one of the contralto soloists at the Gloucester Festival of 1880. Returning to the Academy, she prosecuted her studies with so much zeal as to win the "Westmoreland Scholarship," two years in succession, besides obtaining the "Parepa-Rosa Gold Medal," together with the silver and bronze Medals awarded at annual examinations of the institution. Upon leaving in 1882, she was elected an "Associate" of the Academy. In 1883 Miss Wilson again sang as second contralto at the Gloucester Festival; and in the year following, served in the same capacity at the Worcester "Music Meeting." In 1887 she was, however, engaged as principal contralto at the Norwich Festival, and during the past year appeared as leading contralto at the Lincoln, Gloucester, and Leeds festivals.

WILSON, The Rev. J. M., Head Master of Clifton College, was born in 1836. His father, the Rev. E. Wilson, who was a double first-class at Cambridge in 1825, and a Fellow of St. John's, was for many years Vicar of Nocton, Lincoln, and honorary Canon of Lincoln. Mr. Wilson was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man and at Sedbergh Grammar School, and went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1855. He was bracketed for the 2nd Bell Scholarship in 1856, with Henry Sidgwick, who was afterwards Senior Classic. He took his degree in 1859, as Senior Wrangler. He was appointed by Dr. Temple to the post of Natural Science Master at Rugby, and in that capacity, and subsequently as Senior Mathematical Master, he worked at Rugby for twenty years. During those years he was an occasional contributor to the Geological and Astronomical Societies' journals, and founded the Temple Observatory at Rugby. His chief Astronomical work is one in which he was associated with two other amateurs, the "Handbook of Double Stars." In 1879 he was offered the Headmastership of Clifton College, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Percival. Since that time he has been more before the world as the Head Master of a large and very active school, and as a preacher and writer than as a scientific man. A volume of his school sermons has been published by Macmillan; also volumes of Essays and Addresses and Contributions to Religious Thought. He is understood to have taken much interest in Bristol, in its religious and philanthropic and educational work. He is Chaplain to the present Bishop of London.

WINCHESTER, Bishop of. See THOROLD, THE RIGHT REV. ANTHONY WILSON.

WINDTHORST, Ludwig, the Political leader of the German Catholic party in Prussia, was born Jan., 17, 1812. He attended the "Carolinum" in Osnabrück, and continued his studies at Göttingen and Heidelberg. He became an advocate, and then syndic and presiding member of the Consistory at Osnabrück; afterwards, "Ober-Appellationsrath" in Kalbe; from 1863 to 1865 he was Minister of Justice at Hanover; and finally, he was nominated Chief Syndic of the Crown in Kalbe. From 1849 to 1866, he was a member of the Assembly of the Estates of the Realm, and in 1851 President of the Second Chamber of the same. He became a member of the Constituent and the regular Reichstag; and since 1867 he has been a member of the Prussian House of Deputies, boldly upholding the Catholic cause in Germany, in spite of powerful opposition.

WINMARLEIGH (Lord), The Right Hon. John Wilson-Patten, is the eldest son of the late Thomas Wilson-Patten, Esq., of Bank Hall, M.P., who assumed the additional surname of Wilson on succeeding to the estates of Dr. Wilson, Bishop of Sodor and Man. He was born in 1802, and received his education at Eton, together with the late Earls of Derby and Carlisle, Lord Halifax, the Right Hon. Spencer Walpole, and others who have taken a prominent part in public affairs. From Eton he proceeded to Magdalen College, Oxford, and on leaving the University he spent three years on the Continent, visiting most of the countries of Europe. In 1830 he was elected, without opposition, one of the Knights of the Shire in the Conservative interest, for the whole county of Lancaster, as the colleague of Lord Stanley, afterwards thirteenth Earl of Derby. He voted for the second reading of the Reform Bill in 1831, but not having been able to pledge himself to all its details he retired at the general election of that year. However, he was re-elected in 1832 for the Northern Division of the county (comprising the present Northern and North-Eastern Division) as the colleague of the late Earl of Derby (the fourteenth Earl). He continued to be one of the representatives of the old Northern Division of Lancashire without opposition till 1868; on the county being again sub-divided he was elected for the present Northern Division, and remained one of its representatives till 1874, when he was called to the House of Peers. Thus for forty-two years Colonel Wilson-Patten represented North Lancashire in the House of Commons, where he acquired great popularity and a high reputation for skill in debate. While in the Lower House he filled the offices of Chairman of Committees of the whole House, from Nov., 1852, till April, 1853; Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster from June, 1867, to Sept., 1868; and Chief Secretary of Ireland from the last date to December following. The services rendered by him to the Conservative party were rewarded by his elevation to the peerage in March, 1874, when, on the recommendation of Mr. Disraeli, he was created Baron Winmarleigh. From 1842 to 1872 he was Colonel of the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia, and he continues to be its honorary Colonel. He accompanied the regiment to Gibraltar at the time of the Crimean War, and on his return to England he was appointed one of Her Majesty's Aides-de-Camp. His Lordship has acted as Vice-Lieutenant of Lancashire, and he has taken an active interest in most of the agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing questions which have been brought forward in the present half century.

WINTER, John Strange. See STANNARD, MRS. ARTHUR.

WOLF, Rudolf, Astronomer, was born at Zurich, Switzerland, on July 17, 1816, and became Professor at the Swiss Polytechnic and Director of the Zurich Observatory. He is widely known for his work upon Solar spots. The following are among his principal works:—"Neue Untersuchungen ueber die Periode der Sonnenflecken und ihrer Bedeutung," 1852; "Geschichte der Astronomie," 1877; "Geschichte der Vermessungen in der Schweiz," 1879; "Handbuch der Astronomie, ihre Geschichte und Litteratur," 1890; and his "Astronomische Mittheilungen," 1856-90.

WOLFF, The Right Hon. Sir Henry Drummond, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., M.P., P.C., is the eldest son of that eminent missionary and traveller the late Rev. Dr. Joseph Wolff, vicar of Isle-Brewers, Somersetshire, by Lady Georgiana Mary Walpole, daughter of Horatio, second Earl of Orford, of the present creation. He was born at Malta, Oct. 12, 1830, and was educated at Rugby under Dr. Tait, and on the Continent; he entered the Foreign Office in 1840, and was made a permanent clerk in 1849. He was an Attaché at Florence in 1852-58, during part of which time he was acting Chargé d'Affaires. In July, 1856, he was attached to the late Earl of Westmoreland's special mission to Belgium. In 1858 he was appointed Assistant Private Secretary to the Earl of Malmesbury, and afterwards to Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, and the following year was promoted to an assistant clerkship in the Foreign Office. In the same year he was appointed a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and also Secretary to the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. In that and the two following years he sat as a member of several Commissions of inquiry into the civil administration, taxation, and education of the Ionian Islands and their inhabitants, and in 1862, was a commissioner to represent the interests of those islands at the Great Exhibition of that year. He was nominated a K.C.M.G. in 1862, and retired on a pension in June, 1864, on the cessation of the British Protectorate over the Ionian Islands. In 1874 he was elected M.P. for Christchurch in the Conservative interest. He was a member of the Royal Commission on Copyright. In 1878 he was appointed Her Majesty's Commissioner in Eastern Roumelia to represent Great Britain in the preparation of an autonomous constitution for that province. For this service he was appointed a K.C.B., having previously been in succession C.M.G., K.C.M.G., and G.C.M.G. At the election of 1880 he was elected M.P. for Portsmouth. As such he was one of the active group known as the Fourth Party. In June, 1885, he was sworn a Privy Councillor, and in the August following appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Sultan of Turkey, on a special mission with particular reference to the affairs of Egypt, and High Commissioner in Egypt on Nov. 2. In 1888 Sir Henry Drummond Wolff was appointed Ambassador to Teheran. He accompanied the Shah on his recent visit to England, and returned to Teheran in Oct., 1889. He is J.P. for Hampshire and Middlesex, and a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and the Royal Colonial Institute; is the author of a work on "The Residence of the First Napoleon at Elba," of a translation of a work by M. de Lesseps, on "The Suez Canal," and of the "Letters of Memnon," on the same subject, of "The Mother Country and the Colonies," and other pamphlets and articles. He married the only daughter of the late Mr. Sholto Douglas.

WOLSELEY (Viscount), General Sir Garnet Joseph, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., D.C.L., LL.D., son of Major G. J. Wolseley, of the 25th Regiment of Foot, was born at Golden Bridge House, near Dublin, June 4, 1833, and was educated at a private school and under tutors. He entered the army as Ensign in March, 1852; became a Captain in Jan., 1855; Major of the 90th Foot in March, 1858; Lieut.-Col. in the army in April, 1859; and Colonel in June, 1865. He served with the 80th Foot, in the Burmese War of 1852-53, where he was severely wounded, and for which he received a Medal. Afterwards he achieved distinction in the Crimea, where he served with the 90th Light Infantry. At the siege of Sebastopol he was severely wounded, after which he received the Legion of Honour, and the fifth class of the Turkish Order of the Medjidieh. He was also at the siege and capture of Lucknow, and the defence of Alumbagh, when he was made brevet Lieut.-Col. and mentioned with commendation in dispatches. In 1860 he served on the staff of the Chinese campaign, for which he received a Medal and two Claps. He was appointed Deputy Quartermaster-General in Canada in Oct., 1867, and commanded the expedition to the Red River; was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and George in 1870; and was Assistant Adjutant-General at headquarters in 1871. He was appointed in Aug., 1873, to command the troops on the Gold Coast during the Ashantee War, with the local rank of Major-General. On Sept. 12, 1873, he and his staff embarked at Liverpool for the West Coast of Africa. After defeating the enemy, Sir Garnet Wolseley, on Feb. 5, entered Coomassie, and received the submission of the King. The success of the expedition justified the confidence which had been reposed in the Commander-in-Chief. On his return to England Sir Garnet Wolseley received the thanks of Parliament and a Grant of £25,000 for his "courage, energy, and perseverance," in the conduct of the Ashantee War; was created a K.C.B.; and was presented with the freedom of the City of London and a splendid sword of the value of 100 guineas, Oct. 22, 1874. He was appointed to command the auxiliary forces in April, 1874. At the commencement of the following year he was despatched to Natal to administer the government of that colony and to advise upon several important points connected with the management of native affairs and the best form of defensive organization. On Oct. 2, 1875, he landed at Portsmouth, accompanied by his staff, on his return from the Cape of Good Hope. He remained in command of the auxiliary forces till Nov., 1876, when he was nominated a member of the Council of India. On July 12, 1878, he was appointed the Administrator of the Island of Cyprus, under the style of Her Majesty's High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief in the same island. In June, 1879, he was sent to South Africa, as Governor and High Commissioner of Natal and the Transvaal, to reorganise the affairs of Zululand, and on that occasion conducted the operations against Sikukuni, whose stronghold he destroyed. Returning in May, 1880, he was appointed Quartermaster-General at the headquarters of the army, and in April, 1882, succeeded Sir Charles Ellice as Adjutant-General of the army. He was Commander-in-Chief of the Expeditionary Force sent to Egypt in 1882; received the thanks of Parliament; and was gazetted (Nov. 20) Baron Wolseley of Cairo, and of Wolseley, in the county of Stafford. For his services in Egypt, he received from the Khedive, Tewfik

Pacha, the grand cordon of the Osmanieh. He was also promoted to the rank of General in 1882. On the 12th of May, 1883, he was appointed to the Hon. Colonelcy of the 23rd Middlesex V.B. (now the 2nd V.B. Royal Fusiliers), in succession to Sir Charles Russell, B.C., deceased. He was made D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Cambridge. In June, 1883, the University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. In 1884-85 he was Commander-in-Chief in Egypt, and conducted the operations undertaken for the relief of Khartoum, for which services he received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, was made K.P., and raised to the dignity of Viscount Wolseley, of Wolseley, in the county of Stafford. He has just retired from being Adjutant-General to the Forces, and is succeeded by Sir Redvers Buller: Lord Wolseley having been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland. Lord Wolseley is the author of "Narrative of the War with China in 1860, to which is added the Account of a Short Residence with the Tai-Ping Rebels at Nankin, and a Voyage thence to Hankon," 1862; "The Soldier's Pocket Book for Field Service," 1869, 2nd edit., 1871; new edit., 1882; "The System of Field Manœuvres best adapted for enabling our Troops to meet a Continental Army," printed in "Essays Written for the Wellington Prize," 1872; "France as a Military Power in 1870 and 1878" in the Nineteenth Century, Jan., 1878.

WOOD, General Sir Hy. Evelyn, B.C., K.C.B., G.C.M.G., is the youngest son of the late Rev. Sir John Page Wood, Bart., of Rivenhall, some time vicar of Cressing, Essex, and rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill, by Emma Caroline, youngest daughter of Mr. Sampson, of Croft West, Cornwall, a captain, R.N., and an admiral in the Portuguese service. He was born at Cressing in Feb., 1838, entered the Navy in 1852, served with distinction as aide-de-camp to Captain Sir William Peel, in command of the Naval Brigade in the Crimea (1854-55). At the unsuccessful assault on the Redan (June 18, 1855), while carrying one of the scaling-ladders, he was severely wounded; he was mentioned with praise in Lord Raglan's despatches. He obtained the Crimean Medal with two clasps, the 5th class of the Order of the Medjidieh, and a Turkish Medal; and was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. He next entered the army as cornet 13th Light Dragoons; was promoted to the rank of lieutenant in 1856; captain in 17th Lancers in 1861; and major in 1862. In the Indian campaign of 1858 he served as a brigade-major, and was present at the actions of Rajghur, Sindwaho, Kharee, and Baroda, for which he gained a Medal, and was twice mentioned in despatches. In 1859 and 1860 he commanded the 1st Regiment of Beaton's Irregular Horse, and received the thanks of the Indian Government for his pursuit of the Rebels in the Seronge jungle; he also won the Victoria Cross for valour. He raised the 2nd Regiment of Central India Horse. In Sept., 1873, being a lieutenant-colonel 90th Infantry, he accompanied Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Ashantee War, and organised a native force, which he commanded, with other troops, in the affairs of Essaman, and on the road from Mansu to the river Prah, following the retreat of the Ashantee army from the coast. Lieutenant-Colonel Wood afterwards commanded the right wing of the army in the battles of Ainoafu (wounded) and Ordahsu and the capture of Coomassie. For these services he was several times mentioned in despatches, and was nominated a C.B. (1874), promoted to the brevet rank of colonel, and received the Medal with Clasp. Having distinguished himself in both the naval and the military services of the country, he joined the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple in April, 1870, and was called to the Bar in Easter Term, 1874, shortly after his return from the Ashantee War. He served throughout the Zulu war of 1879 in command of No. 4 column. As political agent he raised a contingent of 1,000 friendly Zulus, known as "Wood's Irregulars." Two days after the British reverse at Isanlwana he surprised and defeated a force of several thousands of the enemy, and then maintained an advanced position in the enemy's country, for which he was specially commended by the High Commissioner. He defeated the Zulus in the action of Kambula on March 29, and in April was made brigadier-general. He led the advance to Ulundi with a flying column, and was present in the engagement there on July 4. On his return to England he was received by the Queen in person, and was created a K.C.B. (Sept., 1879). On Nov. 1, 1879, the Bar of England entertained him at a banquet in the hall of the Middle Temple; he was given a sword of honour by the county of Essex, and was made J.P. for the county. He served in the Transvaal war of 1880-81, with the local rank of major-general; was nominated one of Her Majesty's Commissioners for settling the Transvaal territory in April, 1881; created G.C.M.G.; and was reappointed to command the troops in the Chatham district in 1880. He commanded the 2nd brigade, 2nd division, in the expedition to Egypt in 1882, and for his distinguished services received the thanks of Parliament. In Dec., 1882, he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Egyptian Army, ranking as chief of the Pachas, or Sirdar. He commanded the line of communication in the Nile Expedition 1884-5, Grand Cordon of the Medjidieh, Khedive's Star, and Medals. He commanded the Eastern District from April 1, 1886, to Dec., 1889. Sir Evelyn Wood has been commanding the Aldershot District from Jan. 1, 1889.

WOOD, Professor John, F.R.S., born at Bradford, was educated at a private school, and at King's College, London, on leaving which he was apprenticed to the Senior Surgeon of the Bradford Infirmary. In 1846 he entered King's College Hospital, gaining four scholarships and two Gold Medals, and becoming House Surgeon in 1850. He was then appointed Surgeon to the Lincoln's Inn Infirmary. After being Demonstrator of Anatomy, and Professor of Surgery and Clinical Surgery, at King's College, he gained successively the posts of Examiner to the Universities of London and Cambridge, and to the Royal College of Physicians, Professor of Surgery at King's College, 1871, Examiner to the Royal College of Surgeons, and to the conjoint Board of Examiners at the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons (of which he was one of the Council, and subsequently Vice-President), and in 1885 Hunterian Professor of Surgery and Pathology. Professor Wood has published a large number of lectures, articles, and papers on medical subjects. He is now Emeritus Professor of Clinical Surgery at King's College Hospital.

WOODALL, William, M.P., was born in 1832, and educated at Liverpool. He is sole surviving partner in the Washington China Works, at Burslem, and is Chairman of the Sneyd Colliery. Was first elected to Parliament as member for Stoke-on-Trent at the general election of 1880, and represented that constituency until the dissolution of 1885, when he was returned for Hanley, being again returned unopposed in 1886 as a Gladstone Liberal. Mr. Woodall was for 12 years Chairman of the Burslem School Board, and is still Chairman of the Free Library, the School of Art, and the Endowed Schools in that town; was a member of the Royal Commission on Technical Education, and in Mr. Gladstone's government of 1886 was appointed Surveyor-General of Ordnance. He is an ardent advocate of Women's Suffrage, and of Disestablishment. Mr. Woodall is also one of the Trustees of the Savage Club.

WOODFORD, Charles Morris, was born at Gravesend, Kent, Oct. 30, 1852; and is the son of Henry Pack Woodford, of Gravesend. He was educated at Tonbridge School, 1864-70; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society in 1886; a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia (N. S. Wales Branch) in 1888; Member of the Council in 1889; a Fellow of the Linnean Society of New South Wales in 1889; Corresponding Member of Zoological Society in 1889; and was awarded the Gill Memorial by the Royal Geographical Society in 1890, for "Three expeditions to the Solomon Islands, and the important additions made to our topographical knowledge and natural history of the islands." His works published are: a paper on the "Exploration of the Solomon Islands," read before the Royal Geographical Society, March 26, 1888, published in the "Proceedings" of the Society, June, 1888; a paper on "A Third Visit to the Solomon Islands," read before the Royal Geographical Society, April, 1890, published in the "Proceedings," July, 1890; "General Remarks on the Zoology of Solomon Islands, and Notes on Brenchley's Megapode," published in the "Proceedings" of the Zoological Society, May 1, 1888; and a book entitled, "A Naturalist among the Head Hunters," 1890.

WOODHULL, Mrs. Victoria Clafin. See MARTIN, MRS. JOHN BIDDULPH.

WOODS, Sir Albert William, K.C.M.G., C.B., F.S.A., was born in 1816, and is a son of Sir William Woods, who filled the office of Garter King-of-Arms from 1838 until his death in 1842. He entered the College of Arms as Portcullis Pursuivant in 1838, was appointed Lancaster Herald in 1841, and became Registrar of the College in April, 1866. He was advanced to the office of Garter Principal King-of-Arms, Oct. 25, 1869, in succession to Sir Charles George Young deceased, and received the honour of knighthood on the 11th of the following month. He was attached to the missions for investing the King of Denmark, the King of the Belgians, and the Emperor of Austria with the Order of the Garter, and, as Garter, was joint plenipotentiary for investing the King of Italy, the King of Spain, and the King of Saxony. Sir A.

W. Woods holds the office of Registrar and Secretary to the Order of the Bath, Registrar to the Order of the Star of India, King-of-Arms to that of St. Michael and St. George, and Registrar to that of the Indian Empire.

WOODS, Henry, A.R.A., born April 23, 1847, at Warrington, in Lancashire, is eldest son of the late Mr. William Woods, of that town, was educated at the local grammar school, entered the Warrington School of Art as a pupil at nine years of age, and remained there until he went to London, in the winter of 1864, having obtained a "National Scholarship" in the Art Training Schools at South Kensington. Mr. Woods held that scholarship for three years, working in the Antique and Life Schools, and at the Study of Stained Glass. When he left South Kensington, the latter study was not proceeded with, but he began to illustrate for various periodicals, painting during the greater part of his time. When the Graphic started, Mr. Woods was one of the first members of its staff. His first picture exhibited at the Royal Academy was a little landscape at the first exhibition held at Burlington House. Since then he has been a regular exhibitor. His first pictures of any importance were Thames subjects—"Going Home," "Hay-makers," &c. In 1876 Mr. Woods first went to Venice, and joined the group of artists who have made modern Venetian subjects so popular; his earliest pictures of everyday Venetian life were, "A Venetian Ferry" (purchased for the Cape Town Gallery); "Street Trading in Venice;" "A Gondolier's Courtship;" "The Ducal Courtyard;" and "Preparing for the Festa." He was elected Associate of the Royal Academy in 1882. Since then Mr. Woods has painted, "Bargaining for an Old Master," "Preparations for First Communion," "Il Mio Traghetto," "Cupid's Spell," "Choosing a Summer Gown," "The Water-wheels of Savassa," &c. In the Royal Academy, 1890, Mr. Woods exhibited "On the Riva of the Giudecca;" "In the Shade of the Senola San Rocco;" and "La Promessa Sposa." Mr. Woods is a resident in Venice.

WOODWARD, Henry, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.Z.S., F.R.M.S., V.P. Pal. Soc., Keeper of the Department of Geology, British Museum (Natural History), is the sixth son of the late Samuel Woodward, of Norwich, author of "The Geology of Norfolk," 1833; a "Synoptical Table of British Organic Remains," 1830; &c. His eldest brother Mr. B. B. Woodward,

B.A. Lond., F.S.A., was for some years Librarian to Her Majesty at Windsor Castle. His second brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, F.G.S., for seventeen years in the Department of Geology, British Museum, was a geologist and naturalist of eminence, and author of a "Manual of the Mollusca" (1851-56), which has reached a sale of upwards of 12,000 copies. The subject of the present notice was born at Norwich, Nov. 24, 1832. His father died when he was only five years of age. Henry Woodward was educated at the Norwich Grammar School, and at the Grammar School, Botesdale, Suffolk. Thence, in 1846, he went to reside with his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, at that time Professor of Natural History at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, where he entered as an out-door student at the College, and worked diligently for three years. There he imbibed that knowledge of geology and love of natural history which, inherited from his father, needed only opportunity and encouragement to develop. In January, 1858, Prof. Owen, the Superintendent of the Natural History Departments in the British Museum, wrote offering him a junior assistant's post in the Geological Department, under Mr. G. R. Waterhouse, where his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, was already a senior assistant. His ready acceptance of this small post evinced his anxiety to take up geology as a profession, and he entered on his new duties with alacrity. In 1859 he was made a second class assistant; in 1865 a first class; and in 1867 he entered the first class upper section, a proof that his services met with favourable official recognition. In the spring of 1860 he accepted an invitation to join Mr. Robert MacAndrew, F.R.S., on a dredging expedition to the south coast of Spain and the Mediterranean; and at Malaga and Gibraltar he made excellent zoological and geological collections. In 1863 he again joined MacAndrew in a dredging expedition along the north coast of the Spanish Peninsular from Bilbao to Coruna. Excursions were also made into the interior to Vittoria, Burgos, &c. In 1864 Mr. Woodward commenced, and still continues to edit the Geological Magazine, a monthly journal of Geology, now in its twenty-eighth year. Dr. Woodward's contributions to scientific literature number over 200; he has also published a monograph on the "Fossil Merostomata," and one on "Carboniferous Trilobites," in the volumes of the Palaeontographical Society; a Catalogue of British Fossil Crustacea, published by the Trustees of the British Museum; articles on "Mollusca"

and "Crustacea," in Cassell's Natural History; and on "Crustacea," in the Encyclopædia Britannica. In 1873-74 Mr. Woodward was elected President of the Geologists' Association, and a Vice-President of the Geological Society of London, 1887-88. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1878 the University of St. Andrews conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. On the 23rd June, 1880, on the retirement of Mr. George R. Waterhouse, the Principal Trustees of the British Museum appointed Dr. Henry Woodward Keeper of the Department of Geology, in which he had served as an assistant for twenty-two years; a promotion which has been received with satisfaction among scientific men generally. In 1857 Mr. Woodward married Ellen Sophia, only child of M. F. Page, Esq., of Norwich, by whom he has two sons and five daughters. Dr. Woodward's eldest son, H. P. Woodward, F.G.S., is now Government Geologist for Western Australia, and the younger, M. F. Woodward, is Demonstrator in Biology in the Royal College of Science (formerly the Royal School of Mines), South Kensington.

WOOLLEY, Celia Parker, American writer, was born at Toledo, Ohio, in 1848. When she was quite young her parents removed to Coldwater, Mich., where, excepting a few months spent at the Lake Erie Seminary (Painesville, Ohio), she was educated, graduating from the Coldwater Seminary in 1866. Her literary career began with occasional contributions to periodicals. For eight years she was the Chicago correspondent of the Christian Register (a Boston Unitarian weekly); in 1884 Lippincott's published her first short story, and a few others have followed in the same magazine. Her first novel was issued in 1887, and was received with great favour. It was brought out under the title of "Love and Theology," a name changed in later editions to "Rachel Armstrong." She has since (1889) published another, entitled "A Girl Graduate." In 1868 she was married to Dr. J. H. Woolley, and in 1876 went to Chicago, where she has since resided.

WOOLNER, Thomas, R.A., was born at Hadleigh, in Suffolk, Dec. 17, 1826, and received his education in private schools at Ipswich, Witlesham, and London. When thirteen years of age he evinced a talent for sculpture, and was placed in the studio of William Behnes, under whose able guidance he studied with great diligence for six years, acquiring remarkable skill as a sculptor, and becoming an accomplished draughtsman. His first models were of a poetical and historical character. "Eleanor sucking the Poison from Prince Edward's Wound" was exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1843, and a life-size group of "The Death of Boadicea" in Westminster Hall. The latter attracted particular attention, and was regarded as a work of great promise in the inventive or ideal style of sculpture. Following up this success, Mr. Woolner exhibited figures of "Puck" and of "Titania with her Indian Boy" at the British Institution, and an "Eros and Euphrosyne" and "The Rainbow" at the Royal Academy in 1848. Two years later, in conjunction with Mr. Millais, Mr. Holman Hunt, and Mr. Dante Gabriel Rossetti, he took a leading part in establishing The Germ, a short-lived periodical, in which the ideas of those artists who were afterwards called "Pre-Raphaelites" first found expression. Mr. Woolner's contributions consisted of a number of graceful poems, two of which, with others from his pen, were afterwards published in a volume, entitled "My Beautiful Lady," that appeared in 1863, and reached a third edition in 1866, and a fourth in 1887. Mr. Woolner went to Australia in 1862, and during a residence of nearly two years there he modelled a number of characteristic likenesses in medallion. On his return to this country his first important production was a life-size statue of Lord Bacon, for the new Museum at Oxford. Among his subsequent works are statues of John Robert Godley, for Canterbury, New Zealand; Lord Macaulay, for Trinity College, Cambridge; William III., for the Houses of Parliament; Sir Bartholomew Frere, for Bombay; Dr. Whewell, for Cambridge; Lord Lawrence, for Calcutta; and Lord Palmerston, for Palace Yard; busts of Tennyson, Carlyle, Dr. Newman, Mr. Darwin, Rajah Brooke, Sir William Fairbairn, Professor Sedgwick, Sir William Hooker, Richard Cobden, Charles Dickens, Canon Kingsley, Mr. Gladstone, Viscount Sandon, Mr. W. Fuller Maitland, Professor Lushington (for the University of Glasgow), Mr. John Simon (for the College of Surgeons), and Professor Huxley; also "Elaine with the Shield of Sir Lancelot," "Ophelia," "In Memoriam," a poetical group, "Virgil bewailing the Banishment of Coriolanus," "Guinevere," and "Achilles and Pallas shouting from the Trenches," the latter being his diploma work exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1876; "Lady Godiva Unrobing," Mr. Woolner was afterwards engaged on a colossal statue in bronze of Captain Cook, for the Government of

New South Wales, to be erected in Hyde Park, Sydney, overlooking Sydney Harbour. In 1871, Mr. Woolner was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in Dec., 1874, he received the final honour of being nominated a Royal Academician. On the death of Mr. Henry Weekes, in 1877, he was appointed to succeed him as Professor of Sculpture in the Royal Academy. He resigned that professorship in Jan., 1879. His statue of Lord Chief Justice Whiteside was erected in the Hall of the Four Courts, Dublin, in 1880. Mr. Woolner has since executed the recumbent statue of Lord Frederick Cavendish, now in Cartmel Priory Church, and the Monument to Sir Edwin Landseer, in the Crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral. He is now engaged on a recumbent statue of the late Bishop Jackson, for St. Paul's; a bronze statue of Sir Stamford Raffles, for Singapore; and a bronze statue of the late Bishop Fraser, for Manchester. In 1881 he published the poem of "Pygmalion;" 1884, "Silenus;" and 1886, "Tiresias;" and in 1887, "Nelly Dale." His last work is a bust of Sir Thomas Elder, in the Royal Academy Exhibition, 1890.

WOOLSON, Constance Fenimore, an American writer and grandniece of James Fenimore Cooper, was born at Claremont, New Hampshire, in 1848. While she was quite young her family removed to Cleveland, Ohio, and she was educated at a young ladies' seminary in that city and in New York. Her father died in 1869, and in 1873 she and her mother went to the Southern States, where they remained until the death of Mrs. Woolson in 1879, when the daughter came to England and has since resided in Europe, mainly in Italy. Miss Woolson's literary career began with some contributions to periodicals published about the time her father died. Her writings, most of which first appeared in magazines, comprise "Castle Nowhere," 1875; "Rodman the Keeper," 1880; "Anne," 1882; "For the Major," 1883; "East Angels," 1886; and "Jupiter Lights," 1889.

WORCESTER. Bishop of. See PEROWNE. THE RIGHT REV. JOHN JAMES STEWART.

WORDSWORTH, The Right Rev. Charles, D.D. and D.C.L., Bishop of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane, second son of the late Dr. Christopher Wordsworth (many years Master of Trinity College, Cambridge), and nephew of the celebrated poet, born in 1806, was educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained, among other distinctions, two Chancellor's prizes, that for Latin verse in 1827, and for the Latin essay in 1831, and was placed in the first class of Literæ Humaniores, when he took the degree of B.A. in 1830. In reward for the first of these distinctions he was appointed to a studentship by the Dean. He was no less distinguished for athletic exercises, being, in 1829, one of the Oxford eight, and also one of the Oxford eleven, and successful in both encounters with the sister University. After taking his B.A. degree, he remained at Christ Church for two or three years as a private tutor, and had among his pupils the late Duke of Newcastle, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Cardinal Manning, and other celebrated men. In 1835 he was elected Second Master of Winchester College, an office which up to that time had never been conferred on any one not educated at Winchester. On account of weak health, he resigned in 1845, and accepted in 1846 the appointment of first Warden of Trinity College, Glenalmond, Perthshire, which he held for seven years. In 1852 he was elected Bishop of the united dioceses of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane, and at the installation of the late Earl of Derby as Chancellor, in 1853, was admitted to the honorary degree of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford. In 1854 he resigned the Wardenship of Glenalmond, and has since devoted himself exclusively to the duties of the episcopate, taking an active part in the affairs of the Scottish Church. He was one of the New Testament Company for the Revision of the Authorised Version of the Bible. The published works of the Bishop of St. Andrews are chiefly of a theological character. There are, however, some exceptions; among which must be mentioned his "Græcæ Grammaticæ Rudimenta," published in 1839, and now in the nineteenth edition; "The College of St. Mary Winton," an illustrated work, in 1848; a volume "On Shakespeare's Knowledge and Use of the Bible," in 1854, 3rd edition, 1880; "Shakespeare's Historical Plays, Roman and English," 3 vols., 1883; and "A Greek Primer," in 1870. His other publications are, "Christian Boyhood at a Public School," 1846; "Catechesis, or Christian Instruction," 4th (enlarged) edition, 1864; a "Letter to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone on Religious Liberty," and numerous sermons, charges, and pamphlets. His elaborate judicial "Opinions" on the cases of the Bishop of Brechin and the Rev. P. Cheyne, and his "Notes on the Eucharistic Controversy" (the last printed for the use of his clergy and private circulation only), are a powerful vindication of the doctrines held by the Anglican Church. He has made various appeals to the Presbyterian community in Scotland in the form of lectures, &c., on behalf of unity among Christians; among which may be specified "A United Church for the United Kingdom, advocated in a Tercentenary Discourse on the Scottish Reformation," together with Proofs and Illustrations, designed to form a "Manual of Reformation Facts and Principles," in 1860; and "The Outlines of the Christian Ministry delineated and brought to the Test of Reason, Holy Scripture, History, and Experience; with a view to the Reconciliation of Existing Differences concerning it, especially between Presbyterians and Episcopalians," 1872. He has also published "A Discourse on Scottish Church History from the Reformation to the Present Time," 1881; and "Remarks on Bishop Lightfoot's Essay on the Christian Ministry," 2nd edition, 1884. In 1885, he received the honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh, on occasion of the grand Tercentenary Festival, and also from the University of St. Andrews in the same year. In 1886, a series of his various Charges and Addresses on the subject of Reconciliation between Episcopalians and Presbyterians, appeared under the title of "Public Appeals on Behalf of Christian Unity," 2 vols. 12mo. That he has kept up his classical scholarship to the last is shown by his "Anni Christiani quæ ad Clerum pertinent Latini reddita," 1880; and by his "Series Collectarum, cum Selectis Hymnis Psalmisque," also in Latin verse, 1890. In Dec., 1890, the Bishop published the Memoir of his long and useful life.

WORDSWORTH, The Right Rev. John, D.D., Bishop of Salisbury, nephew of the above, and eldest son of the late Right Rev. Christopher Wordsworth, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln, was born at Harrow, Sept. 21, 1843, and educated at Ipswich, Winchester School and at New College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1865. In 1866 he became a Master at Wellington College, and in 1867 was elected Fellow, and in 1868 Tutor, of Brasenose College, Oxford. He was appointed Prebendary of Lincoln in 1870, Select Preacher at Oxford, 1876; Bampton Lecturer, 1881; Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, 1883; and Canon of Rochester in the same year. On the death of Dr. Moberly in 1885 he was appointed Bishop of Salisbury. Dr. Wordsworth is the author of several articles in the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," and of "Kemble College and the Present University Crisis," 1869; "Lectures Introductory to a History of Latin Literature," 1870; "Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin," 1874; "University Sermons on Gospel Subjects," 1878; "The Church and the Universities: a Letter to C. S. Roundell, Esq., M.P.," 1880; "The One Religion" (Bampton Lectures), 1881; "Old Latin Biblical Texts," No. 1, 1883; "Pastoral Letter to the Diocese of Sarum," 1885, &c. He was also joint editor of "Studia Biblica," Oxford, 1885. He has been long engaged on a critical edition of the "Latin New Testament of St. Jerome" (The Vulgate), the first part of which was published at Oxford in 1889 with the assistance of Rev. H. J. White; and the second part in 1890.

WORMS, The Right Hon. Baron Henry De, P.C., F.R.S., M.P. for East Toxteth Division of Liverpool, third son of the late Baron De Worms, of Park Crescent, W., was born in London, Oct. 20, 1840; and educated in Paris and at King's College, London, of which he is a Fellow. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June, 1863, and practised as a Barrister for about three years. In 1880 he became member for Greenwich, and from that time he took an active part in the debates in the House, especially those relating to Foreign Affairs. He directed attention to the then imperfect administration of the Royal Patriotic Fund, and made certain recommendations which were afterwards embodied in an Act of Parliament. Mr. Gladstone, in acknowledgment of the services thus rendered, made the Baron a Royal Commissioner of the Patriotic Fund. At the general election of 1885, consequent upon alterations caused by the Redistribution Bill, he withdrew from Greenwich, and successfully contested East Toxteth, for which constituency he was returned unopposed in 1886. In both Lord Salisbury's Governments, he has held the office of Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies in Jan., 1888; President of the International Conference on Sugar Bounties in 1887-88; and British Plenipotentiary, in which capacity he signed the Treaty on behalf of Great Britain for the abolition of the Bounties. In Jan., 1889, he became a member of the Privy Council, and in the same year was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is the author of "The Earth and its Mechanism;" "England's Policy in the East;" and "The Austro-Hungarian Empire," the latter being an exposition of Count Beust's policy; and edited the "Memoirs of Count Beust," to which he wrote the preface.

WORTHY, Charles, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Charles Worthy, Vicar of Ashburton with Buckland, who died in 1879, and of Elizabeth, his wife, first cousin of the late Charles Richardson, LL.D., the Lexicographer (see "Men of the Time," sixth edition). He was born at Snayle Tower, Exeter, Dec. 28, 1840; educated at Exeter Grammar School, and by private tuition; was appointed to a commission in the 82nd Regiment in 1858, and proceeded to India in the following year. His health failing him Mr. Worthy retired from the service in 1864, and turned his attention to the History and Antiquities of Devonshire, his native county. From 1871 he has been a constant contributor of periodical articles on these and similar subjects, both to the Public Press and to the Transactions of the Devonshire Association. In 1875 he published "Ashburton and its Neighbourhood," "The Antiquities and History of Fourteen Parishes on the Borders of Dartmoor," fcap., 4to; "The Manor of Winkleigh, the Ancient Seat of the Honour of Gloucester," 8vo, 1876; "Local Guide to Ashburton and Dartmoor," 1879; "Mémorial of Walter Stapledon, Bishop of Exeter (1308);" "Notes on Bideford and the House of Granville" (Reprinted from Transactions of the Devonshire Association, 1876 and 1884). He was conjutor with the late Stephen Tucker on the Somerset Herald, from 1879-1882. His first volume of "Devonshire Parishes," "The Antiquities, Heraldry, and Family History of Twenty-eight Parishes in the Archdeaconry of Totnes," appeared in 1887. In the following year he published an epitome of English armoury under the title of "Practical Heraldry;" vol. 2 of "Devonshire Parishes" appeared in 1889. He also revised the last edition of Murray's "Hand-book for Devonshire," 1887; and printed a pamphlet on "The Life of Lord Iddesleigh, with a Genealogical History of the Northcote Family," Jan. 1887, which ran to a second edition within three days.

WRATISLAW, The Rev. Albert Henry, M.A., born in 1821, and educated at Rugby School, and then at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was successively Scholar, Fellow, and Tutor, graduated B.A. in 1844, taking high honours. He was elected Head Master of the Grammar School, Felstead, in 1852, and of Bury School on the resignation of Dr. Donaldson in 1855. In 1879 he resigned the Head Mastership of Bury, and accepted the Vicarage of Manorbier, near Tenby, in Pembrokeshire. This he resigned from ill health in 1887 and now resides at Stoke Newington. He has written "Lyra Czecho-Slovanska, Bohemian Poems, translated," published in 1849; "Queen's Court Manuscript, with other Bohemian Poems, translated," in 1852; "Ellisian Greek Exercises," in 1855; "Barabbas the Scape-goat and other Sermon and Dissertations," in 1859; "Notes and Dissertations on Scripture," in 1863; "Plea for Rugby School," in 1864; "The Adventures of Baron Wratislaw of Mitrowitz in his Sojourn and Captivity at Constantinople, at the end of the sixteenth century;" and "The Diary of an Embassy from King George of Bohemia to Louis XI. of France, in 1464," both translated from the Bohemian-Slavonic; "Life, Legend, and Canonization of St. John Nepomucen," 1873; school-books, pamphlets, and magazine articles; "Lectures on the Native Literature of Bohemia in the 14th century," 1878 (these were delivered before the University of Oxford); "Life of John Huss," 1882, published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge; "Sixty Folk-Tales from exclusively Slavonic sources," 1889.

WRENFORDSLEY, The Hon. Sir Henry Thomas, Knight, was educated in France, and having been called to the English Bar, practised for some years on the old Norfolk Circuit. He contested the City of Peterborough, in the Conservative interest, in 1868; and again, in 1874, but without success. In 1876, he was appointed acting Deputy County Court Judge for the Metropolitan districts of Marylebone, Brompton, and Brentford. In 1877, he became Puisne Judge in the Colony of Mauritius; and, in June, 1878, he left the Bench, and became Procureur-General. Before leaving the colony, he received a vote of thanks from the Legislative Council in respect of his public services in connection with the passing of the Labour Law, and reforms introduced into the judicial administration of the colony. In 1880, he was appointed to the Chief Justiceship of Western Australia, and received the Dormant Commission from the Crown to administer, in case of need, the Government of that Colony. He was appointed Delegate to represent the colony at the Intercolonial Conference held at Sydney in 1881; and subsequently, he administered the Government from February to June 1883. During that period, he organised and started the first Expedition to the Kimberley, or northern district, and named the first town "Derby," by permission of the Secretary of State. A further expedition also was despatched for the purpose of extending the telegraph system about 900 miles further north. He received the honour of Knighthood and several public addresses before leaving the colony. In 1883, Sir Henry proceeded in H.M.S. Diamond, to Fiji, as Chief Justice of that Colony and also held the appointment of Judicial Commissioner for the Western Pacific. In 1884, he left Fiji on leave, in consequence of bad health. Before leaving the colony, he was entertained by the leading merchants and others at the largest banquet ever given in that part of the Pacific. Subsequently, and by permission of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, he became acting Puisne Judge in the Colony of Tasmania. In consequence of the action of the Colonial Office in having filled up his appointment in Fiji, Sir Henry was called to the Bar of Victoria and became a Queen's Counsel. In 1888, he was invited by the Government of Victoria to act as a Judge of the Supreme Court in the absence of one of the Judges, for which duty he received the thanks of the Colonial Government. In 1890 he was appointed by the Secretary of State, acting Chief Justice of Western Australia, and he held that appointment at the time when that colony received a new Act of Constitution, and became for the first time a responsible Government Colony. Sir Henry has thus served the Crown as a Judge of the Supreme Court in five of Her Majesty's Colonies; viz., Mauritius, Western Australia, Fiji, Tasmania, Victoria, and again in Western Australia, besides having held the appointments of Procureur-General in Mauritius, and Deputy Governor in Western Australia.

WRIGHT, The Hon. Robert Samuel, M.A., B.C.L., was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he had a distinguished career. He took a First Class in Classical Moderations in 1859, and in Literæ Humaniores in 1860. In 1859-62 he gained three University prizes, the Latin verse prize, the English essay, and the Arnold essay; he was elected to a Fellowship at Oriel, of which he is now an honorary Fellow, and he gained the Craven scholarship in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June, 1863, and joined the Northern Circuit. He has held the office of common law junior counsel to the Treasury for several years. He succeeded the late Baron Huddleston, as one of the Justices of the High Court in Dec., 1890.

WYNDHAM, Charles, was born in 1841, and was educated for the medical profession. He went to America in 1862, and made his first appearance as an actor at Washington with John Wilkes Booth (the assassin of President Lincoln), playing Osric to his Hamlet, and subsequently, Glavis to his Claude Melnotte. On the termination of his engagement he returned to the army, in which he had already served as a surgeon, and was concerned in some engagements that took place in the Civil War. He was attached to the 19th Army Corps, having at one time the medical charge of a brigade, and at another, charge of a regiment. On returning to England he went to Liverpool, to the Old Amphitheatre, where his success was such, that it led to a highly remunerative engagement of several months' duration. In May, 1868, he made his first London appearance as Sir Arthur Lascelles in "All that Glitters is not Gold." He returned to America in 1869, and appeared with distinction at Wallack's Theatre as Charles Surface in "The School for Scandal." Coming home again, he re-appeared at the St. James's Theatre in 1872, then under Mr. Stephen Fiske's management, as Raba-gas. A provincial tour followed this engagement, and in 1873 he played "the lead" at the Royalty, appearing there notably in the character which he revived in 1886 in "Wild Oats." A version of Mr. Bronson Howard's comedy "Saratoga," called "Brighton," was produced at the Court Theatre in 1874, with Mr. Wyndham in the principal character. In 1875 he went to Berlin and produced a version of "Brighton" in German. From 1876 the Criterion Theatre, under Mr. Wyndham's management, was distinguished by pieces of lively character until, in 1886, he made trial of old comedy. In the year 1887, another visit to Germany was paid, embracing the cities of Berlin, Frankfurt and Liegnitz, during which "David Garrick" in German, under the title of "Auf Ehrenwort," was played, and proved such a success that an invitation from the Emperor of Russia extended the tour to St. Petersburg and Moscow. On the occasion of his performance in the Russian capital, Mr. Wyndham was presented by the Czar with a magnificent sapphire and ruby ring in recognition of the pleasure which his acting had afforded His Majesty. Two years later another tour to America followed, when Boston, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia were visited, the repertoire including such plays as "David Garrick," "The Candidate," "Wild Oats," "Still Waters Run Deep," and an eccentric comedy, written specially for Mr. Wyndham by F. C. Burnand, editor of London Punch, and entitled "The Headless Man," when fresh laurels were gathered, resulting in a cordial invitation on the part of the American public to revisit the United States at no very distant date. The latest characterisation, with which Mr. Wyndham has identified himself, is Young Marlow, in "She Stoops to Conquer."

Y.

YATES, Edmund Hodgson, son of the well-known actor, who was lessee of the Adelphi, was born in July 1831, and was for some years Chief of the Missing Letter Department in the Post-Office. He has written "My Haunts and their Frequenters," published in 1854; "After Office Hours," in 1861; "Broken to Harness," a Story, in 1864; "Business of Pleasure," "Pages in Waiting," and "Running the Gauntlet, a Novel," in 1865, and "Kissing the Rod," and "Land at Last, a Novel," in 1866. In conjunction with the late Mr. F. E. Smedley, he wrote "Mirth and Metre, by Two Merry Men," published in 1854; in conjunction with the late Mr. R. B. Brough, edited "Our Miscellany," which appeared in 1857-8; prepared a condensed edition of "The Life and Correspondence of C. Matthews the elder," published in 1860; and a "Memoir of Albert Smith and Mont Blanc." Mr. Yates, who has written some dramas, and was the theatrical critic of the Daily News for six years, edited the Temple Bar Magazine, in which his novel "Broken to Harness" appeared as a serial in 1864-5; was the first editor of Tinsley's Magazine; and a constant contributor to All the Year Round, in which his novel "Black Sheep" was the leading serial story in 1866-7. His later novels are "Wrecked in Port," 1869; "Dr. Wainwright's Patient," and "Nobody's Fortune," 1871; "The Yellow Flag," 1873; and "The Impending Sword," 1874. In May, 1872, Mr. Yates retired from the Post-Office in order to devote himself exclusively to literature. In the course of that year he went on a lecturing tour in the United States, and in May, 1873, he was appointed London representative of the New York Herald, which post he resigned in July, 1874, when he established The World, "a journal for men and women," which has a wide circulation, and of which he still remains sole proprietor and editor. In Nov., 1884, Mr. Yates published two volumes of "Personal Reminiscences and Experiences," an autobiography, which has gone through four editions. Mr. Yates was in 1884 indicted for having published in The World a libel on the Earl of Lonsdale, for which, as editor, he was responsible; he was sentenced by the Lord Chief Justice to four months' imprisonment as a first-class misdemeanant, but was released before two months had expired.

YEAMES, William Frederick, R.A., was born in Dec., 1835, at Taganrog, on the Sea of Azoff, South Russia, of which port his father, Mr. William Yeames, was Her Britannic Majesty's Consul. The family belonged originally to the county of Norfolk. During the years 1842 and 1843 he travelled with his family through Italy. After returning to Russia and spending the winter at Odessa, the family went to Dresden, and there remained till the spring of 1848 when it removed to London. Mr. Yeames received his first instruction in art from Mr. George Scharf, who taught him drawing and anatomy. The young artist also practised drawing form casts in the studio of Mr. J. Sherwood Westmacott. In 1852 Mr. Yeames left England, in order to advance his art-education in Italy; and studied at Florence, first for two years under the direction of Professor Pollastrini, of the Florence Academy, afterwards under Signor Raffaella Buonajuti. Subsequently he spent eighteen months in Rome, and at last, in 1858, he returned to England. In 1859 he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait and "The Staunch Friends," a subject-picture of a jester and monkey. In 1861 he was represented there by works entitled "Il Sonetto," with illustrative lines from "Petrarch," and "The Toilet;" in 1862 by "Rescued," a boy saved from drowning; in 1863 by "The Meeting of Sir Thomas More with his Daughter after his Sentence to Death;" in 1864 by "La Reine Malheureuse," Queen Henrietta Maria taking refuge from the fire of the Parliament ships in Burlington Bay; in 1865 by "Arming the Young Knight;" and in 1866 by "Queen Elizabeth receiving the French Ambassadors after the News of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew." In June, 1866, he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. Since then he has exhibited "The Dawn of the Reformation," 1867; "The Chimney Corner," and "Lady Jane Grey in the Tower," 1868; "The Fugitive Jacobite" and "Alarming Footsteps," 1869; "Maunday Thursday" and "Love's Young Dream," 1870;

Mr. Yeames was elected a Royal Academician, June 19, 1878.

YEO, Gerald F., M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., second son of Henry Yeo, Esq., J.P. of Howth, was born in Dublin in 1845; educated at Trinity College, Dublin; graduated in the Dublin University as Moderator in Natural Science in 1866, and in 1867 took the M.B. and M.Ch. degrees. In 1866 an Essay by him on Renal Disease was awarded the Gold Medal of the Dublin Pathological Society. He then studied for a year in each of the Great Schools of Paris, Berlin, and Vienna; and on his return to Ireland in 1870 he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Medical School of Trinity College. He then took the M.D. and Sanitary degree, and also the qualification of the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons in Ireland. He taught Physiology in the Carmichael School of Medicine for two years, and then left Ireland; as in 1875, he was appointed Professor of Physiology in King's College, London. In 1877 he was made Assistant Surgeon to King's College Hospital, and became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. While in Dublin he published in the Local Medical Journals, numerous papers, chiefly of a pathological nature. Since coming to London his works—with the exception of a paper on Cerebral Surgery and a report on Bovine Pleuro-pneumonia, have been almost exclusively physiological. Some of his researches were communicated to the Royal Society and have appeared in the Transactions and Proceedings of that body; but the greater part of his contributions was published in the Journal of Physiology. He is the author of a well-known "Manual of Physiology for the Use of Students of Medicine." He has held the post of Examiner in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and London, the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and the Royal Veterinary College. He acted as Honorary Secretary of the Physiological Society from its foundation in 1875 until 1889. It is a strange coincidence that the only two medical men of the same surname in England should both be at King's College, London; but Mr. Gerald Yeo is not in any way related to Dr. Isaac Burney Yeo.

YEO, Professor I. Burney, M.D., descended from an ancient Cornish family already settled in Cornwall in the reign of Edward III., was born at Stonehouse, Devonshire, and educated privately, until, in 1858, he became a student in King's College, London, where he rapidly distinguished himself, and obtained three scholarships in succession and other distinctions. At the Doctor of Medicine's examination, in the London University, he obtained the number of marks qualifying for the Gold Medal. In 1866 he was appointed Resident Medical Tutor in King's College; this post he resigned in 1871 and began practice in Mayfair, having about that time been elected one of the Physicians to the Brompton as well as to King's College Hospitals. He was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians (1876), Hon. Fellow and Professor of Clinical Therapeutics in King's College, London (1885), and Physician to King's College Hospital. Dr. Yeo has contributed largely to medical literature, and has furnished numerous lectures, commentaries, &c., to the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c. He is the translator of Oertel's "Respiratory Therapeutics" in Ziemssen's Handbook of General Therapeutics, and of articles in Ziemssen's "Cyclopaedia of Practical Medicine." He has written much on the treatment of disease. He is the author of a work on "Consumption" (1882), and of a manual on "Climate and Health Resorts" (new edit. 1890); also of a Manual on "Food in Health and Disease." He has also contributed several articles to the Fortnightly and Contemporary reviews, and to the Nineteenth Century.

YONGE, Charles Duke, M.A., son of the Rev. Charles Yonge, Lower Master of Eton College, born in Nov. 1812, was educated at Eton and at Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1835, taking a first-class degree. In 1866 he was appointed Regius Professor of Modern History and English Literature in the Queen's College, Belfast, where he has been very successful in promoting the study of History; and in 1882 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal University. He has been a very voluminous author of both classical and historical works, many of which are often referred to by continental writers, and have a large circulation in the United States. His chief works are an "English and Greek Lexicon," 1849, the companion to Liddell and Scott's Greek and English Lexicon; "Gradus ad Parnassum, with Dictionary of Epithets," 1850; "School Phraseological English-Latin and Latin-English Dictionary," two parts, 1855-56; "History of England to the Peace of Paris, 1856," in 1857, 2nd edit., 1871; short parallel lives of Epaminondas, Gustavus Adolphus, Philip, and Frederick the Great, in imitation of Plutarch's method, 1858; "Life of the Duke of Wellington," in two volumes, 1860; a school edition of Virgil, with English notes, 1861; "History of the British Navy," in three volumes, 1863; "English-Greek Lexicon, abridged," 1864; "History of France under the Bourbons, A.D. 1589-1830," in four volumes, in 1866; "The Life and Times of Lord Liverpool," in three volumes, in 1868, and a "Life of Marie Antoinette," in two volumes, in 1876; "Three Centuries of Modern History," 1872; "History of the English Revolution of 1688," in 1874; a Constitutional History of England, 1760-1860," a sequel to Hallam's, 1883, and "Our Great Naval Commanders," 1884, etc.

YONGE, Charlotte Mary, only daughter of the late W. C. Yonge, Esq., of Otterbourne, Hants, a magistrate for Hampshire, was born in 1823. She is the authoress of several works of fiction, in which the plot is made to enforce, in a plain and sober manner, the doctrines of what is called the High-Church school of opinion. Her best known works are, "The Heir of Redclyffe," "Heartsease," "Dynevor Terrace," "The Daisy Chain," "The Young Stepmother; or, a Chronicle of Mistakes," "Hopes and Fears; or Scenes from the Life of a Spinster," "The Lances of Lynwood," "The Little Duke," "Clever Women of the Family," "Prince and the Page: a Story of the Last Crusade," and "Dove in the Eagle's Nest." Most of these have gone through several editions, and have been reprinted in a cheap form. It has been stated in the public papers, that she gave £2,000, the profits of her "Daisy Chain," for the building of a Missionary College at Auckland, New Zealand, and devoted a great portion of the proceeds of "The Heir of Redclyffe" to the fitting out of the missionary schooner Southern Cross, for the use of Bishop Selwyn. Miss Yonge has also published "Marie Thérèse de Lamourons," a biography abridged from the French; "The Kings of England," "Landmarks of History, Ancient, Middle Ages, and Modern," forming a compendium of Universal History for young people; "History of Christian Names and their Derivation," 1863; "The Story of English Missionary Workers," in "Macmillan's Sunday Library," 1871; "Lady Hester," 1873; "Life of John Coleridge Patteson, Missionary Bishop of the Melanesian Islands," 2 vols., 1873; "Stories of English History," 1874; "Stories of Greek History for the Little Ones," 1876; "Aunt Charlotte's German History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Aunt Charlotte's Roman History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Unknown to History; a Story of the Captivity of Mary of Scotland," a novel, 2 vols., 1882; "Stray Pearls; Memoirs of Margaret de Ribamont, Viscountess of Bellaise," 2 vols., 1883; "The Two Sides of the Shield," and "Nuttie's Father," 1885, and "The Reputed Changeling," 1890.

YORK, Archbishop of. See MAGEE, THE MOST REV. WILLIAM CONNOR.

YOUNG, Sir Allen, arctic navigator, formerly commanded a ship in the merchant service, and among the many officers of that service who did good work and gained credit at Balaclava during the Russian war, there was no commander whose services were more warmly acknowledged by the late Lord Lyons than were those of Captain Allen Young. Subsequently he volunteered and filled a responsible position on board Lady Franklin's little ship, the Fox, in McClintock's memorable voyage (1857-60), when the problem of the fate of Franklin and his companions was solved. As an officer of the Royal Naval Reserve his commission bears date from the first creation of the force. In 1875, principally at his own expense, he made in his yacht, the Pandora, a gallant though unsuccessful attempt to accomplish the North-West Passage, and to throw some further light on the proceedings of the lost expedition under Franklin, by a search for their records on King William's Land. Again, in 1876, he refitted the Pandora for a second attempt, with the same objects in view; but the Admiralty, having been unexpectedly called upon to communicate with the dépôts of the Government Expedition in Smith's Sound, Captain Young readily responded to an invitation to fulfil that important duty, which he did at no small risk, and in a manner which was deemed thoroughly satisfactory. In recognition of this service the Queen conferred upon him the honour of knighthood, March 12, 1877. An account of the "Two Voyages of the Pandora in 1875 and 1876" was published in London in 1879.

YOUNG, Sir Frederick, K.C.M.G., was born in the year 1817, and is the son of the late Mr. George Frederick Young, who represented the shipping interests in the House of Commons as a member for Tyne-mouth, from 1832 to 1838, and afterwards sat for Scarborough from 1851 to 1852. He had for his grandfather, on the paternal side, Vice-Admiral William Young, who commanded the line-of-battle ship Foudroyant, a stately craft carrying 98 guns, in the days when men-of-war were still picturesque, if not so destructive as they are now, and when our naval commanders relied more upon the pluck of their men than upon the metal of their armament. This gallant admiral was appointed by Lord Keith its naval commander, to superintend the disembarkation of the troops which formed the Egyptian Expedition in March, 1801, and in his cabin died Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who received his mortal wound at the battle of Alexandria. Sir Frederick's mother was of Kentish origin, being Mary, daughter of Mr. John Abbott, of Canterbury. The first work of public utility which calls for notice in this sketch, is one which redounds to the credit of both Sir Frederick and his father. The project of obtaining Victoria Park, and, after rescuing it from the possible spoliation of the speculative builder, throwing it open as a place of popular recreation, originated with Mr. George Frederick Young, who was the author of the scheme. Sir Frederick (then Mr.) Young was asked to act as Honorary Secretary and Treasurer to the Committee then formed to prosecute the scheme. It was not accomplished in a day. Mr. Young, Sen., drew up a memorial for presentation to the Queen, and the matter being undertaken with spirit, it roused such interest that the young secretary soon obtained 30,000 signatures, and the memorial was presented in due course. The agitation thus begun was kept alive for three or four years, constant communications passing between the promoters, Lord Duncannon, and prominent Government officials, until, at last, vested interests were satisfied, the delays of red-tape surmounted, and Victoria Park, as a magnificent open space for the recreation of overcrowded East Londoners, was thrown open to the people. Sir Frederick was also chiefly instrumental in securing Epping Forest for the public, and the domain was made for ever secure from the land-grabber by being placed under the guardianship of the Corporation of the City of London. He was actively engaged in the establishing of the People's Palace, and has taken a benevolent interest in the Emigration Question. In 1869 he embodied his views upon that subject, in a pamphlet entitled, "Transplantation;" and in the following year was elected Chairman of the National Colonial Emigration League. Imperial Federation, of which he was one of the earliest advocates, has likewise largely engaged his attention, and received his support. He is the author of several works relating to the Colonies generally, including, among others, "Reasons for Promoting the Cultivation of New Zealand Flax;" "Transplantation: the True System of Emigration;" "Long Ago and Now;" "New Zealand: Past, Present, and Future;" "England and her Colonies at the Paris Exhibition;" "On the Political Relations of Mother Countries and Colonies;" "An Address on Imperial Federation;" and "Emigration to the Colonies;" and was editor of an important work entitled "Imperial Federation." His latest work is "A Winter Tour in South Africa." Sir Frederick Young derives his title from the fact that his services on behalf of Colonial matters has caused him to be created a Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of St. Michael and St. George. He is also on the Commission of the Peace for Middlesex, Westminster, the County of London, and the Liberty of the Tower, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of the Tower Hamlets. He married, in 1845, Cecilia, daughter of Mr. Thomas Drane, of Torquay, but she died in 1873.

YOUNG, The Right Hon. George, a Scotch Lord of Session with the courtesy title of Lord Young, eldest son of the late Alexander Young, Esq., of Rosefield, co. Kirkcudbright, born in 1819 and educated at Edinburgh, was called to the Scotch Bar in 1840, appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland in 1852, and retired in 1866. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to power in 1868, he again became Solicitor-General for Scotland, and in Oct., 1869, he was appointed Lord Advocate in the place of the Right Hon. J. Moncrieff. Mr. Young was Sheriff of Inverness-shire from 1853 till 1860, and of Berwick and Haddington from 1860 till 1862. In April, 1865, on the retirement of Sir W. Dunbar, Bart., he was elected member in the Liberal interest for the borough of Wigton, and was again returned in 1865 and 1868. He was defeated at the general election of Feb., 1874, but in the same month he was, on Mr. Gladstone's recommendation, created a Lord of Session and one of the Lords of Justiciary in Scotland.

Z.

ZANARDELLI, Giuseppe, an Italian statesman, was born in 1826, in Brescia. He became a student in the Ghislieri College at Pavia, and took his degree as Doctor of Law in 1848. He enrolled himself in the legion of students which was formed at that time, and took part in the war of independence. Returning to Brescia after August, 1848, he there prepared the rising which took place in March, 1849. He escaped, and in consequence of the amnesty granted by the Austrian Government, subsequently returned to Brescia, where, from 1851 to 1859, he lived as a private teacher of jurisprudence. When Lombardy became free, in 1859, Zanardelli sat in the Piedmontese Legislature in several Parliaments for Isco. In 1866 he became commissario regio of the Province of Belluno, under the Ministry of Ricasoli. In 1869 he sat on the commission of inquiry into the tobacco Regia. At the Lombard Bar, Zanardelli enjoyed a very high reputation as an advocate. After the Ministerial crisis of 1876, he became Minister of Public Works in the first Depretis Cabinet, which portfolio he resigned in Nov., 1877, in consequence of differences with Depretis, which made it impossible for him to sign, as Minister of Public Works, the Railway Convention arranged by the latter. He was appointed to the Home Office in the Cairoli Ministry in March, 1878, and went into opposition on its fall.

ZANZIBAR, Sultan of. See SAÏD, SEYYID ALI.

ZELLER, Eduard, German theological and philosophical writer, was born at Kleinbottwar in Württemberg, Jan. 22, 1814, and studied at Tübingen and Berlin. In 1847 he became Professor of Theology at Berne, in 1849 at Marburg, and in 1862 Professor of Philosophy at Heidelberg, and subsequently in Berlin, where he has since remained. His principal works are: "Platonic Studies," 1839; "The History of Greek Philosophy," 4th edit. 1876; "Critical Study of the History of the Apostles," 1854; "State and Church," 1872; "Strauss, his Life and Writings," 1874; and his chief work "The History of German Philosophy since Leibnitz," 1873. Several sections of his "History of Greek Philosophy," which is still the standard work on the subject, and widely used in the English Universities, have been translated into English by the late Miss S. F. Alleyne.

ZENKER, Dr. Wilhelm, was born in Berlin, May 2, 1829, and educated wholly in that city, where also he obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1850. He was for many years a teacher of natural science, but has now retired. He has written many memoirs on very various subjects of which may be quoted "De natura sexuali generis Cypridis," 1850; "Memoir on the Depression in Northern Africa found by Gerh. Rohlf," in the Zeitschrift für Erdkunde, 1872; "Der Venusdurchgang, 1874," 1874; "Meteorologischer Kalender," 1886; "Die Vertheilung der Wärme auf der Erdoberfläche," 1888.

ZETLAND, The Right Hon. the Earl of. See VICEROY OF IRELAND.

ZIMMERMANN, Agnes, was born at Cologne on July 5, 1847; at four years of age she came to England, and after studying under her father and one or two private masters, was entered at nine years of age as a student at the Royal Academy of Music, where Cipriani Potter was her master at the piano, and Dr. Steggall taught her harmony. On Cipriani Potter's retirement, in 1860, Herr Ernst Pauer became the young student's pianomaster, and she then began to study composition under Professor Macfarren. She continued to work hard, and while yet a pupil composed several works, instrumental and vocal, which were performed at the Royal Academy Students' Concerts. In 1860 she obtained the King's Scholarship, and the same honour fell to her in 1862; in the following year she won the Silver Medal, and on Dec. 5, she made what may be fairly termed her first appearance, at a Crystal Palace concert. In 1864, Miss Zimmermann went to Germany, where she played at the Leipzig Gewandhaus Concerts, before the Court of Hanover, and elsewhere. Returning to England, she grew rapidly in public favour. In 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1886 Miss Zimmermann played at many public concerts in Germany—at Hamburg, Düsseldorf, Brunswick, Berlin, Frankfurt, Leipzig, Halle, &c., as well as privately to the Courts at Dresden, Berlin, Darmstadt and Brussels. For many seasons she has regularly taken part in the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts, and has played in most of the provincial cities and at the principal places in Scotland. Miss Zimmermann's own compositions are well known to musicians, and her editions of Beethoven's and Mozart's Sonatas are standard works among students. She is now engaged on an edition of Schumann's works, the first volume of which was published in 1890.

ZIMMERN, Helen, was born in the free Hanse Town of Hamburg, March 25, 1846, but has lived in England since 1850, and is a naturalized British subject. She is the author of "Stories in Precious Stones," 1873; "Schopenhauer, his Life and Philosophy," 1876; "Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, his Life and his Works," 1878; "Half Hours with Foreign Novelists," 1880; "Tales from the Edda," illustrated by Kate Greenaway, 1882; and a paraphrase of the Persian poet, Firdusi, issued under the title of "The Epic of Kings," and illustrated with etchings by Alma-Tadema, R.A., 1882; "Life of Maria Edgeworth," 1883; "The Hanse Towns," 1889. She also writes much for periodicals and for English, American German, and Italian newspapers.

ZOLA, Emile, a French writer, born in Paris April 2, 1840, passed his infancy in Provence with his father, the originator of the canal which bears his name at Aix. He then studied in the Lycée Saint-Louis in Paris, and obtained employment in the well-known publishing firm of Hachette & Co. He gave up that situation about 1865, in order to devote his attention exclusively to literature. He has been an industrious contributor to the newspaper press, and has written the following works of fiction:—"Contes à Ninon," 1863; "La Confession de Claude," 1865; "Le Vœu d'une Morte," 1866; "Les Mystères de Marseille;" "Thérèse Raquin;" "Manet," a biographical and critical study, 1867; "Madeleine Féral," 1868; a series of political, social, and physiological studies, entitled, "Les Rougon-Macquart, Histoire naturelle et sociale d'une famille sous le second Empire," which has been called his "Human Comedy;" the earlier volumes are entitled respectively "La Fortune des Rougon," "La Curée," "Le Ventre de Paris," "La Conquête de Plassans," "La Faute de l'Abbé Mouret," "Son Excellence Eugène Rougon," and "L'Assommoir" (1874-77.) The last-named volume created a great sensation, and has passed through many editions. M. Zola has since written a novel, entitled, "Une Page d'Amour," 1878; "Le Bouton de Rose," a three-act comedy played at the Palais Royal in 1878; "Nana," 1880; "Pot Bouille," 1882. His later works are:—"La Joie de Vivre," "Au Bonheur des Dames," "Germinal." All these belong to the "Rougon-Macquart" series. In 1888 M. Zola was appointed a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

ZORRILLA, Mannel Ruiz, was born in Castile, in 1834. He was a Madrid barrister and a deputy in the Cortes, when the share he took in the June revolt, 1866, earned him a condemnation, and he was compelled to seek refuge beyond the French frontier. In the Provisional Government of Admiral Topete, after the revolution of 1868, he was Minister of Public Works, and caused much discontent when he ordered that church property should be taken into the custody of the State. He was Law Minister to Marshal Serrano in 1869, and, as President of the Parliament, advocated the Duke of Aosta's candidature to the throne. This advocacy was successful and on the accession of the Duke under the title of Amadeo I., Zorrilla was his righthand man. For his services he received, almost alone among non-royal personages, the famous order of the Annunziata, which ranks with the Golden Fleece and the Garter. When Amadeo abdicated, Zorrilla went to Portugal with him. He went back to Spain, but having allied himself openly with the Republicans, his position grew intolerable under King Alfonso, and in consequence he left the country. Since that time he has professed extreme Republican opinions, and is supposed to have been at the bottom of every conspiracy that has disturbed the peace of Spain. He lives in England, France, or Switzerland, according to the needs of the moment, and his intrigues are a perpetual source of anxiety to every Spanish Government in turn.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY

And at the RAILWAY STATIONS.

1.—THIS Library is established in connection with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews. It affords greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Dépôts a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Dépôt where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in Charge of the Dépôt at which they obtain their books. Of the current Periodicals one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted if the supply is to consist chiefly of Magazines and Reviews.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day: the Clerk in Charge will obtain from London any work in the Library (providing that the same is in stock when the order reaches the Strand) which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Dépôt, will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to the London Termini, become subject to the London Regulations. See Terms below, Section No. I.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that, to insure the supply of the number of volumes desired, it is necessary, in all cases, to give a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

COMPANION POETS.

HENRY MORLEY, LL.D.,

EMERITUS PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE, UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

Published in a Series of Monthly Volumes, printed with red lines, on Bible paper, size 6 inches by 3½ inches, price 1s. each; also an Édition de luxe, limited to 500 copies, price 3s. 6d. each.

THE BEST COMPANY is that of friends who share with us their changing moods, speak as they really think and feel, are not afraid to be in earnest, and have a ready wit that breeds good-humour without hurt to the higher aims of life. The best Companions, in this sense, are the Poets who bring flesh and blood into their books, whose genius rests upon their sympathetic insight into human motives and desires, and whose lives are poured out into music by which other lives are helped and cheered. In a Series of Monthly Shilling Volumes shaped for easiest familiarity of use, indoors and out of doors, some such COMPANION POETS now come out and look for friends. Some may be old lifelong companions, welcome at all times and in every dress. Some may, at first, seem to be strangers bringing out of the far past or the near present half-forgotten strains of the right music of life in one or other of its thousand forms. Sir Gorgius Midas sniffs the air and says that he can read no poetry except the best. Whoever says that does not read the best, or if he read he does not understand it. Will he eat no fruit but pine-apples and peaches? His the loss, if it be so. For our Companions we will take all Poets who are good after their kind. We have a welcome for the gooseberries and currants, and may now and then pick blackberries, content with them if they be sound and sweet. The one principle of selection in this series of COMPANION POETS will be that each little book shall be a true book in its way, with kindly touch upon the lives of men. Poets of all kinds, great or little, grave or gay, shall meet here upon common ground; there shall be room found in our pleasure for herbs, shrubs, and trees. A short Introduction to each book, and sometimes a few notes upon the text, will attempt no more than to bring it or its writer nearer to the Reader's knowledge as Companion and Friend.
